Passing into the kitchen and larder she explained that she had placed cupboards in single rows everywhere, so that each article of food might have its proper place: dairy produce—eggs, butter, milk—in one, meat in another, fruit in another, &c. She opened one door with a magnificent gesture, and on the same shelf I saw a dish of greasy-looking butter, the remains of a leg of mutton, some fruit, lard, and a piece of Gruyère cheese. It did not disturb her.

She escorted me into a wild-looking garden. "Here," remarked the owner of the cottage, "is my sward of peace. Here I had the lawn laid to be like velvet; or, rather, like the velvet loveliness of moss. In this one patch," and her eyes took in the appearance of seeing through substances instead of at them, "I allow no one to walk unless barefooted. It is my chancel to nature, and must be approached reverently. The lawn," she added, perhaps obscurely conscious of the flowering mustard, "wants cutting, but you see I am hard at work, keeping order. It is all so clear in my mind that I can afford to take it easily. The mere doing the actual work is nothing when you have once got the finished picture in your head."

Digitized by Google

She went with me to the gate, and, as we shook hands in a side piece of garden—a perfect wilderness of weeds twined about untrimmed rose-bushes — she remarked moodily: "Action is always ridiculous—a tedious repetition of insignificant details. It checks imagination instantly, and imagination is the one thing the Lord gave us beyond the reach of money. We have the gratification of knowing that millionaires are incapable of purchasing it."

I left her leaning on the gate. She looked harassed, but I have never been able to decide whether this lady was to be pitied as an eccentric, or envied for an astounding power of inward vision.

The Traveller.

UNCLE TEDDIE put me in the train at Penzance, having arranged with the guard to paste a label, "For Ladies Only," on the window. His instructions were precise. I was to speak to nobody. Then he left me. The next thing that happened was just the kind of thing that happens in sensational stories. The train was starting when the door was thrown open and a young man jumped in. He was in a state of wild excitement. For several minutes he remained with his head thrust out of the window, staring at the flying country. His body shook with emotion. I sat very quiet, feeling horribly nervous, wondering when the next stoppage would be, and how soon I could make up my mind to pull the communication cord. Suddenly he turned from the window and flung himself in the seat opposite mine. His eyes were extraordinarily bright, and clear, and curious. One hand clung to the window sash, the other clutched the cushion. He seemed to find the support necessary. All at once he asked, with a tremor in his voice as if half afraid of my reply, "Shall we go any faster?" I made some sort of answer that I tried to make coherent. He looked about him with the quick movements of a bird, and asked the inconsequent questions with which a lively child pesters its mother; but he demanded quick, intelligent answers. I was thankful to find that my replies seemed to please him, for, at the end of an hour, he beamed upon me and said: "Where are you going?" "Bath," I replied. "I'm going to Bath," he said jubilantly; "we shall meet there. I am so glad." "But Bath is a large place," I remarked. He coloured, and murmured: "Oh, Bath is a large place." He was quiet for a little while, and then said: "Do you know I have never been in a train before. Never been in a train before to-day!" Against my judgment, I could not help saying, "How is that?" "There are no trains in Scilly. This is the first time I have ever been out of the island. How splendid trains are. I shall never get tired of trains."

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

M. OCTAVE MIRBEAU is impelled by a generous instinct, which is the root of Socialism, to scourge ruthlessly all existing states of things. That everything might be better not even the airiest optimist will deny. But there are limits to the Apostle's freedom of speech, limits to his just accusations, and M. Mirbeau leaps over these limits with a revolting indifference to tact and taste. The abhorred institution of his nightmares is the bourgeoisie. It is a hate he shares with Stendhal and Zola, whose detestation of the bourgeois lies in diametrically opposite sympathies. Stendhal has a passion for the upmost, not merely upper, ranks of society. Princes, ministers, duchesses, and cardinals—these are his privileged favourites; a taste he has imparted to his disciple, M. Bourget. Zola, on the other hand, worships the people—the scientific workman, the reforming dreamer. He, like M. Mirbeau, unjustly charges the unfortunate bourgeois with all the existing wrongs of humanity. On the fourth page of his unjoyous "Vingt et un jours d'un Neurasthémique" M. Mirbeau remarks that the "bourgeois classes are everywhere in a state of decrepitude, and their children, of impoverished growth in the putrid morass of marriage, belong already to the past." Elsewhere he qualifies the bourgeois as immonde. Yet he has considerable talent if he could only be got to look upon life with a less jaundiced eye, and if he could accommodate his pity for the poor and oppressed to a juster appreciation of the oppressor. For assuredly it is not all rose-coloured virtue when we step below the rank of the bourgeois. Real Socialism should preach fraternity and not class hatred. M. Mirbeau is nothing if not "actual." And so one of his pet aversions, the minister, M. Georges Leygues, appears on the scene at a fashionable watering-place in the Pyrenees, and is made to hold forth appropriately by the terrible caricaturist. The cruellest and cleverest portrait is that of the Marquis of Portpierre, the friend of the Duke of Orleans. As a satirist M. Mirbeau has no sense of humour, but is bitterly mordant. The marquis is a false bon enfant, of a perfidious joviality, an accomplished trickster who takes in everybody —friends, electors, tenants, and the poor. When he poses as Parliamentary candidate he dons blouse and cap, treats his electors, slaps them on the back, and calls them "mon brave." His opponent is a poor devil of a teacher, in a worn, well-preserved frock-coat and tall hat long since past its prime. The marquis, by coarse jeers at the mirliflor, drawing attention to his own humble attire in contrast with the teacher's habits de prince, succeeds in getting him hissed and insulted. The picture is overcharged, according to the laws of caricature, but it stands out strong and striking. You see the man hateful, jovial, sly, dishonest, and grand seigneur in the modern acceptation of the definition in France to-day. Another biting satire is the illustrious painter in despair before the corpse of his adored wife, who hitherto has been his eternal model. "What is left him now that his beloved is gone?" Painting! He rejects the notion passionately. He has sacrificed the love of wife and child to art, and now he will break his palette, burn his brushes. "But little by little his eyes lost their expression of sorrow, and little by little his glance, a moment ago anguished and wet, had that concentration, that tension of all the visual forces which narrow the eyes of the painter in a ferocious moment when he finds himself in presence of a nature that interests him. He cried: 'What tones, sacristi!'" In another instant he has seized his brushes and easel, and is lilting an old studio song as he paints for dear life the dead beloved. He has forgotten all but his work; and when the valet interrupts him to say that the "Pompes funèbres" are without, he exclaims: "What Pompes funèbres?" The valet with difficulty makes him understand that the undertakers are there for his wife, and that the model is a corpse. "And, gaily, with a schoolboy grimace on his lips, a grimace which brought back altogether the Bohemia he had once belonged to, he recommended: 'Tell the undertakers that they have mistaken the house: it is in the next street.' And he returned to his painting."

This passion for reform of existing abuses by which the majority are made to suffer needlessly has induced M. Mirbeau to preface a book that might have been an important document, and which remains merely a futile plaint, Un an de Caserne, by Louis Lamarque. M. Mirbeau takes this book very seriously indeed, and congratulates the writer on having chosen such a subject rather than endow literature with more symbolic princesses or Scandinavian legends, or obscure and mournful verse, the despairs of love and death, or the revelations of the depths of the Anglo-Belgian soul. And this from M.

Digitized by Google

Octave Mirbeau, the discoverer of Maeterlinck, whom he introduced to the world as "the Belgian Shakespeare"! He tells us pompously that this is a book "lived," and "lived" it assuredly is; but how? Here is a youth of twenty-one who goes to barrack in the same tearful mood of a child of ten facing school and separation from his mother for the first time. If he were departing for the colonies for ever he could not weep more grievously over himself and call more feebly for his mother and his mistress. He sits before a mirror and watches the expression of his face, and gravely writes: "I wore so sad an air that many visages around me softened, and more than one glance was full of pity." Instead of telling us about general suffering, he invites us to weep with him as he sits at the window and thinks of the beloved, "his tender, unquiet, and so sweet love." When an author sets himself the legitimate task of writing a book of the kind, he should begin by putting his private sentiments under lock and key. We want to know the class of men he associated with, and how they fare; we want to see something of them, something of their officers and of their daily lives. But we are not in the least interested in M. Lamarque's sentimental troubles, which apparently consist of a temporary separation from a facile fair one who continues to write to him; and at twenty-one a youth ought to be able to leave his mother's skirts without clamouring for the universe to stand still and pity him. And even as a soldier he seems to have had a particularly easy time. He paid a brosseur to do his work. He had lodgings in the town, to which he was free to retire four hours a day. M. Mirbeau has wasted his indignation, and his preface is worthier a stronger case.

I was offered Le Cœur dans la Main et l'Estomac dans le Talon by a youth just returned from the regiment after his year's service. He told us it was hugely enjoyed by the whole regiment, and read aloud amid shouts of laughter as une bonne blague, a sort of French Three Men in a Boat. After M. Lamarque's weeping pages, I was curious to look at a volume that had kept a regiment at Caen in shouts of laughter. It delighted me to know that a French regiment could laugh, and that all the men were not condemned to sit at the window lamenting their mothers and their absent mistresses. As a specimen of French humour it would be impossible to find anything more deplorable. Even M. Lamarque was better employed than the soldiers who enjoyed this shocking and indecent drivel. We were many and all grown up, and most of us turning gray, around the poor lad who wished to impart his regimental hilarity to us, and the kindest word any of us could say to him was "C'est idiot." It is surprising how absent in the French is the schoolboy spirit. They seem incapable of conceiving such a thing as innocent fun. It is a thousand pities for the youth of the land.

H. L.

A Second-Hand Catalogue.

Miss Millard's catalogues have had their full share of attention of late, not only in the Academy but elsewhere. Mr. Walter T. Spencer is as worthy of study. Mr. Spencer is the Dickens specialist in New Oxford-street, opposite Mudie's, whose window offers always rare editions of that author and also of Thackeray, Cruikshank, and (strange companion for these twain) Richard Jefferies. Mr. Spencer's new list, which reached me by post a day or so ago, is so remarkable that its fame must be at once diffused. It contains three unique items which the Boz Club ought to buy, but which will almost certainly make the Atlantic passage. These are a paper-knife, a pen, and a slate, once the property of Charles Dickens, and all vouched for.

Mr. Spencer is a critic, an enthusiast, as well as a dealer, and the core, the beating heart of the present catalogue, is his description of the emotions kindled in him by this paper-knife. Here he rises to poetry. The second-hand bookseller is transfigured, a nimbus shines about his rapt brow, eloquence visits earth once more. A writer in last week's Academy was pleased to disapprove of the glittering style: how, I wonder, would he describe Mr. Spencer's raptures? But this is the glowing passage:

> In this catalogue will also be found Charles Dickens' Pen (which please see). He generally wrote with a quill, an implement of such short life in those tireless fingers, that it was constantly being replaced. The Paper-Knife, however, besides being equally a "Right-Hand Tool," had an infinitely longer existence. It must [now he is warming] be saturated in every fibre with the electric personality of the Master. Now he has dallied with it, a sheet cut now and then, as he read with appreciative interest; now the quick nervous hand would slash open the leaves, as the hour of an appointment drew near. How often, I wonder, has he sat back in his chair, eyes half closed, musing, planning, holding levées of characters invisible as yet to any eye but his own, with this little instrument, dot-and-dashing cablegrams from Fancy-land, as the unwearied mind wove its wondrous patterns out of gossamer into groundwork for fictions which will be still more dear to English and to American men, women, and children a hundred years hence than they are even now.

This, I contend, is clever writing; almost brilliant. For it supplies the purchaser with precisely the suitable thoughts to accompany his bargain. Cannot you see him, this purchaser, in his home in the States, reproducing Mr. Spencer's fancies? conjuring up the right feelings? Mr. Spencer adds that he never had a Dickens' relic that he valued more highly than this, or parted from more reluctantly. Considering the emphasis which he lays upon his Dickens' worship one is surprised that he does part with it. Eighteen guineas!

Next, the pen. "Sacred to the memory of Charles Dickens . . . a relic worthy of being made an heirloom." This is a quill that was removed from the Master's desk immediately after his death. Mr. Spencer takes only a sip of Hippocrene in this connexion. His deep draughts are over; they stopped with the paper-knife, although that was only three guineas more. (But three guineas can command much rhetoric.) This is the burst of ecstasy reserved for the quill:

> Of a literary man, what more intimate, close, or characteristic memorial could be suggested than the pen which conveyed to his world of readers his golden thoughts?
>
> I ought not, I cannot say more:—I leave it to his legion of admirers, and only hope it may find a worthy and final resting-place, where it may interest thousands yet unborn.

Finally, also at fifteen guineas, we come to the Master's engagement slate; but by this time Mr. Spencer is cool again. For the slate no minstrel raptures swell. It is described with business-like exactness, the price is added, and there you are. But probably it will be in Illinois before Christmas.

The unique character of Mr. Spencer's list is by no means yet exhausted. Dickens may be his hobby, but his pen touches gracefully or informingly on many another writer, and his appraisements are curiously interesting. Thus, the prices of autographs are, as usual, illuminatively instructive. The signature to a letter "With affectionate greetings, Hall Caine," is five shillings—sixpence more than The Eternal City less discount. But what a treasure to paste in the cover! The transition from Mr. Caine to Miss Corelli (and vice versâ) is always too easy: Mr. Spencer offers several letters from that lady to one Mr. Rashleigh, at varying sums, all higher than one would expect, or, in these times of Imperialistic income-tax, than one can stand. For a criticism of The Gay Lord Quex—with this terse and accurate judgment in it: "All that is degraded in tone on the stage is invariably well done"—£2 5s. is asked. What can one not buy for forty-five shillings? Mr. Cook will take you to Lucerne and back for something like that. For an invitation to Stratford-on-Avon, 15s.; for an invitation to the theatre (not to The Gay Lord Quex one feels sure), 18s.; and for a note arranging to send the carriage to meet the gentleman, 18s. Says Mr. Spencer:

Digitized by Google

> Now, I beg to call attention to the fact that Miss Corelli has always opposed an adamantine front to the autograph-hunting-demon, and has baffled, as a rule, his most insidious attempts. These four letters are, every one, to be reckoned as prizes, by the body of genuine autograph collectors, which, while it will not grudge liberal prices for good letters, would never stoop to obtain them on false pretences.

I do not particularly desire any of this series; but I should not mind venturing a few shillings to have a sight of Miss Corelli's next letter to her friend, on the subject of traffic in private correspondence.

Let me conclude by quoting as a kind of postscript to the interesting Tin Trumpet article in the ACADEMY a week or so ago, the MS. epigram by Horace Smith which Mr. Spencer copies from a sheet of paper, dated Brighton, 1837:

> Let this plain truth those ingrates strike
> Who still, tho' bless'd, new blessings crave,
> That we may all have what we like
> Simply by liking what we have.

V. V. V.

Correspondence.

The Lady of Riddles.

SIR,—The author of an interesting study of Mary Stuart in the ACADEMY (September 14) asks whether she was dominated by terror when Bothwell abducted her. He despairs of an answer, yet I think that an answer is possible. We know that along with Mary Maitland of Lethington was taken and carried to Dunbar. His position is mysterious: he had certainly been allied with Bothwell in the bond for Darnley's murder. On the other hand, he had not signed the bond of April 19, 1567, advising Mary to marry Bothwell, and he and Bothwell had usually been on hostile terms. Consequently we have evidence that Bothwell, just after the abduction, threatened to slay Lethington. Now, Sir James Melville, in his memoirs, with Drury, in a despatch of the moment, and Mary herself, in the memoirs of her secretary, Wall, all combine in saying that the Queen rescued Maitland, threatening Bothwell with extreme punishment if he touched Lethington. It would seem to follow that she was quite undaunted. On the other hand her action is not like that of a woman enslaved by a passion for her rough wooer. If she was neither terrified nor besotted by passion, her attitude is rather more of a riddle than ever; while, if Maitland did not know of the contemplated abduction—so dangerous to himself—it is just possible that Mary was equally ignorant.—I am, &c.,

ANDREW LANG.

Mr. Pater's Style.

SIR,—After reading your remarks re Mr. Gwynn's Daily News article on Mr. Pater's style, I would suggest (if you can kindly allow me the space to do so) that those who are anxious to enjoy the charm of his writings should first apply themselves to Mr. Symons's charming essay, "Walter Pater" (published by Leonard Smithers, 1897), in Studies in Two Literatures; then to "Walter Pater" direct, especially The Child in the House, Imaginary Portraits, Appreciations, and Gaston de Latour, that delightful, unfinished romance, wherein one can read of the road "like a white scarf flung across the land"; and, later, in that sweet land of "Peach Blossom and Wine," how Gaston dallied for nine dreamy months with Montaigne and his young wife; and of the lingering, loving talks over books (of which Montaigne had a goodly store), of the quiet walks in the sun-kissed vineyards.

As Mr. Gwynn rightly says, these "Essays from the Guardian" are Pater's slightest words! but, being his, are interesting, if not representative and convincing.—I am, &c.,

Ipswich. T. E. JONES.

"The Ordinary Commentator."

SIR,—The writer of a review entitled "The Snake in Literature," in pointing out what he considers is an omission of the "ordinary commentator" of Shakespeare, is himself at fault. Your reviewer says:

> To the sloughing of the snake Shakespeare alludes in his famous line—
>
> "When we have shuffled off this mortal coil."
>
> It is not mentioned by the ordinary commentator, but is too obvious an allusion to have escaped notice.

I was myself under the delusion contained in the above paragraph until I read a very interesting article by Mr. H. Courthope Bowen, entitled "How to Study a Poem," which appeared some time ago in the Educational Review. Fortunately I have found the actual article, and am able to give the verba ipsissima of the writer:

> A writer's vocabulary may contain obsolete words, unfamiliar words, and, most puzzling of all, familiar words used in an unfamiliar sense. In dealing with such matters the rapid impressionist, through his habit of catching at the meaning as a whole, may sometimes score a success—though not infrequently he goes hopelessly wrong. The laborious pedant, on the other hand, is almost sure to air his learnedness, and give us a derivation which hardly ever helps a child, and seldom anyone, except to justify the meaning when found. The question is not what the word meant originally, but what it meant to the writer when he used it. When our laborious friend once catches that idea he scores heavily. Let us take an instance—from "Hamlet":
>
> "When we have shuffled off this mortal coil."
>
> "That," says the rapid commentator, "means when we are dead." "Yes, quite so; but please explain the metaphor." "Well, evidently it is taken from the idea of a snake's sloughing his skin." "Not so fast," says the plodder. "Coil means skin? Perhaps." So we take down Mrs. Cowden Clarke's concordance, and find that "coil" is used twelve times in the plays; and in the eleven other cases the context shows clearly that it means confusion, noise—no idea of skin, wrappage, or curl of rope. "Shuffle" is used eight times; and in five of the seven other cases plainly means to practise shifts or tricks—to do in a perfunctory way; while in the remaining two the meaning is closely similar. One of our cases is from "Twelfth Night": "Oft good turns are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay" (i.e., thanks). So "shuffle off" means to elude, to get rid of somehow; and our original statement has nothing to do with snakes, but means when we have got rid, in one way or another, of the noisy confusion of our human life.

—I am, &c., T. L. HUMBERSTONE.

Coventry.

Answered.

SIR,—In answer to a correspondent's query in last week's ACADEMY, I am writing to say that the book containing a description of the Garden of Eden is Eliot Warburton's The Crescent and the Cross. I cannot give the publisher's name as I have it in the Tauchnitz edition only.—I am, &c.,

Littlefield House, Exmouth. A. L. FERRAND.

Digitized by Google

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 105 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the plot of a short magazine story. The result is not encouraging. A short story should deal with one incident and its ramifications. A volume would be needed to work out many of the plots submitted. And we would remind amateurs in general that life is not entirely composed of murders, suicide, and anarchist plots. We award the prize to Mr. W. B. Smith, 162, Adelaide-road, N.W., for the following:

When the Hon. Felix Foresite accepted the portfolio of Transport in South Cooksland colonials expected great things. He was a "live" man, and had to save their export trade. Their hated rivals in North Cooksland had cut them out in the Japanese market.

So he assembled all stockowners, and pooled their interests so cleverly that carcases should be delivered at Yokohama to sell three halfpence a pound cheaper than their competitors. He bought six steamers, fitted them with freezing-chambers, and with engines giving two knots more than any North Cook boat.

When O'Shea, Premier of North Cooksland, read of these doings he sent for his nephew, who had been a ship's doctor, and therefore half a sailorman. He explained the dangers of this competition, and his nephew explained the use of ammonia as a freezing-agent and the properties of its gas. Both agreed that the first of the rivals reaching Yokohama would capture the trade.

The doctor took passage to Yokohama by the rival line, on the Oharasu. He ingratiated himself with all, especially the freezing-chamber engineer. The Peter O'Shea was sixteen hours behind when the Oharasu passed through the Heads into Yokohama harbour. As the Oharasu neared the wharf half the crew rushed on deck, and all the engine-hands. An escape of ammonia gas.

The engines were now without control; the captain steered the vessel twice madly round the harbour, cut down half-a-dozen sampans, and grazed through the Heads again to open sea. The gas worked off by degrees, but the Peter O'Shea had her cargo discharged first. The doctor dropped the key of the condensing-chamber into the water and winked.

Other replies are as follows:

A French peasant woman, during the Franco-Prussian War, finds a young wounded German scout. Moved by maternal compassion, and thinking of her only son, who, with his father, is absent in arms, she disregards the lad's nationality and nurses him back to convalescence. The tenderest bond of sympathy is formed between the two. While talking one day, she beseeches him to spare her son if Fate should ever bring them face to face, and shows him a photograph of the boy. The scout recognises it as that of his first victim, whose agonising face haunted him throughout his delirium. Unable to bear his position, he leaves the house without a word and hides in a wood, intending to make good his escape by night. Late the same evening the husband returns home invalided, and states that he found an enemy skulking round the house, and that, despite his disablement, he had killed him. He describes his victim. It was the scout. He produces a little gold rosary found in the dead man's pocket-book. It is the one the mother had clasped round her own boy's neck when he had set out. [S. C., London.]

Hannah Peile is a dressmaker whose hours all the week are timed to the click of the sewing-machine, and whose Sunday's rest is in the quiet Baptist Chapel. Here, unconsciously, she learns to listen to the voice instead of the words of the young minister. In the front pew is always seated a girl of Hannah's class to whom money has given a superior position. One day her engagement to the minister is announced, and in Hannah this awakens a new, stinging consciousness. Time passes, and Hannah is chosen to make the wedding-dress, when she has to listen to those near confidences of woman to woman. The night before the wedding she takes the dress to the bride's house, who, for superstitious reasons, refuses to put it on. Hannah is present to do so, and while the other is upstairs hunting for coral beads the minister enters. The dress and the darkness deceive him. He advances with open arms—to discover his mistake, and reads the secret in Hannah's eyes. He hurriedly takes his leave, and when the bride returns the dress is lying in tempestuous folds on the table, and the little dressmaker has fled. [E. C., Gravesend.]

The scene is laid in a village, where the actions of your neighbours and the advent of strangers form the only excitements. A mother and daughter inhabit a small house there, and strive, by continually starving the servant and a watchful economy in charities, to make a decent appearance. The result invariably leaves the local tradesmen with somewhat of a deficit. Into this society comes a young and wealthy novelist, whom the worldly-wise mother strives to ensnare into marrying her sordidly-minded daughter. The man, to whom a woman's disappointment is but a mere incident, more amusing than otherwise, sees through the artifice and flirts with her so desperately that both consider it a settled affair. They tell all their friends what a rich man he is, and linger lovingly on the advantages of so gifted and wealthy a connection. The denouncement comes with the daughter reading a private letter in his room, where she finds that he has only used her as a copy to make the love-scenes in his novels more sincere and realistic. [R. K. H., Epperstone.]

Major A—— is guardian to a young girl, Elsie S——, aged twenty years. On reaching the age of twenty-five she becomes heiress to a large fortune. The Major thinking that, all things considered, she will make an excellent wife for him, decides to propose to her; but not being sure of the legality of a guardian marrying his ward before she is of age, consults a young barrister friend of his, called Charles D——, carefully omitting to mention any name or give any clue to whom he really refers. Charles D—— assures him it is quite legal, and that a guardian may propose to his ward when and where he pleases. The barrister then takes his departure, and the Major sends for his ward, but she is nowhere to be found. In about two hours she returns, enters the Major's room and informs him she is engaged to be married, and wants his consent. "Who to?" inquires the Major, aghast. "Oh!" says Miss Elsie, "You know him well—he is a friend of yours—Charles D——. Will you give us your consent?" [C.A., Howth.]

James Higson, a money-lender trading secretly under an assumed name, but known in good society, has lent money to Tretherfe: he has sued him, but cannot get paid, since the security he took proved worthless, and Tretherfe lives at home, and has no property Higson can seize. Higson hears Tretherfe has married and taken a house with new furniture: his solicitor being away, Higson personally puts the bailiffs in and sells all furniture in the house during Tretherfe's absence on honeymoon: subsequently various solicitors write claiming damages from Higson, the furniture sold being partly Mrs. Tretherfe's and partly her brother's, the latter having intended to live at the Tretherfe's house and having brought his own furniture there: the bailiffs also claim damages for expenses incurred owing to wrongful seizure. Higson's solicitor advises the claims are legal: Higson must keep out of Court to conceal his identity and avoid ridicule, so perforce pays heavy damages to Mrs. Tretherfe and brother, which more than cancel Tretherfe's debt. Later, Higson meets the Tretherfes at a dinner-party, where Mrs. Tretherfe (American, pretty, vivacious) tells the whole story. Higson (being incognito) has to join in the general laughter at his own discomfiture. [E. W. H., Manchester.]

Amgar flew down the Hill of Allen like a curlew, and was soon lost in the starry bog on his way to count the foemen at Shanavoola (the-old-milking-place). Little he guessed that Morla, the King's daughter, was the cause of his dangerous mission. Yet she had insisted on his being sent through girlish wilfulness, because her father had upbraided her for loving Amgar. He returned pallid and bleeding, and, after delivering the numbers, fell dead. Under his harper's jacket were found two slips of elm-wood with these lines:

"Oh! were I a wood and thou, the night dark with my trees,
How I should keep thee, and have thee, and hold thee,
Here in my branches, here till the dawn!
But I am not a wood, and thou art a queen lovelier than the night,
For ever beautifully moving away to the music of my heart
Beating in vain from dawn to dawn."

Morla went among the foeman disguised as a harpist, and having killed Amgar's slayer, was stabbed on the spot. Sometimes in Glenaree (Glen-of-the-Kings) the bogmen hear a woman weeping at night, and snatches of a mournful, passionate singing; but many say it is the wind and the curlews. [W. A. H. B., Kildare.]

Replies also received from: E. H. H., London; F. L. W., Bradford; H. V. S., London; P. C. F., Cambridge; R. D., London; F. H., Leigh-on-Sea; F. B. G., London; P. A. L., Rugby; J. P., London; G. N., Bristol; E. M. W., London; H. S., Corfe Castle; T. C., Buxted; A. M. B., Godalming; F. B. D., Torquay.

Competition No. 106 (New Series).

We offer a prize of One Guinea for the best description of the pictures in a room of a private house. Any importance in the pictures themselves is immaterial; the prize will be awarded for the best and most vivid description.

Rules.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, The Academy, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, October 2. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the third page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

The HISTORY of SIR RICHARD CALMADY. By Lucas Malet, Author of "The Wages of Sin," &c.
Crown 8vo, 6s. A Limited Edition in 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s. [Third Edition in the Press.
"Unmistakable proofs of conspicuous literary power and penetrating observation abound in every page of this remarkable novel. A daring story, daringly conceived, and daringly executed."—Daily Telegraph.
"A book which arrests attention alike for the boldness of its main theme and the thoroughness of its workmanship."—Daily News.
"A performance of conspicuous merit. This novel, as a whole, shows talent almost amounting to genius."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"We proclaim an almost unqualified admiration. To Lucas Malet the hardest tasks come easiest. A book of quite remarkable interest and power. The story is told with perfect frankness, yet with the delicacy that is only possible to the strong. It is the sincere utterance of a woman who can write and who can think."
Morning Post.

LIGHT FREIGHTS. By W. W. Jacobs, Author of "Many Cargoes." Illustrated, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[Next Friday.

The FORTUNE of CHRISTINA MACNAB. By S. MacNaughtan. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Next Friday.

TALES of DUNSTABLE WEIR. By Zack, Author of "Life is Life." Crown 8vo, 6s. [October 18.

CLEMENTINA. By A. E. W. Mason, Author of "The Courtship of Morrice Buckler," "Miranda of the Balcony," &c. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 6s.

The ALIEN. By F. F. Montresor, Author of "Into the Highways and Hedges." Crown 8vo, 6s.

ANGEL. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Peggy of the Bartons." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition in the Press.

The SERIOUS WOOING. By John Oliver Hobbes, Author of "Robert Orange." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Mrs. Craigie is as brilliant as she ever has been; her characters are all illuminated with sparkling gems of description, and the conversation scintillates with an almost bewildering blaze."—Athenæum.

A WOMAN ALONE. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford, Author of "Aunt Anne." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.
"In this genre Mrs. Clifford holds very nearly the highest place among contemporary English novelists."—Standard.
"We do not know any man alive—save, perhaps, Mr. George Meredith—who could have wrtten it with the knowledge and insight displayed by Mrs. Clifford."
Sheffield Telegraph.

A GALLANT QUAKER. By Mrs. M. H. Roberton. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 6s.

A GREAT LADY. By Adeline Sergeant, Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"There is much skill in the study of the female characters, and the story is attractive."—Manchester Courier.
"Brisk and readable."—Spectator. "An interesting and wholesome story."—Birmingham Post.

MARY HAMILTON. By Lord Ernest Hamilton. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.
"A beautiful rendering of the romantic life story of the hapless Mary Hamilton."—Country Life.
"There can be no doubt that we have in 'Mary Hamilton' a most fascinating story—the most stirring and dramatic historical romance that has come in our way for a long time."—Illustrated London News.

The WOOING of SHEILA. By Grace Rhys. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition in the Press.
"This is a novel about Irish life, and we have rarely read a book which reproduces so delightfully the charm and fascination of the Irish character."—Athenæum.
"A really fine book; a book that deserves to live. Sheila is the sweetest heroine who has lived in a novelist's pages for many a day. Every scene and every incident has the impress of truth. It is a masterly romance, and one that should be widely read and appreciated."—Morning Leader.
"The story is a pretty one, very poetical, very dramatic, and full of tenderness and truth."—Sphere.

The SKIRTS of HAPPY CHANCE. By H. B. Marriott Watson. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.
"Unfailingly amusing."—Globe.
"The book is written with a distinction of style which is not easily analysed, but which makes itself felt immediately."—World.
"Mr. Watson's light touch, his genuine sense of humour, his ingenuity, and, above all, his polished and clear-cut style, will provide genuine entertainment."—Pilot
"The reader is amused and surprised at every page.....Ingeniously imagined, admirably pourtrayed."—Saturday Review.

FORTUNE'S DARLING. By Walter Raymond, Author of "Love and Quiet Life." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A quaint and charming story."—Academy. "Mr. Raymond's admirers will be delighted with this story."—Glasgow Herald.

The STRIKING HOURS. By Eden Phillpotts, Author of "Children of the Mist," "Sons of the Morning," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"They are charming tales of Devonshire life, told in local diction, picturesque and effective, and every one of them has some tender or humorous situation."
"Tragedy and comedy, pathos and humour, are blended to a nicety in this volume."—World. Daily Telegraph
"The whole book is redolent of a fresher and ampler air than breathes in the circumscribed life of great towns."—Spectator.

The DEVASTATORS. By Ada Cambridge, Author of "Path and Gaol." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Powerful and suggestive."—Academy. "A refreshing novel, with an uncommon and delightful heroine."—World.

The MILLION. By Dorothea Gerard, Author of "Lady Baby." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"The whole scheme of the book is brilliantly conceived and dramatically executed."—Sunday Special.
"It is a powerful piece of writing, and in the intensity of its moral purpose the best thing the author has yet given us."—Morning Leader.

FROM the LAND of the SHAMROCK. By Jane Barlow, Author of "Irish Idylls." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Miss Barlow has the truth in her, and the people she describes are real people."—Morning Leader.
"A delightful volume."—Glasgow Herald. "Poetical and pathetic."—Daily Telegraph.

The YEAR ONE: a Page of the French Revolution. By J. Bloundelle-Burton, Author of "The Clash of Arms." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Vivid and picturesque."—Morning Advertiser.
"The historical background is painted in with no lack of strong colour, and the personages excite a ready interest."— cotsman.

ROYAL GEORGIE. By S. Baring-Gould, Author of "Mehalah." With 8 Illustrations by D. Murray Smith. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"The book is one which will hold the reader's attention from start to finish. An excellent story."—Glasgow Herald.

RICKERBY'S FOLLY. By Tom Gallon, Author of "Kiddy." Crown 8vo, 6s.

MASTER of MEN. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The LIFE of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. By Graham Balfour. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 25s net.
This, the authorised biography of Mr. Stevenson, will be published on October 18th. Those of Mr. Stevenson's admirers who desire to have a copy of the first edition of this book are advised to send in their orders to their bookseller, as it is probable that the first edition will be very quickly sold out.

The LIFE of FRANCOIS DE FENELON. By Viscount St. Cyres. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

PEACE or WAR in SOUTH AFRICA. By A. M. S. Methuen. With 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, 1s. [Seventh Edition.
"The author of this small book has at once taken a high place among English political pamphleteers. It combines not a little eloquence, and a great deal sustained force of statement, with a temper markedly at variance with that which is commonly known as pro-Boer.....Writing as he does, Mr. Methuen has a rig to be read, as he has been, widely, and to be read attentively."—Guardian.

DRAGONS of the AIR. By H. G. Seeley, F.R.S. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The CONVERSATIONS of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A., and JAMES WARD. Edited by Ernest Fletcher. With many Portraits. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
This highly interesting, racy, and stimulating book contains hitherto unpublished utterances of Northcote during a period of twenty-one years.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOK GAZETTE and CATALOGUE will be sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., Essex Street, Strand.

Digitized by Google

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

LINKS with the PAST. By Mrs. Charles Bagot. With Photogravure Portraits. Demy 8vo, 16s.

MEMORIALS of the VERY REV. W. C. LAKE, D.D., DEAN of DURHAM 1869-1894. Edited by KATHARINE LAKE. Demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

IMPERIUM ET LIBERTAS. By Bernard Holland. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

FINLAND: its Public and Private Economy. By N. C. FREDERIKSEN, formerly Professor of Political Economy in Copenhagen University. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

THE BALANCING of ENGINES. By W. E. Dalby, M.Inst.C.E., M.I.M.E., &c., Professor of Mechanical Engineering in the Finsbury Technical College. Demy 8vo, with nearly 200 Illustrations.

A HANDBOOK of FERMENTATION and the FER- MENTATION INDUSTRIES. By C. G. MATTHEWS. Fully Illustrated.

HUMAN EMBRYOLOGY and MORPHOLOGY. By A. KEITH, M.D., F.R.C.S.Eng., Lecturer on Anatomy at the London Hospital Medical College. Demy 8vo, with nearly 250 Illustrations.

A TEXT-BOOK of ZOOLOGY. By G. P. Mudge, A.R.C.Sc.Lond., Lecturer at the Polytechnic Institute, Regent Street. With 200 Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

PHOTOTHERAPY. By N. R. Finsen. Translated by J. H. SEQUEIRA, M.D. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 4s. 6d. net.

SEVEN ROMAN STATESMEN. By Charles Oman, Deputy Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, Illustrated.

ARNOLD TOYNBEE: A Reminiscence. By Lord MILNER, G.C.B. New Impression. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

MONSIEUR VINCENT: A Short Life of St Vincent de Paul. By JAMES ADDERLEY, Author of "Stephen Remarx," &c. With Portrait, 3s. 6d.

HUGH of LINCOLN. By Charles Marson, Vicar of Hambridge, Taunton. Elegantly bound, with Portrait, 3s. 6d.

BALLADS of the FLEET. By Sir Rennell Rodd, K.C.M.G. A New and Cheaper Edition, with Additional Poems. Crown 8vo.

KING EDWARD'S COOKERY BOOK. By Florence A. GEORGE, Teacher of Cookery in King Edward's Schools, Birmingham. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TWO BABES in the CITY. By Christine Seton and ESTRA WILBRAHAM. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

THE FIERY DAWN. By M. E. Coleridge, Author of "The King with Two Faces." 6s.

CYNTHIA'S WAY. By Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick, Author of "The Grasshoppers," "The Inner Shrine," &c. 6s.

THE ARBITER. By Mrs. Hugh Bell. 6s.

T' BACCA QUEEN. By Theodora Wilson. 6s.

HALF MY LIFE. By Capt. W. T. Hickman. 6s.

MR. ELLIOTT. By Isabella O. Ford. 6s.

THE BETTALEY JEWELS. By E. M. Balfour BROWNE. 6s.

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford St., Strand.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO.

THE EMPRESS ELIZABETH OF AUSTRIA. By CLARA TSCHUDI. With Coloured Portrait. Uniform with the author's "Marie Antoinette," "Eugenie, Empress of the French," "Napoleon's Mother," and "The Empress Augusta of Germany." 7s. 6d. "Miss Tschudi has made a special place for herself in the exposition of regal ladies. She has won praise for her presentment of each; but, like the exceptional host, she has kept the best vintage till the last."—Academy. "As a biographer of crowned heads, Miss Tschudi has had notable success."—Scotsman.

A COUNTERPART OF "THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS."

THE LABYRINTH OF THE WORLD AND THE PARADISE OF THE HEART. By J. A. COMENIUS. Translated by Count Lützow. 6s. "More's 'Utopia' and Campanella's 'Civitas Solis' both influenced the writer of this allegory, which is more like 'The Pilgrim's Progress' than any other work. We can heartily assure our readers that it is well worth reading, and that the translator has performed his difficult task admirably."—Rock. "The translation is conspicuous for its accuracy. It is, indeed, surprising that a foreigner should have attained such a mastery of our language. It will be found interesting to many readers. It is written in an excellent style, and the proverbial expressions with which it abounds give vigour to the narrative."—Athenæum.

THE TRAINING OF THE BODY FOR GAMES, ATHLETICS, GYMNASTICS, AND OTHER FORMS OF EXERCISE, AND FOR HEALTH, GROWTH, AND DEVELOPMENT. By F. A. SCHMIDT, M.D.; and EUSTACE MILES, M.A., Amateur World Champion at Tennis, &c. A very handsome volume of 564 pp., with 307 Illustrations, large 8vo, with copious Index. 7s. 6d. "An admirably full treatise. Few readers will fail to find in its pages that which appeals to their needs and experiences. Excellently produced and illustrated."—Academy.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS: Their Influence on English History. By J. G. C. MINCHIN. (Charterhouse, Eton, Harrow, Merchant Taylors', Rugby, St. Paul's, Westminster, Winchester.) 6s. "The book is filled with most interesting reading."—Glasgow Herald. "The eight great public schools are here very adequately and graphically written of, and their influence on English history traced and proved." Bookman.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

(1) PRINCE BABER AND HIS WIVES: The Slave Girl Narcissus and the Nawab of Lalput. By W. St. CLAIR. 6s. "Tales of native Indian life, giving evidence of first-hand knowledge. The writer possesses imagination in no small degree."—Bookman. "The author's unusual knowledge of Indian life, and his insight into Eastern character, give the work a peculiar value."—Scotsman. "It is long since we have read any tales more instinct with the naif spirit of the Eastern story-teller."—Times of India.

(2) THE MANSE GATE. By TUBAL CAIN. 6s. "Deserves high praise for the fearless candour with which it deals with hard facts and burning questions. We wish it were already in a sixpenny edition, for we hail it as one of the first fluttering forerunners of the crusade that is to fill the years of our new century." The Young Man.

LIFE BY THE SEA-SHORE: An Introduction to Zoology. By M. NEWBIGIN, D.Sc. (Lond.). 92 original Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net. "Thoroughly scientific, though intended for popular reading."—Literary World. "Well studied, interesting, and instructive." Scotsman.

THE ADVERSARIES OF THE SKEPTIC; or, The Specious Present: A New Enquiry into Human Knowledge. By ALFRED HODDER, Ph.D. 6s. "Treated with much care, yet with sufficient boldness to arouse the reader to take sides with Dr. Hodder, or Prof. Royce and Mr. Bradley."—Scotsman.

BEOWULF AND THE FIGHT AT FINNSBURG: A Prose Translation. With Introduction, Notes, Bibliography, &c., by JOHN R. CLARK HALL, M.A., Ph.D. 12 Illustrations. 5s. net. "A clever, scholarly, and eminently readable translation."—Notes and Queries. "It probably, for scholarly purposes, represents the original better than either that of Messrs. Morris and Wyatt, or that of Prof. Earle."—Academy. "No praise is too great for the art of the translator, who has also adorned his task with a great deal of admirably-put matter in the elucidation of the many difficult problems."—School World.

PROF. BICKERTON'S TWO NEW BOOKS.

THE ROMANCE OF THE EARTH. With 56 Illustrations. 2s. 6d. "Full of interest, instruction, and delight." School World.

THE ROMANCE OF THE HEAVENS. With Diagrams. 5s. "The book is admirably written."—Nature.

PAGANISM IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. By Rev. W. J. WILKINS, Author of "Modern Hinduism." 3s. 6d. "Mr. Wilkins uses his Indian experience to produce from heathen source parallels, which are often curious, to details of Romanism." Yorkshire Post.

THE TIME OF TRANSITION; or, The Hope of Humanity. By FREDRICK A. HYNDMAN, B.A. (Oxon.), of the Inner Temple. 6s. "Reflections upon matters of religious, poetical, social, and domestic interest, as these present themselves to a thoughtful observer as one century goes and another comes."—Scotsman.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. BELL'S Announcements.

Messrs. BELL'S MINIATURE CATALOGUE OF BOOKS RELATING to ART (No. 2) is now ready and may be had on application.

Super royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

HUBERT VON HERKOMER, R.A., HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By A. L. BALDRY. With 16 Photogravure Plates and about 100 other Illustrations. With binding designed by Prof. von Herkomer. [Ready.

Small folio, £2 2s. net.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. An Illustrated Chronicle of his Art and Life. By H. C. MARILLIER. Second Edition, abridged and revised, with 15 Photogravure Plates and 100 other Illustrations. With binding designed by Christopher Dean. [Ready.

Continuation of Lady Dilke's Work on French Art in the XVIIIth Century.

FRENCH DECORATION AND FURNITURE IN THE XVIIIth CENTURY. By LADY DILKE. With 16 Photogravure Plates, and 56 Half-tone Illustrations. Impl. 8vo, 28s. net.

 Also a limited Large Paper Edition, with extra Illustrations. Folio, £2 2s. net. [Ready.

Small 4to, 12s. 6d. net.

FRA FILIPPO LIPPI. By EDWARD C. STRUTT. With 4 Photogravure Plates and 52 other Illustrations. With binding designed by Christopher Dean.

Royal 8vo, 15s. net.

THE PRINT COLLECTOR'S HANDBOOK. By ALFRED WHITMAN, of the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum, Author of "Masters of Mezzotint." With 80 Illustrations. [Ready.

TWO BOOKS BY MR. BERNHARD BERENSON.

THE STUDY AND CRITICISM OF ITALIAN ART. By BERNHARD BERENSON. With 42 Illustrations. Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.

CONTENTS: "Vasari in the Light of Recent Publications"—"Dante's Visual Images and his Early Illustrators"—"Venetian Painting"—"Correggio"—"Giorgione's Lost Originals"—"Amico di Sandro."

LORENZO LOTTO. An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. Second Edition, revised. With 64 Illustrations, including many pictures which have never before been reproduced. Small 4to, 15s. net.

Fcap. folio, £2 2s. net.

THE CHATSWORTH VAN DYCK SKETCH-BOOK. By LIONEL CUST, M.V.O., F.S.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery, London, Surveyor of the King's Pictures and Works of Art, Author of "Anthony Van Dyck: An Historical Study of his Life and Works." With upwards of 40 Collotype Plates.

 The drawings in this celebrated Sketch-Book will here be reproduced by permission of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., for the first time.

Two vols., small 4to, £1 1s. net each.

HISTORY of the TOWER of LONDON. By Lord RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER, F.S.A. Profusely illustrated with Photogravure Plates.

Two vols., large post 8vo.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON I. By JOHN HOLLAND ROSE, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Largely compiled from new materials taken from the British official records. With numerous Illustrations, Maps, and Plans.

In 6 vols., 6s. net each.

A HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE. From the Fall of Constantinople. By the late THOMAS HENRY DYER, LL.D. A new Edition, revised and continued to the end of the XIXth Century by ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Maps. Vols. I. and II. Ready. Vols. III. and IV. Immediately.

Two vols., demy 8vo. 15s.

COVENTRY PATMORE. Memoirs and Correspondence of. By BASIL CHAMPNEYS. New and Cheaper Edition, revised.

THE BRITISH ARTISTS SERIES.

New Volume.

The ENGLISH PRE-RAPHAELITE PAINTERS; THEIR ASSOCIATES AND SUCCESSORS. By PERCY BATE. With upwards of 100 Illustrations and 2 Photogravure Plates. Second and Cheaper Edition, with many new Illustrations. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Previous Volumes of the Series. 7s. 6d. net each.

SIR E. BURNE-JONES. By MALCOLM BELL.
LORD LEIGHTON. By ERNEST RHYS.
SIR J. E. MILLAIS, R.A. By A. L. BALDRY.

THE GREAT MASTERS IN PAINTING AND SCULPTURE.

Edited by G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.

New Volumes, with 40 Illustrations and Photogravure Frontispiece. Post 8vo, 5s. net each.

FRANCIA. By G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. [Ready.
BRUNELLESCHI. By LEADER SCOTT. [Ready.
MANTEGNA. By MAUD CRUTTWELL. [Nov.
REMBRANDT. By MALCOLM BELL. [Dec.
GIOTTO. By F. MASON PERKINS. [Jan.
WILKIE. By LORD RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER, F.S.A. [Feb.

Others to follow.

HANDBOOKS of the GREAT CRAFTSMEN

Illustrated Monographs, Biographical and Critical, on the Great Craftsmen and Works of Ancient and Modern Times.

Edited by G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D., Editor of the "Great Masters" Series.

Imperial 16mo, with numerous Illustrations.

The following Volumes are now in hand.

THE PAVEMENT MASTERS OF SIENA. By R. H. HOBART CUST, M.A.
PETER VISCHER. By CECIL HEADLAM.
THE IVORY WORKERS OF THE MIDDLE AGES. By A. M. CUST.

Others to follow.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF PAINTERS.

Pott 8vo, cloth, with 8 Illustrations, 1s. net each.

PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION.

NEW VOLUMES of BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

PRESTCOTT'S CONQUEST OF MEXICO. Copyright Edition. With the Notes of JOHN FOSTER KIRK, and the Author's latest corrections. With a new Introduction by GEORGE PARKER WINSHIP, A.M. (Harvard). 3 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

SYNONYMS DISCRIMINATED. A Dictionary of Synonymous Words in the English Language, showing the accurate signification of words of similar meaning. Illustrated with Quotations from Standard Writers. By the Ven. Archdeacon C. J. SMITH, M.A. With the Author's latest Corrections and Additions. Edited by the Rev. H. Percy Smith, M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford. Re-issue in cheaper form, 6s.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

Digitized by Google

OLIPHANT'S NEW BOOKS.

THE MAN OF THE MOMENT.

Now ready.—With 15 Illustrations, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON AND THE AMERICA CUP. By CHARLES T. BATEMAN.

The Author has received much kind help from Sir Thomas, so that the book is as strictly accurate as it is intensely interesting.

Now ready.—Crown 8vo, 5s.

ONESIMUS, CHRIST'S FREEDMAN. A Tale of the Pauline Epistles. By CHARLES E. CORWIN.

The period covered by the book presents a most attractive field for the novelist, and the author has availed himself of the opportunity of presenting a thrilling picture of the life of the times.

Now ready.—With numerous Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

THE SIGN OF THE CROSS IN MADAGASCAR. By Rev. J. J. KIPLING FLETCHER.

Now ready.—Price 2s. 6d., cloth, red edges.

PRAYERS FOR THE CHRISTIAN HOME. Morning and Evening Prayers for eight weeks, with Prayers for Special Occasions. Edited by a Committee of the United Free Church of Scotland.

Now ready.—Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MINISTERIAL LIFE AND WORK Being a Series of Lectures on Pastoral Theology delivered at all the Scottish Universities, under the Authority of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. By JAMES STEWART WILSON, D.D., Author of "The Life-Education and Wider Culture of the Christian Ministry."

Now ready.—Crown 8vo, 1s.

THE KINGSHIP OF SELF-CONTROL. Individual Problems and Possibilities. By WILLIAM GEORGE JORDAN.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

MISSION PROBLEMS AND MISSION METHODS IN SOUTH CHINA. By J. CAMPBELL GIBSON, D.D., Swatow. With Map and numerous Illustrations. 6s.

A reviewer in the Daily News says: "I have great pleasure in recommending the book to all who are interested in foreign missions, or the broader subject of the Far East."

WINSOME WOMANHOOD: Familiar Talks on Life and Conduct. By MARGARET E. SANGSTER. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net.

"The volume is a fascinating one to all womankind, and chats in the freshest, most delightful manner of the girl and the woman."—Woman.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, London: 21, Paternoster Sq., E.C.; and Edinburgh.

W. Thacker & Co.'s New Books.

Speeches by H.E. the Right Hon. Lord CURZON of KEDLESTON, G.M.S.I., G.C.I.E., Viceroy and Governor-General of India, 1898-1901. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

The Great Anarchy: Sketches of Military Adventure in Hindustan during the period immediately preceding British Occupation. By H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., M.A., Author of "A History of India," "The Fall of the Mogul Empire," &c. With a Preface by the Right Hon. Sir RICHARD TEMPLE. 8vo, 6s. net.

Representative Indians: Short Biographies of Forty Native Indian Statesmen, Philanthropists, Jurists, Scholars, Social and Political Reformers, Journalists, and others. By G. P. PILLAI, B.A. With Portraits. Second Edition. [In the press.

Clowes' Naval Pocket-Book, 1901, Edited by L. G. CARR LAUGHTON. The most valuable Work of Reference now available, containing a Full List of Battleships, Ironclads, Gunboats, Cruisers, Torpedo Boats, a List of Dry Docks, and other valuable information concerning all the Navies of the World. Sixth Year of Issue. Cloth, 16mo, 5s. net.

The Imperial Russian Navy, its Past, Present, and Future. By FRED T. JANE, Author of "All the World's Fighting Ships," "The Torpedo in Peace and War," &c., &c. With 150 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 30s. net.

The History of China. By D. C BOULGER, Author of "Chinese Gordon," "Sir Stamford Raffles," &c., &c. A New Edition, Revised and brought up to date. Containing Chapters on the Recent Concessions to the European Powers. Illustrated with Portraits and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

A Summer in High Asia. A Summer Ramble through Baltistan and Ladakh. By Capt. F. E. S. ADAIR, Author of "Sport in Ladakh." With a Chapter on Central Asian Trade by Capt. S. H. GODFREY. Illustrated, and a Map of the Route. Medium 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d. net.

Bullet and Shot in Indian Forest, PLAIN, and HILL. With Hints to Beginners in Indian Shooting. By C. E. M. RUSSELL, M.R.A.C., late Senior Deputy-Conservator of Forests, Mysore District. With a Frontispiece by C. Whymper. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s. 6d.

The Fighting Races of India. A Handbook by P. D. BONARJEE, Assistant in the Military Department of the Government of India. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. An Account of the Sikhs, Gurkhas, Pathans, Baluchis, Punjabis, Dogras, Rajputs, Mahrattas, and other Tribes from which the Indian Army is recruited.

Whyte-Melville's Works. Edition de Luxe. Illustrated by Hugh Thomson, G. H. Jalland, Cecil Alden, C. E. Brock, Bernard Partridge, H. M. Brock, and others. Each volume contains a Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum. Edited by the Right Hon Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P. Demy 8vo, handsomely bound, with gilt tops, hand-made, deckle-edged paper. Complete in 24 vols. £12 12s. net

W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS

New and Revised Edition of "THE UNIVERSE."

By F. A. POUCHET.

THE UNIVERSE;

Or, the Infinitely Great and the Infinitely Little.

By F. A. POUCHET, M.D. Revised and Edited by J. R. AINSWORTH DAVIS, M.A., Professor of Biology and Geology in University College, Aberystwyth. Illustrated by 269 Engravings on Wood and 7 Coloured Pictures. Medium 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

By G. A. HENTY.

WITH ROBERTS to PRETORIA: a Tale of the South African War. With 12 Full-page Illustrations by William Rainey, R.I., and a Map. Cloth elegant, 6s.

AT the POINT of the BAYONET: a Tale of the Mahratta War. With 12 Full-page Illustrations by Wal Paget, and 2 Maps. Cloth elegant, 6s.

TO HERAT and CABUL: A Story of First Afghan War. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by C. M. Sheldon, and Map. Cloth elegant, 5s.

By Dr. GORDON STABLES, R.N.

IN QUEST of the GIANT SLOTH. With 6 Full-page Illustrations by J. Finnemore, R.I. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By E. HARCOURT BURRAGE.

CARBINEER and SCOUT: A Story of the Boer War. With 4 Page Illustrations. Cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

By H. ELRINGTON.

IN the DAYS of PRINCE HAL; or, The Little Forester. Illustrated by Arthur Garratt, Cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

By FRED SMITH.

THE BOYHOOD of a NATURALIST. New Edition. With 6 Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

By HARRY COLLINGWOOD.

THE PIRATE ISLAND. New Edition. With 6 Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

By S. BARING-GOULD.

GRETTIR THE OUTLAW. New Edition. With 6 Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE.

AN ORIGINAL GIRL. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Cloth elegant, 6s.

By KATHARINE TYNAN.

A GIRL of GALWAY. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by John H. Bacon. Cloth elegant, 6s.

By FRED SMITH.

THE WORLD of ANIMAL LIFE. Edited by FRED SMITH. Profusely Illustrated with Engravings after F. Specht and other eminent artists. Cloth elegant, 5s.

By ELIZA F. POLLARD.

THE DOCTOR'S NIECE. With 6 Illustrations by Sydney Cowell. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By BESSIE MARCHANT.

THREE GIRLS on a RANCH: a Story of New Mexico. With 4 Page Illustrations. Cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

By J. M. CALLWELL.

A LITTLE IRISH GIRL. Illustrated by H. Copping. Cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

By FLORENCE COOMBE.

FOR the OLD SCHOOL. Illustrated by Paul Hardy. Cloth extra, 2s.

By CAPT. F. . BRERETON, R.A.M.C.

THE DRAGON of PEKIN: a Story of the Boxer Revolt. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by W. Rainey, R.I., and Map. Cloth elegant, 5s.

A GALLANT GRENADIER: a Story of the Crimean War. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Wal Paget, and Map. Cloth elegant, 5s.

By JOHN SAMSON.

IN the DICTATOR'S GRIP: a Story of Adventure in the Pampas and Paraguay. With 6 Page Illustrations by Paul Hardy. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By CHARLES SQUIRE.

The GREAT KHAN'S TREASURE: a Story of Adventure in Chinese Tartary. With 6 Full-page Illustrations by Monro S. Orr. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS.

THOSE TWINS! With a Frontispiece and 28 Illustrations by S. B. Pearse. Cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

By JENNIE CHAPPELL.

TERRIE'S TRAVELS; or, The Adventures of a Small Boy. With 21 Illustrations by S. B. Pearse. Cloth extra, 2s.

By SKELTON KUPPORD.

HAMMOND'S HARD LINES. By SKELTON KUPPORD. New Edition. Illustrated by Harold Copping. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

By JENNETT HUMPHREYS.

LAUGH and LEARN: Nursery Lessons and Nursery Games. By JENNETT HUMPHREYS. New Edition. With 4 Coloured, and many Black-and-White Illustrations. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

BLACKIE'S GRADUATED STORY BOOKS.

Simple Stories by the Best Authors.

New Volumes of the Shilling Series.

BEARS and DACOITS. By G. A. HENTY. New Edition.

CRUSOES of the FROZEN NORTH. By Dr. GORDON STABLES.

A SAXON MAID. By ELIZA F. POLLARD.

UNCLE BOB. By MEREDITH FLETCHER.

New Volumes of the Ninepenny Series.

CHERRYTHORPE FAIR. By MABEL MACKNESS.

LITTLE GREYCOAT. By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS.

TOMMY'S TREK. By BESSIE MARCHANT.

New Volumes of the Sixpenny Series.

TWO LITTLE CRUSOES. By A. B. ROMNEY.

THE LOST DOLL. By ENNIE CHAPPELL.

BUNNY and FURRY. By GERALDINE MOCKLER.

BLACKIE'S NEW PICTURE BOOKS.

By CHARLES ROBINSON—WALTER JERROLD.

NONSENSE, NONSENSE. With 28 pages in Full Colour, 36 pages in two colours, cover design and end papers, by Charles Robinson. Verses by WALTER JERROLD. Picture board, 10¾ inches by 8¾ inches, cloth back, 6s.

By H. B. NEILSON.

AN ANIMAL A.B.C. With 24 pages in two colours, and 26 pages in black-and-white. Picture boards, cloth back, 2s. 6d.

By STEWART ORR—JOHN BRYMER.

GAMMON and SPINACH. Pictures by Stewart Orr, Verses by JOHN BRYMER. Cover design and 24 pages in Full Colour. Picture boards, cloth back, 6s.

By FRED SMITH.

THE ANIMAL BOOK: a Natural History for Little Folk. With a Coloured Frontispiece and 34 Full-page Illustrations by F. Specht. Crown quarto, 11¼ inches by 9¼ inches, picture boards, cloth back, 2s. 6d.

BLACKIE'S NEW TOY-BOOKS.

In prices ranging from 2s. to 3d.

BLACKIE & SON'S New Illustrated Catalogue of Reward Books, &c., &c., free on application.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey, E.C.

Digitized by Google

J. M. DENT & CO.

SOME IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE BIBLE AS LITERATURE.

THE TEMPLE BIBLE.

(Uniform with the "Temple Shakespeare.")

Edited by LEADING BIBLICAL SCHOLARS.

In 24 vols, each with Preface, Notes, Maps, &c., and Photogravure Frontispieces mainly after the great English Artists. Cloth, 1s. net; limp leather, 1s. 6d. net per vol. First Volumes (immediately):—

GENESIS. Edited by Prof. A. H. Sayce, D.D., LL.D.

EXODUS. Edited by Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy, D.D.

Companion Volume (shortly):—

INTRODUCTION to HOLY SCRIPTURE. By the Right Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, D.D., D.C.L., Lord Bishop of Ripon.

 For full list of Editors and other particulars, see Special Prospectus.

A LARGE-TYPE EDITION OF THACKERAY.

THACKERAY'S

PROSE WORKS.

ILLUSTRATED THROUGHOUT BY C. E. BROOK.

Edited by WALTER JERROLD. In 30 vols., 3s. net per vol. [See prospectus.

 By Special Arrangement with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., the Prose Works will be issued COMPLETE at the rate of one novel monthly, commencing in October with VANITY FAIR (3 vols.).

HAZLITT'S COMPLETE WORKS.

Edited by A. R. WALLER and ARNOLD GLOVER. With Introduction by W. E. HENLEY. With Photogravure Portraits. 12 vols., 7s. 6d. net per vol. (Limited to 500 sets; vols. not sold separately.) [See prospectus.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON.

Edited by ARNOLD GLOVER. With Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. With 100 Illustrations by Herbert Railton, and numerous Photogravure Portraits. In 3 vols., large medium 8vo, £1 2s. 6d. net. Also Large-Paper Edition, with 30 Tinted Photogravure Portraits, limited to 150 copies, price to be obtained of the Booksellers. [See prospectus.

FLORENTINE VILLAS.

By JANET ROSS. Illustrated with Photogravure of Zocchi's Engravings, and Text Illustrations by N. Erichsen. £3 3s. net. Also limited Edition de Luxe, of the Booksellers. [See prospectus.

NAPOLEON'S LETTERS TO JOSEPHINE.

Edited H. F. HALL. With Notes interspersed, showing the Events concurrently Taking Place. 7s. 6d. net.

LADY CHILLINGHAM'S HOUSE PARTY.

An English Version of "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie." By Dr. SEBASTIAN EVANS and F. B. GOLDNEY. Illustrated by H. M. Brock. 3s. 6d. net.

HADDON HALL LIBRARY.

SHOOTING. By A. Innes Shand. Illustrated by H. L. Richardson and J. Smith. 7s. 6d. net.

MEDIÆVAL TOWN SERIES.

SIENA. By R. L. Douglas. LONDON. By H. B. Wheatley. CAIRO. By Stanley Lane Poole.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

A SUMPTUOUS ART BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

STORIES of the TUSCAN ARTISTS. By Albinia Wherry. Illustrated with over 50 Reproductions. 10s. 6d. net.

GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES. Edited by Marian Edwards. With 100 Illustrations by R. Anning Bell. 5s. net. [Just published.

THE GOSPEL STORY of JESUS CHRIST. By Ida W. HUTCHISON. Illustrated by Patten Wilson. 5s. net.

ANNALS OF FAIRYLAND.—Second Volume.

THE REIGN of KING COLE. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. 4s. 6d. net.

SAINTS of ITALY: Legends Retold by Ella Noyes. Illustrated after Old Masters by Dora Noyes. 4s. 6d. net.

BEAUTIFUL BIRDS. By Edmund Selous. Illustrated by Rev. H. D. Astley. 4s. 6d. net.

THE BAIRN BOOKS.

Illustrated in Colours by Chas. Robinson. 1s. 3d. net; or, 2 vols. in box, 2s. 6d. net. First Volumes:—A BOOK of DAYS.—THE FARM BOOK.

ILLUSTRATED LIST OF NEW BOOKS ON APPLICATION.

J. M. DENT & CO., 29 and 30, Bedford Street, London, W.C.

Messrs. Wm. Blackwood & Sons'

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WORDS by an EYEWITNESS: the Struggle in Natal. By "LINESMAN." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.

"Words by an eyewitness! You have there the words which a son of Adam, looking on the phenomenon itself, saw fittest for depicturing it." Carlyle.

LIFE OF MAJOR-GENERAL

SIR ROBERT MURDOCH SMITH, K.C.M.G., Royal Engineers. By his Son-in-Law, WILLIAM KIRK DICKSON. With Portraits, Maps, and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net. [Ready October 7.

ALFRED TENNYSON. By Andrew Lang. Being the New Volume of "Modern English Writers." Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Ready.

CECIL RHODES: a Study of a Career. By HOWARD HENSMAN, Author of "A History of Rhodesia." In 1 vol., small demy 8vo. [Shortly.

SEPOY GENERALS: Wellington to Roberts. By G. W. FORREST, C.I.E., India Office. With Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo. [October 28.

THE EARLIER RENAISSANCE. By Professor SAINTSBURY. Being Volume V. of "Periods of European Literature." Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready October 21.

THE COLLECTED WRITINGS of JANETTA, DUCHESS of RUTLAND. With Portraits and Illustrations. In 2 vols., post 8vo. [In the press.

HURRAH for the LIFE of a SAILOR! Fifty Years in the Royal Navy. By Admiral Sir WILLIAM KENNEDY, K.C.B. With numerous Illustrations. Sixth and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, 6s.

A HANDY VOCABULARY: English-Afrikander, Afrikander-English. For the Use of English-Speaking People in South Africa. By G. M. G. HUNT. Small 8vo, 1s. [Ready.

A PALACE of DREAMS. By Ada Bartrick BAKER (Ada L. Budden). In 1 vol., crown 8vo. [Immediately.

LEADERS of RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By S. H. MELLONE, Author of "Studies in Philosophical Criticism and Construction." In 1 vol., crown 8vo. [In the press.

IMMORTALITY, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALFRED WILLIAMS MOMERIE, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in King's College; and Morning Preacher at the Foundling Hospital, London, &c. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready October 14.

SHIPS that PASS in the NIGHT. By Beatrice HARRADEN. Twentieth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 15 Illustrations, 3s. 6d. [Ready.

AT HOME in FIJI. By C. F. Gordon Cumming. With 7 Illustrations by the Author. Cheap Edition. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE MOST FAMOUS LOBA. By Nellie K. BLISSETT, Author of "Wisdom of the Simple," "The Concert Director," &c., &c. With a Frontispiece. [Ready.

JOE WILSON and HIS MATES. By Henry LAWSON, Author of "The Country I Come From," &c. [Immediately.

MONSIEUR MARTIN: a Romance. By Wymond CAREY.

A MAN of DEVON, and other Sketches. By JOHN SINJOHN, Author of "Villa Rubein," "Jocelyn," &c., &c. [October 14.

THE END of an EPOCH. By A. Lincoln Green. [October 28.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

Digitized by Google

SOME NEW and FORTHCOMING BOOKS

FROM THE HOUSE OF

George Newnes, Ltd.

Shakespeare's Complete Plays and Poems.

A New Pocket Edition in 3 vols. Printed in large, clear type on extremely thin but thoroughly opaque paper. Each volume, though 900 pages, will measure not more than ¾ in. in thickness. Bound in limp lambskin, price 3s. 6d. net per vol.

UNIFORM WITH ABOVE IN SIZE AND STYLE.

The Complete Poems of John Milton.

In 1 vol., price, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; lambskin, 3s. net.

The Poems and Songs of Robert Burns.

In 1 vol., price, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; lambskin, 3s. net.

Don Quixote.

In 1 vol., price, cloth, 3s. net; lambskin, 3s. 6d. net.

Modern Mural Decoration.

By A. LYS BALDRY. With 70 Full-Page Illustrations, 4 of which are in colours, and many others in the text. Crown 4to, price 12s. 6d. net.

THE CAXTON SERIES.

ILLUSTRATED REPRINTS OF FAMOUS CLASSICS.

Printed in large, clear type on antique wove paper, with Photogravure Frontispiece, and from 10 to 14 Illustrations by well-known artists in black and white. Small fcap. 8vo, 6¼ in. by 4¼ in., cloth limp, gilt tops, designed end-papers, 2s. 6d. each net; limp leather, 3s. each net.

Undine, and Aslauga's Knight.

By LA MOTTE FOUQUE. With Illustrations by Harold Nelson.

The Pilgrim's Progress from this World to That Which is to Come

By JOHN BUNYAN. With Illustrations by Edmund J. Sullivan. 2 vols.

In Memoriam.

By ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. With Illustrations by A. Garth Jones.

The Serious Poems of Thomas Hood

With Illustrations by H. Granville Fell.

A Book of Romantic Ballads.

Compiled from various sources, ranging from the Thirteenth Century to the Present Day. With Illustrations by Reginald Savage.

The Sketch-Book.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. With Illustrations by Edmund J. Sullivan. 2 vols.

The Story of Rosalind.

By THOMAS LODGE. With Illustrations by Edmund J. Sullivan.

Herrick's Hesperides and Noble Numbers.

In 2 vols.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The First Men in the Moon.

By H. G. WELLS. With Illustrations by C. E. Shepperson. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

Tregarthen's Wife.

By F. M. WHITE. With Illustrations by Frances Ewan. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

Jim the Penman.

By DICK DONOVAN. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

"Lem."

A New England Village Boy: his Adventures and Mishaps. By NOAH BROOKS. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TWO NEW BOOKS OF FAIRY TALES.

Queen Mab's Fairy Realm.

An Original Collection of Tales from the Literatures of England, France, Germany, and Spain. With 68 Illustrations and Coloured Frontispiece. Price 6s.

A Real Queen's Fairy Book.

By CARMEN SYLVA (the Queen of Roumania). With 24 Full-Page Illustrations with designed borders in colours and Coloured Frontispiece. Price 6s.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Tales of Greyhouse.

By R. S. WARREN BELL. With numerous Full-Page Illustrations. Price 5s.

Acton's Feud.

By F. SWAINSON. With 12 Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

The Heart of the Prairie.

By JOHN MACKIE. With 12 Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

Longfeather the Peacemaker; or, the Belt of Seven Totems.

By KIRK MUNROE. Price 3s. 6d.

The Boys of St. Elmo's.

By A. T. STORY. Price 3s. 6d.

Valour for Victoria.

By J. A. MANSON. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES IN "OUR NEIGHBOURS" SERIES.

Dutch Life in Town and Country.

By a Resident at the Hague. Illustrated. Price 3s. 6d.

Spanish Life in Town and Country.

Illustrated. Price 3s. 6d. net.

Italian Life in Town and Country.

Illustrated. Price 3s. 6d. net.

Lilies for English Gardens.

By GERTRUDE JEKYLL. (Country Life Library.) 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THREE NEW GIFT BOOKS.

A Popular History of the XIXth Century.

By EDWIN HODDER. Containing 750 Illustrated pages. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net.

Britannia Bulwarks.

Containing 48 beautiful coloured pictures of British Warships, Past and Present. Cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net.

Beautiful Mamma.

A Collection of Stories about Children. By Miss WINIFRED GRAHAM. Illustrated. Cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

THREE VOLUMES IN THE LIBRARY OF USEFUL STORIES.

The Story of Fish Life.

By W. P. PYCRAFT. With 18 Illustrations. Price 1s.

The Story of Animal Life.

By B. LINDSAY. Illustrated. Price 1s.

The Story of Euclid.

By W. B. FRANKLAND. Price 1s.

The Animals of the Bible.

By GAMBIER BOLTON, F.Z.S. With 54 Illustrations. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

7 to 12, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Digitized by Google

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CARE of BOOKS: an Essay on the Development of Libraries and their Fittings from the Earliest Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century. By J. W. CLARK, M.A., Registrary of the University of Cambridge. 18s. net. [Nearly ready.

THE EARLY AGE of GREECE. By WILLIAM RIDGEWAY, M.A., Disney Professor of Archæology in the University of Cambridge, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College; late Professor of Greek in Queen's College, Cork; Author of the "Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards," &c. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. In Two Volumes. Vol. I. now ready. 21s.

SPECTATOR.—"It is impossible to do justice to the close method of reasoning pursued by Mr. Ridgeway. Not one page of his six hundred and eighty-four is unnecessary or pointless, and we can only recommend all scholars who are interested in the early literature and civilisation of Greece to study this—the most important of recent contributions to classical scholarship."

FABLES and FOLK-TALES from an EASTERN FOREST. Collected and Translated by WALTER SKEAT, M.A., M.R.A.S., F.A.I., sometime Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, late of the Federated Malay States Service, Author of "Malay Magic." Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Fcap. 4to, white buckram, with Nine Full-page Illustrations and Map, 7s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the HEBREWS to the ROMAN PERIOD. With Maps. By R. L. OTTLEY, Rector of Winterbourne Bassett, sometime Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Seven Maps, 5s.

SPECTATOR.—"Mr. Ottley faces with courage the critical problem as it concerns Old Testament History. . . . On the whole, Mr. Ottley's book will be found a sober and cautious effort to accommodate the old and the new. Something of the kind is absolutely necessary, and we are thankful for an honest and devout effort to supply the want."

GREEK and LATIN COMPOSITIONS. By RICHARD SHILLETO, of Trinity College, late Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.

LIFE and LETTERS in the FOURTH CENTURY. By T. R. GLOVER, M.A., Classical Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.

ENGLISH LAW and the RENAISSANCE (the Rede Lecture for 1901.) With some Notes. By F. W. MAITLAND, LL.D., Hon. D.C.L., Downing Professor of the Laws of England in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo., cloth, 2s. 6d. paper, 1s. 6d. [Nearly ready.

THE TEACHING of HISTORY. Edited by Lord ACTON, Regius Professor of Modern History, and W. A. J. ARCHBOLD, M.A. With an Introduction by Professor MAITLAND. 2s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.

Among the contributors, each of whom will deal with a different aspect of history teaching, will be Professor Gwatkin, Mr. R. L. Poole, Dr. Cunningham, Mr. Tanner, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Marten, and Professor Ashley.

THESAURUS PALAEOHIBERNICUS. A Collection of the Oldest Monuments of the Gaelic Language. Edited, with Translation, Notes and a Glossary, by WHITLEY STOKES, D.C.L., Foreign Associate of the Institute of France, and and JOHN STRACHAN, M.A., Professor of Greek and Comparative Philology, Owens College, Manchester. In Two Volumes. Vol. I., 30s. [Nearly ready.

ROBERT BROWNING as a RELIGIOUS TEACHER: being the Burney Essay for 1900. By ARTHUR CECIL PIGOU, B.A., Scholar of King's College. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"A very careful study of a difficult subject. . . . Mr. Pigou's essay may be studied with much profit."

IN MEMORIAM. By ALFRED, Lord TENNYSON. Edited, with a Commentary, by ARTHUR W. ROBINSON, B.D. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; also bound in leather, with gilt top, 3s. 6d.

GUARDIAN.—"Simplicity, singleness of purpose, and self-suppression are the distinguishing characteristics of this edition of Tennyson's masterpiece. . . . We thank Mr. Robinson, therefore, on our own behalf, as well as that of the 'general reader,' for whom the book has primarily been prepared, for clearing away some of these difficulties without raising others, and for allowing Tennyson to teach his own lesson, as nearly as may be, in his own way."

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.—BIOLOGICAL SERIES.

General Editor—A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College.

LECTURES on the HISTORY of PHYSIOLOGY during the SIXTEENTH, SEVENTEENTH, and EIGHTEENTH CENTURIES. By Sir MICHAEL FOSTER, K.C.B., M.P., M.D., D.C.L., Sec. R.S., Professor of Physiology in the University of Cambridge, and Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 9s.

ZOOLOGY: an Elementary Text-Book. By A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge, and E. W. MACBRIDE, M.A. (Cantab.), D.Sc. (Lond.), Professor of Zoology in McGill University, Montreal. Demy 8vo. With numerous Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.—NEW VOLUMES.

General Editor for the Old Testament and Apocrypha—A. F. KIRKPATRICK, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge.

A New List of net prices for the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges will be sent on application.

THE PSALMS. Books IV. and V., xc-cl. Edited by A. F. KIRKPATRICK, D.D. [Nearly ready.

THE BOOK of DANIEL. Edited by the Rev. S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. 2s. 6d. net.

GUARDIAN.—"Dr. Driver's edition of Daniel takes its place in the very front rank of the excellent series of commentaries to which it belongs. Its learning and completeness, indeed, lift it far above the level of a school or college text-book."

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

Digitized by Google

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S Autumn Announcements.

THE BARBARIAN INVASION of ITALY. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Illustrated and with 3 Maps. 2 vols. Demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

THE CONFESSIONS of a CARICATURIST: Being the Autobiography of Harry Furniss. Illustrated with over 300 Illustrations, many made specially for the volume. In 2 vols. Super royal 8vo, 32s.

GIOVANNI SEGANTINI: His Life and Work. Edited by LUIGI VILLARI With upwards of 80 Illustrations reproduced direct from the original paintings. In 1 vol. With Photogravure Frontispiece. Imperial 8vo, with specially designed cover, and boxed. £1 1s. net.

OLD DUTCH TOWNS and VILLAGES of the ZUIDERZEE. By W. J. TUIN and J. G. VELDHEER. Illustrated by J. G. Veldheer and W. O. J. Nieuwenkamp. With decorative initials. Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s.

IN the LAND of the BLUE GOWN. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD LITTLE. 1 vol., super royal 8vo. With over 100 Illustrations. 21s. net.

BEFORE I FORGET: Being the Autobiography of a Chevalier d'Industrie. Written by ALBERT CHEVALIER. Very fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

THE BEGINNING of SOUTH AFRICAN HISTORY. By Dr. G. M. THEAL, Author of "South Africa," "Theal's Little History of South Africa," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 16s.

ITALIAN CHARACTERS in the EPOCH of UNIFICATION. By COUNTESS MARTINENGO CAESARESCO. Cheap Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE COLLECTED POEMS of MARY ROBINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HISTORY of FLORENCE. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, Popular Edition, 7s. 6d.

THE HEART of the EMPIRE. Studies in Problems of Modern City Life in England. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. Second Impression.

IN TIBET and CHINESE TURKESTAN: Being the Record of Three Years' Exploration. By Captain H. H. P. DEASY. With Appendices, Maps, and 80 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, Cheap Edition, 6s. net.

A JILT'S JOURNAL. By RITA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

THE BOURGEOIS. By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

TWO BUSYBODIES. By Mrs. S. G. ARNOLD. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo cloth, 6s.

YORKE the ADVENTURER, and other TALES. By LOUIS BECKE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

CINDERELLA. A new long complete Novel by S. R. CROCKETT. 8 Illustrations Crown 8vo, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

A DOUBLE CHOICE. By JAMES BAKER, Author of "The Cardinal's Page," "John Westacott," "The Gleaming Dawn," "By the Western Sea," "Mark Tillotson," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

DEATH, the SHOWMAN. By JOHN FRASER. Crown 8vo, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

THE MATING of a DOVE. By MARY E. MANN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

BREACHLEY, BLACK SHEEP. By LOUIS BECKE, Author of "Edward Barry," "By Reef and Palm," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

SOULS of PASSAGE. By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Trinity Bells," "Prisoners of Conscience," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth. Illustrated. 6s. [GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

NINE UNLIKELY TALES for CHILDREN. By E. NESBIT, Author of "The Treasure Seekers," "The Would-be-Goods," &c. Profusely Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE WOULD-BE-GOODS. A Continuation of "The Treasure Seekers." By E. NESBIT. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE DISCIPLE. A Novel. By PAUL BOURGET. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. By CHARLES F. PIDGIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BERGEN WORTH. By WALLACE LLOYD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

UP FROM SLAVERY. The Autobiography of BOOKER T. WASHINGTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

ALCOHOLISM—A STUDY in HEREDITY. By G. ARCHDALL REID, M.B., C.M., F.R.S.E., Author of "The Present Evolution of Man"; Lecturer on Heredity in the University of Edinburgh, &c., &c. Large crown 8vo. 6s. net.

STEPHEN KYRLE. By KATHERINE ANDREWS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WHY NOT, SWEETHEART? By JULIA W. HENSHAW. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WALES. By O. M. EDWARDS, Lecturer on Modern History at Lincoln College, Oxford. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. [THE STORY OF THE NATIONS SERIES.

MEDIÆVAL ROME: 1073-1600. By WILLIAM MILLER, Author of "The Balkans," "Travels and Politics in the Near East," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. [THE STORY OF THE NATIONS SERIES.

A BOOK FOR GIRLS.

MARGARET HETHERTON. By E. L. KISSOW. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MAKERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By R. A. ARMSTRONG. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE BLUE BABY, and Other Stories. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "Carrots," &c., &c. Illustrated. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE HERB MOON. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBES, Author of "The School for Saints," "Robert Orange," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [UNWIN'S COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

THE STORY of the ISLE of MAN. By A. W. MOORE, M.A., Author of "A History of the Isle of Man," &c., &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

MR. MANVILLE FENN'S New Novel, THE CANKERWORM (being Episodes of a Woman's Life), is Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Also A FIGHT TO A FINISH, by FLORENCE WARDEN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SOWER of WHEAT. By Harold BINDLOSS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A strong, consistent piece of narrative, fresh and bracing. The book should appeal to most Englishmen." Manchester Guardian.

"It is gratifying to see a writer of promise like Mr Harold Bindloss achieving a really fine book.. 'A Sower of Wheat' is really an epic of life in the Great North-West. There is a freedom and breeziness about it which is typical of that splendid country, and which no one could have put into his work who was not at once a very sincere lover of nature and an enthusiastic believer in the future of Canada." Morning Leader.

"We heartily recommend the book to all who want a good story."—Daily Mail.

"A splendidly written story....To those desiring to know the ins and outs of settlement life 'A Sower of Wheat' is just the book."—Irish Times.

"The book is vividly real, the reader being continually fascinated by brilliant passages that make him feel as if he were taking part in the incidents described."—Lloyd's News.

THE TRIUMPH of HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-Runner." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A spirited story."—Academy.

"Mr Mitford has given us in 'The Gun-Runner,' and other tales, many stories of absorbing and thrilling interest, but none more so than this yarn of South African life. Few writers have the power of turning out a story which one reads with such zest from start to finish as he does."—Scotsman.

"A tale of South Africa told with knowledge, sympathy, and spirit."—Outlook.

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "The Church of Humanity," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A powerful story, which holds one's curiosity and interest keenly sustained. Its writer has produced nothing stronger, and the book is sure to be widely read."—Scotsman.

"Four hundred pages of strong writing."—Academy.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. SHIEL, Author of "The Lord of the Sea," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR: a Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS. SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Oct. 10.

A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c. By GEORGE R. SIMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Oct. 10.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

THE BLUE DIAMOND. By L. T. MEADE.

TERENCE. By B. M. CROKER. With 6 Illustrations by Sidney Paget.

THE INIMITABLE MRS. MASSINGHAM. By HERBERT COMPTON.

ANDROMEDA. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

PHILIP WINWOOD. By R. NEILSON STEPHENS.

HATHERCOURT RECTORY. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

POCKET VOLUMES, handsomely printed upon very thin paper, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges 3s. net each.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

THE CLOISTER and the HEARTH. By CHARLES READE.

"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.

FAMILIAR STUDIES of MEN and BOOKS. By R. L. STEVENSON. [October 10.

IN MEMORIAM: Memorial Verses for Every Day in the Year. Selected and Arranged by LUCY RIDLEY. Small 8vo, cloth, red edges, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON: a Life Study in Criticism. By H. BELLYSE BAILDON. SECOND EDITION, Revised. With a New Preface, and 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1535. Established 1869. 5 October, 1901. Price Threepence. [Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

We publish this week a Supplement containing a classified list of books announced for publication during the autumn season.

Mr. Lockwood Kipling's illustrations to Kim, which is reviewed in another column, while admirably illustrating the story, present a novel appearance in book illustration, being reproduced from bas-reliefs. Kim was published simultaneously in England, the Colonies, the United States, Canada, Germany, France, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and it is said that this story cost Mr. Kipling more work than any of his former books, some of the sections having been re-written a dozen times. Mr. Kipling continues his custom of printing snatches of original verse at the beginning of the chapters. They vary in interest and quality. One runs thus:

> Here come I to my own again—
> Fed, forgiven, and known again—
> Claimed by bone of my bone again,
> And sib to flesh of my flesh!
> The fatted calf is dressed for me,
> But the husks have greater zest for me,
> I think my pigs will be best for me,
> So I'm off to the styes afresh.

It is well known that many men holding appointments in Government offices devote a portion of their leisure to the writing, and also to the reviewing, of books. Nevertheless it was something of a surprise to a certain highly-placed and exclusive official to discover the other day that two of the reviews of an important book lately published by him were from the pens of the two juniors in his department.

There is an admirable suggestion for unsuccessful novelists in the practice which has just been adopted by the Rev. William Fergus, of Blythswood Church, Glasgow. Mr. Fergus is about to publish a novel called "Satan's Holiday," upon which he has long been engaged. By way, presumably, of advertising it, he has begun to read portions of the manuscript to his congregation. Mr. Fergus says he does not wish to offend Scottish prejudice by any disturbance of use and wont, and hence, before beginning to read from his novel, he announces that anyone desiring to leave may do so.

The forthcoming edition of the Collected Poems of Madame Duclaux will contain in a preface the following pretty and modest explanation of her identity and performance:

> Persuaded that no English readers will remember two foreign names, in addition to an English one, in connection with the person of one minor poet, I have reverted to that which I bore when first I wrote them. Mary James Darmesteter has no longer a right to exist. As regards the English public, Madame Duclaux has given no proof of her existence; she has before her a future of French prose, and leaves her English verses to Mary Robinson. . . . Entirely lyrical, intellectual, or romantic, these poems must sound as the merest tootling of Corydon's reed-pipe in ears accustomed to a heroic blare of trumpets or expecting the mystical melody of Tara's harp.

The current issue of the Candid Friend contains the following "Special Notice":

> The proprietors greatly regret to have to inform their readers that the founder and editor of this paper, Mr. Frank Harris, whose personality and ability are too well known to need commendation from them, has been compelled by ill-health temporarily to resign the editorship. They can but trust that Mr. Harris's health may soon be restored sufficiently to permit him to resume the duties of the position; and, in the meantime, notwithstanding his absence abroad, they hope to be helped by his counsel and ripe experience.

Chapter IV., Book I., of Mr. H. H. Joachim's A Study of the Ethics of Spinoza is entitled "God and His Modes." This was misread by a certain scribe as "God and His Moods," and drew from him the comment: "Dear me! What an excellent title for an article in the Spectator."

Mr. Hall Caine in a speech the other day in the Isle of Man, referring to The Eternal City, said "the Protestants complain that it is not Protestant; the Catholics that it is not Catholic." Our complaint is that it is not interesting.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Bernard Shaw is to re-issue Cashel Byron's Profession in a revised form with a new preface. Stevenson found this witty satire on the conventional view of life much to his taste. Mr. Shaw is also about to publish a new version of the story in Elizabethan blank verse, entitled The Admirable Bashville; or, Constancy Unrewarded, and A Note on Modern Prize-fighting.

The agricultural labourer will figure prominently in a volume, about to be issued, written by Mr. George Bourne, the author of a novel called A Year's Exile. The book is entitled The Bettesworth Book, and it consists simply of an exact record of actual "talks with a Surrey peasant," the peasant being an old man employed by the author for many years past as a gardener. Mr. Bourne achieved a considerable degree of intimacy with this peasant, who reveals his mind on nature, the weather, employers, animals, social customs, &c., &c., with much more freedom than labourers are wont to exhibit, except among themselves at the village inn. The book is put forward as a sociological document.

Mr. Jacob A. Riis, author of that powerful and suggestive book, How the Other Half Lives, is about to publish, through Messrs. Macmillan, The Making of an American. Mr. Riis is a Dane. Once a starving day-labourer, he is now one of the right kind of philanthropists in New York.

Digitized by Google

THEY are discussing in America the desirability of reviving literary patronage. "Were it not better to seek to please a wealthy gentleman of taste and culture than a vast rabble who demanded so many million pages of writing per annum, to supply a mental opiate in the intervals of toiling, eating, and sleeping?" The answer to this is that the manufacture of mental opiates for the million is not the whole of the literary activity of to-day, and that if the advocate of patronage will open his eyes he will see that there is a public (far exceeding in enterprise and wealth any conceivable body of patrons) who do make honest and aspiring literature possible. The ease with which an artist can get good work published and recognised nowadays is ahead of anything that was possible in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and his opportunities are slowly but surely widening. This is the way of freedom and naturalness. It is odd, too, that the writers who clamour for patronage as the remedy for the reign of money in the book-market suggest that this patronage should be the hobby of millionaires. "What we want is the millionaire turned publisher," says a Chicago novelist and essayist. The artist is to write, and the millionaire is to stand the racket in exchange, we suppose, for dedications. We see no salvation here. Moreover, the evidence that there is a flood of genius dammed up, waiting only the turning of a golden key, is scarce and unconvincing.

REMINISCENCE and old-time gossip lend their aromas to the September issue of the Anglo-Saxon Review. Mr. John Fyvie writes about "The Most Gorgeous Lady Blessington" in the comment-cum-quotation style which, unless it is done very badly indeed, is always interesting. Similarly Lord Ronald Sutherland Gower tells the life-story of another grande dame, to wit, Anne Luttrell, Duchess of Cumberland, whose unfinished portrait by Gainsborough was hardly known until Queen Victoria lent it to the Guelph Exhibition. Personal recollections of Rubinstein employ the pen of another gossipper, and Sir Algernon West, who is a social encyclopædia, strings together his memories of some "Celebrated Women of Recent Times." The flow of old memories is continued by Mrs. Amelia Young, who makes a volume of The World (1787) give up its quaintnesses, and by Mr. Wilfrid Sheridan, who brings forward some unpublished letters bearing on his ancestor, Richard Brinsley Sheridan. In one of these the traditional "Sherry" is all himself:

> Chancery-lane, nr. Holloway's,
> Wednesday.
>
> DEAR SHAW,—I wish extremely you could call on me at the Albany before ten this evening; if not, I will meet you here punctually at twelve.—Yours truly,
>
> R. B. SHERIDAN.

Alas! this note bears the indorsement of Shaw:

> He did not attend at either place herein mentioned. Mem. sent me to Mr. Moore, who, he said, had some money for me from him (Sheridan). I met Mr. Moore and mentioned this. His answer was that he had none, &c.

Altogether, a good number of the Anglo-Saxon, and not nearly so wanting in actuality as we have made it appear, for Mr. Julian Corbett writes on War Correspondence, Mr. Frederic J. Crowest on Coronation Music, and Mr. Earl Hodgson on Liberalism.

STUDENTS of the religious novel—a form of fiction which we are told stands next on the rota of popularity—may like to make a note of some remarks dropped by Mr. James Macarthur, the pleasant literary gossipper of Harper's Weekly Mr. Macarthur says:

> Recently I had occasion to remark the distinction which Robert Elsmere and John Inglesant gained, in their time, as religious novels. I wonder if, half a century hence, they will be as entirely forgotten as is Miss Jewsbury's Zoe, or The Two Lives, which had its little day fifty years ago, and long since ceased to be. Zoe was not only the precursor of Froude's Nemesis of Faith, published three years after it in 1848, but of Robert Elsmere. It is of some importance to recall the appearance of this work, for in modern English fiction Zoe was the first novel in which the hero's career is made dependent on the victory of modern scepticism over ancient and orthodox belief. Like Robert Elsmere, he renounces religious orders and hierarchical distinction, and, burning with the desire to serve his fellow-men, devotes himself to humanise a half-savage people in one of the wildest iron districts of South Wales. His unwearied efforts are beginning to reap some reward when Mirabeau, on the eve of the French Revolution, arrives in England, and makes fierce love to the heroine, and a Methodist revival also reaches the village in which the hero has been labouring. The irony and tragic force of the closing chapters are very striking. The career of Miss Jewsbury's hero ends in his being cast forth from the village as an emissary of Satan, amid the storm provoked by a rude and ignorant Methodist ranter. Although, like Robert Elsmere, he also is cut off by premature death, it must be said that the close of Zoe is far less commonplace than that of Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel.

Have any of our readers an acquaintance with Zoe?

THE Fortnightly has a good article by Mr. Harold Spender on Ravenna. "How lonely she lies to-day! Fringed with her melancholy pines, and lulled with no music except the croaking of the frogs, there she sinks into silent decay. Her streets are grass-grown. Her churches are empty. The very tourist shrinks from her depressed hostelries. He tries to come for the day and speeds away for the night, frighted by some vague rumour of fever, or ignorant of her claims to renown. And yet Ravenna took from Rome the fading glories of the latter Empire, and was lit for a brief space with the glory of that mighty sunset. Here was the twilight of the gods." Mr. Spender is soon standing by Dante's tomb, and walking under the frontage of Theodoric's palace. He does not, of course, forget Byron, but we could wish that Byron had enjoyed a more proportionate mention. There are not so many things in English poetry better than Byron's "Ave Maria" stanzas in "Don Juan." Some imp of darkness or accident made us misquote Byron a fortnight ago. We offer his shade the appeasement of this:

> Ave Maria! blessed be the hour!
> The time, the clime, the spot where I so oft
> Have felt that moment in its fullest power
> Sink o'er the earth so beautiful and soft,
> While swung the deep bell in the distant tower,
> Or the faint dying day-hymn stole aloft,
> And not a breath crept through the rosy air,
> And yet the forest leaves seem'd stirr'd with prayer.
>
> Ave Maria! 'tis the hour of prayer!
> Ave Maria! 'tis the hour of love!
> Ave Maria! may our spirits dare
> Look up to thine and to thy Son's above!
> Ave Maria! oh, that face so fair!
> Those downcast eyes beneath the Almighty dove—
> What though 'tis but a pictured image strike—
> That painting is no idol, 'tis too like.
>
> Some kinder casuists are pleased to say,
> In nameless print, that I have no devotion;
> But set those persons down with me to pray,
> And you shall see who has the properest notion
> Of getting into Heaven the shortest way;
> My altars are the mountains and the ocean,
> Earth, air, stars—all that springs from the great Whole,
> Who hath produced, and will receive, the soul.
>
> Sweet hour of twilight!—in the solitude
> Of the pine forest, and the silent shore
> Which bounds Ravenna's immemorial wood,
> Rooted where once the Adrian wave flowed o'er,
> To where the last Cesarean fortress stood,
> Evergreen forest! which Boccaccio's lore
> And Dryden's lay made haunted ground to me
> How have I loved the twilight hour and thee

Digitized by Google

It is interesting to have Mr. Spender's note on the present state of the pine forest :

> The pines are not so thick as when Dante walked in the Vicole de Poeti, or even when Byron rode out to his daily pistol-practice. But there is no danger that the world will ever lose these immemorial trees, instinct with a world-melancholy, born partly of association and partly of their own gaunt mournfulness—lofty trunks, bare up to a great height, and then lifting their burdens of stiff fir into the blue Italian sky. There is something profoundly mournful about these stern sentinels of Ravenna in her decay. They are so unlike Italy. They seem to have been left behind by that Gothic army of Theodoric that encamped there, to keep watch and ward over the bones of all those wandering, hapless exiles from the North who have found in Italy at once their paradise and their grave.

Lovers of Scott will do well to possess themselves of the October number of Chambers's Journal for the sake of Miss Eve Blantyre Simpson's article on "Last Links with Scott." Some of her facts and stories appeared recently in the British Weekly, but others are added, and the whole forms a very interesting and touching record of the recollections of the little and ever-lessening band of those who remember him. Undoubtedly the most striking of these memories is Mr. George Croal's. He distinctly remembers the speech in which Sir Walter avowed his authorship of his Waverley Novels, and the storm of enthusiasm it aroused.

Some interesting particulars concerning the proposed Victor Hugo Museum in Paris are given by the New York Times Saturday Review. The Museum will be opened on February 26 of next year as part of the centenary celebration of Hugo's birth at 6, Place de Vosges, then known as the Place Royal. The prime mover in these celebrations is the aged M. Meurice, Hugo's Boswell, known of late to English readers by his presentment of Hugo's love-letters. M. Meurice is over eighty years of age, and he will crown Hugo's and his own careers by giving to the Museum, besides a goodly sum of money, a collection of MSS., portraits, busts, books, and other Hugoana. Of M. Meurice's unflagging devotion to Hugo's genius, M. Henry Fouquier made eloquent mention recently in the Figaro as follows :

> I cannot imagine a spectacle more moving than that of this magnificent old man—for Meurice is over eighty—a writer of great merit himself, content still to figure as a disciple. He has constituted himself the guardian of the fame of Victor Hugo—that master of an entire literary generation—a master who seems a god. Yet this god of poetry really needs some defence against the disrespect of certain writers of our day. It would not be difficult to find, with a little research, a certain tiny chapel—so very tiny that its officiating priests may appear giants—where one of the articles of faith is that there cannot be found in all the works of Hugo one page that is worth the Voiseau Ivre of Verlaine's bel ami, Arthur Rimbaud. . . . This sort of disrespect may well be classed as the worst of literary snobbishness.

A Victor Hugo monument is to be unveiled, and the Victor Hugo revivals will fill the theatres.

"Number from First to Sixth, according to taste and service of audience." In this note referring to the blank left in the last line of each stanza of his new verses, "M. I.," published in the Windsor Magazine, Mr. Kipling confesses the banjo. But the verses are a very good banjo libretto, and they will be appreciated by the Mounted Infantry :

I wish my mother could see me now, with a fence-post under my arm,
And a knife and a spoon in my putties that I found on a Boer farm;
Atop of a sore-backed Argentine with a thirst that you couldn't buy—
I used to be in the Hampshires once
(Glosters, Lincolns, and Rifles once),
Sussex, Scottish, and Yorkshires once! (ad lib.)
But now I am M. I.!
That is what we are known as—that is the name you must call
If you want officers' servants, pickets, an' 'orse-guards an' all—
Details for buryin'-parties, company cooks, or supply—
Turn out the chronic Ikonas! Roll up the —— M. I.!

.

I wish my mother could see me now, a-gatherin' news on my own,
When I ride like a General up to the scrub an' ride back like Tod Sloan—
Remarkably small on my 'orse's neck to let the shots go by.
We used to fancy it risky once
(Called it a reconnaissance once),
Under the charge of an orf'cer once,
But now we are M. I.!
That is what we are known as—that is the word you must say
When you want men to be Mausered for one-and-a-penny a day.
We are no dollar Colonials—we are the 'ome-made supply;
Write to the London Ikonas! Ask for the —— M. I.

We hear great things of the success of the new art magazine, the Connoisseur, of which Messrs. Sampson Low are the English publishers. The October number has a very prosperous and inviting appearance. Reproduction of masterpieces in colour is apparently to be one of the Connoisseur's strong points, that of Morland's "Farmer's Stable" in the National Gallery being admirable. There is also an excellent facsimile of a colour print by Kunisada, "The Travellers," with a landscape in the background by Hiroshige II. In the Sale Room column we have an interesting olla podrida of notes, from which we "lift" the following :

> One of the most curious books that ever was written by an adept in the art of unravelling mystery was seen in a London sale-room a month or two ago. It sold for ten shillings, and was therefore not worth mentioning from a merchantable point of view, albeit it was cheap at the money. It is known as Hermippus Redivivus; or, The Sage's Triumph over Old Age and the Grave; the author, one Hans Heinrich Cohausen, it seems—for no name is given on the treatise—a physician born at Heidelsheim in 1665, who had the misfortune to die, in spite of his theory, at the comparatively early age of eighty-five. Had he not been knocked down by a cart at Münster, he ought to have been living still, for the method of prolonging the vigour and life of man, as laid down by this sage, makes it as certain as anything can do—on paper—that no one who follows it can possibly shuffle off this mortal coil in a natural way till he is as old as Methuselah. Cohausen, in his search for the elixir, had come across an inscription on an old monument, which set forth that Lucius Clodius Hermippus, whose remains were entombed below, had lived to the age of a hundred and fifteen years and five days, "anhelitu puerorum"—i.e., by imbibing the breath of young boys—and his treatise is written to prove that this is no fanciful inscription, but conveys the sober truth. On paper, as we have said, he proves his case up to the hilt, and it is a thousand pities that the Münster vehicle deprived him of life just at the very moment when it was beginning to become interesting. Hermippus is dead, it is true, and he died young; but that was because he did not know the whole truth—he was but a pioneer whom an accident foiled.

The Rambler rambles this week into a tirade against "The Real John Milton"—accusing him, of course, of treachery, double-dealing, and domestic tyranny. "All through his Life, Self was his God." After a rapid and unsparing summary of Milton's political and matrimonial life, the writer remarks : "He devoted himself to Poetry and the dragooning of his Daughters," and that is all we hear of his poetry :

> He died with scarcely a Friend in the World, his natural sourness intensified by Poverty, Blindness, and Disease.

Digitized by Google

> It is difficult to commiserate him, for, whatever Admiration his Poetry may inspire, we cannot forget that he reviled his murthered King. He died with querulous Complaints about evil Times and evil Tongues, unrepentant of his own Wickedness, full of Envy and Malice at the Restoration of that national Happiness which his scurvy Soul could not share.

Milton's is one of those lives which can never be cast into a form acceptable to all. He lived in warring times and took sides, and his partisanship will always signify, because the struggles in which he was engaged will always be deeply significant. To this welter of forces in which his memory dwells, must be added the incompleteness of his character and its harsh and masterful elements. These again will always signify, because they share the undying significance of marriage. All of which is no endorsement of the Rambler's high jinks in the judgment-seat.

We have received from Messrs. A. Constable & Co. a set of twenty volumes of their new edition of Shakespeare. It is well printed on good paper, and each volume contains an illustration, printed in colours, by such artists as Mr. Byam Shaw, Mr. Leslie Brock, Mr. Jacomb Hood, and others. The volumes are to be issued at fortnightly intervals, and will be sold separately at half-a-crown each.

We suppose the juxtaposition of the following paragraphs, which appeared in a contemporary, was quite accidental:

> In a glove fight at Fort Erie yesterday, says Reuter's Buffalo correspondent, Jim Ferns knocked out Frank Erne in the fifth round.
>
> Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have in preparation the first volume of the Cloister Library, a new series, which is to contain a choice selection of works of a meditative character.

Bibliographical.

It is a little surprising to note in the lists of forthcoming books a new study of Walt Whitman. One would have thought that the last word had been said concerning that strenuous personality. It is only a few years since we had —all within the same twelvemonth—the books on Whitman by J. A. Symonds, J. Burroughs, and T. Donaldson, two of which, at least, were worthy of remembrance. Prior to that came books on the same topic by R. G. Ingersoll (1894), H. L. Traubel (1894), and W. Clarke (1892). Going farther back, we come across the volume on Whitman by R. Bucke (1883). But the number of such things is legion. One of the earliest and one of the fairest estimates of Whitman was that which the late Robert Buchanan included in his David Gray and Other Essays (1868). "Artistic sympathies," he then wrote, "Walt Whitman has none; he is that curiously-crying bird—a prophet with no taste. He sees vividly, but he is not always so naturally moved to sing exquisitely. He has the swagger of the prophet, not the sweetness of the musician. Hence all those crude metaphors and false notes which must shock artists, those needless bestialities which repel prudes, that general want of balance and that mental dizziness which astonish most Europeans."

Messrs. Ward & Lock have just issued a story by Mr. Le Queux called The Temptress, and Mr. Le Queux has promptly called attention to the fact that the work is not a new one, having been brought out originally in 1895 by the Tower Publishing Company. There can be no objection to this fact being known, but it is not quite clear that Messrs. Ward & Lock were called upon to blazon it forth. There is nothing in their edition of the tale which states or implies that it is a fresh product of the author's ingenuity. I assume that Mr. Le Queux parted with the copyright of the story, and that the Tower Company transferred it to Messrs. Ward & Lock "for a consideration." The resuscitation of The Temptress has led sundry reviewers to deal with it as a novelty, but that is nobody's fault but their own. The incident should be of value to young authors, who should be careful, when surrendering their copyright, to make certain stipulations about the future of their work—about the manner and circumstances in which it may be reproduced by and by. If literary beginners nowadays commit acts of folly, it is not from want of warning and exhortation.

Let us hope the best from Lord Dufferin's promised Introduction to the new edition of the works of Sheridan. About those works it is not perhaps possible to say anything new, but assuredly Sheridan owes very little to his critics. Macaulay was hostile; Mrs. Oliphant was utterly at sea. The most sympathetic of his censors was, I take it, Hazlitt; we must remember, too, the essay by Leigh Hunt. One of the most competent of the commentators was Mr. Brander Matthews, U.S.A., who wrote the biographical sketch for the edition of Sheridan's "Rivals" and "School for Scandal," American in origin, which Messrs. Chatto & Windus sent out in 1885. This edition, by the way, had illustrations from the pencils of Mr. E. A. Abbey, Mr. C. S. Reinhart, &c.

Sir Rennell Rodd's appointment to Rome has induced a few people to remember that he is not only a diplomatist but a writer of verses. As a matter of fact, he has been publishing rhymes for two decades at least. Since 1881, when he issued Songs in the South, he has produced Poems in Many Lands (1883), Freda, and Other Poems (1886), The Unknown Madonna, and Other Poems (1888), The Violet Crown and Songs of England (1892), and Ballads of the Fleet (1897). As Sir Rennell is only forty-three years of age, we may look, I dare say, for more such volumes.

Mr. Horace E. Scudder, who is to give us the authoritative Life of J. R. Lowell, should already be tolerably well known to the English public. Messrs. Sampson Low published in 1882 his monograph on Noah Webster ("American Men of Letters" series); and his Childhood in Literature and Art (1894) and History of the United States of America (1897) have both had English publishers. Certain other books of his—such as Boston Town (1881), The Bodley Grandchildren (1882), The Bodley Family in England (1883), The Viking Bodleys (1884), Stories and Romances (1886), Book of Folk Stories (1887), and George Washington (1889)—have also had some circulation in this country. Mr. Scudder, I may add, anticipated Mr. Herbert Paul in entitling a volume of critical essays Men and Letters. That was in 1887.

The latest biography of Wagner is to come to us from America, being the work of Mr. W. L. Henderson, who is, I believe, a Transatlantic critic of some note. No doubt it will show reasons for its existence, but meanwhile we are pretty well supplied with Wagner memoirs of one sort or another. One of the first was that which the late Dr. Hueffer contributed to the "Great Musicians" series in 1883. Then came a translation of F. Muncken's book (1891), F. Praeger's recollections of the composer (1892), H. T. Finck's monograph (1893), and H. S. Chamberlain's work (1897), to say nothing of a big biography, from the German, now in course of publication. Of Wagner's correspondence, of course, several volumes have been issued.

The recent revivals of Shakespeare's "Henry V." will no doubt help to enlarge the public demand for the volume on Henry, "the typical mediæval hero," which Messrs. Putnam promise us. Messrs. Benson and Waller have made Henry popular in quarters where next to nothing was known of him. It is now about twelve years since the Rev. A. J. Church wrote for the "English Men of Action" a sketch of the career of Henry. The coming volume will probably be a more elaborate performance.

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

The Old Quest.

The Hearts of Men. By H. Fielding. (Hurst & Blackett. 10s. 6d.)

THIS is a book by itself. It is not a great book, nor an epoch-making book, nor a book that libraries and clubs will buy. Divines will not use it as a text for sermons, and it will not be discussed at dinner-tables to the accompaniment of wandering inspections of frocks and stealthy glances at the menu. Yet it is, in its way, a rare, an exceptional book. It is sincere from cover to cover, the work of a lonely, brooding, introspective, but not unhappy man, on whom the riddle and mystery of existence has pressed heavily, and whose inner life-task has been to discover what he believes, and what is the meaning of the world's many religions. It is the search for a new faith, by a man "who did not find it, because he knew not what he sought." Many writers would have cast their reflections into the form of a novel, as Mr. James Lane Allen did in The Increasing Purpose. Mr. Fielding has preferred the directer form of veiled autobiography. For that we are grateful. The Boy referred to impersonally through these pages is himself; so is the Man.

We have called The Hearts of Men an exceptional book. That is so, and only an exceptional nature can produce an exceptional book. With this author the child was father to the man. As a boy he was of those (unenviable, unhappy few!) who take things hardly, who must for ever be asking why, who are not content with conventional theories from earthy elders, who will not be fobbed off with specious explanations. The curious, rebellious mind of this child was not quieted by contact with the world, as so often happens. The same questionings pursued him as a man, and it almost might be said that Providence or Fate worked with him, so that he might win through, helped by an exceptional environment, to his goal. Not for this seeker after God the distracting life of cities, competition, and the exhausting struggle to pay the way. His career sent him to the East, whence has come "all our light," the birthplace of religions, the home of those whom Max Müller has called "the most spiritual race the world has ever known," the country, conquered and yet in vital matters all unconquered by us, where "they carry their religion about with them," where "they are proud of it," where "they desire all men to know it." There, in a house half-way up a mountain side, he lived many years, much alone, with his books, his thoughts, and the marvel of the dawn, continually asking of himself and of nature: "What is the truth of things? what do you mean? And I—what do I mean? What is the secret of it all?"

Old questions! The libraries of the world are dark with books that have attempted to answer them. Shall we listen to this inquirer for a little? He comes with good credentials. Many quiet lives have profited by his former book, The Soul of a People. That was an attempt to understand a people, the Burmese; to understand a religion, that of Buddha. But he could not rest in Buddhism, although its rule of Law—unalterable, unchangeable—known by the Buddhist "long before our scientific men found it in the stars," held him with a firmer grasp than any other religion. He must pursue his Quest.

It is a simple narrative, the work of one who feels, rather than of one who thinks; mystical if you like, never philosophical. The sentences are short, the style candid as a child's face. He has nothing new to tell. Who, outside science, has? In the course of his inquiry tradition and authority are gracefully returned to their graves; creeds and other inventions of subtle minds are gently discarded; and in the hearts of men and women alive to-day, whose personal religion, whose daily conduct of life, rises above their creeds, he finds his answer. But his path was long and tortuous. Let us follow him a little.

We pass over his boyhood, and the agony he endured from being unable to reconcile the week-day code as shown in the daily life of a public school, and the Sunday code as taught in chapel and at prayers; we pass the awakening that came from reading the Origin of Species and the Descent of Man, and come to the man who is, for better or worse, committed to his Quest. It will not be denied. He must find his way or perish. Surely, he reflects, not an impossible task. In this Empire of ours all the great religions are to be found. "It is the home of Brahminism, and of the mystical forms of Hinduism. There are more Mohammedans here than under the Sultan of Roum. There are the Parsees here, fugitives long ago from Persia on account of their faith, the only sun worshippers who are left. There are Jews who came here no one can tell how long ago, there are Christians who date back may-be eighteen centuries, there are Armenians and Arabs."

> If anyone want a faith here are enough and to spare. "Therefore," thought the boy, who had now become a man, "I will seek here for what I want. I know what I want. I have it clearly before me. I have even written it down. It is not as if I was undertaking a blind search for something of which I was not sure. These are my three essentials; a reasonable theory of the universe, a workable and working code of conduct, a promise in the after life that gives me something to really desire, to really hope for, to be a haven towards which I may steer. I will take each subject, each section of a subject, separately and read it up. I will read up these faiths from books, I will study them as I can from the people, and I will see what they are. Surely somewhere can be found what I desire, what I desire so greatly to find."

He bought shelves of books, and read them intently, hope always lurking in the unturned leaves. Books on Hinduism, Mohammedanism, Judaism, Parseeism, Confucianism, Jainism he read, and on many other strange faiths. But most of all he read about Buddhism. Several years of his life were thus spent. Then he collected certain ideas from various faiths, correlated and compared them; and, after endless labour, he had advanced no farther, we gather, than the conception (there the savage and Mr. Herbert Spencer join hands) that "God is the Big Man who causes things." One by one this Solitary rejected the faiths of the world, till there were left to him but two—Christianity and Buddhism—and these in time went the way of the others. He found neither in Christ nor in Buddha the models men follow, "because men are sure that, though there be truth in their teachings, yet it is not all the truth, though there be beauty yet are there other beauties as great, nay greater than these." And so, by slow degrees, always simplifying, he began to feel his way towards his goal, getting his first glimpse the day he realised that "God arose, never out of reason, always out of instinct." Finally he turns away from the creeds that the spiritual geniuses of the world have formulated, puts his books aside, and steps down into the life around him, saying: "Man and his necessities are the eternal truth, and all his religions are but framed by himself to minister to his needs. I will now go to those who know because they know, not because they think. My books shall be the hearts of men."

There Part I. of The Hearts of Men ends. In Part II. he tells how, following this clue, he found the path that led to peace. He had learnt "never to be deceived by theories or professions"; that "the desire for immortality is one of the strongest of all the emotions; but the ideal which the theologian offers to the believer to fulfil his desire has no attraction. The more it is defined the less anyone wants it. . . . Dogmas and creeds are not religion. . . . Never mind what the creeds say; watch what the believers do. . . . Who are the happy men and women in the world? They are the people who have religion. . . . Religion is not what you say, but what you feel; not what you think, but what you do. . . . The creeds are but theories to explain religion. . . . No matter where you go, no matter what the faith is called, if you have the hearing ear, if your heart is in unison with the heart of the world, you will always hear the same song. . . . Religion arises from instincts . . . There is no 'evidence' in religion; you either believe it or you don't. . . . The great doers have always been religious, the great thinkers rarely so. . . . The faiths are all brothers, all born of the same mystery . . . They all come from that fount whence springs the life of the world."

Digitized by Google

Which is to echo St. Paul's words that the Spirit of God dwells in every man, the Spirit of that one "God who is above all and through all and in you all."

Many are certainly inclining to some such simple faith, carrying with it simple rules of conduct. It is the business of living in this world, the duty of cheerfulness, the necessity of discipline in pleasure as well as in work, with which men are at last beginning to concern themselves. Some are even beginning to ask whether they desire immortality. In the September issue of the Fortnightly Review, an Oxford don, Mr. F. C. S. Schiller, prints the following questions, which have been sent out broadcast by the American branch of the Society for Psychical Research:

I. Would you prefer (a) to live after "death," or (b) not?
II. (a) If I. (a), do you desire a future life whatever the conditions may be?
(b) If not, what would have to be its character to make the prospect seem tolerable? Would you, e.g., be content with a life more or less like your present life?
(c) Can you say what elements in life (if any) are felt by you to call for its perpetuity?
III. Can you state why you feel in this way, as regards Questions I. and II?
IV. Do you NOW feel the question of a future life to be of urgent importance to your mental comfort?
V. Have your feelings on Questions I., II., and IV. undergone change? If so, when and in what ways?
VI. (a) Would you like to know for certain about the future life, or (b) would you prefer to leave it a matter of faith?

A sign of the times. It is the life that tells. Who chooses a friend or a clerk for his creed? It is a man or woman's religion that makes and holds friendships, religion being (it is Mr. Fielding's definition) "the recognition and cultivation of our highest emotions, of our more beautiful instincts, of all that we know is best in us." In the outward expression of his own hardly-won inner life man rises above his creed. The Newman who lives is not the subtle dialectician of the Apologia, but the man who wrote: "One secret act of self-denial, one sacrifice of inclination to duty, is worth all the mere good thoughts, warm feelings, passionate prayers, in which idle people indulge themselves"; the Paul who holds the hearts of men is not the Paul of the "there are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial," but the human heart which broke through the fine meshes that the intellect had been weaving in that great outburst: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity. . . ."

A Great Surgeon.

Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget. Edited by Stephen Paget, One of His Sons. (Longmans. 12s. 6d.)

It has been said that the worst biographer, and a great enemy of sound biography, is the Widow. We do not think that such an indictment can be brought against the Son. As a rule, we find sons' biographies of their fathers good reading. They may err, as this and most biographies do, in being too long; but they are not seldom frank and manly. The life-stories of Sir John Millais and Archbishop Benson, as written by their sons, have these qualities, and the book before us is another example of a just biography by a son. Mr. Stephen Paget has in his father a subject which warrants, and demands, eulogy. Sir James Paget was a very fine man, who rose in life by unceasing effort yet with an unfailing natural dignity and humility. Thus he excites two kinds of admiration. Yet there is a carefulness and a studious quietude in all Mr. Stephen Paget's praise of his father which are grateful to the reader. Not only there is the book good. Mr. Paget has an instinct for biography. He understands the charm of detail and of interiors. This is how he pictures his father working of an evening in his great house in Harewood Place, where he lived and gave consultations for thirty-six years:

> He usually came in about five, for tea and letters. Dinner was a very plain meal, soon over; a Spartan sort of dessert was put out upstairs; he fetched his books and papers from his study, unlocked his desk, and set to work, at a narrow segment of the table that we all used. Two feet and a half was enough for his desk, his letters, and his glass of wine; and always, year in and out, he sat at the same point of the table's compass, and made the least possible space do for everything. He began work at once, took his wine and his tea while he wrote; heard and praised the music, but did not stop writing for it; at ten read prayers, then wrote till twelve, and sent his first batch of letters to the post; then wrote again, or read pathology or surgery till one or two in the morning. Of all memories of Harewood Place, the most vivid is of him sitting at his own small share of the big round table at his desk; and we knew the moment when he signed a letter, and the etching sound of his pen changed to a swishing sound as he wrote his name.

Again, we wish to know the manner of a great London physician to his patients. It is one of the things that is asked and discussed in regard to every doctor. Mr. Paget does not fail us:

> His manner toward new patients was rather formal; it was an ordeal for some of them to consult him. He used to stand while he spoke to his patients, and was sparing of his words, but careful to write or talk fully and precisely to the medical man who had advised or brought the patient to consult him. With those patients who talked much he was silent; he said it was the quickest way in the end; and he was fond of trying in how few words he could write or say a thing. Once he was challenged to a sort of contest in brevity, and accepted the challenge. His adversary was a Yorkshireman, who came into his consulting-room and merely thrust out his lip, saying, "What's that?" "That's cancer," he answered. "And what's to be done with it?" "Cut it out." "What's your fee?" "Two guineas." "You must make a deal of money at that rate." And there the consultation ended. He saved his words to save time and because it amused him to save them, and not from any love of talking in oracles. To be brief was to be wise, to be epigrammatic was to be clever; and his constant word of praise was "wise."

We have plunged in medias res, and it is not our purpose to trace Paget's long career from the year 1830, when he was apprenticed to a doctor in Yarmouth, his native town, to his death less than two years ago. It is a record of strenuous toil, slowly but at last richly rewarded. In the autobiographical memoir which he left, and which is the basis of this biography, he wrote: "If I had died before I was forty-seven I should have left my wife and children in extreme poverty. . . . If I had died or had become unfit for hard work before I was sixty, they would have been very poor." This is the statement of a great West End surgeon who rose to the height of his fame and to the proverbial £10,000 a-year when most men are beginning to slacken in the struggle. Honour retarded his acquisition of honours, for during years of his early career he was joining with his brothers in the discharge of debts incurred by his father, whose good fortune had ebbed in late life leaving him poor, but blameless in the eyes of a censorious world.

Digitized by Google

Sir James Paget, like Dr. W. B. Richardson, has a good word for the old apprenticeship system, whereby a student learned at the outset of his career a great deal of miscellaneous medical knowledge and many points of practice. His early studies were continued at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but under conditions very different from those of to-day. He crept slowly from one little success or appointment to another, and in his first year discovered, without getting much credit for it, the parasite Trichnia spiralis. At twenty-two, being only a little way advanced in his profession, and quite without prospects, Paget became engaged to be married. This indiscretion was the happiest event of his life, "the beginning of an engagement which for nearly eight years gave me help and hope enough to make even the heaviest work seem light, and then ended in a marriage blest with constancy of perfect mutual love not once disturbed. No human wisdom could have devised a step so wise as was this rash engagement." What his work was in quantity and effort may be gathered from the pages of his own memoir. It included every kind of task, even teaching and medical journalism and the cataloguing of the collection in the Royal College of Surgeons Museum. A glimpse of his thoroughness and scientific methods is given in regard to this catalogue, which occupied much of his time for seven years:

> I described every specimen as I saw it standing or lying before me; nothing was to be told but what could be then and there seen; nothing that could be only imagined or remembered; there was to be mere translation from eyes to hand. And I venture to say that in tasks of scientific description no other method than this, where it is possible, should be trusted.

The work seemed arid enough, but Paget's mental fibre was of the best, and the long years of waiting, on an income averaging £170 a year, were lived by him in consistent effort and fidelity to his career. His tasks were so long and hard that "nothing in after life could seem laborious."

It was as a consulting surgeon and pathologist, and as a lecturer on pathology, that Paget gained wealth and fame. In practice, says his son, "his highest excellence was not in operating, but in his calculation of all the complex forces at work on a patient—heredity, temperament, habits, previous illnesses; in his insight into the variations and abnormalities of disease; and in his pathological knowledge or the characters, tendencies, and developments of surgical diseases." With the highest medical and surgical sagacity went a rare talent in exposition. Paget was an orator, if into that word you read the severe dominance of matter over mere eloquence, and of serious purpose over verbal art. The many extracts from his addresses which Mr. Stephen Paget quotes prove that he was a master of the kind of oratory which could alone serve him and his hearers. We wish space permitted us to copy a good many of these passages. The following words from a lecture on Degeneration are specially worth quoting, because they deal with a subject on which he meditated much in relation to himself:

> To degenerate and die is as normal as to be developed and live; the expansion of growth and the full strength of manhood are not more natural than the decay and feebleness of a timely old age; not more natural, because not more in accordance with constant laws as observed in ordinary conditions. As the development of the whole being, and of every element of its tissues, is according to certain laws, so is the whole process regulated, by which all that have life will, as of its own workings, cease to live. The definition of life that Bichat gave is, in this view, as untrue as it is illogical. Life is so far from being "the sum of the functions that resist death," that it is a constant part of the history of life that its exercise leads naturally to decay, and through decay to death.

Compare these words, delivered during his thirties before the Royal College of Surgeons—where some of his seniors were vexed to sit under "a mere boy"—with what he wrote to Sir Henry Acland as late as 1896:

> I am, thank God, well, and may have been refreshed, in some measure, by my holiday. But I am growing very old, and as I watch the changes that old age brings, I constantly feel sure that they are such as one should be thankful for—including as they do the consciousness that the "time draweth near," and that, in the short time that may remain, there is very little claim or need for the work that almost wholly occupied one's earlier days; and that one's mind is wholly unfit for the study of such subjects as used to be one's delight and seemed to be one's duty; and that thus and by various other means one is being taught how best to use the time thus mercifully granted, and, as it were, divinely set apart and exactly fitted for its best use.

Thus becomingly did a well-knit, ordered and richly stored life draw to its close. We have not named a tenth of his occupations and triumphs. His friendships might have detained us. He bore the pall at Tennyson's funeral. We find him at the Grillion Club, sitting between Gladstone and Matthew Arnold. George Eliot writes to him about medical points for her stories. Browning and Romanes are his guests at Harewood Place, where Paget's firm, fine face lights up as Browning tells a story of a girl in their Italian lodgings who regularly stole their tea, which they bore with, but were angry when their candles went too, yet were mollified when they found out that she stole the candles to burn before a little shrine in expiation of her thefts from the tea-caddy. Well born in the best sense, as he tells us, well nurtured and companioned in his home, early married, faithful to himself and to his profession, Sir James Paget rose by the sheer headway of his character, without pushing or advertisement, until in the fulness of time he became a spectacle of all that is dignified and highly trained in man.

Millais painted his portrait. Photography has perpetuated his kind yet firm features, and his mild yet lofty looks. When he stood under Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait of Hunter at the Royal College of Surgeons, to deliver the Hunterian Oration before an audience which included the Prince of Wales, Mr. Gladstone, the Duke of Argyll, Dean Stanley, Mr. Huxley, Mr. Tyndall, and many other distinguished men, one feels that he must have earned from them all the judgment which Gladstone expressed afterwards, when he divided mankind into two sets—the happy few who heard that oration and the to-be-pitied many who did not.

Good Art Criticism.

The Study and Criticism of Italian Art. By Bernhard Berenson. (Bell. 10s. 6d.)

A HANDSOME book and one all alive is Mr. Berenson's latest addition to the several volumes that bear his name. Vitality, indeed, is its most penetrating quality; vitality of style, vitality of content—and this in an age when Swinburne's "apes of the Dead Sea" are nowhere more active than in the field of art-writing. Mr. Berenson goes forward with a stride, an ease, a certainty that, translated into terms of paint, would stamp him one of the masters; and his thoroughness is that of a German who has learnt to think in English.

Mr. Berenson is always instructive, but with erudition he combines a rare gift for speculation of the right sort. His Vasari in the Light of Recent Publications, for instance, saves us any amount of trouble by establishing quite clearly how much and how little the Tuscan Boswell owed to his predecessors. Vasari was not the first writer to collect personal paragraphs about his beloved Florentines, but he was the first of any moment. The "Anonimo Magliabecchiano," an industrious but flat-footed compiler, Antonio Billi, who preceded him, are so lucidly explained that, except for professional purposes, we feel nothing could induce us to examine a body of material so inferior to the structure quarried from it by Vasari. The Tuscan was an artist; his predecessors were not. They did good service, however, in preparing the way and furnishing matter for those indispensable "Vite."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Berenson, we make bold to say, is at his best in the paper on "Amico di Sandro." Like the late Dr. Owen, he constructs the entire animal out of some fossilised remains. In other words, he has found a new master, and, too, a very necessary one. "There exists a group of Florentine pictures . . . which at present pass under the names of Filippo Lippi, Botticelli, Ghirlandajo, and Filippino Lippi"—this group is evidently the work of someone else. Mr. Berenson's task is, primarily, to prove it homogeneous; secondly, to find the homo. This he does so convincingly that one of our most haunting doubts is gradually dissolved. In the royal apartments of the Pitti Palace, opposite the "Pallas" discovered by Mr. Spence, hangs a circular Madonna put up by the curator. Mr. Cornish describes his "find" as a Botticelli: arguing that there is nobody else to whom it can reasonably be ascribed. This Madonna is Botticelliesque, but inferior in quality to the real thing. It is second-rate, and might well be the work of one of Sandro's followers; indeed, of the very person, who, on similar grounds, Mr. Berenson christens "Amico di Sandro." We have not examined this piece with any minuteness, but, so far as we recollect, it bears much the same relation to a representative Botticelli that the Naples "Virgin and Child with Two Angels" does to the Chigi Madonna.

The speculative work to which we have just alluded is brilliantly carried out; no strain is put upon the intelligence—indeed, we turn from "Amico di Sandro," feeling more than anything the moderation with which his claims are urged. The like spirit infuses a highly exciting paper on "Certain Copies after Lost Originals by Giorgione." Not so very long ago Mr. Herbert Cook treated the same subject; but here Giorgione was lurking behind every tree. Mr. Cook was so anxious that no possible example should escape that he committed excesses. Mr. Berenson is content with a smaller haul, and never too eager to saddle his hero with the work of a lesser hand. He also, it is interesting to read, plumps for the Hampton Court "Shepherd Boy." Mr. Cook quite spoiled the case for the prosecution by a somewhat shaky ascription to Torbido, and by an enthusiastic acceptance of work much inferior to the "Shepherd Boy"; also by neglecting the morphological evidence which Mr. Berenson uses to such advantage.

In conclusion, we must call the reader's attention to some very excellent, if less mature, work on Correggio; to a paper dealing with the earlier Venetian masters as exemplified by the exhibition held some years ago at the New Gallery; and to a very suggestive note on the actual images seen in the "mind's eye" of Dante. The "Perugini," on p. 11, is a misprint for "Perugino"—nor would Charles Dickens's son-in-law have it otherwise. The book is illustrated with many pertinent reproductions.

Our Own Times.

Modern Europe: 1815—1899. By W. Alison Phillips. (Rivingtons.)

THIS is an excellent book, which should certainly be in every newspaper office. In the space of 600 pages Mr. Phillips contrives to give a connected and readable history of Europe from the Battle of Waterloo down to the outbreak of the Boer War; and when we consider that this period includes the revolutionary upheavings of 1848, the Crimean, Franco-Austrian, Austro-Prussian, Franco-Prussian, and Russo-Turkish wars, together with the founding of two new Great Powers in the Kingdom of Italy and the Empire of Germany, the task may well seem Herculean. In order to effect it, Mr. Phillips has to cut all descriptions of campaigns, and, in fact, of all military affairs, as short as possible; but perhaps this is no great loss. With the increasing complications of the military art, it may be doubted whether long descriptions of strategy and tactics such as Kinglake attempted in his Crimea have much permanent value.

The story that Mr. Phillips has to tell may serve to remind us how quickly events once familiar are receding from us. To a generation which has seen Mr. Gladstone's Bulgarian atrocity agitation and its faint recrudescence over the Armenian massacres, it seems odd to hear that the independence of the Greece which has been so long the spoiled child of Europe was not accomplished without barbarities to which the Bulgarian and Armenian horrors are as feathers:

> The Greek clergy [says Mr. Phillips, in describing the insurrection of 1821], headed by Archbishop Germanos of Patras, took the lead in proclaiming a war against the infidel; and the Mussulmans of the Morea, taken by surprise, had no time in which to organise resistance. At the outburst of the revolt these numbered some 25,000 souls; within six weeks none survived save the remnant which had escaped into the fortified towns. These, too, as one by one the strong places were starved into submission, were massacred with every aggravation of barbarity. The storming of Tripolitza followed by the deliberate slaughter in cold blood of 2,000 Mussulman prisoners of all ages and sexes, completed the first chapter in the history of the revolt.

When we consider that during the last Greco-Turkish war neither side had anything to complain of in the treatment of wounded or prisoners, we may flatter ourselves that public opinion in Europe has made some ethical advance in at least one particular.

Whether it has done so in others is more open to doubt. Metternich is compared by Mr. Phillips to Mephistopheles as being the very spirit of unbelief; yet it is difficult to say that in point of public faith we have gone far forward since his time. Nothing is more striking in this history than the cynical way in which European statesmen—honourable men as they no doubt are in private life—yet break their most solemn public engagements when once they have fulfilled their purpose. Russia, Mr. Phillips tells us, entered into the Black Sea Treaty of 1856 with the deliberate intention of repudiating it at the first convenient opportunity, an opportunity which duly occurred during the Franco-Prussian War of 1870. But in doing so she very well knew what she was about, for the liberty to denounce it was the price, according to Mr. Phillips, with which Bismarck had purchased Russia's neutrality, and even in certain circumstances her active aid against France as far back as 1867. We all remember "the traitor stab" that France dealt Italy when she stipulated for the cession of Nice and Savoy as the price of her help against Austria, but that was at least fair bargaining. But what shall we say of the treachery with which both France and Prussia plotted against Europe in the secret treaty for the partition of Belgium and Luxemburg, which was, fortunately, never carried into effect? Even Italy, it is said, in spite of the assistance she received from Prussia in achieving her own independence, was willing to throw in her lot with France in 1870 on certain terms, and the only thing that prevented this was the dallying of Napoleon III. with the offer until it was too late. The diplomatists and statesmen of Europe appear in Mr. Phillips's book as a set of cardsharpers apparently playing an open and honourable game, while secretly each one is scheming to obtain some unfair advantage from his neighbours.

Mr. Phillips does not conceal his own political bias,

Digitized by Google

although he seldom allows it to interfere with his impartiality. He is possibly right when he argues in more than one passage that England has done herself harm rather than good by the efforts she has made to check the expansion of Russia in Europe, inasmuch as she has thereby compelled the Czar to seek increase of territory in Asia. Setting aside the question whether policy has really much to do with the territorial expansion of nations, it seems to us that Mr. Phillips's contention will only hold good if Russia is really plotting the eventual conquest of India, a contingency which only time can make certain. The Crimean War is now generally admitted by both political parties in England to have been a mistake, and it certainly seems curious that if Russia's eventual aim be India she did not make further efforts to achieve it when we were in the throes of the Great Mutiny. For the rest, Mr. Phillips passes over in silence the abandonment of the Soudan under Mr. Gladstone—a fault which he may perhaps consider wiped out by the subsequent reconquest by Lord Kitchener; and, although he goes at some length into the partition of Africa, omits all reference to the surrender at Majuba. It is curious to be reminded by him that the idea of a Franco-Russian alliance is as old as the Treaty of Tilsit, and was declared by Lamartine to be "the cry of nature, the revelation of geography, the alliance of war, the balance of peace." He thinks that it only fell into abeyance through the abhorrence felt by the French democracy at the crushing of Poland by Russia, and later by the apparent instability of Republican government in France. In this, too, he may be right.

Almost the only protest that we should care to make against Mr. Phillips's dicta on such questions is the proposition which he advances very early in the book, that "in the national as in the constitutional movements of the age the motive power will always be found to be the pressure of material needs or interests." This theory, wherein appears the leaven of the old Utilitarian philosophy, is, in fact, disproved by nearly every page of his book. It was certainly the pressure of no material need or interest that induced Europe to play the fairy godmother part in the establishment of an independent Greece and an independent Italy. Nor was it material need, or, apparently, anything but jealousy of the rising power of Prussia, which caused all France in 1870 to egg the Emperor on to war. Even the aggressions of Russia on Turkey, resulting as they have done in the creation of a belt of autonomous Christian States between her and her supposed goal of Constantinople, do not here appear to have been dictated by the greed for territory. Rather, does Mr. Phillips say, their origin is to be sought in the mystical ideas of Alexander I., who thought himself called by heaven to be the champion of Christendom, and to the impress which that policy, once seriously taken up, has left upon the still doubtful character of the Russian bureaucracy. If there is a lesson to be learnt from Mr. Phillips's history, it is that sentiment, and not reason, more than ever rules the world.

It only remains to say that three maps, a very full bibliography, and a sufficient index make the book as valuable for reference as it is pleasant to read.

Good Sense and Observation.

A Motley Crew: Reminiscences, Observations, and Attempts at Play-Writing. By Mrs. G. W. Steevens. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

> I only publish this Motley Crew because it was the wish of one whose word to me was—and is—law that it should be done.
>
> Should any part of the volume attain any measure of success, it would encourage me to go on, so let the critic and public beware.

By all means let Mrs. Steevens go on; in its way her book is entertaining. There is in it a brisk good sense, touched with a feeling of all the pity and difficulties of life, which goes home to the reader. We do not wonder that the late Mr. G. W. Steevens urged his wife to publish these sketches. The "Sketch in Five Phases" with which the book opens has for its theme a marriage like that in "Locksley Hall"—"Thou art mated to a clod"; only the results are painted in darker colours. As for the telling, it is not a bit dramatic, but simply narrative and comment into which a slow Biblical simplicity and remoteness have crept. Good, too, in the same style is "Fell by the Way"—a young man's error. In all we find observation and keen human sympathy. The essay on "Charities and Charity," reprinted from the Pall Mall Gazette, is the straight talking of a woman of clever practical benevolence and quick wits. Best of all we like "The Opinions of an Old Lady." The old lady is Mrs. Oliphant, and the paper is a gay little record of her wise prattle about life, young women, and books, during a country visit. On a wet day her hostess said to her in the library: "I hope, dear madam, that you find something you can read":

> She sniffed again, more decidedly this time, and drew her lips together, making what, if I had not so much respect for her, I should call a moue. "I can read them, my dear," she said, "I have a robust appetite. I can read the Family Herald, which my maid takes in regularly. They are a sort of bane and antidote; the Family Herald all victim and fine manners, the new literature the reverse. I think I prefer Lady Angelina, or even the angelic governess who triumphs over every temptation, to the flushed and walloping young woman of the others; but you know I am old-fashioned. I begin to lose myself in the sound, and don't know which is which—Keynotes, or Discords, or Eclogues, or Spasms—they are all in the same tone. The women are a trifle more indecent than the young men, but neither the one nor the other, as far as I can see, are acquainted with anything better in life than those beings whom in my time we called by disagreeable names, and desired to hear of as little as possible."
>
> "It is the reign of realism," said I. "They all wish to depict things as they see them."
>
> "The reign of fiddlesticks!" cried my Old Lady.

The whole thing is airy, inconsequential, and wise—the pleasantest scourging and forgiving of the New Woman by the Old Lady:

> "There is that poor lady of the Heavenly Twins," she said. . . . "The best character in that book is the wicked husband who keeps his word like a man and a gentleman, which is a great deal more than the woman does. It is perhaps the danger with us old people that we get too tolerant. A great many of the people who are dear to me do very wrong things, but it makes no difference in my feeling towards them. It is not what one calls forgiving. I think sometimes that it makes me understand how at the last——"
>
> She looked away over the valley, and said no more; until after a minute or two her voice, which had become a little husky, came out quite clearly: "I like that house among the trees—where you see the roofs only—no, not the others that stand up and grin at you across the coombe—the one with the roofs."

She talked of Gyp. "I was passing through her district once, and I had the greatest mind in the world to call upon her and say, 'My dear, you are delightful; you are the gayest, the wittiest, the most enchanting creature; but why, oh! why will you always gather that handful of nastiness and fling it in our faces at the end? And there is no need for it; and it's not your forte at all.'"

The Old Lady's final departure in a cab by which she had forestalled the carriage and luggage cart ordered for her is quiet humour that we like. By all means—by all manner of means—let Mrs. Steevens go on giving us her observations in such forms as these.

Digitized by Google

Other New Books.

UNSTORIED IN HISTORY. BY GABRIELLE FESTING.

The epithet, "some famous women," seems at first sight rather in conflict with the title of this book, Unstoried in History: Portraits of Some Famous Women of the 16th, 17th, and 18th Centuries. But the meaning is that they were women in their way illustrious, who yet make no figure in formal history—and indeed are most of them without any conspicuous biography, if they have found a biographer at all, as is not always the case. Truth to say, some of them seem hardly fit subjects for the adjective "famous," being but very minor and inconspicuous personages in themselves, apart from the chance absence of literary conspicuousness. But it is an interesting book, just the thing which women in general do well, and better than men. These vivid glimpses into the feminine domesticities of bygone days, drawn from contemporary letters and records, as they appeal to a woman's understanding sympathy, exactly suit the woman's touch—light, discursive, and kindly. A man's hand would crush in the handling these old scented robes of dead ladies. Here you may read how the "heying and frisking" of Queen Bess's giddy-pated maids of honour did greatly incommode of nights reverend diplomatists, one of whom retaliated by parading the ladies' dormitory in night-shirt and spectacles, declaiming Latin verses. Or how another lady stung all her fellows to bitter envy by attending a royal birthday-ball in a three-hundred-pound dress. Is it possible that these fluttering moths have passed to the same dread Assize as Elizabeth, Agrippina, and Semiramis? They, with their gossamer ambitions and little scented passions? It is a book you will read to the last word, and thank the writer. (James Nisbet. 6s)

AN ISEULT IDYLL, AND OTHER POEMS. BY G. CONSTANT LOUNSBERRY.

The title of this little volume does not stir us with any great promise of originality, and as the title are the contents. Polished, cultivated, supple verse, in the strict mode of the day; a pleasant music, languorous and thin; derivative colour and derivative diction, such as we have encountered in a dozen similar little books of verse; and under it all—nothing to say. Mr. Lounsberry (if we may at a venture so interpret the epicene name on the title-page) is best in descriptive passages, as most of this class of merely competent verse-makers are; though it cannot be said that even these passages have any touch of magic, or originality of idea. The "Ode to Bacchus" may yield an example:

> Born and re-born, now sorrowful, now glad,
> Through change eternal rising from the sea,
> His are the tides that pulse, now slow, now mad,
> Within the blood of man and beast and tree;
> His is the grape, a globe of fire and dew,
> Dusky as night, like day shot through with fire,
> An amber bead of sunshine and of rain;
> To solace woe, for those who rightly sue,
> And drown despair or kindle dead desire,
> On to the mountains, hail him from the main!
>
> Ye maids of Thebes, ye mothers, hurry hence,
> For madness mingles with the midnight air.
> The liberator Bacchus! whither, whence?
> Then follow, follow, track him to his lair.
> Unbind your tresses, let your fillets fall,
> And seize ye each a thyrsus sharp and sweet,
> Forget not then to draw the dappled fawn
> About your foam-white shoulders as ye call,
> Evoï, Bacchus! hurry we to greet
> The God before the sky is strewn with dawn.

That is good craftsmanship: but the phrases constantly suggest the model, not one has taken fire from its own motion, or draws its juices (so to speak) from the intensity of the life underneath. (John Lane. 3s. 6d. net.)

SEA AND COAST FISHING. BY F. G. AFLALO.

We have read this work with a concern which is due to our respect for its subject; but we cannot say that Mr. Aflalo has quite risen to the occasion. He has what a Scots reviewer once called "fatal facility." Of this let us give an instance:

> I have lately come across several quite excellent sea-rods of various price and pattern, among the best being one supplied to me by Messrs. Allcock, of Redditch, of sectional cane, and with some cork in the butt. The fittings are in white metal, with a pin arrangement in the ferrules. The large rubber button or knob on the end of the butt is a great comfort when playing large fish, and the rod is, moreover, in two joints only—an advantage, I find, when putting it together in a boat. In putting a rod together on a bank, or even on a pier, the extra joint does not matter, and a three-joint rod has its advantages in packing smaller, as each of the three need be but a third the total length, instead of, as in the other case, one-half.

This, no doubt, is eloquent; but it is a very long way of saying that a third is shorter than a half. Besides, Mr. Aflalo, if really he were a skilled fisherman, would not have waited until he was in the boat before putting his rod up. He would have put it up before he embarked. There are many other passages in this work which annoy us from the same cause—many passages, that is to say, in which Mr. Aflalo, assuming that all his readers are ignorant of his subject, goes prattling on in a manner which affirms great knowledge, whilst, as a matter of fact, he is writing about nothing of any importance at all. The illustrations, also, are exasperating. On page 82, for example, we find a picture very badly reproduced and under it this legend:

> Showing the "Bates" Sea Reel (Carter's), Bernard's new form of Landing Net, a sectional Cane Rod by Allcock, and a Paternoster by Farlow.

This is very impressive to the untutored mind; the trouble is that the advertisement which it gives to Carter, Bernard, Allcock, and Farlow is of absolutely no use, as the rod, the landing-net, and the Paternoster are quite indistinguishable in the picture from any others which Mr. Aflalo might have chosen for reproduction. In the text there are many signs that our industrious bookmaker pretends the virtue of knowledge when he has it not. It is not a good book; but we do not know of any on the same subject which is not just as bad. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

The one drawback to Mr. E. T. Cook's Popular Handbook to the National Gallery has been its bulk. It was not for the pocket. Messrs. Macmillan have now issued the work in two thin-paper volumes in red leather. In this form the book may be easily taken to the National Gallery in the pocket. There has been much rearrangement of the pictures since the first edition was published, and of all alterations and additions Mr. Cook takes count. He has also introduced many fresh notes.

The Story of Fish Life, by Mr. W. P. Pycraft (1s.), is added to Messrs. Newnes's "Useful Stories" series. Mr. Pycraft has caught the spirit of this admirable series, and his chapters on "How Fishes Breathe," "Fish Liveries, and Why they are Worn," and "Courtship and Nursery Duties" are especially interesting.

Hands, and How to Read Them: a Popular Guide to Palmistry, by E. René (Pearson, 1s.), is as convincing or unconvincing as you please. All we can say is, that it is a taking little book, well printed, well illustrated, and big with suggestion.

Messrs. Macmillan begin this week an edition of the novels of Thackeray at 3s. 6d. per volume. The first volume is Vanity Fair, with Thackeray's illustrations. The volume is excellent in form and size, and those who know and appreciate Messrs. Macmillan's edition of the non-copyright novels of Dickens will be glad to have their Thackeray.

Digitized by Google

Fiction.

New Canterbury Tales. By Maurice Hewlett. (Constable. 6s.)

MR. HEWLETT'S new book offers his admirers what might be called homeopathic doses of the usual mixture: six short stories of mediæval life strung together on a very slender thread of narrative. It marks no advance in his art technically; it is less interesting and piquant than the Little Novels of Italy; but many persons, we imagine, will find it easier reading than Richard Yea and Nay, although that work far excelled it in nervous force and lofty purpose. Whatever one may say about the artistic success of Richard's history, there is no question but that Mr. Hewlett set himself a great task, and endeavoured with all his might to carry it out. Here he has taken his obligations more lightly.

The stories are of the expected kind. Love is the motive of all save one, which tells, without much verisimilitude, of the abduction of a boy by the Jews. Two of the others turn upon those incredible exchanges of costume between youths and maidens which ought by this time to be ruled out of fiction by conscientious writers; in one of them, "The Cast of the Apple," the same device (a commonplace, it is true) being employed to determine sex as that which the Widow used with the petticoated Huckleberry Finn —if Mr. Hewlett will excuse a comparison with aught so modern. The remaining three stories treat of the heroic chastity of a noble lady assailed by King Edward III.; of the tragedy following upon the seduction by one brother of the beloved of another (vitiated to the reader by the glaring unlikelihood—nay, impossibility—of Matteo having an illegitimate child without all Milan knowing not only of it, but of its father); and of an old hermit's desperate endeavour to conquer his desire for a young girl, and of the winning of a soul from the powers of evil. In this last story Mr. Hewlett's weakness is displayed: he can take his place with the best in a gay, romantic conte; his tales of dashing youths and lovely maidens go with a superb lilt; he has a gusto, a joy in his work which make him for a while a bracing companion; but the history of a soul's progress to spiritual peace is outside his field. He can record it, but his heart is elsewhere; we are not impressed.

After the stories themselves comes the question of setting. Mr. Hewlett, we are afraid, would have some difficulty in rebutting the charge of perfunctoriness in this matter. It is not enough in styling a book "New Canterbury Tales" to collect half-a-dozen stories from one's recent output, and allege that they were told on the Pilgrims' Way, in the fifteenth century, of a company of travellers. Chaucer, if we may be permitted to mention his name in this connexion, gave to his stories and their narrators a convincing unity. Mr. Hewlett apportions them with no inevitableness. In fact, we get the impression that the whole Canterbury Tale machinery was an afterthought, and that it has bored Mr. Hewlett not a little. We never remember to have read anything by a capable literary man, master of literary artifice, so half-hearted and unpersuasive as these connecting passages.

The Giant's Gate: A Story of a Great Adventure. By Max Pemberton. (Cassell. 6s.)

IT must be admitted that this is an ambitious story; more than that, it is worked out with a certain precision of execution which, in a detached way, we cannot but admire. To take Paris just after the affaire Dreyfus; to invent a man called Davignon who has a good deal in common with a General whom we need not name; to make Davignon a conspirator against the Republic which is to fall before his personality and give place to an absolute monarchy for the salvation of France—here, indeed, is ambition enough. But Anatole France, who had far more knowledge than Mr. Pemberton, wrote of the affaire with reserve and without heroics. Now Mr. Pemberton is nothing without heroics; this book is full of them. His characters are always in the limelight; they are rhetorical even when they are making love; they are rhetorical when they are explaining impossible inventions; they are rhetorical when they die. They strut about a stage where the cheapest epigram suffices; they overwhelm one in torrents of words. This, it must be said, is neither life nor any approach to life. If one were to believe in Mr. Pemberton's Paris and his conspirators, one would, indeed, have to believe in a nation of fools. It is because we believe nothing of the kind that we close The Giant's Gate with satisfaction—and a smile. Mr. Pemberton's crowd is a stage crowd; but we admit that he is an admirable stage manager. There are scenes in this book which would make some audiences howl with delight.

Stephen Calinari. By Julian Sturgis. (Constable. 6s.)

MR. STURGIS is at some pains in this novel to display the cosmopolitanism of his culture. He delicately, carelessly, hints, or leaves you to understand, that he has walked round Life and Art as one might walk round the pond in Kensington Gardens. Oxford, London, Peru, the Shipka Pass, Aristotle's ethics, the modern newspaper, the great middle-class—the catalogue of his informations might be indefinitely extended. Yet he gives himself away completely in the first paragraph of Stephen Calinari as an ingénu of literature. Here is the first paragraph:

> Grey and green is Oxford in summer,
> A place of delicate vapours.
> Low by the river she lies, centre of sloping hills,
> And a light haze seems
> To float about her towers and pinnacles.
> A softened sunshine fills to the brim
> The walled gardens of her ancient colleges.
> Drowsy is all the air,
> Like the afternoon of lotus-eaters.
> The birds who babbled thick at dawn
> In the close shrubberies,
> Are silent in this slumbrous afternoon.
> Moisture and sun have made these shrubberies dense;
> They push beyond their boundaries out
> On to the shaven lawns.
> Somewhat monotonous the green may seem,
> And the grey;
> But since the summer is young,
> The verdure has innumerable shades,
> And the grey walls
> Have been touched by time and weather to many tones.

It is the sort of prose to send a young girl into raptures, and to make the reviewer smash up furniture like a Maldonado. It goes well in between descriptions of the following sorts:

> There was not half a length of daylight between the boats. A rattle was sprung, a stroke quickened at the sound. But the gallant young stroke before them quickened even more, and for a moment it looked . . .
>
> "Madame Cally," the world said in its terse, expressive language, "really did you thundering well . . ."
>
> She had the face of an angel, of a fashionable angel. Could this be she who two short years ago had followed him about with artless admiration and an apron . . .?
>
> Her strong hands sought the keys as he went obediently to his seat. It was a setting of "The Erl-King" of Goethe. . . . The quality of her voice moved him to the heart. . . . Exquisite was the art which distinguished . . . cup of life . . . unplumbed sea.

Add to these things a father dead and disgraced, who turns dramatically up about page 200, and you will perceive the materials of a thoroughly conventional fiction. Nevertheless, Stephen Calinari is not so bad after all. "The Coop family," into which the great Stephen marries, seems to have been genuinely observed.

Digitized by Google

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE RIGHT OF WAY. BY GILBERT PARKER.

A "man-of-the-world" (we borrow the epithet), melodramatic story. Mr. Parker had announced that The Lane That Had No Turning should be his last work about French Canada. He has kept his promise, for this story was written before The Lane. The hero is one Charley Steele, known as "Beauty" Steele. He is a barrister, and wins his wife by his skill in securing a verdict of not guilty for a man justly accused of murder. After marriage his wife discovers that he is a drunkard; that he had been drunk when he rose to address the jury. This book is the story of Steele's struggle against his devil. (Heinemann. 6s.)

MOUSMÉ. BY CLIVE HOLLAND.

Japanese! An old friend! It is the continuation of the history of the little lady who was first introduced to the public in My Japanese Wife. Mousmé and her husband leave Japan and come to London, where Mousmé pays visits to milliners and dressmakers, and rustles into English ways. When asked to sing, she replies: "I cannot make velly big noise when I sing, but Lou say if I wear velly smart, nice kimono, people will listen." (Pearson. 6s.)

THE MONOMANIAC. BY EMILE ZOLA.

A translation by Mr. Edward Vizetelly of La Bête Humaine. The translator contributes a breathless preface. Here is a passage: "The story teems with incident from start to finish. Each chapter is a drama in itself. To name but a few of the exciting events that are dealt with: there is a murder in a railway carriage; an appalling railway accident; a desperate fight between driver and fireman on the foot-plate of a locomotive, which ends in both going over the side to be cut to pieces, while the long train of cattle-trucks under no control, crammed full of inebriated soldiers on their way to the war, who are yelling patriotic songs, dashes along, full steam, straight ahead, with a big fire just made up, onward; to stop, no one knows where." (Hutchinson. 6s.)

A LOSING GAME. BY HUME NISBET.

A lurid story of Sydney in its infant days, with the subtitle of "An Australian Tragedy," packed with exciting incidents. "The hero of the following romance," says the author in the preface, "was a veritable personage, only ever so much worse than he is represented in these pages. Of aristocratic birth, he ran the gamut of crime without missing a single note. He was a monster with the instincts and conscience of a tiger, his will power all the more deadly by reason of his undoubted gifts and accomplishments." So the reader knows what to expect. (F. V. White. 6s.)

THE WORK OF HIS HANDS. BY CHRIS. HEALY.

A first novel, and a perfervid one. On the second page Mr. Healy refers thus to Charles Reade: "That divine writer—may his soul rest in peace." The characters in The Work of His Hands are of the people, the period is 1871, the opening scene a workshop near the Clerkenwell-road, the hero a wood-carver "of genius," but unstable. He "passes through fire, but his good angel saves him," and he becomes very pleasantly rich. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE PURPLE CLOUD. BY M. P. SHIEL.

Another of Mr. Shiel's wild imaginings, less coherent, if that were possible, than The Lord of the Sea. The Purple Cloud stretches over the cover, giving horrible fidgets to a gentleman in inky black clothes. On page 461 we read: "We will fly west to one of the Somersetshire coal mines, or to one of the Cornwall tin mines, and we will barricade ourselves against the cloud, and provision ourselves for six months—for it is perfectly feasible, and we have plenty of time, and no crowds to kick down our barricades—and there in the deep earth we will live sweetly together, till the danger is overpast." (Chatto. 6s.)

SILVIA'S AMBITION. BY ADELINE SERGEANT.

It was to be an actress, but the ambition is not fulfilled till the end of the book, and it is accompanied by troubles and explanations. The story is of the mild character, and will be pleasantly noticed by the religious press. In the beginning Tom Collis saves a woman with a baby from jumping off Blackfriars Bridge, and thereby wins a wife and a home, which was what honest Tom wanted. (Hodder. 6s.)

DON OR DEVIL. BY WILLIAM WESTALL.

> Let us bang these dogs of Seville,
> Children of the devil,
> For I never turned my back upon
> Don or Devil yet.

This gives the title to a bustling romance of fighting and adventures by sea and land. The period is just after Waterloo, and Rufus, having been jilted by Miss Somerset, ships in the Campanella, a unit in the British legion, to fight the Spaniards in Venezuela in the "noble cause of liberty." (Pearson. 6s.)

THE BOURGEOIS. BY H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

A story, light in character, slight in treatment, showing an easy knowledge of the superficial side of Continental life. "The Bourgeois" is the title of a play, and this book is mainly concerned with the adventures of Peter Alabaster, an American, and a ripe philanderer. Strange happenings accompanied the production of "The Bourgeois"—the theatre was gutted, and the damage was estimated at 1,000,000 francs. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

MOOSWA. BY W. A. FRASER.

Belongs to the Jungle Book class, and is well illustrated. In it animals are gifted with speech and power of reasoning. They choose a king, and in their councils Mooswa, a venerable elk, is a leader. The boundaries are those parts of North America near the River Saskatchewan, a favourite hunting-ground for trappers. In return for kindness shown to them by Rod, the young son of a trapper, they are enabled to save his life when at the point of death.

BARBARA WEST. BY KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN

Contains, among other matter, some light sketches of Bohemian journalism in the 'eighties, but the book, we are informed in an accompanying note, "is offered as a sound gospel of sex [whatever that may mean], and is the story of Barbara, lost by her ignorant disregard of Nature's just and kindly purpose." (Long. 6s.)

THE COURT OF HONOUR. BY W. LE QUEUX.

The hero is one of a Continental gang of swindlers, and the heroine a young Russian lady of title. It begins: "This curious drama of cosmopolitan life, a drama of love, of hate, of avarice—indeed, of all the cardinal sins of man—was related to me by Frank Talbot, millionaire, the chief actor in it." (F. V. White. 6s.)

We have also received: Ivy Curdew, by Perrington Primm (Jarrold, 6s.); For Love or Crown, by A. W. Marchmont (Hutchinson, 6s.); In the House of His Friends, by R. H Savage (White, 6s.); An Ill Wind, by Mrs. Lovett Cameron (Long, 6s.); The Lords of Life, by Bessie Dill (Long, 6s.); Miss Pauncefort's Peril, by Mrs. Charles Martin (Long, 6s.); Romance of a Harem, translated from the French by C. Forestier-Walker (Greening, 5s.).

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

Mr. Kipling's Way.

Kim was published last Tuesday, and Mr. Kipling being a personage in the world of Letters, the volume was reviewed in troops of journals on that day. The opinions were bewilderingly conflicting, as was to be expected. For, in reviewing novels, few critics follow any canons of criticism. The reviewer should be judicial and impartial, keeping in mind certain masterpieces of fiction in construction, plot, and characterisation. But that, we fear, is a counsel of perfection. The reviewer usually succumbs to asking himself such questions as: Does this book appeal to me? Was I interested? Has the reading of it carried me away from myself and my environment? Does any part remain with me now I have finished it? This method is not the narrow way of art, but it is natural, and the questions are familiar in many mouths. It is hard to overset temperamental predilections. One reviewer of Kim, we notice, finds the Lama "a colossal bore," complains that the book is "without a vestige of love interest," and decides that, as Mr. Kipling lacks the faculty of construction, he can never make "a great novelist." For ourselves, we can very well do without the "love interest," we do not find the Lama a bore, and we do not resent Mr. Kipling's lack of the faculty of construction or his ungeometrical plot. Let there be no misunderstanding. Oftentimes in these pages we have enlarged upon the importance of the technics of the art of fiction; but technics, like creeds, are for the unillumined. A man may override routine rules, as the Boers overrode the art of war laid down by European sapience. It is a dangerous game to play, but victory excuses all. This we tried to explain in our review of Captains Courageous. Mr. Kipling may never make "a great novelist," because he is more interested in ideas, in the great interior movements that live and move in the deep-rooted instincts of man, than in the ordinary ways and moods of polite life. He is still untamed, unspoilt, and he has the courage to be himself. In Kim Simla is mentioned, but the petty details of Anglo-Indian Society life are ignored. There are no flirtations under the deodars, no rides, no boudoir prattlings, and the blessed word marriage is hardly mentioned. The plot wanders like a man on an uncharted walking tour. Clues are dropped, hints that are apparently full of pregnant meaning come to nothing, or to a fulfilment so episodic, so unvital to the development of the story, that they might just as well have been omitted. The prophecy in the early chapters of Kim of "a Red Bull on a green field" that was to influence Kim's career, gives an opportunity for introducing a graphic picture of military life, and two Kiplingesque characters—an Anglican and a Roman Catholic chaplain—but otherwise it serves no end. Mr. Kipling is always more interested in the incident he is working upon than in the relation of that incident to the story. His joy is always in the present moment. And when he has written himself dry on the incident of the moment he just drops it: not often, happily, with the contempt with which he made an end of The Strange Ride of Morrowbie Jukes.

Yet Kim has coherence. It is a book not about a set, or a circle, or a particular grade of society, but about a nation. The canvas is ablaze with the colours of India. Behind the brilliant, shifting scenes of that multitudinous life—detailed and broad in turn—that he is able at will to dig from his memory and present in living pictures, looms the background of things that are changeless while all around is changing. It is this consciousness of the Big Things Behind, in contrast with his quick, bright interest in the present, shown in a dozen of his best poems and stories—shown in this book, too—that constitutes Mr. Kipling's claim to greatness. When a writer has that, it is not necessary to judge him by the ordinary canons of the novelist's art.

We can imagine that when Mr. Kipling began to plan Kim, a huge, shadowy central Motive emerged from that brooding period of incubation which always precedes the writing of a book that is not to pass into forgetfulness with the season. He thought of that arresting fact, so strange to Western minds, of a whole nation accepting and proclaiming their religion in their daily lives. He thought of that impulse, described in The Miracle of Puran Bhagat, which compels a certain type of native mind, holy man and layman, to renounce the world and go forth shorn of all worldly possessions to seek that peace which the world cannot give them. And so the Lama of this story grew into life. With him it begins, with him it ends, and about him the incidents of the narrative circle. "The one remains, the many change and pass." This personification of the unchanging ideal of the Oriental's life dominates the pages—"an old man, wise and temperate, illumining knowledge with brilliant insight." Tramping India in pursuit of his desire, everywhere he is received with the reverence that is always given to the holy man. Once only is he maltreated, but his assailants are two secret-service foreigners in the pay of the Russian Government. The object of his travels is to find the Buddhistic River of Healing, bathing in which the pilgrim washes away all taint and speckle of sin, and escapes from the Wheel of Things. He is prepared to spend "years in his quest; having nothing of the white man's impatience, but a great faith."

> "The books of my lamassery I read, and they were dried pith; and the later ritual with which we of the Reformed Law have cumbered ourselves—that, too, had no worth to these old eyes. Even the followers of the Excellent One are at feud on feud with one another. It is all illusion. Ay, maya, illusion. But I have another desire"—the seamed yellow face drew within three inches of the curator, and the long forefinger nail tapped on the table. "Your scholars, by these books, have followed the blessed feet in all their wanderings, but there are things which they have not sought out. I know nothing—nothing do I know—but I go to free myself from the Wheel of Things by a broad and open road."

It is this typical figure—the aspiration of a nation made incarnate—huge, shadowy, but defined—that looms as the big motive behind these brilliant kaleidoscopic pictures of Indian life. That, we take it, was Mr. Kipling's foundation and corner-stone in fashioning this story. Against this figure he flings gleefully the personification of the modern spirit—the imp Kim, with the cunning and resourcefulness of a street arab, combined with Irish wit and devilry. In these two Mr. Kipling depicts that friendship between man and man which can be a task better worth achieving than ringing the changes on that "love interest" which the critic of the Daily Chronicle misses. More: he shows the gradual domination of the young intellect, taking its colour from the day's experience, by the old head, bearing meekly the ancient knowledge. This may be prophecy:

> "I am an old man [the Lama says to Kim], pleased with shows as are children. To those who follow the Way there is neither black nor white, Hind nor Bhotiyal. We be all souls seeking escape. No matter what thy wisdom learned among Sahibs, when we come to my River thou wilt be freed from all illusion—at my side. Hai! my bones ache for that River, as they ached in the te-train; but my spirit sits above my bones, waiting. The Search is sure."

Digitized by Google

The pull of the ancient wisdom, right or wrong, is too strong for Kim, and he drifts towards the mystical practices that have always held India. Even the British materialism of Lucknow railway-station cannot check him in the path along which he is being propelled, though very secretly. The East is slow-moving, as she is reticent.

> A very few white people, but many Asiatics, can throw themselves into a mazement as it were by repeating their own names over and over again to themselves, letting the mind go free upon speculation as to what is called personal identity. When one grows older, the power, usually, departs, but while it lasts it may descend upon a man at any moment.
>
> "Who is Kim—Kim—Kim?"
>
> He squatted in a corner of the clanging waiting-room, rapt from all other thoughts; hands folded in lap, and pupils contracted to pin-points. In a minute—in another half second—he felt he would arrive at the solution of the tremendous puzzle; but here, as always happens, his mind dropped away from those heights with the rush of a wounded bird, and passing his hand before his eyes, he shook his head.
>
> A long-haired Hindu bairagi (holy man), who had just bought a ticket, halted before him at that moment and stared intently.
>
> "I also have lost it," he said sadly. "It is one of the Gates to the Way, but for me it has been shut many years."
>
> "What is the talk?" said Kim, abashed.
>
> "Thou wast wondering there in thy spirit what manner of thing thy soul might be. The seizure came of a sudden. I know. Who should know but I?"

The lavish mind that projected this book has given us much else. There is the varied life of India of to-day, touched deftly in with clean, clear-cut characterisation. Here again the shifting panorama is presented against a background that is permanent where all else is restless. This background is the Grand Trunk Road that runs straight "bearing without crowding India's traffic for fifteen hundred miles—such a river of life as nowhere else exists in the world." It haunts the imagination. As Kim, the imp, dances against the Lama's grey, inimitable personality, so the bright peripatetic life of India flashes against that passive, unchanging highway. The pictures sink into the memory:

> A thin, high Kattiwar mare, with eyes and nostrils aflame, rocketted out of the jam, snorting and wincing as her rider bent her across the road in chase of a shouting man. He was tall and grey-bearded, sitting the almost mad beast as a piece of her, and scientifically lashing his victim between plunges.
>
> They met a troop of long-haired, strong-scented Sansis with baskets of lizards and other unclean food on their backs, the lean dogs sniffing at their heels. These people kept their own side of the road moving at a quick, furtive jog-trot, and all other castes gave them ample room; for the Sansi is deep pollution.
>
> Then an Akali, a wild-eyed, wild-haired Sikh devotee in the blue-checked clothes of his faith, with polished-steel quoits glistening on the cone of his tall blue turban, stalked past.
>
> A solid line of blue, rising and falling like the back of a caterpillar in haste, would swing up through the quivering dust and trot past to a chorus of quick cackling. That was a gang of changars—the women who have taken all the embankments of all the Northern railways under their charge—a flat-footed, big-bosomed, strong-limbed, blue-petticoated clan of earth-carriers, hurrying north on news of a job, and wasting no time by the road.
>
> A little later a marriage procession would strike into the Grand Trunk with music and shoutings, and a smell of marigold and jasmine stronger even than the reek of the dust.
>
> It was beautiful to behold the many-yoked grain and cotton waggons crawling over the country roads: one could hear their axles, complaining a mile away, coming nearer, till with shouts and yells and bad words they climbed up the steep incline and plunged on to the hard main road, carter reviling carter. It was equally beautiful to watch the people, little clumps of red and blue and pink and white and saffron, turning aside to go to their own villages, dispersing and growing small by twos and threes across the level plain.
>
> "And they are all bound upon the Wheel," said the Lama. "Bound from life after life. To none of these has the Way been shown." He shook himself back to this world.

Kim is hardly a novel. It is a kinematograph of a people, telling also what they feel—what they have felt through time, and the effect of that immemorial feeling on those of to-day. Kim, the protagonist of the restless, quick-witted, eager present, and the Lama, the protagonist of the passionless past, full of replies, full of wisdom, represent Mr. Kipling's two sides, and it is his way in prose and verse to fuse those two sides together.

Things Seen.

The Emigrant.

For perhaps the tenth time in half an hour the train drew up with a sudden jerk, and the American tourist who shared the carriage with me threw down his paper and cursed Irish railways with fluency and unction.

"And this is the country they make such a row about," he said, snapping down the window. "Heavens, what a people!" Outside the rain was falling pitilessly, and through it I caught a glimpse of a steep hillside split up by stone walls into tiny fields, dotted with sodden corn-stooks; and beyond the fields a black and sullen expanse of bogland. On the dripping platform the guard, magnificent in braided uniform, stood watch in hand; while a solitary porter in tattered corduroys lounged on a bench and smoked a clay pipe with philosophic calm.

The engine whistled impatiently; but just as the train began to move the door of our carriage was flung open, and an old man with a tin box under his arm climbed in panting. Even apart from the elaborate array of labels on his luggage, the battered top-hat and new suit of shiny broadcloth, that contrasted so oddly with his gnarled hands and face, seamed by wind and weather, proclaimed him an emigrant. He had been a herd on a mountain farm, he told us, but had grown too old for the work, and was now about to join his son, who had money, "somewhere in Chicago," he explained vaguely. "Magnificent city—Chicago!" said the American, and launched forthwith into a description of its glories, to which the other replied listlessly, staring with a set face out of the window.

Suddenly the shadow of a mountain loomed up in front, and the old man pointed eagerly: "Slemish!" he cried, with a new ring in his voice, "that's where I lived—up there beyond the ridge—a fine place!" As we whirled past it was only a bare hill, blurred by trailing wisps of mist, with a few sheep wandering over its stony pastures; and I saw the tourist's lip curl scornfully. But the old man's face was alive with an interest all the wonders of Chicago could not quicken; and he leant far out for a last look, the rain-drops glittering in his hair.

The Caller.

The cab dropped me at the corner, and a church clock somewhere off the Fulham-road chimed the third quarter after one. "Good morning, sir," said the cabman, who drives me every night from Fleet-street. "Good night," I replied. That is our invariable joke. And then, as I started up the quiet street which contains my garden gate, I was arrested—not in the ordinary sense—by a policeman. He was clambering laboriously upon a railing which guarded the quiet side of the corner shop. I wondered, and watched. Gaining his foothold, he felt carefully about the ledge above his head, and having found something, he tugged. It was surely a rope. "What are you doing?" I enquired, with a sudden hope of catching a constable on the wrong side of the law. He said nothing, but seemed, like Pope's spider, to live along the line he held in his hand. After a few moments' intense silence he relinquished the rope, returned to the pavement, and recognised me as a respectable ratepayer. "It's the baker," he explained. "He ties the rope to the corner of his blanket, and one of us calls him every morning. It pays him."

Digitized by Google

And as my baker rose to bake my morning roll, I wearily undressed in the hope of a night's rest which would give me an appetite to eat it.

The Irish Brogue.

THE strange vocabulary of the Scotch Lowlanders has long been a valuable literary asset; in Scott's footsteps petty men have trodden their way to fame and fortune. It has been remarked that Great Britain is being divided amongst the novelists, who carve out kingdoms for themselves, like the Saxons of the Heptarchy, and, acquiring power with time, need fear no trespasser. The lord of Wessex, as in Saxon days, is the strongest ruler; the Yorkshire Moors were held by a woman, whose fame grows, like a tree, in unmarked lapse of time; London is now mourning a kind master. Writers must illustrate the universal by the particular, and local colour, remote dialects, appeal also to the desire for novelty which is often the only strong passion of novel readers. Certain novels, written largely in broad Scotch, were received some years ago with so much enthusiasm that one could imagine the reading public to believe, like Mr. George Moore, that English was worn out as a means of literary expression. He has gone to his own, and his own, so far, have welcomed him not. Like nine-tenths of the Gaelic League, he has no Gaelic, and he scorns the English which his Irish fellow-countrymen speak. It is indeed strange that the gutturals of a Scotch farmer are held worthy of many phonographs, while the gentle Irish brogue always calls forth an English smile. Nobody seems to have studied the genesis and development of the English which Irishmen speak; the speech of the potato-patch is ignoble compared with that of the kail-yard. Of course, Ireland has bred no such man as Scott, that leviathan, that Master of Ceremonies who has introduced two nations to one another. Unjust Fortune has cursed Irishmen with the fatal fluency of speech, which leaves them no time for writing or thinking, and wastes their energies on politics. Yet a study of the English spoken in Ireland is interesting and profitable to a student of English literature. The Irish accent is the result of arrested development. Everybody knows how Cromwell planted Munster with English colonists, how they throve therein until, after the Restoration, the Bishops harried them as Nonconformists, and the English Government closed all markets against them, and how they faded out of the joyless land which they had made smiling and fertile. The native Irish learn readily, when they must, and never forget. The English garrison, Cromwell's veterans, when they were established and dominant, taught the Gaels English. Since that time the Irish have learnt no new fashions in English speaking. They pronounce it to-day as Cromwell and his troopers, as Milton, Dryden, and even Pope pronounced it. Slight changes were made, as must be when a people learns an alien tongue. Still we may say on the whole that the brogue at which the English smile is the accent which Ireland learnt from the Puritan settlers. Mr. Flavin and his fellows abuse the House of Commons in much the same tone as that which Cromwell once used to a more famous Parliament.

It is no new suggestion that Irishmen talk better English than the English. Dean Swift wrote to Pope expressing his regret at some slighting remark of the latter's concerning the Irish: "The English colonies, who are three parts in four, are much more civilised than many counties in England, and speak better English, and are much better bred." It will be remembered that the Dean was an Englishman, and would thank everyone to remember it. It is possible here to give only a few illustrations of the survival of old words and pronunciations in Ireland. The many-headed multitude who are "agin the Government" use the old preposition which they learnt before it was modernised into "against." The word survives, of course, in many rural districts of England, where there is little reading of books. Ireland keeps to the old fashions because the peasants are illiterate beyond English comprehension. The peculiarity of pronunciation which most strikes the tourist is the broad sound given to such words as "please, sea, beast, complete." Waller, Dryden, and Pope habitually pronounced them as "plaze, say, baste, complate," as all students of seventeenth and eighteenth century poetry have noticed. Dryden, for example, wrote:

> Neptune, yet doubtful whom he should obey,
> Held to them both the trident of the sea.

Pope pronounced "tea" in the same manner as a Tipperary peasant does. One example, referring to "great Anna," is well known; here is another:

> Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
> And sip, with nymphs, the elemental tea.

So in Munster the country folk talk of the "lay," meaning "lea," that pretty word which Englishmen have abandoned to the poets. It was the influence of French that made our ancestors pronounce "complete" and "thème," and the influence still holds good over here. Listen to Pope again:

> Here swells the shelf with Ogilby the great,
> There, stamped with arms, Newcastle shines complete.

English, with characteristic inconsistency, has kept the broad sound in "great." "Key," in Dryden, rhymes with "play," and why does modern English pronounce "quay" in the same way as "key"? Pope, who stood at the parting of the ways, was already inconsistent, and rhymes "appear" with "bier." In Milton editors have replaced, for "height," the proper spelling "highth," a noun formed regularly from the adjective, as "depth" from "deep." People find it ridiculous that the Irishman, faithful to his teachers, speaks of "the hoith of good company." So we have forgotten Shakespeare's pronunciation of "character," but the Irish servant still talks of getting a good "charácter."

It seems as if Englishmen have quite lately rid themselves of the aspirate in words that begin with "wh," such as "which," "what." Dickens drew attention to its absence in the Cockney speech of his day by means of the spelling "wot," "vich," and it may have been strange in the ears of men of his time. The Scotch, as well as the Irish, have been true in this matter. Innovations make their way, even now, more slowly in Ireland. During the last century the Scotch diminutive "donkey" has won its way all over England, but here the ass generally keeps his ancient name. Schoolboys "cog," as they did in Shakespeare's time, when they have not learnt their work, but English boys "crib." By the same token, as Dean Swift used to say, all classes speak of a pack of cards as a "deck," just as Pope and he used to speak of them. The peasantry believe as strongly as ever in a personal devil, and he lends his name to many landscapes; appeals to him are on every tongue, but they call him "the Divil." That is the unvarying spelling of the word in the Elizabethan dramas, and it is hard to see why the spelling and pronunciation were changed. The force of association is such that one can hardly imagine stern Oliver and his saints speaking of their arch-enemy, the "Divil."

Digitized by Google

Oliver himself must have pronounced his surname as "Crummle," or why should the old, old curse be "the curse of Crummle"? The expletive "sure," which now indicates all that there is most Irish, was very common in Elizabethan times, and ever on the lips of the best society at Queen Anne's Court. It runs riot in the pages of Congreve and Wycherley. Dr. Johnson did not fear to employ it in that most touching poem, Levett's epitaph:

> His virtues walked their narrow round,
> Nor made a pause, nor left a void;
> And sure the Eternal Master found
> His single talent well employed.

The Conventional-Sentimental.

A WEEKLY contemporary which devotes itself largely to literature remarked the other day: "It is not our business to criticise [popular] novels." Nevertheless, popular novels must be and ought to be criticised. It is useless by ignoring them to pretend that they do not exist. They are a sign of the times, and since the period of Scudéri they have always been a sign of the times. Two works of fiction now before us—A Jilt's Journal, by "Rita" (Unwin); and Love Idylls, by Mr. S. R. Crockett (Murray)—are thoroughly "popular"—the production of respectable and dignified "hands" well-practised in the craft of distorting life prettily. In regard to "Rita's" book, one knows, of course, that despite the title the jilt is not a jilt—not a real jilt—but a charming girl. A real jilt would be antipathetic to the reader, and "Rita's" heroines are never antipathetic. This self-styled jilt—her name was Paula: a name common of late years among women who feel the need to be "understood"—commenced her journal at the age of seventeen, upon leaving school.

> It was a momentous occasion, and we felt its gravity. One phase of life had closed for us. We could never again be three schoolgirls interested only in the rivalries and duties of fully-occupied days. We were to stretch our clipped wings at last and soar to the world beyond our safely-sheltered nest.

The sentiment and the style are perfectly true—to fiction. In fiction a girl of seventeen would naturally write like that, in those pretty, if fatigued, phrases. Going home by train to her uncle-guardian, Paula read a novel by Ouida. "I closed the book, and, looking straight before me, met the eyes of a fellow-passenger." The fellow-passenger was the son of a yeoman farmer ("plain Adam Herivale"), much beneath Paula in station, but everyone knows instantly and instinctively that she will marry him in the end. She is bound to marry him; just as she was bound to meet him in the train, and just as he was bound to be a very superior yeoman. She met him again in a ruined castle, and he then said:

> "I mean—I just love it all, ruin or no ruin. These stones have a history for me. I know the names of ward and keep and tower as well as I know the look of the skies above them."

That is precisely how farmers express themselves when they have been "born and bred under shadow" of an old castle. Paula asked Adam what he did with himself between seasons. "One thinks—and dreams," he said. Exactly.

Paula's uncle-guardian was an archæologist and a professor. Therefore he ate his meals absent-mindedly. His domicile was conducted by a sour-faced housekeeper named Graddage. Because she was sour-faced her name was Graddage. On Paula's retirement from school Graddage introduced a niece of hers into the house to act as maid to the young lady, and the young lady spoke thus to the niece:

> "Come and sit down here, and let us have a talk. We're both young, and though I'm mistress and you are maid, youth stands for much."

"Youth stands for much," said the philosopher of seventeen.

Later, in the skating season, the beautiful and vicious Lady Brancepeth tried to make mischief between Paula and plain Adam. Lady Brancepeth used words like parti, adieu, and nil, and, having done her worst, > she skimmed off, graceful as a swallow, her airy laugh ringing on the air, where it seemed the sting of her echoing words still lingered.

In two years the whole jilting business is over, and the philosopher, now aged nineteen, thus crystallises her acquired wisdom:

> "I have seen two worlds, Adam—the world of the country, and the world of the town. I know which is best, I think."

Mr. Crockett's book is less homogeneous. It consists of several short stories, some of them (the best) done several years ago, some romantic, and some unromantic. Yet we think we can give the spirit of the volume in a single extract:

> The Count paused awhile in the leafy shadow of the porch, for it was pleasant there out of the heat. Suddenly there came a soft rustle as of wings or summer draperies, a patter down the stairs, a rush out of a door, and a clear voice exclaiming, "Why don't you answer, silly old curmudgeon of a father? Do you really think I cannot see you hiding there in the porch?"
>
> Two arms were thrown impulsively about the Count's neck, and then turning he found himself closely face to face with the dismayed, terrified eyes of the fairest maid it had ever been his lot to behold. The girl stood before him crimsoning from brow to bosom. Her hands had fallen from his shoulders to her sides, and had again been halfway lifted to her eyes as if to cover her face from the shame. She took her breath short, panting like a captured bird that fears mishandling. The Count St. Polten was equally surprised. His heart certainly jolted within him in a manner strange and unwonted. And when he awoke to himself, lo! he had his dirty campaigner's cap in his hand, and was bowing over the girl's hand as though she had been the Empress-Queen herself.
>
> But suddenly, with a startled recognition of tardy dutifulness, the girl knelt before him and set his hand to her lips, kissing the signet of the Count's ring as her father had done.
>
> "The Count!" she murmured. "I have been rude to the Count, my father's gracious lord!"

The Count St. Polten and the plebeian Gertrud ("a rosebud of twenty-one") thus behaved to each other exactly as Counts and village maids always have and always must behave to each other in popular romances. Mr. Crockett is, of course, well aware that in real life, mediæval or modern, neither Count nor maid would have done as he says they did. He knows he is writing the sweetly untrue. "Rita" knows she is writing the sweetly untrue Every reader knows that both concoctions are a beauteous fraud, an iridescent lie, an elaborate and deliberate swindle. Maids never did embrace Counts under porches in mistake for their fathers. Maids never did meet their fated young men in the train going home from school. The chances are that wicked women are not beautiful and that they skate badly. The chances are that farmers do nothing but farm, that archæologists take a keen interest in their meals, and that sour-faced housekeepers are named Smith, Pratt, Cholmondeley. Certainly no sour-faced housekeeper was ever yet named Graddage. Such poetical appositeness could only happen in Dickens or in Paradise. All popular fiction is, more or less, the result of a desire for paradise. "Oh! to be wafted away from this black Aceldama of dailiness," exclaims the average novel-reader; and the popular novelist replies: "I will waft you." The fact is, life isn't good enough for the average novel-reader. He thinks "Rita" and Mr. Crockett have improved on it. Life is bread and he wants toffee, and the more toffee he gets the more he will have.

Digitized by Google

In Memoriam H. C. M. W.

AUGUST 8, 1901.

THE wind blows sweet through the valley,
A strong wind, pleasant and free;
It blows with a rumour of travel
To the moorland up from the sea.

The miles and the desolate distance
It shatters them all at will,
While we wait here for a message
From a voice for ever still.

O wind from the great new countries,
What know you of pain and loss?
We are weeping for him in England
Who died 'neath the Southern Cross.

ROSAMUND MARRIOTT WATSON.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 106 (New Series).

LAST week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best description of the pictures in a private room. The essays sent in number more than forty, but sentimentality is the fault of too many. We like feeling, but this should be natural and inevitable. We are glad, however, that two of our competitors show a sense of humour. Between these: Mr. George Cruickshank, 36, Torphichen-street, Edinburgh, and Mr. U. L. Napier, 4, Belsize-avenue, Hampstead, N.W., we have decided to divide the prize. A cheque for a half guinea has been sent to each.

As I entered the room, my eyes involuntarily scanned the walls. "Real oil paintings!" said my host proudly. They were; and as smooth and oily as furniture-shop pictures (!) usually are. Not that I mean to insinuate that my friend had bought them along with his furniture—on the contrary, he soon began to inform me where and for how much he had picked them up; pointing with pride to the foreign signatures on the corners as evidence of value. "I can't abide copies," he said. "I want pictures on my walls as no one else can never have the same as." I said it was a worthy ambition, and made a dive in the direction of a small sketch in silvery tones half-hidden in a corner, which my trained eye had caught sight of. "Oh, that!" he went on. "Now, that is a thing which I wouldn't have hanging on my wall nohow, only, you see" (lowering his voice) "the artist is a friend of the missus, who is Scotch, you know. And this is by one of them Glasgow chaps as paints the rough, unfinished kind of pictures. For myself" (waving his hand towards the walls with an air of conscious culture), "I like them refined and—ahem!—smooth!"

As Turner used to say, "Rum thing art, ain't it?"

George Cruickshank.

It is three years and more since I looked on my walls—once the dear shrine of a dominant passion. Pale terra-cotta wall-paper, the pictures kept strictly to the "line"—forming, in fact, a sort of shrunk dado round the room—these things show how I worshipped Hammerton. Much of my art passion, however, must have been blatant sentimentality. Witness five girls' profiles; sweet, simpering things, posed against rose-bushes and what not, myrtle-green frames—all the "Fee-fo-fum" of the dealer in popular prints.

How my soul revelled, too, in symbolism. But, to look on that water-colour of "Life and Death Fighting over the Sick Man" gave me thoughts unutterable. And 'tis a grim contest i' faith. Skeleton Death, clad in bistre garment, pours from his horrid maw shere hell-fire. He is rushing upon his adversary, a fiery dart high poised above his head ready to fall. But the tall man in the whirling red robe has him tight clutched by the sword-arm. The flames may lick his naked breast and curl through his very hair. He recks not. Neither dart, nor brimstone, nor ghastly, gnashing jaws, nor all the frightful powers of darkness can budge that noble Salamander!

A picture of another sort hung where that patch of darker terra-cotta half hides behind the head of Napoleon. No less than a Sam Bough, the scene, "Glen Carron, Ross-shire." "This little gem," said the catalogue, "is the work of the painter's best period." I had a cheque from the auctioneer, "proceeds of sale, less cost of new gilt frame and our commission."

An elder brother grew rampant at the loss of such an heirloom. Heirloom or no, I needed cash to lay ghosts withal. And, besides, Art no longer hath dominion over me as it was wont.

Let me to my book again! U. L. Napier.

Two other replies are as follows:—

It was a large, well-furnished room. Broad bay-windows opened to the east, giving a view of the noisy, busy city below, of the tangled shipping in the harbour, the wide bay, and the high hills beyond. The general disorder, the Bohemian lack of arrangement among the tables and chairs, marked it as a bachelor's living-room; and the number of canvases and sketches hung about the apartment marked its owner as a generous patron and a keen critic. Some of these were framed, and well placed for light and wall space; others were tacked carelessly upon a panel, or stood singly or in groups upon the ledge of the high redwood wainscotting.

There, in the place of honour at the end of the room, was a large canvas by William Keith—an evening scene. The sun's rays have just left the harvest field and the great gnarled oaks which grew by the meadow brook, yet they still burnish the clouds above. The hay-gatherers are piling high the last wain of the day, and over the field of their labours, with the coming of the night, settles a quiet peace—a spirit of rest. On the right hangs the portrait of a tall, slender young lady—a figure of charming girlish grace. On the left is a woodland path in Fontainebleau, by Diaz. The late afternoon sun breaks through the forest foliage, and flecks the path and tree-trunks with sunlight. In the foreground two French peasants are gathering wood. Here below it on the panel-ledge stands an unframed sketch of an Algerian rug-market—a water-colour—glittering in the brilliancy of its tropical sunlight and its bright Oriental colours; and close by, in sharp contrast, a dark, threatening sky above an angry dashing surf. On the side wall appears a dark-eyed Neapolitan street-singer, and there beside her a clumsy Dutch windmill perched upon its pedestal of stone.

But all these were mere sketches as compared with the chef-d'œuvre of his little collection, which stood upon the easel near the door. Here was his famous picture, Hoffman's "Christ upon the Mount of Olives." Before it one simply stood and gazed. That kneeling figure, with clasped hands, that face upturned towards the light, held one as by a spell. One could now understand why the child had stood before this picture and wept. To look upon it was to pray, and before it all the other pictures and the room itself seemed to fade away and disappear. [H. S. S., London.]

"What do you think of that picture?" asked my friend, during a lull in our talk of books and life. "It is called 'Love and Death,' and I often notice in the evenings, when twilight steals into the room, how the dark figure of Death slowly fades out of sight, and the white form of Love remains alone. There is an idea for a sonnet," he added. My gaze drifted away, however, to the red-chalk drawing, a copy of "Rossetti, by himself, ætat 18," and there rested for awhile, captivated by that sensitive young face. It was the face of a thoughtful lover of beauty—a face not yet marred by pain, but with an elusive, inexplicable look, as of foreshadowings of griefs to come.

"And my ceiling-picture," said my friend. "I do not think you have noticed it." I looked up, and saw dark clouds and blue sky, and out of the clouds rose a beautiful winged form, with out-stretched hands. The eyes I could not understand. "She seems to be blind," I said. "What does the picture signify?" My friend rose, and, taking from his shelves the little volume of "Sonnets of this Century," he read me Robertson's "The Lost Ideal of the World"—"Blind, and in all the loneliness of wings!" I lay back, looking up at the picture, as he read, thinking great thoughts, dreaming great dreams that the poet who wrote and the artist who painted had also known. [F. N., Edinburgh.]

Competition No. 107 (New Series).

WE publish this week a special supplement, containing publishers' announcements for the autumn season. From the lists therein printed we ask our readers to pick out what, in their opinion, promise to be:

(a) The two most interesting biographies.
(b) The two most interesting works of history.
(c) The two most interesting works of travel.
(d) The two most interesting religious works.
(e) The two most interesting novels.
(f) The two most interesting books for children.

To the competitor whose selection most nearly resembles that produced by a collation of all replies received a cheque for a guinea will be sent.

RULES.

ANSWERS, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, October 9. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the third page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

 Owing to pressure on our space Correspondence is held over.

Digitized by Google

Announcements.

THE following lists have been crowded out of our Special Announcement Supplement:

Messrs. Burns & Oates.

The Madonna: A Pictorial Record of the Life and Death of the Mother of Our Lord Jesus Christ, by the Painters and Sculptors of Christendom, Reproduced from more than 500 of their Works. The Text Translated from the Italian of Adolfo Venturi, with an Introduction by Alice Meynell 31/6
Dziewicki (Michael Henry), The Little Flower of Jesus: being the Autobiography of Sister Teresa of the Child Jesus and the Holy Face, Carmelite Nun. Translated from the French, "Histoire d'une Ame" 6/0
Kerr (Lady Amabel), A Saint of the Oratory: the Life of Blessed Antony Grassi, of the Fermo Congregation net 4/0
Newman (Cardinal), Callista: a Sketch of the Third Century 2/0
Cecilia (Madame), The Retreat Manual: a Handbook for an Annual Retreat and Monthly Recollection 2/0
Avis (Whyte), The Catholic Girl in the World 3/6
Egger (Rev. Joseph), Meditations on the Sacred Heart ... 2/6
Vaughan (H.E. Cardinal), The Reunion of Christendom net 0/6

Messrs. Chapman & Hall, Ltd.

Wells (H. G.), Anticipations: an Experiment in Prophecy 7/6
Diaries of the Emperor Frederick during the Campaigns of 1866 and 1870-71 and His Journeys to the East and to Spain. Translated from the German by Frances A. Welby. Edited by Margarethe von Poschinger net 12/0
Garde-Chambonas (Count de la), Recollections of the Congress of Vienna (1814-1815)
Harper (Charles G.), The Norwich Road: an East Anglian Highway 16/0
Moore (Henry Charles), Omnibuses and Cabs: their Origin and History 7/6
Boyle (Frederick), The Culture of Greenhouse Orchids: Old System and New net 8/0
Duckitt (Hildagonda J.), A Cape Housekeeper's Diary ... 4/6
Ketab, Indian Dishes for English Tables 3/6

NEW EDITIONS.

A New and Complete Edition of the Novels of Samuel Richardson. With 78 illustrations, reproduced from etchings, by Thomas Stothard and E. F. Burney, and a portrait of Richardson. 20 vols. each, net 2/6
Charles Dickens's Works: The Oxford India Paper Dickens. 17 vols. each, net 2/6
Lanteri (E.), Modelling: a Guide for Teachers and Students net 15/0
Hatton (Richard G.), Figure Drawing and Composition: Being a Number of Hints for the Student and Designer Upon the Treatment of the Human Figure. 9/0
Harper (Charles G.), A Practical Hand-book of Drawing: for Modern Methods of Reproduction. With many illustrations showing comparative results 7/6
Gissing (George), By the Ionian Sea: Notes of a Ramble in Southern Italy 16/0
Crane (Stephen), Great Battles of the World..... 6/0
Stamer (W. J. A.), 20,000 Miles of Road Travel in Central and Western Europe 12/0

Messrs. Chapman & Hall also announce new Art text-books and treatises.

Messrs. Greening & Co.

Kenyon (C. Fred.), Hall Caine: the Man and the Novelist 3/6
Fyffe (Hamilton), Arthur Wing Pinero: a Study..... 3/6
"R.," Dress in a Nutshell 0/6
Downing (Chas.), God in Shakespeare. New and Revised Edition, with New Preface 5/0

FICTION.

Forestier-Walker (Clarence—Trans. by), Romance of a Harem net 5/0
Soissons (Count C. S. de—Trans. by), from the Russian of Nicholas Leyken, Where the Oranges Grow: a Humorous Story 6/0
Gull (C. Ranger), The Cigarette Smoker..... 2/6
Gorst (Mrs. Harold E.), "—— and Afterwards?" a Novel 6/0
Turner (Reginald), Cynthia's Damages 6/0
His Grace's Grace. By the author of "The Hypocrite"... 3/6
Sutcliffe (Constance), Our Lady of the Ice: a Story of the Alps 6/0
Williams (Ernest E.), An Exile in Bohemia 6/0
Zola (Emile), A Dead Woman's Vow 3/6
Heaven (Louise Palmer), An Idol of Bronze: a Tale of Mexico 3/6
Melville (Lewis), In the World of Mimes: a Theatrical Novel 6/0
Johnson (Grove), The Idealist 3/6
Monkshood (G. F.), My Lady Ruby..... 1/0
Pryce (Daisy Hughes), The Power of the Past 6/0
Sienkiewicz (Henrik), In Monte Carlo..... 0/6

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

Bevan (Tom), A Lion of Wessex; or, How Saxon Fought Dane 3/6
Esler (E. Rentoul), The Awakening of Helena Thorpe ... 3/6
Roper (Edward), Ice-Bound; or, The Anticosti Crusoes... 2/6
Graydon (W. M.), On Winding Waters 2/6
Johnston (William), Under the Sirdar's Flag..... 2/6
Murray (Charlotte), Castleton's "Prep" 2/6
Alexander (J.). Our Rulers: From William the Conqueror to Edward VII..... 2/6
Chappell (Jennie), Aveline's Inheritance..... 2/6
Oxley (J. Macdonald), Norman's Nugget 2/0
Barker (Henry J.), The Wonder Seekers..... 1/6
Mackenzie (Hannah B.), A Late Repentance 1/6
Mackley (Kate L.), Little Soldiers 1/6
Phillips (L.), Will; or, "That Boy from the Union"..... 1/6
Hope (Lady), A Red Brick Cottage..... 1/6
Hobbs (David), A Noble Champion..... 1/6
Haycraft (M. S.), The Golden Doors 1/6
Michael (C. D.—Edited by), Heroes All 1/6
Holmes (F. M.), Surgeons and their Wonderful Discoveries 1/6
Fenton (Farrar—Translated by), The Five Books of Moses net 2/6
Stuart-Langford (E.), Shepherds and Sheep 1/6
Haycraft (M. S.), "Our Phyllis"..... 1/6
Spear (Robert E.), Studies of the Man Paul net 1/6
Avery (Harold), All Play and No Work..... 1/0
Chappell (Jennie), Bernard or Ben?..... 1/0
Quiller-Couch (Mabel), Paul the Courageous..... 1/0
Forster (William J.), Uncle Zeph and his Yarns 1/0
Skinner (Mrs. Charlotte), Key-Notes to the Happy Life... 1/0
Phillips (E. C.), Won from the Sea 0/9
Chappell (Jennie), Aunt Armstrong's Money..... 0/9
Burrage (E. Harcourt), John Blessington's Enemy..... 0/9
Wolcott (P. C.), What is Christian Science?..... 1/0
D. J. D., Our Pet's Picture Book..... 1/0
J. D., Happy Playmates..... 1/0
D. J. D., Bible Pictures and Stories: Old Testament 1/0
Weston (James) and (D. J. D.), Bible Pictures and Stories: New Testament..... 1/0
Wane (Louis), Pussies and Puppies..... 1/0
Sweet Stories Retold: A Picture Story Book for Little Ones 0/6
Sweet Blossom: A Bible Picture Book for Young Folks 0/6
Page (Jessie), Benjamin's New Boy..... 0/6
Hurrell (Marion Isabel), Enemies 0/6
Hooper (Lizzie A.), Cherry Tree Place 0/6
For Eyes that Weep 0/3
Come Unto Him 0/3
A Frank Talk About Betting..... 0/3
Ballard (Rev. Frank) The Smoking Craze 0/6
Vernon-Harcourt (F. C.), From Stage to Cross..... 2/6
Falconer (F. C.), Errors of the Roman Catholic Faith ... 1/6

Digitized by Google

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.

Mr. A. T. QUILLER-COUCH'S New Volume of Stories, entitled "THE LAIRD'S LUCK," will be ready on Wednesday next. Price 6s.

IMPORTANT NEW FINE ART WORK.

The National Portrait Gallery.
Edited by LIONEL CUST, M.A., F.S.A., Director of the Gallery. Illustrating every Picture in the National Portrait Gallery. Issued under the sanction and with the authority of the Trustees. 2 vols., £6 6s. net. (This Edition will be strictly limited to 750 copies.)

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

Social England.
Edited by the late H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L., and J. S. MANN, M.A. With about 2,500 Pictures and numerous Coloured Plates, Reproduced from Authentic Sources. Vol. I., containing about 800 pages, gilt top, 12s. net.

The Earth's Beginning.
By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., &c. With 4 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

Chinese Porcelain.
By the late COSMO MONKHOUSE. Profusely Illustrated, and containing 24 Plates in Colours, 30s. net. This edition will be limited to 1,000 copies.

British Sculpture & Sculptors of To-day.
By M. H. SPIELMANN. Paper covers, 5s. net.; handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

A Masque of Days.
From the Last Essays of Elia. Newly Dressed and Decorated by WALTER CRANE. With 40 Full-page Designs in Colour, 6s.

Wyllie's Marine Painting in Water-colour
By W. L. WYLLIE, A.R.A. With 24 Coloured Plates, 5s.

Behind the Scenes in the Transvaal.
Being Reminiscences of an English Official. By DAVID MACKAY WILSON. 7s. 6d.

Strange Adventures in Dicky-Bird Land.
Stories told by Mother Birds to Amuse their Chicks, and Overheard by R. KEARTON, F.Z.S. Illustrated from Photos by C. Kearton. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; and cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

The Military Forces of the Crown:
Their Organisation and Equipment. By Col. W. H. DANIEL. Edited by T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D. Illustrated, 5s.

London Afternoons:
Chapters on the Social Life, Architecture, and Records of the Great City and its Neighbourhood. By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A. With 60 Full-page Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

The Life and Work of the Redeemer.
With 8 Full-page Illustration. 6s.

Early Christianity and Paganism.
By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrated. 21s.

The Child's Bible.
Illustrated with 100 New Full-page Plates, including 12 in Colours. By W. H. MARGETSON. Reset in New Type. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

Cassell's Family Doctor.
By a MEDICAL MAN. With 8 Illustrations. Cheap Edition, 6s.

NEW NOVELS.

The Giant's Gate.
By MAX PEMBERTON. 6s.
This Work is already being reprinted to meet the large demand.

The Princess Cynthia.
By MARGUERITE BRYANT. With 4 Full-page Illustrations, 6s.

Lepidus the Centurion.
A Romance of To-day. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD. 6s.

Alice of Old Vincennes.
By MAURICE THOMPSON. With 6 Full-page Illustrations, 6s.

Royal Academy Pictures, 1901.
With 5 Special Rembrandt Photogravures and about 200 Exquisite Reproductions. Cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

The Magazine of Art.
YEARLY VOLUME. With nearly 1,000 Choice Illustrations and a Series of Special Plates, 21s.

The National Gallery Catalogue.
Containing upwards of 100 Illustrations and a list of all the Pictures Exhibited. With an Introduction by the Director of the National Gallery. 6d. net.

Alfred Shaw, Cricketer.
His Career and Reminiscences. Recorded by A. W. PULLIN ("Old Ebor"). With a Statistical Chapter by ALFRED J. GASTON. Containing 16 Full-page Illustrations from Photographs, 2s. 6d.

The Automobile:
Its Construction and Management. Translated from Gerard Lavergne's "Manuel Théoretique et Pratique de l'Automobile sur Route." With Additions and New Illustrations. Revised and Edited by PAUL N. HASLUCK. 10s. 6d. net.

Under the Great Bear.
By KIRK MUNROE. With 12 Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

With Redskins on the Warpath.
By S. WALKEY. With 8 Full-page Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

Mrs. Pederson's Niece.
By ISABEL SUART ROBSON. With 8 Full-page Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

Tom and some other Girls.
By JESSIE MANSERGH (Mrs. G. de Horne Vaizey). With 8 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

The Quiver.
YEARLY VOLUME. With about 800 Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

Cassell's Magazine.
YEARLY VOLUME. With upwards of 1,000 Illustrations. 8s.

Cassell's Saturday Journal.
YEARLY VOLUME. With numerous Illustration, nearly 1,100 p. 7s. 6d.

Little Folks.
CHRISTMAS VOLUME. With Pictures on nearly every page, together with 6 Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations printed in Colours. Picture boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, 5s.

Bo-Peep:
A Treasury for the Little Ones. Picture boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

Chums.
YEARLY VOLUME. With 13 Coloured Plates. Cloth gilt, 8s.

NOTICE.—Mr. Allen Upward's New Novel,

THE AMBASSADOR'S ADVENTURE,

Will be ready in a few days. Price 6s.

This is the first Novel from Mr. Upward's pen for nearly two years.

Dr. Keightley's New Novel,

A MAN OF MILLIONS,

WILL BE READY SHORTLY.

Price 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne.

Digitized by Google

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

A TREATISE on ZOOLOGY. Edited by E. Ray LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. NOW READY. Part IV. THE PLATYHELMIA, MESOZOA, and NEMERTINI. By W. BLAXLAND BENHAM, D.Sc., M.A. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 12s. 6d. net. Cloth, price 15s. net.

"Will be heartily welcomed as filling a distinct gap in zoological literature, and not of this country alone."—Nature.

"Admirably arranged and covers the whole ground."—Outlook.

USE-INHERITANCE. Illustrated by the Direction of Hair on the Bodies of Animals. By WALTER KIDD, M.D., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, paper boards, 2s. net.

THE ETHIC of FREE-THOUGHT, and other Addresses and Essays. Second Edition (Revised). By KARL PEARSON, F.R.S. NOW READY. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

"It is an able volume, to be studied by all who would know the modern apologetics of Freethought."—Academy.

WAR NOTES: The Diary of Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil from November 14, 1899, to March 7, 1900. Authorised translation from the Paris Liberté, by FREDERIC LEES, with a Preface by E. M. de Vogüe, Member of the French Academy. NOW READY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"By far the most valuable account we have yet received of the war from the Boer side."—Daily Chronicle.

"Will furnish pleasant reading to all who have taken an interest in the campaign."—Times.

"It is French in every line, and an Englishman experiences that curious mixture of admiration and astonishment which French sentiment and French actions so often inspire."—Academy.

AN ALBUM of ADVENTURES that HAPPENED in our HOLIDAYS. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "Hero and Heroine," "Black and Blue," &c. NOW READY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"There are adventures at home and abroad, on land and by the sea, with sufficient excitement to enthral any lad with lively imagination."
Sheffield Independent.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

READY on OCTOBER 15th.

THE OXFORD INDIA PAPER DICKENS.

With ILLUSTRATIONS by "PHIZ," CRUIKSHANK, &c.

In 17 foolscap 8vo volumes.

Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., the owners of the copyright, have arranged to issue, jointly with Mr. HENRY FROWDE of the Oxford University Press,

A COMPLETE COPYRIGHT AND ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF THE WORKS OF

CHARLES DICKENS,

Printed in clear Long Primer type on Oxford India Paper.

The Seventeen Volumes will contain nearly 700 Illustrations reproduced from the originals. The covers either of cloth or leather are decorated in blind with outline drawings of the chief characters of the stories.

Prices per Volume:
In Cloth, 2/6 net. In Leather, 3/6 net.

Ready on October 15th.

Vol. 1 { A TALE of TWO CITIES. With 16 Illustrations by "Phiz." / A CHILD'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. With 4 Illustrations by H. Mitchell, E. A. Norbury, and F. H. Townsend.

Vol. 2—THE PICKWICK PAPERS. With 43 Illustrations by Seymour and "Phiz."

London:
CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., 11, Henrietta St., W.C. | HENRY FROWDE, Amen Corner, E.C.

WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

SECOND EDITION.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PAULA: A SKETCH FROM LIFE.

By VICTORIA CROSS, Author of "Anna Lombard," &c.

"No book better worth reading has so far come under our notice in the present season."—Daily Chronicle.

"No woman has written better fiction than this for some time past, and I question whether any young writer of either sex has of late shown such remarkable power of insight."—Free Review.

The Contemporary Science Series.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

VOLUMES JUST ISSUED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With 93 Illustrations.

THE MEDITERRANEAN RACE.

By Professor SERGI.

In this book, which is almost entirely new, and has been specially prepared by the author for the "Contemporary Science Series," Professor Sergi has presented the first full statement of the facts and views that—since he first brought them forward five years ago—have done so much to revolutionise the Aryan question. The evidence there contained tends to show that the race inhabiting Southern Europe and Northern Africa formerly occupied, and to some extent still occupies, the greater part of Central and Northern Europe, including the British Isles, and has played the chief part in European civilisation.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With numerous Illustrations.

THE CRIMINAL.

By HAVELOCK ELLIS.

It is ten years since this book was first published, and the author has now revised it throughout and brought it up to date. On account of the activity with which the study of the criminal has been carried on during recent years, it has been found necessary to enlarge, and in some cases re-write, nearly every chapter in the book. A great deal of new material has thus been added. There are also over fifty new illustrations, mostly original.

FOURTH EDITION, COMPLETELY REVISED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. With numerous Illustrations.

THE EVOLUTION OF SEX.

By Professors PATRICK GEDDES and J. ARTHUR THOMSON.

In this edition the volume has been brought up to date, the altered state of biological opinion since 1889 has been taken due account of, especially the modifications of Weismann's position, the number of references increased, sundry criticisms accepted, but the general thesis remains the same.

SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF RELIGION.

By Professor STARBUCK, Stanford University, California. With a Preface by Professor WILLIAM JAMES, of Havard University.

"There is here, in the patient gathering and careful consideration of the subjective facts of religious life, the foundation of a new body of knowledge which will find its place in psychological science and bear practical fruit in religious education and in theology."—Psychological Review.

New Edition of Ibsen's Prose Dramas.

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

In the new edition each play forms a volume by itself. The typographical features of the original Norwegian editions are as far as possible reproduced. The names of the characters are placed above their speeches instead of in the same line, thus giving the page a lighter and more attractive appearance. The volumes are of a size to range with Mr. Heinemann's editions of Ibsen's, Mr. Pinero's, and other plays; and each volume contains a frontispiece, representing, as a rule, one of the leading characters as embodied by a well-known actor or actress.

Royal 16mo, paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

NOW READY.

(1) THE LEAGUE OF YOUTH.
(2) PILLARS OF SOCIETY.
(3) A DOLL'S HOUSE.
(4) GHOSTS.
(5) AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE.

The Canterbury Poets.

Square 8vo, cut and uncut edges, 1s. per vol. Also "Gravure" Edition, in rich art linen binding, each volume with Portrait or other Frontispiece in Photogravure, 2s. per vol.

NEW VOLUME.

POEMS BY ALEXANDER SMITH.

With a Prefatory Note by R. E. D. SKETCHLEY.

London: WALTER SCOTT, Paternoster Square.

Digitized by Google

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S

NEW and FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

"MEMORY IS THE FRIEND OF WIT."
Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

HOW to REMEMBER: Without Memory SYSTEMS or WITH THEM. By EUSTACE H. MILES, M.A.

"The contents of this volume are decidedly practical. Students who are learning any system of memory training cannot do better than consult Mr. Miles' book, which is sure to prove helpful and popular."—Liverpool Mercury.

"THINKERS ARE AS SCARCE AS GOLD."
In small crown 8vo, neat folded wrapper, price 1s. net; or, elegantly bound in cloth gilt, trimmed edges, gilt top, flat back, price 2s. 6d.

THE ART of THINKING By T. Sharper KNOWLSON.

"Is a sensible and well-arranged little book, which should be in the hands of every young man, and particularly, we may add, of every journalist."
Literature.

"The book is one that should appeal to many, and if it does not teach them how to think it will show the way and quicken the desire."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, sewed, in neat folded wrapper, price 1s. net; or, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

JOHN RUSKIN: His Life and Teaching.
By J. MARSHALL MATHER. With Bibliography and Portrait.

"It would be difficult to obtain a more lucid and comprehensive idea of John Ruskin and his life work in a small compass than can be assured by a careful study of that admirable little monograph. In its revised and enlarged form," says the Spectator, "the book is a most excellent aid to the understanding of the very nature of the great art critic and philosopher, as well as of the brilliant productions of his pen."

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

ONE THOUSAND OBJECTS for the MICROSCOPE: with a Few Hints on Mounting. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With 13 Full-Page Plates depicting upwards of 500 objects, and numerous Woodcuts in the Text.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 6s. per volume.

SHELL LIFE: An Introduction to the British Mollusca. By EDWARD STEP, F.L.S. With 32 Original Plates photographed from the actual shells, and upwards of 300 Woodcuts.

"This is a very good introduction to the shell-bearing creatures of British waters, salt or fresh, and of British woods and lanes. Its chief aim is to arouse interest in the organic structure of the creatures themselves. From the Darwinian standpoint the book has a place and value of its own, which should recommend it to the student of Nature behind a shell. The numerous and particularly excellent illustrations increase its value for the amateur in particular, to whom it is chiefly addressed."—Academy.

ELEVENTH REVISED EDITION.
Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 5s.

FOOD and FEEDING. By Sir Henry THOMPSON, F.R.C.S., M.B.

"Joining his unique experience as a distinguished medical man with his wide knowledge as a connoisseur of how food ought to be cooked, Sir Henry Thompson presents for the information and guidance of the public a book the value and importance of which cannot be over-estimated. It is written in a bright and conversational style that commends it to every sort of reader, and contains a mass of interesting matter that those who desire to live well, and at the same time wisely, should lose no time in assimilating. Five shillings laid out in this way will go far to exorcise the demon indigestion."
Pall Mall Gazette.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, flat back, 2s. 6d., with Photogravure Frontispiece of the Author.

DIET in RELATION to AGE and ACTIVITY. With Hints concerning Habits conducive to Longevity. By Sir HENRY THOMPSON, Bart., F.R.C.S., &c.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.—"The recommendations and advice are the result of a very large experience which an extensive practice compelled me to regard as much needed by men of all ranks and occupations among the well-to-do classes of society, who had reached, or perhaps passed, the prime of life; whether engaged in business or professional pursuits or in varied public services," &c.

London: FREDERICK WARNE & CO., Chandos House, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.; and New York.

MR. JOHN LONG'S AUTUMN LIST

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

AN ILL WIND. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON, Author of "Bitter Fruit," &c. [Ready.

BARBARA WEST. By KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN, Author of "The Web of an Old Weaver," &c. [Ready.

THE DIVA. By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Author of "Dennis Donne," "Comrades True," &c. [Ready.

THE LORDS of LIFE. By BESSIE DILL, Author of "The Final Goal," "The Story of Bell," &c. [Ready.

BLUE BONNETS UP By THOMAS PINKERTON, Author of "The Ivory Bride," &c. [Ready.

MISS PAUNCEFORTE'S PERIL. By Mrs. CHARLES MARTIN, Author of "Two Loves," "Ethel Mildmay's Follies," "Petite's Romance." [Ready.

THE LOVELY MRS. PEMBERTON. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c. [Next week.

A SOCIAL PRETENDER. By WINIFRED GRAHAM, Author of "Meresia," "The Beautiful Mrs. Leach," &c. [Next week.

IN the BLOOD. By WILLIAM SYLVESTER WALKER ("Coo-ee"), Author of "Virgin Gold," &c. With 16 Half-tone Illustrations on Art Paper by John Williamson. [Next week.

THE CURSE of EDEN. By the Author of "The Master Sinner." [Immediately.

THE REAL CHRISTIAN. By LUCAS CLEEVE, Author of "Plato's Handmaiden," &c. [Immediately.

THE GOLDEN SPUR. By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "The Three Days' Terror," &c. [Immediately.

A DAUGHTER of ENGLAND. By MAY CROMMELIN, Author of "A Woman Derelict," &c.

HOUSES of IGNORANCE. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The Progress of Pauline Kessler," "Paul Le Maistre," &c.

THE GREEN TURBANS. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN, Author of "I'd Crowns Resign," &c.

THE MISSION of MARGARET. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul," "Jacobi's Wife," &c.

A MAN of IRON. By J. MORGAN-DE-GROOT, Author of "A Lotus Flower," "Even If," &c.

THROUGH the MISTS. By ROBERT JAMES LEES, Author of "The Heretic," &c.

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

PAPA, LIMITED. By W. CARTER PLATTS, Author of "The Tuttlebury Tales," &c. With 40 Illustrations by the Author.

A CORNER in BALLYBEG. By NICHOLAS P. MURPHY.

FORBIDDEN PATHS. By MARCUS REAY, Author of "The Love Affairs of a Curate," &c.

AN ISLAND INTERLUDE. By JOHN AMITY. With Cover Design by Mrs. Mary F. Raphael.

THE DESIRED HAVEN. Anonymous. With Frontispiece.

LONG'S SELECT NOVELS.—New Editions. 3s. 6d. each.

THE STORY of LOIS. By KATHARINE S. MACQUOID.

WHEN LOVE is KIND. By H. A. HINKSON.

SENT to COVENTRY. By ESMÈ STUART.

LONG'S SIXPENNY LIBRARY of COPYRIGHT NOVELS.
NEW VOLUMES.

THE CRAZE of CHRISTINA. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

THE BOHEMIAN GIRLS. By FLORENCE WARDEN.

THE VEILED MAN. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

THE CRIMSON CRYPTOGRAM. By FERGUS HUME.

A PASSING FANCY. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

KITTY'S ENGAGEMENT. By FLORENCE WARDEN. [October.

OUR WIDOW. By FLORENCE WARDEN. [October

London: JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

Digitized by Google

THIRD EDITION—IN THE PRESS.

READY SHORTLY.

"HENRY DRUMMOND"

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

(with Bibliography)

By CUTHBERT LENNOX.

The Spectator says: "This is mainly an account of Professor Drummond's Evangelistic work. There never has been a more sincere Evangelist, and never, we might say, one less bound by conventions. This, indeed, is literally true, for in the pre-Evangelistic days he had a quite extraordinary mesmeric or hypnotic power. And he used this personal influence in a very remarkable way, with a freedom and breadth of thought which is certainly not a common characteristic of the zealous persons who are preachers at revivals, missioners, or soldiers in spiritual armies, regular or irregular. This side of Henry Drummond's life is admirably described in this volume. Mr. Lennox is as tactful as he is sympathetic. Mr. Lennox's book is a compact and lucid account of a great man and a great work."

The Expository Times says: "This is no abridgment of Professor Smith's Life. It is what another man's eyes have seen, what another man's memory has stored. To sit down to the first page is to rise up with the last."

The Glasgow Daily Mail says: "It is well arranged, written with sympathy and insight, and gives an excellent account of its subject all round."

The Outlook says: "An excellent sketch."

The Record says: "We are much mistaken if "Henry Drummond" does not receive a wide and hearty welcome. The man himself—kindly, earnest, devoted, many-sided, always altruistic, and sunny to the end, in spite of his terrible suffering—absolutely lives in Mr. Lennox's pages."

The Birmingham Post says: "We have graphic pictures here of the virile professor, teacher, preacher, writer, man of science, and traveller, and Mr. Lennox is to be congratulated upon the ability with which he has drawn them portraying the man in his several rôles. The sketch is sympathetically, yet, we instinctively feel, truthfully written, and we get a clear conception of the true greatness of Drummond and of his achievements."

St. Andrew says: "Henry Drummond rises up before us with his keen, eager face, swift sympathies, magnetic personality.....This volume shows much about him that we can not only understand but admire, and not only admire but love. Again we say, Mr. Lennox has done his work well."

PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.

ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim St., E.C.

IN THE PRESS.

READY SHORTLY.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY:

THE STORY OF HIS LIFE.

BY

DAVID WILLIAMSON,

Author of "Gladstone: the Man," "The Life-Story of D. L. Moody," &c.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING NET.

London:
ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim St., E.C.

T. NELSON & SONS, Publishers.

"Marvels of compactness and neatness."—Queen. "Light, Small, and Legible."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE MOST READABLE, THE MOST HANDY, THE MOST COMPACT POCKET VOLUMES EVER PUBLISHED.

NELSON'S NEW CENTURY . . . LIBRARY

Of Standard Literature.

In large type, on Nelson's Extra Thin "Royal" India Paper.

SUITABLE ALIKE FOR

POCKET, LIBRARY, OR KNAPSACK.

Each Work Complete in One Volume, and Unabridged.

THE NEW CENTURY SCOTT.

The complete Novels of Sir Walter Scott in 25 volumes (18 now ready). The series to be completed by December, 1901. The handiest and most readable edition of Scott ever published.

"Truly admirable issue."—Athenæum.

Prices:—Cloth extra, 2s. net; half-bound, 4 Illustrations, 2s. 6d. net: leather limp, 4 Illustrations, 3s. net; leather boards, crushed French morocco, 3s. 6d. net.

THE NEW CENTURY THACKERAY.

Now ready, by arrangement with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., the Complete Works of Thackeray, in 14 volumes. Sold in sets in handsome boxes, and in various styles of binding.

Price from 31s. 6d. net per set, according to binding.

The volumes separately, cloth, 2s. net; leather limp, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. net; leather boards, 3s. net.

THE NEW CENTURY DICKENS.

Twelve volumes now ready.

"For the pocket, there has never been a handier Dickens nor, we may add, a handsomer."
Westminster Gazette.

Prices:—Cloth extra, 2s. net; or in limp leather, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. net; leather boards, 3s. net.

 Sample Page and Prospectus post free on application.

London: THOMAS NELSON & SONS, 35 and 36, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Parkside, EDINBURGH; and NEW YORK. And of all Booksellers.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.

Price 6s. each.

NOW READY, THE THIRD EDITION OF

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S NEW NOVEL,

THE MAN I LOVED.

THE COURT of HONOUR. By William Le Queux.

IN the HOUSE of HIS FRIENDS. By Richard Henry Savage.

A LOSING GAME. By Hume Nisbet.

THE JOSS: a Reversion. By Richard Marsh.

QUEEN SWEETHEART. By Mrs. C. N. Williamson.

THE MAJOR-GENERAL: a Story of Modern Florence. By MONTGOMERY CARMICHAEL.

F. V. WHITE & CO., LTD., 14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

No. 296.—OCTOBER, 1901.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT. By W. LAIRD CLOWES.
A BUSINESS VIEW of SOUTH AFRICAN PACIFICATION. By HENRY BIRCHENOUGH.
A WINTER'S WALK in CANADA. By ARNOLD HAULTAIN.
THE SAD PLIGHT of BRITISH FORESTRY. By the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.
RECENT EXPERIMENTS with SOUND SIGNALS. By the Rev. JOHN M. BACON.
FRAGMENTS of MR. GLADSTONE'S CONVERSATION. By the Hon. Mrs. GOODHART.
OPERATIVE SURGERY in AMERICA. By ROBERT HENRY NESBITT, M.D.
GEORGE ELIOT and GEORGE SAND. By the Hon. LADY PONSONBY.
"THE BODY of CHRIST": an Epoch-marking Book. By the Rev. Dr. HENRY R. PERCIVAL.
CONCERNING an IMPRISONED RANI. By CORNELIA SORABJI.
THE MEDITERRANEAN TUNNY. By W. H. GREENFELL, M.P.
"A NEWE HERBALL." By Mrs. R. M. KING.
THE GERMAN ORDER of the IRON CROSS. By Colonel LONSDALE HALE.
SHOULD the UNIVERSITY of LONDON include POLYTECHNICS? By Sir MICHAEL FOSTER, K.C.B., M.P.
ANARCHISM. By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.
LAST MONTH. By Sir WEMYSS REID.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.

Digitized by Google

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In crown 8vo, bound in cloth, and Illustrated, 3s. 6d.

A PERFECT PRINCE: the Story of the England of Alfred the Great. By FREDERIC B. JEFFERY.

"Mr. Jeffery has produced a delightfully readable life-history of King Alfred. The reader who studies the pages of his book from first to last will not regret the time so spent."—Rock.

In crown 8vo, cloth, and Illustrated, 3s. 6d. net.

WHO KILLED AMY ROBSART?

Being some Account of her Life and Death at Gumnor, with Remarks on Sir Walter Scott's "Kenilworth." By PHILIP SIDNEY, F.R.Hist.S.

"For historical students the book must have a deep interest."—Catholic Times.

"Mr. Sidney has arranged his matter admirably, and the book is interesting."—Outlook.

In demy 8vo, bound in cloth, Illustrated, 7s. 6d.

S. GILBERT of SEMPRINGHAM and the GILBERTINES. By ROSE GRAHAM, Fellow of the Royal Historical Society (late of Somerville College, Oxford).

"A valuable addition to ecclesiastical literature, for it contains a history of this, the only English monastic order which is noticeable alike for its completeness and for the careful accuracy with which it has been compiled. It may be taken as an absolutely reliable work."—Bristol Daily Mercury.

In stiff paper cover, 6d.

AMONG KENTISH HOPPERS.

By J. E. REVINGTON JONES, Rector of Mereworth, near Maidstone.

 This Work has been graciously accepted by Her Majesty the Queen.

NEW BOOK ON THE WAR,

In crown 8vo, bound in cloth, 3s. 6d.

"I.Y.": an Imperial Yeoman at War. By "THE CORPORAL."

"The reader may derive considerable amusement and interest from a perusal of the Corporal's 'litero-military' impressions."—Border Counties Advertiser.

"The book is undoubtedly worth the attention of the public."—Montgomery Church Times.

NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LADY WILMERDING of MAISON ROUGE: a Tale of the Riviera. By J. DUNCAN CRAIG, M.A., D.D., Sòci dón Felibrice.

"Most interesting and instructive."—Irish Times.

"Distinctly a book which should be read by all." Rock.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

POEMS. By ELIZABETH M. ALFORD.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

A BOOK of VERSES. By Mrs. JAMES GLENNY WILSON, N.Y., Author of "Themes and Variations," "Alice Landor," "Two Summers," &c.

"A great charm pervades this book. Mrs. Wilson excels in description. She paints a scene with extraordinary effects of colour and atmosphere, and as many of her poems are inspired by scenes native to the country, the home reader experiences peculiar pleasure in reading them."—Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

RUDOLPH SCHROLLE: a Tragedy in Blank Verse. By E. G.

"We are much impressed by this tragedy in blank verse, not only by reason of the remarkable story compiled by the unknown author from the plot of De Quincey's tale of the Dice, as laid in Germany at the end of the seventeenth century, but because of the power and spirit of poetry which fascinate us as the narrative, with all its thrilling scenes, is unfolded to us."—Church Bells.

ELLIOT STOCK,
62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

SKEFFINGTONS' NEW LIST

Gift for Children. By F. LANCASTER LUCAS

JUST OUT. Elegant cloth, price 3s. 6d., profusely Illustrated.
Dedicated by special permission to H.R.H. the DUCHESS of CORNWALL and YORK.

THE FISH CROWN in DISPUTE: a Submarine Fairy Tale for the Little Ones

"I envy the little ones to whom this charming and original fairy book, with its admirable illustrations, will be presented as a Birthday or Christmas Gift."—Lady's Pictorial.

Gift for Children. This day. By MARGUERITE LLOYD.

In most elegant cloth, with Frontispiece and another Illustration by Mrs. FARMILOE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE LILY PRINCESS. An entirely New Story for Children.

This day. By A. J. DAVIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

ATHIRT the DOWNS: a Tale of the Sussex Downs.

This day. In royal cloth, crown 8vo, price 2s. net.
H.M. THE KING has consented to accept a Copy of this Book.

THE CORONATION SERVICE, according to the Use of the Church of England with Introduction and Notes. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH H. PEMBERTON. Among the Chapters in this most interesting Book are: The Sovereign—The Unction—The Regal Vestments—The Coronation Oath—Early Coronation of Sovereigns—The Coronation of Edward VI., written by Archbishop Cranmer—Sources of the Coronation Service. THE FORM AND ORDER OF THE SERVICE AS USED AT THE CORONATION OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

This day. By MAY WYNNE.

Most elegant cloth, 1s.

SYMPATHY. Human Sympathy— In Sorrow—In Joy—With Sinners—Divine Sympathy—With the Misunderstood—With Our Life, &c., &c.

Just out. Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, price 3s. 6d.

THOUGHTS, MEMORIES, and MEDITATIONS. Translated from the French by CONSTANCE WHITE. These exquisitely beautiful Devotional Meditations are from the Diary of Madame HOSKIER, who, together with one of her daughters, perished in the fire at the Bazar de la Charité, in Paris, in 1897. The original book has had an enormous sale in France.

"Will be read with pleasure by all the devout. They are beautiful because they reveal a very beautiful soul." Morning Post.

This day. By F. MEYRICK, M.A.,

Rector of Blickling, Non-Residentiary Canon of Lincoln, late Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

OLD ANGLICANISM and MODERN RITUALISM.

This day. By J. U. GLANVILLE, M.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. net.

THE ACROSTIC POEMS of the OLD TESTAMENT. An English Version, Metrical and Alphabetical.

By the Rev. H. HOLLOWAY.

With a Preface by the Right Hon. Viscount HALIFAX, President of the English Church Union. With special Frontispiece.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE CONFIRMATION and COMMUNION of INFANTS and YOUNG CHILDREN.

This day. By FLORA LUCY FREEMAN.

With Preface by the Rev. R. R. DOLLING, Vicar of St. Saviour's, Poplar.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

RELIGIOUS and SOCIAL WORK AMONGST GIRLS. This most practical Manual will be of infinite service to all who work amongst girls.

RICHARD MARSH'S most striking Novel.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE CHASE of the RUBY.

"Develops in the most ingenious and exciting way." Yorkshire Post.

Just out. By ATHOL FORBES.

Crown 8vo, richly Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

"ODD FISH." Some East Coast Comedies. Delightfully humorous Stories of the Fisher-folk, and other characters of our East Coast watering-places. Full of fun and adventure.

"Athol Forbes's sketches are, for the most part, comic, some are pathetic, but pathos and fun alike are intensely human." Athenæum.

"The seamen and other water folk are drawn with admirable realism, and act and talk to the life."—Leeds Mercury.

Third Edition. By DAGNEY MAJOR. 1s.

THE HUMOURS of a HYDRO. A most Amusing and Humorous Skit on Life and Doings at a Modern "Hydro."

London: SKEFFINGTON & SONS,
163, Piccadilly, W.
Publishers to His Majesty the King.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S AUTUMN LIST.

MARY ANNE OF PARCHMENT BUILDINGS. By LUCAS CLEEVE, Author of "Lazarus," "As the Twig is Bent," &c. Pictorial cloth, 6s. [Just out.

THE FIELDS OF DULDITCH, By MARY E. MANN, Author of "The Cedar Star," "Among the Syringas," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Shortly.

A RACE FOR A WIFE. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "The Medicine Lady," "The Desire of Men," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Just out.

LOVE'S CROSSWAYS. By Mrs. C. M. DIEHL, Author of "The Garden of Eden," "Passion's Puppets," "A Woman's Cross," "The Last Throw," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Just out.

LADY JOAN'S COMPANION. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Shortly.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW. By ELEANOR E. HOLMES, Author of "The Price of a Pearl," "Life's Fitful Fever," "A Hospital Romance," &c. Cloth, 6s.

VENUS VITRIX. By HELEN MATHERS, Author of "Comin' Thro' the Rye," "Bam Wildfire," "Cinders," &c. Cloth, 6s.

THE CRIME OF THE CRYSTAL. By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Just out.

LAST WORDS. By STEPHEN CRANE, Author of "The Red Badge of Courage," "Active Service," &c.

THE CALLING OF THE WEIR. By FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE, Author of "Dreams of Dania," "Miss Honoria," "Love has no Pity," &c. Cloth, 6s.

IN DEEP WATERS. By Mrs. BAGOT-HARTE, Author of "Wrongly Condemned," "At the Eleventh Hour," "Bianca," "A Daring Spirit." Cloth, 6s.

A STRANGE MESSAGE. By DORA RUSSELL, Author of "A Man's Privilege," "A Torn Out Page," &c. Cloth, 6s. [Just out.

A BID FOR EMPIRE. By Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS, Author of "The Rome Express," &c. Cloth, 6s.

O'CALLAGHAN, THE SLAVE TRADER. By C. DUDLEY LAMPEN, Author of "Barcalli the Mutineer." With Illustrations by C. Dudley Tennant. Pictorial cloth, 6s.

LOVE, THE ATONEMENT. By FRANCES CAMPBELL, Author of "For Three Moons," &c. Cloth gilt, 6s.

Tatler.—"One of the most striking books of the day."

Vanity Fair.—"A charming story, with a rare blend of poetry and humour."

Spectator.—"There is a great deal of charming reading in 'Love, the Atonement.'"

Morning Post.—"Has a distinct and agreeable character of its own."

Glasgow Herald.—"A prettily written book."

Daily News.—"A pretty and pleasing story."

World.—"The story is distinctly out of the common."

A DEAL WITH THE KING. By JAMES T. FINDLAY. Cloth gilt, 6s.

Scotsman.—"The story is delightful in every respect, enthralling the reader from beginning to end. Not for many a day has such a striking story been offered to romance lovers."

JESSE. By GEORGE MARLOWE. Cloth, 6s.

Manchester Courier.—"A well-written and thoroughly interesting story. The author carries you impetuously with him from the first page to the last. Jesse is a very attractive and brilliant character."

Sheffield Telegraph.—"Fascinating and compels attention."

Bookseller.—"A clever and original story."

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG, & CO.,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Digitized by Google

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

THE DAWN of CIVILIZATION.—EGYPT and CHALDÆA. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged by Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to, cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco, gilt edges, 48s. [Nearly ready.

This, the fourth of the English editions of "Les Origines," has been thoroughly revised by the author, who has incorporated into it the results of recent research in Egypt and Mesopotamia, and submitted at the same time the theories founded on these results to a searching criticism. This work and the two succeeding volumes, it may be safely said, are the most important contributions which have ever appeared on the early history of Egypt and Mesopotamia.

EARLY CHURCH CLASSICS. A Homily of Clement of Alexandria, entitled "Who is the Rich Man that is being Saved?" By the Rev. P. MORDAUNT BARNARD. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

A HANDY BOOK of the CHURCH of ENG- LAND. By the late Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D. With an Appendix bringing the Book up to the End of 1900. Crown 8vo, cloth board, 5s.

"The volume is likely to make good its title of a 'handy book.'"—Times.

"This, which is one of the best known of Dr. Cutts' numerous and admirable works, has proved itself an indispensable companion to thousands of Churchmen."—Church Bells.

PARISH PRIESTS and their PEOPLE in the MIDDLE AGES in ENGLAND. By the late Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

"The book before us is a perfect mine of curious and interesting information, and the materials are arranged with great skill and judgment. The result is a graphic picture of the ordinary religious life of mediæval England such as, for fulness and general accuracy, is to be found nowhere else."—Guardian.

"Exactly the sort of book with which every parsonage and every parish library in England ought to be furnished."—Church Times.

IN the DAY of TROUBLE. By the Rev. Charles T. OVENDEN, D.D., Canon of St. Patrick, Dublin. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

"LIFE" in ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL. By the Rev. J. GURNEY HOARE, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS: Studies of Non-Christian Religions. By ELIOT HOWARD. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Nine other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

A REVIEW of "CHRISTIAN SCIENCE." By MARGARET BENSON. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 2d.

LEADING IDEAS of KEBLE'S "CHRISTIAN YEAR." By the Rev. CLEMENT PRICE. Imperial 32mo, cloth boards, 6d.

CHRIST'S WORKERS among all CONDI- TIONS of MEN. By Mrs. T. R. SEDDON, Author of "Saints and Heroes of our own Days." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

THE STORY of FIFTY YEARS' MISSION WORK in CHHOTA NAGPUR. By the Rev. EYRE CHATTERTON, B.D. With a Preface by the LORD BISHOP of CHHOTA NAGPUR. With Map and numerous Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

STAR ATLAS. Containing Maps of all the Stars from 1 to 6·5 Magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and of all Nebulæ and Star Clusters in the same Region which are visible in Telescopes of moderate Powers. With Explanatory Text by Dr. HERMANN J. KLEIN. Translated by EDMUND McCLURE, M.A., M.R.I.A., F.L.S. With 18 Maps. Third Edition (R.A. and Dec. brought up to 1900 as far as Text is concerned), Revised and Enlarged. Imperial 4to, cloth boards, 10s.

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the Present Day. By EDMUND McCLURE, M.A., M.R.I.A., F.L.S. Containing 18 Coloured Maps, besides some 50 Sketch Maps in the Text. 4to, cloth boards, leather back, 16s.

"Both the readers of ancient Church history and of modern missionary records will find abundant materials in it for their assistance."—Guardian.

"A great deal of labour and sound scholarship has gone to the making of this Atlas."—Academy.

THE BIBLE ATLAS of MAPS and PLANS to ILLUSTRATE the GEOGRAPHY and TOPOGRAPHY of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS and the APOCRYPHA. With Explanatory Notes by the late Rev. SAMUEL CLARK, M.A.; also a Complete Index to the Geographical Names in the English Bible, by Sir GEORGE GROVE. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir CHARLES WILSON, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., F.R.S. Royal 4to, cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

[This work has been almost entirely Rewritten by Sir Charles Wilson, and brought up by this competent authority to date.]

THE ROMANCE of SCIENCE.—SOUNDING the OCEAN of AIR. Being Six Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston in December, 1898, by A. LAWRENCE ROTCH, S.B., A.M. Small post 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The ROMANCE of SCIENCE—The MACHIN- ERY of the UNIVERSE: Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. Small post 8vo, with several Diagrams, cloth boards, 2s.

MATTER, ETHER, and MOTION: the Factors and Relations of Physical Science. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. English Edition, Edited by Prof. ALFRED LODGE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

"Every page shows that the author is alive to the far-reaching consequences and implications of modern science. Prof. Dolbear's pages are eminently readable, and his presentation of the philosophy of modern physics is lucid, interesting, exhaustive, and for the most part convincing."—Literature.

POISONOUS PLANTS in FIELD and GARDEN. By the Rev. Prof. G. HENSLOW, M.A., F.G.S., F.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN: Anglo-Saxon Britain. By the late GRANT ALLEN. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d

REFLECTED LIGHTS from CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI'S "The FACE of the DEEP." Selected and Arranged by W. M. L. JAY. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in Red and Black on Hand-made paper, buckram, top edge gilt, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

CHRISTINA GEORGINA ROSSETTI: an Appreciation of the late. A Sermon by the Right Rev. B. F. WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L. With a Preface by the Rev. Prebendary GLENDENNING NASH, M.A. With a Frontispiece of the Memorial Panels at Christ Church, Woburn Square. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 4d.

THE S.P.C.K. ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY,

THE CHEAPEST COMPREHENSIVE DICTIONARY IN THE WORLD,

Consisting of 5,336 pages, imperial 8vo,

Is the largest Dictionary published—over 200,000 Words. It is an easier, simpler, handier Dictionary than any other, and is an Encyclopædia as well.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY.

Its thoroughly encyclopædic character.
The large number and practical character of its illustrations.
The numerous pictorial illustrations, although eminently artistic in character, are in no sense mere embellishments, but in every case help to elucidate the text.
Its comprehensiveness, and its wideness of range in point of time.
"The Encyclopædic Dictionary," by combining in one all these special Glossaries or Vocabularies, effects a double saving, an economy of time and of money.
Its richness and completeness of the illustrative quotations.

INVALUABLE FOR THE HOME, THE COLLEGE, AND THE SCHOOL.

In 7 vols., cloth, 25s.; half bound, 32s.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 129, NORTH STREET.

Digitized by Google

Autumn Announcements Supplement.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Now Ready at all Booksellers and Libraries.

. . BY . . RUDYARD KIPLING

KIM.

. . BY . . RUDYARD KIPLING

Illustrated by J. LOCKWOOD KIPLING. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Vol. I. now ready of the Edition de Luxe of

THE LIFE and WORKS of CHARLES KINGSLEY.
In 19 Monthly Volumes. Medium 8vo. Uniform with Tennyson, Lamb, Kipling, and Walter Pater. This Edition is limited to 525 copies, 100 of which are for America. Price 10s. 6d. net per volume (sold only in Sets).
Vol. I.—THE LIFE. in 4 vols. With Portrait from a Portrait painted by LOWES DICKINSON.

New Book by Charles W. Wood.

GLORIES of SPAIN. By Charles W. Wood. F.R.G.S.,
Author of "Letters from Majorca," &c. With 85 Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. net. [Ready.

A New Volume of the "Highways and Byways" Series.

THE LAKE DISTRICT. By A. G. Bradley. With Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL. Extra crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s. [Ready.
Daily Telegraph.—"A most charming and interesting volume Mr. Bradley has done his work amazingly well."

The "Cranford" Series—New Volume.

A KENTUCKY CARDINAL, and AFTERMATH. By JAMES LANE ALLEN. With Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON. Cloth elegant, gilt edges, crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.
Also an EDITION DE LUXE, limited to 250 copies. Super-royal 8vo, 30s. net.

New Uniform Edition of Thackeray.

THE WORKS of WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.
Reprinted from the First Editions, with all the Original Illustrations, Facsimiles of Wrappers, &c. In crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per volume.
Vol. I.—VANITY FAIR. With Illustrations by the Author. [Ready.

NEW BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW BOOK.

THE WOODPIGEONS AND MARY. By Mrs. Moles-
WORTH, Author of "Carrots," &c. With Illustrations by H. R. MILLAR. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. [Ready.

THE OLDE IRISH RIMES of BRIAN O'LINN. With Illustrations by S. ROSAMOND PRAEGER. 4to, picture boards, 2s. 6d. [Ready.

OLD KING COLE'S BOOK of NURSERY RHYMES. With Illustrations in Colour by BYAM SHAW. Demy 4to, picture boards, 6s. [Ready.

GOD SAVE KING ALFRED. By the Rev. E. Gilliat. Illustrated by GUTZON-BORGLUM. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s. [Ready in October.

THE BOYS' ODYSSEY. By Walter Copland Perry. With Illustrations by JACOMB HOOD. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s. [Ready.

TALES of the SPANISH MAIN. By Mowbray Morris. With Illustrations by GUTZON-BORGLUM. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s. [Ready in October.

THE LETTERS of JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. 8vo. [Ready in October.

THE LIFE of Sir GEORGE GROVE. By C. L. Graves.
8vo. [Ready in October.

THE LIFE of the Right Hon. Sir WILLIAM MOLES-
WORTH, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. By Mrs. M. G. FAWCETT. With Photogravure Portraits. Extra crown 8vo. [Ready in October.

THE EMPEROR CHARLES V. By Edward Armstrong.
In 2 vols. 8vo. [Ready in October.

THE SHERBRO and its HINTERLAND. By T. J.
ALLDRIDGE, F.R.G.S., District Commissioner, Sherbro, West Coast of Africa. With numerous Illustrations and Maps. 8vo. [Ready in October.

LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.—NEW VOLUME.

SELECT WORKS of OLIVER GOLDSMITH. comprising The Vicar of Wakefield, Plays, and Poems. Edited by A. W. POLLARD. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready October 8.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS to HIMSELF. In English by GERALD H. RENDALL, M.A., Litt.D., Head Master of Charterhouse. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d. net. [Ready.

NEW 6s. NOVELS BY FAVOURITE AUTHORS.

By the AUTHOR of "ELIZABETH and her GERMAN GARDEN."
THE BENEFACTRESS. [Ready October 11.

By ROSA N. CAREY.
HERB OF GRACE. [Ready.

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE.
THE SECRET ORCHARD. [Ready.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.
MARIETTA: A Maid of Venice. [Shortly.

By S. R. CROCKETT.
THE FIREBRAND. [Ready November 22.

By Dr. S. WEIR MITCHELL.
CIRCUMSTANCE. [Ready October 8.

By STEPHEN GWYNN.
THE OLD KNOWLEDGE. [Ready October 22.

By Mrs. FARQUHARSON.
ST. NAZARIUS.

By ERIC PARKER.
THE SINNER and the PROBLEM. [Ready October 8.

By EVELYN SHARP.
THE YOUNGEST GIRL in the SCHOOL. With Illustrations by C. E. BROCK. [Ready.

By B. K. BENSON, Author of "Who Goes There?"
A FRIEND with the COUNTERSIGN. [Ready.

A Complete List of MACMILLAN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS will be sent post free on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Digitized by Google

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES OF THE "DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."

NOW READY. SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES I. & II.

ROYAL 8vo, PRICE 15s. EACH NET IN CLOTH, OR 20s. EACH NET IN HALF-MOROCCO, OF

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Note—THE THIRD and CONCLUDING SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME WILL BE PUBLISHED on OCTOBER 25th

TIMES.—"The character of the work makes it almost impossible to do adequate justice to its contents within reasonable limits of space. . . . We have said enough, we hope, to show how varied is the fare and how skilful is its preparation in the admirable supplement to the admirable 'Dictionary of National Biography.'"

STANDARD.—"It will be clear that the judicial standpoint, high literary merit, and exceptional knowledge which have hitherto distinguished the Dictionary are worthily sustained in its final volumes."

SCOTSMAN.—"The Supplement has all the qualities of literature and learning that have given the Dictionary its rank among the greatest bibliographical monuments of its time; and materially adds much to its value."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"In the case of biographies of men of our own time the interest is the greater in proportion as it is more fresh and personal. . . . The supplementary volumes of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' are likely, therefore, to be the most popular in the present day. As books of reference they are indispensable. They reveal the same careful sense of proportion, the accuracy and concision of statement, the constant reference to authorities, which marked the main body of the work. But these supplementary volumes ought to prove acceptable to many readers who cannot afford the money or the room necessary for the Dictionary at large. They are the personal chronicles of our own time."

 A Prospectus of the "Dictionary of National Biography" and of the Supplement will be sent post-free on application.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN ADMIRAL.

JUST PUBLISHED. With Illustrations. Large post 8vo, 8s. 6d.

Over 10,000 Copies already sold in America.

A SAILOR'S LOG. By ROBLEY D. EVANS, Rear-Admiral in the U.S. Navy.

With a Photogravure Portrait of Sir Richard Newdigate. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CAVALIER and PURITAN in the DAYS of the STUARTS. Compiled from the Private Papers and Diary of Sir Richard Newdigate, Second Baronet, with Extracts from MS. Newsletters addressed to him between 1675 and 1689. By Lady NEWDIGATE-NEWDEGATE, Author of "The Cheverels of Cheverel Manor," &c.

NEW VOLUME OF MR. ROBERT BRIDGES' POEMS.

JUST PUBLISHED. Small crown 8vo, 6s.

THE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BRIDGES.—Volume III. Contents: The First Part of Nero. Achilles in Scyros.—Notes.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR JAMES LONG.

SHORTLY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SMALL FARM and its MANAGE-MENT. By JAMES LONG, Author of "British Dairy Farming," "Farming in a Small Way," "The Story of the Farm," "Our Food Supply," &c.

In the Press. With a Portrait. Large post 8vo, 7s 6d.

MR. GLADSTONE: an ABSTRACT and BRIEF CHRONICLE OF HIS LIFE. By HERBERT W. PAUL, Author of "Men and Letters"

MRS. DE LA PASTURE'S LATEST NOVEL.

WORLD.—"Every page of the book is worth reading; Catherine is a sweet creature in the truest sense."

CATHERINE of CALAIS. By Mrs. DE LA PASTURE, Author of "Deborah of Tod's," "Adam Grigson," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD IMPRESSION NOW READY.

PUNCH.—"The reader of 'Deborah of Tod's' expects much when he comes across a new novel by Mrs. Henry de la Pasture. He will not be disappointed on taking up 'Catherine of Calais.' As Deborah being 'of Tod's' was a great success, so Catherine is 'of Calais.' The characters, many and various, are drawn with unerring skill."

SPECTATOR.—"Suffused with that charm of manner and gracious kindliness which have always lent attractiveness to the work of this writer."

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER. PRICE ONE SHILLING. Contents:

BLACKSTICK PAPERS. No. 6. By Mrs. RICHMOND RITCHIE.

LAYING UP THE BOAT. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH.

MRS. CARLISLE and HER HOUSE-MAID. By REGINALD BLUNT.

COCHRANE REDIVIVUS. By PATRICK VAUX.

A LONDONER'S LOG BOOK. IX.

THE MOTIVE of TRAGEDY. By W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

A HOUSE of DREAMS. By THEO. DOUGLAS.

THE PERSISTENCE OF YOUTH. By G. S. STREET.

THE TALE of the GREAT MUTINY. X. DELHI: HOW THE RIDGE WAS HELD. By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT, LL.D.

THE CIRCUS. By E. V. LUCAS.

"THE GRASS o' the GRAVES." By GERALD BRENAN.

COUNT HANNIBAL. Chapters XXVIII.-XXX. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

NEW VOLUME BY FRANK T. BULLEN.

On OCTOBER 10th. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Arthur Twidle, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEP SEA PLUNDERINGS.

A Collection of Stories of the Sea.

By FRANK T. BULLEN, F.R.G.S.,

Author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot," "The Log of a Sea Waif," "The Men of the Merchant Service," &c.

THE BIOGRAPHY OF THE LATE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

SHORTLY. With a Portrait, Large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE

LIFE OF LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN,

Author of "The Life of Charles Stewart Parnell," "Fifty Years of Concessions to Ireland," &c.

NEW WORK BY W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D., &c.

IN THE PRESS. With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY.

By W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D., &c.,

Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "Wellington's Men," &c.

NEW NOVELS IN THE PRESS.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of the "New Rector," "A Gentleman of France," "The Castle Inn," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready on October 25.

By MRS. HODGSON BURNETT.

The MAKING of a MARCHIONESS.

By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT,

Author of "The Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In October.

By H. S. MERRIMAN.

THE VELVET GLOVE.

By H. S. MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," "In Kedar's Tents," "The Isle of Unrest," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

THE TORY LOVER.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT, Author of "The Queen's Twin, and other Stories." With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON.

RICHARD HALPIN: a Romance of the New Navy.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON, Author of "Spun Yarn," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Digitized by Google

Autumn Announcements Supplement.

SATURDAY: 5 OCTOBER, 1901.

Harvest.

ONCE more the harvest is plenteous. The first thing that strikes one in the announcements of publishers for the present season—printed in the ensuing pages—is the enormous mass of fiction offered to the public. We find that the new novels published and to be published exceed four hundred. In children's books we fancy there is some falling off from the records of the last few seasons. If it be so the circumstance is neither to be wondered at nor regretted.

It cannot be said that any new trend or tendency is discernible in the lists before us; and the number of books of compelling and obvious importance is probably not larger than usual. Yet the announcements are anything but dull, and there are certainly some books for which permanent room will be made on many shelves. For example, the Illustrated History of English Literature, on which Dr. Garnett and Mr. Edmund Gosse have collaborated, is likely to receive prolonged attention in such bookish times as these. Allied to this work is Messrs. Chambers' new and revised edition of their Cyclopædia of English Literature in three half-guinea volumes. This is practically a new work, and has been edited by Mr. David Patrick. Many will reserve shelf space for the forty parts of the Edinburgh Folio Shakespeare which Mr. Henley is editing. Another desirable work of the serious order is the illustrated edition of the late Mr. Traill's Social England, in six volumes. The illustrations should be of great value; they will be about 2,500 in number, and they are taken from extant remains or contemporary pictures. The three supplementary volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography may fairly rank as the most important publication in the heavy brigade.

Books of considerable interest in history and biography and reminiscence are abundant. We need only name at random Mr. Andrew Lang's The Mystery of Mary Stuart, John Richard Green's Oxford Studies, Lord Acton's and Mr. Archbold's The Teaching of History, the Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget, Mr. Herbert Paul's brief Life of Mr. Gladstone, the Correspondence of Lady Sarah Lennox, and—in lighter vein—Mr. Harry Furniss's autobiography.

Naturally we feel special interest in books of criticism, and belles lettres. Messrs. Macmillan's announcement of eight new volumes in the "English Men of Letters" series is inspiriting. Messrs. Blackwood will also add several volumes to their "Modern English Writers." Mr. William Archer, greatly daring, has pronounced judgment on nearly all our "Poets of the Younger Generation" in separate studies. His publisher has added their portraits, and marked the lot One Guinea. Dr. George Brandes' Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature—a work of colossal range and sagacity—will be completed gradually in its English dress in six volumes. Dr. Richard Garnett comes forward with The Essays of an Ex-Librarian, Mr. Henley with another Views and Reviews—a series of appreciations on Art, and Mr. Gilbert K. Chesterton with a volume of Essays. Mrs. Richmond Ritchie's "Blackstick Papers" are sure of a welcome by lovers of literary gossip. In literary biography the books of topmost interest are Mr. Graham Balfour's Life of Robert Louis Stevenson and a new volume of Edward Fitzgerald's Letters.

The Art Book, as it is called, is as conspicuous as ever. The term is more convenient than just, for it is applied to books of very different merit—to the really critical work and to the picture book round whose illustrations letterpress has been poured. It is to the higher class that the large volumes produced by Sir Walter Armstrong belong. This year he has been at work on Sir Henry Raeburn, R.A., an artist who appealed greatly to Dr. John Brown and Robert Louis Stevenson. Mr. William Strang's Thirty Etchings illustrating the Works of Rudyard Kipling are bought up. A work of first-rate interest in this department will be Mr. Lionel Cust's National Portrait Gallery, with reproductions of all the portraits in the national collection. The art of Mr. Herkomer is sumptuously illustrated in Mr. A. L. Baldry's book on this artist. Mr. Marillier has prepared an illustrated chronicle of the art and life of Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Lady Dilke proceeds in her surveys of French art. A large pictorial record of the Madonna is in preparation.

Of poetry there is rather a dearth. The only volume that need be named in advance is Mrs. Meynell's "Later Poems."

The set and the series are still loud in the land. Two new editions of Tolstoy's works are in hand. George Eliot is going into her last complete copyright editions, Thackeray into his first considerable non-copyright editions. French standard fiction is also being brought to the front. Despite the existence of a very long series of histories of the nations, a new "Great People's" series, which one imagines to be on similar lines, is projected. Pocket series of standard works are especially active.

Announcements.

Mr. George Allen.

Bebb (Principal), Oxford University Sermons, Arranged and Edited with an Historical Account of the Institution and Ceremonial connected with the Delivery of the "University Sermons" 6/0

Hutchinson (Rev. H. N.), The Living Rulers of Mankind. In 12 monthly parts each, net 0/7

The Athenian Drama, Verse Translations of the Greek Dramatic Poets, with Commentaries and Explanatory Essays:

Vol. I. Æschylus: the Orestean Trilogy. By Prof. Warr net 7/6

,, II. Sophocles: Œdipus Tyrannus and Coloneus, and Antigone. By Prof. J. S. Phillimore net 7/6

,, III. Euripides: Hippolytus and Bacchae with Aristophanes' Frogs. By Prof. Gilbert Murray net 7/6

,, IV. Aristophanes: Clouds and Plutus; the Trinummus of Plautus, and the Adelphi of Terence net 7/6

Belloc (Hilaire), The Path to Rome: Notes of Travel in Italy net 6/0

Hodgson (F. C.), Early History of Venice, from the Origin to the Conquest of Constantinople in 1204 net 7/6

Grierson (Francis), The Celtic Temperament, and Other Essays net 3/6

Maeterlinck (M.), A New Volume of Essays.....net 5/0

Maeterlinck (M.), Sister Beatrice and Ardiane: Two Plays Trans. by Bernard Miall net 3/6

Pen Pictures from Ruskin, Descriptive Passages chosen by Caroline H. Wurtzburg. Two Series ...each, net, 2/0

Apperson (G. L.), An Idler's Calendar: Essays on the Natural History of the Seasons net 3/6

Dick (Cotsford), Society Snapshots taken at Random during a Trip through the World 6/0

Thirlmere (Rowland), A Woman of Emotions, and Other Poems net 5/0

Blunt (Catherine) and Fielding (John), Transfiguration, and Other Poems net 3/6

May (Ennis), Pansies: a Volume of Poems net 3/6

JUVENILE.

Cuming (E. D.), Wonders in Monsterland: the Wanderings of Two Children into Prehistoric Dreamland..... 6/0

Scott (Edith H.), Mother Holda Stories.....net 3/6

Digitized by Google

Fallon (Sara M.), Bird Pictures 3/6
Stoney (T. Butler), Tom the Piper's Son 2/6
Eaton (Mary), The Ark and Nonsense Rhymes 1/6
Books for Boys:
Hewett (Rev. G. M. A.), The Open-Air Boy 6/0
Laughton (J. Knox), Sea Fights and Adventures 6/0

FICTION.

Cossins (George), A Boer of To-day 6/0
Hodgson (Geraldine), A Tragedy of Errors 6/0
Patton (J. B.), The Sway of Philippa: a Romance 6/0
Keating (Joseph), Son of Judith: a Tale of the Welsh Mining Valleys 6/0
Bates (Havergall), The Believing Bishop 6/0
Price (Daisy Hugh), The Pasha: a Story of the Armenian Massacres 6/0
Düring (Stella M.), Malicious Fortune 6/0
Gilbert (Henry), Hearts in Revolt 6/0
Pearce (J. H.), Youth goes a-Marketing 6/0

Mr. Allen's catalogue is a long one, and includes all his latest editions of the works of Ruskin, and additions to the "Library," "Masterpieces of English Fiction," and "Pensées" series.

Mr. Edward Arnold.

Bagot (Mrs. Charles), Links with the Past 16/0
Lake (Katharine.—Edited by), Memorials of the Very Rev. W. C. Lake, D.D., Dean of Durham, 1869-1894 16/0
Milner (Lord), Arnold Toynbee: a Reminiscence. A New Edition 2/6
Lives of Holy Men:
Adderley (James), Monsieur Vincent 3/6
Marson (Charles), Hugh of Lincoln 3/6
Adderley (James), Francis 3/6
Oman (C. W.), Seven Roman Statesmen 6/0
Holland (Bernard), Imperium Et Libertas net 12/6
Cook (E. T.), Rights and Wrongs of the Transvaal War .net 12/6
Frederiksen (N. C.), Finland: Its Public and Private Economy 6/0
Peel (Hon. Sidney), Trooper 8,008 I.Y. 7/6
George (Florence A.), King Edward's Cookery Book 3/6
Essex House Press Publications:
Erasmus' Praise of Folly. Sir Thomas Challoner's Translation (Elizabethan). With a set of illustrations, borders, frontispiece, and initial by William Strang, and a cloth cover in motly by C. R. Ashbee. 250 copies 63/0
The Psalms of David. This book will be in the new type with fresh set of historiated 'bloomers' designed by C. R. Ashbee. 250 copies
American Sheaves and English Seed Corn. Essays and Addresses by C. R. Ashbee
John Woolman's Journal. Uniform with the "Bunyan." In red and black, with white vellum cover. With a woodblock frontispiece by Reginald Savage. 250 copies 42/0
Yale Bicentennial Publications:
Schwab (Prof.), The Confederates States of America net 10/6
Hopkins (Prof.), The Great Epic of India: its Character and Origin net 17/0
Gooch (Professor.—Edited by), Research Papers from the Kent Chemical Laboratory of Yale University. 2 vols. net 32/0

FICTION.

Coleridge (M. E.), The Fiery Dawn 6/0
Sidgwick (Mrs. Alfred), Cynthia's Way 6/0
Ford (Isabella O.), Mr. Elliott: a Story of Factory Life... 6/0
Wilson (Theodora), T' Bacca Queen 6/0
Browne (E. M. Balfour), The Bettaley Jewels 6/0
Seton (Christine) and Wilbraham (Estra), Two Babes in the City 3/6

Messrs. Bell.

Baldry (A. L.), Hubert von Herkomer, R.A., his Life and Works net 63/0
Strutt (Edward C.), Fra Filippo Lippi net 12/6
Marillier (H. C.), Dante Gabriel Rossetti: an Illustrated Chronicle of his Art and Life net 42/0
Dilke (Lady), French Decoration and Furniture in the Eighteenth Century net 28/0
Berenson (Bernhard), The Study and Criticism of Italian Art net 10/6
Whitman (Alfred), The Print-Collector's Handbook ...net 15/0
Sutherland-Gower (Lord Ronald), History of the Tower of London. Vol. I. net 21/0
Leighton (Stanley, M.P., The late), Shropshire Houses, Past and Present net 21/0
Law (Ernest), Holbein's Pictures at Windsor Castle ...net 80/0
Cust (Lionel), The Chatsworth Van Dyck Sketch Book net 42/0
Bell (Mrs. Arthur), The Founders of the Church as Depicted by the Great Masters
Bell (R. Anning), The Odes of Keats net 1/6
British Artists Series:
Bate (Percy), English Pre-Raphaelite Painters, their Associates and Successors net 7/6
Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture:
Williamson (G. C.) Francia net 5/0
Scott (Leader), Brunelleschi net 5/0
Cruttwell (Maud), Mantegna net 5/0
Bell (Malcolm), Rembrandt net 5/0
Sutherland-Gower (Lord Ronald), Wilkie net 5/0
Perkins (F. Mason), Giotto net 5/0
Cossio (Manuel B.), El Greco net 5/0
Handbooks of the Great Craftsmen:
Cust (R. H. Hobart), The Pavement Masters of Siena net 4/6
Headlam (Cecil), Peter Vischer, Bronze Founder...net 4/6
Cust (A. M.), The Ivory Workers of the Middle Ages net 4/6
Bell's Miniature Series of Painters:
Bell (Malcolm), Sir Edward Burne-Jones, Bart. ...net 1/0
Williamson (G. C.), Velazquez net 1/0
Williamson (G. C.), Fra Angelico net 1/0
Staley (Edgcumbe), Watteau and his Pupils net 1/0
Bateman (C. T.), G. F. Watts, R.A. net 1/0
Cleeve (Rowley) George Romney net 1/0
Bird (Frank), King Fritz's A.D.C.: a Novel... 6/0
Sendall (Sir Walter J.—Edited by), The Works of Charles Stuart Calverley net 6/0
Rose (John Holland), The Life of Napoleon I.
Dyer (Thomas Henry, The late), A History of Modern Europe, from the Fall of Constantinople. 6 vols. Each, net 6/0
Gregorovius (Ferdinand), History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages. Vol. VIII.
Gatty (Mrs. M.), Parables from Nature: a Selection ...net 1/0
Miles (Eustace H.), Mathematical Law in the Spiritual World net 1/0
Miles (Eustace H.), Better Food for Boys net 1/0
Ward (Edith), Light from the East: Selections from the Teaching of the Buddha net 1/0
Gase (F. E. A.), A Concise Dictionary of the French and English Languages 3/6
Handbooks of English Literature:
Snell (F. J.), The Age of Chaucer 3/6
Seccombe (Thomas) and Allen (J. W.), The Age of Shakespeare 3/6
Bell's Science Series:
Jones (D. E.), Elementary Science
Walker (James), Inorganic Chemistry
Bourne (G. C.), An Introduction to the Comparative Anatomy of Animals 4/6
Lodge (A.), Elementary Differential Calculus
Basset (A. B.), An Elementary Treatise on Cubic and Quartic Curves 10/6
Handbooks to the Great Public Schools:
Airy (Reginald), Westminster net 3/6
The Chiswick Shakespeare:
The Merry Wives of Windsor—Love's Labour's Lost—Measure for Measure—King Henry VI., Part I.—King Henry VI., Part II.—King Henry VI., Part III. each, net, 1/6
Bell's Cathedral Series:
Hallett (Cecil), Ripon net 1/6
Corlette (H. C.), Chichester net 1/6

New Editions.

Proctor (Adelaide A.), Legends and Lyrics. Second Series. net 1/0
Armstrong (Lieut. G. E.), Torpedoes and Torpedo Vessels 5/0

Digitized by Google

Bohn's Libraries:
- Prescott's Conquest of Mexico. 3 vols. each 3/6
- Letters of Thomas Gray. Vol. II. 3/6
- Prose Works of Jonathan Swift. Vols. V., VI., and IX. each 3 6
- Synonyms Discriminated (Ven. Archdeacon Smith) ... 6 0

Messrs. Bell also announce new educational books in their "Illustrated Classics" series.

Messrs. A. & C. Black.

Encyclopædia Biblica. Edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, D.D., and J. Sutherland Black. Vols. I. and II. now ready. Vol. III. (L—P) in December net 20/0
Lankester (E. Ray—Edited by), A Treatise on Zoology. Part IV.: The Platyhelmia, Mesozoa, and Nemertini, by W. Blaxland Benham, D.Sc....net 15/0
Who's Who, 1902 net 5/0
The Englishwoman's Year Book and Directory, 1902...net 2/6
Public School Annual, 1902 1/0
Nicholson (J. Shield), Principles of Political Economy. Vol. III. (Books IV. and V.) 15/0
Kidd (Walter), Use-Inheritance: Illustrated by the Direction of Hair on the Bodies of Animals net 2/6
Menpes (Mortimer), War Impressions. Transcribed by Dorothy Menpes net 20/0
Gardner (Percy), A Historic View of the New Testament 6 0
Duff (Archibald), A Hebrew Grammar. net 2/6
Menpes (Mortimer), Japan: a Record in Colour. Transcribed by Dorothy Menpes
Graham (Rev. Henry Grey), Scottish Men of Letters in the Eighteenth Century 15/0
Ingram (John Kells), Human Nature and Morals, according to Auguste Comte net 3/6
Gillie (Rev. R. C.), The Story of Stories: a Life of Jesus Christ for Children 6/0
McLaren (E. T.), Dr. John Brown and His Sisters. Pocket Edition net 2/0
Hall (Douglas B.) and Osborne (Lord Albert), Sunshine and Surf: a Year's Wanderings in the South Seas ... 12/6
Lees (Frederic—Translated by), War Notes: the Diary of Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil from November 14, 1899, to March, 7, 1900 5/0
Hope (Ascott R.), An Album of Adventures that Happened in Our Holidays.... 5/0

Fiction.

Mitton (G. E.), The Opportunist 6/0

New Editions.

Waverley Novels: New Pocket Edition, 25 vols....each net 2/0
Strong (Very Rev. T. B.), A Manual of Theology.... 5/0
Graham (Rev. Henry Grey), Social Life in Scotland in the Eighteenth Century. Third Edition (revised) 12/0
Handley (Rev. Hubert), The Fatal Opulence of Bishops: an Essay on a Neglected Ingredient of Church Reform 1/0
De Quincy's Confessions of an English Opium Eater, Edited by John Downie 3/6
Modern Poetry: Selected and Arranged for Use in Schools. Edited by C. Linklater Thomson and E. E. Speight, B.A.
- Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning net 0/6
- Lord Byron net 0/6
- John Keats and Samuel Taylor Coleridge net 0/6
- Lord Tennyson....net 0/6
- Percy Bysshe Shelley....net 0/6
- Henry Wadsworth Longfellow....net 0/6

New Sixpenny Editions:
- Brown (Dr. John), Rab and His Friends and Other Papers.
- Farrar (Frederic W.), Julian Home.
- Clifford (Mrs. W. K.), The Last Touches.
- Hornung (E. W.), Under Two Skies.

Besides the above Messrs. Black's list contains announcements of other new editions and educational books.

Messrs. Blackie & Son.

Illustrated Fiction, Gift Books, &c.

Henty (G. A.), With Roberts to Pretoria: a Tale of the South African War 6/0
Henty (G. A.), At the Point of the Bayonet: a Tale of the Mahratta War 6/0
Henty (G. A.), To Herat and Cabul: a Story of the First Afghan War 5/0
Heddle (Ethel F.), An Original Girl.... 6/0
Tynan (Katharine), A Girl of Galway 6/0
Brereton (Capt. F. S.), The Dragon of Pekin: a Story of the Boxer Revolt 5/0
Brereton (Capt. F. S.), A Gallant Grenadier: a Story of the Crimean War 5/0
The World of Animal Life: an Introduction to the Wonders of the Animal World 5/0
Samson (John), In the Dictator's Grip: a Story of Adventure in the Pampas and Paraguay 3/6
Pollard (Eliza F.), The Doctor's Niece 3/6
Squire (Charles), The Great Khan's Treasure: a Story of Adventure in Chinese Tartary 3/6
Stables (Dr. Gordon), In Quest of the Giant Sloth: a Tale of Adventure in South America.... 3/6
Marchant (Bessie), Three Girls on a Ranch: a Story of New Mexico 2/6
Adams (Ellinor Davenport), Those Twins!.... 2/6
Burrage (E. Harcourt), Carbineer and Scout: a Story of the Boer War.... 2/6
Callwell (J. M.), A Little Irish Girl.... 2/6
Coombe (Florence), For the Old School 2/0
Chappell (Jennie), Terrie's Travels; or, the Adventures of a Small Boy 2/0
Elrington (H.), In the Days of Prince Hal; or, the Little Forester 1/6
Gammon and Spinach. Pictures by Stewart Orr, Verses by John Brymer 6/0
Nonsense, Nonsense. Illustrated by Charles Robinson, Verses by Walter Jerrold 6/0
Neilson (H. B.), An Animal A B C 2/6
Smith (Fred), The Animal Book: a Natural History for Little Folk.... 2/6
My Pretty Picture-Book: a Book of Stories and Verses for Little Folk 1/6

This year Messrs. Blackie & Son are making many additions to their popular series of toy-books and picture-books. The new publications include an attractive series at Threepence (each book containing twenty-four pages, with four pages of colour), six new books in the Sixpenny Series, and two in the Shilling Series.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.

"Linesman," Words by an Eyewitness: The Struggle in Natal 6/0
Hensman (Howard), Cecil Rhodes: a Study of a Career...
Dickson (William Kirk), Life of Major-General Sir Robert Murdoch Smith net 15/0
Forrest (G. W.), Sepoy Generals: Wellington to Roberts .
Leighton (Gerald R.), The Life-History of British Serpents: and their Local Distribution in the British Isles.... 5/0
Baker (Ada Bartrick), A Palace of Dreams, and other Verse 5/0
Ford (W. J.), A History of Cambridge University Cricket Club....
James (Capt. Walter H.), Modern Strategy
Fulton (T. Wemyss), The Sovereignty of the Sea: a Historical Account of the Claims to the Exclusive Dominion of the British Seas, and of the Evolution of the Territorial Waters, with Special Reference to the Rights of Fishing
Modern English Writers:
- Lang (Andrew), Alfred Tennyson.... 2/6
- Whibley (Charles), William Makepeace Thackeray ... 2/6

The County Histories of Scotland:
- Dickson (William Kirk), Edinburgh and Linlithgow net 7/6

Periods of European Literature:
- Millar (J. H.), The Mid-Eighteenth Century net 5/0
- The Earlier Renaissance net 5/0

Digitized by Google

Merz (John Theodore), A History of European Thought in the Nineteenth Century. Vol. II.
A Handy Vocabulary: English-Afrikander, Afrikander-English. For the Use of English-speaking People in South Africa 1/0
Irons (David), The Psychology of Ethics
Sprott (Rev. G. W.), The Book of Common Order of the Church of Scotland: Commonly known as John Knox's Liturgy. With Historical Introduction and Illustrative Notes net 4/6
Sprott, (Rev. G. W.—Edited by), Scottish Liturgies of the Reign of James VI. net 4/0
Leishman (Very Rev. T.—Edited by), The Westminster Directory.....

FICTION.

Blissett (Nellie K.), The Most Famous Loba 6/0
Lawson (Henry), Joe Wilson and His Mates 6/0
Monsieur Martin: a Romance 6/0
Green (Lincoln), The End of an Epoch 6/0
Galsworthy (John), A Man of Devon, and other Sketches. 6/0
Buchan (John), The Watcher by the Threshold, and other Stories.....
Munro (Neil), Doom Castle: a Romance..... 6/0
Grier (Sydney C.), The Warden of the Marches 6/0
Hutton (Edward), Frederic Uvedale..... 6/0
Constable (F. C.), Marrables' Magnificent Idea..... 6/0
Franklin (Miles), My Brilliant Career 6/0
Lawson (Henry), The Country I Come From..... 6/0

NEW EDITIONS.

George Eliot's Works (The Library Edition):
The Ten Volumes are small demy 8vo in size, and printed from new type, on a fine paper. A feature of the Edition is the Photogravure Frontispieces.
Middlemarch net 10/6
Daniel Deronda net 10/6
The Spanish Gypsy: Jubal net 10/6
Theophrastus Such: Essays.....net 10/6
George Eliot's Works (The Warwick Edition):
The Volumes, Twelve in all, consist of from 600 to 900 pages, and bulk only about one half-inch each
Middlemarch. 2 vols. net 2/0
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols net 2/0
The Spanish Gypsy: Jubal, and other Poems net 2/0
Theophrastus Such: Essays net 2/0
Beatrice Harraden's Novels:
Ships That Pass in the Night..... 3/6
In Varying Moods 3/6
Hilda Strafford and the Remittance Man 3/6
The Fowler..... 3/6

In addition, Messrs. Blackwood announce many new Educational works.

Cambridge University Press.

The Jataka. Translated from the Pali under the superintendence of Professor E. B. Cowell. To be published in Six or Seven Volumes. Royal 8vo, each 12s. 6d. net; to subscribers to the Series who have paid their subscription before the publication of each volume, 10s. net.
Vol. V.—Translated by H. T. Francis and R. A. Neil.
Vol. VI.—Translated by Prof. E. B. Cowell.
Wright (W.) Catalogue of Syriac Manuscripts in the Cambridge University Library. 2 vols..... 60/0
Skeat (Walter—Trans. by), Fables and Folk-Tales from an Eastern Forest..... 7/6
Cambridge Patristic Texts: General Editor, A. J. Mason, D.D.:
Srawley (J. H.—Edited by), Gregory. Oratio Catechetica
Stewart (H. F.—Edited by), Augustine. De Doctrina Christiana
Brightman (F. E.—Edited by), Serapion
Clark (J. W.), The Care of Books: An Essay on the Development of Libraries and their Fittings, from the Earliest Times to the end of the Eighteenth Century.....net 18/0
James (M. R.—Edited by), Canterbury Libraries: The Catalogues of the Ancient Libraries of Christ Church Priory and St. Augustine's Abbey at Canterbury and also those of Canterbury College, Oxford, and Dover Priory.....
Venn (John), Biographical History of Gonville and Caius College, 1349—1897, containing a list of all known Members of the College from the Foundation to the present time, with Biographical Notes. Vol. III. ...
Stokes (Whitley—Edited by), Thesaurus Palaeohibernicus: a collection of the oldest monuments of the Gaelic Language. Vol. I. 30/0
McTaggart (J. McT. E.), Hegelian Cosmology 8/0
Wyatt (A. J.), An Elementary Old English Reader..... /6
Wyatt (A. J.), An Old English Anthology.....
Sayle (Charles) Early English Printed Books in the University Library, Cambridge. Vol. II.
Skeel (Caroline A. J.), Travel in the First Century after Christ, with special reference to Asia Minor 5/0
Laurie (S. S.), Essays on Educational Subjects.....
Blackman (F. F.), A Primer of Botany
Acton (Lord) and Archbold (W. A. J.), Edited by, The Teaching of History net 2/6
Maitland (F. W.) English Law and the Renaissance (Rede Lecture for 1901) cloth, 2/6; paper 1/6
Kenny (Courtney Stanhope), A Selection of Cases illustrative of English Criminal Law 12/6
Montmorency (J. E. G. de), An Introduction to the History of State Intervention in English Education
Stevenson (William Henry), The Anglo-Saxon Chancery..
Walker (T. A.), A History of the Law of Nations. Vol. II.
Roby (H. J.), Roman Private Law
Payn (F. W.), Cromwell on Foreign Affairs, together with Four Essays on International matters.....
Head (F. W.), The Fallen Stuarts 5/0
Headlam (J. W.), Germany, 1815—1890. 2 vols.
Payne (E. J.), The Colonisation of South America
Brown (P. Hume), History of Scotland. Vol II.....
Verity (A. W.), Macbeth. With Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index..... 1/6
Kirkpatrick (A. F.—Edited by), Psalms: Books IV. and V. (xc.—cl.)

Besides the above the Cambridge University Press announce new Biblical and Theological Studies, Classical and Oriental studies and texts, and Mathematical and Educational works.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.

Cust (Lionel—Edited by), The National Portrait Gallery net 126/0
Wilson (David Mackay), Behind the Scenes in the Transvaal: Being Reminiscences of an English Official..... 7/6
Ball (Sir Robert Stawell), The Earth's Beginning 7/6
Spence (Very Rev. H. D. M.), Early Christianity and Paganism 21/0
Illustrated Edition of "Social England": a Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Industry, Commerce, Literature, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By Various Writers. Edited by the late H. D. Traill. With about 2,500 Pictures and numerous Coloured Plates, reproduced from authentic sources. Revised and partly rewritten. Vol. I. will contain about 400 Illustrations and 7 Coloured Plates and Maps net 12/0
Daniel (Colonel W. H.), The Military Forces of the Crown: Their Organisation and Equipment. Edited by T. Miller Maguire 5/0
The Child's Bible. Illustrated with 100 new Full-page Plates, including 12 in Colours, and reset in new, handsome type..... 10/6
Swaysland (W.), Familiar Wild Birds. 4 vols.....each 3/6
The Automobile: Its Construction and Management. Translated from Gerard Lavergne's "Manuel Théoretique et Pratique de l'Automobile sur Route." With Additions and new Illustrations. Revised and Edited by Paul N. Hasluck net 10/6
Loftie (Rev. W. J.), London Afternoons: Chapters on the Social Life, Architecture, and Records of the Great City and its Neighbourhood.....net 10/6
Pullin (A. W.), Alfred Shaw, Cricketer: His Career and Reminiscences 2/6

Digitized by Google

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

MEXICO AS I SAW IT.

By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs and Sketches by the Author, and New Map of Mexico. 1 vol., crown 4to, 21s. net. [Early in October.

TO THE SOUTH POLAR REGIONS.

Expedition of 1898–1900. By LOUIS BERNACCHI, F.R.G.S. Fully Illustrated by Photographs taken by the Author. Maps, Plans, &c. 12s. net.

THE HEARTS OF MEN.

By H. FIELDING, Author of "The Soul of a People," &c. 1 vol, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

TO THE MOUNTAINS OF THE MOON.

Being an Account of the Modern Aspect of Central Africa and some little-known Regions Traversed by the Tanganyika Expedition in 1899 and 1900. By J. E. S. MOORE, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 4to, with numerous Illustrations and Maps. 21s. net.

FROM THE CAPE TO CAIRO.

The First Traverse of Africa from South to North. By EWART S. GROGAN and ARTHUR H. SHARP. Fully Illustrated by Drawings by A. D. McCormick (from Sketches made by E. S. Grogan), Original Drawings by E. S. Grogan, Photographs and Photogravure Portraits of the Authors, Maps, &c. 1 vol., crown 4to, 21s. net.

THE NEW NOVELS.

IN SPITE OF ALL.

By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," "We Two," &c. 6s. [October 21.

STRAWS IN THE WIND.

By CARLTON DAWE, Author of "The Yellow Man," "A Bride of Japan," &c. 6s.

THE LITTLE SAINT OF GOD.

A Heroine of the Red Terror. By Lady FAIRLIE CUNINGHAME. Author of "A Wandering Star," &c. 6s.

THE CALL OF THE FUTURE.

By Mrs. BERTRAM TANQUERY, Author of "Hoya Corney." 6s.

FLOWER AND THORN.

By BEATRICE WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. 6s. [October 14.

THE MARRIAGE OF MR. MOLYNEUX.

By CECIL HEADLAM, Author of "The Story of Nurenberg," &c. 6s

POOR ELISABETH.

By M. HAMILTON, Author of "The Dishonour of Frank Scott," &c. 6s.

BLOOM OR BLIGHT.

By DOROTHEA CONYERS, Author of "The Thorn Bit." 6s.

AYLWIN.

By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. New and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Introduction and Portrait, 3s. 6d.

BEQUEATHED.

By BEATRICE WHITBY. New and Cheaper Edition, 3s. 6d.

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street, W.

SANDS & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Travel, History, and Biography.

IN SICILY. By DOUGLAS SLADEN. This work contains an exhaustive and interesting description of the various ruined Palaces, Temples, &c., to be seen in the country, with the most reliable information to be obtained on all matters concerning the inhabitants, customs, and architecture of present or ancient times. It contains Maps and over 300 Illustrations, including 13 Plates from Oil Paintings specially executed for the work by Miss MARGARET THOMAS, and many reproductions of old engravings taken from prints out of works now practically unprocurable. No trouble or expense has been spared to make this book the standard work on Sicily. In 2 vols. 4to, 3 guineas net.

OUR GREAT VASSAL EMPIRE. By W. S. LILLY, F.R.S. This book forms practically the most recent history of India, with Maps and Tables. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE LAND OF THE AMAZONS. By the late Baron DE SANTA ANNA NERY. Translated by GEORGE HUMPHERY, F.R.G.S. Liberally Illustrated and containing a Map of "The State of the Amazon," and a very complete Index. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

MARY THE FIRST, QUEEN OF ENGLAND. By J. M. STONE. A History of Mary I. as found in the Public Record s Despatches of Ambassadors, in Original Private Letters, and other Contemporary Documents throwing a new light on her character and presenting a more broad minded and impartial view of her actions. A most important addition to the historical knowledge of the day. The book contains nine plates from well-known paintings and engravings, and a facsimile of a letter written in the Princess Mary's own hand. Demy 8vo, handsomely bound, 12s. 6d. net.

THE KISS, AND ITS HISTORY. By Dr CHRISTOPHER NYROP, Professor of Romance Philology at the University of Copenhagen. Translated by W. F. HARVEY, M.A., Lecturer in English at the University of Lund (Sweden). This book has gone through two editions in Denmark, and has been translated into German, Swedish, and Russian. Large crown 8vo, daintily bound, 7s. 6d. net.

AFOOT THROUGH THE KASHMIR VALLEYS. By MARION DOUGHTY. An interesting record of the travels of a lady in an out-of-the-way region. Very fully illustrated from Photographs taken on the spot. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GABRIELE ROSSETTI: a versified Autobiography, translated and supplemented by WILLIAM MICHAEL ROSSETTI. Containing several Illustrations of universal interest and much hitherto unpublished information about the childhood of DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI and CHRISTINA ROSSETTI. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE ASHANTI CAMPAIGN OF 1900. By Lieut.-Col. A. F. MONTANARO, R.A., and Capt. ARMITAGE, D.S.O. With Illustrations, Map, and Plan of Kumasi. Containing also a Chapter on the West African Goldfields. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

THE DANGERS OF SPIRITUALISM. By a Member of the Society for Psychical Research. Containing several unique Illustrations from Photographs of Embodied Spirits, and a Reproduction of Planchette Writing. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Fiction.

MEN v. DEVILS. By T. KINGSTON-CLARKE. Illustrated by JOHN HASSALL. An Exposure of Malpractices on the Stock Exchange and the Tricks of Outside Brokers. First Edition of 10,000. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PRINCE CHARMING. By RITA. A Fantastic Episode of Court Life dealing with the Adventures of a Certain Royal Person in Ireland. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OF HIS KIN. By J. D. M. DOUGLAS-THOMAS. A Tale of a Devonshire Village. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

THE MARRIAGE OF LAURENTIA. By MARIE HAULTMONT. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

THE CASE AND THE CURE. By GERTRUDE GORDON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CONCERNING SOME FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY. By NEWTON SANDARS. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

THE SACRED PRECINCTS OF THE CLOSE. By SYDNEY WARDASE. Crown 8vo, cloth 3s. 6d.

PETER A PARASITE. By E. M. ALBANESI. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE PLACE OF DREAMS. By the Rev. W. BARRY, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: 12, BURLEIGH STREET, STRAND.

Digitized by Google

Danes (Richard). Cassell's Illustrated History of the Boer War 7/6
Cassell's Family Doctor. By a Medical Man 6/0
Madden (Frank Cole), The Practical Nursing of Infants and Children 3/6
Stacpoole (Florence), Advice to Women on the Care of their Health, Before, During, and After Confinement 2/0
Monkhouse (Cosmo), Chinese Porcelain.....net 30/0
Wyllie (W. L.), Marine Painting in Water-Colour 5/0
Spielmann (M. H.), British Sculpture and Sculptors of To-day net 7/6
Bankes (G. Nugent), An Eton Boy's Letters 5/0
Crane (Walter), A Masque of Days: From the Last Essays of Elia: Newly Dressed and Decorated 6/0
The National Gallery Catalogue net 0/6
Newman Hall: an Autobiography 6/0
Wright (Walter P.), Pictorial Practical Fruit Growing ... 1/6

FICTION.

Arnold (Edwin Lester), Lepidus the Centurion: a Roman of To-day 6/0
Keightley (Samuel R.), A Man of Millions..... 6/0
Bryant (Marguerite) The Princess Cynthia 6/0
Pemberton (Max), The Giant's Gate..... 6/0
Quiller-Couch (A. T.), The Laird's Luck, and Other Fireside Tales 6/0
Upward (Allen), The Ambassador's Adventure..... 6/0
Thompson (Maurice), Alice of Old Vincennes 6/0

JUVENILE.

Kearton (R.), Strange Adventures in Dicky-bird Land: Stories told by Mother Birds to Amuse their Chicks... 5/0
Munroe (Kirk), Under the Great Bear..... 3/6
Walkey (S.), With Redskins on the War-path 3/6
Stevenson (R. L.), Treasure Island: a Story of Pirates and the Spanish Main 3/6
Ellis (Edward S.), Blazing Arrow..... 2/6
Ellis (Edward S.), Chieftain and Scout 2/6
Hamer (S. H.), Topsy Turvy Tales 1/6
Tiny Tots: Annual Volume 1/6
Hamer (S. H.), Whys and Other Whys; or, Curious Creatures and their Tales 3/6
Mansergh (Jessie), Tom and Some Other Girls 3/6
Robson (Isabel Suart), Mrs. Pederson's Niece 3/6
Little Folks Christmas Volume..... 3/6
Kirby (W. F.), Familiar Butterflies and Moths 6/0

Messrs. Cassell also announce several new illustrated serials, including Living London, edited by George R. Sims, which will be issued in fortnightly parts at 7d. each.

W. & R. Chambers.

An Entirely New Edition of Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature, 3 vols.....each, net 10/6
Davidson (Rev. Thomas), Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary of the English Language 3/6
The Nineteenth Century Series:
Withrow (W. H.), Religious Progress of the Century 5/0
Mille (Professor A. B. de), Literature of the Century. 5/0
Stafford (Ezra Hurlburt), Medicine, Surgery, and Hygiene in the Century 5/0
Thornton (Percy M.), Continental Rulers in the Century 5/0
Escott (T. H. S.), British Sovereigns in the Century. 5/0
Little (James Stanley), Progress of British Empire in the Century 5/0
Hopkins (J. Castell), Progress of Canada in the Century..... 5/0
Poetry of Robert Burns, with Life and Notes, by Wm. Wallace 7/6

JUVENILE.

Timlow (E. Westyn), A Nest of Girls; or, Boarding School Days 6/0
Meade (L. T.), Girls of the True Blue: a School Story ... 6/0
Fenn (G. Manville), The Kopje Garrison: a Tale of the Boer War 5/0
Meade (L. T.), A Very Naughty Girl 5/0
Courage and Conflict. A Series of Stories by G. A. Henty, G. Manville Fenn, F. T. Bullen, Fred Whishaw, &c... 5/0
Meade (L. T.), Cosey Corner; or, How we Kept a Farm.. 3/6
Baldwin (May), A Popular Girl: a Tale of School Life in Germany 3/6
Kenyon (C. R.), The Argonauts of the Amazon..... 3/6
Barrow-North (H.), Jerry Dodds, Millionaire: a School Yarn of Merriment and Mystery 3/6
Home (Andrew), Out of Bounds: a Series of School Stories 3/6
Molesworth (Mrs.), "My Pretty" and her Brother "Too," and other Stories 3/6
Cochrane (Robert—Edited by), More Animal Stories 2/6
Lassie 1/0

Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

The Complete Poetical Works of Robert Buchanan. 2 vols. 12/0
Pond (Major J. B.), Eccentricities of Genius: Memories of Famous Men and Women of the Platform and the Stage 12/0
Evered (Philip), Stag-Hunting with the Devon and Somerset: the Chase of the Wild Red Deer at the Close of the Nineteenth Century net 16/0
Jones (William), Crowns and Coronations 3/6
Walford's County Families of the United Kingdom (1902) 50/0
Herbert Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities 1/6
McCarthy (Justin), The Reign of Queen Anne. 2 vols. each 12/0
Merivale (Herman), Bar, Stage, and Platform: Autobiographic Memories 12/0
Baildon (H. Bellyse), Robert Louis Stevenson: a Life Study in Criticism 6/0

FICTION.

Besant (Sir Walter), The Lady of Lynn 6/0
Mitford (Bertram), The Triumph of Hilary Blachland ... 6/0
Murray (D. Christie), Despair's Last Journey 6/0
Shiel (M. P.), The Purple Cloud 6/0
The Lover's Progress. Told by Himself, and "Dedicated to all who Love" 6/0
Forbes (Hon. Mrs. R. D.), Dumb..... 6/0
Croker (B. M.), The Cat's-paw 6/0
Bindloss (Harold), A Sower of Wheat..... 6/0
Fenn (George Manville), The Cankerworm: being Episodes of a Woman's Life 6/0
Warden (Florence), A Fight to a Finish 6/0
Thomas (Bertha), The House on the Scar: A Tale of South Devon 6/0
Gissing (Algernon), The Wealth of Mallerstang: an Upland Tale 6/0
Meade (L. T.), A Stumble by the Way 6/0
Bennett (Arnold), The Grand Babylon Hotel: a Fantasia on Modern Themes 6/0
Lindsay (Harry), Judah Pyecroft, Puritan: A Romance of the Restoration 6/0
Crompton (J. Shaw), Max Thornton 5/0
Boyd (Mary Stuart), A Versailles Christmastide 6/0
Zola (Emile), The Joy of Life 3/6
Tytler (Sarah), Three Men of Mark..... 6/0
Mitchell (Edmund), Only a Nigger 6/0
Webber (Byron). Sport and Spangles 3/6
Grace (A. A.), Tales of a Dying Race 3/6
Sims (George R.), A Blind Marriage, &c. 3/6
"Sundowner," Told by the Taffrail..... 3/6
Werner (A.), Chapenga's White Man 3/6
Barr (Robert), The Adventures of a Merry Monarch 6/0

Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Wynne (Ven. G. R.), Spiritual Progress: a Book for Young Communicants..... 1/6
Cutts (Rev. E. L.), The Soul's Daily Audience of God: or, How to say our Daily Prayers..... 0/6
Day (Rev. E. Hermitage), Intercessory Prayer: Some Brief Considerations on 0/6
Bellars (Mary E.), Wise Saws and Modern Instances 1/0
Archbishop's Mission to the Assyrian Christians 0/4
Osborne (Rev. E.), Carew (Maud), Mallandaine (C. E.), and Reade (F. E.), Church Festivals and Fasts..... 2/0
Farmiloe (Edith), Little Citizens 4/0
Park (Carton Moore), The Child's Pictorial Natural History. Part I. 1/0
Fenn (G. Manville), Ching the Chinaman, and His Middy Friends 5/0

Digitized by Google

Chadwick (W. Edward), Ethel Hardman 3/6
Mallandaine (Catherine E.), "Like Cures Like" 3/6
Harrison (Frederick), From Playground to Battlefield..... 3/6
Daunt (Achilles). Out on the Llanos: Adventures in the Wilds of Colombia 3/6
Hollis (Gertrude), In the Days of S. Anselm 2/6
Hinkson (H. A.), Sir Phelim's Treasure 2/6
Cowper (Edith), "The Brown Bird" and Her Owners: a Story of Adventure off the South Coast 2/6
Bedford (H. Louisa), Her only Son Isaac 2/0
Mount (Adela Frances), Kitty 2/0
Allen (Phœbe), Mefeking Day: a Snapshot from Real Life 2/0
Lyster (Annette), One Woman's Work..... 2/0
Jacberns (Raymond), Robin 2/0
MacSorley (Catherine Mary), An Irish Cousin 1/6
Bramston (M.), Golden-Hearted 1/6
The Children's Campaign 1/6
Cartwright (John), The Chronicles of Durnford: a Public School Story 1/6
The Harvest of the Year; or, The Little Hop-Pickers..... 1/6
The Old Mill House at Alvermede 1/6
Price (Eleanor C.), Tina, The Wanderer..... 1/6
Radford (Beatrice), The Whispering Chair: a Story for Children 1/6
Curry (E. S.), A Girl's Resolve: a Story of To-day 1/0
Mallandaine (C. E.), In Luck's Way 1/0
Weedon (L. L.), Little John Cope: a Story of the Jacobite Rebellion of 1745 1/0
Smith (Rev. J. Kinchin), Out of the Depths: a Schoolboy's Story of St. Wilfrid's..... 1/0
Neale (Rev. J. M.), Tales of Christian Endurance 1/0
Coleridge (Christabel), The Real Thing: a Missionary Story 1/0
Blunt (Ellen M.), Jim's Temptation 0/9
Bettison (Rev. W. J.), Roses, Sweet Roses: A Story of Gentle Influence 0/9
Farmer (F. Lethbridge), Told by the Twins 0/9
Challacombe (Jessie), Faithful Pollie 0/6
Bettison (Rev. W. J.), Father's Man..... 0/6
Vincent (C. M.), Prayer Book Stories 0/6
Debenham (M. H.), the Roses of the Red House 0/6

The Clarendon Press.

NEW TEXTS, EDITIONS, &c.

Hall (Joseph), King Horn ..
Skeat (W. W.), The Lay of Havelok the Dane
Macaulay (G. C.), Complete Works of John Gower. Vol. IV.
Collins (J. Churton), Plays and Poems of Robert Greene...
Boas (F. S.), The Works of Thomas Kyd net 15/0
Bond (R. Warwick), The Works of John Lyly
Smith (G. Gregory), Elizabethan Critical Essays
Bridges (R.), Milton's Prosody
Stone (William J.), Classical Metres in English Verse.....
Chaytor (H. J.), The Troubadours of Dante
Bryce (Rt. Hon. James), Studies in History and Jurisprudence. 2 vols.....
Barnard (F. P.), An Antiquarian Companion to English History
Merriman (R. B.), Life and Correspondence of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex.....
Morris (J. E.), The Welsh Wars of Edward I. net 9/6

In addition to the above, the Clarendon Press Delegates announce many Greek and Latin texts, Biblical and Oriental texts and lexicons, and Biblical texts and studies.

T. & T. Clark.

Bigg (Rev. Charles), The Epistle of St. Peter and St. Jude: a Critical and Exegetical Commentary 10/6
Rainy (Rev. Principal R.), The Ancient Catholic Church...
Ball (W. E.), St. Paul and the Roman Law, and other studies on the Origin of the Form of Doctrine
Dalman (Prof. Gustav), The Words of Jesus
Hastings (Rev. James), A Dictionary of the Bible. Vol IV.
Le Camus (Right Rev. E.), The Children of Nazareth.....
Davies (Principal David Charles), The Atonement and Intercession of Christ 4/0
Lilley (Rev. J. P.), The Pastoral Epistles
Johnstone (P. De Lacy), Muhammad and His Power 3/0
Fairweather (Rev. W.), Origen and Greek Patristic Theology..... 3/0
Smeaton (Oliphant), The Medici and the Italian Renaissance
Murison (Ross G.), Babylonia and Assyria
Forrest (Rev. David W.), The Christ of History and of Experience 6/0
Robson (Rev. J.), Outlines of Protestant Missions.....

Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.

FIRST LIST.

The Works of William Shakespeare: in 20 imperial 16mo volumes with special coloured title-page and end-papers designed by Lewis F. Day, and a specially designed coloured illustration to each Play. The title-page and illustrations printed on Japanese vellum, cloth gilt, extra gilt top, gilt back, with headband and book-marker. To be issued at fortnightly intervals. Detailed prospectus on application each vol., net 2/6
Boswell's Life of Johnson: with an Introduction by Augustine Birrell. Illustrated with 100 Portraits selected by Ernest Radford. 6 vols. Sold only in sets.....net 36/0
The Novels of George Meredith. Pocket Edition. Printed on thin opaque paper, specially manufactured for this edition. Detailed Prospectus on application. 15 vols. each, net, 2/6 & 3/6
Wicksteed (Philip H.) and Gardner (Edmund G.), Dante and Giovanni del Virgilio: Including a critical edition of the Text of Dante's "Eclogæ Latinæ," and of the Poetic Remains of Giovanni del Virgilio... 12/0
Vallery-Radot (Rene), The Life of Pasteur. Translated from the French by Mrs. R. L. Devonshire. With frontispiece portrait of Pasteur. 2 vols..... 32/0
The Prevention of Disease: Prophylaxis in Surgery Operations, the Treatment of Fractures and Dislocation Wounds, Deformities and Tumours, Medicine and Insanity. By Dr. Bing, Vienna; Dr. Einhorn, New York; Dr. Fischl, Prague; Dr. Flatau, Berlin; and many others net 31/6
Nisbet (John), Burma Under British Rule, 2 vols.....net 32/0
Townsend (Meredith), Asia and Europe.....net 10/6
Brown (T. E.), Sermons
Haydon (Eleanor G.), Travels Round our Village: a Berkshire Book net 7/6
Stuart (John), Pictures of War 7/6
Wood (Walter), With the Flag at Sea 6/0
Meakin (Annette M. B.), A Ribbon of Iron 6/0
Morison (M.—Compiled by), Time Table of Modern History, A.D. 400-1870 net 12/6
Hope (W. H. St. John), The Stall Plates of the Knights of the Order of the Garter, 1348-1485 net 120/0
Rait (Robert S.), Five Stuart Princesses

FICTION.

Gallon (Tom), The Man that Knew Better: A Christmas Tale 6/0
Hewlett (Maurice), New Canterbury Tales..... 6/0
Machray (Robert), Sir Hector: The Story of a Scots Gentleman 6/0
Chambers (R. W.), Cardigan 6/0
Capes (Bernard), Love like a Gipsy 6/0
Sturgis (Julian), Stephen Calinari..... 6/0
Setoun (Gabriel), The Skipper of Barncraig 6/0
White (Stewart Edward), The Westerners 6/0
Merejkowski (Dmitri), The Death of the Gods 6/0
McLaws (Lafayette), When the Land was Young..... 6/0
The Works of Tobias Smollett. With Photogravure frontispiece to each volume. With an Introduction by W. E. Henley. Vol. XII completing the Series. 12 vols. Sold in sets only per vol., net 7/6

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

The Temple Bible (uniform with the Temple Shakespeare). 17 vols. each 1/0 and 1/6
Jerrold (Walter—Edited by), Thackeray's Prose Works. 30 vols. each, net 3/0
Waller (A. R.) and Glover (Arnold), Edited by, Hazlitt's Complete Works. 12 vols..... per vol., net 7/6

Digitized by Google

Glover (Arnold—Edited by), Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson. 3 vols. net 22/6
Ross (Janet), Florentine Villas net 63/0
Also an Edition de Luxe.
Hall (H. F.), Napoleon's Letters to Josephine net 7/6
Evans (Dr. Sebastian) and Goldney (F. B.), Lady Chillingham's House Party net 3/6
The Temple Classics:
Goldsmith's Poems 1/6 and 2/0
Goldsmith's Plays 1/6 and 2/0
Charles Reade's Peg Woffington 1/6 and 2/0
Dante's Purgatorio 1/6 and 2/0
The Temple Primers:
Northern Hero Legends 1/0
Northern Mythology 1/0
Manual of Greek Antiquities 1/0
Hill (Dr. Alex.) Primer of Physiology 1/0
Mediæval Town Series:
Wheatley (H. B.) London 3/6 or 4/6
Douglas (R. Langton), Siena 3/6 or 4/6
Poole (Stanley Lane), Cairo 3/6 or 4/6
Jameson (Mrs.), Shakespeare's Heroines net 5/0
Lohse (J.—Selected by), Petrarch's Familiar Letters ... net 2/6
Arabian Nights Entertainments. Lane's Translation. 6 vols. 21/0
The Temple Brontë: The Novels of the Brontës. 12 vols per vol., net 1/6 and 2/0
Dodd (A. F.), Short History of the English Colonies ... net 2/6
Nouvelles Normandes: a Selection of Jean Revel's French Stories net 1/6
The Temple Dickens: a Tale of Two Cities net 1/6 and 2/0
Shand (A. Innes), Shooting net 7/6
Stratton (Stephen S.), Mendelssohn net 3/6
Palgrave (M. E.), Mary Rich, Countess of Warwick ... net 4/6

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.

FICTION.

St. Aubyn (Alan), The Maiden's Creed 6/0
Griffiths (Major Arthur), A Bid for Empire 6/0
Campbell (Frances), Love, the Atonement 6/0
Gerard (Morice), A Black Vintage 6/0
Mann (Mary E.), The Fields of Dulditch 6/0
Crane (Stephen), Last Words 6/0
Holmes (Eleanor E.), To-day and To-morrow 6/0
Meade (L. T.), A Race for a Wife 6/0
Warden (Florence), Lady Joan's Companion 6/0
Mathers (Helen), Venus Vitrix, and Other Stories 6/0
Hume (Fergus), The Crime of the Crystal 6/0
Wadsley (Lucy Helen), Lady Algive 6/0
Russell (Dora), A Strange Message 6/0
Sulmalla (Countess de), Under the Sword 6/0
Fenn (Clive R.), For All Time 6/0
Diehl (Mrs. C. M.), Love's Crossways 6/0
Cleeve (Lucas), Mary Anne of Parchment Buildings 6/0
Rodney (H.), The Isle of Roses 6/0
Speight (T. W.), A Late Repentance 6/0
Middlemass (Jean), Fallen from Favour 6/0
Lampen (C. Dudley), O'Callaghan, the Slave Trader 6/0
Tytler (Sarah), I Restore Threefold 6/0
Langbridge (Frederick), The Calling of the Weir 6/0
Winchester (M. E.), The Heart of Youth 6/0
Bagot-Harte (Mrs.), In Deep Waters 6/0
Sadi Grant, Folly at Cannes 6/0

NEW EDITIONS.

Speight (T. W.), The Chains of Circumstance 3/6
Muddock (J. E.), In the King's Favour 3/6

Messrs Duckworth & Co.

Hastings (Charles), The Theatre: its Development in France and England, and a History of its Greek and Latin Origins net 8/0
Owen (J. A.) and Boulger (Prof.), The Country Month by Month net 6/0
Stephen (H. L.—Edited by), State Trials: Political and Social. Second Series. 2 vols. net 5/0
Tales from Shakespeare. By Charles and Mary Lamb. With 20 Illustrations by H. Pillé, Etched by L. Menzies. 2 vols. net 5/0
Guiraud (Jean), Saint Dominic 3/0
Puech (Aimé), Saint Chrysostom 3/0
Lepitre (Abbé Albert), Saint Antony of Padua 3/0

FICTION.

Kinross (Albert), Within the Radius: an Entertainment 6/0
Stevenson (Burton Egbert), A Soldier of Virginia 6/0
Prévost (Marcel), Frédérique 6/0
Prévost (Marcel), Léa 6/0

Messrs. Gay & Bird.

Bacon (Lee), Our Houseboat on the Nile net 6/0
Wiggin (Kate Douglas), A Cathedral Courtship. New and enlarged edition. Illustrated by C. E. Brock ... 3/6
Poe (Edgar Allan), The Raven net 3/6
Tennyson (Lord), The Lotos Eaters net 3/6
Ball (Reynolds), Paris in its Splendour. 2 vols. net 21/0
Clement (C. E.), Rome. 2 vols. net 25/0
Larned (I. N.), A Multitude of Counsellors net 7/6
The Bibelots:
Vol. XII. Chaucer's Canterbury Tales net 2/6
,, XIII. Essays of Sir Roger de Coverley net 2/6
,, XIV. Persian Love Songs net 2/6
,, XV. Hazlitt's Essays net 2/6
The Sportsman's Classics:
Vol. I. Walton's Complete Angler net, 1/6 and 2/0
,, II. Nimrod's The Chace and the Road, net, 1/6 and 2/0
,, III. Nimrod's The Turf net, 1/6 and 2/0
Bible Classics:
Vol. I. The Book of Job net 1/0
,, II. The Book of Proverbs net 1/0
Bacon (Alice Mabel), Japanese Girls and Women. New Edition. Illustrated by Japanese Artists net 7/6
Repplier (Agnes), The Fireside Sphinx net 6/0
Kennedy (S. B.), Joscelyn Cheshire 6/0
Briscoe (J. Potter—Edited by), Tudor Love Songs net 3/6
Books I Have Read. The publishers, feeling that many readers would like to have a neat and handy little volume in which to record their impressions of the various works they read, have prepared the above work. Each page is arranged with space for title, author's name, where read, &c. A nice writing paper has been selected, and the book is neatly bound in cloth gilt 2/0

Messrs. Charles Griffin & Co.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

Walton (Thomas), Steel Ships: their Construction and Maintenance net 18/0
Thomson (Capt. J. H.) and Redwood (Dr.), A Handbook on Petroleum: For Inspectors under the Petroleum Acts net 8/6
Naylor (W.), Trades West: its Treatment and Utilisation
Griffin's Metallurgical Series:
Rose (T. Kirke), The Metallurgy of Gold 21/0
Roberts-Austen (Sir W. C.), Introduction to the Study of Metallurgy
Harbord (F. W.) The Metallurgy of Steel
Beringer (C.) and Beringer (J. J.), Assaying: a Text-book of 10/6
Kerr (George L.), Elementary Coal-Mining: For the Use of Students, Miners, and others Preparing for Examinations
Kerr (George L.), Practical Coal-Mining: a Manual for Managers, Colliery Engineers, and Others 12/6
Lawn (James G.), Mine Accounts and Mining Book-keeping: with numerous Examples from Actual Practice 10/6
Pettigrew (W. F.), A Manual of Locomotive Engineering 21/0
Hurst (Charles), Hints on Steam-Engine Design and Construction net 1/6
Jamieson (Prof.), Steam and Steam Engines (Advanced) 8/6
Munro (John) and Jamieson (Prof.), Munro and Jamieson's Electrical Pocket-Book: for Electricians and Engineers 8/6
Fidler (T. Claxton), Bridge Construction in Iron and Steel 30/0
Rankine (Prof. Macquorn), A Manual of Applied Mechanics: Comprising the Principles of Statics and Kinematics, and Theory of Structures, Mechanism, and Machines 12/6

Digitized by Google

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

A SELECTION.

A NOVEL BY THE WRITER OF
"An Englishwoman's Love Letters,"
ENTITLED

A MODERN ANTAEUS.

Price 6s. [Ready immediately.

A CHEAPER EDITION.
Uniform with "The Origin of Species" and "The Voyage of a Naturalist."
2s. 6d. net.

THE DESCENT of MAN, and Selection in Relation to Sex. By CHARLES DARWIN, M.A., F.R.S. 1,060 pages. With Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready end of October.

A NEW WORK BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD,
Author of "The Light of the World," &c.

THE VOYAGE of ITHOBAL: An Epic Poem. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Just out.

". . . A fine, stately, well-poised, and well-managed poem. . . . An epic in a day when we were beginning to wonder whether epics would ever be written again."—Daily Telegraph.

". . . A masterly piece of work."—Glasgow Herald.

A NEW WORK BY S. R. CROCKETT,
Author of "The Stickit Minister," &c., &c.

LOVE IDYLLS. Uniform with "An Englishwoman's Love Letters." Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Just out.

"Mr. Crockett has gone back to his earlier manner—the manner of 'The Stickit Minister.' . . . Mr. Crockett has never written better than in these 'Love Idylls,' and whosoever is in search of a few hours' enjoyment in the shape of reading is confidently recommended to turn to this book."
The Dundee Advertiser.

FOUR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE SNARES of the WORLD. By Hamilton AIDE. [Just out.

THE WOOING of GREY EYES, and other Stories. By RICCARDO STEPHENS, M.B., Author of "The Prince and the Undertaker, and What They Undertook." [Just out.

THE CAVALIER. By G. W. Cable. [Ready next week.

THE ROAD to FRONTENAC. By Samuel MERWIN. [Ready next week.

MR. MURRAY'S HALF-CROWN NOVELS.
Uniform with "A Compleat Bachelor."

ANTONIA. By Jessie Van Zile Belden. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Immediately.

THE GATHERING of BROTHER HILARIUS. By MICHAEL FAIRLESS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Just out.

STRINGER LAWRENCE, the Father of the Indian Army. By Colonel JOHN BIDDULPH, Indian Staff Corps, Author of "The XIXth and their Times." With Portrait, Map, and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Just out.

JOHN CHINAMAN. By E. H. Parker, Professor of Chinese in Owens College; Consul-General in Corea, 1886-7; Consul-General in Kiung Chow, 1891, and in 1892-3 Adviser in Chinese Affairs to the Burma Government. Large crown 8vo, 8s. net. [Ready immediately.

This book consists of a series of anecdotes derived from the writer's own personal experience in China, and illustrating the character and customs of the Chinese in their social, political, religious, and commercial dealings among themselves and with other nationalities.

FINLAND AS IT IS. By Harry de Windt. With Map and numerous Full-page and other Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 9s. net. [Shortly.

AMONG THE POND PEOPLE. By Clara DILLINGHAM PIERSON, Author of "Among the Farm-yard People," "Forest People," &c. With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready next week.

THE GREAT PERSIAN WAR AND ITS PRELIMINARIES. A Study of the Evidence, Literary and Topographical. By G. B. GRUNDY, M.A., Lecturer at Brasenose College, and University Lecturer in Classical Geography. With Maps and Illustrations, demy 8vo, 21s. net. [Shortly.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

From C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S AUTUMN LIST.

"Exceptionally entertaining. . . . Not a dull page in it."—Outlook.

CYPRUS TO ZANZIBAR

BY THE EGYPTIAN DELTA.

T ADVENTURES OF A JOURNALIST IN THE ISLE OF LOVE, THE HOME OF MIRACLES, AND THE LAND OF CLOVES.

By EDWARD VIZETELLY.
With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, price 15s.

"One of the most charming and delightful records of travel and adventure we have had in recent years."—Glasgow Herald.
"Will be read with widespread interest."—St. James's Gazette.

THE ROMANCE OF RELIGION.

By OLIVE VIVIAN and HERBERT VIVIAN,
Author of "Abyssinia," "Tunisia," "Servia." With 32 Illustrations.
Demy 8vo, 6s.

"We can promise those who read this fascinating book that they will find something to interest them in every page. The 32 Illustrations add greatly to the value of a most interesting book."—Daily News.

HOW OUR NAVY IS RUN.

By ARCHIBALD HURD.
With an Introduction by LORD CHARLES BERESFORD.
With 33 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.
"Lord Charles Beresford recognises the value of Mr. Hurd's book by contributing a preface to it. It is a capital, popular book in simple, easily intelligible language, entirely free from dry technicalities."—Daily Telegraph.

THE MIGHTY DEEP AND WHAT WE KNOW OF IT.

By AGNES GIBERNE,
Author of "The Sun, Moon, and Stars," "Roy," &c.
With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [Now ready.

MOOSWA, AND OTHERS OF THE BOUNDARIES.

By W. A. FRASER.
With 12 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, price 6s. [Just Published.
This is a story for old and young alike. Animals which talk have, of course, a natural attraction for children, and the moral that is pointed is the necessity for kindness to animals. The Illustrations are exceptionally good.

FRENCH'S CAVALRY CAMPAIGN.

By J. G. MAYDON, Member of the Legislative Assembly of Natal
Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. [October 23.

LORD KITCHENER.

By HORACE G. GROSER,
Author of "The Life of Lord Roberts," &c.
With Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.
[Immediately.

PEARSON'S NEW RECITER AND READER.

Containing Choice Selections from the Writings of KIPLING, TENNYSON, BROWNING, W. S. GILBERT, MARK TWAIN, BRET HARTE, C. S. CALVERLEY, DICKENS, and many others.
Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

6s. NOVELS TO ORDER FROM THE LIBRARY.

THE STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE OF LADY DELIA. By LOUIS TRACY.

DON OR DEVIL? By WILLIAM WESTALL.

DAUNTLESS. By Capt. EWAN MARTIN.

MOUSMÉ: A Sequel to "My Japanese Wife." By CLIVE HOLLAND.

THE GODDESS OF GRAY'S INN. By G. B. BURGIN. [October 16.

WILLOWDENE WILL. By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE. [October 23.

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON, Ltd., Henrietta Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

Rawson (Christopher), Gardner (Walter M.), and Laycock (W. F.), A Dictionary of Dyes, Mordants, and other Compounds Used in Dyeing and Calico Printing net 16/0
Hannan (William I.), A Dictionary of Textile Fibres
Hurst (George), Garment Dyeing and Cleaning: a Practical Book for Practical Men 4/6
Hurst (George H.), Painters' Colours, Oils, and Varnishes: a Practical Manual 12/6
Wood (Francis), Sanitary Engineering: a Practical Manual of Town Drainage and Sewage and Refuse Disposal
&c., &c.

Mr. William Heinemann.

Armstrong (Sir Walter). Sir Henry Raeburn, R.A. (Uniform with Sir Walter Armstrong's "Life of Gainsborough") net 10/0
Helmolt (Dr.—Edited by), World's History (to be completed in 8 vols.).....each, 15/0; the set 120/0
Great Peoples Series:
Vol. I. The Spanish People. By Martin A. S. Hume 6/0
,, II. The French People. By Arthur Hassall ... 6/0
,, III. The Russian People. By J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly 6/0
The Regions of the World. A Series of Twelve Volumes descriptive of the physical environment of the Nations. Edited by H. J. Mackinder. Maps by J. G. Bartholomew:
Vol. I. Britain and the British Seas. By the Editor 6/0
,, II. The Near East. By D. G. Hogarth..... 6/0
,, III. Western Europe and the Mediterranean. By Elisée Reclus 6/0
,, IV. Central Europe. By Joseph Partsch 6/0
,, V. Scandinavia and the Arctic Ocean. By Sir Clements R. Markham 6/0
,, VI. The Russian Empire. By Prince Kropotkin
,, VII. Africa. By J. Scott Keltie..... 6/0
,, VIII. India. By Colonel Sir Thomas Holdich... 6/0
,, IX. The Far East. By Archibald Little..... 6/0
,, X. North America. By Israel C. Russell..... 6/0
,, XI. South America. By John C. Branner..... 6/0
,, XII. Australasia and Antarctica. By H. O. Forbes..... 6/0
Norman, M.P. (Henry), All the Russias net 15/0
Colquhoun (Archibald R.), The Mastery of the Pacific...net 15/0
Hinde (S. L.), The Last of the Masai net 15/0
Howells (W. D.), Italian Journeys net 42/0
Graham (R. B. Cuninghame), A Vanished Arcadia 9/0
Iwan-Müller (E. B.), Lord Milner and his Work net 15/0
Garnett (Richard) and Gosse (Edmund), An Illustrated History of English Literature. 4 vols.
Literatures of the World:
Vol. XI. A History of Modern Scandinavian Literature. By George Brandes 6/0
,, XII. Hungarian Literature. By Dr. Zoltan Beöthy 6/0
American Literature. By Prof. W. P. Trent 6/0
Latin Literature. By Dr. A. W. Verrall... 6/0
Provençal Literature. By H. Oelsner..... 6/0
Hebrew Literature. By Prof. Philippe Berger..... 6/0
Persian Literature. By Prof. Denison Ross..... 6/0
Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature. Translated from the Danish by Dr. George Brandes. In 6 vols.: Vol. II. The Romantic School in Germany.—Vol. III. The Reaction in France.—Vol. IV. Naturalism in England.—Vol. V. The Romantic School in France.—Vol. VI. Young Germany
Garnett (Richard). The Essays of an Ex-Librarian 7/6
Symons (Arthur). Poems.....
Arnold-Forster (E. P.), Poems Selected from Schiller..... 6/0
Gosse (Edmund), Hypolympia; or, The Gods in the Island: an Ironic Fantasy 3/6
Chambers (Haddon). The Awakening ...cloth, 2/6; paper 1/6
Marshall (R.), The Second in Command...cloth, 2/6; paper 1/6
D'Annunzio (Gabriele), Gioconda. Trans. by Arthur Symons 3/6

Fiction.

Parker (Gilbert), The Right of Way..... 6/0
Dudeney (Mrs. Henry), Spindle and Plough 6/0
Dawson (A. J.), Joseph Khassan, Half-Caste..... 6/0
Woods (Margaret L.). Sons of the Sword 6/0
Bowles (Mamie), Gillette's Marriage 6/0
Bateman (May), The Glow Worm..... 6/0
"Kassandra Vivaria." The Garden of Olives 6/0
Cook (T. A.), The Provençale 6/0
Wyllarde (Dolf), The Story of Eden..... 6/0
Maartens (Maarten), Some Women I have Known 6/0

New Editions.

The Works of Tolstoi. Library edition. 7s. 6d. each vol. Translated by Constance Garnett: 1. Anna Karenin.—2. Ivan Ilyitch.—&c.
Uniform Edition of the Novels of Matilde Serao:
The Ballet Girl, and On Guard, Sentinel..... 6/0
The Conquest of Rome 6/0
Sister Giovanna of the Cross 6/0
The Dollar Library of American Fiction:
Peake (E. E.), The Darlingtons..... 4/0
Flandrau (M. Macomb), The Diary of a Freshman ... 4/0
Lloyd (Nelson), A Drone and a Dreamer 4/0
Century of French Romance:
The Chartreuse of Parma. By Stendhal. Introduction by Maurice Hewlett..... 7/6
The Two Young Brides. By Honoré de Balzac. Introduction by George Moore..... 7/6
The Black Tulip. By Alexandre Dumas père. Introduction by Richard Garnett 7/6
Mauprat. By George Sand. Introduction by "John Oliver Hobbes"..... 7/6
Carmen; Colomba. By Prosper Mérimée. Introduction by Arthur Symons..... 7/6
Notre-Dame of Paris. By Victor Hugo. Introduction by Andrew Lang 7/6
The Romance of a Poor Young Man. By Octave Feuillet. Introduction by Henry Harland..... 7/6
The Lady of the Camelias. By Alexandre Dumas fils. Introduction by the Editor..... 7/6
Madame Bovary. By Gustave Flaubert. Introduction by Henry James 7/6
The Nabob. By Alphonse Daudet. Introduction by Prof. Trent..... 7/6
Renée Mauperin. By Jules et Edmond de Goncourt. Introduction by James Fitzmaurice-Kelly 7/6
Pierre and Jean. By Guy de Maupassant. Introduction by the Earl of Crewe 7/6

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton.

Dillon (Dr. E. J.), The Life of Tolstoi.....
Maclaren (Dr. Alexander), The Resurrection of Christ, and Other Sermons
Walker (Patrick), Biographia Presbyteriana. New edition. 2 vols.....net 25/0
Rainy (Rev. Principal), Volume of Sermons
Miller (Rev. J. R.), The Ministry of Comfort..... 3/6
Nicoll (Rev. W. R.), Sunday Afternoon Prayers: Collected from the British Weekly 3/6
Macgregor (Rev. G. C., The late), The Messages of the Old Testament, Genesis to Chronicles and Joel..... 3/6
Killen (W. D.), Reminiscences and Personal Experiences 6/0
Forsyth (T. P.), Religion in Recent Art, with Illustrations reproduced from pictures by Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, and Rossetti.....net 10/0
Thornton (G. M.), English Composition 2/6
A Gift Book for the Home: Poems by his Grace the Duke of Argyll, K.T., with Illustrations from the Old Masters, &c. 5/0
Clear (Claudius), Letters on Life 3/6
Bullen (Frank), The Apostles of the South-East 6/0
Black (Hugh), Culture and Restraint
Watson (John), The Life of the Master net 21/0
Jowett (Rev. J. H.), Apostolic Optimism, and other Sermons 6/0
Nicoll (Rev. W. Robertson), The Church's One Foundation; Christ and Recent Criticism..... 3/6
Dillon (Dr. E. J.) The Life of Tolstoi
Orr (Rev. Dr. James), The Progress of Dogma 7/6

Digitized by Google

Maclaren (Alexander, D.D.), The Resurrection of Christ, and other Sermons 5/0
The Pulpit Bible. By Dr. Parker. Original Notes and Comments on Holy Scripture from Genesis to Revelation net 35/0
Fairbairn (Rev. Principal), The Philosophy of the Christian Religion 12/0
Beet (Rev. Joseph Agar), The Immortality of the Soul: a Protest 2/0
Young (Rev. T. Dinsdale), Neglected People of the Bible 3/6
Neatby (W. Blair), A History of Plymouth Brethrenism... 6/0
Morrison (Rev. G. H.), Flood Tide; Sunday Evenings in a City Pulpit 5/0
Christian Study Manuals (Edited by the Rev. R. E. Welsh):
D'Arcy (The Very Rev. C. F.), Ruling Ideas of our Lord net 1/0
Margoliouth (Rev. Prof. D. S.), Religions of Bible Lands 1/0
Orr (Rev. Prof. James), The Early Church: its History and Literature 1/0
Miller (Rev. J. R.), The Story of Joseph 2/6

FICTION.

Maclaren (Ian), Young Barbarians 6/0
Connor (Ralph), The Man from Glengarry 6/0
Cook (Mrs. E. T.), The Bride's Book 6/0
Masson (Rosaline), Our Town 6/0
Ackworth (John), The Coming of the Preachers: a Story of Methodism 6/0
Wallace (Helen), The Greatest of These: a Story of the Covenanting Times 6/0
Sergeant (Adeline), Sylvia's Ambition 6/0
Eden (Fannie), Mark Strathmore's Renunciation 6/0
Le Feuvre (Amy), Cherry Tree: A Book for the Young... 2/0
Holdsworth (Annie E.), Great Lowlands 6/0
Davidson (Mary M.), Edward the Exile 6/0
Lyall (David), The Redemption of Neil Maclean 6/0
Halsham (John), Kitty Fairhall 6/0
Hocking (Joseph), O'er Moor and Fen 3/6
Keith (Leslie), Penance 6/0
Fowler (Edith Henrietta), The World and Winstow 6/0
Peterson (Maud Howard), The Potter and the Clay 6/0

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's.

Moore (J. E. S.), To the Mountains of the Moon net 21/0
Fielding (H.), The Hearts of Men net 10/6
Bernacchi (Louis.), To the South Polar Regions: Expedition of 1898-1900 net 12/0
Pommerol (Mme. Jean), Among the Women of the Sahara net 12/0
Grogan (Ewart S.) and Sharp (Arthur H.), From the Cape to Cairo: The First Traverse of Africa from South to North net 21/
Hopkins (Tighe), The Man in the Iron Mask net 7/6
Tweedie (Mrs. Alec), Mexico As I Saw It net 21/0
Miller (E. D.), Modern Polo net 12/0

FICTION.

Lyall (Edna), In Spite of All 6/0
Dawe (Carlton), Straws in the Wind 6/0
Cuninghame (Lady Fairlie), The Little Saint of God: a Heroine of the Red Terror 6/0
Tanquery (Mrs. Bertram), The Call of the Future 6/0
Whitby (Beatrice), Flower and Thorn 6/0
Headlam (Cecil), The Marriage of Mr. Molyneux 6/0
Hamilton (M.), Poor Elisabeth 6/0
Conyers (Dorothea), Bloom or Blight 6/0
Newman (B. Paul), The Story of Roger King 6/0
Smith (Constance), Corban 6/0
Marsh (Richard), Amusement Only 6/0
Hume (Fergus), The Mother of Emeralds 6/0

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

Smythe (Lilian), The Secret Correspondence of Marie Thérèse and the Count d'Argenteau net 24/0
Molloy (Fitzgerald), The Queen's Comrade: the Life and Times of Sarah Duchess of Marlborough net 24/0
Gerard (Frances), A Grand Duchess and Her Court ... net 24/0
Hole (Very Rev. Dean), Then and Now net 16/0
Coates (T. F. G.), Marie Corelli: the Writer and the Woman 6/0
Fletcher (J. S.), The History of the St. Leger Stakes 16/0
Griffith (George), In an Unknown Prison-Land net 12/0
Lorimer (Norma), By the Waters of Sicily net 10/6
Harmer (Ernest Geo —Compiled by), The Queen Victoria Birthday Book 3/6
Chapin (Anna A.), Masters of Music 5/0
Miles (Alfred H.—Edited by), The Tennyson Reciter 1/0
The Living Races of Mankind: a popular account of the customs, habits, pursuits, feasts, and ceremonies of the Races of Mankind throughout the world. By H. N. Hutchinson, J. W. Gregory, and R. Lydekker
The Living Animals of the World. In Parts. Vol. I. net 10/6
Wright (Arnold) and Smith (Philip), The Palace and Parliament of Westminster: the picturesque and romantic history of A Thousand Years in the Home of the Mother of Parliaments
Williamson (Mrs. F. Harcourt—Edited by), The Book of Beauty: Second Series. To be published by subscription

FICTION.

Moore (Frankfort), A Nest of Linnets 6/0
"Iota," The Happenings of Jill 6/0
Healy (Chris.), The Work of His Hands 6/0
Vizetelly (Ed.—Trans. by), The Monomaniac. By Émile Zola 3/6
Oxenham (John), Our Lady of Deliverance 6/0
Everett-Green (E.), Olivia's Experiment 6/0
Marchmont (A. W.), For Love or Crown 6/0
Sergeant (Adeline), The Marriage of Lydia Mainwaring... 6/0
Griffith (George), Captain Ishmael 6/0
Causton (J. F.), The Comedy of a Suburban Chapel 6/0
Gibbs (George), In Search of Mademoiselle 6/0
Kenealy (Arabella), The Love of Richard Herrick 6/0
Raine (Allen), A Welsh Witch 6/0
Francis (Marion), Where Honour Leads 6/0
Macdonald (Ronald), God Save the King 6/0
Bell (Lilian), The Expatriates 6/0

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. also announce that they have made arrangements for the publication of novels by the following well-known authors: Richard Whiteing, Jerome K. Jerome, J. A. Steuart, Wm. Le Queux, B. L. Farjeon, Tom Gallon, Joseph Hatton, Percy White, and A. W. Marchmont.

Messrs. Isbister & Co.

How (F. D.), Noble Women of Our Time 5/0
Jackson (Rev. George), Memoranda Paulina 3/6

FICTION.

Munro (Neil), The Shoes of Fortune 6/0
Coleridge (Christabel), The Winds of Cathrigg 6/0
Hare (Christopher), How Cynthia went a-Maying 3/6

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.

JUVENILE.

Norway (G.), Duance Pendray 3/6
Jacberns (Raymond), A Handful of Rebels 3/6
Abdy (Theodosia), Twinkling Stars 3/6
Browne (G. Waldo), The Hero of the Hills 3/6
Braine (Sheila E.), The King's Blue Boys: a Tale of the Giant Grenadiers of Prussia 3/6

FICTION.

Bain (R. Nisbet—Trans. by), Tales from Tolstoi 6/0
Primm (Perrington), Ivy Cardew 6/0
Jókai (Maurus), Halil the Pedlar 6/0
Jósika (Baron Nicolas), The Scourge of God 6/0
Dunn (Martha Baker), Memory Street 6/0
Fuller (Hulbert), God's Rebel 6/0
Dunbar (Paul Lawrence), The Sport of the Gods 6/0
Bazin (René), Autumn Glory 6/0
Lee (Albert), King Stork of the Netherlands 6/0
Ohrwall (S.) and Arnold (H.), Trans. by—The King's Ring, from the Swedish of Zacharias Topelius 6/0

Digitized by Google

NEW EDITIONS.

Wishaw (Fred.), Called Back to Tsarland: a Maze of Mystery, being the Hairbreadth Escapes of Boris in Russia while seeking his Lost Father 3/6
Gerard (Frances), The Romance of King Ludwig II. of Bavaria and his Fairy Palaces 6/0

Mr. Brimley Johnson.

Letters from John Chinaman net 1/0
Chesterton (Gilbert), The Defendant net 5/0
Baker (G. Howell), Penholm: Drawings net 10/6
Trevelyan (R. C.), Polyphemus: Poems.....net 10/6
Monkhouse (Cosmo, The late), Nonsense Rhymes net 2/6
Hills (Major-General Sir John, R.E.), Points of a Race-horse net 10/6
Carpet Plays:
Tarpey (W. Kingsley), Crabbed Age and Youth ...net 0/6
Snowe (Lucy), The Paying Guest net 0/6
Fitzgerald (S. Adair), The Parting and Waiting for the Train net 0/6
Cooper (Elise), Death or the Emperor, and A Sprig of White Heather.....net 0/6
Whitehead (Lucy), A Rustic Maid net 0/6
Black (Clementina), Kindergarten Plays net 0/6
Marshall (Archibald), The Babes in the Wood net 0/6
Fitzgerald (S. Adair), Birds of a Feather, and The Flower Fairies' Frolic.....net 0/6
Fillipi (Rosina), The Mirror net 0/6
Monkhouse (Cosmo), Pasiteles the Elder, and other Poems net 5/0
Ackroyd (Laura), Sonnets of Empire, and other Poems net 2/0

FICTION.

The Rainbow Garden. Written and Illustrated by Gratiana Chanter.....net 5/0
Keary (C. F.), 'Twixt Dog and Wolf 3/6
Pentreath (Dolly), Beneath the Moon net 4/0
Strafford (Mary), Mrs. Hammond's Children net 4/6
Chesterton (Gilbert), The Wonderful Story of Dunder Van Haeden

Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.

Gruggen (Rev. George) and Keating (Rev. Joseph), Catholic Colleges: a History of Stonyhurst 7/6
St. Maur (H.), Annals of the Seymours net 50/0
The Westminster Biographies:
Thomson (Clara Linklater), George Eliot.....net 2/0
Waller (A. R.) and Burrow (G. H. S), John Henry Cardinal Newman net 2/0
Ellis (W. Ashton), The Life of Richard Wagner. Vol. I. Translated and edited from the German of C. F. Glasenapp 16/0
Harris (Hon. W. T.), The Spiritual Sense of Dante's Divina Commedia 5/0
Wilmot (Hon. Alexander), A Manual of South African History 5/0
Janssen (Johannes), The History of the German People at the Close of the Middle Ages. 2 Vols. 25/0
Grimble (Augustus), Deer-stalking and the Deer Forests of Scotland net 21/0
Wynne (Ven. Archdeacon G. R.), The Church in Greater Britain net 5/0
Wanklyn (Prof. J. A.), Arsenic 2/6
Nickerson (Rev. D.), The Origin of Thought net 6/0
Paulsen (Friedrich), A System of Ethics net 18/0
In the Beginning: a study of the Origin and Antiquity of Man. Translated by G. S. Whitmarsh, from "Les Origines." By J. Guibert 9/0
Hylan (John P.), Public Worship: a study in the Psychology of Religion
The "Wolseley Series":
Epauchin (Col.) General Gurko's Advance Guard..... 10/6
Brinkley (Capt. F.), The Art of Japan net 150/0
Buckland (C. E.), Bengal under the Lieutenant-Governors net 31/6
Scott (J. G.) and Hardiman (J. P.), Gazetteer of Upper Burma and the Shan States. 5 Vols. 36/0
Munby (Arthur), Poems: Chiefly Lyric and Elegiac 5/0
Arnold (Sir Edwin), The Song Celestial; or, the Bhagavad Gita net 1/6
Tietkens (Ernest A.), The Heavenly Link: Poems 5/0
Hacon (Rev. Henry), The Incarnation, and other Poems net 3/6

FICTION.

Ross (John), Reversed on Appeal 6/0

John Lane.

Archer (William), Poets of the Younger Generation ...net 21/0
Meynell (Alice), Later Poems net 2/6
Fea (Allan), King Monmouth: a History of the Career of James Scott, the Protestant Duke, 1649-1685 net 21/0
Hill (Constance), Jane Austen: her Homes and her Friends net 21/0
Windle (Prof. Bertram), The Wessex of Thomas Hardy net 21/0
Ancient Royal Palaces in and near London. Twenty-four full-page Lithographs by T. R. Way net 21/0
Gibson (Charles Dana), The Widow and her Friends: Large Cartoons 20/0
Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám. Rendered into English Verse by Edward FitzGerald. With 12 Illustrations by Herbert Cole, and an Introductory Note by F. B. Money-Coutts net 15/0
Taunton (Ethelred L.), Thomas Wolsey: Legate and Reformer net 15/0
Thackeray (Rev. F. St. John) and Stone (Rev. E. D.), Edited by, Florilegium Latinum. Vol. II. Victorian Poets: Celebrated Passages mostly from English Poets, translated into Latin net 7/6
Sedding (John D.), Garden Craft, Old and New net
Grahame (Kenneth), Dream Days. Illustrated net 7/6
Watts-Dunton (Theodore), New Poems.....net 5/0
The Rubáiyát of Umar Khaiyyám. Done into English from the French of J. B. Nicolas, by Frederick Baron Corvo net 5/0
Ellacombe (Rev. Canon), My Vicarage Garden net 5/0
Milman (Helen), From the Heart of the Rose: Letters on Things Natural, Things Serious, Things Frivolous. Illustrated by E. H. New net 5/0
Skrine (Mary J. H.), The World's Delight..... 6/0
Allen (Grant—Edited by), The Natural History of Selborne. Illustrated by E. H. New net 5/0
Watson (Forbes), Flowers and Gardens..... net 5/0
Shakespeare's Songs. With 11 full-page Illustrations, a Cover-Design and Ornaments, by Henry Ospovat...net 3/6
Holmes (Edmond), Walt Whitman: an Essay.....net 3/6
Lounsbery (E. Constant), An Iseult Idyll, and other Poems net 3/6
The New Pocket Library (lambskin, 2s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net) (New Editions).
Vol. I. Adam Bede. By George Eliot net 2/0
,, II. Scenes from Clerical Life. By George Eliot net 2/0
,, III. The Warden. By Anthony Trollope.....net 2/0
,, IV. Barchester Towers. By Anthony Trollope net 2/0
,, V. Dr. Thorne. By Anthony Trollope net 2/0
&c., &c.

JUVENILE.

Sharp (Evelyn), Round the World to Wympland 5/0
Harker (Mrs. Allen), A Romance of the Nursery 5/0
Crane (Walter), Goody Two Shoes Picture-Book 4/6

FICTION.

Bagot (Richard), The Just and the Unjust: a Novel 6/0
Marriott (Charles), The Column: a Novel 6/0
Locke (W. J.), The Usurper: a Novel 6/0
Cobb (Thomas), Severance: a Novel 6/0
Stephenson (Nathaniel), They That Took the Sword: a Novel 6/0

Mr. John Long.

Clement (Hugh), In Heaven's Porch

FICTION.

The Curse of Eden. By the Author of "The Master Sinner" 6/0
Cleeve (Lucas), The Real Christian 6/0
Snowden (Keighley), Barbara West 6/0

Digitized by Google

ELKIN MATHEWS' LIST.

Announcements and Recent Publications.

CHRISTOPHER DEANE: a Character Study of School and College. By E. H. LACON WATSON, Author of "An Attic in Bohemia." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Immediately.

Mr. Watson's object in this book is to give as far as possible a faithful transcript from life at Winchester and Cambridge during the last quarter of a century.

"Another pleasant budget of essays is entitled 'An Attic in Bohemia,' by Mr. Lacon Watson. Mr. Watson preaches the comfortable doctrine of the desirability of loafing without being idle, and discourses with genuine humour and some philosophy. If the subject-matter is the obvious, the style is singularly fresh and graceful; it is always easy, without losing a pleasant literary flavour and without degenerating into slipshod slanginess. His humour is spontaneous (or seems to be so, because he has the art of concealing his art) and a trifle subacid at times, whereby it loses nothing in piquancy. Of the seventeen essays which make up this little volume, there is not one which does not contain some happy fancy, some quaint conceit, or some shrewd reflection."

Pall Mall Gazette on "An Attic in Bohemia."

CHILD-LIFE in ART. By ESTELLE M. HURLL. With over 30 Photogravure and other Plates after Velasquez, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, &c. Crown 8vo, 5s. Immediately.

"The poetry of childhood is full of attractiveness to the artist, and many and varied are the forms in which he interprets it. The Christ-child has been his highest ideal.....The influence of such art has made itself felt upon all child pictures."—PREFACE.

POEMS. By LILY THICKNESSE. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready To-day.

JAMES FLAUNTY; or, the Terror of the Western Seas (A Drama in the Old Skeltian manner.) By JACK B. YEATS. With Illustrations by the Author. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. [Immediately.

 The Illustrations in a few Copies will be Hand-Coloured by the Artist, price 5s. net each.

JUST OUT.
NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE ISLAND RACE. By HENRY NEWBOLT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Fourth Thousand.

Of the forty pieces in this volume, twelve appeared in "Admirals All," now in a Nineteenth Edition.

"Worthy to be put alongside the best ballad work of Tennyson are the ballads of Mr. Henry Newbolt....Good fighting stuff. The lines are full of fire, life, and vigour; they make the veins tingle and the pulses throb, and the upshot is that it is a magnificent thing to be an Englishman."—Mr. J. A. R. MARRIOTT, in Nineteenth Century and After.

ADMIRALS ALL. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. [Nineteenth Edition.

SONGS of LUCILLA. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Just ready.

"The author of these verses shows a very considerable power of writing. She has not merely the accomplishments of style and melody, but has a way of attacking her subject which shows real power—the power to think as well as to turn that wonderful verbal kaleidoscope which is the heritage of all the poets of this generation....[The poem 'A Drunken Satyr'] is full of the spirit of Keats, and suggests all through Keats' way of writing; but nevertheless it arrests the attention as only a poem of some originality can."—Spectator.

"We so rarely are able to enjoy the pleasure of recommending a volume of verse worthy to have and hold a permanent place on the bookshelves devoted to poetry, that we experience a double delight in pointing out 'Songs of Lucilla' as a book deserving of clapping hands and steadfast friendship...."

Literary World.

"He has a good power of word-painting, and his strength lying in this descriptive faculty, his gift is best seen in his poems on pictures."—Academy.

"The anonymous 'Songs of Lucilla' are all very short, but they make up a volume of considerable attraction. The sonnets are notable less for formal rectitude than for originality and force of expression, and in 'Loss and Compensation' and 'Heat Without Shadow' there is something more stimulating than the colourless competence of the merely accomplished sonneteer....Nature is usually approached with a vigorous fancy that, fresh and keen as it is, impresses more by the skilful use of fantastic analogy than by a direct impression. In 'Finis' there is a note of delicate and poignant sentiment, and many of these pieces have an epigrammatic aptness that is more than a mere ingenious conciseness."

Manchester Guardian.

LONDON, CITE LUGUBRE. A Portfolio of Etchings, By WILLIAM MONK, R.E. £5 5s. net. [Just ready.

POEMS. By C. J. W. FARWELL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready.

"Remarkable for brevity, taste, and a true interpretation of Nature and human life, conveyed in simple language and in metrical form both charming in its melody and in harmony with the subject treated. Many of the poems are of rare beauty, both in conception and expression."

English Churchman.

"In reading this little volume one is immediately arrested by the feeling that here is something new, something considerably above the average—in a word, poetry, and not mere verse."

British Weekly.

A SONG to DAVID. By CHR. SMART. With an Introduction by R. A. STREATFEILD. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. [Ready.

This poem was described by Rossetti as "the only great accomplished poem of the eighteenth century." Mr. Edmund Gosse also holds the "Song to David" in regard, and has written of it as "a portent of beauty and originality." For Browning's high estimate of the poem see Mr. Streatfeild's Introduction.

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo St., W.

Messrs. LONGMANS & CO.'s List.

With 6 Photogravure Plates (5 Portraits) and 15 other Illustrations. 8vo, 18s. net.

THE MYSTERY OF MARY STUART.

By ANDREW LANG. [On Wednesday next.

 This book is an investigation into the character of Queen Mary, and especially as to her relations with the Earl of Bothwell and the other murderers of her husband, Lord Darnley. The author has enjoyed the advantage of using authentic materials hitherto unknown to historians, namely, a number of the MSS. employed by Mary's enemies in getting up their case against her.

8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MAGIC AND RELIGION.

By ANDREW LANG.

 This volume contains a series of criticisms of recent speculations about early Religion, especially as regards Mr. Frazer's theories in "The Golden Bough." Other Essays deal with the latest results of Anthropological research in the religious field, and in that of Magic.

With 68 Full-page Plates. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE ART OF BUILDING A HOME:

A Collection of Lectures and Illustrations.

By BARRY PARKER and RAYMOND UNWIN.

With 6 Portraits (3 Photogravures) and 4 other Illustrations. 12s. 6d. net.

MEMOIRS AND LETTERS OF SIR JAMES PAGET, BART., F.R.S., D.C.L.

Late Sergeant-Surgeon to Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

Edited by STEPHEN PAGET, one of his Sons.

NEW BOOK BY MR. RIDER HAGGARD.

With 31 Illustrations from Photographs. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

A WINTER PILGRIMAGE:

Being an Account of Travels through Palestine, Italy, and the Island of Cyprus, accomplished in the Year 1900.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD. [On Wednesday next.

With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ARTS UNDER ARMS:

AN UNIVERSITY MAN IN KHAKI.

By MAURICE FITZGIBBON,

Classical Moderator and B.A. Trinity College, Dublin University; late Trooper and Sergeant-Major, 45th Company (Irish Hunt Contingent) Imperial Yeomanry.

 This is a history of the part taken in the Boer War by the Irish Hunt Corps from its formation to Lindley.

SIDE AND SCREW: being Notes on the Theory and Practice of the Game of Billiards. By C. D. LOCOCK. With Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [On Wednesday next.

WAGNER'S NIBELUNGEN RING, done into English Verse. (In two Volumes.) Vol. II. Siegfried, and the Twilight of the Gods. By REGINALD RANKIN, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "A Subaltern's Letters to his Wife," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

FÉNELON: his Friends and his Enemies, 1651-1715. By E. K. SANDERS. With Portrait. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ROADS TO ROME: being Personal Records of some of the more recent Converts to the Catholic Faith. With an Introduction by His Eminence, CARDINAL VAUGHAN, Archbishop of Westminster. Compiled and Edited by the Author of "Ten Years in Anglican Orders." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

 Among the Contributors are Lord Brampton (Sir Henry Hawkins), Sir Henry Bellingham, Bart.; Dr. Edward Berdoe; Monsignor Croke Robinson; the Bishop of Clifton; the Rev. Bede Camm, O.S.B.; Miss Adeline Sergeant; the Bishop of Emmaus; C. Kegan Paul, Esq.; the Rev. W. O. Sutcliffe; and the Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle.

THE VICAR AND HIS FRIENDS. Reported by CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D., LL.D., late Vicar of St. Mary's, Barnstaple. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [On Wednesday next.

 The Vicar and his friends in the pleasant evenings at the Bathscombe Vicarage discuss many subjects of the day, ecclesiastical, social, moral, literary, and theological; the speakers, both clerical and lay, varying the graver subjects by quiet humour and frequent digressions into popular natural history and elementary physical philosophy.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

THE MAN FROM BLANKLEY'S, and other Sketches. Reprinted from Punch. By F. ANSTEY, Author of "Vice Versâ," "Voces Populi," &c. With 25 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

Digitized by Google

Cameron (Mrs. Lovett), An Ill Wind 6/0
Warden (Florence), The Lovely Mrs. Pemberton 6/0
Fletcher (J. S.), The Golden Spur 6/0
Thomas (Annie), The Diva 6/0
Crommelin (May), A Daughter of England 6/0
Carrel (Frederic), Houses of Ignorance 6/0
Graham (Winifred), A Social Pretender 6/0
Dill (Bessie), The Lords of Life 6/0
Walker (William Sylvester), In the Blood 6/0
Cobban (J. MacLaren), The Green Turbans 6/0
Sergeant (Adeline), The Mission of Margaret 6/0
Morgan-De-Groot (J.), A Man of Iron 6/0
Pinkerton (Thomas), Blue Bonnets Up 6/0
Martin (Mrs. Charles), Miss Pauncefort's Peril 6/0
Lees (Robert James), The Heretic 6/0
Kernahan (Mrs. Coulson), No Vindication 6/0
Tytler (Sarah), Women Must Weep 6/0
Lees (Robert James), Through the Mists 6/0
Platts (W. Carter), Papa, Limited 3/6
Murphy (Nicholas P.), A Corner in Ballybeg 3/6
Reay (Marcus), Forbidden Paths 3/6
Amity (John), An Island Interlude 3/6
The Desired Haven. Anonymous 3/6

Messrs Longmans, Green & Co.

Parker (Barry) and Unwin (Raymond), The Art of Building a Home: a Collection of Lectures and Illustrations net 10/6
Kristeller (Paul), Andrea Mantegna net 70/0
The Recollections of Sir Edward Blount, 1815-1901. Jotted down and arranged by Stuart J. Reid, with portraits
Sheppard (Edgar), The Old Royal Palace of Whitehall
Lang (Andrew), The Mystery of Mary Stuart net 18/0
Paget (Stephen—Edited by), Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L. net 12/6
Skrine (Francis Henry), The Life of Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I.
Bowen (Rev. the Hon. W. E.), Edward E. Bowen: a Memoir
Maxwell-Scott (Hon. Mrs.), Henry Schomberg Kerr: Sailor and Jesuit
Gardiner (Samuel Rawson), Oliver Cromwell net 5/0
Oliphant (Nigel), A Diary of the Siege of the Legations in Peking during the Summer of 1900 net 5/0
Wilkins (W. H.), Caroline the Illustrious, Queen-Consort of George II. 2 vols.
Smith (C. Fell), Mary Rich (1625-1678), Countess of Warwick: Her Family and Friends
Allgood (Major-General G., C.B), Letters and Journals of the China War, 1860
Fitzgibbon (Maurice), Arts under Arms: an University Man in Khaki net 5/0
Lynch (George), The War of the Civilisations: being a Record of a "Foreign Devil's" Experiences with the Allies in China
Hamilton (Col. Henry Blackburne), Historical Record of the 14th King's Hussars from A.D. 1715 to A.D. 1900
Graham (Alexander), Roman Africa: an Outline of the History of the Roman Occupation of North Africa ...
Baillie (Alexander F.), The Oriental Club, and Hanover Square
Tallentyre (S. G.), The Women of the Salons, and other French Portraits
Rankin (Reginald), The Marquis d'Argenson, and Richard the Second. Two Critical Essays net 10/6
Creighton (Mandell), Memoir of Sir George Grey, Bart., G.C.B., 1799-1882
Whittall (Sir J. William), Frederick the Great on Kingcraft, from the Original Manuscript
Christie (Richard Copley), Selected Essays
Falkiner (C. Litton), Studies in Irish History and Biography
Lynch (H. F. B.), Armenia: Travels and Studies net 42/0
Fountain (Paul), The Great Deserts and Forests of North America net 9/6
Haggard (H. Rider), A Winter Pilgrimage: being an Account of Travels through Palestine, Italy, and the Island of Cyprus net 12/6
Fremantle (Hon. T. F.), The Book of the Rifle
Locock (C. D.), Side and Screw: being Notes on the Theory and Practice of the Game of Billiards net 5/0
Mackenzie (Captain Cortlandt Gordon), Notes for Hunting Men
"Slam," Modern Bridge net 3/6

Juvenile.

Lang (Andrew—Edited by), The Violet Fairy Book 6/0
Upton (Florence and Bertha), The Golliwogg's Auto-Go-Cart 6/0
Adelborg (Ottilia), Clean Peter and the Children of Grubbylea net 3/6
Murray (Hilda), Flower Legends for Children 6/0
Penrose (Mrs.), Chubby: a Nuisance
Messrs. Longmans also announce new books in Theology and Science and Technology.

Fiction.

Sheehan (P. A.), Luke Delmege
Howard (Lady Mabel), The Failure of Success 6/0
Levett-Yeats (S.), The Traitor's Way
Anstey (F.), The Man from Blankley's, and Other Sketches. Reprinted from "Punch" net 3/0
Rankin (Reginald), Wagner's Nibelungen Ring, done into English Verse 4/6

Messrs. James MacLehose & Sons.

MacLehose (Sophie H.), The Last Days of the French Monarchy net 6/0
Knight (Prof.—Edited by), Pro Patria et Regina: Being Poems from Nineteenth Century Writers in Great Britain and America net 3/6
Rawnsley (Rev. H. D.), Ruskin and the English Lakes net 5/0
Macdonald (George), Catalogue of Greek Coins in the Hunterian Collection in the University of Glasgow. Vol. II.
Nineteenth Century Art: as Exhibited in the Collection in the Glasgow International Exhibition, 1901, with a Critical Essay on the Paintings and Sculpture by D. S. MacColl, and a Supplementary Chapter on the Ivories, Bronzes, and other Art Objects by Sir T. D. Gibson-Carmichael
Scottish Historical Antiquities: as Illustrated in the Loan Collection in the Glasgow International Exhibition, with special articles on the history of Scotland by Joseph Anderson, LL.D., R. C. Graham, of Skipness, Rev. P. H Aitken, B.D., and others

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

The Life and Works of Charles Kingsley. Edition de Luxe, in 19 Monthly Volumes. Medium 8vo. Uniform with Tennyson, Lamb, Kipling, and Walter Pater. The Life will contain a portrait engraved on steel by C. H. Jeans, a photogravure of the bust by Woolner, photogravures of a portrait painted by Mr. Lowes Dickinson, and an etched portrait after the same artist. The Life will be reprinted from the original unabridged edition. The Edition is limited to 525 copies, 100 of which are for America. 10s. 6d. per vol. Complete sets only.
Strang (William), Thirty Etchings illustrating the Works of Rudyard Kipling 105/0
Bradley (A. G.), Highways and Byways of the English Lakes 6/0
Capes (Rev. W. W.), Scenes of Rural Life in Hampshire among the Manors of Bramshott
Stephen (Leslie—Edited by), The Letters of John Richard Green
Graves (C. L.), The Life of Sir George Grove
Fawcett (Mrs. M. G.), The Life of the Right Hon. Sir William Molesworth, Bart., M.P.
English Men of Letters Series (Edited by John Morley):
Lyall (Sir Alfred), Tennyson
Stephen (Leslie), George Eliot
Harrison (Frederic), Ruskin
Ainger (Canon), Crabbe
Birrell (Augustine), Hazlitt
Paul (Herbert), Matthew Arnold
Beeching (Rev. H. C.), Jane Austen
Dobson (Austin), Richardson

Digitized by Google

Wright (W. Aldis), More Letters of Edward FitzGerald ... 5/0
Alldridge (T. J.), The Sherbro and its Hinterland
Wood (Charles W.), Glories of Spain
Davidson (James W.), The Island of Formosa
Bury (J. B.), A History of Greece from the Earliest Times to the Death of Alexander the Great. 2 vols.
Harrison (Frederic), George Washington, and other American Addresses.....
Green (John Richard), Oxford Studies 5/0
Oliphant (T. L. Kington), Rome and Reform. 2 vols. ...
Johnston (R M.), The Roman Theocracy and the Republic
Browning (Oscar), Handbook of European History
Reich (Dr. Emil), Atlas Antiquus.....
Reich (Dr. Emil), New Historical Atlas for British History
Reich (Dr. Emil), New Historical Atlas for Modern History
Macmillan (Rev. Hugh), The Christmas Rose, and other Poems
Young (Sir George), Poems from Victor Hugo
Rendall (Gerald H.), Marcus Aurelius Antoninus to Himself.....net 2/6
Morshead (E. D. A.—Translated by), The House of Atreus: being the Agamemnon, Libation-Bearers, and Furies of Æschylus.....net 2/6
Foster (Sir M.) and Lankester (Prof. E. Ray), Edited by, The Scientific Memoirs of Thomas Henry Huxley. Vol. IV.
Howes (G. B.), Atlas of Practical Elementary Zootomy. Being a revised edition of the zoological portion of the "Atlas of Practical Elementary Biology"
Avebury (Rt. Hon. Lord), The Scenery of England and the Causes to which it is Due.....
Benson (Archbishop, The late), Addresses on the Acts of the Apostles
Hort (Rev. F. J. A., The late), Notes on Clementine Recognitions
Hort (Rev. F. J. A., The late—Edited by), Book VII. of the Stromateis of Clemens Alexandrinus.....
Chase (Rev. Dr.), The Credibility of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles
Selwyn (Edward Carus), St. Luke the Prophet.....
Menzies (Allan), The Earliest Gospel: a Historico-Critical Commentary on the Gospel according to St. Mark, with Text, Translation, and Introduction
Kenyon (F. G.), Handbook to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament.....
Beeching (Rev. H. C.), Inns of Court Sermons
Purchas (Rev. H. T.), Johannine Problems and Modern Needs
Macmillan (Rev. Hugh), The Corn of Heaven
Bayne (Rev. Ronald—Edited by), Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity. Book V.
Simpkinson (Rev. C. H.—Edited by), Laud's Controversy with Fisher
Sidgwick (Prof. Henry, The late), Philosophy: its Scope and Method
Baillie (J. B.), The Growth of Hegel's Logic.....
Hobhouse (L. T.), Mind in Evolution

JUVENILE.

Gilliat (Rev. E.), God Save King Alfred..... 6/0
Perry (Walter Copland), The Boys' Odyssey 6/0
Morris (Mowbray), Tales of the Spanish Main 6/0
Old King Cole's Book of Nursery Rhymes..... 6/0
Molesworth (Mrs.), The Woodpigeons and Mary 4/6
The Olde Irish Rimes of Brian o' Linn 2/6
Dearmer (Mabel), The Book of Penny Toys: Poems and Pictures 3/6
A Noah's Ark Geography 3/6
The Tale of the Little Twin Dragons 3/6

FICTION.

Kipling (Rudyard), Kim..... 6/0
The Benefactress. By the Author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden"
Crawford (F. Marion), A Maid of Venice 6/0
Crockett (S. R.), The Firebrand 6/0
Carey (Rosa N.), Herb of Grace 6/0
Castle (Agnes and Egerton), The Secret Orchard 6/0
Mitchell (S. Weir), Circumstance 6/0
Silberrad (Una L.), Princess Puck..... 6/0
Farquharson Mrs.), St. Nazarius 6/0
Gwynn (Stephen), The Old Knowledge 6/0
Sharp (Evelyn), The Youngest Girl in the School..... 6/0
Parker (Eric), The Sinner and the Problem 6/0
Benson (R. K.), A Friend with the Countersign 6/0
Merwin (S.) and Webster (H. K.), "Calumet 'K.'" 6/0
Hodder (Alfred), Heirs of Yesterday 6/0
Davis (William Stearns), God Wills It: A Tale of the First Crusade 6/0

NEW EDITIONS.

The Works of William Makepeace Thackeray:
Vanity Fair 3/6
The History of Pendennis 3/6
The Newcomes 3/6
The Virginians 3/6
Cook (E. T.—Compiled by), A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery. In 2 vols
Brink (Bernhard Ten), The Language and Metre of Chaucer. Second Edition
The Works of Richard Lewis Nettleship, Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford. Edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by A. C. Bradley, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, and G. R. Benson, of Balliol College, Oxford. New Edition. 2 vols. Vol. I.: Philosophical Remains. Vol. II.: Lectures on the Republic of Plato.....

Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.

Horton (Dr. R. F.), "Present Day Preachers" Series: The Trinity 3/6
Meyer (Rev. F. B.) "Present Day Preachers" Series: The Soul's Ascent 3/6
Meyer (Rev. F. B.), Friendly Counsels net 1/0
Stephenson, D.D. (Rev. T. B.), People's Order of Divine Service 1/6
Harmer (E. G.), The Story of Burma 1/6
Gregory (J. W.), The Foundation of British East Africa net 6/0
Fotheringham (James), Tennyson: an Introduction and a Critical Study net 6/0
Hughes (Rev. Hugh Price), The Morning Lands of History 6/0

FICTION.

Keith (Leslie), By Fancy Led. Illustrated 3/6

Mr. Elkin Mathews.

Lacon Watson (E. H.), Christopher Deane: a Character Study of School and College 6/0
Newbolt (Henry), The Island Race. Cheap Edition...net 3/6
Hurll (E. M.), Child Life in Art 5/0
Yeats (Jack B.), James Flaunty; or, the Terror of the Western Seas: a Drama in the Old Skeltian Manner net 1/0
Thicknesse (Lily), Poems net 2/6
Songs of Lucilla net 3/6
Monk (William), London Cité Lugubre: a Portfolio of Etchings net 105/0
Bridges (Guy), Sea Verse. No. 4 "Vigo Cabinet Series" net 1/0

Mr. Andrew Melrose.

Torrey (R. A.), How to Promote and Conduct a Successful Revival 3/6
Vance (James I.), Royal Manhood 3/6
Wells Prof. (Amos R.), 156 Children's Sermons 3/6
Lennox (Cuthbert), Henry Drummond: a Biographical Sketch (with Bibliography). net 2/6
Charles Haddon Spurgeon: a Biographical Sketch. By One who new Him Intimately.....net 2/6
Guthrie (William), The Christian's Great Interest 2/6
Trumbull (H. Clay), Prayer; its Nature and Scope..... 1/6
Told from the Ranks. Recollections of Service during the Queen's Reign by Privates and Non-commissioned Officers of the British Army. Collected by E. Milton Small. New Edition 3/6

Digitized by Google

Leighton (Robert), Under the Foeman's Flag. A Tale of the Spanish Armada 3/6
Eady (K. M.), The Boys of Huntingley: a Public School Story 3/6
Eady (K. M.) The Secret of the Fire Mountain: a Tale of the Solomon Islands 3/6
Groser (Horace G.), Out with the Old Voyagers 3/6
Boys of Our Empire 7/6

Messrs. Methuen.

Toynbee (Paget), Studies in Dante 10/6
Gibson (E. C. S.), The Life of John Howard 3/6
Lucas (E. V.), Lamb's Essays on Elia, with 70 Illustrations by A. Garth Jones 10/6
Firth (C. H.), Cromwell's Army: a History of the English Soldier during the Civil Wars, the Commonwealth, and the Protectorate 7/6
Morfill (W. R.), A History of Russia from Peter the Great to Alexander II. 7/6
Lee (Capt. Melville), A History of the Police in England. 7/6
Lambros (Prof.—Edited by), Ecthesis Chronica net 10/6
Engel (E.), A History of English Literature: From its Beginning to Tennyson 7/6
Innes (A. D.), A History of the British in India 7/6
Balfour (Graham), The Life of Robert Louis Stevenson. 2 vols. net 25/0
Cyres (Viscount St.), The Life of François de Fenelon..... 10/6
Fletcher (Ernest—Edited by), The Conversations of James Northcote, R.A., and James Ward 10/6
Haddon (A. C.), Head-Hunters: Black, White, and Brown 15/0
Baring-Gould (S.), A Book of Brittany 6/0
Lyttelton (Hon. Mrs.), Women and Their Work 2/6
Ditchfield (P. H.), English Villages 6/0
Paget (J. Otho), Sporting Memories 12/6
Seeley (H. G.), Dragons of the Air 6/0
Robertson (A.), Regnum Dei: the Bampton Lectures of 1901 net 12/6
Wade (G. W.), An Old Testament History 6/0
Keating (J. F.), The Agape and the Eucharist 3/6
Bigg (C.), The Imitation of Christ: a Revised Translation, with an Introduction 3/6
Barr (Robert), The Mutable Many /6
Duncan (Sara J.), A Voyage of Consolation /6
Marie Corelli's Christmas Number 1/0
Methuen's Sixpenny Library:
Gerard (Dorothea), The Conquest of London..... /6

JUVENILE.

The Little Blue Books for Children (Edited by E. V. Lucas):
Lucas (E. V.), The Visit to London. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford 6/0
Cobb (T.), The Castaways of Meadow Bank 2/6
Abbott (Jacob), The Beechnut Book..... 2/6
Hilbert (T.), The Air Gun: or, How the Mastermans and Dobson Major nearly lost their Holidays..... 2/6

FICTION.

Malet (Lucas), Sir Richard Calmady: a Romance 6/0
Craigie (Mrs.), The Serious Wooing..... 6/0
Jacobs (W. W.), Light Freights 3/6
Mason (A. E. W.), Clementina 6/0
Clifford (Mrs. W. K.), A Woman Alone 3/6
Phillpotts (Eden), The Striking Hours 6/0
Phillpotts (Eden), Fancy Free 6/0
Keats (Gwendoline), Tales of Dunstable Weir 6/0
Roberton (Mrs.), A Gallant Quaker 6/0
Croker (Mrs. B. M.), A New Novel 6/0
Hichens (Robert), The Prophet of Berkeley Square 6/0
Montresor (F. F.), The Alien..... 6/0
Norris (W. E.), The Embarrassing Orphan..... 6/0
Baring-Gould (S.), Royal Georgie 6/0
Raymond (Walter), Fortune's Darling 6/0
Gerard (Dorothea), The Million 6/0
Barlow (Jane), From the Land of the Shamrock 6/0
Rhys (Grace), The Wooing of Sheila 6/0
Gallon (Tom), Rickerby's Folly..... 6/0
Sergeant (Adeline), A Great Lady..... 6/0
Hamilton (Lord Ernest), Mary Hamilton 6/0
Oppenheim (E. Phillips), A Master of Men..... 6/0
Marsh (Richard), Both Sides of the Veil..... 6/0
Bartram (George), Thirteen Evenings 6/0
Watson (H. B. Marriott), The Skirts of Happy Chance ... 6/0
Cooper (E. H.), A Fool's Year 6/0
Burton (J. Bloundelle), The Year One: a Chapter of the Revolution 6/0
Cambridge (Ada), The Devastators 6/0
Chesney (Weatherby), John Topp: Pirate 6/0

NEW EDITIONS.

Carlyle's The French Revolution. Edited by C. R. L. Fletcher. 3 vols. each 6/0
Carlyle's The Life and Letters of Oliver Cromwell. With an Introduction by C. H. Firth, and Notes and Appendices by Mrs. Lomas. 3 vols. each 6/0
Macaulay's Critical and Historical Essays. Edited by F. C. Montague. 3 vols. each 6/0
The Works of Shakespeare:
Craig (W. J.—Edited by), King Lear 3/6
The Little Library:
Gwynn (S.), Christmas Books. By W. M. Thackeray. 2 vols. each, net 1/6
Gwynn (S.), Esmond. By W. M Thackeray net 1/6
Gissing (George), Christmas Books. By Charles Dickens. 2 vols. each, net 1/6
Griffin (W. H.), The Early Poems of Robert Browning net 1/6
Lucas (E. V.), Our Village. By Miss Mitford. (First Series.) net 1/6
Buchan (J.), The Compleat Angler. By Isaac Walton net 1/6
Lucas (E. V.), The Essays of Elia. By Charles Lamb. (First and Second Series.) net 1/6
Hutton (Edward), Steps to the Temple, and Other Poems. By Richard Crashaw net 1/6
Paul (H. W.), A Sentimental Journey. By Laurence Sterne net 1/6
The Novelist:
XXIII. The Human Boy. By Eden Phillpotts
XXIV. The Chronicles of Count Antonio. By Anthony Hope
XXV. By Stroke of Sword. By Andrew Balfour...

Mr. Murray.

Jose (A. W.), The Growth of the Empire..... 6/0
Stephens (Riccardo), The Wooing of Grey Eyes: and Other Stories..... 6/0
Arnold (Sir Edwin), The Voyage of Ithobal net 5/0
Bramston (Miss M.), The Sunrise of Revelation net 5/0
Chapters I. to IX. of Hallam's Constitutional History of England. Bound together in one volume for the special use of Candidates for the London University Examinations 5/0
Gamble (Rev. H. R.), Sunday and the Sabbath: The Golden Lectures for 1900-1 net 2/6
Biddulph (Colonel John), Stringer Lawrence: The Father of the Indian Army net 5/0
Benson (Rev. R. M.), The War-Songs of the Prince of Peace: A Devotional Commentary on the Psalter. 2 vols.....each, net 5/0
Cripps (Wilfred J.), Old English Plate: Ecclesiastical, Decorative and Domestic, its Makers and Marks. Special Illustrated Edition net 42/0
Robertson (Leslie S.), Water Tube Boilers net 8/0
The Correspondence of Lady Sarah Lennox, 1745-1826. 2 vols.....
De Windt (Harry), Finland as It Is net 9/0
Text-Books of Secondary Education:
Warren (Algernon), Commercial Knowledge: A Manual of Business Methods and Transactions... 2/6
The Works of Lord Byron: Letters. Volume VI.—1822 to 1824 6/0
Magnus (Laurie—Edited by), National Education: Essays towards a Constructive Policy
Bevan (A. Beckford), and Whitmore (Rev. H. B. Wolryche—Edited by), A Sailor of King George: Being a History of the Adventures of Captain Hoffman, R.N.
Smith (G. C. Moore—Edited by), The Autobiography of Lieut.-General Sir Harry Smith, Bart., of Aliwal, G.C.B. 2 vols.
Fremantle (Francis), A Doctor in Khaki: Impressions of War and of Hospital Work in South Africa

Digitized by Google

J. NISBET & CO.'S NEW LIST.

ROBESPIERRE.

A Study and Biography. By HILAIRE BELLOC, late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, Author of "Danton," "Paris," &c. Demy 8vo, 16s.

UNSTORIED IN HISTORY.

Portraits of some Famous Women of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. By GABRIELLE FESTING. Ex. crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHILDHOOD OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

By Mrs. GERALD GURNEY. Daintily bound, and Illustrated with several Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It has been left for Mrs. Gurney to lift a veil from the child-life of Queen Victoria, which enables one to get a knowledge of Her Majesty's education such as no previous biographer has been in a position to furnish."—Scotsman.

"Will be read with the deepest interest."—Daily Telegraph.

LORD ROBERTS.

A Life for Boys. By VIOLET BROOKE-HUNT, Author of "A Woman's Memories of the War." Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF LITTLE BLACK MINGO.

A Coloured Book for Children. By the AUTHOR of "THE STORY of LITTLE BLACK SAMBO." In decorative cloth binding. Super-royal 32mo, 1s. 6d.

New Fiction.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES.

By ANTHONY HOPE.

A New Series and New Edition, with Four New Dialogues, and with 8 fine Illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

NOTE.—A Special Presentation Edition, printed on large paper, of demy 8vo, size, with 18 fine Illustrations by Mr. Christy, and with a beautiful binding specially designed, 10s. 6d. net.

A UNION OF HEARTS.

By KATHARINE TYNAN, Author of "The Handsome Brandons," &c. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"It may be doubted if ever Katharine Tynan herself has written a more fascinating tale."—Scotsman.

"The tale is not only an entertainment, but an instruction in the complexities of Irish character."—Dundee Advertiser.

WHEELS OF IRON.

A New Novel. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "The Cleverest Woman in England," &c. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

ONE OF THE RED SHIRTS.

A Story of Garibaldi's Men. Written for Boys. By HERBERT HAYENS, Author of "A Fighter in Green," &c. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE KEY TO THE RIDDLE.

A Historical Story of Huguenot Days. By MARGARET COMRIE. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

Miss Comrie is a writer who is making a reputation as a writer of charming tales for young people.

DEBORAH.

A Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabæus. By JAMES M. LUDLOW, Author of "The Captain of the Janizaries," &c. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

WITH CUTLASS AND TORCH.

A Story of Adventure for Boys. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, gilt edges, 5s.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, London.

Mr. Heinemann's Publications.

THE LAST OF THE MASAI.

By SIDNEY LANGFORD HINDE (H.M. Collector British East Africa Protectorate) and HILDEGARDE HINDE.

With Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings. One vol., 15s. net.

A VANISHED ARCADIA.

By R. B. CUNINGHAME GRAHAM, Author of "Mogreb-el-Acksa," &c. One vol., 9s.

THE GREAT PEOPLES.

A New Series Edited by Professor YORK POWELL.

I. THE SPANISH PEOPLE.

Their Origin, Growth, and Influence.

By MARTIN A. S. HUME, Editor of "The Calendars of Spanish State Papers." One vol., 6s.

CHILDREN OF THE NATIONS.

A Study of Colonisation and its Problems.

By POULTNEY BIGELOW. One vol., 10s. net.

The Contemporary Review.—"A book on colonisation which may be commended for intelligence and sanity. Mr. Bigelow writes as one who has observed and studied the problems of empire."

GIOCONDA: A Play.

By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO. Translated by ARTHUR SYMONS. One vol., 3s. 6d.

THE SOUL OF A CAT.

By MARGARET BENSON.

With Photographs and Illustrations by Madame HENRIETTA RONNER. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE WORKS OF TOLSTOI.

Newly Translated by CONSTANCE GARNETT.

ANNA KARENIN.

With Portraits. Two vols., 15s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

GILBERT PARKER'S NEW NOVEL.

THE RIGHT OF WAY.

By GILBERT PARKER, Author of "The Lane that had no Turning," &c.

The OUTLOOK.—"'The Right of Way' is the right stuff—romance the royal. It is dramatic. It abounds in good things. It is a powerful and moving novel in which strong and natural situations abound."

THE ETERNAL CITY.

By HALL CAINE.

The St. James's Gazette.—"Interesting, characteristic, and highly dramatic. A stirring, warm-blooded story that one is sorry to have finished."

SOME WOMEN I HAVE KNOWN.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS. [Friday.

FOUR-LEAVED CLOVER.

By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Last Sentence."

The Athenæum.—"Brightly and pleasantly written."

LOVE AND HIS MASK.

By MENIE MURIEL DOWIE.

The Academy.—"A spirited story, with an unaffected tenderness that lingers in the memory."

FOREST FOLK.

By JAMES PRIOR. [Second Impression.

The Spectator.—"One of the very best and most original novels of the year. The characterisation is excellent, the narrative is crowded with exciting incident, and the author has, in addition to an eye for the picturesque, a quite peculiar gift for describing effects of light and colour."

A DAUGHTER OF THE VELDT.

By BASIL MARNAN. [Third Impression.

The Morning Post.—"Strong, clever and striking."

SISTER CARRIE.

By THEODORE DREISER. 4s. [Dollar Library.

The Academy.—"The book is thoroughly good, alike in accurate observation, in human sympathy, and in dramatic power."

THE DARLINGTONS.

By E. E. PEAKE. 4s. [Dollar Library.

The Athenæum.—"It is distinguished by a catholic sanity of outlook, a suave tolerance, and a remarkably keen and vivid insight into the minds and hearts of the human types with which it is concerned. The interest is alive and unflagging from beginning to end."

THE DIARY OF A FRESHMAN.

By CHARLES FLANDRAU. 4s. [Dollar Library.

Mr. Heinemann's Notes on some Forthcoming Books, Fall 1901. Post Free.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Digitized by Google

Hertslet (Sir Edward), Recollections of the Old Foreign Office
Grundy (G. B.), The Great Persian War and Its Preliminaries: A Study of the Evidence, Literary and Topographical net 21/0
Pierson (Clara Dillingham), Among the Pond People 5/0
Thatcher (Oliver J.), and Schwill (Ferdinand), A General History of Europe, 350—1900

FICTION.

Crockett (S. R.), Love Idylls net 5/0
Belden (Jessie Van Zile), Antonia net 2/6
Fairless (Michael), The Gathering of Brother Hilarius net 2/6
By the Writer of "An Englishwoman's Love-Letters," A Modern Antaeus 6/0
Cable (G. W.), The Cavalier: A Novel 6/0
Merwin (Samuel), The Road to Frontenac. A Novel 6/0

Messrs. Nelson & Sons.

New Century Library:
Complete Novels of Sir Walter Scott. 25 pocket volumes each, net 2/0
Complete Works of W. M. Thackeray. 14 pocket volumes each, net 2/0
Novels of Charles Dickens. 12 pocket volumes ready each, net 2/0
Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, the Holy War, and Grace Abounding 2/6

ILLUSTRATED WORKS IN GENERAL LITERATURE, TALES OF ADVENTURE, CHRISTMAS BOOKS, ETC.

Hayens (H.), For the Colours 6/0
Everett-Green (E.), In Fair Granada 5/0
Forester (F. B), Held to Ransom 5/0
Burnham (Hampden), Jack Ralston 5/0
Everett-Green (E.), For the Faith 3/6
Hayens (Herbert), Scouting for Buller 3/6
The Cape and its Story; or the Struggle for South Africa 2/6
Haverfield (E. L.), Jim's Sweethearts 2/6
Adams (E. Davenport), On Honour 2/6
Poynter (H. May), Madamscourt; or, The Adventures of a Fugitive Princess 2/0
Great Explorers 2/0
Two of a Trade 1/6
Synge (Mrs. Hamilton), Dickie 1/6
Cameron (Verney Lovett), Three Sailor Boys; or, Adrift in the Pacific 1/6
Douglas (M.), The Story of Alfred and His Times 1/6
Clarke (Mrs. Henry), A Lad of Devon 1/0
Glasgow (Mrs), The Queen's Shilling 1/0
Percival (Leila), Professor Archie 1/0
The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories for 1902 1/0
Gunn (J.), Sunday-school Teaching 1/0
Panorama of the Caledonian Canal 1/0
"Coronet" Series:
Everett-Green (E.), The Mystery of Alton Grange 2/0
Shenac 2/0
Pansy, Cut in the World 2/0
Bates (Katharine Lee), Rose and Thorn 2/0
Pansy, Workers Together; or, An Endless Chain 2/0
The Hermit of Livry 2/0
Tucker (Annie), Through the Gates 2/0
Reaney (Mrs. G. S.), Not Thrown Away, But Given; or, The Story of Marion's Hero 2/0
Pansy, Esther Reid 2/0
Prentiss (Mrs.), The Flower of the Family 2/0
Arthur (T. S.), Anna Lee 2/0
Milman (Constance), Aunt Sally 2/0
Everett-Green (E.), Gladys or Gwenyth? 2/0
Pansy, A New Graft on the Family Tree 2/0

Messrs. Newnes.

Hodder (Edwin), The Life of a Century: A Popular History of the XIXth Century net 10/6
Robinson (Commander Charles N.—Edited by), Britannia's Bulwarks. With coloured Illustrations net 10/6
Jekyll (Gertrude), Lilies for English Gardens net 10/6
Praga (Mrs. Alfred), How to Furnish Well and Cheaply 2/6
Bolton (Gambier), The Animals of the Bible 1/6
Manson (James Alexander), Valour for Victoria: Stirring Stories of Brave Deeds which have Won the Queen's Cross 1/6
A Souvenir Edition of Dr. A. Conan Doyle's Great Detective Stories. 3 vols., with specially designed cover, in ornamental case:
The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes. Illustrated by Sidney Paget. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt.—The Last Adventures of Sherlock Holmes. Illustrated by Sidney Paget. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt.—The Sign of Four: an Early Adventure of Sherlock Holmes. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt the set 10/6
Library of Useful Stories:
Pycraft (W. P.), The Story of Fish Life 1/0
Lindsay (B.), The Story of Animal Life 1/0
Frankland (W. B.), The Story of Euclid 1/0
Our Neighbours Series:
Dutch Life in Town and Country. By a Resident at the Hague net 3/6
Spanish Life in Town and Country net 3/6
Italian Life in Town and Country net 3/6

JUVENILE.

Sylva (Carmen) (The Queen of Roumania), A Real Queen's Fairy Book. With 20 Full-page Illustrations 6/0
Swainson (F.), Acton's Feud: a Public School Story 3/6
Mackie (John), The Heart of the Prairie 3/6
Munroe (Kirk), Longfeather the Peacemaker; or, The Belt of Seven Totems 3/6
Story (A. T.), The Boys of St. Elmo's 3/6
Bell (R. S. Warren), Tales of Greyhouse 5/0
Queen Mab's Fairy Realm: an Original Collection of Tales from the Literatures of England, France, Germany, and Spain. With 68 Illustrations 6/0
Graham (Winifred), Beautiful Mamma: a Collection of Stories about Children 5/0

FICTION.

Brooks (Noah), Lem: a New England Village Boy. His Adventures and Mishaps 6/0
Wells (H. G.), The First Men in the Moon 6/0
Donovan (Dick), Jim the Penman 6/0
White (F. M.), Tregarthen's Wife 6/0

Messrs. Nisbet & Co.

Belloc (Hiliare), Robespierre: a Study and Biography 16/0
Gurney (Mrs. Gerald), The Childhood of Queen Victoria 6/0
Brooke-Hunt (Violet), Lord Roberts: a Life for boys 6/0
Beacon (Robert), Folia Caduca net 2/6
Festing (Gabrielle), Unstoried in History: Portraits of some famous Women of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries 6/0
Parsons (Mrs. Clement), The Child at Home 0/6
Pierson (Rev. A. T.), The Modern Mission Century 10/6
Buckland (Rev. A. R.) and Mullins (Rev. J. D.), The Missionary Speaker's Manual 6/0
Torrey (R. A.), How to Work: a Compendium of Effective Methods of Work for Christ 7/6
Mackennal (Rev. A.), The Evolution of Congregationalism: being the Carew Lecture for 1900-1901 5/0
Murray (Rev. Andrew), The Key to the Missionary Problem 2/6
Torrey (R. A.), The Gist of the Lessons for 1902 net 1/0
Coldstream (John P.), The Power of a Quiet Life
Matheson (Rev. Dr.), Times of Retirement: a volume of Devotional Readings 3/6
Family Prayers for Four Weeks, by the author of "Daily Prayers for Busy Homes" 2/6
Murray (Rev. Andrew), Working and Waiting 1/6
Tuck (Rev. R.), Sermon Seed: Fifty-two Sermon Studies 6/0
Drury (Rev. T. W.), Two Studies in the Book of Common Prayer net 3/6
The Church Directory and Almanack for 1902 net 2/0

FICTION AND JUVENILE.

Hope (Anthony), The Dolly Dialogues 6/0
This will in future be the only edition of the Dolly Dialogues. It contains not only the dialogues published before in a more or less fugitive form, but also four new dialogues to complete the series; and the volume has been illustrated by Mr. Christy.
Tynan (Katharine), A Union of Hearts 6/0
Meade (L. T.), Wheels of Iron: a new Novel 6/0

Digitized by Google

Hayens (Herbert), One of the Red Shirts: a Story of Garibaldi's Men 6/0
Stables (Gordon), With Cutlass and Torch: a Story of Adventure for Boys 5/0
Comrie (Margaret), The Key to the Riddle: a Historical Story of Huguenot Days 5/0
Ludlow (James M.), Deborah: a Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabæus 6/0
The Story of Little Black Mingo, by the author of "The Story of Little Black Sambo" 1/6
The Illustrated English Library:
Hawthorne (Nathaniel), The Scarlet Letter 2/6
Hawthorne (Nathaniel), The House of the Seven Gables 2/6
Hawthorne (Nathaniel), The Blithedale Romance 2/6
Eliot (George), Adam Bede 2/6
The Boys' Holiday Library:
Ballantyne (R. M.), The Coral Island 2/6
Ballantyne (R. M.), The Golden Dream 2/6
Caine (O. V.), In the Year of Waterloo 2/6
Macaulay (J.), Strange Yet True 2/6
Stables (Gordon), From Ploughshare to Pulpit 2/6

Mr. David Nutt.

Henley (William Ernest), Hawthorn and Lavender, a Lyric Sequence; and Other Poems 6/0
Henley (William Ernest), Views and Reviews. Essays in Appreciation: Art net 5/0
Seton-Thompson (Ernest), The Lives of the Hunted ... net 6/0
Arthurian Romances Unrepresented in Malory. No. 4. Morien. Translated for the first time from the original Dutch by Jessie L. Weston net 2/0
Marie de France: Seven Lais done into English for the first time, with Introduction and Notes by Edith Rickert net 3/0
Shakespeare in Music: A Collection of the chief Musical Allusions in the Plays of Shakespeare, with an Attempt at their Explanation and Derivation, together with much of the Original Music. By Louis C. Elson net 6/0
Winslow (Helen M.), Concerning Cats. My Own and Some Others net 6/0
The Pleasaunt Historie of Lazarillo de Tormes, a Spaniarde, wherein is contained his marvellous Deedes and Life, drawen out of Spanish by David Rowland of Anglesey 2/6
Rae (W. Fraser—Edited by), Sheridan's Plays. First Printed from his MSS. With a Fragment of his Mother's Comedy, "A Journey to Bath"... net 10/6
The Year Book of the Holy Souls 3/6
Potter (Murray A.), Sohrab and Rustem. Grimm Library. Vol. XIV.
Popular Studies in Mythology, Romance, and Folk-Lore:
No. 11. The Mabinogion. By Ivor B. John net /6
No. 12. The Eddas; or, The Heroic Mythology of the North. By Winifred Faraday net /6
Willmore (J. S.), A Grammar of Spoken Arabic net 7/6
Chinnock (E. J.), Notes upon Julian

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

Whyte (Dr. Alexander), Bible Characters. Fifth Series. Stephen to Timothy 3/6
Smith (Arthur H.), China in Convulsion: the Origin; the Outbreak; the Climax; the Aftermath: a Survey of the Cause and Events of the Recent Uprising 21/0
Dennis (Rev. James S.), Centennial Survey of Foreign Missions 10/6
Martin (Rev. W. A. P.), The Lore of Cathay; or, the Intellect of China 10/6
Warneck (G.), Outline of a History of Protestant Missions from the Reformation to the Present Time 10/6
Rijnhart (Susie Carson), With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple 6/0
Prayers for the Christian Home net 7/0
Corwin (Charles E.), Onesimus, Christ's Freedman: a Tale of the Pauline Epistles 5/0
Fletcher (Rev. J. J. Kilpin), The Sign of the Cross in Madagascar 3/6
Scudder (Mrs. William W.), Nineteen Centuries of Missions 3/6
Hattersley (Mrs. Neil S.), Bonnie Loch Lomon' 3/6
"Famous Scots" Series:
Simpson (James Young), Henry Drummond net 1/6
Barbé (Louis A.), Viscount Dundee net 1/6
Wallace (William), The Statesmen of the Revolution net 1/6
Riach (Rev. W. Lyon), Naaman, the Syrian Soldier 2/6
Wilson (James Stewart), Ministerial Life and Work. Being a Series of Lectures on Pastoral Theology Delivered at all the Scottish Universities, under the Authority of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland 3/6
Macnaughtan (Rev. George D.), Two Hebrew Idylls. Studies in the Book of Ruth and the Book of Jonah 2/6
Bateman (Charles T.), Sir Thomas Lipton and the America Cup 1/0 & 1/6
Jordan (William George), The Kingship of Self-Control: Individual Problems and Possibilities 1/0
Hogg (Jessie F.), The Story of the Calabar Mission. Written for Young People /6

Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson.

Vizetelly (Edward), Cyprus to Zanzibar by the Egyptian Delta 5/0
Pemberton (T. Edgar), Ellen Terry and Her Sisters: an Authorised Biography 16/0
Roberts (John), Modern Billiards 6/0
Vivian (Olive) and Vivian (Herbert), The Romance of Religion 6/0
Pallander (Edwin), The Log of an Island Wanderer: Travels in the Southern Pacific 6/0
Stanley (Arthur), Patriotic Song 5/0
Hurd (Archibald), How our Navy is Run 5/0
Maydon (J. G.), French's Cavalry Campaign 3/6
Groser (Horace G.), Lord Kitchener 2/6
Marks (Montague.—Edited by), The Home Arts Self-Teacher net 7/6
Pearson's New Reciter and Reader 2/6
Football Who's Who, 1901-1902 1/0
O'Dell (Stackpool E.), Heads, and How to Read Them: a Popular Guide to Phrenology in Everyday Life 1/0
René (E.), Hands, and How to Read Them: A Popular Guide to Palmistry 1/0
Pearson's Fortune Teller 1/0
How Shall I Word It?: a Complete Letter-writer for Ladies and Gentlemen 1/0
Things a Woman Wants to Know 1/0

JUVENILE.

Berrey (Robert P.), Boys' Book of Bravery 5/0
Scott-Gatty (Mr. A.), Domestic Ditties 2/6
Scott (G. Firth), From Franklin to Nansen, Tales of Arctic Adventure 3/6
Fraser (W. A.), Mooswa, and Others of the Boundaries ... 6/0
Giberne (Agnes), The Mighty Deep and What We Know of it 5/0
Smith (G. Barnett), Heroes of the Nineteenth Century: Gladstone, Bismarck, Havelock, and Lincoln 5/0
Mr. G. E. Farrow's Books for Children:
(Messrs. Pearson have taken over the publication of all Mr. George Edward Farrow's charming children's books, and are now issuing them at a uniform price of 5s. each.)
The Wallypug of Why 5/0
The Missing Prince 5/0
The Wallypug in London 5/0
The Little Panjandrum's Dodo 5/0
The Mandarin's Kite 5/0
Adventures in Wallypugland 5/0
Baker Minor and the Dragon 5/0
The New Panjandrum 5/0

FICTION.

Sutcliffe (Halliwell), Willowdene Will 6/0
Burgin (G. B.), The Goddess of Gray's Inn 6/0
Martin (Ewan), Dauntless 6/0
Danvers (Clarice), A Stolen Opera 6/0
Hill (Headon), The Peril of the Prince 6/0
Holland (Clive), Mousmé 6/0
Westall (William), Don or Devil? 6/0
Tracy (Louis), The Strange Disappearance of Lady Delia 6/0

Digitized by Google

Religious Tract Society.

The Boy's Own Annual for 1901 8 0
The Girl's Own Annual for 1901 8 0
The Leisure Hour Annual for 1901 7 6
The Sunday at Home Annual for 1901 7 6
Creighton (the late Bishop of London), The Story of Some English Shires 6 0
Harper (Henry A), An Artist's Walk in Bible Lands 6 0
Lovett (Rev. Richard—Edited by the), Thy Heart's Desire. A Book of Family Prayers 6 0
Pike (Oliver G.), Woodland, Field and Shore: Wild Nature Depicted with Camera and Pen net 5 0
Friendly Greetings for the People 5 0
Moule (Rev. Handley C. G., Bishop-Elect of Durham), Thoughts for the Sundays of the Year 3 6
Mackey (Rev. H. O.), Points, Parables, and Pictures 3 6
Turner (Ethel), The Wonder-Child. An Australian Story 3 6
Hocking (Silas K), The Awakening of Anthony Weir ... 3 6
Le Feuvre (Amy), Heather's Mistress 3 6
Lyall (David), The Gold that Perisheth 3 6
Palgrave (M. E.), Deb Clavel 3 6
Johnson (Henry), Untrue to His Trust; or, Plotters and Patriots 3 6
Butler (Annie R.), By the Rivers of Africa 2 6
Vaizey (Mrs. George de Horne), More About Peggy 2 6
Giberne (Agnes), Anthony Cragg's Tenant 2 6
Stretton (Hesba), David Lloyd's Last Will 2/6
Doudney (Sarah), Lady Dye's Reparation 2/6
Keith (Leslie), Cynthia's Brother 2 6
A Happy Mothers' Meeting; and Other Addresses for Mothers 2 0
Cornwall (Nellie), The Hill of Fire 2 0
The Scripture Pocket Book for 1902 2 0
Beet (Joseph Agar), A Key to Unlock the Bible 1 6
Cornwall Legh (M. H.), Thorns and Thistles 1 6
Religion for the Heart; and Other Readings 1 0
The Pathway to Heaven, and Other Readings 1 0
&c., &c.

Mr. Grant Richards.

Henley (W. E —Edited by), The Edinburgh Folio Shakespeare. 40 parts per part, net 5 0
Corvo (Frederick Baron), Chronicles of the House of Borgia net 21 0
Hollander (Bernard), The Mental Functions of the Brain: an Investigation into their Localisation and their Manifestation in Health and Disease net 21 0
O'Connor Morris (W.), Present Irish Questions net 12/6
Hall (Maud R.), English Church Needlework: a Practical Handbook for Workers and Designers 10 6
Dawson (Rev. W. J.), The Man Christ Jesus: a Life of Christ 10 6
Hiller (H. Croft), Heresies. Vol. IV 7/6
Wall (Walter W.), British Railway Finance: a Guide to Investors net 6 0
Allen (Grant), County and Town in England: with a Chronicle of Churnside 6 0
Perris (G. H.), The Life and Teaching of Leo Tolstoy 6 0
Penn (W. A.), The Soverane Herbe: a History of Tobacco 6 0
Bennett (E. A.), Fame and Fiction: an Enquiry into Certain Popularities 6/0
"How To" Series:
Vol. VIII. How to Succeed in Your Examination. By George A. Wade 2/6
,, IX. How to Study English Literature. By T. Sharper Knowlson 3/6
,, X. How to Write an Essay 2 6
,, XI. How to Speculate in Mines. By Walter W. Wall 6 0
Robinson (E. Kay). To-day with Nature 6 0
Burnley (James), The Summits of Success 6 0
Raymond (Walter), The Idler out of Doors 6 0
Read (Carveth), Logic Deductive and Inductive 6/0
Johnson (Edward Gilpin), The Private Memoirs of Madame Roland 6 0
Russell (T. W., M.P.), Ireland and the Empire 6 0
Dearmer (Rev. Percy), The Parson's Handbook 5 0
The University Song Book net 4/6

JUVENILE.

The Larger Dumpy Books for Children:
Vol. I. The Six-Inch Admiral. By George A. Best 2/6
,, II. Holidays and Happy Days. By Hamish Hendry 2/6
,, III. Pillow Stories. By S. L. Heward and Gertrude M. Bradley 2 6
New Volumes of the Dumpy Books for Children:
Vol. VIII. The Pink Knight. By J. R. Monsell 1/6
,, IX. The Little Clown. By Thomas Cobb 1 6

FICTION.

Norris (Frank), The Octopus 6 0
Hornung (E. W.), The Black Mask 6 0
Bacheller (Irving), D'Ri and I 6 0
The Revised Edition of the Works of Count Tolstoy:
Vol. I. Sevastopol. Trans. by Mr. and Mrs. Aylmer Maude 6 0
,, II. Resurrection. Trans. by Mr. and Mrs. Aylmer Maude 6 0
Van Vorst (Marie and Bessie), Bagsby's Daughter: a Novel 6 0
Connell (F. Norreys), The Follies of Captain Daly: a Novel 6 0
Butler (Samuel), Erewhon Revisited 6 0
Bullock (Shan F.), Irish Pastorals 6 0
Valdés (A. Palacio), The Fourth Estate 6 0
Forsslund (M. Louise), The Story of Sarah 6 0
Steevens (Mrs. G. W.), A Motley Crew 6 0
French Fiction of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by A. R. Waller. With Preface to each volume by Arthur Symons:
Vol. I. Salammbô. By Gustave Flaubert. Trans. by J. W. Matthews net 3 6
,, II. The Latin Quarter. By Henry Murger. Trans. by Ellen Marriage net 3 6
Pain (Barry), Stories in the Dark 1/0 and 1/6

Messrs. Sands & Co.

Sladen (Douglas), In Sicily net 63 0
Lilly (W. S.), Our Great Vassal Empire 7 6
Santa Anna Nëry (Baron de), The Land of the Amazons. Translated by George Humphery net 16 0
Stone (J. M.), Mary I., Queen of England net 12/6
Nyrop (Dr. Christopher), The Kiss and its History. Translated by W. F. Harvey net 7 6
Doughty (Marion), Afoot through the Kashmir Valleys... 7 6
Rossetti (William Michael), Gabriele Rossetti: a Versified Autobiography net 7/6
Wallace (William)—Collected by, The Life and Reminiscences of Robert Wallace net 16/0
Montanaro (Lieut.-Col. A. F.) and Armitage (Capt.), The Ashanti Campaign of 1900 7 6
Coventry (W. Bulkeley), A History of Pont-y-tu-Prydd net 2 6
McSwiney (James), Translation of the Psalms and Canticles, with Commentary net 10/6
Wilberforce (Very Rev. Bertrand). A Devout Commentary on the Epistle to the Ephesians 3 6
Procter (Very Rev. J.)—Edited by, The Triumph of the Cross. Translated from the Italian of Fra Girolamo Savonarola net 5 0
Steele (F. M.), The Convents of Great Britain 7 6
Leslie (Rev. E. W.), A Catholic Guide to Westminster Abbey 2 6
Power (Rev. M.), Anglo-Jewish Calendar for Every Day in the Gospels net 5 0
The Thames at Dawn and Sunset. Drawn by E. M. Pike, described by Herbert Baker 6 0
The Seasons: Twelve Coloured Illustrations by Amy Sawyer 6 0
Colman (C. S.), Types of British Plants 6 0
King (Capt. Bastien), The Diary of a Dug-Out 1 0
Pratz (C. de), French Dishes for English Tables 3 6
Raupert (J. Godfrey), The Dangers of Spiritualism 2 6

JUVENILE.

Hassall (John), A Naval A B C 3 6
Carse (Roland), A Pantomime A B C 6 0
Aldin (Cecil), Ten Little Puppy Dogs 2 6
Wright (H. Seppings), Ships 2 6
Wain (Louis), Cats 2/6

Digitized by Google

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Rev. John Watson, D.D

THE LIFE of the MASTER. By Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D., Author of "The Mind of the Master," and "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," &c. With 16 Full-page Illustrations in Colours by an Artist sent specially to Palestine for the work. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, One Guinea net to Subscribers before publication. Prospectus on application.

Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D.

THE PULPIT BIBLE. Original Notes and Comments on Holy Scripture from Genesis to Revelation. By the Rev. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D. The Notes are printed in the margin of a handsome quarto Bible, specially printed in New Type and strongly bound in Persian Levant. Price to Subscribers before publication, 35s. Prospectus on application.

Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D.

THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION: Christ and Recent Criticism. By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

Rev. Hugh Black, M.A.

CULTURE AND RESTRAINT. By HUGH BLACK, M.A., Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Rev. Principal Fairbairn, D.D.

THE PHILOSOPHY of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION. By the Rev. Principal FAIRBAIRN, D.D. Demy 8vo, 12s., cloth.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A.

APOSTOLIC OPTIMISM, and other Sermons. By the Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A. (Birmingham). Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Rev. Alexander Maclaren, D.D.

THE RESURRECTION of CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

Rev. Joseph Agar Beet, D.D.

THE IMMORTALITY of the SOUL: a Protest. By the Rev. JOSEPH AGAR BEET, D.D. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth.

Rev. Prof. James Orr, D.D.

THE PROGRESS of DOGMA: being the Elliot Lectures delivered at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, U.S.A. By the Rev. Prof. JAMES ORR, D.D., United Free Church Coll., Glasgow. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

Rev. Dinsdale T. Young.

NEGLECTED PEOPLE of the BIBLE. By the Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

The late Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A.

THE MESSAGES of the OLD TESTAMENT. Genesis to Chronicles, including Joel. By the late Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

Rev. G. H. Morrison, M.A.

FLOOD TIDE: Sunday Evenings in a City Pulpit. By the Rev. G. H. MORRISON, M.A., Dundee. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

Rev. W. D. Killen, D.D., LL.D.

REMINISCENCES and PERSONAL EXPERIENCES. By Rev. W. D. KILLEN, D.D., LL.D., President of Belfast Presbyterian College. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s. cloth.

W. Blair Neatby, M.A.

A HISTORY of the PLYMOUTH BRETHREN. By W. BLAIR NEATBY, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.

THE MINISTRY of COMFORT. A New Volume of the "Silent Times Series." By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth gold.

THE STORY of JOSEPH. By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

TO-DAY and TO-MORROW. By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D. Christmas Booklet, fully Illustrated. Ornamental cover, 1s.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll.

A GIFT-BOOK for the HOME. Poems. By His Grace the DUKE of ARGYLL, K.T. With Illustrations from the Old Masters, &c. 8vo, 8s., cloth gilt.

Frank T. Bullen.

THE APOSTLES of the SOUTH-EAST. By FRANK T. BULLEN, Author of "With Christ at Sea," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Claudius Clear.

LETTERS on LIFE. By Claudius CLEAR. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON PRAYERS. Collected from the British Weekly. By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

Biographia Presbyteriana.

SIX SAINTS of the COVENANT: Peden, Semple, Welwood, Cargill, Cameron, Smith. By PATRICK WALKER. Edited, with Illustrative Documents, Introduction Notes, and Glossary, by D. HAY FLEMING, LL.D., with an Introduction by S. R. CROCKETT. In two handsome vols., royal 8vo, 25s. net.

Rev. P. T. Forsyth, D.D.

RELIGION in RECENT ART. By P. T. FORSYTH, D.D. With Illustrations reproduced from Pictures by Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, and Rossetti. Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

Charlotte Brontë.

JANE EYRE. By Charlotte Brontë. To which is added "The Moores." With Introduction by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D., Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Dr. E. J. Dillon.

THE LIFE of TOLSTOY. By Dr. E. J. DILLON. Crown 8vo.

Mrs. E. T. Cook.

THE BRIDE'S BOOK. By Mrs. E. T. COOK. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE RED LEATHER SERIES.

FIRST THREE VOLUMES. 12mo, 2s. 6d. each net.

Mary Wilkins.

CINNAMON ROSES.

Alfred Tennyson.

IN MEMORIAM. With a Commentary by L. MOREL, LL.D.

George Borrow.

ISOPEL BERNERS. The Text, with Index, by THOMAS SECCOMBE, Assistant Editor of the "Dictionary of National Biography."

CHRISTIAN STUDY MANUALS.

Edited by the Rev. R. E. WELSH, M.A.

Among the Early Volumes will be:—

RULING IDEAS of OUR LORD. By the Very Rev. C. F. D'ARCY, D.D., Dean of Belfast.

RELIGIONS of BIBLE LANDS. By Rev. Prof. D. S. MARGOLIOUTH, M.A.

THE EARLY CHURCH: its History and Literature. By Rev. Prof. JAMES ORR, D.D.

PROTESTANT PRINCIPLES. By Rev. J. MONRO GIBSON, D.D.

WITNESSES to CHRIST. By Rev. E. GRIFFITH JONES, B.A.

THE REFORMATION in ENGLAND. By Rev. J. D. McCLURE, LL.D.

THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. J. G. GREENHOUGH, M.A.

THE SCENES of OUR LORD'S LIFE. By Rev. Prof. WADDY MOSS, D.D.

The Series of Christian Study Courses is intended to serve a double purpose—(1) primarily to provide Manuals adapted for the higher religious instruction of Senior Classes, Guilds, Christian Endeavour Societies, and young students in Churches, Schools, and Colleges; and (2) at the same time to present to the general reader and the private student readable introductions to the study of Christian truth and history. One of the paramount needs of the day is the more thorough education of English youth in religious knowledge, abreast of the present advanced standard of secular education. Such an equipment is imperatively required as the best protective against current errors which flourish upon ignorance of Scriptural teaching and Christian history. These volumes, it is hoped, will not only meet existing wants, but will stimulate and extend the desire for such courses of study.

The volumes, each containing about 25,000 words, will be produced in compact and readable form. To come within the reach of classes and younger students, each is to be issued at ONE SHILLING NET.

Ian Maclaren.

YOUNG BARBARIANS. By Ian MACLAREN, Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." With 16 Full-page Illustrations by Harold Copping. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Ralph Connor.

THE MAN from GLENGARRY. By RALPH CONNOR. Author of "Black Rock" and "The Sky Pilot," Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Joseph Hocking.

O'ER MOOR and FEN. By Joseph HOCKING. With 6 Full-page Illustrations by Harold Copping. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

Edith Henrietta Fowler.

THE WORLD and WINSTOW. A Novel. By EDITH HENRIETTA FOWLER. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

David Lyall.

THE REDEMPTION of NEIL MACLEAN. By DAVID LYALL, Author of "The Land o' the Leal." Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Amy Le Feuvre.

A CHERRY TREE: A Book for the Young. By AMY LE FEUVRE, Author of "Live Tracy," &c. Illustrated. Fcap. 8vo, 2s., cloth.

John Ackworth.

THE COMING of the PREACHERS: a Story of Methodism. By JOHN ACKWORTH, Author of "Clog Shop Chronicles," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Rosaline Masson.

OUR TOWN. A Novel. By Rosa- LINE MASSON, Author of 'The Transgressors.' Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Annie E. Holdsworth.

GREAT LOWLANDS. A Novel. By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH (Mrs. Lee Hamilton), Author of "The Years that the Locusts hath Eaten," &c. Crown 8vo, 8s., cloth.

Adeline Sergeant.

SYLVIA'S AMBITION. By Adeline SERGEANT, Author of "The Conscience of Gilbert Pollard," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Sir George Douglas, Bart.

COUNTRY SKETCHES. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS, Bart. Crown 8vo.

Leslie Keith.

PENANCE. A Novel. By Leslie KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Maud Howard Peterson.

THE POTTER and the CLAY. By MAUD HOWARD PETERSON. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Mary M. Davidson.

EDWARD the EXILE. An Historical Novel. By MARY M. DAVIDSON Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

John Halsham.

KITTY FAIRHALL. By John HALSHAM, Author of "Idlehurst," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Helen Wallace.

THE GREATEST of THESE: a Story of the Covenanting Times. By HELEN WALLACE. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

Fannie Eden.

MARK STRATHMORE'S RENUNCIATION. By FANNIE EDEN, Author of "The Sins of the Fathers," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Our Indians 6/0
Stoney (T. Butler), The Brave Old Duke of York 2/6

FICTION.

Rita, Prince Charming 3 6
Kingston-Clarke (T.), Men v. Devils 6 0
Haultmont (Marie), The Marriage of Laurentia 6 0
Douglas-Thomas (J. D. M.), Of his Kin 6 0
Sandars (Newton), Concerning some Fools and their Folly 6 0
Gordon (Gertrude), The Case and the Cure 3 6
Wardase (Sydney), The Sacred Precincts of the Close 3 6
Albanesi (E. F.), Peter a Parasite 6/0
Barry (William), The Place of Dreams 3 6
Emanuel (Walter), Me and Some Others 1 0

Messrs. Sands draw attention to their "Book Lovers' Library" of standard works, mainly fiction (each volume 2s. 6d.), and announce a new edition of their "Pocket Falstaff Shakespeare," in forty volumes, price 9d. net each; in leather, 1s. 3d. net.

Walter Scott.

The Contemporary Science Series:
Zittel (Karl Von), History of Geology and Palæontology to the end of the Nineteenth Century 6 0
Jastrow (Morris), The Study of Religion 6 0
Sergi (Prof.), The Mediterranean Race 6 0
The Scott Library:
Mill (John Stuart), On Liberty 1/6
Rawlings (Gertrude Burford), The Discourse on Method, and Metaphysical Meditations of René Descartes 1/6
The Canterbury Poets:
Sketchley (R. E. D.), Poems by Alexander Smith 1/0
Archer (William), New Edition of Ibsen's Prose Dramas:
The League of Youth paper 1/6, cloth 2 6
Pillars of Society 2 6
A Doll's House 2 6
Ghosts 2/6
An Enemy of the People 2/6

NEW EDITION.

Ellis (Havelock), The Criminal. Third Edition 6/0
Geddes (Patrick) and Thomson (J. Arthur), The Evolution of Sex. Fourth Edition, completely revised 6/0
Starbuck (Prof.), The Psychology of Religion. Second Edition 6/0
The World's Great Novels:
Dumas (Alexandre), Marguerite De Valois 3/6
Dumas (Alexandre), Chicot, the Jester (La Dame de Monsoreau) 3 6
Dumas (Alexandre), The Forty-five Guardsmen 3 6
Dumas (Alexandre), The Vicomte de Bragelonne. 3 Vols. each 3 6

Messrs. Seeley & Co.

Benham (Rev. Canon) and Welch (Charles), Mediæval London net 5 0
Church (A. H.), The Chemistry of Paints and Painting. Third Edition 6 0
Dawson (Rev. E. C.), In the Days of the Dragons: Talks with Boys on some Subjects of Interest to Them 1/6
Ady (Mrs. Henry), Sacharissa: some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland 7/6
Shand (Alexander Innes), General John Jacob, Commandant of the Sind Irregular Horse and Founder of Jacobabad 6 0
Gilliat (Rev. E.), Forest Outlaws; or, St. Hugh and the King 5 0
Seeley's Eighteenpenny Series:
The Life of a Bear. New Edition 1/6
The Life of an Elephant. New Edition 1 6
Only a Dog. New Edition 1/6

FICTION.

Marshall (Beatrice), Old Blackfriars 5 0
"Brown Linnet," The Widow Wiley, and Other Old Folk 5 0
Gaye (Selina), Coming; or, the Golden Year: a Tale 5/0

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

Supplementary Volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography. Vols. I. to III. each 15/0

These volumes comprise the lives of those eligible for inclusion in the Dictionary who died during the progress of its publication, and subsequently down to and including the death of H.M. Queen Victoria. Volume I. also contains a Memoir, with portrait, of Mr. George M. Smith, the founder and proprietor of the work.

Fitchett (W. H.), The Tale of the Great Mutiny 6 0
O'Brien (R. Barry), The Life of Lord Russell of Killowen 10/6
Bullen (Frank T.), Deep Sea Plunderings: a Collection of Stories of the Sea 6/0
Shand (Alexander Innes), Wellington's Lieutenants 6/0
The Poetical Works of Robert Bridges 6 0
Lee (Sidney), The Life of H.M. Queen Victoria
Evans (Robley D.), A Sailor's Log 8 6
Broome (Lady), Colonial Memories 7/6
Provincial Letters. By the Author of "Pages from a Private Diary," "Conferences on Books and Men," &c. 6/0
Ritchie (Mrs. Richmond), Blackstick Papers. Reprinted from the "Cornhill Magazine"
Family Budgets
A Londoner's Log-Book 6/0
Newdigate-Newdegate (Lady), Cavalier and Puritan in the Days of the Stuarts 7/6
Paul (Herbert W.), Mr. Gladstone: an Abstract and Brief Chronicle of his Life 7 6
Long (James), The Small Farm and its Management 6/0
Julicher (Prof. A.), An Introduction to the New Testament Translated by Miss Janet Ward. With a Preface by Mrs. Humphry Ward
Barlow (Miss Jane), Ghost-Bereft and Other Stories and Studies in Verse net 3/6

FICTION.

Merriman (H. S.), The Velvet Glove 6 0
Weyman (Stanley J.), Count Hannibal 6 0
Jewett (Sarah Orne), The Tory Lover 6 0
Burnett (Frances Hodgson), The Making of a Marchioness 6 0
Robertson (Morgan), Richard Halpin: a Romance of the New Navy 6/0
Vogel (H. B.), Gentleman Garnet: a Tale of Old Tasmania 6/0

Messrs. Sonnenschein & Co.

Meakin (Budgett), The Moors. Vol. III.
Tschudi (C.), The Empress Elizabeth of Austria
Cornish (F. W.), Chivalry
Powell (H.), A Social History of the Victorian Era
Albee (Prof.), History of Utilitarianism
Lutzow (Count—Edited by), Comenius's Labyrinth of the World and Paradise of the Heart
Bullock (A. B.—Translated by), Schopenhauer's Essay on Morality
Wilkins (Rev. W. J.), Paganism in the Christian Church
Brooke (Rev. C. W. A), Alternative Hymn Tunes
Grant-Duff (Sir M. E.), The Victorian Anthology
Clavière (R. de M. la), The Art of Life
Baker (E. A.), A Descriptive Guide to the Best English Fiction
Mallett (R.), Poems

The Sunday School Union.

Cule (W. E.), The Captain's Fags: a School Story 1/6
Clarke (Mrs. Henry), Into Stormy Waters: a Story for Girls 1 6
Vaughan (Gertrude E. M.), The New Playfellow 1/0
Macdonald (E. A.), Stories from the Pilgrim's Progress ... 1 0
Witts (Florence), The Story of Catherine of Siena 1 0
Pengelly (R. Ed.), Lord Shaftesbury: Peer and Philanthropist 1 0
Edwards (Walter N.), How to be Well and Strong: Boys' Book of Health 1 0
Hamilton (Rev. J. Miller), Newton Jones: His Life Story and Service for Christ 1/0
Haycraft (Margaret S.), Geordie's Victory 0 9
Chappell (Jennie), Marley's Boy 0/9

Digitized by Google

The Endeavour Greeting: a Manual of Information and Suggestion for New Members 1 0
The "Endeavour" Library:
Leslie (Emma), Constantia's Household 2 0
Vennell (Rev. Rabson), Driven into the Ranks: £100 Prize Temperance Tale 2 0
Edwards (Edith M.), Marion Harling's Awakening... 2 0
Scott (Sir Walter), The Monastery 2 0
Scott (Sir Walter), The Abbott 2 0
Scott (Sir Walter), Ivanhoe 2 0
Swan (Annie S.), Ursula Vivian: the Sister Mother... 2 0
Swan (Annie S.), Carlowrie; or, Among Lothian Folk 2/0
Chadwick (W. E.), In Fellowship..... 2/0
Banks (Mrs. G. Linnæus), The Making of William Edwards 2/0
Paull (M. A.), Benjamin Holbeck: a Story of the Siege of Plymouth during the Civil War 2 0

Besides the above, many Sunday School Diaries, Class Registers, &c.

Messrs. Skeffington.

Holloway (Rev. H.), The Confirmation and Communion of Infants and Young Children 5/0
Glanville (Rev. J. U.), The Acrostic Poems of the Old Testament.....net 2/0
Buxton (Rev. H. J. Wilmot), In Many Keys: Thirty Sermons on Thirty Psalms 5/0
Corbett (Rev. F. St. John), A Thousand Things to Say in Sermons net 5/0
Skrine (Canon J. H.), Saints and Worthies..... 3/6
Mills (Rev. Barton R. V.), The Marks of the Church 5/0
Stone (The late Rev. S. J.), Parochial Sermons..... 4/0
Pemberton (Rev. J. H.—Edited by), The Coronation Service, according to the Use of the Church of England net 2/0
Holden (Rev. H. W.), Justification by Faith 2/6
Holden (Rev. H. W.), Guidance for Men 3/0
Holden (Rev. H. W.), Testifyings and Pleadings 4/0
Holden (Rev. H. W.), Grace and Calling 2/0
Meyrick (Canon F.), Old Anglicanism and Modern Ritualism 5/0
Freeman (Flora L.), Religious and Social Work amongst Girls net 2/6
Stewart (The late Rev. Henry), Outline Lessons on the Church Catechism 2/0
Potter (Rev. J. Hasloch) and Sheard (Rev. A. E. W.), Catechizings for Church and Sunday-school.....net 2/0
Wynne (May), Sympathy 1/0
Galton (Arthur), The Catholicity of the Reformed Church of England..... 0/6
Galton (Arthur), The Protestantism of the Reformed and Catholic Church in England 0/6

FICTION.

Davies (A. J.), Athirt the Downs 2/6

JUVENILE.

Lucas (F. Lancaster), The Fish Crown in Dispute 3/6
Lloyd (Marguerite), The Lily Princess 2/6

Messrs. W. Thacker & Co.

Selected Speeches by H.E. the Right Hon. Lord Curzon of Kendelston, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, 1898-1901.....net 7/6
Keene (H. G.), The Great Anarchy: Sketches of Military Adventure in Hindustan during the period immediately preceding British Occupation.....net 6/0
Pillai (G. P.), Representative Indians: Short Biographies of Forty native Indian Statesmen, Philanthropists, Jurists, Scholars, Social and Political Reformers, Journalists, and others
Whyte-Melville's Works (Edition de luxe):
The Gladiator.....
Good for Nothing.....
The Interpreter.....
Completing the Set. 24 vols. 252/0

NEW EDITIONS.

O'Donoghue (Mrs. Power), Riding for Ladies 10/6

Unicorn Press.

The Artists' Library:
Holmes (C. J.), Constable
Cust (Lionel), Van Dyck. 2 vols.
Weale (Frances C.), The Van Eyck
Little Engravings:
Moore (T. Sturge—Edited by), Altdorfer: Reproductions of the Whole of his Woodcuts
Binyon (Laurence—Edited by), Blake.....
Fisher (A. Hugh—Edited by), Jean François Mille ...
Berridge (Jesse), The White Altar.....
Turnbull (Monica Peveril), A Short Day's Work
Whitby (C. J.), The Ness King
Bowles (F. Y.), Songs of Yesterday.....
Bottomley (Gordon), The Crier by Night
"Israfel," A Book of Beasts
The Letters of a Portuguese Nun
Crosland (T. W. H.), A Book of Parables

FICTION.

Goldie (T. Inglis), The Heart of a Caprice
Holmes (Arthur H.), The Voice of the World

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

Villari (Prof. Pasquale), The Barbarian Invasion of Italy. 2 vols. 32/0
The Confessions of a Caricaturist; being the Autobiography of Harry Furniss. 2 vols. 32/0
Villari (Luigi—Edited by), Giovanni Segantini: his Life and Work net 21/0
Tuin (W. J.) and Veldheer (J. G.), Old Dutch Towns and Villages of the Zuiderzee..... 21/0
Little (Mrs. Archibald), In the Land of the Blue Gown, net 21/0
Chevalier (Albert), Before I Forget: being the Autobiography of a Chevalier d'Industrie net 16/0
Theal (Dr. G. M.), The Beginning of South African History 16/0
Dodge (Walter Phelps), From Squire to Prince: being the Rise of the House of Aiksena..... 10/6
Ober (Frederick A.), Josephine, Empress of the French, net 7/6
Walker (H. de R.), The West Indies and the Empire: Study and Travel in the Winter of 1900-01 net 7/6
Caeseresco (Countess Martinengo), Italian Characters in the Epoch of Unification..... 7/6
Robinson (Mary), The Collected Poems of 7/6
Villari (Prof. Pasquale), History of Florence..... 7/6
Armstrong (R. A.), Makers of the Nineteenth Century, net 3/6
Siam (Crown Prince of), The War of the Polish Succession net 3/6
Hill (Edmund L.), Alfred the Great: a Play in Three Acts, Wrought in Blank Verse.....net 2/6
Molesworth (Mrs.), The Blue Baby, and Other Stories ... 2/6
Hobbes (John Oliver), A New Haymarket Play net 3/6
Taylor (Ellen), A Thousand Pities..... 2/6
The Heart of the Empire: Studies in Problems of Modern City Life in England 7/6
Deasy (Capt. H. H. P.), In Tibet and Chinese Turkestan: being the Record of Three Years' Exploration.....net 6/0

FICTION.

Rita, A Jilt's Journal 6/0
Stacpoole (H. de Vere), The Bourgeois 6/0
Barr (Amelia E.), The Lion's Whelp 6/0
Alexander (Mrs.), The Yellow Fiend 6/0
Up from Slavery: the Autobiography of Booker T. Washington net 6/0
Reid (G. Archdall), Alcoholism: a Study in Heredity...net 6/0
Arnold (Mrs. S. G.), Two Busybodies 6/0
Becke (Louis), Yorke the Adventurer, and Other Tales ... 6/0
Crockett (S. R.), Cinderella 6/0
Fraser (Mrs.), The Saving Child 6/0
Baker (James), A Double Choice 6/0
Amber (Miles), Wistons: a Story in Three Parts 6/0
Praed (Mrs. Campbell), The Insane Root 6/0
Fraser (John), Death, the Showman..... 6/0
Mann (Mary E.), The Mating of a Dove..... 6/0
Sutcliffe (Halliwell), Mistress Barbara Cunliffe (the Combers) 6/0
Becke (Louis), Breachley, Black Sheep 6/0

Digitized by Google

Barr (Amelia E.), Souls of Passage 6/0
Nesbit (E.), Nine Unlikely Tales for Children 6/0
Nesbit (E.), The Would-be Goods..... 6/0
Bourget (Paul), The Disciple..... 6/0
Pidgin (Charles F.), Quincy Adams Sawyer 6/0
Lloyd (Wallace), Bergen Worth 6/0
Andrews (Katherine), Stephen Kyrle 6/0
Monro (A. M.), A False Position 6/0
Vartenie, Yestere: an Armenian Romance..... 6/0
Henshaw (Julia W.), Why Not, Sweetheart?..... 6/0

Messrs. F. Warne & Co.

Thompson (Sir Henry), Diet in Relation to Age and Activity 2/6
Miles (Eustace H.), How to Remember: without Memory Systems or With Them 2/6
Carnegie (Andrew), The Gospel of Wealth and other Timely Essays net 8/6
Knowlson (T. Sharper), The Art of Thinking. Popular Edition net 1/0
Thompson (Sir Henry), Food and Feeding. Eleventh Revised Edition..... 5/0
The Library of Natural History Romance:
Step (Edward), The Romance of Wild Flowers. New Edition 6/0
Step (Edward), Shell Life: an Introduction to the British Mollusca 6/0
Moore (Thomas), Lalla Rookh: an Oriental Romance..... 6/0
St. Nicholas Book of Plays and Operettas 2/6

Gift Books and Juvenile.

Clarke (Capt. Charles), An Antarctic Queen 5/0
Pickering (Edgar), True to the Watchword 3/6
Walkey (S.), Kidnapped by Pirates 3/6
The Boy's Modern Playmate. New Edition 3/6
The Girl's Home Companion. New Edition 3/6
Burnett (Frances Hodgson), Two Little Pilgrims' Progress. New and Cheaper Edition 3/6
St. Nicholas: an Illustrated Magazine for Young Folk, conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge. Vol. XXVIII. ... 17/0
Mather (J. Marshall), John Ruskin: his Life and Teaching. Popular Edition.....net 1/0
The Tennyson Birthday Book 1/6
The Boys' and Girls' Library:
Overton (Robert), A Chase Round the World 3/6
Pickering (Edgar), The Fortunes of Claude 3/6
Pickering (Edgar), The Dogs of War 3/6
Dale (Darley), Noah's Ark 3/6
Armstrong (Annie E.), Mona St. Claire 3/6
Armstrong (Annie E.), My Ladies Three 3/6
Masters (Caroline), The Duchess Lass 3/6
Masters (Caroline), The Shuttle of Fate 3/6
Masters (Caroline), The World's Coarse Thumb..... 3/6
Jenkinson (Arthur), God's Winepress 3/6
Armstrong (Jessie), My Friend Anne 3/6
Prize Library:
One Hundred Stories from Britain's History. In Four Volumes 2/0
Lang (Andrew—Edited by), The Nursery Rhyme Book. New and Cheaper Edition.....net 3/6
Our Little One's Object Book 5/0
The Humpty-Dumpty Nursery Rhymes Book 2/6
Baby's Animal Picture Book 2/6
Little Folks' Book of Birds 2/6
Humpty-Dumpty's Nursery Rhymes 1/6
Old Mother Goose's Nursery Song 1/6
Baby's Birthday A B C. 1/0
Baby's Book of Birds 1/0
Hey Diddle-Diddle Picture Book..... 1/0
Randolph Caldecott's Painting Book 1/0
The Wonder Toy Book. New Issue, Series A (6 varieties) each 1d.

Fiction.

Cromie (Robert), Kitty's Victoria Cross 6/0
Cay (Nowell), The Presumption of Stanley Hay, M.P. ... 3/6
Hocking (Silas K.), The Fate of Endilloe 3/6
Grand (Sarah), The Heavenly Twins. Popular Edition ... /6
Steel (Flora Annie), The Potter's Thumb, Popular Edition /6
Winter (John Strange), Bootles' Baby and Houp-La. Popular Edition /6

Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.

Davidson (Rev. J. P. F., The late), The Christianity of the New Testament and our Modern Christian Life...
Some Recollections of Jean Ingelow and Her Early Friends
Winnington-Ingram (Right Rev. A. F.), Words from under the Dome
Smith (Rev. William Kerr), Atonement and the Eucharist
Yonge (Charlotte M., The late), Reasons Why I am a Catholic, and not a Roman Catholic
Twells (Rev. Canon Henry, The late), Plain and Practical Sermons
Aitken (Rev. W. Hay M. H.), The Ordinance of Prayer...
Farmer (Rev. Edwin), The Transvaal as a Mission Field...
Vernon (Rev. John R.), Old and New Century Bells
Twells (Canon, The late), Hymns and Other Stray Verses
Townsend (M. E.), Voices of Prayer and Praise: a Manual of Daily Devotion Proverbial Sayings: being Some Old Friends in New Dresses. Pictured in colours by Gordon Browne.....
Read (Emily), Nature Songs
Creighton (Mrs.), A Purpose in Life
Creighton (Mrs.), The Modern Home
Phillips (Rev. Sidney), The Conflict; or, Forewarned, Forearmed
Slater (Catherine Ponton), A Goodly Child.....
Austin (Stella), A New Edition of Stamps
"The Midget" Series:
Bulley (Mrs.), Life of Edward VII., King of Great Britain and Ireland, and Emperor of India

Juvenile.

Fairy Tales from Hans Andersen, with Introduction by Edward Clodd, and Illustrations by Gordon Browne
The Fairchild Family, by Mrs. Sherwood; Revised, with Introduction, by Mary E. Palgrave; and Illustrated by F. M. Rudland
Edwards (R. W. K.), Dick Vaughan's First Term.....
Allen (Phœbe), The Forbidden Room; or, Mine Answer was My Deed
Avery (Harold), With Wellington to Waterloo
Vol. XI. of Chatterbox Library: Sidney Yorke's Friend.
Father's Book of Animals
A Second Series of Darton's Sunday Pleasure Book

The following Annual Volumes:—Chatterbox, Chatterbox Christmas Box, The Prize, Sunday, Friendly Leaves, The Young Standard Bearer, Darton's Leading Strings, Mothers in Council, The Commonwealth (edited by Canon Scott Holland, and others), Goodwill (edited by the Rev. the Hon. James Adderley), Rochester Diocesan Directory, &c.

Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

Saunders (Thomas Bailey—Trans. by), What is Christianity, by Prof. Adolf Harnack. Second edition ... 10/6
Kellett (E. E.) and Merseille (F. H.), Trans. by, Monasticism: its Ideals and History and the Confessions of St. Augustine, by Prof. Adolph Harnack 4/0
Sense (P. C.), A Critical and Historical Enquiry into the Origin of the Third Gospel.....
Cranbrook (The late Rev. James), The Founders of Christianity..... 3/6
Smith (H. W.—Gathered and arranged by), The Garden of Life, Flowers of Thought on Culture, Conduct, and Character for Every Day in the Year
Church (A. H.), On the Relation of Phyllotaxis to Mechanical Laws. Part I. Construction by Orthogonal Trajectories..... 3/6
Horton (J.), My Search for Truth and What I Found.....
Delbos (Leon), Nautical Terms in English and French and French and English, with Notes and additional Tables (thoroughly revised and much enlarged). Fourth Edition
Sheridan (R. B. C.), The Greek Catholic Church 1/0

Digitized by Google

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.'S LIST.

THE ENGLISH BOOKMAN'S LIBRARY.

VOLUME III.

Edited by A. W. POLLARD.

ENGLISH BOOK COLLECTORS. By W. Y. FLETCHER. Fcap. 4to, with Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net. [Shortly.

STONYHURST: it Past History and Life in the Present. By the Rev. GEORGE GRUGGEN, S.J., and the Rev. JOSEPH KEATING, S.J. Profusely illustrated. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The book tells an interesting story with much spirit."
St. James's Gazette.

"They [the authors] have compiled a volume which will be widely read because of its brevity The book is handsomely bound and well printed, while the illustrations lend a charm to the text not easily explainable."
Universe.

The LITTLE FLOWERS of SAINT BENET. Gathered from the Dialogues of Saint Gregory the Great. With 8 Drawings and other Illustrations, and a Cover Design by Paul Woodroffe. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"The volume is prettily bound, and Mr. Woodroffe's drawings are both good in themselves and in keeping with the quaint tales they illustrate."—Outlook.

A HISTORY of the GERMAN PEOPLE at the CLOSE of the MIDDLE AGES. By JOHANNES JANSSEN. Translated from the German by A. M. CHRISTIE. Vols. III. and IV. Demy 8vo, 25s. Vols. V. and VI. in the press.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE SERIES.

A Study of the Life, Resources, and Future Prospects of the British Empire. In FIVE VOLUMES. With 12 Maps. Large post 8vo, 6s. per Volume.

VOL. V.

GENERAL. With an Introduction by the Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, and 2 Maps. Post 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.

"The idea of the series is admirable. We get a frank, straightforward opinion from an independent source."—Spectator.

"No library or institute should be without the complete series."—Literature.

"The volumes are of solid and permanent utility."—Globe.

BOOKS ON EGYPT AND CHALDEA.

A New Series by E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D., Keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities in the British Museum. Author of "First Steps in Egyptian," "The Egyptian Reading-Book," &c., and L. W. KING, M.A., Assistant in the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities in the British Museum, Author of "First Steps in Assyrian." Uniform. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net each.

Vol. I. EGYPTIAN RELIGION: Egyptian Ideas of the Future Life. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D.

Vol. II. EGYPTIAN MAGIC. By E. A. Wallis BUDGE, Litt.D.

Vol. III. EGYPTIAN LANGUAGE: Easy Lessons in Egyptian Hieroglyphics. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D.

Vol. IV. BABYLONIAN RELIGION: Babylonian Religion and Mythology. By L. W. KING, M.A.

Vol. V. ASSYRIAN LANGUAGE: Easy Lessons in Cuneiform Inscriptions. By L. W. KING, M.A. [Ready October 10.

Vols. VI., VII., VIII. The BOOK of the DEAD. An English Translation of the Theban Recension, with Supplementary Chapters, Hymns, &c.; and nearly 400 Vignettes which do not appear in the larger edition published in 1897. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D. [Ready immediately.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

TEXT-BOOK of PHYSIOLOGICAL and PATHO- LOGICAL CHEMISTRY. By G. BUNGE. Translated from the German Edition by FLORENCE STARLING. 8vo. [In the press.

HYPNOTISM and SUGGESTION in THERAPEU- TICS, EDUCATION, and REFORM. By R. OSGOOD MASON, M.D., Author of "Telepathy and the Subliminal Self." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Written always in a thoughtful and engaging manner, the book cannot fail to prove profitable reading to those interested in its subject."—Scotsman.

WESTMINSTER BIOGRAPHIES.

GEORGE ELIOT. By Clara Linklater Thomson, Author of "Samuel Richardson." 16mo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN. By A. R. Waller and G. H. S. BURROW. 16mo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net. [Shortly.

The BREAD LINE: a Story of a Paper. By Albert BIGELOW PAINE. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"Most amusing .. The various types of sanguine temperament who compose the dramatis personæ are cleverly drawn, and the exposure of the false analogy on which they had built their dreams of fortune is most dramatically contrived."—Spectator.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.

T. & T. CLARK'S LIST.

A NEW TOPOGRAPHICAL, PHYSICAL, and BIBLICAL

Map of Palestine

Compiled from the Latest Surveys and Researches. Showing all Identified Biblical Sites and Modern Place Names.

By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., and Prof. GEORGE ADAM SMITH, LL.D., D.D.

Mounted on cloth, and in cloth case, with full INDEX, 10s. 6d.; mounted on rollers and varnished, with Index separate, 15s.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this the most complete map of Palestine in existence This beautiful chart."—Methodist Times.

THE EPISTLES of ST. PETER and ST. JUDE. By CHARLES BIGG, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, and Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford. (New Vol., "International Critical Commentary.") Just published. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A VALUABLE PRESENTATION WORK.

DR. HASTINGS' DICTIONARY of the BIBLE. Vols. I., II., and III. now ready. Vol. IV. in the press. Price per vol., in cloth, 28s.; in half-morocco, 34s. Full Prospectus, with Specimen Page, free on application.

THE HISTORICAL NEW TESTAMENT. Being the Literature of the New Testament, arranged in the order of its Literary Growth and according to the Dates of the Documents. A New Translation, Edited with Prolegomena, Historical Tables, Critical Notes, and an Appendix, by JAMES MOFFATT, B.D. Second Edition. 8vo, 16s.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF RITSCHL'S GREATEST WORK.

JUSTIFICATION and RECONCILIATION. By ALBRECHT RITSCHL. Edited by H. R. MACKINTOSH, D.Phil., and A. B. MACAULAY, M.A. 8vo, 14s.

THE RELATION of the APOSTOLIC TEACHING to the TEACHING of CHRIST. By R. J. DRUMMOND, D.D. Second Edition. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE MIRACLES of UNBELIEF. By Rev. FRANK BALLARD, M.A., B.Sc. (London). Second Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.

THE SPIRIT and the INCARNATION. In the Light of Scripture, Science, and Practical Need. By the Rev. W. L. WALKER. Second Edition. 8vo, 9s.

THE ATONEMENT and INTERCESSION of CHRIST. By the late Principal DAVIES, M.A., Trevecca. Edited by the Rev. D. E. JENKINS. Crown 8vo, 4s.

BIBLE STUDIES. Contributions, chiefly from Papyri and Inscriptions, to the History of the Language, Literature, and Religion of Hellenistic Judaism and Primitive Christianity. By Dr. G. A. DEISSMANN, Heidelberg. Authorised Translation, incorporating Dr. Deissmann's most recent Changes and Additions, by Rev. A. GRIEVE, M.A., D Phil. Now ready, in 8vo, 9s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, REVISED AND ENTIRELY RESET.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE of IMMORTALITY. By Principal S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D., Fourth Edition. 8vo, 9s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. Post 8vo, 6s.

THE CHRIST of HISTORY and of EXPERIENCE. By DAVID W. FORREST, D.D. [Just published.

IS CHRIST INFALLIBLE and the BIBLE TRUE? By the Rev. HUGH McINTOSH, M.A. (London). Second Enlarged Edition now ready. Post 8vo, 9s.

NEW SERIES. In neat crown 8vo Volumes, price 3s. each.

THE WORLD'S EPOCH-MAKERS.

Edited by OLIPHANT SMEATON, M.A.

ORIGEN and GREEK PATRISTIC THEOLOGY. By Rev. W. FAIRWEATHER, M.A. [October.

MUHAMMAD and his POWER. By P. DE LACY JOHNSTONE, M.A. [October.

ANSELM and his WORK. By Rev. A. C. WELCH, B.D.

SAVONAROLA. By G. McHARDY, D.D.

FRANCIS and DOMINIC. By Professor J. HERKLESS, D.D.

BUDDHA and BUDDHISM. By ARTHUR LILLIE, M.A. (London).

CRANMER and the ENGLISH REFORMATION. By A. D. INNES, M.A. (Oxon.)

WESLEY and METHODISM. By F. J. SNELL, M.A. (Oxon.).

LUTHER and the GERMAN REFORMATION. By Prof. T. M. LINDSAY, D.D.

WILLIAM HERSCHEL and his WORK. By JAMES SIME, M.A., F.R.S.E.

"THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY." EIGHT VOLUMES now ready. 10s. 6d. to 12s. each.
Prospectus free on application.

"THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COMMENTARY." TEN VOLUMES now ready. 8s. 6d. to 12s. each.
Prospectus free on application.

New Catalogue free on application.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LTD.

Digitized by Google

CONSTABLE'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF

The Works of William Shakespeare

In 20 Imperial 16mo volumes, with special coloured Title-page and End-papers designed by Lewis F. Day, and Illustrations in colours by L. Leslie Brooke, Byam Shaw, Henry J. Ford, G. P. Jacomb Hood, W. D. Eden, Estelle Nathan, Eleanor F. Brickdale, Patten Wilson, Robert Sauber, John D. Batten, Gerald Moira, and Frank C. Cowper. The title-page and illustrations printed on Japanese vellum, cloth gilt, extra, gilt top, gilt back, with headband and bookmarker. Price 2s. 6d. net. To be issued at fortnightly intervals. Each volume sold separately.

CONSTABLE'S POCKET EDITION OF

The Novels of George Meredith

In 15 volumes. Bound in red cloth, gilt lettered on back, gilt top, with Mr. Meredith's Autograph on the side. A special paper has been made for this issue. Vol. I. THE ORDEAL of RICHARD FEVEREL. Vol. II. BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER now ready. Remaining volumes at fortnightly intervals. Price 2s. 6d. net per vol., cloth; 3s. 6d. net, leather.

New 6s. Novels.

NEW CANTERBURY TALES.

By MAURICE HEWLETT,

Author of "The Forest Lovers," "Richard Yea and Nay."

"Of all our legion of romancers, he is the one who takes us away furthest from our environment and carries us most completely out of our troubled and perplexing epoch Admirable stories they are, and admirably told, with all Mr. Hewlett's perfection of workmanship."—The Standard.

CARDIGAN.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

Author of "Ashes of Empire," "The King in Yellow."

"The real thing is in Mr. Chambers, and the mistress he serves is no less a lady than the true romance.....Mr. Chambers has not gone to little men in his search among the masters of literary style. He writes well and in the language of romance. The important matter with Mr. Chambers is that he has something to say.....With all his dash and excitement, there is no slovenly workmanship in this story The genuineness of his observation of savage nature is as noticeable as his expression of it is artistic.....'Cardigan' is a fine and inspiring story, fittingly told."—Athenæum.

THE STORY OF EVA.

By WILL PAYNE.

"Mr. Payne has attempted, and not unsuccessfully, to do for Chicago what Zola has done for industrial Paris Eva stands out the central and conspicuous figure, and all other characters are subordinated by her."—Times.

"There is something of Harold Frederick here, something of Tolstoi, and something of Henry James, but Mr. Payne has a style of his own."

Saturday Review.

THE DEATH OF THE GODS.

By DMITRI MEREJKOWSKI

Translated by HERBERT TRENCH, late Fellow of All Souls'.

"The novel ought to be judged on its own merits, and as such is without doubt a fine piece of work."—Daily Telegraph.

"With an ardour as of Flaubert in 'Salammbo,' and perhaps more skill than Sienkiewicz in 'Quo Vadis?' he has succeeded in re-creating the wonderful scenes and characters of the period."—Observer.

KING'S END.

By ALICE BROWN.

"I have found, says my Nautical Retainer, a most perfect medicine in the refreshing pages of 'King's End' (Constable). Here is no factitious pomp of melodrama, no tawdry bravery to hide the place where the puppet's heart never so much as begins to beat. Yet there is nothing in the whole book that is obvious or unmeditated; each type has its own fresh piquancy; we seem not to have met them before and yet are never doubtful that they are to be met, and well worth the meeting."—Punch.

THE WESTERNERS.

By STEWART E. WHITE.

"Since the days of Bret Harte's immortal 'Luck of Roaring Camp,' no better story of the making of American mining camp has been written. A very commendable and cheery book."—Daily Mail.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., Ltd., Westminster.

GEORGE ALLEN'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORKS BY MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

BEATRICE and ARDIANE.

TWO PLAYS. Translated by BERNARD MIALL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE OF THE BEE.

Translated by ALFRED SUTRO. 352 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, designed cover, 5s. net.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"The book of truth and wonder."
Spectator.—"Exquisite in literary style."

THE CELTIC TEMPERAMENT, and other Essays.

By FRANCIS GRIERSON, Author of "Modern Mysticism." Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

EARLY HISTORY OF VENICE.

FROM THE ORIGIN TO THE CONQUEST OF CONSTANTINOPLE IN 1204. By F. C. HODGSON, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With 2 Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

THE PATH TO ROME.

Notes of Travel in Italy. By HILAIRE BELLOC, Author of "Danton," "Robespierre," &c. With about 60 Illustrations from Drawings by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

AN IDLER'S CALENDAR.

OPEN-AIR SKETCHES AND STUDIES. By G. L. APPERSON. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

PEN PICTURES FROM RUSKIN.

Descriptive Passages Chosen by CAROLINE H. WURTZBURG.
The FIRST SERIES deals with PLACES, NATURE STUDIES, and THINGS in GENERAL. Crown 16mo, cloth, 2s. net.

[PENSÉES SERIES.

HEARTS IN REVOLT:

A Novel dealing with the Struggle between Religion and Love.

By HENRY GILBERT, Author of "Of Necessity." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

YOUTH GOES A-MARKETING.

A STORY OF CORNISH LIFE. By J. H. PEARCE, Author of "Ezekiel's Sin." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

SOCIETY SNAPSHOTS.

TAKEN AT RANDOM ON A TRIP THROUGH THE WORLD. By COTSFORD DICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WONDERS IN MONSTERLAND.

ADVENTURES WITH SOME OF THE ANIMALS WHICH INHABITED THE EARTH THOUSANDS OF YEARS AGO. By E. D. CUMING. With 52 Illustrations (4 in Colour) and Cover, by J. A. SHEPHERD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BIRD PICTURES.

With 20 Full-page Illustrations and a designed cover in colours. By SARA M. FALLON, Author of "An Animal Alphabet Book."
The Text by ALICE WHITBY, with an Introductory Note by Professor P. J. WHITE. Demy 4to, pictured cover, 3s. 6d.

The Young England Library.

Edited by G. A. B. DEWAR, B.A.

In Crown 8vo volumes, with specially designed Cover, at 6s. each.

The Subjects will include:—

1. The achievements by sea and land of heroic Britons.
2. Popular and useful pursuits in and out of doors.
3. Summer and winter games; Natural History.

THE OPEN-AIR BOY.

By Rev. G. M. A. HEWETT, M.A., of Winchester College. With 30 Illustrations by MORRIS WILLIAMS, and 4 in Colour, by T. B. STONEY.

SEA FIGHTS AND ADVENTURES.

By J. KNOX LAUGHTON, M.A., Author of "Nelson and his Companion in Arms," &c. With 32 Full-page Illustrations and 5 Plans of Battles.

OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

LONDON: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, CHARING CROSS ROAD.

Digitized by Google

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON in the TIME of the DIAMOND JUBILEE

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. Llangollen: DARLINGTON & Co.

DARLINGTONS' HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S.

Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE; and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.
THE NORFOLK BROADS.
BRECON and its BEACONS.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.
THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
THE WYE VALLEY.
THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, PENMAENMAWR, LLANFAIRFECHAN, ANGLESEY, and CARNARVON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
CONWAY, COLWYN BAY, BETTWS-Y-COED, SNOWDON, & FESTINIOG.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.
NORWICH, LOWESTOFT, YARMOUTH, and the NORFOLK BROADS.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading Hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.

"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.

"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—70 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., LTD. The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers'.

Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S

Crown 8vo, Illustrated, price 2s. 6d. post free.

CONVICTED OF HEROISM. A Tale of John Penry, Martyr. 1559—1593. By HERBERT M. WHITE, B.A. Illustrated by Frank H. Simpson.

"Excellent, unusual grasp of events, nobility of ideal, vividness, and grace of style."—Rev. ARCHIBALD DUFF, D.D.

Twenty-first Thousand. Limp cloth, price 6d., post free.

OUR PRINCIPLES: a Congregationalist Church Manual. By G. B. JOHNSON.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"THINGS THAT ARE MADE." Devotional Meditations in the Haunts of Nature. By Rev. A. J. BAMFORD, B.A., of Royton.

Now Ready, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d., post free.

THE CHARTER of the CHURCH. Lectures on the Principle of Nonconformity. By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D.

"Explains the position of religious dissent with great force and eloquence." Manchester Guardian.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Limited, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

'Twixt Plate and Lip;

OR,

The Common Sense of Eating.

A HEALTH HAND-BOOK FOR EVERY DAY,

WITH SPECIAL ADVICE AS TO DIET AND REGIMEN IN HEALTH AND SICKNESS,

A POPULAR SUMMARY OF THE SYMPTOMS OF DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION,

AND A NOTE ON THE SCIENTIFIC AND RATIONAL TREATMENT OF THOSE AILMENTS.

12th EDITION.

 This little book may be recommended to the general reader as a sound and safe guide to the common sense management of the stomach. The Publishers, at 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, will be pleased to send a free copy to any reader of the Academy. Early application necessary.

LONDON: 46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.

. . FROM . .

Mr. Grant Richards's Autumn List.

THE EDINBURGH FOLIO SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Forty Parts. One thousand copies only will be printed (six hundred and forty of which are for England), and the book will be sold only in complete sets. Fcap folio, 5s. net per part.

THE PRIVATE MEMOIRS OF MADAME ROLAND. Edited, with an Introduction, by EDWARD GILPIN JOHNSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

COLIN CLOUT'S CALENDAR: The Record of a Summer—April to October. By GRANT ALLEN. New Edition. Crown 8vo, buckram gilt, 6s.

"He enlarges on many subjects in the inimitable manner which is all his own. Whether Mr. Grant Allen is explaining why the catkin-bearing trees blossom before they put forth leaves, or showing that the humming-bird is first cousin to the swallow, or that a species of couch grass is the ancestor of the wheat from which we obtain our bread, he gives us the information in such an attractive way that there are very few who would complain of having too much of it."—The World.

THE SOVERANE HERBE. A History of Tobacco. By W. A. PENN. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"To say that one wants to keep his book is to pay him an unprecedented compliment.... He really seems to have written 'the most complete history of tobacco yet published."—The Academy.

"We should not be surprised, in fact, if it made not a few converts to the weed." Westminster Gazette.

"It contains so much quaint and interesting information that even those who are least partial to the fragrant weed cannot but find it entertaining." Glasgow Herald.

FAME AND FICTION. An Enquiry into Certain Popularities. By E. A. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"He shows marked ability, insight, and honesty in his enquiry, and his extremely readable essays should help both those who agree with him and those who disagree to a clearer understanding of their position with regard to literature." Morning Leader.

"The book reveals an original individuality that is most welcome.....Criticism in this sort justifies a hope of newer and better methods in discussing the art of Fiction, for there is a largeness of outlook and a deliberation of utterance in Mr. Bennett that will refresh all readers wearied by a certain kind of journalistic criticism with its old catchwords and phrases, its jaded jog-trot, and its perverse indifference alike to good or bad."—Morning Post

LIKEWISE THE YOUNGER WOMEN. By Archdeacon SINCLAIR, D.D., Author of "Unto You Young Men." Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE IDLER OUT OF DOORS. By WALTER RAYMOND, Author of "Good Souls of Cideriand," &c. With Illustrations by R. W. Arthur Rouse, R.B.A. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

SOME FAVOURITE BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS. By JOSEPH SHAYLOR. With Frontispiece in Photogravure. Fcap., cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

TO-DAY WITH NATURE. By E. KAY ROBINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

TABLE TALK: ESSAYS ON MEN AND MANNERS. By WILLIAM HAZLITT. ("World's Classics," V.) Leather gilt, 2s. net; cloth gilt, 1s. net.

THE UMBRIAN TOWNS. By Mr. and Mrs. J. W. CRUICKSHANK. (Grant Allen's "Historical Guides," VI.) Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

"HOW TO" SERIES.

HOW TO SUCCEED IN YOUR EXAMINATION. By GEORGE A. WADE, B.A., Lond. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

HOW TO WRITE AN ESSAY. By the Author of "How to Write a Novel." Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

HOW TO STUDY ENGLISH LITERATURE. By T. SHARPER KNOWLSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FICTION.

THE OCTOPUS. By FRANK NORRIS, Author of "Shanghaied," "Blix," "McTeague," and "A Man's Woman." 6s.

The Daily Telegraph says: "It is always fresh and vivid and alive....Veritably an epic....Each of his individualities has a real life of its own....An exquisite idyll."

The Sunday Special says: "It is an ambitious work and likely to prove the most important of the season's novels."

The Times says: "The book is a remarkable book....Colossally vigorous."

The Academy says: "It is a brave thing, and a decisive victory over all sentimentalism. It is alive. You cannot do what you like with it; you have got to read it."

The Liverpool Mercury says: "Told with extraordinary power, and abounding in imagination and beauty. There are passages that quite take the reader's breath away, so living and vital are they."

The New Age says: "It gives one the impression of almost illimitable power. It reveals the point of view of a man concerned wholly with elementals (no product of an effete and artificial civilisation)—a seer at first hand, dependent on no man's interpretations. It is a breath of new life."

The Daily Chronicle says: "The present work is something better than good. If it were merely an attempt that failed it would command respect from all who welcome sincere endeavour to express big ideas. But is has not failed."

The Daily News says: "One's mind is full of it for days after its perusal."

BAGSBY'S DAUGHTER. By MARIE and BESSIE VANVORST. 6s.

"An amusing novel.....It goes off like a spring gun."—Academy.

"Notable for the creation of a new situation. The bewitched reader accepts the situation as readily as did the father and mother of the bride. There are other surprises in store, compounded and cleared up with contagious vivacity."—Punch.

THE BLACK MASK. By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "Peccavi," "The Amateur Cracksman," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE FOLLIES OF CAPTAIN DALY. By F. NORREYS CONNELL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE FOURTH ESTATE. A Novel. Translated from the Spanish of A. PALACIO VALDES. 6s.

A MOTLEY CREW. Reminiscences, Observations, and Attempts at Playwrighting. By Mrs. G. W. STEEVENS. 6s.

"Mrs. Steevens has gifts of clear vision and lucid expression."—Morning Leader.

"There is need of good clean work like this."—Pilot.

FOR CHILDREN.

UNCLE REMUS; or, Mr. Fox, Mr. Rabbit, and Mr. Terrapin. By JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS. With 9 Coloured and 50 other Illustrations by J. A. Shepherd. Picture cover, fcap. 4to, cloth gilt, 6s.

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "In a Cathedral City." SECOND EDITION.

THE CANKERWORM: being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By GEO. MANVILLE FENN.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH. By FLORENCE WARDEN.

A SOWER of WHEAT. By Harold BINDLOSS.

"We heartily recommend the book to all who want a good story."—Daily Mail.

"A splendidly written story....To those desiring to know the ins and outs of settlement life 'A Sower of Wheat' is just the book."—Irish Times

THE TRIUMPH of HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-Runner."

"Mr. Mitford has given us in 'The Gun-Runner,' and other tales, many stories of absorbing and thrilling interest, but none more so than this yarn of South African life. Few writers have the power of turning out a story which one reads with such zest from start to finish as he does."—Scotsman.

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."

"Mr. Christie Murray has never written a stronger or more impressive novel.....We are fascinated by the lonely man..... A rigorous and sympathetic piece of work."—Speaker.

"A capital story, told with Mr. Murray's ancient feeling and vigour."—Outlook.

"A praiseworthy piece of work; creditable to its author." Athenæum.

"A powerful story, which holds one's curiosity and interest keenly sustained. Its writer has produced nothing stronger, and the book is sure to be widely read."—Scotsman.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. SHIEL, Author of "The Yellow Danger," &c.

"The same breathless daring, the same power, the same breadth of idea and freedom of expression that have already secured for Mr. Shiel first rank among our sensational story-writers 'The Purple Cloud' towers high over the ordinary novel."—Week End.

THE WEALTH of MALLERSTANG. By ALGERNON GISSING. [Oct. 17.

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by HIMSELF, and "Dedicated to all who Love." [Oct. 21.

THREE MEN of MARK. By Sarah TYTLER. [Oct 24

ONLY a NIGGER. By Edmund MITCHELL. [Oct. 31.

GEORGE R. SIMS'S New Book, A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c., is Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS WOMAN. By MAX O'RELL. FOURTH EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Delightful reading."—Westminster Gazette.

ROME. By Emile Zola. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"By far the best, regarded as a study of the actual Rome of to-day....It leaves the reader simply lost in amazement at the fidelity of the portraiture."—Review of Reviews.

POCKET VOLUMES, handsomely printed upon very thin paper, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

THE CLOISTER and the HEARTH. By CHARLES READE.

"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.

FAMILIAR STUDIES of MEN and BOOKS. By R. L. STEVENSON.

A BOOK FOR EVERYBODY.

IN MEMORIAM: Memorial Verses for Every Day in the Year. Selected and Arranged by LUCY RIDLEY. Small 8vo, cloth, red edges, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON: a Life Study in Criticism. By H. BELLYSE BAILDON. SECOND EDITION, Revised. With a New Preface, and 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"A book which readers will find a useful preliminary to a first-hand study of the man and his performances."—Globe.

The COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BUCHANAN. 2 vols., crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, with Portrait in each volume, 12s. [Oct. 17.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO.'S NEW LIST.

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s 6d.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

THE CASE of a MAN with his WIFE. By THEO. GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

During OCTOBER MESSRS. TREHERNE & CO., LTD., will publish the following Books:—

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

READY SHORTLY.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG (First Editor of the "Windsor Magazine"). Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities. Price 1s.

TREHERNE'S SHILLING SPORTING SERIES.

MESSRS. TREHERNE & CO., LTD., have started a Monthly Shilling Series of Sporting Novels by well known Writers.

The books, which are uniform in appearance, are well bound in cloth, excellently printed on good paper

The first book, "LITTLE CHERIE; or, the Trainer's Daughter," by Lady FLORENCE DIXIE, is now on sale, and His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to command a copy. Next month a work by Mr. HAROLD TREMAYNE, entitled "REMINISCENCES of a GENTLEMAN HORSE DEALER" will be produced.

NOW READY.

LITTLE CHERIE; or, the Trainer's Daughter. By Lady FLORENCE DIXIE. Price 1s. net.

Onlooker.—"Contains plenty of incident....readable and interesting."

Country Life.—"A lively tale of racing."

Scotsman.—"Brisk, eloquent, and animated."

United Service Gazette.—"A welcome addition to current literature."

People.—"The story is well told."

Star.—"An entertaining study of the turf."

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LTD., 3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

B. T. BATSFORD'S NEW ART BOOKS.

EARLY RENAISSANCE ARCHITECTURE in ENGLAND. An Historical and Descriptive Account of the Tudor, Elizabethan, and Jacobean Periods. By J. ALFRED GOTCH, F.S.A. With 100 Plates and 250 other Illustrations. Medium 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

The object of this book is to illustrate and trace the development of Architecture during the 16th and early 17th centuries. The development of the house-plan is illustrated by a series of examples. The various features of the houses of that time are dealt with in turn. As regards the exterior portion, Gateways, Porches, Windows, Gables, Parapets, Chimneys, Finials, &c., are illustrated by numerous examples. Garden architecture is also touched upon. In illustration of the treatment of Interiors of Houses, many specimens of Panelling, Screens, Doorways, Chimney-pieces, Ceilings, Staircases, Window-glass, &c., are given.

ARCHITECTURAL WORKS of INIGO JONES. By H. INIGO TRIGGS and HENRY TANNER, Jun., A.A.R.I.B.A. Containing 40 Plates (14 in. by 11 in.), chiefly of Measured Drawings, and over 40 Illustrations in the Text from Sketches and Photographs. Large folio, cloth gilt, 30s. net.

THE DECORATIVE WORK of R. and J. ADAM. A Reproduction of all the Plates illustrating Decoration and Furniture from their "Works in Architecture," 1778-1812. Containing 30 large folio Plates, giving about 100 examples of Decorations. Large folio, old style. 30s. net.

Detailed Prospectuses and Lists Post-free on application.

B. T. BATSFORD, 94, High Holborn, London.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

Globe 8vo, 5s. per Volume.

THE

EVERSLEY SERIES.

A SELECTION

OF

Standard Works

IN

Prose and Poetry,

FROM ALL

Periods of English Literature.

The ACADEMY writes: "In truth, we can hardly imagine a pleasanter fate than to be locked for a year on some sunny island, with trees, a few friends, some food, and a stout wooden case containing the entire 'Eversley' Series."

THE

EVERSLEY SERIES

CONTAINS

152 VOLUMES,

And practically falls into two main divisions:

(1)

STANDARD ENGLISH CLASSICS,

SUCH AS

SHAKESPEARE. 10 vols.
LAMB. 7 vols.
WORDSWORTH. 12 vols.
CHAUCER. 2 vols.
GRAY. 4 vols.
MILTON. 3 vols.

(2)

MODERN WRITERS,

SUCH AS

CHARLES KINGSLEY. 13 vols.
MATTHEW ARNOLD. 8 vols.
J. R. GREEN. 14 vols.
DEAN CHURCH. 10 vols.
JOHN MORLEY. 11 vols.
EMERSON. 6 vols.
HUXLEY. 9 vols.
R. H. HUTTON. 6 vols.
SIR R. JEBB. 1 vol.
SIR JOHN SEELEY. 5 vols.

AND

FREDERIC HARRISON. 1 vol.

 New Complete List sent post free on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1536. Established 1869. 12 October, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

MR. THOMAS HARDY, in the preface to his new volume of poems, says: "The road to a true philosophy of life seems to lie in humbly regarding divergent impressions of its meaning as they occur." The first poem in the book is "V.R., 1819-1901." Then follow war poems, poems of pilgrimage, and miscellaneous pieces.

THE scene of Mr. Edmund Gosse's "ironic fantasy," Hypolympia, is laid in a northern European island, in the twentieth century, and the volume consists of twelve tableaux in dramatic form, partly in verse, but mainly in prose. The little book is a rhapsody on the function of hope in a finite life.

WE have not found any difficulty hitherto in distinguishing between the writings of Tolstoy père and Tolstoy fils. But it seems from a letter addressed by Tolstoy the younger to the Vossiche Zeitung that there has been confusion, especially in Germany. Tolstoy the younger suggests that in future any works written by him, if translated into German, should be distinguished from those of his father by indicating their author as "Leo Tolstoy son."

MR. J. E. B. MAYOR sends the following to The Classical Review, under the title "Charles Lamb also among the Prophets":

> In the twentieth volume (Berlin, Schwetschke, 1901) of the Theologischer Jahresbericht, p. 178, is a curious proof that bibliographical industry may cast its net too wide. Under the heading "Israelitische Religionsgeschichte" I find: "Lamb, C., Essays of Elia. 2nd series. N.Y. Scribner (London, Macmillan)." I gladly bear witness to the general accuracy and astonishing diligence of the contributors to this serial, which stands at the head of its department.

THE Sketch states that the firm of Americans who started the cheap reprint of the Encyclopædia Britannica in this country, and were also responsible for the Standard Library of Famous Literature and several other similar undertakings, has made a profit of over a quarter of a million sterling.

WE regret to hear of the serious illness of Mr. J. H. Shorthouse, author of John Inglesant. Added to the severe suffering caused by muscular rheumatism is an internal trouble which prevents the system receiving proper nourishment. Mr. Shorthouse is sixty-seven.

WE have received from Messrs. Cassell & Co. the first part of The Nation's Pictures, a portfolio containing reproductions in colour of "O Mistress Mine," by Mr. Abbey; "Autumn," by Mr. Alfred East; "Napoleon on Board the Bellerophon," by Mr. Orchardson; and "An Idyll," by Mr. Grieffenhagen. All are good. The reproduction in colour of Mr. Grieffenhagen's beautiful picture, "An Idyll," is particularly successful.

MR. F. WELLS, "a humorous bibliophile of Boston," has projected himself into the twenty-second century, and has returned with a number of notes of a book-collector, which he has handed to the Editor of the Critic (New York) for publication. Here are a few:

> My Last Visit to America, by Henry James. Translated into English by Brander Matthews and Harry Thurston Peck, author of Peck's Bad English. Scotch Notes, by J. M. Barrie. Indiana Notes, by Booth Tarkington. Pink Paper Edition.
>
> I and the Empire, by Rudyard Kipling, poet laureate of the Anglo-Saxon Empire from 1904 to 1934, author of one hundred and thirteen volumes of pamphlets, treatises on military tactics, street-car advertisements, and doggerel. Is mentioned in his own time as having written tales of adventure, most of which were destroyed in the Irish invasion of 1937. Two copies of the Jungle Book remain, and are to be found in the Roosevelt Menagerie Library in New York. This copy is of the famous Elephant's Head Edition of 1913. Uncut.
>
> My Political Career, by Samuel L. Clemens, pseudonym Mark Twain, a political writer and controversialist of the Twentieth Century. In his own day widely known as a humorist.

MR. F. C. VERNON-HARCOURT, "once a well-known figure in histrionic circles, but now a successful conductor of missions," is about to publish his autobiography. It is to be called From Stage to Cross. This would seem to offer an opportunity to Mr. Wilson Barrett.

THE Dial (Chicago), in its issue of October 1, devotes fourteen and a-half columns to reviews of recent poetry. "The names, for the most part," remarks the reviewer, "are unknown to fame." In the advertisement columns of the same journal a new novel is announced as demonstrating, "through the great principle of the universality of natural laws, the principle upon which all science rests, that the Darwinian theory of evolution and all undulatory theories are alike absurd and impossible."

THE unpublished MSS. of the brothers de Goncourt have just been deposited at the Bibliothèque Nationale. They contain the correspondence of Jules and Edmond from 1851 to 1896, as well as ths "Journal" covering the same period. The portfolios containing the MSS. are not to be opened for twenty years.

MR. A. C. MCCLURG, of Chicago, has ready A History of American Verse, by Mr. J. L. Onderdonk, covering the subject from the colonial period to the close of the nineteenth century.

THE following communication from a would-be contributor has the interest of novelty:

> Mr. —— sends the enclosed contributions on approval, and hopes that if they are suitable the Editor will write in order that other copies may be recalled, and that if they are unsuitable the Editor will kindly return them in the stamped envelope. N.B. The contributions are short serious poems, suitable for a small empty space.

Digitized by Google

America has already read and reviewed Gorki's novel, Foma Gordyeeff, for which in England we are still waiting. Gorki's real name, by the way, is Alexei Maximovitch Pyeshkoff. He was born in Nizhni Nóvgorod on March 14, 1868 or 1869 (he says), in the family of his grandfather, the painter Vasily Vasilievitch Kashirin. His father died when he was five years of age. Gorki's adventures as cook's boy on a Volga steamer, man of all work at Kozan, railway watchman at Gzaritzyn, beerseller at Nizhni Novgorod, and finally as an author, are set forth by Miss Hapgood the translator of the forthcoming novel. Meanwhile America's judgment is not specially favourable. One critic says: "The immense talent of the author is evidenced on every page, but the story, on the whole, is disappointing, and, toward the end, becomes a trifle wearisome. It is really little better than a series of episodes and interminable discourses, the burden of which is the appalling ugliness of social conditions. But while Gorki speaks with ferocious derision of all institutions, he has nothing to put in their place. He does not preach any positive doctrine and has no system of constructive philosophy. He is satisfied with the conviction that our existence is an evil, that there should be no curb on the passions, that the only thing admirable in life is individual strength and passion, and that life itself should be a desperate search after something which, if found, would account for it, but which can never be found because it does not exist! The work is full of similar incoherences and contradictions." We shall see.

Mr. Samuel Butler, whose Erewhon Revisited appears this week, has to his credit several books. His critical essay, The Authoress of the Odyssey, is good reading whether we accept the "authoress" or not. Erewhon and Erewhon Revisited are now published together. The Preface to the first edition of Erewhon (1872) was simply this:

> The Author wishes it to be understood that Erewhon is pronounced as a word of three syllables, all short—thus, Ē-rĕ-whŏn.

Upon this clever satirical fantasy Mr. Butler spent ten years, whereas, he tells us, Erewhon Revisited was written easily between November, 1900, and the end of April, 1901. And he adds:

> There is no central idea underlying Erewhon, whereas the attempt to realise the effect of a single supposed great miracle dominates the whole of its successor. In Erewhon there was hardly any story, and little attempt to give life and individuality to the characters; I hope that in Erewhon Revisited both these defects have been in great measure avoided. Erewhon was not an organic whole, Erewhon Revisited may fairly claim to be one. Nevertheless, though in literary workmanship I do not doubt that this last-named book is an improvement on the first, I shall be agreeably surprised if I am not told that Erewhon, with all its faults, is the better reading of the two.

In his preface to Erewhon Revisited, Mr. Butler sets his readers right on one important point—his beliefs. "I have never ceased to profess myself a member of the more advanced wing of the English Broad Church. What those who belong to this wing believe, I believe. What they reject, I reject."

"The works of the 'localisers' I have not read," says Mr. Andrew Lang in introducing his study of Tennyson just added by Messrs. Blackwood to their "Modern English Writers" series. "The professed commentators I have not consulted." "I have not dwelt on parallels to be found in the works of earlier poets." Mr. Lang seems to have thrown over a great deal of lumber, and he is surely right when he says: "After all, what we must live by is, not his opinions, but his poetry. The poetry of Milton survives his ideas; whatever may be the fate of the ideas of Tennyson his poetry must endure."

American critics are wrestling with those problems of popularity in literature which in England have been handled so interestingly by Mr. E. A. Bennett. The latest see-saw is a defence by Mrs. Gertrude Atherton of such novels as Miss Johnston's, Mr. Leicester Ford's, and Mr. Winston Churchill's. Even Mrs. Atherton, however, merely pleads that these prodigiously circulated stories "must have done much toward educating our immense lower middle class." She looks to the future, and says: "The truth is, there are as many separate publics for as many varieties of the novel as can be devised; and that, with our growing wealth, educational facilities, and independence of character, to say nothing of flights to Europe on incomes ranging from a hundred thousand a year to five hundred economised dollars, there is no reason in the world why Mr. Henry James should not have a following of fifty thousand in the course of the next decade, nor why Tom Jones should not be revived with the same enthusiasm as recently attended the rebirth of the emasculated Wandering Jew."

A correspondent of the Morning Post propounds a riddle which, in a less concrete form, has puzzled ourselves considerably from time to time. He asks: "When is an author not an author? I mean: John Smith wrote an Algebra twenty years ago. He goes the way of all flesh, and fifteen years later James Brown revises the Algebra, which is still published as Smith's. Five years later, again, George Robinson re-writes the Brown-Smith Algebra, and Prof. Jones, F.R.S., supplies the work with a preface. Is Smith's Algebra still on the market as the publishers lead us to suppose? Anyone who scans an educational catalogue in almost any department of learning will admit the pertinence of this query, and we hesitate to pronounce on the morality of the practice. An analogy will, perhaps, be helpful. A man buys an umbrella; next year he has it recovered; another time, new ribs are put in; a new stick follows next, and fresh mounts are added subsequently. Is it still the same umbrella? Zeno's paradoxes are nothing to this."

The clever fiction parodist who disports himself in Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow has this month selected Richard Calmady the Younger as his whipping-post. And his flicking and lashing is of the liveliest. We beg to lift the first three chapters:

I.

The birth of an heir to Sir Richard and Honoria came in due course. Whether the prize Dachshunds were too absorbing, or whether Lady Calmady had been reading too much gynecological fiction, or whether the child merely took after its father, is still a moot point; but, be it as it may, the new Richard Calmady was, like the old, born without legs. Father and son stared at each other. Between them they hadn't a leg to stand on.

II.

Lady Calmady did not learn the dread news for some weeks. At last it was impossible to keep it from her longer, and Dr. Knott was deputed to break it with his customary tact.

He entered the sick room with a bang, hurled the nurse out of it, and flung himself into the armchair at Lady Calmady's bedside.

"Madam," he said, bringing down a heavy fist on the sleeping babe in her arms, "madam, it's another freak."

III.

Lady Calmady stood by the window. The Dachshunds must die, she had said, and the deed of extermination had begun. Chifney, the chief kennel-man, was administering prussic acid in the middle of the lawn. Lady Calmady watched with heroic fortitude: her mother-in-law could not have shown finer self-control. Last of the Dachshunds came her own favourite, Edward Longshanks. He gave one despairing glance at her window, barked pathetically, and fell with a dull thud.

Digitized by Google

"To-morrow," said Honoria, turning to Julius, the pale monk beside her, "to-morrow we will begin to keep ostriches."

THE controversy on "Fabian Fatuities" in the Daily News has drawn a long and characteristic letter from Mr. Bernard Shaw, in which his general argument is perhaps less interesting than his obiter dicta. One of these is a bitter comment on our South African commissariat arrangements:

> What do you suppose, Mr. Editor, seems to me the most disgraceful fact in the whole war? Forcing men to attend the executions of their friends, perhaps? Or shooting under cover of the white flag? Not a bit of it. If you may hang one enemy, why not force another to see you doing it, if it annoys him sufficiently? A white-flag incident is only a particular sort of ambush: whether a man lures me within gunshot by hiding behind a stone or waving his handkerchief on a stick matters nothing to me if he hits me when he fires. No: what makes me feel savage is that we have killed our own men by thousands because we had not energy and capacity enough to boil or distil their drinking water. After that there is no use in waving flags and scattering Victoria Crosses and talking about the gallantry of our soldiers. It means that we are good-for-nothing duffers, miserable, hysterical sycophants, who, having no officers and no statesmen, are content to dress up a few chance donkeys in lion skins and togas and pretend that they are Cæsars and Solons.

WE understand that among seventy new members of the Dante Society are H.R.H. the Duke of Abruzzi, Count Costa, Count Plunkett, Lord Windsor, Mr. Choate, the Archbishop of Armagh, Sir Mountstuart Grant-Duff, Mr. Paget Toynbee, Mr. Asquith, and Prof. Saintsbury. The Dante cult was never more prosperous than now.

MORE English as she is wrote. The writer of a German trade circular, of recent date, introduces himself as a "manufactory of water-tight and fire-proof clothes for mining and industrial works," and he promises to send everything "free pockage fixed for cash." He says: "Since long time in mining and resembling works the fact is known and unpleasantly perceived, that leather clothes, which mostly have been used till now, by no means can suffice for the claims to be called for water-tight clothes. Therefore instead of leather clothes such ones of oiled or caoutchouced stuff have been tried to use, but these also have the inconvenience to be too much too havy and incommode to hinder the free movement of workmen." He concludes as follows: "Proves of stuff and whole clothes will be sent to, when desired."

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us reviving the familar proposal that a series of epicene pronouns should be incorporated in the language. In consequence of their absence a writer is compelled to use such phrases as "he or she," "him or her." Our correspondent suggests that the following words (all of which, we think, have been proposed before) should be brought into use:

Heesh	for	He or She.
Himmer	,,	Him or Her.
Hizzer	,,	His or Her.
Hizzers	,,	His or Hers.

IT is sometimes bruited that Dickens's reign is nearing its end. We do not believe it. But whether he is read as much formerly or not, his influence appears to be recognised as active in literature. Mr. Edmund Gosse points out in an article in the International Monthly, from which we have already quoted, that Mr. Meredith's early debt to Dickens can be easily assessed. More novel, if less convincing, is "Claudius Clear's" contention in this week's British Weekly that in Kim Mr. Kipling has followed Dickens's method of conceiving character and has even imitated some of his episodes.

THE Elizabethan Society is doing useful work, and has as its programme for the winter season shows, the support of some prominent workers in this field of literature. It is anxious to extend its scope, and we can recommend all students to consider its advantages. The new programme is as follows:

October 9—
"Shakespeare's Justice Shallow not a Satire on Sir Thomas Lucy."
BY MRS. C. C. STOPES.

November 6—
"Concerning Alfred the Great."
BY ALFRED AUSTIN.

December 4—
"An Elizabethan Conception of Beauty."
BY FREDERICK ROGERS.

January 8—
"Thomas Shadwell."
BY WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

February 5—
"Shakespeare and Contemporary German Criticism."
BY MISS ELIZABETH LEE.

March 5—
"Shakespeare's Prose."
BY SIDNEY LEE.

April 9—
"Inigo Jones and his Masques."
BY ERNEST RHYS.

May 7—
"The Maid of Honour: an Unpublished Romance (of the Seventeenth Century) by Sir Henry North."
BY A. H. BULLEN.

On the other Wednesdays of the session the society will meet at eight o'clock to read the plays of Thomas Middleton.

The meetings take place at Toynbee Hall.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS'S proposal to initiate a series of Folios which may prove a type and exemplar of modern book-making makes a beginning with the first part (one of forty) of an edition of Shakespeare. It is a noble and comely production, a delight to the eye and to the touch. Mr. W. E. Henley, who is responsible for the text, will keep as close to the First Folio (1623) as he can, and "will trust to common-sense and a becoming reverence for his Author for the rest."

ANOTHER beautiful edition of Shakespeare is the "Windsor" edition of Messrs. T. C. and E. C. Jack, of Edinburgh. It is a one-play one-volume edition in maroon canvas, lettered and designed in gold. The photogravure frontispieces, consisting of portraits and views, are admirable. Mr. Henry N. Hudson has supplied introductions and notes. The footnotes are of the appreciative as well as merely expository kind, and some readers of the straiter sect may think that the indication of beauties in the text is slightly overdone, as where Mr. Hudson says: "This is the artfullest and most telling stroke in Antony's speech," but Mr. Hudson is a very interesting commentator, whose maxim is that annotations to Shakespeare can and should be entertaining. Hence the more technical and scholarly notes are placed at the end of each play, the footnotes being such as can be at once assimilated. We imagine that this will be a popular as it is certainly a most comely and cheap edition. The price of each volume is 2s. net, and the first eight volumes are ready. Any volume can be purchased separately.

MESSRS. RAPHAEL TUCK & SONS send us a big box of Christmas cards, almanacks, children's booklets, &c.—a budget of artistic kindliness we may call it. Christmas card seems, however, a poor term to apply to some of these productions. Large and highly finished photogravures and landscapes call for a more sounding name. One singularly artistic New Year card represents 1902 as a child among corn, the whole being carried out in imitation of a copper bas-relief with great success. In the production of such dainties Messrs. Tuck are past masters.

Digitized by Google

MR. W. S. GILBERT'S "letter of congratulation" to Mr. Clement Scott on the occasion of the "grand birthday double number" of The Free Lance is characteristic. "Dear Scott," it begins,

> Your ideas as to the duties and privileges of dramatic critics are so diametrically opposed to mine that I think we had better let matters rest as they are. Nor do I think that the fact that you will have achieved sixty years on the 6th October is a reason for a general jubilation. I am sixty-five, and nobody seems to care.
>
> I bear no ill-will towards you, but I have an excellent memory.—Yours truly, W. S. GILBERT.

We presume Mr. Gilbert did not regard Mr. Archer's "Real Conversation" as a birthday present.

Bibliographical.

I READ, concerning the late Major-General Drayson, that he was the author of a standard work on The Art of Practical Whist, and that he wrote also on billiards, geological and astronomical subjects, and sport in South Africa. That is so. The book on Practical Whist reached a fifth edition in 1892, and in January of last year General Drayson brought out a little work on Intellectual Whist: Conversations, Discussions, and Anecdotes on the Great Game. His Untrodden Ground in Astronomy and Geology appeared in 1890; a new edition of his Among the Zulus in 1891. So recently as last year we had from him Early Days among the Boers; or, Diamond Hunters of South Africa, which, however, was only a new edition (with a new title) of a book brought out by him originally in 1889. I find he wrote The White Chief of the Caffirs (1886), From Keeper to Captain (1888), and Thirty Thousand Years of the Earth's History (1888). But surely, in his younger days, General Drayson was a contributor of adventure-stories to a boys' magazine which I read "in the days of my youth"? Perhaps some of my contemporaries, with a better memory than mine for boyhood's reading, may be able to tell me.

Messrs. Wells Gardner have an excellent excuse for bringing out a new edition of Mrs. Sherwood's Fairchild Family (albeit condensed). There has been no issue of the tale, apparently, since 1889. The worthy authoress seems to maintain her popularity fairly well. Her Little Woodman and his Dog Cæsar came out at sixpence last year; her book of reminiscences, Here, There, and Everywhere, was published over here in 1898; in the previous year we had had the opportunity of reading her Epistle to Posterity; being Rambling Recollections of Many Years of My Life; and previously to that came her Art of Entertaining (1892), her Henry Milner (1891), her Popular Stories (1891), her Indian Pilgrim (1890), and so forth.

I understand that the little book called Some Recollections of Jean Ingelow and Her Early Friends is from the pen of a very near relative. It is pleasantly written, and is, of course, trustworthy; but it is permissible to regret that the task of writing the biography of Jean Ingelow was not laid upon the shoulders of a competent man-of-letters.

In addition to the illustrated History of English Literature promised us by Mr. Heinemann, and the elaborate new edition of Messrs. Chambers's Encyclopædia of English Literature (which is in effect a history), we are to have, it seems, a History of English Literature, from its Beginning to Tennyson, from Messrs. Methuen. It is gratifying to gather from all this, that the public is taking an enormous interest in our literary works and record, but is there not some chance of the subject being over-done? The "histories," "handbooks," "manuals," "outlines," and so forth, which have been devoted to the topic during the last decade alone, are legion. To name only a few: Outlines, by Ryland (1890), History, by W. H. Low (1890-94), History, by B. Ten Brink (1893-6), Outlines, by W. Renton (1893), Short History, by E. S. Kirkland (1893), Chaucer to Tennyson, by Pencoast (1893), History, by J. Logie Robertson (1894), Biographical History, by Morell (1895), Short History, by Meiklejohn (1896), History, by Stopford Brooke, (1897), History, by George Saintsbury (1898), Short History, by T. P. Marshall (1898), History, by John Dennis (1899), History, by A. J. Wyatt (1900), and so on, and so on.

And, during these ten years or so, there have been new editions galore of such books on English literature as F. A. Laing's History (1892), Pryde's Biographical Outlines (1894), Austin Dobson's Handbook (ed. Griffin, 1897), and Thomas Arnold's Manual (1897). In my own view, a history of English literature cannot be written satisfactorily by one man, or even by two or three; it must be written by a body of experts. Most works of the kind have had the fatal faults of superficiality, of opinions expressed at second-hand, of an assumption of knowledge where there was little or none. No one man, however industrious, can compass the whole field of English literature—not even if he devotes his whole life to it, which one is rarely able to do. Even our "professors" of the subject would be obliged to admit, if pressed, that they could lay no claim to omniscience concerning English literature "from the beginning, to Tennyson."

Messrs. Bell are credited with the intention of producing a series of books, mainly for young women, the first of which is to be a new edition of Mrs. Jameson's Shakespeare's Heroines, with illustrations by Mr. Anning Bell. No doubt Mr. Bell's drawings will be all that could be desired, but are they wanted in this particular connexion? Messrs. Bell published, in 1897, an edition of Shakespeare's Heroines, illustrated by photographic portraits of popular actresses in favourite Shakespeare parts—Miss Ellen Terry as Beatrice and others, Miss Ada Rehan as Katherine and others, Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Juliet, Miss Mary Anderson as Hermione, and so forth. Would not these portraits appeal more powerfully to girls than any number of new drawings? I may add that I think it a pity that the original title of Mrs. Jameson's book should have been dropped, even in favour of one more directly descriptive. Characteristics of Women—Moral, Poetical, and Historical: that is what Mrs. Jameson called her work.

Mr. Punch's Dramatic Sequels, which are to appear shortly in volume form, are, of course, written in the vein of parody or banter. Treated seriously, the subject would yield material for a very readable little book. "The Ticket of Leave Man" was followed by "The Ticket of Leave Man's Wife," "Our American Cousin" by "Lord Dundreary Married and Settled"—two instances which occur to me now out of the many which might be named. Sequels to popular stories might also be dealt with in the same volume; the latest instance being that of the newly-published Erewhon Revisited. Something, too, might be said about prologues to plays and to novels. An English writer of our day has written a play leading up to the action in one of Dr. Ibsen's dramas. Mrs. Clive, after telling what happened after Paul Ferroll killed his wife, produced another narrative describing why he killed her. These are among the curiosities of literature.

Announcement is made of a story by "Dick Donovan," to be called Jim the Penman. This is the title of a well-known play by the late Sir Charles Young, with whom, however, it may not have been original. There was, I believe, an actual "Jim the Penman."

THE BOOKWORM.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

An Anthology of Conversions.

Roads to Rome: Being Personal Records of some of the More Recent Converts to the Catholic Faith. With an Introduction by His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan. (Longmans. 7s. 6d. net.)

THE sixty-five spiritual histories which form this book are remarkable reading. At the same time the interest and importance of the sketches vary considerably, and a weightier effect would have been produced by encouraging the thirty more capable writers to fill the space occupied by the less capable. But the difficulties of editorship must have been great, and Cardinal Vaughan's introductory warning to the critics is not overdone. What we have here is a miscellany of personal narratives, and each narrative is itself rather a miscellany of episodes, selected memories, and phases of thought than a closely knit autobiography. The wonder is that so many interesting people could be persuaded to attempt a task of confession and analysis such as a man may well postpone until his latest leisure, or leave undone. All these writers have been through deep waters, and believe that they have passed from darkness to light. We should not describe them as "all sorts and conditions of men," yet their personalities and occupations are sufficiently various. Some have made longer journeys than others, having journeyed from total unbelief or indifference to the arms of an "infallible" Church. In one case a member of the National Secular Society, a friend of Mr. Bradlaugh, was led to examine spiritualism, whereby he became convinced of a future life. A chance visit to the Oratory in the Brompton-road seems to have done the rest, though we readily admit that the inevitable lacunæ in these brief narratives ought not to be taken advantage of by the critic, for in every case the process of conviction was probably longer and more complex than the pen has written. A Baptist minister and a Unitarian minister tell the stories of their momentous decisions, made in each case in mature years. Among lay converts we have a barrister, a novelist, a naval officer, a professor of anatomy, a publisher, and an ex-judge. But in the majority of cases it is the naturally ecclesiastical mind with which we have to deal, and more than twenty times we find the Anglican priest becoming the Roman Catholic priest. Nothing in the book is so striking as the preparation for Rome which Ritualism affords to its lovers. Again and again we seem to be watching the progress of a mind to which ecclesiasticism is meat and drink, and not seldom in the course of a candid narrative we find the step from Low to High Church described in terms of thankfulness only inferior to those employed for the final entry into the Church in which ecclesiasticism puts forth all its power and beauty. The effect on the lay reader of the book is weakened by this pervading circumstance. He often feels that he is studying the effects of temperament rather than the call of faith. A passage like the following is so churchy that it excites a smile. It has almost the heightened tone which a half-satirical novelist might give:

> The "wicket-gate" by which I entered . . . was St. Michael's, Brighton, where the services, though out of the same prayer-book as we had at St. John the Baptist's, were yet as different as a fine day is from a wet one. I became converted at once. Yes, it was a case of instantaneous conversion. I was introduced to Mr. Beanlands, the incumbent of St. Michael's, at the house of the Rev. John Purchas, whither a friend took me for an evening party. I took to Mr. Beanlands and he to me, I went to his church, and from that day until I became attached to St. Bartholomew's, I loved that little church with a passionate devotion, being never happy away from it. I became detached from my home in a degree which would not be commended to a Catholic, and spent every spare moment at St. Michael's. Its friends became mine; its religion mine. There I made my first Communion on a Maundy Thursday, having been prepared for it and for Confirmation by Mr. Beanlands.

This apologist was a Churchman through and through, and his conversion to Rome seems to have been—we can say it, we hope, without the least offence—of a professional kind. He passed from Church to Church in the warmed atmosphere of Church. High Anglicanism satisfied him for many years.

> Yet through all the happy hubbub of children's voices, bright evenings, processionals and recessionals, High Celebrations, school treats, choir breakfasts, concerts, and entertainments, there was a word which rang ever and louder in my ears, and that word was ROME. Somehow it seemed to me to rhyme with "Home" (as indeed it did).

As indeed it did. "Up to the last day of my ministry in the Church of England," he informs us, "I believed in my Orders. It was the last rope to which I clung. . . . The storm burst midway in the reading of the Apologia. When the last page was reached—indeed, before—I was a castaway. I could not resist the logic of the great thinker, the great convert." In the same strain of ingrained ecclesiasticism many of these converts pour out their experiences, until one fancies that what they sought was not so much truth as a more imposing and completer setting for truth. For example, in one paper we have this description of a High Church priest's dissatisfaction: "I had to go on Sundays to the village church. I used to rub my eyes, and say to myself, 'Is that man a Catholic priest?' as the grey-bearded parson read 'Dearly beloved' in a sing-song, or sprawled over the north end of the Communion-table. I could not stay away from Communion on Sundays; yet I thought it almost certain that I had made only a spiritual Communion." The italics, which are ours, mark his conviction, so difficult to the "broad-minded" layman, that the Church sanctifies the faith, and not the faith the Church. Miss Adeline Sergeant, the novelist, tells how it tried her to reflect that she had probably no right to use the prayers of St. Thomas Aquinas and St. Bernard which she found in her Anglican books of devotion, since these saints would have utterly repudiated the Church to which she belonged.

As the way to Rome through Ritualism is the widest and best trodden road in this book, so is Newman, who footed it alone, the most frequently honoured guide. Indeed, the book is one long testimony to his influence. Hardly a writer fails to mention him, and a great many name him as their most decisive counsellor. He led them like a kindly light to the Light. "Cardinal Newman was, under God, the chief factor in my conversion," begins one writer, and he ends by quoting Newman's rapturous words at the end of his "Discourse to Mixed Congregations":

> Oh! long sought after, tardily found, desire of the eyes, joy of the heart, the truth after many shadows, the fulness after many foretastes, the home after many storms . . . how can you doubt that she (the Catholic and Roman Church) is the messenger for whom ye seek? . . . Come to her, poor wanderers, come to her, for she it is, and she alone, who can unfold to you the meaning of your being and the secret of your destiny.

"Certainly I owe more to Newman than to any one else," writes "A Barrister." After reading Newman another barrister, who became a Roman Catholic priest, was actually able to see "the whole Papacy, infallibility and all, as a corollary to Butler's Analogy." But, he adds,

> The work that settled all my doubts, perplexities, and hesitations was one of a lighter sort. In Loss and Gain I found my fears drawn out and marshalled in dire array; they pressed me close and pierced me through and through. And then I saw my old bugbear, Catholic subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles, in a light new to me indeed, but true beyond dispute. And what an ugly monster it was!—ugly and monstrous, not because it disclosed itself as a baser piece of quibbling than was ever invented by pettifogging attorney (though that was my ultimate and free conclusion), but because I saw that there is something lower than a quibble, and that is a religious compromise.

Digitized by Google

Among the literary influences noted, none is quainter than that of Dr. Littledale's well-known work, Plain Reasons Against Joining the Church of Rome. This book has been regarded as a sovereign specific against the Papistical virus, and doubtless, when taken in time, it has restrained many restive Anglicans and Dissenters from "going over." But just as certain medicines act differently on the same patient according to the stage of his malady, so the Plain Reasons seem to defeat their own end if they are introduced into a mind that is halting on the verge of decision. Their effect, then, is to precipitate the doubter into the arms of the Pope. "Dr. Littledale's work, Plain Reasons Against Joining the Church of Rome, gave me a great push," says one convert, formerly an Anglican curate, "I found it a shameless mass of untruths, misrepresentations, and misquotations." The Rev. Robert Bracey, priest of the Order of St. Dominic, writes: "Among books sent to me at this time was one which was an especial help, and took away the very last lingering doubt—Littledale's Plain Reasons. I compared it with Father Ryder's reply, and it had upon me an effect hardly intended by its author." Another convert and priest is outspoken: "Dr. Littledale's Plain Reasons is a book gangrened with falsehood. These falsehoods have been exposed over and over again by Catholic writers." "This book finally helped me to become a Catholic," says another, who tested its statements by reference to the Latin and Greek authorities; and a professor of anatomy, who took the same trouble, though at first struck dumb by its arguments, was quickly set at rest by Dr. Ryder's equally well-known reply, Catholic Controversy. "And now I should like to know which of those two books made a Catholic of me?" is his comment.

The instruments by which these converts were led into the fold are less important than the attractions of the fold itself. On these we shall say little. The unity and authority of the Roman Catholic Church are, throughout these experiences, the most irresistible and prevailing of her qualities, just as the disunity and lack of authority in the Anglican Church appear to some minds to be her fatal weakness. The ecclesiastical mind necessarily presses toward Rome. It may stop short, but thitherward it must press because all ecclesiasticism outside of Rome is felt to be amateurish even by the most loyal adherents of the Anglican Church. Of course deeper and more heartfelt issues are involved, but few High Anglicans can suppress the feeling that Rome offers that whole of which his own Church offers the part. That is the note of these confessions, and it will appeal to the reader or it will not. But apart from assent and dissent, the book is extremely interesting. Its human touches and humours (if we may use the word) are many. A passage like this, for example, helps one to realise the uses of the Underground, and the complexity and variety of men's business and desires as their faces flash by:

> I went up to London, took the Underground to South Kensington, and, leaving my portmanteau at the station, I went with trembling heart to ring the bell of the Oratory and to ask for "one of the Fathers." A good Father duly appeared in a parlour. "I have come," I said rather feebly, "because I have been for a long time troubled about the claims of the Roman Church. Will you give me some advice?" I was relieved when he laughed: "Well, if you want my advice, of course I advise you to join it!" After this I laughed too, and we were at once excellent friends. The next day (St. Nicholas) I was reconciled, and the day following I made my first Communion.

One good story, and we must make an end. It is from Mr. Kegan Paul's interesting paper, and is applicable to a difficulty very common among those who go to Rome in the flesh before they do so in the spirit:

> A distinguished ecclesiastic was talking in Rome with a lady who, while in England, had shown some disposition towards the Church, but lamented that in the Holy City she had seen much that was to her quite disedifying, and quite unlike the pious practices she had known at home. He replied, "Ah, madame, il ne faut pas regarder de si près la cuisine du Bon Dieu."

We are not sure that the weightiest words in this interesting collection are not those of Lord Brampton (Sir Henry Hawkins). They are very brief and simple, but they reflect the best and final pronouncement of any sincere convert. "It was the result of my deliberate conviction that the truth—which was all I sought—lay within the Catholic Church. I thought the matter out by myself, anxiously and seriously, uninfluenced by any human being, and I have unwavering satisfaction in the conclusion at which I have arrived, and my conscience tells me it is right."

The Claim of the Artist.

Gioconda. By Gabriele d'Annunzio. Translated by Arthur Symons. (Heinemann. 3s. 6d.)

To the plain man, the man who hates all affectations, poses, and exotics, the man who remembers the perfect sincerity and straightforwardness of the classic masterpieces, there is something disconcerting, if not actually repellent, in the first glimpses of this play. It seems to be deliberately unusual, it seems wantonly to annoy that precious instinct of commonsense and social decency which always prevents the man of right reason from appearing too conspicuously different from his fellows. The dedication runs: "For Eleanora Duse of the beautiful hands." Why for, instead of to? Why of the beautiful hands? Is it entirely correct thus publicly to particularise the charms of a woman whom one admires? Why Eleanora Duse at all—after the singular, the unspeakable portrait of La Foscarina in the author's novel Il Fuoco? The stage directions begin: "A quiet foursquare room, in which the arrangement of everything indicates a search after a singular harmony, revealing the secret of a profound correspondence between the visible lines and the quality of the inhabiting mind that has chosen and loved them. . . . Two large windows are open on the garden beneath; through one of them can be seen, rising against the placid fields of the sky, the little hill of San Miniato . . . and the church of the Cronaca, 'la Bella Villanella,' the purest vessel of Franciscan simplicity." The plain man naturally exclaims: "Secret of a profound fiddlestick!" He thinks of Bedford Park, minor magazines of high culture, and all Artiness and Craftiness. He stolidly objects to the commingling of architectural criticism with instructions to a stage-carpenter; there is a time for all things, and he is well assured that d'Annunzio has chosen the wrong moment to inform him that a certain church is the purest vessel of Franciscan simplicity. In one word, one word at once vulgar and unavoidable—Rubbish!

In our quality of being plain, we, too, were irritated by all this circus-caracoling of a soul too self-consciously "artistic." We were continually irritated in reading the play. We had no sooner recovered from the Franciscan simplicity of the Bella Villanella than we were overset by "a pause, burdened with a thousand undefined and inevitable things." We tried to imagine how the page of another play would look if it were rubricated thus:

> Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
> Give me the daggers: the sleeping and the dead
> Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood
> That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,

Digitized by Google

I'll gild the faces of the grooms witha
For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within. A Pause, burdened with a thousand undefined and inevitable things.

Macb. Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me when every noise appals me?

It is a mercy that Shakespeare happened to live before the infected age of artiness! We refuse to consider what Hamlet would have been if Shakespeare had written it under the obsession that no one must for a single instant be allowed to forget what a terrific artist he was and what an inexpressibly deep feeling for art actuated and controlled his least utterance.

We do not wish to lay too much stress on the lesser phenomena of d'Annunzio's productions. But these dedications, these solemn asides, and a thousand other trifles in his plays and his novels, do really point to the gravest defect of his individuality—namely, the tendency to magnify Art (with the majuscule) at the expense of all else, to pretend that nothing is worth aught save artistic beauty and the ability to perceive the same, and finally to go about beneath a banner with the legend: "Watch me, I am an artist, not a man." The fact is, d'Annunzio is as foolishly sentimental about Art as your English novelist is about Love. He can't talk about anything else. He has got it on the brain. He is a creature of one idea.

And having so vented our English spleen against the antics of this excessively self-conscious Latin decadent, we are at liberty to say with all heartiness that, in the essential qualities of imagination and of form, Gioconda is an extremely fine play—nearly fine enough to crush the prejudice which it arouses. Of course it is preoccupied with Art, and of course the hero is an artist. These things must be, with d'Annunzio. Lucio Settala is a sculptor, and at the beginning of the piece we find him recovering from an attempt to commit suicide. Lucio was hopelessly divided in his allegiance between two women, his wife, Silvia, and Gioconda, the woman whom the artist in him loved. He sought death as an escape, but failed. Convalescent, unhappy as ever, he discusses the hopeless situation with his friend, Cosimo Dalbo. Cosimo advises that "goodness will give him light."

LUCIO SETTALA.

Goodness! goodness! Do you think, then, that light must come from goodness, and not from that profound instinct which turns and hurries my spirit towards the most glorious images of life? I was born to make statues. When a material form has gone out of my hands with the imprint of beauty, the office assigned to me by nature is fulfilled. I have not exceeded my own law, whether or not I have exceeded the laws of right. Is it not exactly true? Do you admit it?

COSIMO DALBO.

Proceed.

LUCIO SETTALA.

[Lowering his voice] The sport of illusion has mated me with a creature who was never meant for me. She is a soul of inestimable price, before whom I kneel and worship. But I am not a sculptor of souls. She was not meant for me. When the other appeared before me, I thought of all the blocks of marble hidden in the caves of far mountains, that I might arrest in each of them one of her motions.

And this is part of his portrait of "the other," Gioconda:

LUCIO SETTALA.

She is always diverse, like a cloud that from instant to instant seems changed without your seeing its change. Every motion of her body destroys one harmony and creates another yet more beautiful. You implore her to stay, to remain motionless; and across all her immobility there passes a torrent of obscure forces, as thoughts pass in the eyes. Do you understand? Do you understand? The life of the eyes is the look, that indefinable thing, more expressive than any word, than any sound, infinitely deep and yet instantaneous as a breath, swifter than a flash, innumerable, omnipotent: in a word, the look. Now imagine the life of the look diffused over all her body . . . Imagine through all her limbs, from the forehead to the sole of the foot, that flash of lightning like life! Can one chisel the look? The ancients made their statues blind. Now, imagine, her whole body is like the look.

The tragedy for Lucio consists in the fact that Gioconda is always waiting for him in the studio, of which she has a key. In the studio is an unfinished statue of her, which was to transcend any previous effort. He dare not go and he dare not keep away.

LUCIO.

You should have let me die. Think, if I who was intoxicated with life, if I who was frantic with strength and pride, if I wanted to die, be sure I knew there was an insuperable necessity for it. Not being able to live either with or without her, I resolved to quit the world. Think: I who looked on the world as my garden, and had every lust after every beauty! Be sure, then, I knew there was an insuperable necessity, an iron destiny. You should have let me die.

In the result the wife, braver than the husband, goes to the studio to encounter Gioconda. The meeting between the two women is the best part of the play, a piece of magnificent drama in which not a word is misplaced. In answer to Silvia's repeated and almost hysterical assertion, "He does not love you, he does not love you," Gioconda flings the scornful retort: "Your love cries out like a drowning man." Defeated in argument and recrimination, Silvia boldly and desperately lies.

SILVIA SETTALA.

Enough, enough. Too many words. The game has lasted too long. Ah, your certainty, your pride! But how could you believe that I should have come here to contest the way with you, to forbid your entrance, to face your audacity, if I had not had a certainty far more sound than yours to warrant me. I knew your letter of yesterday, it was shown to me, I know not if with more astonishment or disgust.

GIOCONDA DANTI.

[Overcome.] No, it is not possible!

SILVIA SETTALA.

Yes, it is so. As for the answer, I bring it. Lucio Settala has lost the memory of what has been, and asks to be left in peace. He hopes that your pride will prevent you from becoming importunate.

Then the rage of Gioconda breaks out. "Ah, you have brought him to this! How? How? Binding the soul, like the wound, with cotton-wool? doctoring him with your soft hands? He is unmade, finished, a useless rag. . . . Poor thing! Poor thing! Ah, why is he not dead, rather than the survivor of his soul?" She rushes forward in fury to shatter the beautiful unfinished statue, and to save the statue Silvia cries out that she lied. But the statue is already falling, and Silvia's hands are crushed beneath it. Gioconda flees.

That is the end of the play, though there is another act—an act of much symbolic beauty in which Silvia's child offers flowers to her mother, and Silvia cannot take them because she has no hands. "What a cruel love!" exclaims the half-witted Serenata when Silvia says that she gave away her hands to her love—"What a cruel love!" As for Lucio, he works in the studio, "works, works, works, with a terrible fury; perhaps he is seeking to rid himself of a thought that gnaws him." And Gioconda is still there beside him, silent. So it finishes, a drama of which the mere factual basis has been used in scores of pseudo-artistic novels of the Latin Quarters of every European capital, a story of the very tritest, yet made new and made original by the creative power of an artist who always treats his themes as though none had ever treated them before. The moral which d'Annunzio would have us draw is, no doubt, that Silvia's sacrifice and ruin were part of the tribute which omnipotent art may rightfully demand from life, that Lucio and Gioconda were in lawful possession of the studio, serving Art (with the majuscule), while handless Sylvia could only offer her forehead to the embrace of her child. But we are well aware, and every plain person is well aware, that such a moral is absolutely wrong. No beauty and no force can give authority to the antique pretence that the artist, alone of all men, may obey "his own law" in "exceeding the laws of right." D'Annunzio's play is of "the present time." It is meant for spiritual realism of to-day. But strip off the embroidery of beauty, the verbal charm; forget the dramatic appeal; remove the scene from "Florence and the coast of Pisa" to London. Put the house in Redcliffe-square and the studio in the Boltons. Conceive the actual trio of people; conjure up the very circumstances; and then dare to say that Lucio was not either a scoundrel or a coward, or perhaps both. The moral position is untenable, and if d'Annunzio were fifty times d'Annunzio, he could not hold it against the attack of the simplest soul that lives. D'Annunzio is an extraordinary artist; he can do everything except the impossible; but that he cannot do. And so Gioconda remains a fairy-tale, unconvincing as a fairy-tale, vicious and handsome.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Symons's translation is entirely admirable.

The Rough Drafts of Creation.

Dragons of the Air. By H. G. Seeley. (Methuen. 6s.)

THE fauna and flora of the world before the Flood—or of that world, at least, which we commonly call antediluvian—form a subject singularly fascinating to the imagination. It is a whole undiscovered country reclaimed to our modern knowledge, as fresh and as peculiarly ours as America was to the Elizabethans. For thousands of years this country, say rather this world, has been lost to romance, lost even the tradition of it. For centuries it has lain beneath the daily feet of men, a thin veil of earth more effectual than the spaces which cover the stars. The horses of Timour swept over the mammoth, the imperial feet of Cæsar trod upon the mastodon, the axes which quarried sovereign cities may have laid bare the bones of the plesiosaure—dead sovereignties less lasting than they. Sepulchres and ossuaries have not availed the bones of puissant conquerors, while those of the icthyosaure were sealed for immortality. But the opening of these primeval tombs and sarcophagi of the rocks profited nothing while there were none skilled to translate their meanings. In our own day, when as by a shadow of the final judgment the records of the perished ages are being unrolled, this most antique history is also being read which was before Egypt and the builders of Babel: its strange ancestries are expounded, its monstrous dynasties enscrolled like those of Assyria, its trees rise again from their long frost of petrifaction, its mummies are discased from their swathing of stone.

This is a romance in itself; but the romance which lies in these new and unimagined forms, hidden from the poets and taletellers of all previous ages, and given up to eyes almost satiate with wonders, has yet to find its writers. Perhaps the very vastness of unfamiliarity alarms adventurers; perhaps the difficulty of peopling it with a thinkable human interest holds them aloof. Tennyson has seen its uses for impressive and large allusion—

> Nature brings not back the mastodon,

he has said, and referred to

> The bones of some vast bulk that lived and roared
> Before man was.

Nor can any forget the allusion (in "In Memoriam") to those

> Dragons of the prime
> That tare each other in their slime.

But Tennyson is almost alone even in the use of the theme. In an occasional later and younger poet you may find mention of the plesiosaure or other typical monster. But it is to the tellers of tales we might naturally look for fuller development of this virgin field, and the tellers of tales are as silent as the poets. Jules Verne, in one of his earlier books, gave us a fleeing glimpse of the mastodon and the "dragons of the prime" in the very act of battle, but dropped the half-lifted curtain as if fearful he had pushed beyond his powers.

> I first adventure; follow me who list,

he might have said with the English satirist; but none of whom we know has followed. Where is Mr. Wells? Of all men he alone might successfully attempt this romance of the young earth. He has given us many a romance of the future; will not his time-machine travel backward as well as forward?

When the solitary student, using such time-machines as science has provided him—of which Mr. Seeley's able book now before us is one—travels back into those grey ages, he is bewildered at the novelty of the living world in which he finds himself. Some vague rumours there are of such creatures possibly still lurking in the mysteries of the deep seas: the problematical sea serpent has been surmised by some to be a relic of them. A certain gentleman contributed to a certain periodical an account of his meeting (in a Southern Asiatic island, if we remember aright) with a curious sea beast which, from his description, appeared not unlike to a miniature and modified plesiosaure. But the creature, unfortunately, could not be preserved; and over the periodical in question lies the trail of De Rougemont, forbidding credence to any unsupported story in its pages. (That great romancer, by the way, might have done something with this great field of romance.) In such wild rumours alone do we obtain any preparation for the actualities which science sets down for us in cold blood regarding the infancy of the earth. We have strayed, it seems, into the ancient forge and workshop of nature, where she is busy with her first experiments. We watch her trying her 'prentice-hand on the forms from which, when she has gained in mastery, she will develop the beings that populate our present earth. We see her industriously working at the great main conceptions we now know so well, but which here we can hardly recognise, so mixed and unshapen do they lie. We behold, cast off from her anvil, in bewildering rapidity of succession, shapes so fantastical, grotesque, and terrible, as never peopled the most lawless dreams of an Eastern haschisch-eater: apparitions of intertwisted types and composite phantasms, more and more strange than all the brute-gods of Egypt. We are among the rough drafts of a creation.

When the first strange compound of bill and beast was sent over from Australia (that dustbin where Nature's remnants may still be picked out), there were men of science who would not believe it to be anything but a clever "fake" worked up from the head of a bird and the body of an animal. Yet it is a mere hint, a faded sketch, of the things which once swarmed on earth. Nature then was feeling her way to the ultimate conception of distinct natural orders; and among her other wonderful experiments she invented the pterodactyl. That singular product of her imagination has furnished Mr. Seeley with the materials for an elaborately studied book, which will be hailed with gratitude by every scientific student of his theme. It results from the study, not only of the specimens stored in the museums of Europe, but of a great collection accumulated during years of toil by himself at his own university of Cambridge. To the general reader it will have hardly less interest as a romance in the rough. For the pterodactyl is not bird, nor beast, nor reptile; because it is bird, beast, and reptile—all, yet none.

Digitized by Google

You may see, in fancy, a flying object which at first appears a large bat. But it alights, and, behold! a bat on all fours, with a tail of enormous length relatively to its body. Then that body in shape is rather lizard than bat, and you perceive it stands on long, thin legs, bent inward at the knees like an old man; while from the fore-legs slant upward and backward a pair of folded wings like the triangular sails of a yacht. And the head! Large, disproportioned, clumsy, something like an inflated head of a snake; with eyes seemingly copied from the make-up of the well-known Mr. Chirgwin—the "white-eyed Kaffir" of the Halls. For they are set in a great oval depression of the skull, completing the irresistible grotesqueness of the whole oddity. And now another has flown down near us, of much greater size, and a more marvellous flying machine than the first A long tail like a slender spear-shaft is tipped at the end with a large leaf-shaped membrane, which might be the spear-head—as we see it in the spears of some Australian savages. And the head—like a snake's with water on the brain—has a long bill like a heron's (though differing in shape), which opens and shows long teeth. You now perceive, indeed, that the first creature has also long teeth—long and sharp like a miniature crocodile's. Presently they are gone again, on great, sweeping, membranous wings. The maddening nightmares are pterodactyls.

Disregarding anachronism, we have tried to paint the portrait of two species from different epochs. It is more or less the general likeness of the many species described in this fascinating book. And anatomically the mixture of bird, beast, and reptile is yet more pronounced. Those three great groups are not yet evolved as separate and distinct orders; and this is one of Nature's trials on the road to achieving that evolution. But the evidence in favour of this view, and the relation of the pterodactyl to the dinotherium (another strange composition which is an important link in the chain)—these things must be sought in the book itself. The whole anatomical and evolutional relations and theory of flying reptiles in general are treated with extreme thoroughness; and the view of their evolutionary position, which we have very broadly and generally indicated, is put forward and worked out with great persuasiveness and skill. It is the last and completest word, at present, on the flying dragons.

Sarah.

The Queen's Comrade: The Life and Times of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough. By Fitzgerald Molloy. (Hutchinson. 24s. net)

It seems impossible to have been a much more unpleasant woman than Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough. Yet two people were found sincerely to love her—the weak but warm-hearted Anne (the famous Mrs. Morley of their correspondence) and her husband. That she should have been so much adored by even two persons suggests a kindly strain somewhere beneath the overbearing surface. In the whole of Mr. Molloy's bulky records of her, however, there is not a single charming trait to be discovered—there were none, apparently, to give. The main interest of the two volumes, in fact, is far less in their account of the tempestuous Sarah than in the intimate revelations made of three successive rulers and their Courts.

The unnecessary bitternesses connected with the displacement of James II. are dwelt upon at some length. There is, indeed, a Lear-like desolation in the picture of his final struggle against his own children, and in his daughter Mary's sickening deceptions towards him. As regards, again, the inner lives and personalities of William and Mary, some curiously interesting details are given. They had ugly minds, these two, while Mary at least was such a complicated mixture of naïveté and cunning, gloom and self-complacency, vindictiveness and a futile piety, that it is difficult to know whether to yield finally to contempt or to pity. The outpourings of her journal are almost pathetic, in the unconscious self-revelations made. In one of them she wrote: "Upon everything that happened I prayed and meditated, and found myself grow in grace, for which ever blessed be the name of God." Mary, it may be mentioned, had entered the palace from which she had ousted her father "laughing and jolly as to a wedding feast."

William of Orange is perhaps done less than justice to in this life of Sarah. Brutal he undoubtedly was, but, as an international politician, he effected much for England. In reading Mr. Molloy's descriptions of his singularly unengaging personality, it must be remembered that the results of his foreign diplomacy cannot easily be over-estimated. The Duchess of Marlborough, dominant as her presence naturally is in both volumes, is far less interesting than the successive royalties she badgered so incurably. Her intrigues, ambition, and unworthy and unending quarrels, are already notorious, and the one charming story of which she is the principal figure owes its attraction, not to her own share in it, but to that of her unfortunate husband, the famous Duke of Marlborough. And on the death of the latter she found in a cabinet, where he kept all he most valued, a mass of her hair. Years before, when > furious because he disobeyed her, she resolved to mortify him, and knowing that her beautiful and abundant hair was a source of pride and delight to him, she had impetuously cut it from her head. The shorn tresses had been left in a room through which he must pass, and in a place where he must see them. But he came and went, saw and spoke to her, showing neither anger, sorrow, nor surprise. When he next quitted the house she ran to secure her tresses, but they had vanished, and on a consultation with her looking-glass she saw how foolish a thing she had done. But she said nothing about her shorn locks, nor did he, and she never knew what had become of them until they were found by her among those things he held most precious.

As regards the famous quarrel ending the long friendship between Queen Anne and the great Sarah, sympathy is irresistibly with the former. The final scene between them, however, has a certain dramatic value. The terrified but desperate queen, with her one dull sentence, "You desired no answer and you shall have none," is magnificent in its way. The stolidity of the repetition of this one phrase in the flaming wrath and "disorder" of the other has both the force of contrast and austerity. To retaliate would have been an overwhelming temptation to most.

Other New Books.

A Winter Pilgrimage. By H. Rider Haggard.

The very detailed title of this book (A Winter Pilgrimage; being an Account of Travels through Palestine, Italy, and the Island of Cyprus, accomplished in the Year 1900) sufficiently describes the scope of its contents. It is not a classic of travel; it is not even literary journalism of that superlative distinction which we associate with the name of G. W. Steevens But Mr. Haggard, as a novelist, gives heed to the first and greatest of literary demands, for the traveller no less than the novelist—"Thou shalt not be dry"; and, as a novelist, also, he knows how to observe it. He has an eye for the things which interest, and his book is entertaining—sometimes informing. He believes that he has found the site of the Crucifixion; since the cliff in this spot (the "Place of Stoning," where the Jews stoned their criminals) has a fanciful resemblance to a skull—shown in a photograph. This supposes the cliff to have survived unaltered since the Crucifixion—though there was an earthquake immediately afterwards. At Pompeii he notes an inscription proving that a certain player of farce there was a Christian: and gives amusing samples of the guides published for Western visitors in Italianate English. For instance, a bronze is described:

Digitized by Google

> The counterpoise represents a nice womanish bust with a covering on its head, under which are ivy-leaves; she has her hair curled on her deck. She leans softly on her cheek the index of her right hand, of which the pulse is adorned with a bracelet, and she turns her head on the right. A lamp and a beak; Jupiter, radiated on a disc, leaning on the sceptre and sitting between Minerva, armed with a lame, and the Abundance, with the cornucopia, both seated.

It is a nice "derangement of epitaphs"; and there are others of equal felicity. (Longmans. 12s. 6d. net.)

THROUGH RHODESIA WITH THE SHARPSHOOTERS. BY RENNIE STEVENSON.

The odd thing about South African War books is that, although they are far too many, each can plead, if it does not bear in its very title, a raison d'être. Each has a public. Thus to some readers the record of the long and lonesome marches of Lord Dunraven's sharpshooters must of necessity be the most interesting book on the war yet published, simply because it is concerned with themselves or their friends. But even the general reader, repleted as he is, can turn without dismay to a book which tells its story in only 200 uncrowded pages. Mr. Stevenson's aim is simply to describe the inside working of a squadron on the trek, and a very amusing and touching story he makes of it. The "last post" sounds drearily over a comrade's grave; a Kaffir sells a jug of beer and forgets to bring back the change out of a sovereign; camp humours, canteen talk, scares from hyenas, and difficulties with waggons lend variety to the eternal programme, described by a poetic trooper as:

> Trekking, trekking, trekking, always bally-well trekking,
> From reveillé until lights out, our work is never done.

No troops, we imagine, have seen more of the wild and desolate life of the veldt, jungles, and forests of South Africa than these sharpshooters. One of Mr. Stevenson's most unnerving experiences was losing himself for several hours in the forest, with monkeys jeering at him from the trees. The sharpshooters ran all sorts of risks from wild animals. Sometimes a whole pack of hyenas and jackals would get on their track, as many as fifty of these dangerous beasts following them mile by mile, so that when a man wished to fall out three or four others remained to protect him. Scorpions, tarantula, and vermin afflicted the men in camp. The task of drawing water at night from the nearest river or well was not a comfortable one in view of wild-beast amenities; but the only lion with which our author actually tried conclusions (he fired directly between its eyes) turned out to be a pair of harmless glow-worms.

Some odd things happened. "One dark night, when we were sitting around the fire, a trader glided through the camp riding a white donkey. We were all thunderstruck. We thought there wasn't a white man near us for at least eighty miles. One chap rather aptly expressed our feelings by crying out, 'Here, what's the name of that steamer?' The trader never looked round, but passed away into the night as mysteriously and softly as he came." That story has a weird quality that we like; but, indeed, the whole book is a striking little record of such stern and fearless pic-nicing as Britons love. (Macqueen.)

TO-DAY WITH NATURE. BY E. KAY ROBINSON.

Mr. Kay Robinson, reverting to the precedents of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, prefaces his book with a commendatory copy of verses by Mr. Harold Begbie. It is a book frankly without form—though we cannot add "and void"; a mere collection of brief jottings on "things seen" in nature, arranged in series under the different months of the year, but otherwise without attempt at any thread of connexion. Nevertheless, these notes were worth publication; they are pleasant, interesting, and full of information, the work of an observer with eyes and love to sharpen them. Take the notes on the flight of birds, which show that many heavy birds, slow and clumsy in their rising flight, move at immense speed when they are homing towards a perceived distant spot with a downward flight. He recalls the analogy of a "coasting bicycle," and instances the vulture, with the swan and other migrant birds, nearing the home coast. They sometimes miss their mark, and rebound from the ground to a distance of several feet. Heavy land birds, or such as fly in large companies (including, however, the light skylark) avoid this by turning before they light, their heads facing whence they have come. Again, he notes the courting hare in February preparing for his "March madness":

> Often a couple playing a fantastic follow-my-leader game in and out of the hedges down a country lane will almost run between the legs of a pedestrian before they notice his approach. For the hare, like all hunted animals, has his eyes better placed for seeing behind than in front, whereas all animals that hunt have their eyes placed well forward. The same rule holds good with birds.

He instances the forward eyes of the owl. Seldom, indeed, can you open a page without happening on something you did not know before, and are glad to learn now. A quite charming book to keep by you and dip into. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

HOW OUR NAVY IS RUN. BY ARCHIBALD S. HURD.

Lord Charles Beresford concludes his introduction to Mr. Hurd's volume in these words: "Write books, ye authors, and help the country to insist that the comfort and efficiency of the Fleet shall be commensurate with its great and historic associations!" Which apostrophe we echo, with the reservation that the books be accurate and well informed. Mr. Hurd's book appears to be both. It is popular in tone and style, and particularly popular in its illustrations. The author describes briefly and clearly how the "handy man" lives and fights, how he is dressed and how fed, what pay he receives and what promotion, if he is lucky, he may expect. It will be news to many readers to learn that the Admiralty allowance for paint for a man-of-war is wholly inadequate to keep her in fit condition:

> It is essential to success that the vessel be smart within and without, and the story is told by his shipmates that one officer, now an admiral, spent as much as £2,000 in a three-years' commission in keeping his ship trim. . . . Not many officers spend as much as this. A first lieutenant in a battleship will, however, often dip into his pocket to the extent of £100 to £200 a year sometimes. . . .

This is one of the things which are all wrong, and such books as Mr. Hurd's should have some influence in putting them right. (Pearson. 5s.)

FROM THE HEART OF THE ROSE. BY HELEN MILMAN (MRS. CALDWELL CROFTON).

We hesitate to say that anything which Mrs. Crofton writes is superfluous, yet there are chapters in this book to which no other word would so well apply. The sub-title reads: "Letters on Things Natural, Things Serious, Things Frivolous." These letters range over a variety of subjects, from Matthew Arnold's poems to Mr. G. F. Watts and

Digitized by Google

Magazine Clubs. Many of them were letters received by the author, and included in this collection because, no doubt, they appeared to her to have intrinsic interest. Some of them have, notably one from Mrs. Ritchie, which gives certain particulars about Thackeray's method of writing; others have not. Why "Monica's Tea Party" was included we cannot conjecture; the chapter consists merely of a foolish piece of dictation, which, we are told, was set at the tea-party. But there are things in the book which are quite pleasant, and occasionally delightful. The garden chapters are nearly all good, though we seem to detect a lack of the freshness and friendliness which were conspicuous in In the Garden of Peace. The fact is, that too much is being written about gardens; the subject is too elusive to give any steadiness of inspiration; hence we are nowadays getting book after book which talks of flowers without giving us any of their exquisite suggestion. Now, Mrs. Crofton does sometimes give us that suggestion; and it is because she does that we wish to see her more careful of her delicate talent. (Lane. 5s. net.)

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS IN THE LAKE DISTRICT. BY A. G. BRADLEY.

The pen-work of Mr. Joseph Pennell would alone make this volume delightful. The Lake country seems made for effective pen-and-ink drawing, and Mr. Pennell has taken his opportunities. But the text is also good, providing an excellent itinerary in no stinted fashion, and a due share of those historical and local records without which no book of the kind would be esteemed complete. Mr. Bradley's descriptive work, when he essays it, is as adequate as anything short of genius can make a species of writing which must—with rare exceptions—seem otiose beside poetry on the one hand and such drawings as Mr. Pennell's on the other. It is a thoroughly interesting volume for the library, no less than for the pocket of the tourist. And that can be said of very few books of the kind. (Macmillan. 6s.)

IN THE ICE WORLD OF HIMALAYA. BY F. B. WORKMAN AND W. H. WORKMAN.

This record of mountaineering deserves the second edition it has obtained. It is a vivid and continuously interesting account of how an Englishman, and still more an Englishwoman, aided and accompanied by a Swiss guide, climbed some of the most difficult summits in the great Himalayan range, taking scientific records and photographs on their way. Apart from its interest for professed climbers and geographical experts, the record of natural difficulties overcome is stirring to every reader. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

AN ARTIST'S WALKS IN BIBLE LANDS. BY HENRY A. HARPER.

Mr. Harper was a considerable traveller in Palestine, Syria, and Egypt, and made careful records, both with pen and brush, of what he saw. This volume is made up of selections from work contributed to the Sunday at Home, and appears fairly representative of the best which the author accomplished. His drawings are accurate and suggestive, and the descriptive articles which accompany them are full of information, not too technically stated, about the sacred places of his pilgrimages. These include the modern Jerusalem, Golgotha and Gethsemane, Bethlehem and Bethany, the Dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee. Mr. Harper's method was to conduct his journeyings, as far as practicable, on foot, thus gaining points of view impossible to the ordinary tourist; and it may be added that he appears to have had a knowledge of Palestine in detail, and at first hand, which more ambitious writers on the same subject have not infrequently lacked. The volume is well and handsomely produced, and admirably serves the purpose for which it is designed. (Religious Tract Society. 6s. net.)

Fiction.

Despair's Last Journey. By David Christie Murray. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

IN his later work, Mr. Murray has shown a depth of purpose which was absent from his earlier books. Not that they lacked purpose; but in Despair's Last Journey he becomes something of a preacher and a prophet; it was the same with The Church of Humanity. The present story is in many respects fine: it has cumulative force; and it is full of strong character and observation. It is the history of a man who, largely through his own fault, is brought to the edge of the abyss, but at last renounces his own despair; he grows to the belief that "God's inexorable justice and infinite mercy are one and the same, that the human spirit which has not sinned knows no virtue, that the flower of the soul's hope strikes its root in the soil of the soul's despair"; which is certainly a good text, and not at all bad theology. Mr. Murray follows the career of Paul Armstrong from his first memories of childhood to the period of his great renouncement: it is the story of a life subject to the trifling accidents which make tragedy and the great emotions which so often end in nothing. The accidental meeting with Annette, Paul's foolish drifting, the gradual degradation of the woman, are done with a simple firmness and directness which leave no room for criticism. The whole book turns more or less upon the relations of the sexes; but there is neither prudery nor pruriency in it. It is strong, full-blooded, sincere. As for the minor characters, they are many and distinct. George Darco, the theatrical manager and playwright, rolls and thunders his way through these pages with good effect. We come to believe in the man as much as he believed in himself.

The Secret Orchard. By Agnes and Egerton Castle. (Macmillan. 6s.)

WE seem to have heard some rumour of a play entitled "The Secret Orchard," by Mr. and Mrs. Castle, and there are many things in this book to indicate that it was either founded on a play or written with the idea that a play might at some time be drawn from it. The theatrical scene comprised in Chapters XXXIV. and XXXV., with its sudden electric illumination in the middle, was almost certainly written originally for the stage. The authors have contrived, or got hold of, one of those powerful and terrible plots which no amount of usage can stale. Helen, Duchess of Cluny—a French title—was a beautiful and good American, given up to works of charity. On her beneficent excursions in the neighbourhood of Paris she had frequently met a fashionable wanton who had devoted the leisure left from vice also to good works. This woman died leaving a daughter called La Gioja, aged eighteen, and unspotted, as all thought, by the mud of her mother's reputation. The Duchess of Cluny adopted the girl. The Duchess adored, worshipped her husband, but she was blind to his defects, and this fragment of talk between the Duc de Cluny and a friend shows what one of those defects was:

> "And am I not a son of Adam?" said Cluny petulantly. "My God! and you too! Ah, come, don't tell me you have never slipped into the secret orchard and that you have never known the taste, sweet and acrid, of the forbidden fruit! Oh, you have not been immaculate yourself!"
>
> Favereau straightened himself and fixed a glance of the saddest severity upon Cluny: the ghosts of the errors of his youth rose up before him.
>
> "I have not," he said. But the next moment, under the pulse of a surging thought, his eye flashed, his face became suffused, the veins on his temples swelled. "I have not," he repeated, throwing the words at his companion like an overwhelming indictment; "but I have not been married to Helen!"

Now, of course, La Gioja herself, the unspotted, proved to be one of the light ones in whose company the Duke had visited the secret orchard. The tragedy to follow is instantly apparent, and the core of that tragedy is naturally the disillusion of the Duchess.

Digitized by Google

The thing is well worked out in a style at once theatrical, conventional, and charming. Though a story of to-day, it is done in the romantic vein, with no attempt after realism of any sort. Mr. and Mrs. Castle have accomplished a story by Balzac or Merimée in what we may call a Castilian manner—courtly, artificial, persuasive and effective by calculation.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE LAIRD'S LUCK. BY "Q."

"And other Fireside Tales." Nine go to the book, and the theme of most of them is the romance of war. "Q." can tell a tale, and his touch is as light and free as ever. "The Laird's Luck" carries us back to Quatre Bras; the titles of some of the other stories are "Three Men of Badajoz," "D'Arfet's Vengeance," and "Phœbus on Halzaphron," a Cornish fantasy. (Cassell. 6s.)

LIGHT FREIGHTS. BY W. W. JACOBS.

Sixteen short stories go to this cargo, making the author's fifth book. The mixture is the same as before—light, humorous, genial sketches of episodes in the day's work of river and seamen. "Speaking o' money," said the night-watchman thoughtfully, as he selected an empty soap-box on the wharf for a seat, "the whole world would be different if we 'ad more of it. It would be a brighter and a 'appier place for everybody." (Methuen. 3s. 6d.)

THE BENEFACTRESS.

By the author of Elizabeth and Her German Garden. The lady is also described as the mother of the April, May, and June babies, which sounds extravagant. On page 2 we read: "At eighteen Anna was so pretty that the perfect husband seemed to be a mere question of days." The story tells of a young Englishwoman to whom a German relative leaves a fortune. She takes up her property in Germany and lives there. The novel is light-hearted and amusing. (Macmillan. 6s.)

THE BLACK MASK. BY E. W. HORNUNG.

Sheer yarning of the most unmoral kind. Those who read The Amateur Cracksman will remember Raffles and Bunny, who became burglars from love of naughtiness and excitement. The amateurs have now become professionals, stealing, among other things, a costly treasure from the British Museum, "doing little in broad daylight, and nothing in our own names." Perhaps not a book for an unbalanced juvenile, but all right for a politician or a J.P. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

THE ALIEN. BY F. F. MONTRÉSOR.

A story of middle age, by the author of Into the Highways and Hedges. "I call this a story of middle age because Esther Mordaunt was well into the thirties when she became involved in it; yet, in truth, every event has a long pedigree, and God alone knows when or where any story really began." True. (Methuen. 6s.)

CLEMENTINA. BY A. E. W. MASON.

"The landlord, the lady, and Mr. Charles Wogan were all three, it seemed, in luck's way on that September morning of the year 1719." A romance of the Jacobites, somewhat after the manner of The Courtship of Morrice Buckler. The old Pretender is introduced as one of the chief characters. The book is illustrated by Mr. Bernard Partridge effectively. (Methuen. 6s.)

A GALLANT QUAKER. BY MARGARET H. ROBERTON.

Quakerism! "It seemed to me [the quaint old town of Driverton] to be the very setting required for an old-world tale, and I have therefore taken the liberty of placing my characters upon the stage of this ancient country town." The story tells of a young wool merchant of the seventeenth century, the friend of George Fox and William Penn, who rescues the heroine, a high-born Quaker damsel, from many perils, also of the spread of Quakerism and of early persecutions. (Methuen. 6s.)

THE COMING OF THE PREACHERS. BY J. ACKWORTH.

Methodism! "This story," says the prefatory note, "is written to illustrate the use of Methodism, by showing how that great movement came to a representative small borough, and how it affected the lives, characters, and interests of the inhabitants."

ANGEL. BY B. M. CROKER.

The sub-title is "a sketch in Indian ink," and the story, laid in the North-West Province of India, tells of "a great responsibility—a young man's burden—how he comes to accept and endure it." The motto of Angel is from Coventry Patmore—a stanza grateful and comforting to the Fair:

> A woman is a foreign land
> Of which, though there he settle young,
> A man will ne'er quite understand
> The customs, politics, and tongue.

(Methuen. 6s.)

THE POTTER AND THE CLAY. BY MAUD PETERSON.

The author, we are informed, is "only twenty-one," as if that were a recommendation in the business of book production. Why, Miss Braddon has written as many books as the years of her life (see announcement). This is Miss Peterson's first book. It deals with military life, and the various emotions that the words "love and honour" conventionally describe. (Hodder & Co. 6s.)

FAREWELL, NIKOLA. BY GUY BOOTHBY.

We wonder what the Buddhist priests (novelists are much in debt to Buddha) think of the sallow, hoarding Doctor. For, incredible as it may seem, a Buddhist priest Nikola is now. "When the wind howls around the house at night . . . I see a yellow-robed, mysterious figure, whose dark, searching eyes look into mine with a light that is no longer of this world. To him I cry—'Farewell, Nikola!'" Convincing, is it not? (Ward & Lock. 6s.)

DEBORA. BY J. M. LUDLOW.

A tale of the times of Judas Maccabæus. "King Antiochus, self-styled Epiphanes the Glorious, was in a humour that ill-suited that title." These are the words that rang out from the royal lips: "By all the gods! if Rome has the power, and Alexandria the commerce, Antioch shall be queen in splendour, though it takes all the gold of all the provinces to dress her." (Nisbet. 6s.)

THE SINNER AND THE PROBLEM. BY ERIC PARKER.

A misleading title! "The Sinner and the Problem" are merely schoolboys who fraternise with an artist staying as a guest at a private school in a country place. There is little plot in this bright, well-written volume, which presents the ways and works of two picturesque and rather pathetic boys, and an artist's enjoyment of nature as a background to his own idyll. (Macmillan. 6s.)

We have also received Manasseh, by Maurus Jókai (Macqueen, 6s.); The Marriage of Mr. Molyneux, by Cecil Headlam (Hurst & Blackett, 6s.); A Fight to a Finish, by Florence Warden (Chatto, 6s.); Wheels of Iron, by L. T. Mead (Nisbet, 6s.); Ingram, by Geraldine Kemp (Chapman & Hall 6s.).

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

The Small Writer.

LAST week we helped to inaugurate the first great publishing season of the century, and now we are inclined to pause while the avalanche pauses. A week hence the air will be full of names, titles, ideas, novelties, reputations; we shall be gripped by the new, and well-nigh drowned in the actual. A moment's respite! A little folding of the hands, not to sleep but to meditation! There was, indeed, food for thought in the announcements of new books which distended the last ACADEMY. We think of the waves which have broken and melted before these rolled shoreward, and we are amazed and silenced by the energy of the Press. We recall the "seasons" we have personally known, and we imagine those which wearied our predecessors. We explore the past by some dim, convenient stairway, like the entire set of the Gentleman's Magazine, and observe the ceaseless inflow of books, written, published, and reviewed with what now seems the regularity of a machine. The effort is its own opiate, and we enter into De Quincey's vision of innumerable faces, surging upwards by thousands, by myriads, by generations, by centuries. Moreover, we are brought to regard this remorseless increase of books with feelings of rebellion. Why add to the incomputable, immovable mass of the world's literature? Has not everything been said, and are not all the tales told? Would not fifty new books a year suffice? A hundred? A thousand?

The answer is that they would not. It is easy to say, with an air of wise fatigue, that of the making of many books there is no end. So also there is no end to the multiplication of readers and the awakening of small literary appetites which lead to greater. Moreover, each age requires new books like new coins. Quite apart from posterity, or the net sum of knowledge, it has its own immense business with the author. Its affairs, experiences, problems, whims, and laughter must be reduced to writing, circulated, and discussed. All journalism is not literature, but all new literature is journalism. It answers at first to some real or supposed need of its day. There is not a reprint of Shakespeare that is not addressed to a living public whose predilections have been studied, and the "Temple" Bible, now being organised, is not a casual multiplication of copies of the Bible, but a re-issue of the Bible in a desired form, with desired equipments, and under certain leading ideas of the day. As the water which has passed the mill has no power on the wheel, the literature of yesterday is powerless to keep the world happy and busy. The more wakeful the age the more will it insist on printing its own books, and on reprinting the books of yesterday to look like the books of to-day. As for the books which are really over-produced, they stay on their publishers' shelves, where they cannot grieve the philosopher. But our point is that nearly all new books sell a little, and very many which seem utterly insignificant sell largely. All these contribute to the current, and without their help the mill would move with a slow and creaking motion that we should soon condemn. In a word, the most obvious "book-making" has its defence, and we can carry our contempt for the small writer too far.

The small writer is our theme, and we will yearn on him. Not, indeed, on the small writer of to-day. Our benevolence is not so real as that. Even his wine gains by keeping. Generous and full-bodied it will never be; but in catalogues, and in the sleep of the British Museum's iron-paved galleries, it will acquire a flavour which will one day be found interesting. Little books seem to be justified as they grow musty. Merged in the hue of a past age, their contributory, as distinct from their individual, life can be appreciated. In the same way, small men of no account in their day, and of no intrinsic interest, become significant and endeared by mere lapse of time, as in Horace's seventh epistle to Maecenas, where a lawyer, bored with Rome and replete with fees, sees a well-groomed man in a barber's shop, and idly orders his slave, Demetrius, to run and inquire off-hand his name, friends, country, and estate. And so down the centuries comes Demetrius' report:

> Menas is his name;
> Of moderate fortune, but of honest fame;
> A public crier, who a thousand ways
> Bustles to get, and then enjoys his ease.
> A boon companion 'mongst his equals known,
> And the small house he lives in is his own.

That is all. These thoughts occur in handling a paper-covered instalment of a bibliography of The Poets of Ireland, by Mr. D. J. O'Donoghue. Its pages are full of notes on utterly forgotten and, for most of us, unheard-of poets who yet served the age to which they belonged, writing with all solemnity and intention books which now exhale the faint aroma of dry and dusty herbs. Who now reads or remembers Henry Brooke, author of Universal Beauty: a Poem, published in Dublin in 1735; or Amyas Bushe, author of Socrates: a Dramatic Poem (1759); or the Rev. Robert Baker's Contentment, "a poem in fifteen parts" (1788); or who recalls a book with the rather interesting title, The Poetry of Incident, by W. B. Bayne, an assistant master fifty years ago in the Belfast Academical Institution?

These singers had listeners. Many of them produced book after book. They still have their bibliographer. They arrived as yon last wave arrives, and melted as it melts. For such writers we would set apart a day of remembrance. As there is an All Saints' Day, so there should be an All Writers' Day, on which all authors should be deemed equal, and comprehensively memorable. Some spark of the celestial fire they each had; and is not the existence of that fire a greater thing than its distribution? Hail to thee, CHARLOTTE SMITH, poetess of Sussex and "interesting novelist," whose triumphs, by a useful chance, we find set forth in that curious work (of Lamb approved), The Lounger's Commonplace Book, itself a sarcophagus of withered reputations.

> It is to be lamented that the fine vein of solemn sadness, with which the sonnets of this ingenious woman are so uniformly tinctured, should derive its origin from domestic inquietude; yet, I trust her private calamities have been alleviated or soothed by that public approbation, of which she has long and deservedly enjoyed so considerable a share. Were a work of this writer put into my hand, without her name prefixed, the composition, by internal evidence, would almost instantly point out the fair author. A glowing enthusiasm in the sacred cause of civil and religious liberty, a minute description of rustic scenery, with no ordinary share of knowledge in botany and natural philosophy; winds rushing through dark passages, and interrupting the midnight silence, while the moon casts a solemn light through the Gothic window of an ancient chapel, or between the branches of a waving wood, and the melancholy murmurings of streams at a distance, and the SWEET BIRD OF NIGHT, are objects she apparently dwells on with pleasure, and has introduced with the happiest effect in most of her productions.

But, indeed, every cranny in the history of our literature harbours a forgotten yet once respectable name. Who remembers Christopher Pitt? Dr. Johnson wrote his life, and compared his translation of the Æneid with Dryden's in such terms as these: "Pitt pleases the critics, Dryden the people; Pitt is quoted, Dryden read." Ought not some vague yet formal remembrance to go out to such men? To Thomas Yalden, for instance, whose "Hymn to Darkness" is thus disposed of by the Doctor: "The seven first stanzas are good; but the third, fourth, and seventh are the best; the eighth seems to involve a contradiction; the tenth is exquisitely beautiful; the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth are partly mythological and partly religious, and therefore not suitable to each other." On All Writers' Day we will recite thy tenth and "exquisitely beautiful" stanza, Thomas Yalden, and remember, if we cannot soften, the Doctor's judgment that thy faults were "rather the omissions of idleness than the negligences of enthusiasm." For the Dunciad we would, on a day, substitute a Justiciad. The world has known too long how Pope despised little talents.

Digitized by Google

> Some strain in rhyme: the Muses, on their racks,
> Scream like the winding of ten thousand jacks;
> Some, free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,
> Break Priscian's head or Pegasus's neck;
> Down, down the larum, with impetuous whirl,
> The Pindars and the Miltons of a Curll.

These battues are very fine, but the day of small things may not be wholly despised. The groundlings usually suffer neglect in very good company. "Valancourt! and who was he?" cried Thackeray's younger generation. "Valancourt, my dears he and his glory have passed away. Ah, woe is me, that the glory of novels should ever decay. Inquire at Mudie's or the London Library who asks for The Mysteries of Udolpho now?" Yet four hundred novels are announced for this autumn, and they will have their brief and cheerful day, or hour—those which do not, like Sir Richard Blackmore's epic Eliza, in ten books, drop "dead-born from the press." We can only see and acknowledge that the water turns the mill. If it then passes on to stagnation or to sink in the soil its minimum mission has been fulfilled. The odd thing is that you never know when an author's fame is extinguished. Even as we write, our eye falls on the following query in an American literary paper. Consider its significance:

> MISS CORNELIA C. WHITE, Cazenovia, Madison County, N.Y.: "I wish to inquire if anyone can tell me the author of a book published about seventy years ago. The title is Avon Castle, but I have never been able to find the book nor who was the author. I think it was an English novel."

But the quality by which little writers reach one's sympathies is their hopefulness. A man's book is his child. The whole tragedy of authorship is enclosed in Hazlitt's oft told story of the Mr. Fearn who was "buried in the woods of Indostan." Several notions about states of the mind and some obscure mental processes had taken possession of his brain. He bought the works of the metaphysicians, but found no mention of these things. He eagerly set to work to record them himself, and, when his task was done, "he put his metaphysics, his bamboo MS., into the boat with him, and, as he floated down the Ganges, said to himself: 'If I live, this will live; if I die, it will not be heard of.'" Hazlitt well exclaims: "What is fame to this feeling!" Mr. Fearn's book did not succeed. He was vexed to the core. He said there was a sensible writer in the Monthly Review who saw the thing in its proper light. Hazlitt himself found in the book ideas more subtle and curious than any that had been published since Hume. Mr. Fearn was buried in the woods of Indostan, but his name, by a kindly justice, lives in Hazlitt's essay. Alas! Mr. Fearn is always with us, and the woods of Indostan are very extensive.

Things Seen.

The Bloomsbury Potentate.

WHILE waiting on the doctor's steps for the bell to be answered, I heard the sound of brushing, and, looking down into the Bloomsbury area, I saw a small negro boy busily polishing a boot. He glanced up with a friendly smile, his eyes and teeth gleamed, and I noticed that on his right wrist was a broad ivory ring.

Jenny was rather deliberate that morning, and while I still waited two errand-boys thrust their faces between the area railings and stared down at the little alien.

"Hullo, Blacky!" one said. "Give us that ring."

"Wonder what it's for?" said the other.

Before I could hear the reply the door opened, and I was soon in the doctor's room.

"So you're no longer an Abolitionist!" I said pleasantly.

"No," he answered; "at least, my sister isn't. That's a boy my brother-in-law has just brought from West Africa. He didn't exactly want him, but the boy was wild to see England, and at the last minute jumped on board."

"And what does the ring on his arm mean?"

"O, he's a king's son out there. That's a symbol of authority: at home he has the power of life and death over fifty slaves."

When I came away the boy was still busily at work, but he had changed the boots for knife-cleaning. He cast another merry smile up to me as I descended the steps—the king's son with the power of life and death over fifty slaves.

The Philanthropist.

HE was a sandy, fresh-complexioned man, and he entered the railway-carriage with an air that said plainly—"I'm a talker, and when I want to talk, I talk."

I took cover behind my newspaper, but it was useless. "Beautiful morning, sir," he began. Weakly I dropped my paper, and his eye, having caught mine, held me. "Most extraordinary things happen to us when we least expect them," he began. "This morning, sir, I have been an actor in quite a little drama, and have done, I trust, a service to a deserving person. I was sitting on the sea-front soon after six enjoying the air, when a tramp seated himself at the other end of the bench. We began to talk, and—would you believe it, sir?—that scarecrow was one of the gallant lads who have been fighting their country's battles in South Africa—an Imperial Yeoman, starving, sir, because he could not get his pay. Oh, no! It's impossible to deceive me. I've had a long experience with Charity Organisation Committees. I believed the man's story. You cannot deceive me on those matters. What did I do? What would any man in the position do? I gave him a good breakfast, and then I took him to a tailor's shop, rigged him out, and he's in this train at this moment, sir, on his way to good employment. There will be no difficulty about that. I shall see to it myself. When the Government fails in its duty, the private citizen must step into the breach."

"Did you buy his ticket?" I asked. "No, sir. Begin by trusting a man, and he'll soon deserve your trust. I gave him the money for his fare and a good cigar, which he is now enjoying in a third-class compartment in the rear of the train. When we reach London Bridge I shall take him straight down to the War Office, and tell them the whole story, and if they won't give him his pay I'll find the money out of my own pocket. When I put my hand to the plough, sir, I go straight ahead."

We alighted at London Bridge. The platform emptied. But my friend's cheerful optimism did not desert him. "The poor fellow must have missed the train," he said. "I'll telegraph."

Digitized by Google

Mrs. Browning as Prophetess.

THIS handy little reissue of one of Mrs. Browning's later poems, Casa Guidi Windows (John Lane), has a short preface by a fellow-poet, Mme. Duclaux, better known as Miss Mary Robinson. Mme. Duclaux briefly relates the circumstances under which the poem came to be written, and interprets its spirit with sympathetic enthusiasm. But neither here nor anywhere in the book do we find what is essentially needed in a good reissue of Casa Guidi Windows—explanation of its crowded references to the Italian and Florentine politics of the day; references intelligible enough at the time, but now grown dim as the political references of Dryden and Pope. An unannotated edition of Absalom and Achitophel were but a degree more unsatisfactory. A very little trouble would have removed this defect, and caused the book to supply a real want, which in its present form we can scarcely think it does. For the rest, it is well printed on good paper and satisfactory in all other respects.

Casa Guidi Windows shows the turn of the tide towards Mrs. Browning's final manner, fully developed in Aurora Leigh; which, with all respect to Mme. Duclaux's judgment, we cannot think an improvement on her previous manner. On the whole, it seems to us a decided change for the worse. In this poem it is still tentative, and even Mme. Duclaux frankly admits its deficieney. The poem is entirely political, and not unnaturally it is in Mrs. Browning's rhetorical rather than her poetical style. Few poets can treat a political theme without falling into this style, which it were perhaps more accurate to call oratorical than rhetorical. It takes the lyric power of Shelley to write a Hellas, and even Shelley fell from poetry in The Masque of Anarchy, while he did not uniformly maintain it in The Revolt of Islam. Still, this would be a mere question of species, were the eloquence good, as Mrs. Browning's sometimes is. But in this poem it is strained, tense, excited, often downright shrill. This defect of execution is not mended by the absence of construction. The poem is desultory, a string of reflections conditioned by passing events. It is a woman's meditations on the Italian politics of four years, taking for starting-point that Florentine portion of them which she witnessed from her windows. But her reflections are sufficiently divagatory to embrace the international exhibition at the Crystal Palace, which, as we know, was to inaugurate an era of peace and universal brotherhood. Of course, the poem is intentionally desultory. But to compensate the absence of definite scheme, the wilful invertebrateness of it, there needs a felicity of execution, an inspired caprice, an opulent luxuriance of impulse, which are unfortunately lacking. A voluntary must be very rich in detail to excuse the deliberate lack of unity.

Mme. Duclaux would palliate the shortcomings of style by having us admire Mrs. Browning in the part of prophetess. Now, it is true she prophecies the ultimate triumph of Italian unity, at a time when the cause had come to grief. But it needs no large power of prophecy to foresee that a great national movement, the chief barrier against which is a steadily decadent power like Austria, will ultimately win its way. Moreover, when one's whole hopes are bound up with the success of a cause, it is human nature, and woman's nature above all, to believe that the cause must ultimately triumph, no matter how dark its destinies may temporarily be. What forlorn hope but has had some woman to believe in it? When we come to things less vague and general than the triumph of Italia Irredenta, Mrs. Browning's fallacy as a prophetess seems blazoned large over Casa Guidi Windows. She believed that the day of universal brotherhood was nigh at hand, the era when wars should cease, and thinkers replace fighters as the peaceful warriors of the future. It is there in black and white. Are we any nearer it than when she shared these generous illusions with a crowd of others, who mistook the cravenness of the stay-at-home bourgeois, anxious to fill his money-bags in peace, for a change of heart in mankind?

> The poet shall look grander in the face
> Than ever he looked of old, when he began
> To sing that "Achillean wrath which slew
> So many heroes."

Yet the Poet Laureate is not noticeably a better model for a bust than Homer. Her Britannic prophecies are peculiarly belied by time:

> Send abroad thy high hopes, and thy higher
> Resolves, from that most virtuous altitude,
> Till nations shall unconsciously aspire
> By looking up to thee, and learn that good
> And glory are not different.

Is that precisely the way in which the admiring nations now look up to England?

> No war!
> Disband thy captains, change thy victories,
> Be henceforth prosperous as the angels are—
> Helping, not humbling!

Which would be excellent, were earth Heaven. But even the angels (if we are rightly informed) humble demons. In other words, Mrs. Browning's prophecies represent the current enthusiasms of her age, and are no more nor less right than those enthusiasms. Had she lived, she would seemingly have been a Little Englander—unless, being the child of the enthusiasms of her age, she had been an ardent Imperialist.

But, being withal Elizabeth Barrett Browning, she could not escape frequent lapses into lofty eloquence, or even rank poetry. Ever and again they blow on us with triumphant refreshment. So in the finely summarised description of the nations meeting at the Crystal Palace Exhibition, each with her characteristic product in her hand:

> Imperial England draws
> The flowing ends of the earth, from Fez, Canton,
> Delhi and Stockholm, Athens and Madrid,
> The Russias and the vast Americas,
> As a queen gathers in her robes amid
> Her golden cincture. . . .
> "I wove these stuffs so subtly, that the gold
> Swims to the surface of the silk, like cream,
> And curdles to fair patterns. Ye behold?"
>
> "These carpets—you walk slow on them like kings,
> Inaudible like spirits, while your foot
> Dips deep in velvet roses and such things."—
>
> "This model of a steamship moves your wonder?
> You should behold it crushing down the brine,
> Like a blind Jove who feels his way with thunder."—
>
> "Methinks you will not match this steel of ours."—
> "Nor you this porcelain! One might think the clay
> Retained in it the larvæ of the flowers,
> They bud so, round the cup, the old spring way."

That is Mrs. Browning at her best—the large, masculine way which no other woman has compassed, and which she, ever passionately and daringly trying, only seized aright by fits and starts.

> You should behold it crushing down the brine
> Like a blind Jove who feels his way with thunder.

Of what majestic grasp is that—insolently easy, not to be disdained of Shakespeare's self! No other woman has reached her hand to such things; and Elizabeth Browning could not keep her grasp on them, but clutched desperately for them, capturing them only at moments. She was best when she was content with a lesser scope. But that she could seize such images at times, all honour to her fervid, ultra-feminine soul in a frame too weak! In this poem one sees the influence of her husband beginning, not (on the whole) to her advantage; making her careless of form (of which she was never too careful), and self-indulgent in jerkinesses of style, wherein she tries to copy his native brusqueness and abruptness. The beginning of a decline (as we think) largely induced by her husband; but with splendid flakes of the old Elizabeth Barrett still clinging about her. As, indeed, even in Aurora Leigh, they did not abandon her.

Digitized by Google

An Index to London.*

Charles Lamb's catalogue of biblia a-biblia had in it enough of caprice (it included the works of Gibbon, and draught-boards bound and lettered on the back) to warrant a doubt whether he would have included a list of the streets of London in his Index. He who would have lived in London "shirtless, bookless," and who loved the "sweet security of streets," would not have despised this catalogue and republic of London's place names. We say republic, for in the great inventory just issued by the London County Council there is no distinction of places. Seven Step-alley makes as brave a show as the Strand. The locality, postal district, parish, Metropolitan Borough, and Parliamentary Division to which Seven Step-alley belongs are immediately discoverable. And so through all the hierarchy of London.

To allow the imagination to play over this prodigious list, or to indulge in any line of inquiry, is to begin without hope of ending. The immensity of the field from which the street names of London have been gathered is remarkable. The geographical world, the literary world, the worlds of history and biography, the green country which the streets have replaced, all countries and all centuries seem to have contributed labels to the streets of London. Yet the catholicity of the selections is not more striking than their eccentricity. Thus, the capitals of Europe are strangely distributed. Paris gives its name to three small streets in Lambeth, Poplar, and Horselydown. Berlin-road is obscurely found in Lewisham; St. Petersburgh-place is in Paddington; and Vienna-road in Bermondsey. There are three Roman-roads in London. Lambeth supplies a Madrid-place, and Bethnal-green a Lisbon-street. Stockholm, Christiana, Brussels, Copenhagen, and Jerusalem are all obscurely represented. But for an Amsterdam-street or a Constantinople-street even London has not found room.

Our land and sea battles are well advertised. Seventeen streets named after Waterloo and sixteen after Trafalgar are to be found in London. Others celebrate Quebec, Alma, Inkermann, Lucknow, Magdala, the Khyber Pass, Khartoum, the Congo, and Ladysmith. Even battles in which our arms were not engaged lend their names to quiet suburban streets, as Sedan and Plevna. But here, as everywhere, there is no zeal, no proportion or dignity. If ever an historic name deserved to be borne by a London street it was Lucknow. Yet the only Lucknow-street is found at Plumstead, and dates from last year.

It is the same in literature. Many great names have been casually or obscurely bestowed. Will it be believed that in all London the name of Shakespeare is borne by only two small streets, one in Lambeth and one in Stoke Newington? Milton, Defoe, Addison, and Macaulay are rightly honoured in districts with which they were connected. Dickens is wasted on a small street in Battersea, and the three Byron-streets together do little honour to Byron.

The best-named streets are those whose names were derived naturally from ancient rural names, rivers, monasteries, trade localities, historical houses, and great political personages. In his pleasant introduction Mr. G. L. Gomme quotes examples of these from the works of Dr. Isaac Taylor. Mr. Gomme is certainly right when he says that the most interesting body of street names is found in the City. Names like Poultry, Cloth Fair, Ludgate, Artillery-street, Barbican, Creed-lane, Old Jewry and many more are eloquent of London's past. Central and West London are also full of interesting names, acquired by local association. But attempts to bring in outside associations and thus do honour to personages and events of national importance have been few and rarely successful.

With all their faults the street-names of London form a priceless index to London's history, and the County Council's list makes the Londoner glad that the soulless American method of naming streets by numbers is not ours. It is a fact that Americans are beginning to repent of this method, and to demand something more human. Oddly enough, among the vagaries of our street-names is an attempt which was made on the outskirts of Paddington to name a number of streets on the American plan. First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Avenues may still be found there, but the County Council has wisely suppressed the names of the side streets, for which the ingenious builder went to the alphabet. Thus his A-street has become Alperton-street, B-street has been re-christened Barfett-street, C-street is now Caird-street, and so on up to P, where the chimera ended.

In some way or other nearly every London place name has a human interest. Take the innumerable names of "terraces," "cottages," "houses," and "villas," which a few years ago asserted their individuality along the sides of the great suburban highways. These names have been mercilessly suppressed, and the houses bearing them have been thrown into the general numbering of the road. Yet there is a pathos in these names. They were essentially the pet names of the first builders or owners when the great arteries were being formed piecemeal. Upsdell's Row, Emmett's Cottages, Caroline Place, Bess Place, Artichoke Place, Halcyone Terrace, Harmony Cottages, Pear Tree Terrace, Hobnob Place, and hundreds of such names, now abolished, but here carefully recorded, tell the tale of first ownership in the suburban highways.

The total number of names recorded is 23,000, and it is difficult to over-estimate the value of the list to the student of London. We have touched only the fringe of its interest and suggestiveness.

* London County Council: List of the Streets and Places within the Administrative County of London. Compiled by the Superintending Architect of the Council. (P. S. King & Son.)

Correspondence.

The Irish Brogue.

Sir,—I have read with much interest the clever article in your last week's issue on "The Irish Brogue," and ask space to express my opinions on the matter—opinions gathered mainly from personal experience.

1. It would scarcely appear that Cromwell's troopers to any great extent influenced the "English" spoken by their Celtic neighbours. It is probable that most of the Ironsides came from the heart of the East Midlands (my native district), and spoke much as common folk of that locality did within my own recollection. They would say "yow" for "you"; "gree-at" for "great"; "throm" for "from"; "davvel" for "devil." Tone of enunciation they certainly failed to convey. They would speak "low down" as the clowns of the East Midlands speak to this day. And the Irishman, as a rule, "twitters" his English. I think the peasant of the Pale would have so pious a dread, so holy a hatred of the stern settlers, that as far as possible he would shun contact with them.

2. I have never heard an Irishman say "complate." In certain districts of Ireland the broad "a" sound is given to "ea," but not to "ee" or "ie." The Kerry peasant may say "mate" for "meat," but not for "meet"; indeed, he will pronounce the "ee" or "ie" with beautiful distinctness.

Digitized by Google

3. There has always been a deal of bad "brogue" written by Englishmen. Barham wrote: "Alderman Harmer, and that swate charmer."

G. W. Steevens wrote "praste," evidently assuming that as the Celt says "baste" for "beast," he will say "praste" for "priest," whereas he is more likely to say "priesht."

Thackeray, super-excellent at depicting Irish character, made his Irishmen speak impossible brogue. He blended the barbarisms of a dozen dialects in the mouth of Captain Costigan. Kipling did much the same with Mulvaney. English dabblers in brogue copied Thackeray for years; then they copied Kipling; and when the inimitable Dooley "came to the fore" they took a fresh turn, and made all their Irishmen speak the brogue of Mayo. The broganeer of the English stage is past praying for. I heard at a London theatre the other day Peggy O'Dowd, of Dublin or thereabouts, mouthing a mixture of Cork and Connaught.—I am, &c.,

GEORGE BARTRAM.

SIR,—In the very interesting paper on "The Irish Brogue" in your current number there is, I think, an inadequate reference to the Irish use of the word "sure." It has the sense, no doubt, of "sure" as used by Shakespeare ("Sure 'tis the echo of some yawning grave"), by Dryden ("Great wit to madness sure is near allied"), and Dr. Johnson in the lines quoted. But it has a very subtle meaning besides, somewhat like mais in French, but with more body in it. I may analyse it in this way: It is like "well" in English at times. For instance: "Sure I was going down and I saw the soldiers." Again, it is expostulatory, as in answer to a question: "Why did you not go?" "Sure I did go." Here it is a kind of shorthand symbol, meaning much more than "but" would mean. It suggests: "Why on earth do you say such a thing?" Then it has a gracious meaning, which has no equivalent: "Sure, I'll do myself, don't mind"; "Sure, I told you so." And, finally, it has an emphatic argumentative force: "Sure, that cannot be"—again quite untranslatable.

Your article steers so clear of rocks that I think all these meanings must be in the writer's mind; but no English student of Irish modes of speech seems capable of appreciating these delicate differences. I may add that every meaning has a tone and inflection peculiar to itself.—I am, &c.,

JOHN F. TAYLOR.

Devonshire Club, St. James's, S.W.

"Insanity in Literature."

SIR,—Will you allow me to answer a question put by Mr. E. A. Bennett in the ACADEMY of September 14: "Can anyone swear, hand on heart, that he has not found Le Désastre tedious"?

I can. I read it with breathless interest when it first appeared, and again last year. Les Tronçons du Glaive, the second of this series of P. and V. Margueritte, I find almost as enthralling, though it has not the same sustained interest of narrative. But some of the episodes are very fine. The death of the little Moblot, for example.

And surely it is too sweeping an assertion that there are, "with the possible exception of Zola," only two great writers of French fiction left—Bourget and Anatole France. And to call that exquisite study of a woman's mind and heart, Le Jardin Secret, a fairly good book!

I feel that it may be impertinent in an outsider to write to you; and yet you may care to have for once the views of a woman in the drawing-room, which I take to be the feminine equivalent of the man in the street.—I am, &c.,

PAULINE MELHUISH.

137, Avenue du Roule, Neuilly-sur-Seine, Paris.

The First American Edition of the "Rubaiyat."

SIR,—In the kindly notice of my little Bibliography of Edward FitzGerald, which appeared in your issue of September 28, you seemed to regret the omission of any of the American editions of FitzGerald's works. This omission I shall endeavour to repair in the unlikely event of another edition of the book being called for, and in the meantime I venture to ask for the hospitality of your columns for a description of the first American edition, for a sight of which I am indebted to the courtesy of a correspondent from the States. The title-page and collation are as follows:

"Rubáiyát | of | Omar Khayyám, | the Astronomer-Poet of Persia. | Rendered into English Verse. | Second Edition." | Title-page, p. [i.]; p. [ii. blank]; [Introduction], pp. [iii.]—xviii.; Text, pp. [1]—23; p. [24 blank]; Notes, pp. [25]—30. There is no date, or publisher's or printer's name, and the size is as near as possible that of the second English edition of 1868, which, in the arrangement of its contents, it will be observed it strictly follows. It is bound in very dark blue leather, with cut edges, but whether this is the original binding or not I am unable to say.

Inserted in the book is the printed copy of a letter, dated January 20, 1900, addressed by Mr. F. F. D. Albery to the Editor of the State Journal, Columbus, Ohio, which appeared in that journal on the following day. As it records an interesting chapter in the history of the "Omarian cult," you may perhaps be able to find room for it:

> A communication signed by De Witt Miller and published in the State Journal of the 13th inst., calls for information regarding an edition of the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, printed in Columbus about 1870. I am happy to give Mr. Miller and the readers of the State Journal the facts in regard to that publication, which is no doubt the first American edition or reprint of FitzGerald's version, or of any other for that matter.
>
> Some time in the latter part of 1869, or the early part of 1870, there were living at the house of Mrs. Dr. Little, in this city, Colonel James Watson, General W. A. Knapp, and Mr. E. L. De Witt. At about this time there was published in the North American Review an account of the FitzGerald version, published by Quaritch in London in 1868, and called the Second Edition, which fell under their eyes and was discussed in the way usual to literary folk. The exquisite beauty of the lines, as well as the depth of philosophy contained in the sentiments expressed, struck home, and the readers were captured at once. But the review was only a partial revelation, and did not contain the whole of the FitzGerald Quatrains, and the thirst for more became unappeasable until finally a bookseller in New York was commissioned to get copies of the Quaritch publication.
>
> In due time these came, and they were so fascinated with the whole collection that nothing would do but their friends must also know and love the clear-voiced Persian, who had struck so true a chord. Among their other friends, Dr. Loving, of this city, was soon converted, and as Quaritch had written that the copies he had sent were the last ones of this edition, it was decided to have some copies printed in as near an exact imitation of the original as possible. Colonel Watson took the lead, and the work was entrusted to Mr. Richard Nevins, who soon produced almost an exact copy—accented type and all—of Quaritch's Second Edition.
>
> In the meantime the gentlemen named had asked some of their friends to become partners in the literary piracy, and several others joined their company, among them Henry C. Taylor, W. P. Little, and myself. There were others, but this was thirty years ago (the book was published some time between 1870 and 1873), and memory halts at the door of identification.
>
> There were only 100 copies printed, and of these we each took as many as we cared to pay for, and in time they were distributed among our friends, with no idea that the little volumes would ever become important or valuable.
>
> When Friedrich von Bodenstedt, the German diplomat,

Digitized by Google

poet, and translator of Omar, was in this country in 1881, I showed him my copy and told him something about it, and he was greatly pleased to know that in far-off America, and many years before he had published his translation of the Rubáiyát, there was forming the nucleus of an Omar Khayyám cult. In token of his appreciation he gave me an autograph copy of his most striking version of the Rubáiyát, which I cherish as one of my most valued possessions.

In connection with Mr. Miller's reference to the value of these early editions, it is interesting to note that Colonel Watson saved from the printer's waste-basket the original leaves of his Quaritch, from which the Columbus edition was printed, and which he had cleaned and rebound, and Mr. De Witt has also preserved his copy, and although Mr. Miller estimates the market value of the plain little pamphlet at $100, you may, if you know either of these gentlemen, prove my assertions of the fact, and at the same time see a homely little pamphlet of a few pages, which is worth a membership of the Columbus Club or the price of a good horse.

I am quite sure there must still be in existence in Columbus a number of copies of this pirated Columbus edition, and I shall be glad to have, for possible future use, information concerning these fugitive copies of what FitzGerald himself called an "Epicurean Eclogue in a Persian Garden."

I conclude with an echo of Mr. Álbery's aspiration, and shall be indebted to anyone who can give me information regarding other important American editions, critical comments, or reviews relating to the object I have in view, which perhaps it may be as well to state is the bibliography, not of Omar Khayyám, but of Edward FitzGerald—I am, &c,

W. F. Prideaux.

1, West Cliff Terrace, Ramsgate.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 107 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea in the following competition:

"We publish this week a special supplement, containing publishers' announcements for the autumn season. From the lists therein printed we ask our readers to pick out what, in their opinion, promise to be:

(a) The two most interesting biographies.
(b) The two most interesting works of history.
(c) The two most interesting works of travel.
(d) The two most interesting religious works.
(e) The two most interesting novels.
(f) The two most interesting books for children.

"To the competitor whose selection most nearly resembles that produced by a collation of all replies received a cheque for a guinea will be sent."

After an exhaustive examination of the ninety-eight lists sent in we find that the governing or plébiscite list comes out as follows:

Biography.	Votes.
Graham Balfour. "Life of Robert Louis Stevenson." (Methuen.)	60
S. Paget. "Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget" (Longmans.)	42
History.
Andrew Lang. "The Mystery of Mary Stuart." (Longmans.)	62
W. H. Fitchett. "Tale of the Great Mutiny." (Smith, Elder.)	14
Travel.
H. Rider Haggard. "A Winter Pilgrimage." (Longmans.)	42
E. S. Grogan and A. H. Sharp. "From the Cape to Cairo." (Hurst & Blackett.)	26
Religious.
Rev. John Watson. "Life of the Master." (Hodder & Stoughton.)	41
Rev. Principal Fairbairn. "Philosophy of the Christian Religion." (Hodder & Stoughton.)	24
Novels.
Rudyard Kipling. "Kim." (Macmillan.)	70
Lucas Malet. "History of Sir Richard Calmady." (Methuen.)	38
Children's Books.
Andrew Lang. "Violet Fairy Book." (Longmans.)	49
Carmen Sylva. "A Real Queen's Fairy Book." (Newnes.)	20

The list which most nearly approximates to the above has been sent in by Mr. George Salmon, Lanherne, Chelston, Torquay. Mr. Salmon's list, containing nine out of the twelve books in the general selection, is as follows:

(a) "Life of R. L. Stevenson." (Graham Balfour)
"Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget."
(b) "The Mystery of Mary Stuart." (Lang.)
"The Tale of the Great Mutiny." (Fitchett.)
(c) "A Winter Pilgrimage." (Rider Haggard.)
"Armenia—Travels and Studies."
(d) "The Life of the Master." (John Watson, D.D.)
"Roads to Rome."
(e) "Kim."
"Sir Richard Calmady."
(f) "The Violet Fairy Book."
"The Woodpigeons and Mary." (Mrs. Molesworth.)

Continuing the plébiscite selections, we find that the next most popular books in each class are as follows:

Biography.
R. Barry O'Brien	"Lord Russell of Killowen"
H. Furniss	"Confessions of a Caricaturist."
Hilaire Belloc	"Robespierre."
Leslie Stephen	"Life and Letters of John H. Green."
Herbert Paul	"Life of Gladstone."
Sidney Lee	"Dictionary of National Biography" Supplement.
History.
Justin McCarthy	"The Reign of Queen Anne"
R. Garnett and V. E. Gosse	"Illustrated History of English Literature."
J. R. Green	"Oxford Studies."
H. Traill	"Social England."
Edwin Hodder	"Life of a Century."
J. M. Stone	"Mary I., Queen of England."
Travel.
Ed. Vizetelly	"Cyprus to Zanzibar."
Douglas Sladen	"In Sicily."
Mrs. Alec Tweedie	"Mexico as I Saw It."
J. E. S. Moore	"To the Mountains of the Moon."
L. Bernacchi	"To the South Polar Regions."
Cuninnghame Graham	"A Vanished Arcadia."
Religious.
Dr. Robertson Nicoll	"The Church's One Foundation."
H. Fielding	"Hearts of Men."
Olive and Herbert Vivian	"The Romance of Religion."
Dr. Parker	"The Pulpit Bible."
Author of "Ten Years in Anglican Orders."	"Roads to Rome."
Andrew Lang	"Magic and Religion."
Novels.
Author of "An Englishwoman's Love Letters"	"A Modern Antæus."
Hall Caine	"The Eternal City."
Author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden"	"The Benefactress."
Maurice Hewlett	"New Canterbury Tales."
D. Merejkowski	"The Death of the Gods."
S. J. Weyman	"Count Hannibal."
Children's Books.
G. A. Henty	"With Roberts to Pretoria."
R. Kearton	"Strange Adventures in Dicky-Bird Land."
Mrs. Molesworth	"The Woodpigeons and Mary."
Florence and Bertha Upton	"The Golliwogg's Auto-go-Cart."
Walter Crane	"Goody Two Shoes Picture-book."
Author of "Story of Little Black Sambo"	"Story of Little Black Mingo."

Competition No. 108 (New Series).

Apropos of our article on another page, "The Small Writer," we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best "Ode to Forgotten Authors." The treatment of the subject is left entirely to competitors. Length, 32 lines or less.

Rules.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, The Academy, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, October 16. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the third page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

UNIFORM WITH "THE EDINBURGH WAVERLEY."

LIMITED TO 1,000 COPIES. TO BE SHORTLY PUBLISHED.

LOCKHART'S LIFE OF SCOTT.

THE EDINBURGH EDITION.

In 10 volumes, blue linen, with morocco label, gilt lettered, gilt top; or blue linen, with artistic design by Paul Woodroffe, gilt top. Either style, 10s. 6d. net per volume.

The unique series of 100 PHOTOGRAVURES here given include all the Notable Men and Women of the last Brilliant Epoch of Scottish National Life. By kind permission of the Hon. Mrs. MAXWELL-SCOTT, the whole of the fine collection of Portraits at ABBOTSFORD (never before reproduced) has been placed at the disposal of the Publishers. A complete list is given in the Prospectus.

The Text adopted is that of the Revised Edition published in 1839, in Ten Volumes. The Corrections and Emendations which were made by Lockhart in the Condensed Life published in 1848 will be given in Footnotes.

The paper and type are the same as used for the "EDINBURGH WAVERLEY."

ORDERS now being received. SPECIMEN VOLUMES at the Booksellers'.

THE EDINBURGH WAVERLEY.

UNIFORM WITH THE "EDINBURGH STEVENSON."

THIS EDITION IS LIMITED TO 1,000 COPIES, AND IS BEING RAPIDLY EXHAUSTED.

In 48 vols., buckram, red morocco label, gilt lettered, gilt top, printed by Constable, in large type, on pure rag paper, price 6s. per vol. net.

Each volume contains a photogravure frontispiece and a full and scholarly glossary. The portraits embrace about twenty authentic portraits of Sir Walter Scott (some never before reproduced). Portraits of prototypes of characters and of historical personages portrayed in the Novels—a unique collection. The portraits in this edition and in the Edinburgh Lockhart have been selected by Mr. J. L. CAW, of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

Volumes I.-XII. now published.

"It is an edition with which Ruskin would have been delighted."
St. James's Gazette.

SPECIMEN VOLUMES at the Booksellers.

RE-ISSUE in four handy volumes, cloth, gilt tops, at 12s. 6d. net the set.

THE CENTENARY BURNS.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY and T. F. HENDERSON.
TEXT, NOTES, INDICES, GLOSSARIES, and Mr. HENLEY'S ESSAY, all as in ORIGINAL EDITION.
Photogravure Portrait as Frontispiece to each volume.

"It is a rare satisfaction to say that we possess at last the definite final edition of Burns."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATED EDITION, with 20 Original Etchings by WILLIAM HOLE, R.S.A., 12 authentic Portraits in Photogravure, and Facsimile Reproductions of MSS., IS STILL ON SALE, in 4 volumes, buckram, gilt tops, at 10s. 6d. each net.

ORIGINALLY PUBLISHED in 6 Volumes at £3.
NOW ISSUED, in 1 volume of 1,764 pp., cloth, 12s. 6d. net; half-bound, 15s. net

THE ORDNANCE GAZETTEER OF SCOTLAND.

An Accurate and Graphic Description of Every Place in Scotland, Statistical, Biographical, and Historical.
Edited by FRANCIS H. GROOME.
With Large Map of Scotland and Appendix giving Abstract of the Census of 1901
This New Edition contains the entire Text of the expensive Edition, with all the very full revisions of 1895 and later.

"A monument of Scottish topography."—Scotsman.

Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net per volume.

THE CENTURY BIBLE

(ANNOTATED).
General Editor—Professor W. F. ADENEY, M.A.

"This beautiful and valuable New Testament series."—The Bookman.

LEADING FEATURES—

1. Beautiful Pocket volumes.
2. Authorised Version in large type.
3. Revised Version (by arrangement with the Oxford and Cambridge Universities), very fully Annotated.
4. Introduction and Index to each volume.
5. Each volume complete in itself, with Map.
6. Printed at Oxford Press on pure rag paper.

The VOLUMES NOW READY are—

MATTHEW. By Professor W. F. SLATER, M.A.
LUKE. By Professor W. F. ADENEY, M.A.
JOHN. By Rev. J. A. M'CLYMONT, D.D.
ROMANS. By Rev. A. E. GARVIE, M.A.
PASTORAL EPISTLES. By R. F. HORTON, D.D.

Any volume may be purchased separately.

AN EDITION DE LUXE IN HANDY VOLUMES.
LARGE TYPE. ANNOTATED.
Price 2s. per vol. net.

THE WINDSOR SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by HENRY N. HUDSON, LL.D.

The Frontispiece to each volume is in photogravure. The volumes are bound in cloth, gilt tops, with beautiful design in gold. Any volume may be purchased separately.

The following volumes are ready:—
HAMLET.—CORIOLANUS.—MACBETH.—ROMEO AND JULIET.—JULIUS CÆSAR.—AS YOU LIKE IT.—A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.—MERCHANT OF VENICE.

T. C. & E. C. JACK, Causewayside, EDINBURGH,
OR ANY BOOKSELLER.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

RUDYARD KIPLING'S

NEW BOOK. KIM. Illustrated by J. LOCKWOOD KIPLING.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY FREDERIC HARRISON, M.A

GEORGE WASHINGTON,

and other American Addresses.
By FREDERIC HARRISON, M.A.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Ready on Tuesday.

LIBRARY OF ENGLISH CLASSICS.—New Volume.

SELECT WORKS OF

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,

Comprising THE VICAR of WAKEFIELD, PLAYS, and POEMS. Edited by A. W. POLLARD. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. net.

NEW BOOK BY CHARLES W. WOOD.

GLORIES OF SPAIN.

With 85 Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. net.

Sheffield Telegraph.—"A book to get, a book to read, and a book to keep."

NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s. each.

By the AUTHOR of "ELIZABETH and her GERMAN GARDEN."

THE BENEFACTRESS.

Mr. COURTNEY in the Daily Telegraph.—"It is difficult to describe by any single epithet the peculiar charm which surrounds the work of the authoress of 'Elizabeth and her German Garden.'.....Quiet, tender, incisive, humorous..... Triumphantly successful."

ROSA N. CAREY.

HERB OF GRACE.

Globe.—"Told in the writer's best and most popular manner."

AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE.

THE SECRET ORCHARD.

World.—"The persons are all well drawn, and the interest is great."

STEPHEN GWYNN.

THE OLD KNOWLEDGE. [Ready on Tuesday.

ERIC PARKER.

THE SINNER AND THE PROBLEM.

S. WEIR MITCHELL.

CIRCUMSTANCE.

EVELYN SHARP.

THE YOUNGEST GIRL IN THE SCHOOL.

NEW UNIFORM EDITION OF
THE WORKS OF

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

Reprinted from the First Editions, with all the Original Illustrations, Facsimiles of Wrappers, &c.
In crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per Volume.
Vol. I. VANITY FAIR. With Illustrations by the Author.

THE BORDER EDITION OF

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Edited by ANDREW LANG.

With 250 New and Original Illustrations by Eminent Artists. Complete in 24 vols., crown 8vo, green cloth, 3s. 6d. each. Also an Edition with the ORIGINAL ETCHINGS, in Fortnightly Volumes (19 ready), tastefully bound in cloth gilt, 6s. each.

LATEST VOLUME.

THE BETROTHED and THE TALISMAN.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Digitized by Google

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

 On receipt of a post-card Mr. Unwin will furnish the address of a local bookseller where any of his books may be examined.

THE FINEST ART BOOK OF THE SEASON.

GIOVANNI SEGANTINI. By L. VILLARI. The Story of his Life, together with 75 Reproductions of his Pictures in half-tone and Photogravures. In box, £1 1s. net.

"Giovanni Segantini is perhaps the only artist who succeeded in truly rendering the spirit and pathos of the High Alps. With little or no artistic education, save for a few courses in drawing at the Milan Academy, he owed his artistic development and success entirely to his own unaided efforts. His life as an artist was spent first among the 'Prealpi' of Lombardy, where he painted the lives and labours of the peasants among whom he lived, and then among the snow-fields and glaciers of the Grisons. His pictures were kept in iron cases scattered about on the mountain side, and he went to work, now at one, now at another, according to the effects. He worked in the open air summer and winter, even when the snow was several feet deep, and his colours froze as he laid them on the canvas. His last illness was contracted while painting his great triptych, which was to be the compendium of the life of man and animals and nature in the Alps. His death was a great loss to art, for he was but forty years of age when he died; and to Italy, for he was undoubtedly one of her greatest modern painters. The story of his life and works is set forth in these pages by Mr. L. Villari."

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

NOVEMBER ISSUE, price 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY

H. G. WELLS. | A. G. HALES.
ALBERT CHEVALIER. | S. L. BENSUSAN.
MRS. MARY E. MANN. | WILLIAM BARRY.
And others.

Uniform with "The Heart of the Empire."

ALCOHOLISM — A STUDY in Heredity. By G. ARCHDALL REID, M.B., C.M., F.R.S.E., Author of "The Present Evolution of Man," &c. Cloth, 6s. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

BEFORE the GREAT PILLAGE, and other Essays. By AUGUSTUS JESSOPP, D.D., Author of "The Coming of the Friars," &c. Illustrated. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

ITALIAN CHARACTERS in the EPOCH of UNIFICATION. By Countess E. MARTINENGO CÆSARESCO. Cheap Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

CHEAP RE-ISSUE OF MRS. BRIGHTWEN'S BOOKS.

WILD NATURE WON by KINDNESS — MORE ABOUT WILD NATURE — INMATES OF MY HOUSE AND GARDEN — GLIMPSES INTO PLANT LIFE. Illustrated. Cloth, 2s. each.

A NEW LARGE EDITION JUST READY.

A JILT'S JOURNAL. By "RITA," Author of "Vanity: the Confession of a Court Modiste." 6s.

LOUIS BECKE'S NEW BOOK.

YORKE the ADVENTURER. By LOUIS BECKE, Author of "By Rock and Pool," &c. (UNWIN'S GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.) 6s.

THE WOULDBEGOODS. Being the Further Adventures of the Treasure Seekers. By E. NESBIT, Author of "Nine Unlikely Tales." With many Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 6s.

A DOUBLE CHOICE. By JAMES BAKER, Author of "John Westacott," &c. Second Edition. Cloth, 6s.

THE BOURGEOIS. By H. DE VERE STACKPOOLE. Cloth, 6s.

OLD DUTCH TOWNS and VILLAGES of the ZUIDERZEE. By W. J. TUIN and J. G. VELDHEER. With many quaint Woodcuts. Cloth, 2ls.

1s., paper; 2s., cloth.

The LETTERS of HER MOTHER to ELIZABETH — DE OMNIBUS. By BARRY PAIN. — THE GODS, SOME MORTALS, and LORD WICKENHAM. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBES. — ANOTHER ENGLISHWOMAN'S LOVE-LETTERS. By BARRY PAIN.

A New List descriptive of Mr. UNWIN'S AUTUMN BOOKS is just ready, and will be sent to any address post free on application.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

WORKS BY PROF. ADOLF HARNACK.

Now Ready, SECOND EDITION, THIRD THOUSAND

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.; half leather, 12s. 6d.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

By ADOLF HARNACK,
Rector and Professor of Church History in the University, Berlin.

Translated by THOMAS BAILEY SAUNDERS.

"Seldom has a treatise of the sort been at once so suggestive and so stimulating. Seldom have the results of so much learning been brought to bear on the religious problems which address themselves to the modern mind."—Pilot.

"Any one who reads the book will find it thoroughly religious in tone, full of real and living interest in mankind, and marked by signs of deep conviction as to the truth of Christianity in the sense in which Prof. Harnack understands it."—Guardian.

"These lectures are most remarkable, both for the historical insight they display and for their elevation of tone and purpose."—Literature.

"Magnificently translated by Mr. Saunders.... These academical discourses are in parts more like passionate mission preaching. The eloquence carries one away."—Church Times.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

7 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £3 13s. 6d.; half-leather, £4 7s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF DOGMA.

By Dr. ADOLF HARNACK.

Translated from the Third German Edition.

Edited by the late Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D.

"No work on Church History in recent times has had the influence of Prof. Harnack's 'History of Dogma.'"—Times.

"The first volume of this great 'History of Dogma' we reviewed some time ago, and it gives us equal pleasure to call attention to this.... We take our leave of this volume by once more calling the attention of our readers to the admirable series of which it forms in itself one of the most important issues."—Quarterly Review.

NEARLY READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 4s.

MONASTICISM:

Its Ideals and History;

AND

THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE.

Two Lectures by ADOLF HARNACK.

Translated into English by E. E. KELLETT, M.A., F. H. MARSEILLE, Ph.D., M.A.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 2 vols., 16s. per set.

MYTHS OF GREECE EXPLAINED AND DATED.

An Embalmed History from Uranus to Perseus, including the Eleusinian Mysteries and the Olympic Games.

By GEORGE ST. CLAIR,
Author of "Creation Records," "Buried Cities and Bible Countries," &c.

"Mr. St. Clair gives an explanation of the myths of Greece that is universally applicable, and yet does not suffer as the sun and dawn theory does, from the fact that the same allegory is found repeated indefinitely. The case is a strong one, argued with ingenuity and industry, and capable of being understood by readers whose astronomical knowledge is slight."—Scotsman.

"The book is a remarkable product of industry, ingenuity, and erudition. It overflows with conjecture, but it is also a mine of information and a work that may be studied with unfailing satisfaction and delight."—Notes and Queries.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. Finally Revised, with Portrait. 11th Thousand	16s.
PRINCIPLES of BIOLOGY. 2 vols. Revised and Enlarged. 6th Thousand	36s.
PRINCIPLES of PSYCHOLOGY. 2 vols. 5th Thousand	36s.
PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I. 4th Thousand	21s.
Ditto. Vol. II. 3rd Thousand	18s.
Ditto. Vol. III. 2nd Thousand	16s.
PRINCIPLES of ETHICS. 2 vols. 2nd Thousand	37s. 6d.
JUSTICE. (Separately)	6s.
THE STUDY of SOCIOLOGY. 21st Thousand	10s. 6d.
EDUCATION. Library Edition. 7th Thousand	6s.
Ditto. Cheap Edition. 41st Thousand	2s. 6d.
ESSAYS 3 vols. 6th Thousand. Each vol.	10s.
SOCIAL STATICS and MAN v. STATE	10s.
THE MAN v. THE STATE. (Separately.) 14th Thousand	1s.
VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. Enlarged Edition	6s.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 7, Broad Street Oxford.

Messrs NISBET & CO. have just published the Complete Edition of

The Dolly Dialogues.

By ANTHONY HOPE.

A New Series, with 4 New Dialogues, and with 8 fine Illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

NOTE.—A SPECIAL PRESENTATION EDITION, printed on large paper, of demy 8vo size, with 18 fine Illustrations by Mr. Christy, and with a beautiful binding specially designed, 10s. 6d. net.

The Childhood of Queen Victoria.

6s. By Mrs. GERALD GURNEY. 6s.

Daintily bound and illustrated with several Portraits.

"It has been left for Mrs. Gurney to lift a veil from the child life of Queen Victoria, which enables one to get a knowledge of her Majesty's education such as no previous biographer has been in a position to furnish."—Scotsman.

Unstoried in History.

Portraits of some Famous Women of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries.

6s. By GABRIELLE FESTING. 6s.

"It is a book you will read to the last word, and thank the writer."—Academy.

A Union of Hearts.

6s. By KATHARINE TYNAN. 6s.

"It may be doubted if ever Katharine Tynan herself has written a more fascinating tale."—Scotsman.

"Mrs. Hinkson's agreeable writing is seen at its best in this simple and touching story, which can hardly be read without pleasure."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Wheels of Iron.

By L. T. MEADE. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

Lord Roberts:

A Life for Boys.

By VIOLET BROOKE-HUNT.

Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

"The book is one which boys of all ages will readily devour."—Westminster Gazette.

The Key to the Riddle.

A Historical Story of Huguenot Days.

By MARGARET COMRIE.

Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

"Introduces some exceedingly interesting characters, whose adventures captivate our interest and sympathy from the outset, and do not relax their hold on them till the very end."—Glasgow Herald.

Second Large Edition, completing 20,000, in the press.

The Story of Little Black Mingo:

A Coloured Book for Children.

By the AUTHOR of "THE STORY of LITTLE BLACK SAMBO."

In decorative cloth binding, super-royal 32mo, 1s. 6d.

This little picture story book is a companion to "Little Black Sambo," which has attained such great popularity.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD, 21, Berners Street, W.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1537. Established 1869. 19 October, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

A PARAGRAPH about the serious condition of Ibsen's health has run round the Press lately. We were told, on the authority of a letter written by Dr. Georg Brandes, that he had but a few weeks to live, that he had written an apologia, and, in a fit of rage, had burnt it, with other details. We now learn, on the authority of Mr. Archer, who has been at some pains to get at the facts, that the letter from Dr. Brandes was a fabrication from beginning to end, and that Ibsen, so far from being in extremis, is "able to take daily drives, and is in very fair health for a man of his years."

MR. KIPLING was not very happy in his poem of eleven stanzas, called "The Reformers," which he published in the Times last Saturday. It was merely an amplification of this "extract from a private letter" which prefaced the poem:

> The men who have been through this South African mill will no longer accept the old outworn explanations. They know too much, and it is to them we must look, when they come back, for the real work of reform in every direction.

Here are the final stanzas:

> The yoke he bore shall press him still,
> And long ingrained effort goad
> To find, to fashion and fulfil
> The cleaner life, the sterner code.
>
> Not in the camp his victory lies—
> The world (unheeding his return)
> Shall see it in his children's eyes
> And from his grandson's lips shall learn!

Does Mr. Kipling really believe that fighting in South Africa is a spiritual purge for our soldiers?

WE rather like Dr. Duff, of Bradford. He complained to the Congregational Union on Thursday that there is not "a really good bookshop in the West Riding." By that the learned doctor proceeded to explain that he meant that "there was no shop into which you could walk and ask to see what they had on Plato." Dr. Duff may care to know that even in mighty London they will offer you Letts's as a substitute for Pepys's Diary, which "we don't stock, Sir."

IF British writers were in the habit of settling their differences with the duelling sword, we should, probably, be looking forward to a graceful encounter between Mr. Andrew Lang and Mr. Stephen Gwynn. Apropos of Mr. Lang's Life of Tennyson, Mr. Gwynn, in the Daily News, makes himself the mouthpiece of "the younger critics," about whose ways Mr. Lang seems to be in some distress. Certainly there would be an encounter between Mr. Lang and "W. R. N.," of the British Weekly, who remarks: "It is with a kind of despair that one reads and criticises this book. Below a certain depth Mr. Lang could not possibly sink. In his most jaded hour he would have something worth hearing to say on almost any subject. . . ." Both Mr. Lang and "W. R. N." have had many duelistic experiences—with the pen.

MR. QUILLER COUCH will write on George Eliot for Messrs. Blackwood's series of Modern English Writers, in the place of Mr. Sidney Lee, who has been obliged to relinquish the task owing to ill-health.

THE play which Mr. W. B. Yeats and Mr. George Moore have written in collaboration for the Irish Literary Theatre movement is being rehearsed by Mr. Benson's company, and will be produced in Dublin at an early date.

HERE is a novelty in autobiographies. Mr. W. M. Rossetti has prepared a blank verse translation of the autobiography that the father of Dante Gabriel Rossetti wrote in "poetic Italian."

NOT the least interesting portions of Mr. Graham Balfour's Life of R. L. Stevenson (just published) are the references to the literary projects that were never carried out. After the production of Deacon Brodie Stevenson proposed to busy himself with the following plays:

> "Honour and Arms": Drama in Three Acts.
> "The King of Clubs": Drama in Four Acts.
> "Pepy's Diary": Comedy.
> "The Admirable Crichton": Romantic Comedy in Five Acts.
> "Ajax": Drama in Four Acts.
> "The Passing of Vanderdecken": (Legend!) in Four Acts.
> "Farmer George": Historical Play in Five Acts.
> "The Gunpowder Plot": Historical Play.
> "Marcus Aurelius": Historical Play.
> "The Atheists": Comedy.
> "The Mother-in-Law": Drama.
> "Madam Fate": Drama in a Prologue and Four Acts.
> "Madam Destiny."

"Farmer George" was to have covered the whole reign of George the Third, ending with a scene in which the mad king recovered for a while his reason.

IT is reported that a woman publisher has begun business, and has the satisfaction of seeing her name on title-pages. Not only is she her own publisher, but she is her own advertisement manager and "traveller." Why not?

A Real Queen's Fairy Book is certainly a good title for the volume of fairy tales which the Queen of Roumania is about to publish through Messrs. Newnes.

THE following will be the first three productions by the Stage Society this winter:

> "Mrs. Warner's Profession," by Bernard Shaw.
> "The Marrying of Ann Leete," by H. Granville Barker.
> "La Nouvelle Idole," by François de Curel.

WE take the following from the Daily Mail:

> At the annual meeting of the Christian Foreign Missionary Society at Minneapolis, yesterday, the treasurer's report showed that there was a decrease of over £20,000 compared with the report of a year ago.
>
> The chairman of the society said that Mr. Mark Twain was directly responsible for this falling-off, through his criticisms of missionary work.

Digitized by Google

No writer of fiction who has anything to say is likely to escape notice in these days. Even comparatively obscure foreign novelists are watched from afar, and if their works can be sold they are immediately translated. Probably very few English people have heard of Peter Rosegger, the Austrian novelist. His tale called The Foreign Schoolmaster has just been issued by Messrs. Putnams with an autobiographical preface, from which we glean some quaint particulars of Rosegger's rise in the world. Born in Steinmark, Austria, he was apprenticed to a travelling tailor—no bad way, we should think, of preparing to write stories. But of story-writing as a profession young Rosegger had not even a glimmering idea. Yet he loved books, and seems instinctively to have acted on Buffon's maxim: "When I want a book, I write one." In his peasant hut, or in his workshop, amid the resinous odours of the forest, or wherever he might be, the boy communed with himself, pen in hand, and brought forth a whole library of books. There were twenty-four "magnificent volumes," all written with ink made from soot, and illustrated with pencil drawings, which he coloured with a brush made from his own hair. At last, when he was twenty-six years old, Rosegger awoke and remembered and understood; in short, he resolved to lead the literary life. As a first step, he married and produced children. His wife died, but his work was his salvation; he built himself a little house and married again. "More children came, and, as my hair whitened, I was surrounded by a lively circle of gay, young people." Incidentally, Rosegger wrote forty volumes, edited a monthly magazine for twenty-three years, and gave readings from his works. He says his books are not so impassioned as they were; but he hopes the critics will call them Frisch Wasser. Which seems very "good going."

THE Literary Agent is again being asked to show cause why he should not be abolished. Apropos of which, a writer in the Weekly Sun tells an amusing story. A certain well-known London editor does not like to do business with Literary Agents. He was starting a new periodical, and wrote to a well-known author for a short story. "Of course," said the well-known author, "you can have a short story. Go to my agent and arrange terms." The editor wrote back: "I never deal with agents. I consider it wrong in principle. An author ought to be able to do his own business without the intervention of an agent." The author was annoyed, and wrote that he understood the editor's new periodical was to appear next Monday. "That is so," returned the editor. "What of it?" "Oh, nothing," replied the author, "only, as I respect your scruples about dealing with agents, I shall decline to order your periodical from the newsagent, and will buy it from you direct if you will be waiting for me on my doorstep about ten o'clock next Monday." The rest was silence.

OUIDA'S dispute with Messrs. Chatto & Windus raises an interesting question to which there are two sides. As the owners of the copyright in Ouida's novel Wanda, Messrs. Chatto & Windus sold the dramatic rights in the story to Mr. Walter Reynolds, whose dramatic version of the story, called "The Sin of a Life," is being played at the Princess's Theatre. Ouida wrote indignantly to the Morning Post complaining of this use of her story, remarking: "I should have supposed that 'copyright' included solely the power to produce a work in book form, and reproduce it in similar form; it seems impossible to me that the word 'copyright' means the right of a publisher to license an adaptation of the work." Mr. Chatto has explained the position of his firm as follows to an interviewer: "Mr. Walter Reynolds told us that he wished to prepare a dramatic version of Wanda, and that he further desired to use certain portions of the dialogue of the book. In granting him the right to employ such dialogue we were acting perfectly and beyond all question within our powers as holders of the copyright. Whether Ouida must know that perfectly well or not I cannot say. Who can tell what she must or must not know? As far as we are concerned, the matter is at an end."

THE art of fitting a Bible text to a special occasion has been carried to considerable heights of ingenuity, but not often higher than by Dr. Reed Mackay when he preached to the crew of Shamrock II. on the Sunday before the races for the America Cup. The reverend gentleman took as his text Isaiah xxxiii. 23: "Their tacklings are loosed; they could not well strengthen their mast; they could not spread the sail; then is the prey of a great spoil divided; the lame take the prey." Dr. Mackay said this was a prophecy of victory for Shamrock, the last clause being applicable to Sir Thomas Lipton, who was lame from the effects of an accident.

A BEAUTY-PRIZE contest is one of the latest American devices for pushing a novel. It has been adopted by Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co. in their novel Sylvia: The Story of an American Countess. The story is a present-day one, and is laid in Venice, on the Rivera, and in Southern California. The heroine is described as "the most beautiful woman in Europe." As no artist is likely to realise that description in a manner to convince everybody, the publishers have asked twelve artists to make their own drawings of the heroine. These pictures are all reproduced as illustrations in the book. Each reader is invited to choose from among the pictures the one which, in his judgment, is the best conception of the heroine, and to indicate, on a slip furnished with the book, the order in which he thinks all the others should rank. The person whose list comes nearest to the choice of the majority will receive five hundred dollars.

GIVING away the plot of a novel is understood to be forbidden to the reviewer, but in America they are less scrupulous or more generous. "The Plots of the Latest Novels" is a heading in the New York Journal's Saturday literary supplement. Beneath it the plots of three novels are calmly described in detail down to the final solutions, death-beds, marriages, and the discovery of missing wills.

MRS. MEYNELL did not find beauty in the Atlantic cloudland while crossing the Atlantic. In a characteristic article on "Atlantic Skies" in the Pall Mall Gazette, she reports of the clouds as follows:

> And the strangest thing is the lack of beauty. However shaped, however coloured—and the shape is wild, the colour is strong—the Atlantic skies evade the eyes that are lifted to see beauty as the oldest sight in heaven. Most familiar of all things, beauty is out of sight.
>
> From the "promenade deck," the fourth story of the great liner, you see some distance—much further, that is, than the little circle of the old seafarer. And all you see is grey or blue, after a pattern, you know. The ocean is not strange to the eye, except only in the haste to which he is compelled. Twenty-one miles an hour and more is the wave driven, and you see no space of all ocean as it lies, at peace. But, in spite of these thousands of miles of hail and farewell, the ocean is your old friend, even if you are at odds with the sky.

On the natural fears of the landsman who realises the vast depths of the sea, Mrs. Meynell says:

> To the unused it must needs be grave to wake at night and feel the deep; but the gravity is not awful if one should be accustomed, on dry land, to remember the heavens under the earth; the moon below, the stars below, flashing upon the Milky Way below. Beneath the deep, beneath the land, beneath the house and the secure bed, the sun!

Digitized by Google

MRS. MEYNELL continues:

> Indeed, it is not on earth nor amid her waters, her mountains or her fires, that her children have their finest fears; but among the inaccessible and unknown heavens.
>
> No, the ocean is a manifest friend, buoying the racing ship with the power of his depth. You may find nothing wilder on the way than a single solitary storm; the ship charges it, carries it, and sweeps into the further calm. It is a sea of chances; with one thing only most strangely steadfast, albeit soft, sensitive, curving and waving like a sea-plant in the flood—water within water; wavering, swinging, dividing one age-long way, while the centuries alter mountains—the Gulf Stream rushing warmly to nourish England in the East.

OUR readers may amuse themselves by guessing what living writer is referred to in the following tirade:

> He can lisp the Accents though he cannot breathe the Spirit of the middle Ages: but he will not endure a close Inspection. Regard his Gauds a second Time, and they reflect no more than sullen Pebbles forsaken by the Tide; probe the Poppinjay and you restrict him to the Prattle of a Parrot afflicted with the Pip. Where Signs of the Times are mostly discouraging and the favourite Baal is Novelty, at whose Shrine the Vulgar delight to sacrifice all that is sacred or traditional, Hopes might be insinuated by this Fact, That a popular Author finds it profitable to ape venerable Classicks. We may not despair of a Public that yearns, however unconsciously, for the hallowed Tunes, even though, from long Disuse, the Ear remains unable to distinguish the false from the true Note. But we must reprobate the heretick Prophet, who, taking Advantage of that good Instinct, debauches it with horrid Discords, beside which Wagner were musical or Mr. Kipling poetical.

To go down, all flags flying, with Wagner and Mr. Kipling were to make a good end. However, 'tis but another storm in the Rambler's tea-pot.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL can be heartily congratulated on their new twenty-volume edition of the works of Samuel Richardson. There is not much to say (as there ought not to be) about the format. It is neat and satisfactory; a very pleasing shade of red has been chosen for the covers; and for the illustrations the publishers have wisely gone to those of an older day, reproducing them by photogravure. Pamela fills four volumes, Clarissa Harlowe nine volumes, and Sir Charles Grandison seven volumes. Seventy-eight illustrations are distributed through the set. To the first volume of Pamela Miss Ethel M. M. McKenna contributes an interesting biography. So great, she tells us, was the furore created by Pamela that "at Slough the village blacksmith undertook to read the story aloud for the benefit of his less-lettered neighbours, who every evening gathered round the forge for the purpose. So intense was the excitement manifested when Pamela was finally married to her pursuer that the general joy found expression in ringing the church bells as for a festival." Pamela cannot so move us to-day, but it is a matter for congratulation that the works of this master of fiction can now be had in a form so complete and attractive.

MR. R. B. MARSTON, of the firm of Messrs. Sampson Low, Fetter-lane, E.C., will be pleased to send to any applicant particulars of a scheme which is now on foot for placing a memorial of Mr. R. D. Blackwood in Exeter Cathedral. He suggests that the memorial should take the form of a marble tablet with a medallion portrait or bust and a suitable inscription, and that any balance after defraying its cost should be invested for the benefit of the Authors' Benevolent Fund, which has recently been established in connection with the Society of Authors.

MR. PUNCH has framed the chapter of a novel based on some remarks in our issue of September 24. We then wrote: "Probably one of the characteristic features of the new novel will be the relegation of the element of sex love to a subsidiary place. It may be that current fiction has rather exaggerated the importance of the love of a man for a maid. It is open to doubt if, in most lives, love is the be-all and end-all of existence." Mr. Punch introduces us to Mr. Pendleton Pigot, who, in the 39th chapter of a "probable" novel, has begun to give to love that place in his affairs which we described as "subsidiary":

> He stretched out his hand and pressed the electric bell for his secretary.
>
> "By the bye, Ogleton," he said, as the young man entered, "what was the name of that young lady I told you to remember?"
>
> The secretary turned hastily some leaves of his notebook.
>
> "Miss Sylvia Flindries, Sir."
>
> "Ah! I fancy I was rather struck by her general deportment." A pause.
>
> "It was at Monte Carlo, in '97, wasn't it?"
>
> "The memo is dated June in the following year, Sir, at Aix."
>
> "Oh," said Pendleton, calmly, "One meets so many people. I believe I jotted down a few particulars for future reference. Have you them handy?"

Ogleton has them handy, and they consist of a list of pros and cons on the matrimonial qualifications of Miss Sylvia Flindries. He reads them aloud, and the conversation continues:

> "Just type a note, Ogleton."
>
> "Are you thinking of marrying, Sir?" inquired he, with the privilege of an old employé.
>
> "I had some such idea," answered Pendleton, with a half smile of good nature. "If you remember, next Wednesday week is the one day set aside out of the year for such trivialities as infect our modern life. Matrimony is one of them, to which love-making was an insensate preliminary in my boyhood's days, and a great deal of the fiction concocted during that flimsy period of our history was devoted to it. I intend to get married. I have been meaning to do so for some years past, but being occupied by so many important affairs has put the idea out of my head. It's a thing I believe one ought to do, so I want to do it, and have done with such nonsense once and for all. Just drop a nice note to Miss Flindries, enclosing in tabulated form my conception of her advantages and disadvantages, and say I intend to get married on Wednesday week, and would be happy to give her the first refusal of myself. Ask her to enclose the last six photos she has had taken of herself, as I only vaguely remember what she is like. Say that I consider she could be adapted to my few domestic wants, and if she is desirous of seeing my houses and property I should be most happy to personally conduct her over them, and reply to the best of my ability to any questions she may think it necessary to ask."
>
> "Remind Miss Flindries of all the sources for acquainting herself of my character, and enclose extracts from red books, &c., with a stamped and addressed envelope in case of rejection. State that an early reply will oblige, as in the event of Miss Sylvia Flindries declining my offer, I have other ladies on my list (though I freely confess none with so few disadvantages) to whom a similar offer will be extended. That is all. I shall leave all the details of the ceremony in your hands Remind me that I have an appointment to be married on Wednesday week, and post me up in the bride's family history. And now we can return once more to the normal features of our modern civilised life."

THE second annual Huxley lecture of the Anthropological Institute will be delivered by Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., at the rooms of the Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi, on October 29, at 8.30 p.m. The subject chosen by the lecturer is "The Possible Improvement of the Human Breed under the Existing Conditions of Law and Sentiment." Tickets may be obtained on application at the Institute, 3, Hanover-square. The chair will be taken by Lord Avebury.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Rider Haggard's letters to the Daily Express, which appeared under the title Back to the Land, will not be re-issued in their present form. Mr. Haggard, however, hopes in the course of next year to publish, under the title of Rural England, a work dealing fully with the results of his investigations into the agricultural and social conditions of the majority of the English counties, and incorporating the substance of the letters. Messrs. Longmans will publish the volume.

Gabriele d'Annunzio, we learn from a telegram to the Pall Mall Gazette, is likely to find himself involved in a duel, as the first-fruits of his new tragedy of "Francesca da Rimini." It appears that some of the papers have published details scarcely fair to the author. Not unnaturally the latter has spoken, and also written, with some freedom upon this breach of manners, and now it is the turn of the editors to be offended. With respect to one of them, the Resto del Carlino, of Bologna, Signor d'Annunzio has been exceptionally severe—so much so that the editor has sent a couple of friends to request explanations.

The Queen Victoria Birthday Book will contain an anthology of sentences spoken or written by her late Majesty.

Messrs. Virtue & Co. have entered the field of cheap decorative classics with a series, called "The Turner House Classics." The format adopted is strikingly original and attractive, being a bold, yet delicate, effect in black, white, and red. The covers will, however, vary in pattern with each book, while preserving the same general effect. The size is 6¾ in. by 4 in. The series will be edited by Mr. William Macdonald, and a critical monograph will be prefixed to each volume. The first volume (Bret Harte's Choice Tales and Verse) strikes us as excellent.

Bibliographical.

The next item in Messrs. H. Virtue & Co.'s "Turner House Classics" will be An Anthology of Humorous Verse. For this there ought to be a public, for I take for granted that the compiler intends to cover the whole field from Chaucer downwards. I don't know that he can be said to have any competitor. Presumably, Mr. W. M. Rossetti's anthology on the same subject (published by Moxon) is long out of print. In Mr. Alfred Miles's omnium gatherum, The Poets and the Poetry of the Century, there is a volume devoted to the humorists in verse from Crabbe to living people. The volume called Comic Poets of the Nineteenth Century, published by Routledge late in the seventies, included specimens by contemporary writers only. Another volume, entitled The Witty and Humorous Side of the English Poets, was mainly critical, though it included a good deal of illustrative quotation. Altogether, I do not envy the latest anthologist, Mr. T. A. Cook, his task. To give, in a single book, a worthy representation of English humorous verse in all its phases seems well-nigh beyond the powers of mortal man.

Dr. Birkbeck Hill's annotated edition of Johnson's Lives of the Poets will, of course, be heartily welcome—the more especially to those who have not purchased any of the editions of the Lives issued during the last decade or so. These, one would think, cannot be a very numerous body, seeing that it is only five years since Messrs. Methuen and Messrs. Kegan Paul both sent out an edition of the Lives—the one in three volumes, and the other in six, the latter being edited by Mr. Arthur Waugh. In 1890 there had been a three-volume edition, brought out by Messrs. Bell. If Dr. Hill's edition is in one volume only, it will be all the more acceptable. Of course there have been, of late years, many reprints of separate Lives of the Poets. Mr. Matthew Arnold, it will be remembered, chose six of the Lives for special celebration. But that was fifteen years ago.

In the introduction to Mr. Brimley Johnson's re-issue of Mrs Caudle's Curtain Lectures, Mr. Walter Jerrold mentions that the lectures were made the basis of an "apropos bagatelle in one act," produced at the Lyceum Theatre in 1845. Mr. Spielmann, in his History of "Punch," says that in this piece "Mrs. Keeley made a life-like Mrs. Caudle, only perhaps a little too fresh and charming." As a matter of fact, it was Mr. Keeley who undertook the rôle of Mrs. Caudle, a fact which Mr. Spielmann could have verified by a glance at the newspaper advertisements and notices of the time. The description of Mrs. Keeley as "only perhaps a little too fresh and charming" is a diverting exercise of the imagination.

With reference to a paragraph in this column last week, Messrs. Bell & Sons inform me that they have no intention of issuing a new edition of Mrs. Jameson's Shakespeare's Heroines. The fact is, the new edition in question is that which Messrs. Dent & Co. have published in the present week as the first item in "Miranda's Library." For my part, I prefer Messrs. Bell's edition of 1897.

Fancy a whole volume—albeit not a very big one—about the case of Bardell v. Pickwick! Surely this is an instance of Dickensolatry in the extreme. A member of the younger generation would hardly devote himself to such a task, but Mr. Percy Fitzgerald is one of "the old Guard," and, moreover, one of the Faithful—I will not say "faithful among the faithless only he," for there is Mr. F. G. Fitton. Bardell v. Pickwick was one of the most popular of the author's Readings, and it has naturally found its way on to the stage—usually for the sake of bringing together a "star" caste for a benefit performance. There was the version put together by Mr. John Hollingshead just thirty years ago, and since then there has been another compiled by Charles Dickens the second. The famous trial has also been made the basis of an operetta performed somewhere in the provinces.

The statement that Messrs. Dent's edition of Lane's Arabian Nights will comprise a volume of selections from Jonathan Scott's version, which included tales not given by Lane, is exercising the minds of those to whom Scott's version is unknown. It is, I think, nearly twenty years since Scott's work was last issued. A book of Selections from it appeared sixteen years ago. (Can this be what Messrs. Dent propose to give us as an appendix to Lane's?) The latest notable edition of Lane's work appeared, apparently, in 1896.

The "Windsor" Shakespeare is obviously American in origin, and, possibly, identical (of this I cannot be certain) with the edition which Mr. H. W. Hudson brought out at Boston, U.S.A., in 1852-7. Mr. Hudson is not, perhaps, in the memory of our present public; but, in "the early 'eighties," his book on the Life, Art, and Characters of Shakespeare had some circulation in this country, into which also his Studies in Wordsworth penetrated. I cannot find any trace of him in England since.

We are promised a volume of extracts from "old authors and essay-writers" (is an essay-writer, then, not an author?) on the subject of gardening. No doubt it will be very readable; but so was the book (called, I think) In Praise of Gardens, which should be difficult to beat. The literature of this subject grows, and let us hope that a real love of gardens grows along with it.

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Nerves.

Hypnotism and Suggestion in Therapeutics, Education, and Reform. By R. Osgood Mason. (Kegan Paul.)

The Criminal Mind. From the French of Dr. Maurice de Fleury. (Downey. 3s. 6d. net.)

DURING the last fifty years the medical profession have gradually become aware that a large class of the community are more or less unfitted for the struggle for life. Some of them show signs of that most terrible of all diseases—epilepsy; others of sleep-walking, absence of will, fixed idea or some other of the obscurer forms of hysteria; while others are merely considered by their friends a little eccentric until some accident reveals the fact that they are capable of committing universally reprobated acts without remorse. Yet such persons are by no means insane according to any of the tests that are applied by lawyers and doctors. So far from being deficient in intellect, some of the greatest geniuses may be found in their ranks; and, however irresistible they may think their impulse to evil, they are generally led to curb it by the same fear of the policeman that controls other members of the community. As they have all of them the greatest possible objection to steady work except under the influence of emotion, it seems probable that in old times they formed the recruiting ground for the religious orders. Nowadays they generally give trouble to the police if they are poor, to their friends if they are well-to-do, and are known as degenerates, neurotics, neurasthenics, or, in a word, sufferers from nervous disease.

Can persons of this temperament be so far cured that they will become like the rest of the world? To this question Dr. Mason unhesitatingly answers "Yes," and gives us many instances from his own practice where nervous patients have derived the greatest possible benefit from hypnotism. In one case, a girl of fifteen had such difficulty in concentrating her attention that she could not pass the smallest examination. She was six times hypnotised, with the result that she not only got through triumphantly, but obtained a "teacher's certificate," the suggestion being that she was really very clever all the time, but prevented from displaying her abilities by "her excessive self-consciousness and timidity." In another, a lady of sixty suffered from persecution mania, thought that her husband was trying to poison her by means of an imaginary powder that he scattered about, and made the life of herself and all about her a burden to them. After a long course of hypnotic treatment by Dr. Mason, she has discarded most of her absurd ideas, though she still feels "a certain fear" of her husband, admits that the powder theory was an hallucination, and "looks forward with great interest and hope to an entire cure." In another, all the symptoms of a well-marked paralysis affecting the right side of the face and the left arm and leg were removed after a month's treatment from an Irish school teacher of twenty-two; and in yet another, an actor of forty-two was weaned from drinking a bottle of whiskey and ten grains of morphia a day by the same process. With children, as might perhaps be expected, Dr. Mason was even more successful. A little girl was cured by hypnotism of nocturnal terrors, which caused her to wake up screaming that she saw a black man; another was rid of an apparently inveterate habit of blushing; the child of a criminal father and "an upright, mild, intelligent woman" was turned from a savage little beast into a decent member of society; and a schoolboy was made to drop at once cigarette smoking and what are euphemistically known as "early vicious habits." Is it to be wondered at that Dr. Mason, the worker of these marvels, thinks that he has in hypnotism a valuable instrument not only for the education of children, but also for the cure of nervous disease and the reform of criminals whose crime has been the result of bad heredity or imperfect responsibility?

This is very well, and there are many facts known to students of the subject that might predispose them to accept Dr. Mason's conclusion. Hypnotism, for a long time discredited, has lately been shown by the researches of Charcot and others to be a real force, and suggestion forms so large a part of it that the disciples of the Nancy school are convinced that this is by itself sufficient to account for all hypnotic phenomena. Moreover, it is generally accepted that neuropathic persons are all amenable to hypnotic suggestion, even if it be not the case, as some think, that it is they alone who are capable of being hypnotised at all. But from this to deciding that all abnormal children or criminals could profitably be made the subject of hypnotic treatment is a very long step, and we see little in Dr. Mason's book that will in any way shorten it. Dr. Mason is, we gather from his writings, a doctor in what is called "eclectic" practice in America, and although we have no doubt that the cases he quotes are reported by him in most perfect good faith, there are many things here which remind us of the hasty logic, the delight in the marvellous, and the reliance on the unproven which makes it so difficult for us slow Europeans to discriminate between the scientific American and the charlatan. Although he shows himself to be perfectly well acquainted with the Nancy theory, he prefers to consider that in hypnotism there is really some "effluence passing from the operator to the subject" which not only can take effect at a distance of twenty miles, but can be imprisoned in a glass of water. So, too, though he gives in the alternative a more rational hypothesis, he leans to the idea that hypnotism can be explained as the waking of "the subconscious mind," which may be viewed, he tells us, "as a higher development of the cosmic mind or soul so evident in nature." After this, it is a mere detail that he uses the analogy of the solar system to suggest that the human body, "like every particle of matter, organised or unorganised," has "its emanation, its atmosphere, its aura." If hypnotism ever comes to be generally used as a curative agent, its application must be founded on some more solid basis than wild guesses like those given forth by the first Lord Lytton in romantic fiction, or upon unanalogous comparisons.

It is like coming out of an overheated room into fresh air to turn from this to Dr. de Fleury's graceful monograph on the criminal mind. He begins by telling us, with the perfect lucidity that comes from mastery of his subject, how it comes about that the mind of the hereditary criminal, or, what is nearly the same thing, of the neurotic, comes to be different from that of the normal man. He explains to us how the sensations that we receive from the outer world are conveyed by our sensory nerves into some cerebral cell, where, in the ordinary way, the impulse would be transmitted from neuron to neuron, awakening old mental representations in its passage, which thereby revive and come into comparison. When this is done, deliberation is, as he says, established, and the thinker, before restoring the impulse to the outer world by means of the motor nerves, is enabled to decide whether the action resolved upon is for the good of the individual or the species. If it is, the action is allowed to proceed; if not, the nerve-wave excited expends itself in what Brown-Séquard described as inhibition of the motor nerves. Hence it is that, in the case of a sudden temptation to commit some crime, the best among us are able to combat and overthrow it with such incredible swiftness that they are not even conscious of deliberation. Mark, now, what happens in the other case:

> If a man with an exhausted brain, whose neurons have lost their suppleness of movement by habitual inertia, and whose vital activity is vitiated by a disease inherited or acquired, is in question, how is a comparison between the tempting image and the susceptible images to act as a check upon him? The paralysed collaterals cannot stretch > out their tentacles to make contact with neighbouring tentacles; the nerve wave is not diffused; between the salutary ideas deposited in the mind by education and impulse no contest will arise.

Digitized by Google

From this M. de Fleury is led to the conclusion that the most important service that civilisation can render to society is to take care that each brain is equipped with a sufficient number of mental representations of a good kind to give ground for deliberation and to prevent sensation being too quickly translated into action. All this he thinks can be brought about by wisely directed education. Even in the case of natural or instinctive criminals, he thinks, much may be done by book learning combined with proper physical treatment to restore the nutrition of their brains, thus giving them strength of mind and enabling them to lose bad habits and acquire good ones.

There will always, however, remain a residuum, as M. de Fleury confesses, of "those horribly cruel, manifestly incurable, mercilessly ferocious beings, who are murderers by temperament, so utterly pitiless that it is impossible to feel pity for their fate." With these he would deal in a very summary way. If they are once recognised as incurable, after medical examination, he would have no more "extenuating circumstances"—we must remember it is for France that he is writing—no more granting of respites by chiefs of the State anxious to secure popularity. All such criminals must be suppressed at once, not by the guillotine, which he considers barbarous, but by a prompt and easy death, such as medical science can procure. For those who may not have yet committed crime, but are "idle, thoughtless, those who reject education but love adventure and fighting, the quarrelsome whose delight it is to do harm with all their might," in which category he includes anarchists, he would enlist them in companies of discipline and send them to colonies like Madagascar and Tongking, there to fight against savages like themselves. All lesser forms of nerve disease, when likely to be dangerous to society, he would deal with in reformatories, whence the inmates should be discharged as they were cured, while he would deal with great leniency with all those who are merely criminals by accident, binding them over wherever possible to come up for judgment when called upon. It is upon these lines, he thinks, that the criminal legislation of the future will run.

There are many other things in M. de Fleury's book, particularly as to the large part played by tuberculosis, alcoholism, and other diseases as the cause of nerve-disease, not necessarily in the person attacked by them, but in his or her descendants. In all these cases he holds that the State has a duty to perform, and should not, he says, be content with repressing committed evil, but should cherish the more charitable and more Christian ambition of destroying it in the egg, and so preventing it from being hatched. Yet, when all is said, we are not sure that he really makes out a case for the treatment of nerve-sufferers by or at the expense of the State. He is no doubt right in saying that the cause of their sufferings is purely physical and material. But is this any reason why we should relieve their parents of the charge of them any more than we do of cripples and hunchbacks? And if it is their cure that is aimed at, it is perhaps rather more likely to occur if they are treated as normal people than if they were herded together in reformatories. However this may be, M. de Fleury's book deserves to be read for its own sake, and certainly throws a good deal of new light upon the matter.

Mr. Pater's First Impressions.

Essays from "The Guardian." By Walter Pater. (Macmillan. 8s. 6d. net.)

We do not quite understand the fuss which has been made in some quarters about the publication of this interesting volume. It contains a little sheaf of reviews contributed to the columns of the Guardian, and it is said that Mr. Pater, who did things of this sort from time to time in several papers, would never have dreamed of reprinting them as they stand and giving them to the world as serious criticism. That is very likely. Mr. Pater, like many other writers, looked upon reviews as of the nature of preliminary studies for serious criticism. An account, for instance, which finds place among the fragments before us, of some recent Wordsworth literature, became material for the elaborate essay on Wordsworth in the "Appreciations" of 1889. And others of these reviews are but rough notes and first impressions of new books, made tentatively and subject to modification or confirmation upon maturer reflection. Nevertheless, where is the offence to the manes of a scrupulous writer in the matter? A review is a review and a finished essay is a finished essay. Only a very stupid person could fail to understand the difference between the two, and to have refrained from reprinting this volume on such an account would have been to attach to the literary judgments of stupid persons an importance which they do not actually possess. Because, taken for what they are, and not for what they are not, the Guardian essays are really of considerable value, even apart from the light which they throw upon the mental processes employed in Mr. Pater's critical workshop. The literary quality of modern reviewing is not so high that any of us can afford to disregard the admirable models of the craft here presented, or not to profit from the courtesy, the discrimination, the conscientiousness with which Mr. Pater discharged what one is often in danger of coming to regard as a somewhat humble scribal function. Of course, in reviewing, as in criticism, Mr. Pater's ideal was appreciation rather than judgment. He never thought it his business to condemn. Even Mr. Saintsbury's English is qualified, with a suavity which rather makes one open one's eyes, as "a document or standard in the matter of prose style." The nearest approach to unkindness is in the article on "Mr. Gosse's Poems," where the definition of Mr. Gosse as a "poetic scholar" rather than a poet, and the attribution to him of all the poetic qualities except the essential one, are managed with a gentle irony which cannot fail to yield discreet entertainment. Mr. Pater's temperament hardly fitted him to review his friends. But how admirable his approach to subjects where detachment is possible for him! What could be better than the opening review of "Four Books for Students of English Literature"? The books are just an ordinary batch, a week's crop, no doubt, of the Guardian's editorial table. But the deftness with which, while each gets its proper share of attention, the four are brought into the line of a common argument, with a unity and a wider outlook of its own, is surely nothing less than masterly. The review of Mrs. Humphry Ward's translation of Amiel's Journal Intime, again, gives Mr. Pater opportunity for a subtle analysis of the fine and fruitless nature, which we should have been very sorry to miss. Such a passage as this, for instance, was undoubtedly worth rescuing from the waste-paper basket of transitory journalism:

> Yet, in truth, there are but two men in Amiel—two sufficiently opposed personalities, which the attentive reader may define for himself; compare with and try by each other—as we think, correct also by each other. There is the man, in him and in these pages, who would be "the man of disillusion," only that he has never really been "the man of desires"; and who seems, therefore, to have a double weariness about him. He is akin, of course, to Obermann, to René, even to Werther, and on our first introduction to him, we might think that we had to do only with one more of the vague "renunciants," who in real life followed those creations of fiction, and who, however delicate, interesting as a study, and, as it were, picturesque on the stage of life, are themselves, after all, essentially passive, uncreative, and therefore necessarily not of first-rate importance in literature. Taken for what it is worth, the expression of this mood—the culture of ennui for its own sake—is certainly carried to its ideal of negation by Amiel. But the completer, the positive, soul, which will merely take that mood into its service (its proper service, as we hold, is in counteraction to the vulgarity of purely positive natures), is also certainly in evidence in Amiel's "Thoughts"—that other, and far stronger person, in the long dialogue; the man, in short, possessed of gifts, not for the renunciation, but for the reception and use, of all that is puissant, goodly, and effective in life, and for the varied and adequate literary reproduction of it; who, under favourable circumstances, or even without them, will become critic, or poet, and in either case a creative force; and if he be religious (as Amiel was deeply religious) will make the most of "evidence," and almost certainly find a Church.

Digitized by Google

As we have said, we do not think that these Guardian essays will injure Mr. Pater's reputation (how could they, containing such fine criticism as we have just quoted?) in the eyes of any sensible man. On the contrary, the comparative want of elaboration in their style may perhaps help to remove that extraordinary misapprehension of Mr. Pater, which looks upon him as essentially a stylist, and not, what he primarily was, a thinker, concerned more with life than with literature, or with literature as the fullest and sincerest expression of life itself. It has been noted before that Mr. Pater's own attitude towards life tended more and more in his later years to adapt itself to the positions of historic Christianity. It is not unnatural, considering the circumstances under which they were written, that this tendency should be a good deal in evidence in the essays under consideration. Take, for instance, the review of Robert Elsmere. It contains a very outspoken and very interesting statement of what appears to be Mr. Pater's own point of view, and certainly was not that which Elsmere came to hold.

> Robert Elsmere was a type of a large class of minds which cannot be sure that the sacred story is true. . . . But then there is also a large class of minds which cannot be sure that it is false—minds of very varied degrees of conscientiousness and intellectual power up to the highest. They will think those who are quite sure it is false unphilosophical through lack of doubt. For their part, they make allowance in their scheme of life for a great possibility, and with some of them that bare concession of possibility (the subject of it being what it is) becomes the most important fact in the world. The recognition of it straightway opens wide the door to hope and love; and such persons are, as we fancy they always will be, the nucleus of a Church. Their particular phase of doubt, of philosophic uncertainty, has been the secret of millions of good Christians, multitudes of worthy priests. They knit themselves to believers, in various degrees, of all ages.

Incidentally we have had occasion to refer to five of the nine papers which make up the Guardian volume. There are also reviews of Mr. Arthur Symons's Introduction to the Study of Browning and of a new edition of Dr. Doran's Annals of the English Stage, and two little studies of French fiction. One of these, which contains some charming bits of translation—Mr. Pater was a perfect translator—deals with the Norine of M. Ferdinand Fabre, the other with the Contes du Centenaire of M. Augustin Filon. Following out the trend of thought just referred to, Mr. Pater lays stress on M. Fabre's books, not merely as portraiture, sympathetic though not uncritical, of the priestly type, but also as studies of "the institutions of religion" in contact, "as its conscience, its better mind, its ideal," with human nature as represented in the peasants of the Cevennes.

> What constitutes his distinguishing note as a writer is the recognition of the religious, the Catholic ideal, intervening masterfully throughout the picture he presents of life, as the only mode of poetry realizable by the poor; and although, of course, it does a great deal more besides, certainly doing the high work of poetry effectively.

Faith and Folly.

The Romance of Religion. By Olive Vivian and Herbert Vivian. With 32 Illustrations. (Pearson.)

The Roman Catholic religion on the continent of Europe presents three faces to the observer. There is, first, the religion of the theologian and the scholastic. It is the religion of the Breviary and the Missal, of the Fathers as they are for ever interpreted by the Council of Trent and by the interrupted synod of Pius IX. This is Christianity syllogised, rationalised. This is the system upon which, in the seminaries, aspirants to the priesthood are trained. It subdues emotion by reason; that which it recognises as the highest human act, the act of loving God, is an act of the will guided by right reason; it involves of necessity nothing of the emotional thrill with which, in our human relations, we are wont to associate the idea of love. Away in the clouds, above the ordinary rational, habitual-grace-possessing practical Catholic Christian, floats the mystic; he is to be found sometimes in the houses of religion, more rarely in the world. The third type of Roman Catholic is one with which the authors of this book are principally concerned. To one of that communion it will probably seem strange that it is precisely in those local practices of scarcely veiled paganism of which he is least proud that these sympathetic Protestants discover the "romance" of religion. It is certainly not to an educated Roman Catholic that you must go for a patient account of the miraculous "little Doctor," the famous doll completed by—of course—St. Luke. Up till a recent date this ugly little monstrosity was actually the legal proprietor of a large establishment in Rome, and visited his patients in a carriage of his own. Now he has fallen upon evil days; but the more credulous of the Romans still send their own carriages when his presence is deemed desirable in cases of desperate sickness. The famous Madonna of Sant' Agostino, also in Rome, is at any rate beautiful; only it is not easy to see that because it is so overlaid with jewelry bestowed there by grateful clients. The patron of Salamanca since 1618 is the staring Virgin de la Vega, a specimen of early Byzantine art.

> Still more famous, and more extraordinary in appearance, is the great Black Virgin of the Atocho, in Madrid. Such is the splendour of her robes and the glitter of her golden, sun-like halo that the tiny face of the Virgin can scarcely be seen. The Virgin has her own court, chamberlains, and attendants. The Queen of Spain is first lady-in-waiting. The wardrobe is very extensive. Sometimes she dresses as a widow, but on days of great festivals her costumes are marvellously encrusted with gold and jewels. According to a custom since time immemorial, the Queens of Spain present their wedding-dresses to the Atocha. The ex-Queen Isabella offered the dress she wore in 1858, when she was stabbed. The Atocha is brought to royal bedsides as a last resource when all other aid is useless.

A far more estimable remnant of other days is the Passion Procession of Holy Week, which is to be seen in many places. One of the most elaborate is that which annually since 1603 has taken place in Murcia. A number of carved groups are borne upon the shoulders of representatives of the several guilds, the bearers wearing violet hoods that conceal the whole face except the eyes. The mystery plays, of which so many records remain in the churchwardens' chronicles of our own country, still survive in Spain, and Mr. Vivian gives an interesting account of the way in which at Elche the cathedral is turned, at the Feast of the Assumption, into an opera-house. The libretto was found in the chest labelled "I am for Elche," in which the image of the Virgin—carved, it is hardly necessary to mention, by St. Luke—sailed across the sea. The death of Mary is followed by a wake; the miraculous image lies all night in state and receives a stream of visitors till far into the day of the feast itself (August 15).

Digitized by Google

The practical side of religion, with which most people will be ready to sympathise, is shown in the Misericordia societies of Tuscany, the members of which succour the sick and bury the dead gratuitously.

> Perhaps their most startling appearance is at night time, when they are engaged in conveying a corpse to their cemetery. You meet a number of masked figures, clad in black from head to foot, carrying a coffin through some secluded suburb, with torches and lanterns in their hands, and a large crucifix borne aloft before them. They proceed in silence, looking neither to the right hand nor to the left; and, if every one in Tuscany were not entirely familiar with their appearance, might be relied upon to send a nervous woman into a fit.

The character of the Trappist or Cistercian rule is rather well known; we may take the account of the monks as read. It is not so much matter of common knowledge that under the Pyrenees, on the Spanish side, is found a community of Bernardines, living under a very similar rule. A story with which, as visitors, the authors were regaled illustrates the conditions in which they live, and is probably founded on fact:

> Two Bernardines lived side by side for five years in two adjoining cells, and so thin a partition divided them that they could even hear the sound of each other's breathing. All this time they ate at the same table and prayed in the same chapel. At last one of them died, and, according to the rule of the order, the dead nun was laid in the chapel, her face uncovered, and the Bernardines filed past, throwing holy water upon the remains as they went. When it came to the turn of the next-door neighbour, no sooner did she catch a sight of the dead nun's face than she gave a piercing shriek, and fell back in a swoon. She had just recognised her dearest friend in the world, from whom she had parted with the deepest pain, many years before, to enter the convent. For five years the two friends had lived side by side without ever having seen each other's face or heard the sound of one another's voice.

A sufficiently striking contrast with this austere sisterhood is furnished by the béguinages of Belgium. At Ghent there are two of these little walled-in cities with gateways defended by turrets. The inhabitants live lives of free and easy innocence, busying themselves with simple industries.

> Members of the convents elect their own Superiors, who in their turn elect the Groot-Jufvrouw, or Lady Superior, of the whole béguinage or city of nunneries. The younger and poorer sisters all live in convents, some of which have as many as twenty or thirty inmates. But the majority of the houses are built to hold from four to six persons only. None are admitted to the béguinage unless they have means of their own to the extent of £12 a year.

The most primitive form of the ascetic life is observed by the hermits of Sierra Morena. These strange beings dwell in little huts, alone, and communicate with each other only by means of the bell with which every hut is furnished. Their time is divided between prayer and manual labour.

There is much else that Mr. and Mrs. Vivian saw; we have chosen rather the less known incidents and types than the more familiar, especially as these papers, collected from the pages of magazines, are quite slight and superficial. Such as they are, they are inspired by a kindly and intelligent spirit.

Dressed-up History.

King Monmouth: being a History of the Career of James Scott, "The Protestant Duke," 1649-1685. By Allan Fea. (Lane. 21s. net.)

Not long ago we reviewed in these columns Mr. Allan Fea's Secret Chambers and Hiding-Places, and of that book we had to say that it was ill-digested and ill-arranged. To the volume before us the same criticism must apply. We have every respect for Mr. Fea's industry; he appears to overlook no authorities of serious value, and he is indefatigable in his search for new matter; but, having accumulated his material, he seems to throw it together without any regard to proportion or form; he is lacking in the historical sense; he neither gives us the atmosphere of a period nor suggests its action and reaction upon the broader issues of national development. Charles II., Monmouth, James II., Lady Wentworth, the Prince of Orange, these figures in his pages are hardly more than the automatic centres of events. His history is dressed-up history; we see the forms, but not the spirit which inspired them. Take, for instance, the battle of Sedgemoor, an event upon which as much depended as, later, depended upon the Young Pretender's retreat from Derby. Mr. Fea suggests none of the vital issues involved. He hardly tells us more than that there was a battle. We may learn more from Paschall's plan of the fight, which is excellently reproduced, than from Mr. Fea's lean summary.

Yet the book has value and, by reason of its subject, interest. If there were more occasion than there appears to be to doubt the paternity of Monmouth we should say that he was the son of Charles, and not of Colonel Robert Sidney, because he was essentially a Stuart both in his virtues and vices. Nor can we suppose that Charles, even at nineteen years of age, was in the least likely to acknowledge a son whom he suspected not to be his own; for Lucy Walter was hardly the woman to be able to impose upon that most experienced of princes. Monmouth had all the charm of the Stuarts, all their weaknesses, all their vacillation, all their superstition, all their courage in the actual grip of peril. It is true that he made the most abject appeals to his uncle after his capture; but it is also true that he faced death unflinchingly, and with an expression of devotion to Lady Wentworth, which, though it involved a lie, showed at least a fine devotion. On the scaffold he said: "I have had a scandal raised upon me about a Woman, a Lady of Vertue and Honour. I will name her, the Lady Henrietta Wentworth. I déclare that she is a very Vertuous and Godly Woman. I have committed no Sin with her; and that which hath passed betwixt us was very Honest and Innocent in the sight of God." There, surely, is a characteristic Stuart utterance and a characteristic Stuart reservation.

Mr. Fea's narrative is finely illustrated by a series of portraits, thirteen of which are reproduced in photogravure. Of these many are of Monmouth himself, including the three beautiful portraits by Lely (one in the National Portrait Gallery), one of the Duchess and Monmouth, and two of Lady Wentworth. These portraits, together with many topographical illustrations and reproductions of MSS., constitute the chief charm of the book. Of some of the half-tone blocks we cannot speak so highly. That of the second Duke of Albemarle, for instance, is obviously from a canvas which no photographic method could adequately reproduce. For the rest, the book is worthily turned out and appropriately bound. We notice that the title-page is dated 1902.

Other New Books.

The World of the Great Forest. By Paul Du Chaillu.

"How animals, birds, reptiles, insects talk, think, work, and live," is the sub-title of this book; and the "Great Forest" to which the title refers is the vast and still half-mysterious forest of Central Africa, the denizens of which "range from the huge elephant to the smallest ant," says Mr. Du Chaillu. It is difficult to realise that Mr. Paul Du Chaillu is still working among us. His Explorations in Equatorial Africa and Stories of the Gorilla Country were books of our boyhood—famous good reading they were, too; and we can remember, as echoes from a half-forgotten past, the sensation created by this introduction to the European reader of the gorilla, previously almost a "mythological animal," as the Unicorn observed of Alice. People even hinted that Mr. Du Chaillu was anticipating De Rougemont, as they had hinted concerning that other African explorer, Bruce. But Mr. Du Chaillu was justified of his gorilla, which has settled into scientific commonplace. Now he (Mr. Du Chaillu, not the gorilla) comes before us with a book which seems to be suggested by the success of Mr. Kipling's Jungle Book. It is an attempt to describe the life of the Central African fauna by making them tell their own stories. There is nothing of Mr. Kipling's magic realism in assuming the personalities of animals, but Mr. Du Chaillu does not seek it. He is content with the simplest language, and, indeed, the simplest tales. The interest comes solely from the description of the strange ways of unfamiliar creatures. But it is interesting, in no small degree; though for ourselves we should have preferred Mr. Du Chaillu to have described these wild things straightforwardly in his own person. As it is, the form makes it rather a book for young people, who will find it delightful. So also, if they can overlook the form, will many adults. (Murray. 7s. 6d. net.)

Digitized by Google

THE AMERICAN INVADERS. BY FRED A. MCKENZIE.

"To-day it is literally true that Americans are selling their cottons in Manchester, pig-iron in Lancashire, and steel in Sheffield. They send oatmeal to Scotland, potatoes to Ireland, and our national beef to England. It only remains for them to take coals to Newcastle." Such is one of the opening statements in this striking little book, in whose pages one would fain detect a tinge of that yellowness which is conspicuous in the cover. Yet accuracy of statement and moderation in inference are its notes. The selling of the Encyclopædia Britannica on the instalment system is adduced as a specimen of the way in which Americans can see business where Englishmen cannot. The profits of the two Americans who engineered this, and other, literary enterprises which no English publisher would have attempted are placed at a quarter of a million sterling, earned in four years. Whether we shall smoke American tobacco remains to be seen, but it is already settled that we must light our cigarettes with American matches. The loss of several old trades would be serious enough, but in new trades we do not seem to be even "in the running" with the States. Telephones, typewriters, and electric traction are at their best in America, and we import them all heavily. The little kodak of Rochester, N.Y., has been as David before Goliath. American foods, pickles, and drugs, and American boots and blouses are being pushed with extraordinary success.

And the explanation of it all? In financial daring, business skill, and sheer energy of life, the American is apparently our superior. He drives his workmen; ours will not be driven. He revels in novelty and change; we dislike them. He makes smooth the path of the inventor; we leave him to prove his case as he can.

The book world has suffered little so far from American rivalry, but sundry thunderbolts are being forged, and the minds of publishers are disturbed. It is said that we are to buy books over the lace counter under hypnotic suggestion from advertisements. We refuse to believe it, but the statement completes our misery. One thing is certain: if we are about to wither as a race, the Yankees are determined to make the process pleasant for us. That, of course, is a prodigious comfort. But are we? (Harvard: Wilford Bell. 6d.)

WITH "BOBS" AND KRUGER. BY F. W. UNGER.

We have long ago felt "fed up" with war books, yet still they come, and still we find in each something that is new and interesting. Mr. Unger served the Daily Express, and he deserves to have his book noticed if only because his efforts to obtain a Press footing in South Africa were so long and untiring. He made a bee-line to South Africa from the Klondyke country merely to be in that quarter of the globe to which the eyes of humanity were most directed.

It was only after months of disappointment and lack of pence that he fulfilled the ambition he had caught from reading Mr. Kipling's Light that Failed: to be a young war correspondent "jerked into the business at the end of a telegraph wire to take the place of their betters killed or invalided." By a happy coincidence Mr. Unger met Mr. Kipling (that is to say, he called on him uninvited) in the course of his search for work; and we like the flavour of the conversation which took place between them in the Mount Nelson Hotel, at Cape Town. Here is some of it:

> Mr. Kipling appeared much interested, and said:
> "I like your nerve; but why don't you sink your nationality, and join one of our corps of rough riders or scouts? There you'll get the real thing."
> I replied that this would prevent my having the necessary freedom of movement, and then suggested that he take me with him as his secretary, servant, driver, or in any capacity he could use me. Mr. Kipling hesitated a moment, and then put me through the most exhaustive examination I have ever had. Could I cook, pack a horse, ride and drive, put up a tent, beg, borrow, or steal forage, tell the truth or lie if necessary, mind my own business and never see or hear things not to be seen or heard; was I "discreet," and was I sure I would not "poison him with my cooking"? And then, when I told him I was an old Klondyker, he chopped his questions abruptly off with:
> "Oh, I guess if you've been over the Chilcoot you have all the necessary qualifications."
> My hopes by this time had reached the boiling-point, and just as I expected him to say, "All right, I'll take you with me," he said the other thing.
> "You see," he added, by way of explanation, "I could never have a man in the same line as myself with me. You would be using my material, and if you wouldn't, you should—I would in your place; in fact, I'd do anything to secure a beat on anybody else."

That, at all events, is interesting. The book, we may add, contains some of the photographs of the British dead on the field of Spion Kop which escaped the order for their destruction said to have been issued by Lord Roberts. (Philadelphia: Coates & Co.)

THE PRINT-COLLECTOR'S HANDBOOK. BY ALFRED WHITMAN

Mr. Alfred Whitman's position in the Department of Prints and Drawings at the British Museum has not only been an advantage in the preparation of this book, but vouches for his authority as an expert on the subject of prints. It is a most handsome volume, and invaluable to the amateur who is entering on the emprise perilous of print-collecting; while to the expert himself it will be a delight, and not without its instruction. So far as the limits of a single volume will suffer, Mr. Whitman has been thorough in his task. Etching, line-engraving, mezzotint, stipple, aquatint, woodcuts, lithographs, colour-prints, all have their due space and illustration. A special chapter is devoted to "Hints to Beginners," wherein the novice learns the mystery of "states," the condition of plates and impressions, and the chief snares which beset the young collector's "way of perfection." The processes we have noted are carefully and clearly explained, though not (of course) at length; and the principal masters of each are described in historical sequence. Eighty reproductions illustrate the text as perfectly as half-tone can, while an occasional example, selected for its typical importance, is reproduced in collotype, which thrusts between the master and the spectator no veil of mechanical lines or dots. The examples of etching include two plates after recent masters—Mr. Seymour Haden and Mr. Whistler—very fine examples, too; but as a rule living masters are excluded. Merely to turn over the illustrations is a delight to the lover of art, while the text is admirable. (Bell. 15s. net.)

Digitized by Google

SOME RECOLLECTIONS OF JEAN INGELOW AND HER EARLY FRIENDS.

This is rather a distressing book. Jean Ingelow, though no great genius, was a gentle and honest, and to many an attractive, writer. She has fallen into the hands of a pietistic, and in every other respect incompetent, biographer, who has not even sufficient literary sense to avoid making both herself and—which matters more—her subject ridiculous. The pages are full of such futilities as this :

> With the Hon. Isabel Plunket the friendship lasted to the end of Jean's life. I have read a very pretty story of Miss Plunket's called "Hester's Fortune." On one of my last visits to Jean, before she was confined to her bed, I saw the photograph of Miss Plunket on her dressing-table.

Or, again :

> I think the first time Jean met Robert Browning was at a musical party at Virginia Gabriel's. The acquaintance thus begun never ripened into an intimacy, though Jean was a great admirer of his genius.

Through the folly of it, if you can read between the lines, you get an impression of a highly strung imaginative personality, out of which a wider outlook and a more bracing experience might have struck something finer in the way of letters than Jean Ingelow (although her actual achievement is not despicable) ever produced. From half-a-dozen of her letters we cull the observation : "Spotted egg-shells and orchard petals form the most beautiful litter in the world," and the criticism :

> Imagination is such a high faculty that it should repose on things most simple and universal; and, if it has been singing a little out of sight, should make haste to come down like a lark on the grass, and never concern itself with rank or riches or luxury.

(Wells Gardner.)

SYNESIUS THE HELLENE. BY W. S. CRAWFORD.

Mrs. Browning, writing to Mr. H. S. Boyd, and recalling joint studies in > . . . your noble Christian bishops,

> Who mouthed grandly the last Greek,

bids him remember how

> . . . we both praised your Synesius,
> For the fire shot up the odes,
> Though the Church was scarce propitious,
> As he whistled dogs and gods.

And there, it must be admitted, our knowledge of Synesius ended, until Mr. Crawford's careful and interesting study came our way. After all, the fire in Synesius' odes is rather of the Crystal Palace pattern. His rhetorical compositions, especially the treatise "On Dreams" and the "Panegyric of Baldness," are better; but the really interesting thing in connexion with him is his personal history, with the curious light which it throws upon the religious and learned life of Alexandria at the beginning of the fifth century. Synesius was a Greek of Cyrene in Libya, and claimed descent from Herakles. He was educated at the university of Alexandria, professed the fashionable neo-Platonism of Plotinus, and became the disciple and friend of Charles Kingsley's heroine, Hypatia. He travelled as ambassador for Cyrene to Athens and Constantinople, and then lived nine years of erudite leisure in his native city and in a country house which he possessed in the Pentapolis. He married and had three children. All this time he was, formally at least, a pagan philosopher. In 409 he was chosen Bishop of Ptolemais, and the first indispensable preliminary to his consecration was his baptism. It seems a bizarre proceeding, although we do not know how far Synesius had already given an informal adherence to Christianity, and in any case, as Mr. Crawford points out, the intellectual gulf between neo-Platonism and the neo-Platonised Christianity of Alexandria was far from a vital one. However, the new convert and bishop ruled actively, and disliked his functions very much, for five or six years, dying probably before the murder of his old friend and teacher Hypatia.

Mr. Crawford has made a fruitful study of the remains of Synesius and of the history of his times, although he is a little hampered in dealing with the philosophical side of his subject by the lack of any first-hand acquaintance with the greater neo-Platonic writers. He has an enthusiasm for his hero, whom he thus describes :

> Eccentric, heterodox, dreamy, unpractical—let anyone call him what he pleases; he was still a man, and a fine one, hard-working, unselfish, large-hearted, courageous, a hater of tyranny, a champion of the oppressed.

(Rivingtons.)

FROM Mr. James Clegg, of Rochdale, comes a new and complete edition of The Writings of Oliver Ormerod. Ormerod was one of four Rochdale dialect writers whose fame is perpetuated by a column in Rochdale Park. A man of great probity, some travel, and a passion for his local speech, Ormerod lives in Rochdale's memory chiefly by his account of Th' Greyt Eggshibishun of 1851. He also wrote an account of the Exhibition of 1862. John Bright, who was a native of Rochdale, said : "Our dialect, now vanishing into the past, will be preserved to future times, partly in the works of Tim Bobbin, but in a very much better and more instructive form in the writings of Oliver Ormerod." It was to John Bright (when Member for Manchester) that Ormerod dedicated his first Eggshibishun book. We hesitate to quote from this or any other specimen of Ormerod's dialect; but here is the opening of his dedicatory letter to the great orator :

> Neaw, us aw'm beawn fur to print o rook moore o maw bukes, its just comn hinto me yed us aw shud loike fur to deddykate um (us they koen it) to yo, oppo keawnt, yo noane o yo bein bred un born ut Rachde. Aw'l warrunt yo us we're meterly preawd us Rachde con fit op o greyte teawn loike Manchesstur we o Parleyment mon; summut to be preawd on, isn't it? Chaps loike yo connut be pyk't eawt ov ony nook, con they?

The "Writings" are well produced, and the original illustrations are given, besides a portrait of the author.

Messrs. Bell have had to produce a second edition of Mr. Percy Bates's monograph on The English Pre-Raphaelite Painters in their "British Artists" series. Additional pictures by the Brethren and their associates are included, and some reproductions of works by Scottish painters which the author thinks "show in a very interesting way that without the personal contact or direct influence of the originators of the movement, there was, as a result of their propaganda, something 'in the air' at that date to which young and sensitive artists thrilled responsive."

Messrs. T. C. and E. C. Jack, of Edinburgh, have issued an excellent new edition of The Poetry of Robert Burns, as edited by Mr. Henley and Mr. Henderson, in four volumes at 12s. 6d. the set. The battle raged hot round this work, and its rumble is still sometimes heard. So far as form goes this edition will make a suitable present for the season of peace and goodwill.

Studies in Music (Simpkin, Marshall; 7s. 6d. net) is a handsome reprint of articles which have appeared in the Musician. From the literary point of view, the most interesting paper is a highly wrought description of "Tristan and Isolde," by Gabriel d'Annunzio. Sentences like these abound : "Then, like ethereal threads, the slender notes wove round the living woman diaphanous veils of purity. Thus there began a species of joyous ascension of jewelled steps on the wings of a hymn. . . ." "It seemed as though everything was being decomposed, everything was giving out its secret essences, everything was being metamorphosed into immaterial symbols." There are essays on various aspects of Brahms, Bach, Schumann, and Wagner. "Walter Pater on Music" is considered by Mr. Ernest Newman. But Wagner subjects prevail, and among these we have a curious paper from the French of Hugues Imbert on "Rembrandt and Wagner." Comparing the Temple scene of Parsifal with Rembrandt's etching of the raising of Lazarus, the writer says: "Can we not liken the long tremolo of the basses to an effect of darkness, of shade, which throws out in bold relief the theme of Redemption?"

Digitized by Google

Fiction.

Light Freights. By W. W. Jacobs. (Methuen.)

In a world given to mutability and disenchantment, it is joyous indeed to find that Mr. Jacobs does not lose in flavour or fun. His new book is as good as those that preceded it; indeed, we are half inclined to think it better. We cannot at the moment remember anything in Many Cargoes or Sea Urchins that was funnier than several of these "Light Freights"—"A Garden Plot," for example—and we are certain that the by-play grows more deft and engaging. For Mr. Jacobs, it should be remembered, differs from the ordinary narrator of funny stories in one very important respect: he is funny in the grain as well as in the mass. You have to watch him all the while, or you will perhaps miss the best adjective in the book or the slyest sally of sarcasm. For Light Freights is, like its predecessors (only perhaps more so), a very epic of sarcasm. Sarcasm, said Carlyle, is the language of the devil: but if the devil has any of the humorous aptitude of Mr. Jacobs's mates and sailors, skippers and longshoremen, he must be a very amusing fellow. We have a sad misgiving, however, that Mr. Jacobs idealises a thought too much for this to be the case. This world he has discovered—this world of mutually deceptive yet loyal forecastles, sulphurous cabins, and of resourceful maidens; where profanity is continuous yet inoffensive; where drink lays every man out yet excites no disgust in the reader; where eyes are blacked as part of the daily routine; where men are boys and boys are cynics—this world, we fear, exists only in the regions of Mr. Jacobs's freakish brain. But what a triumph for Mr. Jacobs's delicate art that his books describing it can go into every kind of English home and leave only laughter in their wake!

The Purple Cloud. By M. P. Shiel. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

One of the laudatory press-criticisms of a previous work by Mr. Shiel, printed at the beginning of the present volume, runs tersely thus: "Will he last?" It is a pretty question, which time will answer. But we may assert that nothing could be madder, giddily and gorgeously madder, than The Purple Cloud. And, at the same time, nothing so mad could well have more method in its madness. Mr. Shiel has apparently set out to be more sensational than anybody ever before was, and he is handsomely succeeding. The Lord of the Sea had its shocks, thrills, and mortal perturbations—it was a gentle sedative compared to The Purple Cloud. In The Purple Cloud he merely conceives the destruction of all human, and nearly all brute life on the globe, save one man and one girl—that is all. On the last page we leave these two to commence their divine mission of repopulating the planet. If Mr. Shiel had no talent, it would not occur to us to criticise such a fiction. But he has a remarkable literary gift, and a power of imagination capable of withstanding even the inexcusably severe strain which he puts upon it. The first half of the book held us, and the last half was not tedious. We are bound in honesty to make the admission, and having made it, we cannot of course launch that sweeping and utter condemnation which such madness, such exorbitancy, such screeching, when considered in the abstract, seem to merit. Mr. Shiel is diabolically clever in the contrivance of his machinery, and an example of his cleverness is the dodge by which he convinces us that we may actually read a full account by an eye-witness of something that is still in the womb of the future. Most novelists of the prophetic school shirk this difficulty; Mr. Shiel faces it with considerable skill. His explanation of the origin of the seismic-cosmic catastrophe is also highly ingenious. Another of his qualities is that, far from insisting on the sensational aspects of the invented events, he continually turns to the psychological aspects of them, in regard to the hero. His accounts of the gradual growth of the hero's love of solitude, of the hero's sudden discovery that he could only keep sane by devoting himself to some great work, and of the hero's murderous anger when he finds out that he is not, after all, alone on earth, disclose a very genuine and persuasive imagination. Nor does he fail when he attempts the gaudy. An instance of this is on pages 236-7, where the hero, in making electric power at a generating station, does more than he thinks for. You must imagine London at dusk, peopled by some millions of corpses, simultaneously stilled by death in the varied acts of life:

> I hurried out, the station still running, got into the car, and was off to look for a good electric one, of which there are hosts in the streets, in order at least to clean up and adjust the motor that night. I drove down three by-streets, till I turned into Euston-road, but I had no sooner reached it than I pulled up—with sudden jerk—with a shout of astonishment.
>
> That cursed street was all lighted up and gay! and three shimmering electric globes, not far apart, illuminated every feature of a ghastly battle-field of dead.
>
> And there was a thing there, the grinning impression of which I shall carry to my grave: a thing which spelled and spelled at me, and ceased, and began again, and ceased, and spelled at me. For, above a shop which faced me was a flag, a red flag with white letters, fluttering on the gale the words: "Metcalfe's Stores"; and beneath the flag stretched right across the house, was the thing which spelled, letter by letter, in letters of light: and it spelled two words, deliberately, coming to the end, and going back to recommence:
>
> DRINK
> ROBORAT.
>
> And that was the last word of civilised Man to me, Adam Jeffson—its final counsel—its ultimate gospel and message—to me, my God! Drink Roborat! . . . It was one of those electrical spelling-advertisements, worked by a small motor commutator driven by a works-motor, and I had now set it going.

In the literary way, the best thing in the book is a truly distinguished description of Constantinople. The worst feature is the naïve heroine, with her entirely unconvincing speculations upon the nature of the civilisation of which she saw only the ruins. Mr. Shiel, when he chooses, can write admirably; but he often chooses to write with senseless "finery." Lastly, the interest of the story, instead of waxing as the tale proceeds, wanes. These, together with the central crude intention to startle and appal, are the sins of the work—a work as to which the worst that can be said of it is that it is abundantly clever enough to be amusing.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

SOME WOMEN I HAVE KNOWN. BY MAARTEN MAARTENS.

They range from a Duchess to a Dutchwoman, and the volume contains twelve studies, analytical and descriptive. It is dedicated "to the women without a history these histories of women." Men are introduced, and M. Maartens does not spare them. Here is a duke. "He was a great, big, fair man, of sickly complexion, with a magnificent moustache and a constant tendency to boils." Mr. Maartens, on his own confession, is a cynic, "as all men know." (Heinemann. 6s.)

Digitized by Google

LOVE LIKE A GIPSY. BY BERNARD CAPES.

Historical. Mr. Capes's eighth novel opens thus: "In the early part of the year 1778, which was the fourth of the struggle between Great Britain and her rebellious colonies, there reached America that 'forlorn hope' of Parliamentary Commissioners that was deputed to secure (if it could), by some late measures of conciliation, the submission of a revolted continent." But the story does not all pass in America. In Chapter III. we are in England on an August afternoon of the year 1788. The title is taken from Herrick. (Constable. 6s.)

YORKE THE ADVENTURER. BY LOUIS BECKE.

Mr. Becke's province is the South Seas, and in these eleven stories he shows himself once again to be very much at home there. "Yorke the Adventurer" is the longest, and tells of wild happenings. Here is a taste: "Yorke, dashing the pouring perspiration from his brow with his hand, had just stood up to get a look at the brigantine and cutter, when he uttered an oath. 'By God, we're in for it now! Look, here's four canoes, filled with niggers, heading dead on for us. The beggars see us, too.'" (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

JOSEPH KHASSAN. BY A. J. DAWSON.

Dated from Tangier, about Tangier, and dedicated to "a land of undying satisfaction, the home of a dying people." Joseph Khassan was a half-breed, but on his wedding-day he had "put away Khassan the half-breed, the 'crank,' as he had been called, of Tangier's Bohemia, and had faced the world of civilisation as Mr. Joseph Khassan, the foreign-born husband of an English wife." (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE HOUSE WITH THE GREEN SHUTTERS. BY GEORGE DOUGLAS.

Scotch. The house with the green shutters is situated in the small Scots country town where the story opens. "In every little Scotch community there is a distinct type known as 'the bodie.' 'What does he do, that man?' you may ask; and the answer will be: 'Really, I could hardly tell ye what he does—he's just a bodie!'" Mr. Douglas has a firm grasp of his material, and an easy, swinging style. (Macqueen. 6s.)

FLOWER AND THORN. BY BEATRICE WHITBY.

A quiet, domestic story, by the author of The Awakening of Mary Fenwick—the kind of story that is almost rare nowadays. It opens at a seaside resort, where Mrs. Guthrie is staying with her niece Jane and her son David, who carries a message to the lodgers upstairs, and thus makes the acquaintance of Valerie. The message was: "My mother is an invalid, and to-day she has a headache. I came up to ask if you would mind being quiet." (Hurst & Blackett. 6s.)

A GODDESS OF GRAY'S INN. BY G. B. BURGIN.

Mr. Burgin is always cheery and sentimental, and in this volume he is quite himself. "Do you take sugar?" asked the goddess of Gray's Inn, gliding to a little tea-table, a pair of silver sugar-tongs poised inquiringly above her dainty cups. He usually took absinthe at this hour of the afternoon, not because he really liked it, but because in one so young it was a daring and devilish thing to do." The end of the story is just what it should be in a novel by Mr. Burgin: "Then slowly, slowly she came to him, and kissed him on the lips." (Pearson. 6s.)

WHEN THE LAND WAS YOUNG. BY LAFAYETTE MCLAWS.

Adventure, with Indians in the text and in the spirited pictures. It closes on this note: "Within the week King Louis withdraws his indulgence to Protestants. The edict given at Nantes will be revoked." It begins: "We were stripped of our clothes and made to stand with our backs to the fire. The Indians, ranged in a semi-circle facing us, sat like bronze statues under the crimson and yellow glare of the leaping flames with the deepening shade of the moss-draped forest behind them." (Constable. 6s.)

THE DIARY OF A FRESHMAN. BY M. FLANDRAU.

American. The diarist is ingenuous; he has an eye for the lighter side of things, and he has certainly read Mr. Jerome. The diary begins: "Mamma left for home this afternoon." A little later we read: "We got some Turkish rugs at an auction in town The man said they would never wear out. When they arrived here and I saw them for the first time by daylight (they had gas at the sale), I knew what he meant. However, mamma darned them very nicely." (Heinemann. 4s.)

OUR LADY OF DELIVERANCE. BY JOHN OXENHAM.

Adventure. The narrator is a fourth officer on a Cunard liner, who jumps overboard and saves a "quiet, unpretentious old soul" from drowning. He is E Sandbacker, of California, and, on his death, he bequeaths the fourth officer one million dollars. Then follow adventures, including the rescue of a girl and her brother from persecution. The story is dedicated to "Alfred Dreyfus, without his permission." (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE PLACE OF DREAMS. BY WILLIAM BARRY.

Four stories by the author of The Two Standards. Three of them have been published before, the fourth, "St. Anthony's Flask," is new. In an Advertisement of five pages Dr. Barry refers to the Upanishads, has something to say about the soul under its Brahmic name of Purusha, and warns his readers "against meddling with the thing called 'Spiritualism.'" (Sands. 3s. 6d.)

THE FORTUNE OF CHRISTINA M'NAB. BY S. MACNAUGHTAN.

Christina was Scotch. "'Deed, Sandy,' she cried, 'does a lassie with eighteen thousand a year marry an electrical engineer?'" She had frizzy red hair, and before the windfall she had been dressing on twenty pounds a year. The story opens well. Christina's experiences are certainly readable, and novel readers who like the deserving to have their deserts will not be disappointed. (Methuen. 6s.)

A MAN OF MILLIONS. BY S. R. KEIGHTLEY.

A story of to-day, bright and readable, with love-making, intrigue, a mysterious murder, and a Chinaman who flits through the pages, and makes remarks like: "He dam liar," "he dam liar all litee," "me good Chlistian." Ah Sin's master, who had left home under a cloud and gone to South Africa, ran against, not the kind of mountain that General Buller bumped his head upon in Caron D'Ache's cartoon, but "a mountain of diamonds." The story deals with the attempt of less lucky men to relieve Percival of his fortune. (Cassell. 6s.)

We have also received A Blind Marriage, by George R. Sims (Chatto, 3s. 6d.); The Baccy Queen, by Theodore Wilson (Arnold, 6s.); The Marriage of Laurentia, by Marie Haultmont (Sands, 6s.); Captain Ishmael, by George Griffith (Hutchinson, 6s.); Frédérique, by Marcel Prévost, translated by Ellen Marriage (Duckworth, 6s.); Mary Anne of Parchment Buildings, by Lucas Cleeve (Digby, Long, 6s.); The Awakening of Helena Thorpe, by E. Rentoul Esler (Partridge, 3s. 6d.); Halfway to Hades, by Theo Irving (Milne, 3s. 6d.); East of Suez, by Alice Perrin (Treherne, 6s.); Mad Lorrimer, by Finch Mason (Treherne, 6s.); The Tempting of Father Anthony, by George Horton (Chicago: McClurg & Co.).

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

The Critic in the Market Place.

OF all who write, the makers of verses surely receive the least encouragement. Their booklets do not sell, and in the family circle poets follow the Muse in an environment of frowning disapproval. But they persevere, inspired to heroic efforts by the acclamation with which a true poet is received. They publish their little sheaves of verse, and for many the bill is the end of the experiment. Poetry is not popular. It is not a commodity with a sure, if variable, sale, like fiction. Of the few who are interested in modern verse, the majority are but tasters, taking what they like in homeopathic doses, mainly from reviews, and succumbing readily to the temptation to quote snatches. From Mr. William Watson's muse you may hear, not infrequently, this:

> Now while the vernal impulsion makes lyrical all that hath language,
> While, through the veins of the Earth, riots the ichor of spring. . . .

From Mrs. Meynell:

> I must not think of thee; and, tired yet strong,
> I shun the thought that lurks in all delight. . . .

From Mr. Stephen Phillips:

> O thou art put to many uses, sweet!
> Thy blood will urge the rose, and surge in Spring;
> But yet! . . .

From Mr. Francis Thompson:

> When dusk shrunk cold, and light trod shy,
> And dawn's grey eyes were troubled grey;
> And souls went palely up the sky,
> And mine to Lucidé. . . .

From Mr. John Davidson:

> I care not for my broken vow;
> Though God should come in thunder soon,
> I am sister to the mountains now,
> And sister to the sun and moon. . . .

From Mr. William Yates:

> How many loved your moments of glad grace,
> And loved your beauty with love false or true;
> But one man loved the pilgrim soul in you,
> And loved the sorrows of your changing face. . . .

From Miss Louisa Shore:

> Forget not, Earth, thy disappointed dead!
> Forget not, Earth, thy disinherited!
> Forget not the forgotten! . . .

The extracts might be prolonged. They are not the best; they just happen to be snatches from the works of the dozen or so prominent younger poets of the day that have passed, more or less, into current use. For, although poetry is not popular nowadays, good poetry is quickly recognised. The tasters are many, if the students are few. The day is passed when it was "a mark of culture to confound George with Owen Meredith, or to prefer, on the whole, 'Lucille' to 'Love in a Valley.'"

Mr. William Archer is not a taster. Either he will pursue a meal right through to the cognac, or he will have none at all. He has the quality that enthusiastic civilians, six thousand miles away, once gave to General Buller. He is dogged. In his interest in the drama, in Ibsen, in Real Conversations, in Volunteering (we trust we are not betraying a secret) dogged is the epithet that describes Mr. Archer. Whatever subject he chooses, he foots it milestone after milestone, without haste, without languor, and when he can say "The men are splendid," he says it without rhetoric, but with a prodigal use of his own particular choice in words and phrases. His similes and allusions do not, like Mr. Lang's, jump to the nib-point. Shakespeare would never have called one of his figures "a good swift simile, but something currish." Rather they are architectonic. For example:

> Perhaps he himself may one day subject his high-piled granary to the winnowing process it so sadly needs, and scattering the chaff to the winds, give it the residual treasure-heap of pure poetic wheat.

Elsewhere we find: "His spirit is electrically fuliginous."

It is Mr. Archer's square-browed, dogged determination to be thorough that makes all he writes so well worth reading. Consider his volume on Poets of the Younger Generation (Lane). It is as huge, and as heavy to hold, as a volume of a popular encyclopædia. Why? Because Mr. Archer, having determined to write on modern poetry, must plough the whole field. Any other critic would have been content to keep to his own furrow. Not so Mr. Archer. Having decided to play the rôle of uncle to the younger poets of our time, he first makes this rule: "To include only poets born since 1850"; then he proceeds to read all that they have written, and after that to put on paper just what he thinks, without a mental reservation or a single glance over his shoulder at the frown or smile of any other critic, quick or dead. Consequently we have a volume that is quite unlike any other book. He who reads these pages with care should know as much about modern poetry as the man in the street knows about politics or sport. The book is a testimony to one man's industry, perseverance, intellectuality, and sane taste. A one-man view obviously, but the view of a man who belongs to no school, who has the courage of his opinions, and the strength to change his mind. Thus, at the end of the paper on Mr. A. E. Housman, Mr. Archer writes: "As I re-read Mr. Housman's poems after an interval of three years or so, I have a curious feeling of having quoted the wrong things." As to the courage of his convictions, he boldly proclaims that a little song by a Miss Alice Brown "ought to take its place in every 'Golden Treasury' of English lyrics." It is in three stanzas, of which this is the last:

> My birds, come back! the hollow sky
> Is weary for your note.
> (Sweet throat come back! O liquid mellow throat!)
> Ere May's soft minions hereward fly,
> Shame on ye, laggards, to deny
> The brooding breast, the sun-bright eye,
> The tawny shining coat.

Occasionally Mr. Archer belies his Scots restraint, as when he writes:

> All Paris went into ecstasies the other day over Jean Richepin's line—
>
> "Et tous les forêts avec tous leur oiseaux."
>
> In England we take no notice of such trifles, and the North-country lad [Mr. Watson] who wrote
>
> "As some lone sea-bird over a lone sea"
>
> had to wait many a year before he met with any real encouragement.

The thirty-three poets included in these 565 pages are chosen, we gather, because their work, or some substantial portion of it, has given Mr. Archer genuine pleasure.

Digitized by Google

Appreciation is the end and aim of the volume. The poets are not marshalled in any order of merit. Each one stands by himself or herself. Comparisons are never made; they stand in alphabetical order. We give the list with the number of pages devoted to each:

Mr. Stephen Phillips...	46	Miss E. Nesbit	12
Mr. John Davidson ...	43	Mrs. Marriott Watson	12
Mr. William Watson...	41	Mr. Madison Cawein	11
Mr. Kipling	31	Mr. Quiller Couch ...	11
Mr. Francis Thompson	29	Mr. Charles Roberts...	11
Mr. W. B. Yeats	29	Mr. D. C. Scott.....	11
Mr. Henry Newbolt...	25	Mr. John Tabb	10
Mr. Bliss Carman.....	17	Mr. A. C. Benson.....	10
Mr. Laurence Binyon	15	Mr. L Housman	10
Mr. F. B. Money Coutts	14	Mr. F. H. Trench.....	9
Mrs. Hinkson	14	Mrs. Woods	9
Mr. Richard Hovey...	14	Mrs. Meynell.....	8
Mr. Le Gallienne.....	13	Mr. H. C. Beeching...	7
Mrs. Shorter	13	Miss Nora Hopper ...	7
Mr. A. E. Housman...	13	Mrs. Radford.....	7
Mr. George Santayana	12	Miss Alice Brown.....	6
Mr. Arthur Symons...	12

Such is the list. Obviously the number of pages each poet receives is regulated by the extent of his production. A voluminous poet like Mr. Davidson cannot be appreciated in the space that suffices for Mrs. Meynell's shy muse.

We have said that Mr. Archer is thorough and dogged. Indeed, he carries those characteristics to a point where few critics will care to follow. In plain words, he stands in the market-place and shows his credentials to the thirty-three poets whom he has criticised and interpreted, prefacing his confession by quoting Mr. John M. Robertson's plea for scientific criticism, advanced in his New Essays Towards a Critical Method, which amounts to this: "that the critic should give the reader and the person criticised an opportunity of checking his individual judgments, and estimating their value, by a reference to his general culture and habit of mind." In twenty and odd pages Mr. Archer discourses of his preferences in poetry during boyhood, youth, and adolescence, gravely, but with an undercurrent of humorous detachment that wins the sympathy of the reader as it should mollify the criticised. This standing in the market-place is not new. Others have done it before, more or less candidly, but we doubt if any critic of our time has done it so thoroughly.

Of those who have stood in the market-place, one lonely, lofty spirit, now dead—a critic of philosophy, not of poetry—comes to mind. We mean the great soul who wrote the passage we print below. Many have been thrilled by that enkindling passage, so unexpected, at the end of the difficult first volume of Types of Ethical Theory:

> With a noble inconsistency, all the great writers whose doctrines we have studied betray the tenacious vitality of the intuitive consciousness of duty, throughout the very process of cutting away its philosophic roots; and Plato, in his "divine wrath" at the tyrant flung into Tartarus; Malebranche, self-extinguished in the Absolute Holiness; Spinoza, lifted from the thraldom of passion into the freedom of Infinite Love; Comte, on his knees before the image of a Perfect Humanity, are touching witnesses to the undying fires of moral faith and aspiration.

In the preface to that work Dr. Martineau stands in the market-place, and recalls, in his grave, vivid manner, the intellectual wanderings that led quietly to the light:

> It is no wonder then, that, in skimming over my notes of work in those distant years, I seem to be communing with some tight-swathed logical prig, in whose jerky confidence and angular mimicry of life I am humbled to recognise the image of myself . . .
>
> It was the irresistible pleading of the moral consciousness which first drove me to rebel against the limits of the merely scientific conception. . . .
>
> I gave myself chiefly to Greek studies, and only read more largely authors of whom I had supposed myself to know something before. The effect I cannot describe but as a new intellectual birth: after a temporary struggle out of the English into the Greek moulds of conception, I seemed to pierce, through what had been words before, into contact with living thought, and the black, grammatical text was aglow with luminous philosophy.

Mr. Archer, in his way, is equally strenuous. We have strung together a few extracts from his confession:

> The first composition of mine that ever found its way into print was some sort of rhapsody (in prose) on Byron at Missolonghi. The attack passed off in six months or so, and I am not aware that it left behind any permanent ill effects. About the same time I read the greater part of The Faery Queen, with a certain pleasure, but without any real appreciation. It was from Wordsworth, whom I read for a college essay, that I learned the true meaning of the word poetry.
>
> Coleridge, of course, came to me in the train of Wordsworth, and The Ancient Mariner seemed to me at seventeen, what it seems to me now, the most magical of poems, an inspiration and a miracle.
>
> But the test of a mature sense of poetical values is, to my thinking, a genuine appreciation of Milton. With me it came late. I spent my twentieth year idling in Australia, and being somewhat hard up for literature, I set myself to read Paradise Lost from beginning to end, at the rate of a book a day. I accomplished the task, but it bored me unspeakably, and I used to take an unholy revenge in chuckling between-whiles over Taine's analysis of the poem. I did not return to it for seven or eight years, until one day I found myself starting on a railway journey with nothing to read, and paid a shilling at the station bookstall for a pocket Paradise Lost. That was to me an ever memorable journey; the poem became my bedside book for months; and ever since, when I have ten minutes to spare for pure pleasure, I open Paradise Lost almost at random.
>
> To my unmusical soul, a classical concert is delightful for ten minutes; after that my attention begins to wander, and presently I find myself suffering the inverse tantalisation of one who is seated at a gorgeous banquet for which he has no appetite. In precisely the same way does the greater part of Shelley's poetry affect me. Prometheus Unbound, for instance, I regard as probably the greatest symphony in literature; but, alas! I have no soul for symphonies.
>
> Dante I read and re-read, but otherwise know scarcely anything of Italian poetry.

The confession, of which the above are but a few sentences taken here and there, is not very compromising, but considerable fortitude is required to say as much as Mr. Archer has said.

An anthology is a confession of preferences, and it is as futile to complain of omissions or inclusions in an anthology as it is to criticise a confession of wrong-doing. The critic should, as far as he can, interpret the mind of the anthologist, and rest content without agreeing or differing. We may, or we may not, think that Tennyson's "Frater Ave Atque Vale" deserves the high praise that Mr. Archer gives to it, but we are certainly glad of a critic who is not too cultured to be enthusiastic. Also for a critic who can write straightforwardly as this. It is in the paper on Mr. Francis Thompson. After quoting the poem "To a Snow-Flake," Mr. Archer continues:

> How can one harden one's heart to remonstrate with a poet who can write like this? One's impulse is rather to say, "Go on and prosper—play what pranks you please with the English language; Latinise, neologise, solecise as you will; make past-participles from nouns and verbs transitive from adjectives; devise gins and springes for the tongue out of cunningly-knotted sibilants and dental consonants; pause not to distinguish between grotesque conceits and noble images; only continue to write such lines as these:
>
> "Even the kisses of the just,
> Go down not unresurgent to the dust.
> Yea, not a kiss which I have given,
> But shall triumph upon my lips in heaven,
> Or cling a shameful fungus there in hell—"
>
> and everything, everything shall be forgiven you!

Digitized by Google

Things Seen.

The Diners.

PEOPLE did not go to this restaurant to stare, or to be stared at, or to hear music. They went to eat. For that purpose the restaurant, with its simple decorations and solid furniture, was designed. And, although there were half a hundred dishes on the menu, not one of them appeared under the vulgar heading, "Plats du jour." It was impossible for this proprietor to insult his customers by supposing that they would order a dish that was "always ready," and that half-a-dozen other individuals might be eating at the same moment. No! each diner selected his dishes after a concentrated study of the menu, and the choice was noted by the head-waiter, ever ready with deferential advice when needed. Twenty minutes—half an hour—they would willingly wait. Of course, the majority of the diners were foreigners. Englishmen, as a class, do not dine: they eat, dividing their attention between their plates and a newspaper. Here you never see a paper.

Curiosity led me one night into this restaurant, and, after ordering a steak, fried potatoes, and an apple tart, I confess to have found the period of waiting, without a newspaper, a little tedious, till my eye fell upon two elderly men, who were seated at the table adjoining mine. Plainly they were graduates in the art of living. Like as two peas (probably brothers), touched with distinction, they had grown grey without losing their figures, or forgetting that it is the duty of man, as of woman, to cultivate as prepossessing an exterior as nature permits. Their hair was trim; their small, pointed beards were newly cut; their small moustaches were just sufficiently waxed; their clothes were quiet; their linen shone, and they were dining with the easy movements of a Government official writing a letter. Being wise, they had arranged an occupation that, while not interfering with the subtleties of dining, would afford them just enough intellectual excitement to keep the mind engaged. By the side of each reposed a gold pencil, and from one to the other was passed, at leisurely intervals, a sheet of cream-laid notepaper, upon which, in turn, each wrote something in small, neat caligraphy. They never made an entry without first studying the menu, and, when one had written, he passed the menu and the sheet of cream-laid paper, with a courteous inclination of the head, to his companion. This continued through the evening, and, when I learnt the meaning of their occupation, I realised how far I was from the artistic realisation of the art of dining.

When they dined together, they spent the intervals between the courses in selecting, turn by turn, the dishes for their next meeting.

The Column of Smoke.

AN hour ago the steamship Una had landed me on the quay; and now, having handed in my passport, duly visé and countersigned, to the Czar's vicar in the hotel bureau, I stood upon the Newski Prospect trying to identify the peculiar odour of St. Petersburg, for every city has its peculiar and distinctive smell. At the end of the Prospect was the tower, whence the watchman watches day and night for fire. As I edged through the afternoon crowd, and dodged the headlong drivers of droschkies, I noticed certain black balls run up the signal tower. In a moment there came the tootle of a trumpet, and the blower, mounted, came galloping round a corner. Then the jangle of a bell, the clatter of hoofs, and a fire-engine—or at least part of a fire-engine. For the man who sat by the driver and waved the bell over his head heralded other vehicles; one carried a hose pipe, another a barrel which might have contained healing water or refreshing vodka. There were six in all, and upon each were big men in bright brass helmets. They galloped up the Newski Prospect towards a huge column of smoke. Suddenly, amid the trumpeting and the ringing and the clatter every helmet was lowered, and as the horses dashed along every man reverently crossed himself. Even the bell-ringer, with bell still aloft in his left hand, did homage with his right hand to the eikon at the street corner.

The column of smoke grew thicker, blacker, higher.

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

NOBODY could more heartily rejoice than I in the fact that at last a French knight has come forward to avenge the honour of the grievously besmirched Young Girl of France. M. Olivier de Tréville offers to M. Marcel Prévost a documented reply to his savage and too famous Demi-Vierges, a book which may well be described as a blighting scandal in modern French literature. Until then the pornographers had passed the young girl by with a respectful, if indifferent, salutation. They tacitly agreed to leave her her evanescent hour of obscurity. M. Prévost leaped over this convention, broke outrageously with this honourable tradition, and dragged her into the light—a limelight, to be sure, purposely toned to suggest all stains, obliterate all traces of virtue; to reveal to our astounded view a vulgar, corrupt, rapacious, deflowered "maid of the world"; a cynical little monkey parodying the vices of her elders. That sin of his youth M. Prévost probably now regrets—is not his recent conversion to a healthier feminism than the vicious and morbid feminism of Lettres de Femmes a kind of public abjurement of an ancient heresy?—but a great writer reminds us that "the evil that men do lives after them"; and while M. Prévost is laboriously writing Lui or Frédérique, "Demi-Vierges" is being played—and very well played too—at the Athénée. He may argue, perhaps, that the way in this scandal was shown him by M. Feuillet, of perfumed and heraldic renown in sentimental fiction. In all gravity, and apparently without the ghost of a notion that his hero was playing the part of a lackey and a cad, M. Feuillet depicts a flower of French nobility—a privileged disputed one—in the noble Faubourg, listening unsuspected, and with the connivance of his titled hostess, to the private conversation of young ladies among whom he designed to choose a wife. He wished to discover if any of them were worthy of bearing his name. He was scandalised by their talk, which his sympathising creator found "fit to make monkeys blush." And so M. Prévost conceived the original project of making humanity blush instead.

Now comes forward the quixotic M. de Tréville with more gracious purport. The calumniated maids of France sorely need a knight with so many pornographers abroad seeking whom they may devour, and beginning to tire of mere adultery as an over-exhausted source of excitement. Wearied of betraying each other, the husbands and wives of French fiction for a change are dreaming of fidelity, and in a recent novel, Un Ménage Moderne, by M. Emile Pierret, they have gone back delightedly to simple love and work and restricted means with the most admirable results. But with M. de Tréville's arduous testimony the maidens are henceforth unassailable. Les Jeunes Filles Peintes par Elles-mêmes is a volume of six hundred closely-printed pages, and the dedicatory letter to M. Prévost assures us that several thousands of provincial and Parisian young girls have contributed to it. Some have been deliberately interviewed, others have been solicited to express themselves by letter on such burning subjects as the ideal type of the young girl, instruction, education of the young girl, the ball, northern literature, feminism, theatre-going and novel-reading, decentralisation, keeping of a diary, old maids, art, flowers, bull-fights, the spinning-wheel, women-strikers, scepticism and disenchantment, happiness, marriage, death, cremation.

Digitized by Google

The book is far too long, and, in spite of the babbling of thousands of young girls, monotonous and often intolerably dull. But there can be no doubt of the general soul disengaged from all this diverse chatter. It does extreme honour to France and to her maids. Nothing here in common with the infamous demi-vierge, nothing in common with the American and Anglo-Saxon flirt: honest, admirably behaved, slightly sentimental, often witty creatures, all looking forward to marriage with a very honourable and exalted idea of its responsibilities and duties. Each one is sincerely convinced that the rôle of wife and mother is the most beautiful on earth. The alarming thing is that among so many there should not be a suggestion of wildness, a breath of animal spirits, a dream of elsewhere, beyond, the kingdom of vague ambition and unattainable hope, a murmur of hoydenism, a whisper of worldliness, of loudness, fastness, or vulgarity: that is the depressing lack, original characterisation. For there is nothing fresh, or breezy, or barbarous, or candid about all these charming young persons. Their sweet reasonableness disconcerts and dismays. They nearly all think so admirably and write so sensibly. Of course now and then they talk nonsense, but it is the nonsense of correct and well-ordered minds, who walk much too carefully along the well-swept alleys of maidenhood prepared for their unfaltering steps by judicious elders, with never as much as a desire to cast a glance over the forbidden hedges, and who judge too austerely and intolerantly those who deviate from this measured march. Sometimes these maids are aggressive, pert and priggish, and they are all tinctured with the vice of cant. Their patriotism is unequivocally Nationalist. They abhor everything English, German, and Scandinavian. They are devout, virtuous, and reactionary, having been brought up in convents; they abhor progr-r-r-ès (as one of them satirically writes it), which they qualify as snobbism, and despise the unspeakable Saxon, whom they invariably describe as mufle. Their general admiration of Bossuet (is it sincere?) would delight M. Brunetière, and their favourite authors are Corneille and Lacordaire. Their virtue is desperately Cornelian. One and all desire to exhibit noble sons instead of jewels. But one frightfully satirical maid thinks ruefully, the thing is to have the noble sons, and she has, alas! small faith in the modern males of her great race. She mentions the Bazar de Charité, where all the women were burnt, and only the men were saved. Another attributes the decay of French chivalry to the base habit of imitating English fashions prevalent among the sons of Gaul. How can men be noble who send their linen to be washed in London, who are habited by British tailors, who indulge in British sports, and who talk like this after greeting with the barbarous British shake-hands? "Ai fait atteler au cab mon pur-sang et avec le groom suis allé jusqu'à. Enragé horseman! Charmant, ce garden-party. Ai pris part à deux games de lawn-tennis et football. Entre clubman avons causé jusqu'à five-o'-clock de sport, de yachting. Très smart cette réunion." Decidedly those are not girls to throw themselves at the heads of men. They are charmingly dignified, intelligent, and well-bred.

The Propos de Félix Faure is instructive reading, if not from the point of view of history, certainly for the characteristic revelation it affords us of the fatuous individual the Déroulédists nonsensically apostrophised in death "as the last President of the French Republic." Poor M. Loubet is, of course, the President of the Jews, and, according to the latest clerical and Nationalist scare, M. Waldeck Rousseau is about to accomplish what Napoleon only dreamed of and become Pope. Not of Rome, however. The Temple of Jerusalem is to be reconstructed, but in Paris, not in Palestine. He is to be its pope or patriarch, in conspiracy with the Gallican bishops. These are the recent ravings of a Chartreusan monk. Verily, St. Bruno was wise to preach eternal silence. Had this monk not broken the law, we would never have known the mediæval ambition and wickedness of the Prime Minister, and so we are the more struck by the amiable candour and vanity of that most simple and self-inflated burgess, Félix Faure. How delightfully he explains the failure to seize that elusive wand popularity, which was his to grasp and hold, of poor Carnot, pre-occupied with a liver disease, of M. Casimir-Perier, spoiled, petulant child of fortune; and how naïvely he delights in his good looks, his elegant figure and faultless tailoring, and, above all, in the friendship of Nicholas. One would think Nicholas and he were of the same age, that they had supped together in wild youth, and frequently smoked together the pipe of memory in middle age. Félix Faure, too, might have maintained St. Bruno's golden law with advantage. H. L.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 108 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best "Ode to Forgotten Authors." We award the prize to Mr. F. B. Doveton, Karsfield, Torquay, for the following:

What though your humble names are never heard
In these ungracious days,
Yet by your words were many bosoms stirred
What time you piped your lays!
Then, your quaint prose or long-forgotten verse
Some student, it might be,
Would to his comrades lovingly rehearse,
So long ago, ah, me!

Among you may be some who in their time
Swayed many a heart, I trow;
Not to have read you almost seemed a crime
To those who prized you so!
Your names were once upon the lips of men.
Your volumes by their side,
They praised those prosings of your fluent pen
We "moderns" should deride!

And others of you who in numbers chose
To ease their teeming brain,
For some had all the sweetness of the rose,
The music of the rain.
Your books were read by many a crystal rill,
In sweet Julys long dead,
Or gladly conned when winter nights were chill,
And cheery fires burnt red.

And now your works are overlaid with dust,
They share oblivion's night;
Till in the box some hand by chance is thrust,
And drags one to the light!
The page for centuries closed we turn once more,
Then, smiling, go our way,
Harder to please than in the days of yore—
Well, well, you had your day.

Other odes received are as follows:

Sweet bards forgotten, bards of long ago,
Writers of prose majestic, epics keen,
Who slumber deep in duodecimo
With faded rose-leaves in your leaves atween!
Captors of passing thought, and passing scene,
Who dream for ever in a dusty row,
Oh, rest in peace! In sooth, 'twere better so,
Far from the noisy world, the critic's spleen!

For some day when the sunlight casts a glow
Through oriel windows—peaceful, golden sheen!—
Kissing your russet duodecimo,
Then, then, perchance, upon the cloister green
Shall tapered fingers press you! And, unseen,
Shall votive tears their silent praise bestow
For long-passed thought, and sweet, forgotten scene
Oh, bards forgotten, is't not better so—
The scholar's tear, the peaceful cloister green?

[H. G. T., London.]

When dust has dimmed the window-pane
And firelight flickers in the room,
Glancing along the friendly shelves
Brightening the sober folio's gloom.

From where your ghosts by day lie hid
You steal within the welcoming blaze:
Pale shadows from the bookman's land
You pass before my dreamy gaze.

With doubtful looks, you tender me
The works you wrought for love or lucre
But Fame—Ah, sirs! a fickle jade!
I, too, alas, would fain rebuke her.

Digitized by Google

A SELECTION FROM

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

AN IMPORTANT VOLUME BY A POPULAR WRITER.

THEN and NOW. By the Very Rev. Dean Hole, Author of "A Book about Roses," "The Memories of Dean Hole," "A Little Tour in Ireland," "Our Gardens," &c. In 1 large demy 8vo vol., cloth gilt and gilt top, with Photogravure Portrait and Illustrations, 16s. net.

A BOOK OF TRAVELS.
BY THE LATE SIR RICHARD BURTON, K.C.M.G.

WANDERINGS in THREE CONTINENTS. By the Author of "The Pilgrimage to Mecca," &c. Edited, with a Preface and Notes, by W. H. WILKINS, M.A., F.S.A., Editor of the Burton MSS. and Author of "The Romance of Isabel, Lady Burton" and "The Love of an Uncrowned Queen." In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait and Illustrations, 16s. net.

BY FRANCES GERARD.

A GRAND DUCHESS and her COURT. By the Author of "The Romance of Ludwig II. of Bavaria." In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 32 Illustrations, 24s. net. [In the press.

AN UNCOMMON WORK ON LIFE IN A PENAL SETTLEMENT.
BY GEORGE GRIFFITH.

IN an UNKNOWN PRISON LAND. By the Author of "The Angel of the Revolution," "The Outlaws of the Air," &c. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with 32 Illustrations, 12s. net.

A CHARMING BOOK ON LIFE IN SICILY.
BY NORMA LORIMER.

BY the WATERS of SICILY. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with numerous Illustrations, including a Frontispiece in Colours from an Original Painting by Margaret Thomas, 10s. 6d. net.

AN IMPORTANT WORK OF INTEREST TO ALL NATURALISTS AND BOTANISTS.

BRITISH VEGETABLE GALLS. An Introduction to their Study, Collecting, Mounting, Classification, &c. By EDWARD T. CONNOLD. With 140 superb Full-page Illustrations, all of which have been photographed direct from Living Specimens, collected specially for this Work. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"DISTINCTLY A BOOK TO BE READ."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.
BY FITZGERALD MOLLOY.

THE QUEEN'S COMRADE. The Life and Times of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough. By the Author of "The Gorgeous Lady Blessington," &c. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, 24s. net. With 16 Portraits and Illustrations.

EARLY REVIEWS.—"A vivid picture of a very interesting period of English history."—Daily News. "Will appeal to all. Will attract every one."—Daily Chronicle. "Full of extremely interesting correspondence and intimate personal details. The volumes are beautifully got up."—Scotsman.

BY ANNA A. CHAPIN.

MASTERS of MUSIC. Their Lives and Work. By the Author of "The Story of the Rhinegolde." In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with 8 Portraits, 5s.

THE LIVING RACES of MANKIND. A Popular Account of the Customs, Habits, Pursuits, Feasts, and Ceremonies of the Races of Mankind throughout the World. By H. N. HUTCHINSON, B.A., F.R.G.S., &c., J. W. GREGORY, D.Sc., F.G.S., &c., R. LYDEKKER, F.R.S., F.G.S., &c. Printed on the finest Art Paper, 604 pp. demy 4to, with 648 magnificent Illustrations taken from Life, and with 2 Coloured Plates. In 2 vols.—Half red Persian morocco, gilt edges, 19s.; green leather, gilt edges, 17s.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 15s. In 1 vol.—Full red Persian morocco, gilt edges, 21s.; half red Persian morocco, gilt edges, 17s.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 14s.

HUTCHINSON'S NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

IN CLOTH GILT.

A NEST of LINNETS
By FRANKFORT MOORE.

THE WORK of HIS HANDS
By CHRIS HEALY.

THE HAPPENINGS of JILL
By "IOTA."

OUR LADY of DELIVERANCE
By JOHN OXENHAM.

FOR LOVE or CROWN
By A. W. MARCHMONT.

The MARRIAGE of LYDIA MAINWARING
By ADELINE SERGEANT.

CAPTAIN ISHMAEL
By GEORGE GRIFFITH.

OLIVIA'S EXPERIMENT
By EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN.

THE COMEDY of a SUBURBAN CHAPEL
By J. F. CAUSTON.

THE LOVE of RICHARD HERRICK
By ARABELLA KENEALY.

IN SEARCH of MADEMOISELLE
By GEORGE GIBBS.

GOD SAVE the KING
By RONALD MACDONALD.

WHERE HONOUR LEADS
By MARIAN FRANCIS.

THE EXPATRIATES
By LILIAN BELL.

London: HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster Row.

Digitized by Google

You dreamed they held the fire divine,
The true, the right Promethean spark.
She smiled on them—a year, perhaps,
Then fled and left them cold and dark.

Yet though your names be strange to us
We hail you brothers of the craft;
And you, who've known our hopes and fears,
Will pledge us in a shadowy draught.

Fate spared you somewhat; what you wrote
Is yours; your souls can ne'er be vex'd
With echoes from the upper world
Of tortured and corrupted text.

In the dim land where now you dwell
You boast a fortune o'er your betters;
Biographies affright you not
With hates and loves a-dance in fetters;
No critics e'er appraise the style
Of your love-letters.

[J. A. P., Arbroath, N.B.]

We pity from our own superior state,
Your unremembered, long-neglected fate,
Smiling to think, in passing, of the pains,
You must have taken, and your lack of—brains!

Poor, foolish folk! dreaming that you'd be read
By twentieth century people, who instead
Have just as much as they can do to scan
Our red-hot fiction on the modern plan.
We use sensation.....thin-hid fact, that all
Upon the prototype may instant fall.
(You little guessed the secret of success,
Meant letting readers find their cleverness,
Not yours—oh, no—that's quite another tale,
Never resulting in phenomenal sale!)
We let the public prick our tiny bubble,
Without the slightest intellectual trouble!

You really must have been a prosy lot,
Writing what we'd decidedly call "rot,"
Most careful of your English—how precise!
If you had not been so exceeding nice,
Perhaps a thought or two we yet might spare,
To hunt your dusty volumes from their lair;
But nowadays to make a dull book sell—
It must, at least, be indecorous as well!

Vanished old writers! Do you in the shades,
Gossip about your late respective trades—
Comparing methods? Ah, well—I daresay,
You owned a circulation in your day—
And yet, perchance, may feel a Hadean thrill,
At thought of some belated vogue here still!

[E. C. M. D., Crediton.]

Thirty-three other replies received.

Competition No. 109 (New Series).

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best critical plea for a poet, born since 1850, who is not dealt with by Mr. William Archer in his book, Poets of the Younger Generation. A list of the poets he includes will be found on page 364.

Not to exceed 250 words.

RULES.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, October 23. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

 Owing to pressure on our space Correspondence is held over.

A MAGAZINE FOR COLLECTORS. ILLUSTRATED.

"THE CONNOISSEUR."

No. 2, OCTOBER ISSUE, NOW ON SALE.

Reprint of First Number.

In consequence of the large demand for No. 1 (September issue) of "THE CONNOISSEUR," it has been decided to issue a THIRD EDITION. All those desiring Copies are requested to place their Orders with their Booksellers or Newsagents immediately.

"THE CONNOISSEUR."

In the event of any difficulty in obtaining October Number, write to "THE CONNOISSEUR" Offices, 37, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

NEW & POPULAR NOVELS

Price 6s. each.

THE MAN I LOVED.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

THIRD EDITION.

THE COURT OF HONOUR.

By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

THIRD EDITION.

IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS.

By RICHARD HENRY SAVAGE.

A LOSING GAME.

By HUME NISBET.

FROM DEAL TO SOUTH AFRICA.

By HELEN C. BLACK.

F. V. WHITE & CO., LTD.,
14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

HOW to LEARN RUSSIAN, and the Russian Residential Institute, London. Read the current (October) Number of the "ANGLO-RUSSIAN," 1½d., post free, from 21, Paternoster Square, E.C.

SELECTIONS FROM

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD'S PUBLICATIONS.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s. each, post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.

"The several sermons contained in this volume are replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."
Methodist Times.

THE BEATITUDES, and other Sermons.

"An excellent exposition of the Beatitudes.....full of thought and knowledge and power."
British Weekly.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.

"Felicitous exposition, rugged, intense eloquence, and beautiful illustration."—Word and Work.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"They are plain enough to be understood by the unlearned, and yet have sufficient richness and cogency to attract the most cultivated."
New York Observer.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Limited, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

ADVERTISEMENTS (Select Trade) for the COVER PAGES of the ACADEMY should be sent not later than Noon on Thursday to 43, Chancery Lane. Terms, &c., on Application.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

THE CASE of a MAN with his WIFE. By THEO. GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.

LITTLE CHERIE; or, the Trainer's Daughter. By Lady FLORENCE DIXIE. Price 1s. net.

During OCTOBER MESSRS. TREHERNE & CO., LTD., will publish the following Books:—

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6d.

THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

READY SHORTLY.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG
(First Editor of the "Windsor Magazine").

Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities.
Price 1s.

READY DURING NOVEMBER.

TWO BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

By CICELY FULCHER.

Price 3s. 6d. each.

BEHIND THE WAINSCOT.

UNCLE HARRY'S GATE.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LTD.,
3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

Digitized by Google

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

A NEW BOOK BY THE BISHOP OF DURHAM.

FIRST EDITION Exhausted. SECOND EDITION nearly Exhausted. THIRD EDITION Ready in a few days.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THOUGHTS FOR THE SUNDAYS OF THE YEAR.

By Dr. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, Bishop of Durham.

Guardian.—"Devout readers will find here 'refreshment' to their hearts and souls in many varieties of spiritual experience."

Christian.—"It is an interesting coincidence that when Dr. Moule's appointment is being hailed with satisfaction by all sections of the community, there should issue from his pen a book prepared before there was any thought of his preferment—in which his true sympathy with all who are in Christ is frankly expressed."

Record.—"There is not a chapter in the book which does not yield some wise direction, some searching or some bracing thought. We have rarely met a devotional volume of more solid value."

Life of Faith.—"'The secret of the Lord' is with the writer, and kindred spirits will find very welcome light and refreshment in his chapters."

A NEW BOOK BY HENRY A. HARPER.

Super royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s net (by post 6s. 5d.)

AN ARTIST'S WALKS IN BIBLE LANDS.

With a Photogravure Frontispiece and 55 other Illustrations from Drawings by the Author.

Scotsman.—"Mr. Harper could give a capital pen picture of what he saw, and by the aid of his pencil was enabled to represent still more vividly the aspects of Eastern travel which most strikingly impressed him."

Spectator.—"Mr. Harper had a ready and powerful pen, and to this gift he added that of artistic drawing. We are in the hands of a guide who knows his way, and tells what to see and how best to see it."

Daily News.—"There are some beautiful bits of description, and accounts of the occupations and customs of the people, which should prove of service to the readers of the Bible, the sacred places of which are so graphically depicted by pen and pencil in Mr. Harper's volume."

Globe.—"Tastefully got up and admirably well-calculated for a prize or a present."

A NEW BOOK OF FAMILY PRAYER.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, burnished edges, 6s.

THY HEART'S DESIRE.

By Rev. G. S. BARRETT, D.D., the Rev. G. E. ASKER, M.A., the late Rev. WM. ROBERTS, B.A., and others.

Edited by the Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, M.A.

In this publication an effort has been made to produce a thoroughly satisfactory book for family worship. It contains prayers for every morning and evening throughout thirteen weeks, with appropriate Scripture readings. Great care has been taken to render the text acceptable alike to members of the Church of England and also of the Evangelical Free Churches.

Just Published. Demy 8vo, 332 pages, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.

A HANDBOOK TO

OLD TESTAMENT HEBREW.

Containing:—An Elementary Grammar of the Language, with Reading Lessons, Notes on many Scripture Passages, and Copious Exercises.

Edited by SAMUEL G. GREEN, D.D.,

Author of "A Handbook to the Grammar of the Greek Testament."

Guardian.—"It will be found especially helpful to adult scholars studying Hebrew without the advantage of a teacher."

Athenæum.—"Intended as an easy and practical introduction to Biblical Hebrew, and will be found useful."

The Chief Rabbi (Dr. Herman Adler).—"The grammar has been carefully prepared and it will prove a useful aid to students of the Sacred Language."

BY THE LATE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net (by post 6s. 4d.).

THE STORY OF SOME ENGLISH SHIRES.

By the late MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., Lord Bishop of London,

Author of "Queen Elizabeth," "A History of the Papacy," &c.

This book was first issued in an expensive form in 1897. Dr. Creighton's original intention was to tell briefly the wonderful history of every English county, but his acceptance of the bishopric of London unhappily rendered it impossible for him to do this. The present volume contains a chapter on the County of Cambridge, the only new one written since the book was originally printed.

Times.—"Few historians have paid more attention than Dr. Creighton to local history in its larger aspects. Few possess a happier gift of exhibiting the particular history of each county or district alike in its local characteristics and in its organic relation to the large history of England. He never forgets the relation of part to whole, nor overlooks the individuality which belongs to the part."

Guardian.—"Every intelligent Englishman who loves the history of his country will welcome the late Bishop of London's story of these English shires."

SECOND EDITION Now Ready. Small crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 1s. 6d

A KEY TO UNLOCK THE BIBLE.

By JOSEPH AGAR BEET, D.D.

Bible Keys Series, No. 1.

Spectator.—"Professor Beet, whose place amongst the exegetical writers of the day is assured, gives us here an excellent summary of Biblical knowledge."

Daily News.—"Dr. Beet discusses the authorship of the Books in the Old and New Testaments with full knowledge and careful and discriminating recognition of the results of modern scholarship."

Methodist Times.—"No man who had not given a lifetime to the study his theme could have put so much into so small a compass."

Sword and Trowel.—"On the whole, this volume will certainly prove a key in the hands of many students of the Scriptures."

"A DELIGHTFUL BOOK FOR NATURE LOVERS."

WOODLAND, FIELD, AND SHORE.

WILD NATURE DEPICTED WITH PEN AND CAMERA.

By OLIVER G. PIKE,

Author of "In Bird-Land with Field-Glass and Camera."

With 2 Coloured Plates, and 101 Engravings of Birds, Animals, and Insects, from Photographs taken direct from Nature by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net (by post 5s. 4d.)

Westminster Gazette.—"Whether Mr. Pike writes about the denizens of a suburban orchard or a Surrey common his matter is always interesting. All his illustrations are excellent."

Saturday Review.—"Mr. Pike has a great many interesting things to tell us."

Spectator.—"A very pretty book. The author has seen many curious things revealed only to the patient and careful observer of Nature; evidently also he knows how to describe what he sees."

Globe.—"Mr. Pike's volume is one of the most readable of its kind."

Academy.—"A most attractive, even fascinating, book."

Amateur Photographer.—"Every lover of Nature should possess it, for it is pleasant reading and eminently instructive."

PLEASE WRITE FOR THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S NEW ILLUSTRATED LIST.

56, PATERNOSTER ROW, and 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

From WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LIST.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. Finally Revised, with Portrait. 11th Thousand 16s.
PRINCIPLES of BIOLOGY. 2 vols. Revised and Enlarged. 6th Thousand 36s.
PRINCIPLES of PSYCHOLOGY. 2 vols 5th Thousand 36s.
PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I. 4th Thousand 21s.
Ditto. Vol. II. 3rd Thousand 18s
Ditto. Vol III. 2nd Thousand 16s.
RINCIPLES of ETHICS. 2 vols. 2nd Thousand .. 27s 6d.
USTICE. (Separately) 6s.
THE STUDY of SOCIOLOGY. 21st Thousand 10s 6d.
EDUCATION. Library Edition. 7th Thousand .. 6s.
Ditto. Cheap Edition. 41st Thousand .. 2s. 6d.
ESSAYS 3 vols. 6th Thousand Each vol. 10s.
SOCIAL STATICS and MAN v. STATE 10s.
THE MAN v. THE STATE. (Separately.) 14th Thousand.. 1s.
VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. Enlarged Edition 6s.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.—3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d. Vol. III., separately, 7s. 6d.

THE OPUS MAJUS OF ROGER BACON.

Edited, with Introduction and Analytical Table, by JOHN HENRY BRIDGES, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and sometime Fellow of Oriel College. Vol. III. contains Revised Text of the First Three Parts, Corrections, Emendations, and Additional Notes, and Facsimiles of Bacon's Greek and Hebrew Writing.

"Makes some important additions to our knowledge of Bacon MSS. It is pleasant to have an opportunity of recognising Dr. Bridge's services to the history of science by the publication of this work."—Athenæum.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Small crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

THE GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Paper read before the Exeter College Church Society. By R. B. C. SHERIDAN.

"Well written, and deals in a scholarly way with an ecclesiastical society of which little is known in this country."
Leamington Chronicle.
"It is a brilliant contribution to ecclesiastical history."
Montrose Standard.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 7, Broad Street Oxford.

TWO IMPORTANT BOOKS, READY THIS DAY.
(Issued for the Rationalist Press Association, Ltd.)

1. LAST WORDS on MATERIALISM and KINDRED SUBJECTS. By Professor LUDWIG BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," &c. With Portrait of Author and Biographical Sketch by his Brother, ALEX BUCHNER. Translated by JOSEPH McCABE. 6s. net.
2. THE RIDDLE of the UNIVERSE. By Professor ERNST HAECKEL. Second and Revised Edition. 6s. net.

London: WATTS & CO., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet-street, E.C.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN Price 6s.
DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s
"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s 6d.
THE CASE of a MAN with his WIFE By THEO. GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.
LITTLE CHERIE. By Lady Florence DIXIE. Price 1s. net. [Shilling Sporting Series.
REMINISCENCES of a GENTLEMAN HORSE DEALER. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. 1s. net [Shilling Sporting Series.

READY SHORTLY.
LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.
Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG
(First Editor of the "Windsor Magazine").
Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P., FRANK T. BULLEN, JUSTIN McCARTHY, HERMANN MERIVALE, ADRIAN ROSS, &c., &c.
Price 1s.

During OCTOBER Messrs. TREHERNE & CO., LTD., will publish the following Books:—

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.
THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.
TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6l.
THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

READY DURING NOVEMBER.
TWO BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.
By CICELY FULCHER.
Price 3s 6d. each.
BEHIND THE WAINSCOT. Illustrated.
UNCLE HARRY'S GATE. Illustrated.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LIMITED,
3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.
THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By Dr. MACLAREN.
"The several sermons contained in this volume are replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."
Methodist Times.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Limited, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

MOMENTA of LIFE. Essays Ethical, Historical, and Religious. By JAMES LINDSAY, D.D. (Glas.), M.A., B.D., B.Sc., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., M.R.A.S.

In crown 8vo, cloth, with Map, 3s. 6d.

TRAVELLING IMPRESSIONS in, and NOTES on, PERU. By FELIX SEEBEE.

CHEAP EDITION.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 8.

SOMERLEY. Schoolboy and Undergraduate. By GILBERT SWIFT.

"Written with the brightness and good spirits of youth, and its irresponsible playfulness will scarcely fail to please anyone who can appreciate its hits at undergraduate nature."—Scotsman.
"A book to be read through at a sitting. The Cambridge scenes are particularly well drawn."
Illustrated London News.

NEW NOVELS.

CHEAP EDITION, in crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

CHARLES WAVENDON, and Others. By CARYL J. BLUNT.

"Such a manly and straightforward book cannot fail to do good.—Leeds Mercury.
"Interesting enough to hold the reader throughout."—Churchwoman.
"A well-conceived story of life in the upper stratum of society some thirty years ago. The author possesses literary power."—Church Bells.

CHEAP EDITION, in crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

RUNIC ROCKS: a North Sea Idyl. By WILHELM JENSEN. Translated by MARIANNE E. SUCKLING. With a Preface by Prof. G. FIEDLER.

"An excellent example of modern German literature, well translated.....A book quite out of the common."—Speaker.
"A book of great beauty and worth, which certainly takes a very high place in the imaginative literature of the present decade."—Academy.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

LADY WILMERDING of MAISON ROUGE: a Tale of the Riviera. By J. DUNCAN CRAIG, M.A., D.D., Sóci dóu Felibrige.

"Most interesting and instructive."—Irish Times.
"Distinctly a book which should be read by all."
Rock.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.: half-bound morocco, gilt edges, 6s.

POEMS. By JOHN FARMER.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

A BOOK of VERSES. By Mrs. JAMES GLENNY WILSON, Author of "Themes and Variations," "Alice Landor," "Two Summers," &c.

"A very great charm pervades this book. Mrs. Wilson excels in description. She paints a scene with extraordinary effects of colour and atmosphere, and as many of her poems are inspired by scenes native to her country, the home reader experiences peculiar pleasure in reading them."—Dundee Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK,
62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.
THE NORFOLK BROADS.
BRECON and its BEACONS.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.
THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
THE WYE VALLEY.
THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, PENMAENMAWR, LLANFAIRFECHAN, ANGLESEY, and CARNARVON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
CONWAY, COLWYN BAY, BETTWS-Y-COED, SNOWDON, & FESTINIOG.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.
NORWICH, LOWESTOFT, YARMOUTH, and the NORFOLK BROADS.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.
With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

Digitized by Google

From the Sunday School Union's NEW LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At 1s. 6d.

THE CAPTAIN'S FAGS: A School Story By W. E. CULE, Author of "Barfield's Blazer," &c. Illustrated.

INTO STORMY WATERS: A Story for Girls. By Mrs HENRY CLARKE, M.A., Author of "A High-School Girl," &c.

At 1s.

"RED NURSERY" SERIES.

Small 4to, boards, illuminated sides.

NEW VOLUMES JUST ADDED.

THE NEW PLAYFELLOW. By Gertrude E. M. VAUGHAN. Profusely Illustrated.

STORIES from the PILGRIM'S PROGRESS Arranged by E. A. MACDONALD. With numerous new Illustrations by James R. Sinclair.

YOUNG ENGLAND. A Splendid Gift Book for Boys. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth extra, bevelled boards, 3s. Two Serial Stories, "The Emperor's Trumpeter," by Albert Lee, and "The Young Reporter," by William Drysdale. Stories of Life at the Great Public Schools by the Rev. E. E. Bradford, M.A. (Oxon). Illustrated Papers on a Boy's Workshop, by George P. Moon. Talks with Boys, by the Rev. E. C. Dawson, M.A. (Oxon) "Hearts of Oak": Stories of Naval Heroism and Devotion. Papers dealing with the Birds, Animals and Insects of our Islands. Biographical Sketches of Men worth emulating. Sketches and Stories of Life in Our Colonies. Stories of exciting Adventure by David Ker, Charles Edwardes Argyll Saxby, K. M. Eady, George Gale Thomas. Stories of School Life and Sports, by W. E. Cule, B. M. Aitken, Harold Avery, &c.

THE CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE. Sixty-eighth Annual Volume. Full of charming Stories, Poems &c. Profusely Illustrated. Serial Story by Mary E. Murray, entitled "The Wonderful Castle," illustrated by Rosa C. Petherick. A new feature. Series of composite Scripture Pictures by M. Ayoub, illustrating the International Bible Lessons for the Year. "Comical Birds, Beasts, and Fishes," illustrated by T. W. Coulder. Besides these, there is an abundance of Stories and Sketches, and verses suitable for Juvenile recitations, clever pictorial puzzles, &c., &c. Paper boards, 1s.; cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

At 1s.

"SPLENDID LIVES" SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards. NEW VOLUME JUST ADDED.

THE STORY of CATHERINE of SIENA. By FLORENCE WITTS, Author of "Frances Willard," &c

At 1s.

HOW to be WELL and STRONG. Boy's Book of Health. By WALTER N. EDWARDS, F.C.S Cloth boards.

NEWTON JONES: his Life-Story and Service for Christ. By the Rev. J. MILLER HAMILTON Cloth boards.

At 9d.

GEORDIE'S VICTORY. By Margaret S HAYCRAFT. With Illustrations. Cloth boards.

MARLEY'S BOY. By Jennie Chappell. Illustrated by Harold Copping. Cloth boards.

At 6d. Net.

NEW BOOKLET BY J. R MILLER, D.D.

THE SHINING HOPE Charmingly Illustrated by Scott Rankin. White leatherette, gilt top.

From Mr. Melrose's New List.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At 3s. 6d.

HOW to PROMOTE and CONDUCT a SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL. By R. A. TORREY, Author of "What the Bible Teaches," &c. &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards.

ROYAL MANHOOD. By James I. Vance D.D., Author of "The Young Man Four Square." Imp. 16mo, cloth boards.

156 CHILDREN'S SERMONS. For Ministers, Sunday School Teachers, and others. By Prof AMOS R. WELLS, Author of "Sunday School Success." Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

NOTABLE MASTERS of MEN; Modern Examples of Successful Lives. By EDWIN A. PRATT. Imp. 16mo, cloth boards.

At 2s. 6d. net.

THIRD EDITION. NOW READY.

HENRY DRUMMOND: a Biographical Sketch (with Bibliography). By "CUTHBERT LENNOX." With Portraits and a fine Drawing by Scott Rankin. Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

At 1s. 6d.

PRAYER: its Nature and Scope. By H. CLAY TRUMBULL. Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

At 1s. net.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY: the Story of His Life. By DAVID WILLIAMSON, Author of "Gladstone, the Man." With Illustrations.

At 2s. 6d.

"BOOKS FOR THE HEART."

Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top.

NEW VOLUME.

THE CHRISTIAN'S GREAT INTEREST By WILLIAM GUTHRIE. With an Introductory Essay by Rev. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A.

Booklet at 6d.

A CALL to ARMS: Address to Young Men and Upper Form Boys. By HORACE G. GROSER. Fcap. 8vo, blue leatherette, gilt top.

Price 7s. 6d.

BOYS of OUR EMPIRE Amongst all the Boys' "Annuals" this is the best, as it is the newest. It contains: Five Serial Stories—"The Lone Star Rush," by Edmund Mitchell; "Contraband of War," by B. Aitken; "Capn Nat's Treasure," by Robert Leighton; "Chisholm's Chums," a School Story; and "The Secret of the Wondergat," by Ridgewell Cullum and Charles Wingrove. Fifty-two Articles on the leading Athletic Record Holders, &c., illustrated by well-known Artists. "How to Make": a Series of Articles on Carpentry, Modelling, Fretwork, &c., &c.

London: ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, E.C.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by HORACE HOWARD FURNESS

Vol XIII. TWELFTH NIGHT.

Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 18s.

[Now ready.

"Every instalment is of great value, and complete as regards the play treated."—Athenæum.

LIPPINCOTT'S GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD.

Containing Notices of over 125,000 Places, with recent and authentic Information respecting every Portion of the Globe.

New Revised Edition, with a Supplement.

Thick imperial 8vo (pp. 2,636), handsomely half-bound morocco, £2 10s.

[Now ready.

LIPPINCOTT'S PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY OF BIOGRAPHY AND MYTHOLOGY.

New Third Edition, thoroughly Revised and brought up to 1901.

Thick imperial 8vo (pp. 3,550), handsomely half-bound-morocco, £2 10s.

[Now ready.

A MANUAL OF COACHING.

By FAIRMAN ROGERS.

With numerous Full-Page Illustrations, and 183 Engravings in the Text.

Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, £1 4s. net.

"The best book of its kind which has ever been published."—Road.

"A marvel of thoroughness. Nothing has been overlooked, nothing slighted."—Sportsman.

"Replete with information for amateurs."—Times.

HISTORY OF AMERICA BEFORE COLUMBUS.

According to Documents and Approved Authors.

By P. DE ROO.

Vol. I. AMERICAN ABORIGINES.

Vol. II. EUROPEAN IMMIGRANTS.

2 vols., large 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, £1 10s. net.

NEW MILITARY NOVELS.

By General CHARLES KING.

IN SPITE of FOES; or, Ten Years' Trial. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

RAY'S DAUGHTER: a Story of Manila. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A TROOPER GALAHAD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

London: 36, Southampton Street, Strand.
Philadelphia: Washington Square.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

The Ethic of Freethought.

And other Addresses and Essays.

SECOND EDITION (REVISED).

By KARL PEARSON, F.R.S.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

"It is an able volume to be studied by all who would know the modern apologetics of Freethought." The Academy.

"A weighty and thoughtful book." Review of Reviews.

Human Nature and Morals.

According to Augustus Comte.

With Notes illustrative of the Principles of Positivism.

By JOHN KELLS INGRAM, LL.D.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net.

"Interesting as a supplement to its writer's book on religion, and should prove especially welcome to students of philosophy unable to read Comte in his own tongue."—Scotsman.

A Treatise on Elementary Statics.

For the Use of Schools and Colleges.

By W. J. DOBBS, M.A.

With 191 Illustrations.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

"It is an able and clearly written exposition of both the geometrical and the analytical methods, rich in instructive examples, and helped out by a large number of illustrative diagrams. It forms an admirable introduction to its subject, and would, indeed, be found useful by many advanced students." Scotsman.

Dr. John Brown and His Sisters.

POCKET EDITION.

By E. T. McLAREN.

With Introductory Note by A. CRUM-BROWN, M.D., D.Sc.

Uniform in style, price, and binding with Dr. John Brown's "Horæ Subsecivæ."

Cloth, price 2s. net; limp leather, price 2s. 6d. net; stiff leather, gilt edges, price 3s. net.

"This is an exquisite little book—a masterpiece in its kind—so good that praise is apt to look like impertinence."—The British Weekly.

Lucretius on Life and Death.

In the Metre of Omar Khayyam.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

CHEAP EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

"They have a fine movement, and are full of haunting phrases and stanzas. Indeed, Mr. Mallock's are the best verses we have met with in a magazine—nay, in a new book of verse—for a long time." The Academy.

Sunshine and Surf.

A Year's Wanderings in the South Seas.

By DOUGLAS B. HALL And LORD ALBERT OSBORNE.

With Map and 36 Full-page Illustrations from Photographs.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"A chatty, entertaining narrative."—Outlook.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. LONGMANS & CO.'s List.

With 31 Illustrations from Photographs. Crown 8vo, 12s. net.

A WINTER PILGRIMAGE:

Being an Account of Travels through Palestine, Italy, and the Island of Cyprus, accomplished in the Year 1900.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"Mr. Rider Haggard cannot be dull, and his account of this journey is almost as engrossing as one of his own novels. Adventures, at all events incidents, amusing enough under his treatment, come to him freely. About them all he writes in a spirit of big good humour which is infectious.....The book is freely illustrated, and it should enjoy the attention of all who like the literature of travel or are interested in the Palestine of to-day."—Yorkshire Post

8vo, 9s. 6d. net.

DREAMS AND THEIR MEANINGS.

By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.

With many Accounts of Experiences sent by Correspondents, and Two Chapters contributed mainly from the Journals of the Psychical Research Society on Telepathic and Premonitory Dreams.

Crown 8vo, 9s. 6d. net.

THE GREAT DESERTS AND FORESTS OF NORTH AMERICA.

By PAUL FOUNTAIN.

With a Preface by W. H. HUDSON, Author of "The Naturalist in La Plata," &c.

"We have a wealth of common sense, simply-told descriptions of rude, unspoiled nature in waste and desert places. In short, it is a book of real value to the naturalist and sportsman The unpretentious style of the writer, his care and caution in forming opinions, and the unassuming firmness with which he maintains his conclusions, together with the most interesting anecdotes to be found on almost every page, combine to make this not only a most valuable, but a most interesting work."—Field.

With Portrait and 21 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE WAR OF THE CIVILISATIONS:

Being a Record of a "Foreign Devil's" Experiences with the Allies in China.

By GEORGE LYNCH,

Special Correspondent of the Sphere, &c.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s. net.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

By J. W. MACKAIL.

With 2 Photogravure Portraits and 8 other Illustrations.

With 26 Photogravure Plates and 162 Illustrations in the Text. 4to, £3 10s. net.

ANDREA MANTEGNA.

By PAUL KRISTELLER.

English Edition by S. ARTHUR STRONG, M.A., Librarian to the House of Lords, and at Chatsworth.

"Mantegna's genius was many-sided, and his life cast in a troublous period of Italian History. His biographer has read widely and seen much, and the book is a valuable contribution to the art literature of the period of which it treats."—Daily News.

With 11 Photogravure Portraits. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE WOMEN OF THE SALONS,

And other French Portraits.

By S. G. TALLENTYRE.

CONTENTS.—Madame de Deffand - Mademoiselle de Lespinasse—Madame Geoffrin—Madame d'Epinay—Madame Necker—Madame de Staël—Madame Récamier—Tronchin: a Great Doctor—The Mother of Napoleon—Madame de Sévigné—Madame Vigée le Brun.

8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE MINISTRY OF GRACE:

Studies in Early Church History, with Reference to Present Problems.

By the Right Rev. JOHN WORDSWORTH, D.D.,

Lord Bishop of Salisbury.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

INTUITIVE SUGGESTION:

A New Theory of the Evolution of Mind.

By J. W. THOMAS,

Author of "Spiritual Law in the Natural World," &c.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 229. NOVEMBER, 1901. 8vo, price 6d.

THE GOLD-STEALERS: a Story of Waddy. By EDWARD DYSON. Chaps. XVII.-XX.

SOME EXPERIENCES of a COMMANDANT PRISONERS of WAR at DEADWOOD CAMP, ST. HELENA, 1900-1901. By Lieut.-Colonel A. L. PAGET. (Concluded.)

A PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION. By ELLEN ADA SMITH.

TOO LATE. By the Rev. GEORGE BIRD.

RECOLLECTIONS of a TENDERFOOT.—II. By J. R. E. SUMNER.

OTHER PEOPLE'S FRIENDS. By E. H. TAYLOR.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

Smith, Elder & Co.'s New Books.

NOW READY.

Royal 8vo, 15s. net in cloth; or 20s. net in half-morocco.

SUPPLEMENTARY VOL. III.

(How-Woodward) of

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Note.—Supplementary Volumes I. and II. were published on September 20.

TIMES.—"The character of the work makes almost impossible to do adequate justice to its contents within reasonable limits of space We have said enough, we hope, to show how varied is the fare and how skilful is its preparation in the admirable supplement to the admirable 'Dictionary of National Biography.'"

MR. STANLEY WEYMAN'S NEW NOVEL.

READY on TUESDAY NEXT, at all Libraries and Booksellers. Crown 8vo, 6s.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of the "New Rector," "A Gentleman of France," "The Castle Inn," &c.

NEW VOLUME BY FRANK T. BULLEN.

FIRST IMPRESSION EXHAUSTED ON PUBLICATION. SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

With 8 Full-page Illustrations by ARTHUR TWIDLE. crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEP SEA PLUNDERINGS:

A Collection of Stories of the Sea.

By FRANK T. BULLEN, F.R.G.S.,

Author of "The Cruise of the 'Cachalot,'" "The Log of a Sea Waif," "The Men of the Merchant Service," &c.

NEW WORK by W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D., &c.

ON NOVEMBER 12.—With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY.

By W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D., &c.,

Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "Wellington's Men," &c.

SHORTLY. With a Portrait, Large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN,

Author of "The Life of Charles Stewart Parnell," "Fifty Years of Concessions to Ireland," &c.

JUST PUBLISHED. Small crown 8vo, 6s.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BRIDGES.

Volume III. Contents: The First Part of Nero.—Achilles in Scyros.—Notes.

FOUR NEW 6s. NOVELS.

By MRS. HODGSON BURNETT.

The Making of a Marchioness.

By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, Author of "The Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c. [Nov. 8.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON.

Richard Halpin

A Romance of the New Navy.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON, Author of "Spun Yarn," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," &c. [November 8.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

The Tory Lover.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT, Author of "The Queen's Twin, and other Stories," &c. With a Frontispiece. [November 12.

By H. S. MERRIMAN.

THE Velvet Glove.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," "In Kedar's Tents," "The Isle of Unrest," &c. [December 3.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1538. Established 1869. 26 October, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

Mr. John Morley's noble and eloquent address at Manchester was a foretaste of the quality of his Life of Gladstone, to write which he has practically renounced all other interests. No date has yet been fixed for the publication of the Life. The task was colossal, including the sifting of thousands of letters, all carefully arranged in despatch boxes. In his speech at Manchester, which was spoken extempore from skeleton notes, Mr. Morley showed not only that he has given searching and severe study to his subject, but that he has kept his enthusiasm, and that he is able to communicate it. Who would have prophesied that one morning this week everybody would be talking again of Gladstone, or that a speech on Gladstone by anybody should have the power once more to set men's minds wondering at that amazing personality?

Last week we gave a list of the plays that Stevenson planned to write. He also wished—indeed, longed—to undertake three biographies—a Life of John Knox, a Life of William Hazlitt, and a Life of the Duke of Wellington.

Mr. Kipling has been re-elected president of the Rottingdean Rifle Club. The Club owes its inception to Mr. Kipling, and has not yet been defeated. It has beaten some powerful opponents, both Volunteers and civilians, notably the London Fusiliers and the Lewes Rifle Club.

Another volume of essays by Max Müller is in preparation. It includes papers on Buddhism; the alleged sojourn of Christ in India; religions in China, and on many cognate subjects. In one essay Max Müller writes on "Why I am not an Agnostic," and in another he asks, "Is Man Immortal?"

The English Illustrated Magazine for November contains a humorous article by Mr. H. G. Wells on "The Literary Regimen." We use the word "humorous" intentionally, as a warning to literary beginners who may be tempted to follow Mr. Wells's instructions in order that they may learn to write "like he does." In this paper, which also contains a picture of Mr. Wells drinking a cup of tea, he announces that he has discovered the "fundamental secret of literary art."

> It is imperative, if you wish to write with any power and freshness at all, that you should utterly ruin your digestion. Any literary person will confirm this statement. At any cost the thing must be done, even if you have to live on German sausage, onions, and cheese to do it. So long as you turn all your dietary to flesh and blood you will get no literature out of it. "We learn in suffering what we teach in song." This is why men who live at home with their mothers, or have their elder sisters to see after them, never, by any chance, however great their literary ambition may be, write anything but minor poetry. They get their meals at regular hours, and done to a turn, and that plays the very devil—if you will pardon the phrase—with one's imagination.

There are always grains of truth in Mr. Wells's inventions. In this, his newest, there is, we fear, something like a quarter of a pound. But most writers do not take pains "to get rid of their digestion." It goes of its own accord, silently, like the Arabs in the poem.

Following M. Maartens' Women I Have Known, to which we referred last week, a book is announced by Mr. W. D. Howells, called Heroines of Fiction. Mr. Howells, we hear, has decided not to write any more novels.

"Dear old Browning!" is not the usual way of referring to the author of The Ring and the Book. It is Mr. Frederic Harrison's way, and it occurs in an article called "Personal Reminiscences," included in his new book, George Washington, and other American Addresses. The passage reads thus:

> Dear old Browning! how we all loved him; how we listened to his anecdotes; how we enjoyed his improvised "epitaphs in country churchyards," till we broke into shouts of laughter as we detected the amusing forgery. At home in the smoking-room of a club, in a lady's literary tea-party, in a drawing-room concert, or in a river picnic, he might have passed for a retired diplomat, but for his buoyancy of mind and brilliancy of talk. His heart was as warm, his moral judgment as sound as his genius was original.

Mr. Grant Richards is preparing a Revised Edition of the Works of Tolstoy, to be edited by Aylmer Maude. Scrupulous care has been taken to present accurate versions, and the volumes will be provided with prefaces and footnotes to enable the reader to understand the relation between what he is reading and the conclusions Tolstoy ultimately reached, as well as to minimise such difficulties as are unavoidably met with when the literature of one people is passed on to another.

Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton's successful novel, Aylwin, has just made a re-appearance. In this new impression, which is called "The Snowdon Edition," Mr. Watts-Dunton contributes an introductory chapter. After recalling the reasons that induced him to delay the publication of Aylwin for so many years, he proceeds to consider an objection made by some critics that he had imported into a story written for popular acceptance too many speculations and broodings upon "the gravest of all subjects—the subject of love at struggle with death":

> My answer to this is that although it did win a great popular acceptance I never expected it to do so. I knew the book to be an expression of idiosyncrasy, and no man knows how much or how little his idiosyncrasy is in harmony with the temper of his time, until his book has been given to the world. It was the story of Aylwin that was born of the speculations upon Love and Death; it was not the speculations that were pressed into the story; without these speculations there could have been no story to tell. Indeed, the chief fault which I myself should find with Aylwin, if my business were to criticise it, would be that it gives not too little but too much prominence to the strong incidents of the story—a story written as a comment on love's warfare with death—written to show that confronted as man is every moment by signs of the fragility and the brevity of human life, the great marvel connected with him is not that his thoughts dwell frequently upon the unknown country beyond Orion where the beloved dead are loving us still, but that he can find time and patience to think upon anything else—a story written further to show how terribly despair becomes intensified when a man has lost—or thinks he has lost—a woman whose love was the only light of his world—when his soul is torn from his body, as it were, and whisked off on the wings of the "viewless winds" right away beyond the furthest star, till the universe hangs beneath his feet a trembling point of twinkling light, and at last even this dies away, and his soul crys out for help in that utter darkness and loneliness.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Hardy's new volume will be called Poems of the Past and Present. It will be published next month.

Last January we printed a list of "Questions in Shakespeare," which aroused some interest. We observe that the Shakespeare Society of New York prints a similar set in the first number of its New Shakespeareana just issued. Its questions, strange to say, are clearly, to some extent, copied or adapted from ours. Thus we asked: In which play is "young Dizzy" mentioned? and the Shakespeare Society asks: "Which one of Queen Victoria's Prime Ministers is mentioned by his popular name in the plays?" We asked: Who was Falstaff's tailor? and the S.S. asks: "What was the name of Falstaff's tailor?" and so on. We notice that the S.S. is still in a state of puerile indignation against Mr. Sidney Lee for having presumed to undertake a census and description of Shakespeare first folios. Why this should arride the S.S. of N.Y. we cannot discover. For one thing the type in which New Shakespeareana is printed would try our eyes even if the proportion of misprints were a reasonable one. But it is not, and we can only applaud the sentiments and deplore the English of the following statement:

> The editors and publishers of New Shakespeareana exceedingly regret to send out this number. It is not in the least what they intended and intend in the future. But it has been thought best in the face of many vexatious delays to make an initiative at once. Succeeding issues, it is expected and confidently believed, will entitle New Shakespeareana to a place editorially and typographically among the noble achievements of the New York Shakespeare Society.

Mr. Henry Willett, of Arnold House, Brighton, has made a strikingly interesting gift to the Ashmolean Natural History Society of Oxfordshire, in memory of Mr. John Ruskin. It consists of a piece of ground about five acres in extent, comprising woodland, marsh, bog, and water. Mr. Willett's wish is that the land shall be known as "The Ruskin Plot," and that it shall be kept for all time in its present natural condition. A trust is being prepared which will vest the plot in the following trustees:—The Lord Lieutenant of Oxfordshire, the Mayor of Oxford, the Vice-Chancellor, the Radcliffe Librarian, the Hope Professor of Zoology, the Sherardian Professor of Botany, and the donor. Mr. Willett's ground is situated at Cothill, near Abingdon, Berks, and is not meant so much for collecting purposes as for observation. It is proposed that a systematic record year by year of this piece of ground shall be kept by competent naturalists.

It is not, perhaps, Mr. Bernard Shaw's fault that he is a man of many explanations. Whatever be the reason, it is certain that he compels us to study his career. When his present or future do not demand urgent consideration, he calls us to the contemplation of his past. Take his early novel, Cashel Byron's Profession. Both he and we thought it was reserved for brief obituary mention. But, bless you, no. Here it is, looking quite respectable in red cloth covers, with an added dramatised portion, two long prefaces, and a sixteen-page "note." To "cool the fervour of idolatry with a dash of cold fact" is Mr. Shaw's aim in this story—to paint pugilism as it really is, denying it no good it possesses, but carefully localising and apportioning its evil. In his new preface he says:

> The unintelligent prizefighter is often the helpless tool of a gang of gamblers, backers, and showmen, who set him on to fight as they might set on a dog. And the spectacle of a poor human animal fighting faithfully for his backers, like a terrier killing rats, or a racehorse doing its best to win a race for its owner, is one which ought to persuade any sensible person of the folly of treating the actual combatants as "the principals" in a prizefight. Cockfighting was not suppressed by imprisoning the cocks; and prizefighting will not be suppressed by imprisoning the pugilists. But, intelligent or unintelligent, first-rate like Cashel Byron, second-rate like Skene, or third-rate like William Paradise in this story, the prizefighter is no more what the spectators imagine him to be than the lady with the wand and star in the pantomime is really a fairy queen. And since Cashel Byron's Profession, on its prizefighting side, is an attempt to take the reader behind the scenes without unfairly confusing professional pugilism with the blackguardly environment which is no more essential to it than to professional cricket, and which is now losing its hold on the pugilist through the substitution of gate-money at boxing exhibitions for stakes at prizefights as his means of living, I think I may let it go its way with a reasonable prospect of seeing it do more good than harm.

And again:

> All pugilism lies between these two extremes—between Cashel Byron and William Paradise; and it is because the Paradises are as likely to win as the Byrons, and are by no means so scarce, that the case for fist fighting, with gloves or without, as a discipline in the higher athletic qualities, moral and physical, imposes only on people who have no practical knowledge of the subject.

Mr. Shaw also wishes to expose "the abominable vein of retaliatory violence" which, he says, runs through the literature of the nineteenth century.

An interesting item in Mr. Shaw's preface is a portion of Robert Louis Stevenson's remarks on Cashel Byron's Profession communicated to Mr. William Archer. In the Letters Mr. Colvin politely suppressed the less favourable part of his judgment. This Mr. Shaw has now the joy of printing himself. It is in the form of an analysis of the book's composition:

Charles Reade	1 part
Henry James or some kindred author, badly assimilated ...	1 part
Disraeli (perhaps unconscious) ...	½ part
Struggling, overlaid original talent	1½ part
Blooming gaseous folly	1 part

That is the equation as it stands. What it may become, I don't know, nor any other man. Vixere fortes—O, let him remember that—let him beware of his damned century: his gifts of insane chivalry and animated narration are just those that might be slain and thrown out like an untimely birth by the Daemon of the Epoch.

And if he only knew how I had enjoyed the chivalry! Bashville—O Bashville! j'en chortle! (which is finely polyglot).

The list of novels on which an Edinburgh Reviewer builds an article called "Rome and the Novelists" (Edinburgh Review, October) includes neither Miss Corelli's nor Mr. Hall Caine's story. It may interest some to know what novels have been selected by the writer. They are:

Rome. By Emile Zola.
Helbeck of Bannisdale. By Mrs. Humphry Ward.
Eleanor. By Mrs. Humphry Ward.
One Poor Scruple. By Mrs. Wilfrid Ward.
The Undoing of John Brewster. By Lady Mabel Howard.
The Casting of Nets. By Richard Bagot.
En Route. By J. K. Huysmans.
The Vicar of St. Luke's. By Sibyl Creed.

Digitized by Google

In an interesting article on "Book-Hunting as a Business," in the November Pall Mall Magazine, Mr. Frank Rinder leads off with the example of profitable book collecting indulged by the late Earl of Ashburnham. He reminds us that in the middle of the nineteenth century the Earl bought the Stowe collection of MSS. for £8,000, in 1883 it was sold to the British Museum for £45,000; a portion of the Barrois MSS. recently fetched £33,000 at auction, against £6,000 paid for the whole assemblage about fifty years ago; in fine, for the magnificent library of printed books and MSS., acquired for something like £60,000, no less than about £220,000 has been realised. But then, adds Mr. Rinder, careful of the effect of such a statement, "the late Earl was a most astute buyer, ever placing in the scales a given volume or collection against the amount of gold demanded for it." We commend Mr. Rinder's article, alike for its cautions and encouragements, to the would-be collector. There are still possibilities in this least "tradey" of trades. "Even to-day a person of taste and judgment can pick up bargains innumerable. If his purse be long enough, if he have a flair for the excellent, he may still acquire with profit examples of fifteenth or sixteenth-century craftsmanship. As to works by modern authors, the verdict of the future has to be reckoned with. Mr. Meredith's earliest book, the Poems of 1851, has made as much as £25; and if we could discern a writer of equal worth, and buy up copies of his initial effort, that would certainly 'pay.'"

In the same magazine, which is being most admirably edited, Mr. William Archer continues his "Real Conversations." This month it is Professor Masson, and Mr. Archer departs from his usual method of making dialogue do all his work, by prefixing to the talk a short sketch of Professor Masson's career. No more than Mr. Archer need we dwell on Professor Masson's literary labours, of which his Life of Milton is alone worthy to have been the work of a lifetime. Speaking of the Professor's well-known likeness to Carlyle, Mr. Archer says: "Though there is something of the same ruggedness, the same underlying melancholy in the two faces, Professor Masson's is lighted up by a kindliness, a spontaneous humanity, which must often have been lacking in Carlyle's physiognomy. 'Dourness' is the one national characteristic in which Professor Masson is lacking." In quoting from these Conversations, which we hope to see in volume form, we always feel that we have mangled a living thing. But the following exchanges of opinion are interesting:

W. A.: But you, who have rubbed shoulders with the giants of the past half-century—can you look around now and point to any considerable number of men who have either reached, or given definite promise of reaching, an intellectual or artistic stature at all comparable with that of Carlyle, Ruskin, Darwin, Mill, Tennyson, Browning, Dickens, Thackeray, Charlotte Brontë, George Eliot? Of course, I "bar" Meredith, Herbert Spencer, and Swinburne, the great bulk, at any rate, of whose life-work lies in the bygone period. Or, to look at it from another point of view: in all the huge output of books of to-day, how many are there for which you could at all confidently predict even the lease of life which the works of those writers, and of lesser writers than they, have already enjoyed, to say nothing of the future that may yet be in store for them?

Prof. Masson: It is true, I think, that the conditions of modern life are apt to be unfavourable to the abstraction and concentration necessary for the greatest kind of work. There was more leisure in my young days—the railway and the electric telegraph had not yet taken such tyrannous hold of us. As I see the young men of to-day going on their way through life, it seems to me that few of them pause to look up at the stars; more of them are intent on looking horizontally before them—or downwards. The average of accomplishment, I should say, has improved; but men go about their work now in a different spirit. Among the best of the young men of my time the actual nous was as good as in the best of the young men of to-day, and they were able to give it a better chance. They had far more of solitude, far less of compulsory or prescribed occupation, far more of passive contemplation, letting their spirits lie open to all the winds that blew. And so pretty well on into manhood. Think of Tennyson, and all the years that he went mooning things over in his own mind, and humming them to his own ear, between the publication of his early, unripe work and that of the work that took the world by storm! In those days, when a subject struck a man, he did not dash at his desk at once—he rolled the thing over and over in his mind first, and got into complete affinity with it——

W. A. (interrupting): Whereas, now, the moment an idea strikes him, he (or his agent) sends a paragraph to the literary papers to announce the momentous fact. And then he proceeds to dictate the great work to a typewriter at the rate of so many thousand words a day.

Prof. Masson: Formerly, too, when a man had written his book, he put the manuscript under his arm and went off with it to a publisher, to take his chance. Nowadays it is, as often as not, the publisher that has originated the idea and commissioned the book. Look at the innumerable "series," for example—many of them capitally conceived, most useful, excellent, but necessarily involving some restriction upon the individuality of each contributor. He has to fall into line—to write to a pattern—at the very least to confine himself within a fixed limit of space.

W. A.: One can scarcely imagine Carlyle contributing to a series.

The award in the recent George Alexander Competition for a four-act play to be enacted at the St. James's reminds us of a somewhat similar competition held at the beginning of the last decade. In this case, M. Grein, of the Independent Theatre, then editor with a confrère of a journal called the Weekly Comedy, announced in that paper that he would award a medal to the sender of the best one-act play, and would also arrange for such opuscule to be produced once at a West End theatre. A "reading fee" of five shillings per play was demanded, and about 150 comediettas were received. The winning piece was announced to be a play entitled "Humble Pie," but we never heard of its being staged.

In a series of articles published by Prof. Dr. P. Kehr, of the University of Göttingen, in the Allgemeine Zeitung, there is an interesting description of the Vatican as a literary storehouse. The writer says that it is to the honour of the present pontiff and a demonstration of his zeal for learning that he has opened wide the Vatican collections to the scholars of the world with a liberality that cannot be equalled elsewhere. A visit to the working-rooms of the Vatican archives assumes an international aspect. By the side of the German professor is found a French savant and representatives from every other Christian country of Europe and America. Since access has been given so freely, various institutes for research have sprung up in great rapidity in Rome for the special purpose of utilising these treasures. So great is the international zeal to investigate these archives, which contain the greatest collection extant of unpublished documents on the history of the mediæval ages, that it is with difficulty room can be found for all who ask to be accommodated. The Vatican authorities have made the best of arrangements to supply the demand, and the librarians meet the wants of Protestants as quickly and as politely as those of Catholic savants. Men and women alike are accommodated. The red tape of former times has disappeared entirely, and the management is thoroughly modern. Only a beginning has been made with the publication of the immense literary treasures here deposited, but the international scholarship of the world is at work on it now.

Digitized by Google

In an American paper, under the title of "The Literary Shop," we glean some inspiring items concerning American books "scheduled for presentment this Fall." Perhaps the most hustling announcement is that of a New York publisher who has matured a complete history of the entire western hemisphere by the world's best-known writers, a 10-cent magazine that will cover ground not yet covered by any magazine, and a biographical encyclopædia, giving biographical sketches of every great man in every department of human activity, and from the earliest times.

Bibliographical.

For a little while to come we are sure to hear a good deal about "the gorgeous Lady Blessington," simply because she is the most prominent female figure in the new entertainment at Her Majesty's Theatre. Well-thumbed, I suspect, is many a copy of that volume of the Dictionary of National Biography in which her ladyship is discoursed of. Some, greatly daring, have no doubt consulted Madden's Life of the Countess—the standard authority; while others, perhaps, have gone so far as to dip into such gossiping volumes as Haydon's Diary, Willis's Pencillings by the Way, Jerdan's Autobiography, Grantley Berkeley's Recollections, Chorley's Life, the biography of C. J. Mathews, Mr. J. F. Molloy's memoir of the lady, and so forth. The literary interest attaching to the Countess is but small. I believe I am correct in saying that during the past twenty years nothing of hers has been reprinted save her Conversations with Lord Byron, which (first published in 1834) appeared in a new edition in 1893. This, no doubt, will live; but what has become of her ladyship's novels, or even of her books of travel, which once had a certain measure of vogue? One hears no longer of The Idler in Italy (1839-40) or The Idler in France (1841).

D'Orsay, the leading male figure in "The Last of the Dandies," is embalmed, as Count Mirabel, in the pages of Henrietta Temple, and also in Byron's "Correspondence" and the dedication of Bulwer Lytton's Godolphin. There are, of course, numerous references to him, all admiring, in the memoirs and reminiscences of his time. On the whole, D'Orsay, and the lady who had "been a mother" to him, promise to exist in literature, just as the lady for a time existed by literature—such as it was. The fullest and best analysis of the Countess's work as a writer of fiction may be found in the book by the late Mr. J. C. Jeaffreson called Novels and Novelists.

Three new editions of the Lambs' Tales from Shakespeare—one very beautiful in "get-up" and scholarly in treatment—have been put before our reading public during the last few days. Are there any more on the way? I do not think there were any last year, but in 1899 there were three editions, of varying interest and value—one introduced by Mr. Andrew Lang and illustrated by Mr. Anning Bell; another (illustrated) in the "Temple Classics for Young People," and another prefaced by the Rev. H. R. Haweis. In the previous year there had been two "selections" from the Tales, edited respectively by Mr. David Frew and Mr. F. H. Flather. There were two reprints in 1895, two in 1894, two in 1893, one in 1892, and one in 1890. One of these was edited by Canon Ainger, and another was illustrated by drawings by Sir John Gilbert (taken, no doubt, from his illustrated edition of the plays).

It will be seen that Dr. Furnivall, who edits Messrs. Tuck's new edition of the Tales, contributes prose summaries of plays not dealt with by the Lambs. In so doing, he was preceded in 1894 by Mr. Harrison S. Morris, whose edition was published by Messrs. Dent.

There should be room for the promised illustrated edition of Mr. W. D. Howells's Italian Journeys, of which, I believe, there has been no reprint in England since that of 1883, which was in two vols., 32 mo, and called "the author's edition." Mr. Howells's Venetian Life and his Tuscan Cities appear to have been more popular, for they were reproduced so recently as 1891 and 1894 respectively.

Miss Netta Syrett, whose play, "A Modern Love Story," has been chosen by the Playgoer's Club Committee for production, by and by, by Mr. George Alexander, is not altogether unknown in the literary field. Mr. John Lane published in his "Keynote" series her tale called Nobody's Fault, and in the following year (1897) her story, The Tree of Life. This was quickly followed by a book of fairy tales entitled The Garden of Delight (1897), for which her sister Nellie drew the illustrations, both the text and the drawings being above the average of such things.

In Mr. Frederic Harrison's new volume (printed, I observe, at the Norwood Press, U.S.A.) there are two addresses about Alfred the Great—one on his Millenary in general, the other on his Writings. The latter was published over here, separately, in May last, and one wonders why that on the Millenary was not published with it. The two together would have made a very apropos little book. The discourse on "Personal Reminiscences" is a little thin, perhaps, but it has some interest for lovers and students of literary work and people.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw writes an interesting preface to Mr. Grant Richards's reproduction of his Cashel Byron's Profession; but though he supplies a good many details about the history of that work, he does not condescend to exact dates. Cashel Byron was first published in 1886, by the "Modern Press," at the price of one shilling. A revised edition of it, at the same price, was issued by Mr. Walter Scott in 1889. The present reprint is also described as revised—"newly revised." One would like to have definite details of the career of the book in America, and of the play (or plays) founded on it and performed in the States.

The Bookworm.

Stanza.

(Translated from Rückert's "Weisheit des Brahmanen.")

In one still moment, when the soul sinks deep
In thoughts of Life and God, not dazed with wine nor sleep,
Not wandering, but clear, not slumb'ring, but awake,
Like the reflected sun in a wide, waveless lake;
When Far and Near, and Then and Now, and Time and Space
Have passed away like foam upon the water's face;
When thou canst feel the earliest, purest flowers of Life
Bound closely to thy breast, with fragrant promise rife;
When Earth and Heaven close around thee as a mist;
Thou think'st the flower a star, the star a flower sun-kiss'd;
In such a moment, when, with holy, rushing sound,
Creation's stream sweeps through thy very being's ground;
When thou thyself art not, and nothing is, but thou
And God, in whom thou art, not knowing why nor how;
In such a moment, swift as glance from frighten'd eyes
Comes the Love-longing, and all recollection dies;
He, who a moment such as this but once has known,
Knoweth Eternity, e'en before Life is flown;
And as the diamond gleams of radiant light enfolds,
So he Eternity now and for ever holds.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"Why Should Such Persons Ever Die?"

Conversations of James Northcote, R.A., with James Ward. Edited by Ernest Fletcher. (Methuen. 10s. 6d.)

It cannot be said that the name of James Northcote resounds in the corridors of literature. Many readers would say that they look upon him as a limb of Hazlitt, whose Conversations they have always meant to read but have neglected. They remember him in Sir Walter Scott's journal, where his appearance is brief and interesting. Scott sat to "the old Wizard Northcote" for his portrait in 1828. Northcote was then in his eighty-third year. Whenever Northcote turns up in such outlying quarters it is usually in his character of an octogenarian debauchee in the matter of hard work. Scott calls him an animated mummy. For years and years, beyond all reason, Northcote not only refused to die, but refused to lay aside his brush or hold his tongue. His little painting room at 39, Argyll-street, was approached through two much larger rooms upon which Northcote's rather portentous historical pictures, his rather flaming portraits, and his sentimental dramatisations of life hung in the gloomy London atmosphere. Beyond, in the little studio, a shabby cosiness and brightness reigned. Northcote painted, talked, and took snuff all day with such an easy mingling of the processes that to look at him, to be conscious of him, was a treat and a marvel. Constable used to say that he was as untouched by London as if he lived on the summit of Mont Blanc. Here for thirty years he painted and talked while Oxford-street was still young and Regent-street a-planning. He said, if he might select his own heaven, he would ask God to allow him to occupy his painting room "even for ever."

A pleasant companion, familiar with recollections of Sir Joshua, Samuel Johnson, Burke, Goldsmith, &c., was Scott's description of Northcote, whose range of lifetime was astonishing. He had been Reynolds's pupil when these eighteenth century pundits were diners in Leicester-square, and he lived to paint the portrait of John Ruskin as a child. It is impossible to sum in any brief way the procession of men, women and topics in Northcote's studio. There was rare talk and much, and if Northcote's painting was mediocre, the enchantments of art, the inward joy and outward glory of it, shone round the little, bald-headed, bright-eyed man like an immovable halo. There is a passage of Hazlitt's in which he describes a visit of Nollekens, then old and blind, to Argyll-street. The time-worn sculptor sat bolt upright, as though he had wrought himself to stone.

> Northcote stood by his side—all air and spirit, stooping down to speak to him. The painter was in a loose morning gown, with his back to the light; his face was like a pale fine piece of colouring; and his eye came out and glanced through the twilight of the past like an old eagle looking from its eyrie in the clouds. In a moment they had lighted from the top of Mount Cenis on the Vatican—
>
> "As when a vulture on Imaus bred
> Flies tow'rds the springs
> Of Ganges and Hydaspes, Indian streams"
>
> these two fine old men lighted with winged thoughts on the banks of the Tiber, and there bathed and drank of the spirit of their youth. They talked of Titian and Bernini; and Northcote mentioned that when Roubillac came back from Rome after seeing the works of the latter, and went down to look at his own in Westminster Abbey, he said—"By G—d, they looked like tobacco-pipes!"

To this man, to this atmosphere, to these sallies of memory and wit, Mr. Ernest Fletcher introduces us in these new conversations of Northcote with James Ward, R.A., which have been lying in faded MS. since Ward's death in 1850. They synchronise to some extent with the conversations recorded by Hazlitt. With these, however, they have a yet closer relationship. It is not too much to say that Northcote assumes a new importance as a talker from this day onward. Hazlitt's record was always a little suspect. He said that Northcote was only answerable for the wit, sense, and spirit of the talk, and that he took the dulness, impertinence, and malice on himself. The critics held that it was the other way, as, indeed, to some extent, it was. Hazlitt is never dull, but it is now proved that Northcote was never dull. Ward's comparatively unskilled report shows clearly that Hazlitt's was faithful. The hand is Hazlitt's, or it is Ward's, but the voice is always the voice of Northcote. The talk is more natural in Ward, more complex and polished in Hazlitt, but it is the same talk. One sees, too, how easy it was for Hazlitt to set down Northcote's speech. The painter talked very much as the essayist wrote. Hazlitt infested Northcote's studio, and out of it he talked Northcote everywhere. We believe his style owed as much to Northcote's extempore babble as to any writer under the sun. In these new conversations Northcote talks Hazlitt, in the old Hazlitt writes Northcote. The two men have the same blend of ease and incisiveness; the same masterly control of anecdote; the same alertness for modern instances and aid from any horizon. They both offer a feast of reason rather than a flow of soul.

Come we now to Ward's talks. These, says Mr. Fletcher on his title-page, are of art and artists. So they are. "They talked of Titian and Bernini," of Raphael, of Rubens, of Kneller; above all, of Northcote's master, Sir Joshua, and of his rival, Opie. But the talk spreads continually into the personalities and policy of art, and in a way that makes it a treasury of worldly wisdom. With personalities and private policy we are all concerned, and the rules of the game take colour only, not change, from the sphere in which they are studied. Here, just because art is the sphere, the rules seem doubly cogent. Not even in art, not even amid talk of Titian and Bernini, or in the secret joys of the studio, or amid the sunny honours of court and salon, do the plain rules of life lose their identity or their force. Success in paint is as much a matter of prudence and calculation as success in tea. And so in these pages winged thoughts alternate with shrewd judgments. The daily bread is not forgotten, neither is it assumed that men live by bread alone. But, "to be successful in England," says Northcote to the eager and worshipping Ward, "a painter must be a man-of-all-work; he must not stand out upon punctilios; he must be industrious in no ordinary degree, and be able to gratify that self-love which induces people to sit for their portraits." Again and again he detects the common causes of success and failure under the glamour of talent and even genius. "Merit in art," he says, "is not the only ground of success; much is done by management," and of management there are many kinds:

> "Kneller's was bravado; take, for instance, his little speech to Queen Anne, 'Many painters have given your Majesty the crown and cushion, but it remained for me to make you a Queen!' Romney's was the opposite to Kneller's plan; he was all humility and subserviency to a few men, such as Hayley, Cumberland, and a few others; he threw himself, as it were, upon them, and they procured him sitters. Then Sir Joshua, though deeply politic, wished to appear with an innocent, childlike simplicity, and was even thought by many to be hardly fit to take care of himself, but they little knew him! And Jackson's gentle, passive manner will help him much, and bring him many friends; indeed, to succeed in art a man must avoid all appearance of keenness, and especially of wit. It is very necessary for every painter to get connections by every possible means, as no one, not even the finest painter in the world, can ever succeed without them. Sir Joshua Reynolds was well aware of this fact, and acted accordingly, though with great discretion, as he did with everything else. During the London season he rarely dined at home. There were only Miss Reynolds,

Digitized by Google

> Miss Palmer, and myself at dinner day after day, and though the frequent dining-out probably shortened his life, it was of great advantage to him in his profession. Why, Titian—even Titian!—was helped by connection, and Rubens, too, in a great degree."

Of such sound, uncompromising talk this book is full. Nor is Northcote's advice merely conventional; it is personal and original to the last. He applauds Haydon for fitting up his costly studio on borrowed money. He stoutly denies an artist's right to marry, since if he is devoted to his art he is already wedded. He said he would have as soon given his daughter, if he had one, to an American savage as to Opie, whose first wife ran away from him. On the day of her flight Northcote was to take a walk with Opie. When Opie came down stairs he wore a long face and said: "'By God! a sad misfortune has happened to me.' 'A misfortune,' said I; 'I am sorry for it. What is it?' 'Why, my wife has run off!' he said. 'Oh,' said I, 'that is nothing more than what I have long expected!' And then we took our stroll." After young John Foster's suicide, Northcote said: "Ah! . . . to dissipate the energies of the human mind in wit and fun is like a man's throwing away his property among the mob in halfpence. Sir Joshua used to say that when a painter felt himself inclined to be a talker he should sew up his mouth, or he would unquestionably go to nothing." Northcote did not sew up his mouth, and the result is that of his seven or eight hundred pictures (a legend makes them two thousand) not one is hung in the National Gallery. His mission was to talk of life, not to paint it. He painted the oldest-fashioned kind of historical and sentimental pictures, like his "Visit to the Grandmother." He laboured the Princes in the Tower, the Death of Mortimer, and ransacked the Wars of the Roses. He gloated over "the tragic events of those sad times," and revelled in "the gloomy dungeons, and the armour, and the caparisoned horses," and said he had got half his livelihood by the reign of Edward IV. Once he essayed to paint a modern sequence in the manner of Hogarth. There were ten pictures in all, and their titles are a locus classicus of wish-wash. Here they are, as Cunningham gives them:

> 1. The Modest Girl and the Wanton, fellow-servants in a gentleman's house.
> 2. The Wanton Revelling with her Companions.
> 3. Good advice given to both by an old Servant.
> 4. The Wanton in her bed-chamber.
> 5. The Modest Girl in her bed-chamber.
> 6. The Wanton turned out of doors for misconduct.
> 7. The Modest Girl rejects the illicit addresses of her Master.
> 8. The Wanton, dying in poverty and disease, visited by the Modest Girl.
> 9. The Modest Girl receives the honourable addresses of her Master.
> 10. The Modest Girl, married to her Master, is led to her coach; while the Wanton, dead in misery, is laid in her grave.

Much has been said about Northcote's malice. It was the malice of vigorous talk, and the records of it were not of his own inspiring. Hazlitt began to print his Conversations in the Monthly Magazine without the painter's knowledge, and it is not easy to say how far their progress was, or could have been, controlled by Northcote, whose well-known letters to Ruskin's father reads like a frank expression of indignation that Hazlitt had exaggerated what he had said to him in confidence. Northcote knew his tongue was sharp, and confessed this frequently. He called Turner a mixture of genius and idiot, and Lawrence a man-milliner. But then he also called Jupiter an abominable blackguard. We who are entertained by his thrusts have little right to complain. He said many generous and beautiful things. Admiring Thomas Jackson's amiability and cleanness of mind, he said: "He could not do this unless it sprung from his natural disposition; it would be in vain to counterfeit it. I like constitutional virtues." His recollections of Sir Joshua are touched with genuine feeling:

> When the children of the nobility were brought to him he was able to paint them quite rapidly. Oh! what grand rackets there used to be at Sir Joshua's when these children were with him! He used to romp and play with them and talk to them in their own way; and, whilst all this was going on, he actually snatched those exquisite touches of expression which make his portraits of children so captivating.

He said:

> No man is perfect. There isn't a saint in Heaven who has not had the Devil's thumb-mark on him; and there was not a man who suffered at Tyburn but had some good qualities about him.

Of Fuseli he said that he had the manner of a Swiss valet, and proceeded:

> A real gentleman has a stillness in his manner, and it cannot be imitated, it must come from within. Now the word serene seems to me to describe what I mean exactly, and I wonder the title of Serene Highness is not made more use of than it is, for it appears to me to be the grandest of all titles. A lion, reposing in the dignity of his strength, has more of grandeur than any man, he is indeed a serene highness.

As Hazlitt says, "Why should such persons ever die?" They should potter along for ever, and their talk should be an accompaniment to life. We have a mind to see if it is not so, if Northcote's frail, shadowy figure is not busy to-day in Argyll-street, if he is not still held at an absurd height on his step-ladder by an argument below, if his snuff-box is not his endless search, and the world the perennial playground of his thoughts and sarcasms.

We have left ourselves little space in which to speak of the editorial work in this delightful volume. It is modest and adequate, and there is nothing to add, save only this, that we hope that Messrs. Methuen will see the desirability of giving us, at some convenient season, both sets of Conversations in one volume. Then, and then only, will our debt to Northcote be paid.

The Rounding Off of R. L. S.

The Life of Robert Louis Stevenson. By Graham Balfour. 2 vols. (Methuen & Co. 25s.)

It is not Mr. Graham Balfour's fault that the contents of these two handsome volumes should seem so familiar. Except, perhaps, in the early chapters, which treat of Stevenson's ancestry and youth, we were seldom free from the impression that we were re-reading a life narrative that had already been fully told. No account of a man's life, however conscientious, however intimate with his subject the biographer may have been, can approach in interest the man's own letters. Of Stevenson's letters there are three volumes. Few men had such a faculty for self-revelation as he, few could catch the flying mood and fix it on paper so vividly, so daintily, so tenderly, so humorously. Moreover, Mr. Colvin's admirable biographical interludes in the Letters to His Family and Friends gave a running account of the major portion of Stevenson's life. Mr. Balfour is careful and conscientious, but he is not a stirring biographer. He walks too contentedly where others have trodden. To a reader who is not familiar with Stevenson's books and letters, and who does not possess the Memorial Edition, this Life will be welcome; but the Stevensonian, we fear, will feel that it is all rather an old story. There is, of course, much that is new and interesting, but it has to be sought.

Mr. Balfour prints an interesting account of the inception of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and also of the method of collaboration that produced The Ebb Tide and The Wrecker. Dr Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the story which first brought

Digitized by Google

Stevenson into general notice was, in main, the result of a dream. The subject of the duality of man's nature and the alternation of good and evil had been much in his thoughts; and he had been for a long time casting about for a story to embody this central idea. But

> The true story still delayed, till suddenly one night he had a dream. He awoke, and found himself in possession of two, or rather three, of the scenes in the Strange Story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Its waking existence, however, was by no means without incident. He dreamed these scenes in considerable detail, including the circumstance of the transforming powders, and so vivid was the impression that he wrote the story off at a red heat, just as it had presented itself to him in his sleep. "In the small hours of one morning," says Mrs. Stevenson, "I was awakened by cries of horror from Louis. Thinking he had a nightmare, I awakened him. He said angrily: 'Why did you wake me? I was dreaming a fine bogey tale.' I had awakened him at the first transformation scene." . . . Mr. Osbourne writes: "I don't believe that there was ever such a literary feat before as the writing of Dr. Jekyll. I remember the first reading as though it were yesterday. Louis came downstairs in a fever; read nearly half the book aloud; and then, while we were still gasping, he was away again, and busy writing. I doubt if the first draft took so long as three days."

On reflection Stevenson condemned the powder incident as too material, but he could not disregard it, as in the dream it had made so strong an impression upon him. He worked upon the draft for a month or six weeks before bringing it into its present form.

It is curious that in a conversation with Mr. Balfour at Vailima on the different ways of writing a story, Stevenson should not have mentioned the help that dreams may give. "There are three ways, and three ways only. You may take a plot and fit characters to it, or you may take a character and choose incidents and situations to develop it, or, lastly, you may take a certain atmosphere and get action and persons to express and realise it." Neither did he mention the inspiration and help that apparently comes from collaboration—a system that one is always surprised should be used by writers of such individuality as Stevenson, Mr. Hardy, and Mr. Kipling. Of the method of collaboration between Stevenson and Mr. Lloyd Osbourne, Mr. Osbourne gives an interesting account. Who would have thought that the San Francisco picnics in The Wrecker were the work, not of R. L. S., but of his collaborator?

> When an idea for a book was started, we used to talk it over together, and generally carried the tale on from one invention to another, until, in accordance with Louis' own practice, we had drawn out a complete list of the chapters. In all our collaborations I always wrote the first draft, to break the ground, and it is a pleasure to me to recall how pleased Louis was, for instance, with the first three chapters of The Ebb Tide. As a rule, he was a man chary of praise, but he fairly overflowed towards those early chapters, and I shall never forget the elation his praise gave me. The first draft was then written again and rewritten by Louis and myself in turn. The Paris parts of The Wrecker and the end of The Ebb Tide (as it stands) I never even touched (Letters, ii. 356). The collaboration was a mistake, for me, nearly as much as for him; but I don't believe Louis ever enjoyed any work more. He liked the comradeship—my work coming in just as his energy flagged, or vice versâ; and he liked my applause when he—as he always did—pulled us magnificently out of sloughs. In a way, I was well fitted to help him. I had a knack for dialogue—I mean, of the note-taking kind. I was a kodaker: he an artist and a man of genius. I managed the petty makeshifts and inventions which were constantly necessary; I was the practical man, so to speak, the one who paced the distances, and used the weights and measures; in The Wrecker, the storm was mine; so were the fight and the murders on the Currency Lass; the picnics in San Francisco, and the commercial details of Loudon's partnership. Nares was mine and Pinkerton to a great degree, and Captain Brown was mine throughout.

With these volumes, Stevenson's life as man and writer is rounded off and complete. There can be little more to add. Probably of no other author has the world so finished a picture. Few writers live so vividly in the printed page as he; few fought so consistently brave a fight against ill-health; few have won so intimate a place in the affections of their readers; to few has the end come while they were still eager with the book that towers above its companions. He was a wanderer always. A mere list of the roofs that sheltered him might fill a column of this journal. Wherever fate led him he had but one desire—to write. Mr. Balfour, who during the last two years of his cousin's life, lived at Vailima, gives this little picture of Stevenson's industry:

> He would get up at six, or perhaps earlier, and begin work. From my bed in the cottage I commanded a view of his verandah, and often and often I have waked in the chill early dawn to see through the window the house with the mass of Vaea towering behind it: in the midst there would be the one spot of bright light where Tusitala, the only other person awake of all the household, was already at his labours.

He was always interested. He could lie in a sick-room for weeks without speaking, and yet declare truly, "I never was bored in my life." When unable to work he would play the flute, or build card-houses, or model small figures of wax or clay. He spent one whole winter writing verses "just for amusement." The day was not long enough for him to express the versatility of his mind, and in youth, at any rate, he was a master in constructing those elaborate jokes that last for days and afford the inventors so keen a joy. The colossal "Mr. Libbel" joke of his student days might well have formed a diverting chapter in a story. That joy in fun for its own sake passed with his youth, but what never left Stevenson was the parson part of him. As boy, as youth, as man, the desire to preach—and how well he did it!—was as much himself as the passion to express his thoughts and inventions in the fittest and the most alluring way. At the age of three his mother wrote of him thus in her diary: "Smout's favourite occupation is making a church; he makes a pulpit with a chair and a stool, reads sitting, and then stands up and sings by turns." And at the end of this Life Mr. Balfour prints no fewer than five pages of prayers which he composed for family use at Vailima. He died, as all know, at the age of forty-four, unhappily falsifying the prophecy made by his doctor ten years before: "Keep him alive till he is forty, and then, although a winged bird, he may live to ninety." He died "in mid-career, laying out vast projects, planning monstrous foundations, and flushed with hope." It was the enviable death that he had imagined years before. "The noise of the mallet and chisel is scarcely quenched, the trumpets are hardly done blowing, when, trailing with him clouds of glory, this happy-starred, full-blooded spirit shoots into the spiritual world."

Above Average.

The Mother's Tragedy. By Aleister Crowley. (Privately Printed.)

Weeds by the Wall. By Madison Cawein. (Louisville: John P. Morton & Co.)

One Day and Another. By Madison Cawein. (Boston: Richard G. Badger & Co.)

Sony-Surf. By Cale Young Rice. (Boston: Richard G. Badger & Co.)

A Book of Verses. By Mrs. James Glenny Wilson. (Elliot Stock.)

A SURVEY of the above convoy of poetry which has reached the editorial harbour convinces one that half the novices in song sin by vaulting ambition. The most difficult of all poetry is philosophical poetry; yet few of these abstain from essaying it.

Digitized by Google

A man or woman (perhaps women are the most frequent offenders) has read a poem in which a master endeavours to set forth his theory of life through lyric medium; has admired and must incontinently do likewise. She (let us suppose it "she") by some perversity usually selects racing dactylic hexameters, or some other long and difficult metre demanding mastery in itself. Perhaps this is because Tennyson had a fancy for long and rolling metres in his reflective verse. Having thus handicapped herself at the outset, from the executive standpoint, she proceeds to set forth the average sentimental feminine view of life, interlarded with orts and remainders of philosophy, gleaned from the droppings of fashionable poets in passing through a not over-apprehensive mind. These philosophic fragments are mostly pantheisms or naturalisms —though she would indignantly deny herself pantheist or naturalist — which she works in with the rest, nowise grasping their logical drift. The whole is tricked out in large and vague phrases caught from Tennyson, Swinburne, and the like fountains of accredited poetic diction.

The result is a weariness of the flesh to a perspicuous mind; but it looks so like the real thing, and is so easy to do, that no one of imitative faculty can renounce the doing of it. Nor is it only women. Shallow thought and large ambitions are not confined to either sex. So the semi-philosophic or pseudo-philosophic poem spreads like duckweed on a standing pond.

Happily, along with a good proportion of such futilities, the present batch of verse has a more than usual leavening of quite other work, really meritorious in a minor degree.

It is not long since we reviewed a book by Mr. Aleister Crowley, and mingled blame with praise, like "Crusty Christopher." So we must still do; for The Mother's Tragedy treads too hard on the heels of his previous volume for any modification of the qualities we then noted. There is the old vigour and boldness, the sinewy phrase that takes you by the throat (as it were) and throttles the praise out of you; but also is it incompt, wild, shattering of form, unskilful in coherent expression, profuse in awkward and misleading constructions as of old. For many of these poems there is no word but powerful; yet it is (we might almost say) the power of insanity, so little is it under the author's own control, so contorted and spasmodic is it, proceeding by vehement leaps and rushes of speech, abruptly checked by thick and struggling utterance. Often admirable in forceful felicity, it is equally often exasperating by its choked and imperfect expression. Withal there is thought; it is turbid with meaning, only too turbid at many times. Yet this is a fault on the right side. We would rather wrestle with Mr. Crowley's obscurity (and he is often densely, faultily obscure, through trying to say more in a line than he has the gift to say) than wade through the tepid vacuity of most minor verse. The worst of all obscurity is the obscurity of utter nothingness and voluble, brainless platitude. All Mr. Crowley's qualities, for good and evil, are quintessentialised in the opening ode, called "Sin." It deals with the spirit of the heathen and mythologic hell—the place of intense cold and negation of life, the source of lust and death. The poem only too manifestly reveals its own effort; it is often turgid with effort, clumsy with unshapely compression; it is obscure in substance, and frequently still more obscure from broken and disconnected utterance, want of logical grammar—all the faults of those who seek pregnancy without adequate artistic gift. Yet its sheer power contstantly makes way through the dead weight of its defects; while it is throughout grave and dignified. The poet always knows what he is saying, though the reader may often desperately wish that he did. It is too long to quote entire; but, at the risk of utter unintelligibility, we venture to cite some stanzas from it:

Ye rivers, and ye elemental caves,
 Above the fountains of the broken ice,
Know ye what dragon lurks within your waves?
 Know ye the secret of the cockatrice?
 The basilisk whose shapeless brood
 Take blood and muck for food?
 The sexless passion, the foul scorpion spawn?
 The witches and the evil-chanting ones
 Who strangle stars and suns,
 Eclipse the moon, and curse against the dawn?
 Know ye the haunts of death?
 The hole that harboureth
 The sickening breath,
 Whence all disease is bred and all corruption drawn?

.

Central, supreme, most formidable Night,
 Gathered its garments, drew itself apart,
Gaunt limbs appear against the coprolite
 Veil of deep agony, display the heart;
 Even as a gloomy sea
 Wherein dead fishes be,
 Poisonous things, nameless; the eightfold Fear,
 Misshapen crab and worm,
 The intolerable sperm,
 Lewd dragons slime-built, stagnant; the foul mere Crawled, moved, gave tongue,
 The essential soul of dung
 That lived and stung,
 That spoke—no word that living head may hear.

.

Yet, in the terror of that Breast, abides
 So sweet and deadly a device, a lure
Deep in the blood and poison of her sides,
 Swart, lean, and leprous, that her stings endure.
 Even the soul of grace
 Abideth not her face
 Without vague longing, infinite desire,
 Stronger because suppressed,
 Unto the wide black breast,
 The lips incarnate of blood, flesh, and fire

Mr. Crowley, we may add, frequently expresses things with all his uncompromising completeness, which poetry (to our mind) had better leave unexpressed.

After Mr. Crowley we have a very different class, of which Mr. Madison Cawein is a type, and it is worth noting that they are all American or Colonial. Mr. Cawein dwells altogether on the surface of things, and his strength lies in luxuriant descriptive power. In Weeds by the Wall his chief defect is a too dense massing of short, pictorial words, which makes some obstruction in the current of the verse. But his pictorial power is excellent, his scenery is distinctively American, and his descriptions are freshly phrased. Take a stanza or so from "Drouth":

The hot sunflowers by the glaring pike
 Lift shields of sultry brass; the teasel tops,
Pink-thorned, advance with bristling spike on spike
 Against the furious sunlight. Field and copse
 Are sick with summer: now, with breathless stops,
The locusts cymbal; now grasshoppers beat
 Their castanets: and rolled in dust, a team—
 Like some mean life wrapped in its sorry dream—
An empty wagon rattles through the heat.

Where now the blue, blue flags? the flow'rs whose mouths
 Are moist and musty? Where the sweet-breathed mint,
That made the brook-bank herby? Where the South's
 Wild morning glories, rich in hues, that hint
 At coming showers that the rainbows tint?
Where all the blossoms that the wildwood knows?—
 The frail oxalis hidden in its leaves;
 The Indian pipe, pale as a soul that grieves;
The freckled touch-me-not and forest-rose.

.

Digitized by Google

No bird is heard; no throat to whistle awake
The sleepy hush; to let its music leak
Fresh, bubble-like, through bloom-roofs of the brake:
Only the green-blue heron, famine-weak,—
Searching the stale pools of the minnowless creek,—
Utters its call; and then the rain-crow, too,
False prophet now, croaks to the stagnant air;
While overhead,—still as if painted there,—
A buzzard hangs, black on the burning blue.

No less admirably painted is "The Tree Toad," and no less American: with many another poem throughout this attractive volume. In One Day and Another, however, Mr. Cawein attempts fancy pure and simple, commingled with a light strain of sentiment, in the form of a "lyrical eclogue." But it is in reality only a chain of pretty lyrics: and the author is most successful when he falls back upon the descriptive gift which serves him so well in his other volume. It has not here the advantage of being drawn straight from nature; nevertheless, as an exercise in voluptuous fancy, such stanzas as these have a certain richness, if they lack freshness and originality:

Ten slave-girls—like unto blooms—
Stand, holding tamarisk torches,
Silk-clad from the Trak looms;
Ten handmaidens serve the feast,
Each girl like a star in the East;
Ten lutanists, lutes a-tune,
Wait, each like the Ramadan moon.

For you in a stuff of Merv
Blue-clad, unveiled and jewelled,
No metaphor known may serve:
Scarved deep with your raven hair,
The jewels like fire-flies there,
Blossom and moon and star,
The Lady Shamsennehar.

.

You stand like the letter I;
Dawn-faced, with eyes that sparkle
Black stars in a rosy sky;
Mouth like a cloven peach,
Sweet with your smiling speech;
Cheeks that the blood presumes
To make pomegranate blooms.

And so on, through stanza after stanza of glittering description. Assuredly, in this single gift, Mr. Cawein shows very great promise and no small accomplishment. Of anything more or deeper he, as yet, shows not even the ambition. But one may safely take it that he is young.

Mr. Young Rice's gift is also descriptive, but of a weaker kind. "To the Nightingale" yields fair examples of his quality:

Tho' thou hast never unpent thy pain's delight
Upon these airs, bird of the poet's love,
Yet must I sing of thy singing, for the night
Has poured her jewels into the lap of heaven,
As they who've heard thee say thou pour'st above
The wood such ecstacies as were not given
By Venus' nestling breasts unto the dove.

Often I've watched the moon orb her fair gold
Still clung to by the tattered mists of day,
And look for thee.

Mr. Rice also is American, and these last three volumes make most dainty holiday-poetry, precisely fit to be read in the idle mood when deeper verse would be too strenuous to harmonise with one's lazy luxury. The last two, which belong to the "Lyric Library," have likewise a very dainty format, just fitting them for the pocket.

Mrs. Glenny Wilson belongs to our other kindred, the Australians; and hers, too, is the descriptive gift, marked by much eloquence, and a true measure of fancy. Her best poem is, perhaps, "A Dialogue"; but we quote from "A Winter Daybreak," which is of more convenient length.:

The cock crows in the windy winter-morn,
Then must I rise and fling the curtain by,
All dark! but for a strip of fiery sky
Behind the ragged mountains, peaked and torn.
One planet glitters in the icy cold,
Poised like a hawk above the frozen peaks;
And now again the wild nor'-wester speaks,
And bends the cypress, shuddering, to his fold,
While every timber, every casement creaks,
But still the skylarks sing aloud and bold;
The wooded hills arise: the white cascade
Shakes with wild laughter all the silent shadowy glade.

Altogether, this is a batch of minor verse of unusual excellence; and that four of the volumes we have singled for praise should come across the seas is exceedingly creditable to our kinsmen in other lands.

The Mary Mystery.

The Mystery of Mary Stuart. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans. 18s. net.)

A few weeks ago Mr. Samuel Cowan produced two fresh volumes upon the dilemma of Mary and the Casket Letters, and following close upon it Mr. Lang publishes a new and suggestive examination of that very mystery. In the earlier work the fascination of Mary Stuart is never absent from the writer's mind. Mr. Cowan is a fresh and somewhat impulsive champion on the side of the Queen. In the latter we have a careful and, to use Mr. Lang's own descriptive expression, "detective" study of the Darnley murder and the Casket Letters. There is no predominating bias towards the woman. The bias, if any, lies in the engrossing desire at last to get at the truth, and to prove definitely the degree of guilt or innocence. Of the two Mr. Lang's is the more valuable contribution to the subject. The analysis is closer and more shrewd, the manner of statement more weighty. Throughout Mr. Lang quotes the contradictory and confusing reports of both sides, with the result that the average reader is in the end at least clearly conscious of the position in which the case stands. The great difficulty of Mary's life has never been so plainly demonstrated—the fact that in their entirety the reports of neither side are to be credited, her partisans as well as her enemies lying unhesitatingly whenever it suited them. Mr. Lang's volume, of course, does not in any way clear the Mary mystery. In fact, though, on the whole, he is inclined to think the queen guilty of the greater part of the Casket Letters, and of a knowledge, at least, of the plan to do away with Darnley, one of the most valuable things done by his examination is the distinctness with which it demonstrates that the evidence is so far entirely insufficient to justify any definite and impartial verdict. In this new volume the writer is practically like a judge summing up a difficult case for the jury, and refusing to make a guiding emphasis or suggestion. If his leanings are a little towards the prisoner, a strict absorption with justice is stronger still, while stronger than both is the consciousness of presenting evidence rendered practically valueless not only by its interminable contradictions, but by consideration of the extraordinary want of integrity among the witnesses. Mr. Lang's book puts the reader accustomed to dissertations, always with a violent leaning towards one side or the other, in a position of cool and unharassed observance. And the fact that the writer himself, upon a careful consideration of circumstantial evidence, is inclined to consider the chances against Mary's complete innocence is never allowed to become a controlling and vehement persuasion. As regards the letters, from internal evidence he suggests the likelihood of her having written originals used and tampered with by her enemies. But Mr. Lang allows considerable weight at the same time to the circumstance that not only was her writing easy to imitate, but that Lethington, one of those concerned in the production of the letters, had boasted of being able to do so.

Digitized by Google

What Mr. Lang has also done in this volume that is valuable and universal is to make careful studies of the principal characters of this sinister and pathetic drama, and to allow for the probable behaviour of temperament. We wish he had carried his investigations as to Mary even further. For, after all, the answer to the dilemma lies secreted in Mary's personality. Moreover, how much or how little Mary wrote of the Casket Letters is of no real historical importance. The sources of the multitudinous volumes on the subject are the incurable attraction of curiosity and the fascination of the woman herself. This is so great that we are surprised how few of her later victims are content to allow her a little wickedness. This is a lack of intuition. For half the influence that holds them engrossed over old MSS. comes from the fact that Mary was deepened by a little human sinfulness; because, above all—and she was a good deal besides—she was a supremely passionate woman, with the gust-like recklessness of all excessively passionate dispositions. Few of her historians, moreover, have allowed for the impossibility of her education and heredity to produce the spiritually naïve person Mary must necessarily have been to pass through the Darnley episode alone, knowing nothing of what was to come. She had not been brought up in a spiritual atmosphere—religious is a very different matter. She had not, in fact, breathed a breath of spirituality in her life. From the court of Catherine de Medicis—an influence hardly likely to be small—she passed to an environment cruel and callous to an almost incomparable degree. Also, she fought incessantly, and by no means inadequately, with an enemy cunning as a serpent—her cousin Elizabeth. The woman who could write the letters of Mary to the latter was not a simple woman. She was an intelligence of an inexhaustible subtlety. A study of Mary's correspondence reveals more than appears on the surface. Her letters exhibit a curious mixture of caution, tact, diplomacy, and an occasional impulsive transparency. Like everything about her, they are tantalising and inconclusive.

As regards the question of the Bothwell marriage, we are inclined to think that still more is necessary to render comprehensible the extraordinary folly of it. Remorse only does not account for Mary's demeanour upon her wedding-day, and remorse does not in any way account for her instant quarrels with Bothwell. Mr. Lang's suggestion that the passion was largely upon her side does plausibly explain a good deal; but when every hypothesis has been weighed, the Bothwell marriage still remains the most inscrutable of Mary's actions. We are inclined to fancy that she had not reckoned, when she connived at the removal (if she did do so) of the wearying Darnley, what a tool in the hands of the others in the business it would make of her. But from the day of Darnley's murder she was a creature pressed on every side by various dangers. What refuge she thought she saw in a union with this one strong and "masterful" man, or what safeguard from her supreme dread—a trial for murder—we are not prepared to say; but there is a probability, at any rate, that something besides passion helped to bring about the fatal error of their marriage.

In an estimation of Mary also the lasting devotion of her servants is frequently given an inadequate significance. A woman thoroughly corrupt behind a surface fascination could never have retained such permanent loyalty among those intimately surrounding her. Once again, therefore, we are driven to the same conclusion, that she was a personality of many enchantments, and that practically that is nearly all we know about her character.

One minor point dwelt upon by Mr. Lang, and that is not usually realised, is the fact that the Scotch punishment of husband murder was at that time burning at the stake, and that Mary was, and knew herself to be so, in actual danger of the "fiery death." Her dreams at Loch Leven were full of this flaming torture. No degree of courage can lessen the agony of such a terror.

A Conceited Clerk.

Selections from the Works of Fourier. Translated by Julia Franklin. (Swan Sonnenschein. 2s. 6d.)

FOURIER? Yes, of course. So vaguely will the name of this curious little Frenchman be accepted. For everyone who writes of communism alludes to Fourier, and not one student of social science in a hundred knows anything but the name of the ordinary man who wrote such extraordinary things. For in outward aspect Fourier seems to have been ordinary enough. A clerk in the cloth houses of Lyons and Paris, with no chance for study but in snatched visits to reading-rooms, he lived and died poor, and made no profit on the volumes he published and the piles of manuscript he left behind him. But this little French clerk, caught up in the intellectual swirl of the Revolution, this conceited little crank who set out to reform the world during his leisure moments in his bachelor apartment, has had a wonderful influence on every generation which in the last century has tried to combat the horrors of civilisation. For there was method in the Fourier madness, though it was no surface method, and his published works, in which he scatters his ideas without order or cohesion, are impossible for the ordinary reader. All the more welcome is this selection from Fourier's works, prefaced by Mr. Charles Gide's concise and lucid introduction. There is plenty of material for laughter in these selections, and plenty for reflection.

It was an apple which first showed Fourier the great law of attraction in the spiritual world, as it was an apple which woke Newton to a recognition of a similar law in the physical world. Fourier himself points to the coincidence. The apple ("which is worthy of fame," he says) cost fourteen sous at Février's restaurant in Paris, whereas Fourier had just come from a district where a hundred better apples could be bought for the same price. He suspected something wrong in the social organism, and looked for it. On reflection he remembered that the apple had played leading parts in other famous dramas—the Fall and the Trojan War, to wit, and this insistence on the four famous apples is very characteristic of Fourier's conception of himself. What then was wrong with the social organism? Well, it was wrong from beginning to end. It rested on a basis of force—soldiers, policemen, judges and gaolers—or of useless fraud—middlemen, financiers and the rest. God has given us passions. (Fourier was a most godly man.) Passion lies at the root of human nature. So Fourier tried to build up society on a basis of passion, which, in its wider meaning, is merely the principle of attraction. Lest this basis should be misunderstood it is as well to remind you that Fourier, in his "table of non-productives in civilisation" classes women under the heading of "domestic parasites." Like Schopenhauer, he was a bachelor, and his state is evident in his system. Here is an illuminating passage:

> The learned world is wholly imbued with a doctrine termed morality, which is a mortal enemy of passional attraction. Morality teaches man to be at war with himself, to resist his passions, to repress them, to believe that God was incapable of organising our souls, our passions, wisely; that He needed the teachings of Plato and Seneca in order to know how to distribute characteristics and instincts. . . . It is true that these impulses entice us only to evil, if we yield to them individually; but we must calculate their effect upon a body of about two thousand persons socially combined.

And Fourier's world would consist of groups of people whose social bond, so far as one can gather from his scattered maxims and elaborate details, would be that of attraction. No strikes, no cracking of skulls, no revolution, even, to bring about the new order. Only the gradual admission of the human race that each is quite willing to do as he likes.

But, then, who will do the dirty work? Who will be attracted—for attraction is the thing—to the sweeping of crossings and the scouring of plates? Surely it is only necessity that drives to such offices. Here Fourier is at his maddest, and almost completes the circle to sanity. No one shall scour plates all day. There shall be no scullery-maid in the basement of the Carlton Hotel who does not know the joys of the restaurant table (for we all live in phalansteries under the Fourier management). There are unpleasant jobs, but there are plenty of people who like unpleasant jobs as a change—and Fourier sees that it is monotony that kills. Do not many men scorn delights and live a few laborious days in exploring unknown countries? Do not many women forsake the comforts of home to face the weather on the golf links or the yacht! Unpleasant jobs are a joy as a change, and are hated only when they must be continued hour after hour and month after month with no prospect of change. Even golf would pall if one had to play it for ten hours a day year in and year out. And there might come a time when dukes, weary of ducal amusements, would gladly take a turn in the stoke-hole of a P. & O. boat in the Red Sea; and when a duchess, instead of dining at Prince's, would run downstairs and wash up the dishes for fun. But, the worst of it, one could never be sure that a duchess, on any given evening, would be in the humour for such fun. A captain of a P. & O., at a pinch, could order a duke into the stoke-hole, and clap him in irons if he objected. But the manager of Prince's has no such authority to send a duchess to the scullery. And that is where Fourier's scheme breaks down in practice, as has been proved once and again. For it has been tried here and there—the small community, the phalanstery, the do-as-you-please system. All the world should remember Brook Farm, which gathered in Hawthorn and inspired him. But six years is the limit of the lasting of these experiments. Nevertheless, Fourier, the crank, is not done with yet. His doctrine of doing as you please is nothing new—the life according to nature, it was called centuries ago. And we have always those among us who look back to the simpler life. But who is to stop the clock and turn the hands back to the early reckoning? Who is to persuade the whole world that work is fun? Fourier has had the best part of a century, and we have got no further than some co-operative societies and a few big hotels—which do not call themselves phalansteries.

Digitized by Google

Other New Books.

LE MOUVEMENT LITTÉRAIRE CONTEMPORAIN. PAR GEORGES PELLISSIER.

Those who wish to know what to read, and how to "place" what they read in contemporary French literature, will find a safe guide in M. Pellissier. He is not exactly a critic of the first brilliance—not a Sainte-Beuve or an Anatole France; but he is a student and a thinker, his literary taste is good, and he has succeeded in giving a philosophic unity to his treatment of a subject which might very easily have been handled scrappily.

The book deals almost wholly with what may be called post-naturalistic literature — the literature of the reaction from naturalism, intending by that term, as M. Pellissier is careful to insist, only "doctrinaire and scholastic naturalism," and by no means the "sane, honest, courageous art which endeavours to render nature as truthfully as possible." Beyond this negative unity, the formula of the age appears to M. Pellissier to be individualism. There are no schools of any significance. Each of the writers who really count is endeavouring to see for himself and to find expression for what he sees in independence of a tradition. And, after all, the revolters against naturalism are only carrying a stage further the better part of the doctrines of naturalism itself by applying to the study of the inner life that sincerity of observation which their predecessors directed predominantly to the study of external circumstance. M. Pellissier develops his theme through five chapters, dealing respectively with the novel, the stage, poetry, criticism, and history. Except in history, which lags behind the general course of literary evolution, he finds the triumph of individualism everywhere. Some further conception of his scope may be gathered from a list of the writers discussed in two of the chapters. The novelists are, besides MM. Zola, Flaubert, Maupassant, and Fabre, who stand for the realism of yesterday, MM. Huysmans, Rod, Rosny, Margueritte, France, Loti, Bourget, Hervieu, Adam, Prévost, Barrès, Capus, Estaunié, Pouvillon, Theuriet, and Bazin. In poetry, M. Pellissier finds in "Les Trophées" of M. de Heredia the culminating point of Parnassianism, which, in the hard brilliancy of its outlook upon the superficial aspect of things, is the poetic counterpart of prose naturalism. And, as types of the reaction, he studies MM. Mallarmé, Verlaine, Henri de Regnier, Albert Samain, André Rivoire, Fernand Gregh, Jean Moréas, Vielé-Griffin, Rodenbach, Verhaeren, Maurice Bouchor—impressionists and individualists to a man. (Hachette.)

THE LAST OF THE MASAI. BY MR. AND MRS. HINDE.

Since the publication of Joseph Thomson's Through Masailand, in 1884, hardly any information has been forthcoming concerning the great East African warrior tribe, the Masai. Mr. Hinde, who is H.M. Collector, British East Africa Protectorate, has, of course, unusual opportunities of studying this fine race, which until quite lately lived apart from even the neighbouring African tribes, and had a reputation for fighting equalled only by the Zulus. The Masai seldom came into contact with the Imperial British East Africa Company, as they are not a trading race; and in the early 'nineties, after the death of their great Sultan Batian, they became greatly weakened, owing to a severe small-pox epidemic, inter-tribal conflicts between the two sons of Batian, and the rinderpest, which carried off most of their cattle. In 1893, after a battle of several days' duration between two divisions of the Masai, headed by Lenana and Sendeyo, the sons of Batian, the losing party, that of Sendeyo, appealed to the Company's agent at Fort Smith for protection. It was first with, and eventually through, this faction, which was composed of sections of various clans, that the white man's influence was brought to bear upon the whole Masai people. Mr. Hinde was greatly impressed with the fine physique, manly bearing, and response to discipline of the Masai, and lost no opportunity of studying the people. The power of the nation is now broken; but by the title, The Last of the Masai, Mr. Hinde does not mean the last individuals of the race, but rather the last of the rapidly decreasing band of pure blood, whose tendencies, traditions, customs, and beliefs, remain uncontaminated by admixture with Bantu elements and contact with civilisation. Mr. Hinde, with the help of his wife, deals with the Masai royal house, the women, industries, villages, customs, and other characteristics of the Masai, and in the second part of his book gives some field notes on the game of East Africa, which will be of the greatest value to sportsmen. The work is a most admirable contribution to African ethnology, and is well illustrated with excellent photographs of the people; but a good map is a great desideratum. The photographs of game are also first-rate, and the book appeals to the sportsman no less than to the student of African races and customs. (Heinemann. 15s. net.)

THE CRIMINAL. BY HAVELOCK ELLIS.

The study of criminology, founded by Lambroso, is advancing so rapidly that Mr. Havelock Ellis's third edition of The Criminal differs from its predecessors by important additions and subtraction of matter.

Mr. Ellis admits that while in his first edition he was able to give a fairly complete summary of the subject as it then stood, that is now impossible. He mentions, however, some of the more prominent recent contributions to the science. Italy still produces remarkable work in this field, as witness the books of Profs. Ferri and Maro. In France, Germany, and the United States remarkable work is also being done. Here, as in too many fields, we find ourselves outdistanced. Mr. Ellis thinks we are far behind these countries in the study of criminal anthropology, and points out that Great Britain is the only European country of standing which possesses no journal mainly devoted to the subject. It may be well to state the questions to which Mr. Havelock Ellis, in common with all earnest followers of criminological inquiry, is trying to obtain sound answers. They are these: "What is a criminal? Is he—according to the old legal assumption on which our criminal law is still mainly built up—a normal person who has wilfully committed an abnormal act? Is he victim of acquired disease, such as some form of epilepsy? Is he an atavistic reappearance of the savage in modern society? Is he a 'degenerate'? What is the 'criminal type'?" Mr. Ellis's own answers to these extremely difficult questions are searching, but cautious. The phrase "moral hospital" crystallises his matured judgment, as far as it is formed, on the proper treatment of the criminal. To that goal we seem to be surely moving, and the present activity in backward England in the moral-hospital treatment of habitual drunkards, is sure ere long to be matched, under legal authority, in some criminal directions—as already at Bedford, where we have a prison for boy felons worked on enlightened principles. At present, the high-tide mark of reform is found in the State Reformatory of New York at Elmira, where the indefinite sentence, with its possibilities of justice and encouragement to the prisoner, is in force. The prisoners are all felons who have not committed felony before, though they may have been in prison for misdemeanour. Under this conception of the indeterminate sentence, the whole treatment of the prisoner undergoes a natural change and alleviation. The "moral-hospital" idea is involved in this one feature, and the corollaries and results are, in the case of young criminals, those we should expect.

Digitized by Google

By the way, some book-collector may be able to help Mr. Ellis in a little matter. He greatly wishes to obtain Parts II. and III of Bragg's Confessions of a Thief, published, we believe, in Sydney, New South Wales. "A document of great psychological interest," says Mr. Ellis, whose appetite has been whetted by a perusal of the first part. (Walter Scott. 6s.)

BRITISH GOTHENBURG EXPERIMENTS.
BY ROWNTREE AND SHERWELL.

It is now little more than two years ago that Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell published their book on The Temperance Problem and Social Reform. The reception of that exhaustive analysis has led to the recognition of its authors as the first authorities on the subject; and there can be no doubt that the formation of Public House Trust Companies, under the leadership of Earl Grey, and the rapid extension of the People's Refreshment-House Association, may be, in no small degree, attributed to the influence of Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell's book. Their new volume, therefore, derives particular interest from the fact that the writers are now able to criticise the recent experiments in temperance reform, and to tell us how far, in their opinion, these experiments have been carried out on the principles laid down in their larger work.

While welcoming the recent attempts to deal with the drink problem by voluntary effort, the writers reaffirm their conviction that no complete solution is possible without a State-conferred monopoly upon companies having no interest in the profits. They maintain, moreover, that "the chief test of any scheme of temperance reform is its ability to bring about a substantial reduction in the national consumption of alcohol," and that the policy of the public-house trusts, while tending to more efficient management, and to a less degrading environment, does not satisfy them on this point. The controversial part of the book will probably be found in their continued emphasis on the necessity of separating the public-house, as a place where intoxicants are sold, from the people's club. They will admit of no "adventitious attraction"—however harmless, or, indeed, useful in itself—in connection with a public-house, and insist throughout on the dual Scandinavian system. (Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d.)

WE have made no calculations, but we should not be surprised to learn that the poet of the "greatest number of lines" in the nineteenth century was Mr. Robert Buchanan. This idea is suggested by the two-volume edition of his "Complete Poetical Works," just issued in admirable style by Messrs. Chatto & Windus at twelve shillings. To each volume a portrait is prefixed. There is no introduction. The poems are arranged in chronological order, and in appropriate sets as they were originally issued in smaller volumes. One cannot but feel sorry that this presentment of the entire poetical work of a poet so vexed, vigilant, and industrious is posthumous. Peace be to the ashes in which this "Last Cry" seems still to live:

> Forget me not, but come, O King,
> And find me softly slumbering
> In dark and troubled dreams of Thee,
> Then, with one waft of Thy bright wing
> Awaken me!

Messrs. Cassell's new serial enterprise, Living London, promises well. It will consist of expert sketches of all phases of London life, and the whole is under the editorship of Mr. George R. Sims. The first sixpenny monthly part contains his general introduction, and among other interesting matter a chapter by Mr. W. Pett Ridge, called "London Awakes": a sketch of London barrack life, by Major Arthur Griffiths; "Marrying London," by Mrs. Belloc-Lowndes; and "At the Front Door," by Mr. Sims. The illustrations, whether photographic or manual, are excellent.

"The revival of Church Needlework, and its consequent use in most of the churches of our land—a revival largely brought about by the effect of the Oxford Movement, and one which has grown with our Church growth—has brought strongly to the fore, in this our twentieth century, the need of a plain, practical handbook." In English Church Needlework Mrs. Maud R. Hall has endeavoured to supply the need she describes. Mr. Grant Richards has given her a broad page, excellent type, and a great many delicate illustrations. There is little doubt that the book will be useful, "in this our twentieth century." We hope that our proprietorship in the twentieth century may now be considered as a fact which does not call for further statement.

The Heart of Midlothian, in two volumes, can now be ranged with the other Waverley novels issued in their "Edinburgh" edition by Messrs. Jack. The frontispiece portraits are those of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich, and Queen Caroline.

To Messrs. Horace Marshall's series of "Present Day Preachers" are added The Soul's Ascent, by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, and The Trinity, by the Rev. R. F. Horton. These volumes are handsomely produced, and should please at least two congregations.

The Religious Tract Society has issued "in permanent library form," without illustrations, the late Dr. Creighton's well-known work, The Story of Some English Shires. The édition de luxe and the illustrated quarto in which the book first appeared were sold out immediately after publication.

Digitized by Google

Fiction.

"My First Book."

The Potter and the Clay. By Maud Howard Peterson. (Hodder. 6s.)

The Work of His Hands. By Chris Healy. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

In pursuance of our custom of dealing specially, from time to time, with the work of quite new novelists, we now venture to examine the achievement and the promise of Miss Peterson and Mr. Healy. The lady's book has been put forward by its sponsors as a novel likely to create an impression—in other words, likely to sell. We think the prophecy will be justified. The Potter and the Clay shows but little sign of the beginner's hand. It is the production of a craftswoman who has not practised on a long-suffering public, but who has learned or divined the secrets of her trade before sending anything to market. In merely technical respects, The Potter and the Clay is good. Miss Peterson has set out to be a popular writer, and, unless something abnormal happens, a popular writer she will be. She is destined for success. But her book cannot be praised for its artistic excellence. She calls it "a romance of to-day." It is a romance of the "Never-was-and-never-will-be"—a narrative of those wonderful and pleasing events that occur in the wonderful and pleasing universe of fiction—and there only. It begins with two small boys and a smaller girl, who steal a boat and go out to sea. It was inevitable that the oars should be lost; the oars are lost. It was inevitable that a storm should arise; a storm does arise. It was inevitable that that one or both of the boys by some heroic action should save the girl. By an ingenious arrangement, Miss Peterson makes A save the girl from a watery grave, and B save her from the effects of a pneumonia which has baffled a skilled doctor. It was inevitable that both boys should fall violently in love with that particular girl; this also happens. Adolescent, both boys find themselves on the same station in India. A is appointed to a dangerous enterprise; lest he may die and lose his beloved, he shoots himself in the hand so that he cannot go. B has to go in his stead; B is wounded but recovers, and the girl returns B's passion. A in self-disgust leaves the army. Morally, he is ruined. It is inevitable that he should die; in real life he would take to drink, and live to advanced middle age; but in fiction he must die young, for, after all, he is a sympathetic character. When cholera breaks out in India, he flies thither to fight the plague. This is his way of suicide, and it is effective.

The Potter and the Clay is a novel wherein ladies remark: "We are all alike—we women, be we American or English"; wherein boys of fourteen plead thus to be let into the house where a sick girl lies—"You couldn't slip me in, somehow? I'd stay downstairs, and I'd be awfully quiet, and I wouldn't trouble a soul. There might be errands, I'd like to be near her"; wherein the heroine, not pretty, is possessed of that well-tried attribute, "an indefinable magnetism"; wherein the lover says to his lass: "Do you know what it is to hold a man's soul in your hands?" and writes to her: "I love you more than an English officer should"; and, lastly, wherein the lover and his lass "felt the tide creeping around their feet, and it came up almost to the woman's knees"—we know the rest.

There is no trace of originality, either of imagination or of observation, in the entire book. But it is a very neat concoction; homogeneous throughout, and true to the immutable laws of the fiction universe, except at the critical "situation" where A, torn betwixt love and duty, shoots his hand. A would never have done that. We congratulate Miss Peterson on her immediate and certain prospect of popularity.

Mr. Healy's book is inferior. Mr. Healy makes the mistake of inveighing against the flagrant injustice of the real universe, while reciting events of the fiction universe. His hero is one of our very oldest friends—the "tall, well-built fellow, with raven black hair and dark, dreamy eyes, which were changeful in expression as an April sky, one moment gleaming with sunshine and laughter, the next clouded with shadowy melancholy." Alas! the "humorous mouth had a cynical curve." Alas! "the strong, stubborn jaw betrayed a fierce obstinacy, which brooked no obstacle to even a passing whim." Our old friend invariably plays the fiddle. For Mr. Healy he kindly "dashed into the wild, pathetic Funeral March of Chopin"—an extraordinary feat: and even more extraordinary that his instrument, the violin, "rang like a trumpet. . . . As the last echo died away, a yell of applause followed." Certainly it did. Our old friend invariably gets into trouble with a woman—often with several. Here, the first of them "was dressed in a soft, white, clinging gown, not unlike the Greek drapery which . . . Phidian Pallas." Just so, and always so! Mr. Healy's account of the costume is exact. The tale is really concerned with the dreamy-eyed fiddler's relations with his women (one of whom he regrettably seduced); but Mr. Healy seems to have tried to give it a socialistic significance. In this attempt he stultifies himself, and injures the chance of popularity. But he has a fluent pen, a rare grasp of the fiction universe, and there is no apparent reason why, if he avoids "views" of a Hyde Park tinge, and sticks to sentimentality, he should not soon "arrive" somewhat in the brilliant manner of Miss Peterson.

The Triumph of Hilary Blachland. By Bertram Mitford. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

Mr. Mitford takes us to South Africa again, and introduces us to English settlers and that remarkable monarch Lo Bengula. The book is distinctly above the average of its kind, for, although it is full of apparent improbabilities, they are such as not infrequently occur in such communities; also, the people are alive, particularly the worthless woman who drifts from protector to protector. One episode—Blachland's visit to the grave of Umzilikazi, which is protected by the king's snake—is rather dragged in by the heels, for nothing comes of it, not even much of a thrill to the reader. There is another incident, the threadbare one of the rescue of a man by a friend whom he has wronged, which, although deftly enough managed, is too commonplace for fiction of this kind. Otherwise we like the book; it has a frank, natural air about it which is distinctly pleasing; we do not even find ourselves annoyed by the queer English which Mr. Mitford sometimes writes. Perhaps if it were more perfect in manner, the matter would strike us as less convincing.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

Tales of Dunstable Weir. By "Zack."

Seven dialect stories by the author of Life is Life. They are written in the first person by a native, and are concerned with the homely, shrewd men and women of the soil with whom Miss Keats is in strong sympathy. The dialect runs through all the stories. "'Why don't 'ee pake droo, Noll Oliver,' her asked, 'the zame as you've been wont to these five years and more.'" (Methuen. 6s.)

The Embarrassing Orphan. By W. E. Norris.

Another of Mr. Norris's leisurely upper-class domestic stories. The scene is laid in London, at Windsor, at Dartmouth, and on an island in the Mediterranean. The story is told by an elderly gentleman, who finds himself, somewhat against his will, in the position of guardian to an orphan.

Digitized by Google

"What strikes me most forcibly," says the elderly narrator, "is the very scanty recognition which has been accorded to my part in the little domestic drama of which I am about to treat." (Methuen. 6s.)

THE CAVALIER. BY G. W. CABLE.

Mr. Cable fought in the American Civil War, and in this novel he goes back to those stirring days. "Our camp was in the heart of the Copiah country, Mississippi. . . . Austin's brigade we were, a detached body of mixed Louisiana and Mississippi cavalry, getting our breath again after two weeks' hard fighting of Grant. . . . We had paused to recuperate our animals, and there was a rumour that we were to get new clothing." (Murray. 6s.)

D'RI AND I. BY IRVING BACHELOR.

By the author of Eben Holden. The sub-title is "A Tale of Daring Deeds in the Second War with the British," and the purpose of the tale "is to extend acquaintance with the plain people who sweat and bled and limped and died for this Republic of ours. Darius, or 'D'ri,' as the woods folk called him, was a pure-bred Yankee, quaint, rugged, wise, truthful; Ramon had the hardy traits of a Puritan father, softened by the more romantic temperament of a French mother. They had no more love of fighting than they had need of it." (Richards. 6s.)

GILLETTE'S MARRIAGE. BY MAMIE BOWLES.

The history of an unsuccessful marriage. The man was poor, something of an invalid, and without any trace of nobility of character. He loved one woman; but, as she possessed but few of the world's goods, he married Gillette. The result is misery. The method of escape from the misery is original. The unhappy wife is excellently drawn; indeed, the characterisation is good throughout, which was to be expected from the author of Charlotte Leyland. (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE OLD KNOWLEDGE. BY STEPHEN GWYNN.

Mr. Gwynn's second novel. The "old knowledge" may be described as the folk-beliefs of the peasants of Donegal, where the scene is laid. Thither goes an English girl to live alone in a cottage. Two men fall in love with her, one being "a peasant, but a man of rare gifts, a visionary, who paints his own visions." "Is it so hard to be alone?" she said. "Before I knew you—were you unhappy?" "I was happy," he answered, "like the cattle in the fields." (Macmillan. 6s.)

A FOOL'S YEAR. BY E. H. COOPER.

The sporting author of Mr. Blake of Newmarket once more takes us to the turf. We open the book at random, and such phrases as "The Duke of Dorset's colt," the "Two Thousand Guineas," "beating the favourite by two lengths," catch the eye. The chief characters are an American owner of racehorses in England, who cannot understand that he may not bribe English jockeys, and a penniless young Englishman, who first accepts a large bribe to be silent about one of these transactions, and then repents and confesses. (Methuen. 6s.)

THE GLOWWORM. BY MAY BATEMAN.

. . . "Whose glowworm light, which points the way, suffices." A study of the development of a woman's character from childhood till she meets death (it was necessary) at the hands of an old lover. The incidents of Asenath's life are her career as a successful novelist, and her unsuccessful marriage. The military element is strong. Her husband, her old lover, her father, were soldiers. "The incident of the march to Myitu," we are told in a note, "is drawn from life, merely because real acts of valour invariably surpass those of imagination." (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE WEALTH OF MALLERSTANG. BY ALGERNON GISSING.

"An Upland Tale" of north-country people. It opens well with the ride of Mr. Thorpe from York to Carlisle. He "always rode on horseback by the dales instead of taking the coach." As Mr. Thorpe was preparing to start a parcel was placed in his hands. "The string was cut, and a quarto volume unfolded, bound in grey cardboard, with rough untrimmed edges to the pages and a snow-white label on the back. The title was Marmion, a Tale of Flodden Field, in six cantos, by Walter Scott." (Chatto. 6s.)

IN SPITE OF ALL. BY EDNA LYALL.

Historical. "It was in the spring of 1640, just when King Charles had dissolved the Short Parliament, after its three weeks' existence, that Hilary made a discovery." At the end of this long and conscientious novel Miss Lyall gives a list of the books to which she is indebted. For example: "For the sketch of Lord Falkland's character the books were Gardiner's History of the Great Civil War, Tulloch's Rational Theology in the Seventeenth Century, History of the Falklands, Falkland's Discourse on Infallibility," &c., &c. (Hurst & Blacket. 6s.)

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS.

Told by himself, and dedicated to "all who love." We extract a few sentences from the "Proem": "I had never sought for money, unless it were to dower the loved one." . . . "For years my life had been romance—real romance, in the midst of the work-a-day nineteenth century. . ." "If after reflection I have penned my narrative in the form of a novel, it is because at the present time a novel has at least a chance of being read. . . ." On the cover struts a young woman in a picture hat and a zebra-striped dress. (Chatto. 6s.)

A MAN OF DEVON. BY JOHN SINJOHN.

It might have been as well to state that this volume contains four stories. "A Man from Devon" fills 108 pages. The other stories are called "The Salvation of Swithin Forsyte," "The Silence," and "A Knight," which opens at Monte Carlo. (Blackwood. 6s.)

MR. ELLIOTT. BY J. O. FORD.

The cover shows three factory chimneys emitting clouds of dense smoke, and the story tells of life in and around a manufacturing town. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott had risen in the world, but they still "belonged to that section of society which never lights the drawing-room fire in the morning, not from intelligible reasons of economy, but because the possession of a best parlour is indispensable to happiness." A strike forms a central incident of the story. (Arnold. 6s.)

THE AMBASSADOR'S ADVENTURE. BY ALLEN UPWARD.

Here, as in Secrets of the Courts of Europe, Mr. Upward is the intimate of ambassadors and such people. The present sensational but not overwritten work, which may be popular with the younger generation, tells of "an underground struggle, in which a romantic part was played by some personages of European importance." (Cassell. 6s.)

We have also received: Antonia, by Jessie Van Zile Belden (Murray); The Greatest of These, by Helen Wallace (Hodder, 6s.); Reversed on Appeal, by John Ross (Kegan Paul, 6s.); The Bettaley Jewels, by E. M. C. Balfour-Browne (Arnold, 6s.); The Comedy of a Suburban Chapel, by J. F. Causton (Hutchinson, 6s.); Willowdene Will, by Halliwell Sutcliffe (Pearson, 6s.); Dross, by Harold Tremayne (Treharne, 6s.); Anne Scarlet, by W. Imlay Taylor (McClurg & Co.); Maggie McLanehan, by Gulielma Zollinger (McClurg & Co.); The Lovely Mrs. Pemberton, by Florence Warden (John Long, 6s.); The Real Christian, by Lucas Cleeve (Long, 6s.); In the Blood, by W. S. Walker (Long, 6s.).

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

Words: Some True and False Uses.

THESE are days in which words are being put to an infinite number of small and momentary uses, but are being poured into few great literary moulds. The wear and tear of the language is serious, and it behoves us to repair all ravages and errors with the diligence of spiders. Fortunately, there are willing minds for such work. Books having for their aim the rectification of speech have been common of late years, and have rarely escaped attention. One such is before us. In Word and Phrase: True and False Use in English (McClurg, Chicago), Mr. Joseph Fitzgerald essays, not without ability, to set the scribbler right. Mr. Fitzgerald's formal qualifications are less important than those which declare themselves in his well-wrought pages, but he tells us that the words and misuses of words with which he deals suggested themselves to him "during the years that he was assistant editor of the North American Review and Forum." Oddly enough, in stating this qualification, Mr. Fitzgerald himself falls—as we think—into verbal error, such error as any practised writer may not hope to avoid entirely. "The years that he was assistant editor." What of the "that" in this phrase? We do not think that it can be made to do duty for "when," "in which," or "during which." It is a small matter, and we only mention it to show that in this department of sin, as in others more serious, the serpent is more subtil than any beast of the field. The best of us may fall, and we do.

For this very reason, and because our space suggests it, we shall confine ourselves to Mr. Fitzgerald's chapter on "Ignorantisms in Words and Phrases." By ignorantisms Mr. Fitzgerald means the solecisms of persons who are presumed to be educated, and not the vulgarisms of the uneducated. Surely the two designations might be interchanged with a gain rather than a loss of appropriateness. The mistakes which Mr. Fitzgerald proceeds to point out are of the nature of lapses, and seem more allied to vulgarisms than to ignorance. But there, Mr. Fitzgerald does excellent service, and we shall run through his more interesting criticisms with a light pen.

We are glad that he condemns the quite incorrect word caption, used, as it frequently is in American papers, in the sense of heading or title. A New York paper was good enough to congratulate us recently on an article in which it said the writer had maintained the promise held out in his ingenious "caption." The word caption has nothing to do with caput or capitulum, but is a derivation of captio, meaning to seize. It carries a secondary meaning of seizure by fraud or deceit, as when Lord Bacon wrote in the Advancement of Learning: "It is manifest that the use of this doctrine is for caption and contradiction." Yet in America they talk of the caption of Genesis I., or of an article under the caption of "A New Force in Politics." And dictionaries calmly record this meaning without protest. It cannot, however, be too clearly understood that a dictionary is no infallible court of appeal in such matters. Most dictionaries record all meanings as they find them, good and bad. Nor is a standard author the umpire in a question of the use or misuse of a word. The public mind is quite at sea in its methods of solving such doubts. A man has written a word or phrase of which the correctness is disputed. To defend himself he flies to the dictionary, and shows you with triumph the definition he has adopted. You refuse the appeal, and he rushes to Shakespeare or Addison, and again returns in a triumphant, not to say scornful, mood. But his defence is not necessarily good, even now. The appeal to logic is higher, and even then there is the appeal to taste—the taste not of past ages, but of the age we live in. We are no more to take a bad phrase from Shakespeare than we are to eat our food with our fingers, as probably Shakespeare did. His sanction for the misuse of a decent word is no more valid than his sanction for the correct use of an obscene word.

Taking Mr. Fitzgerald's little homilies as they come, we approve his remarks on the word tantalize, which does not mean, as many seem to think, to tease or worry in any and every way, but only by presenting something that is desired and then frustrating the attempt to possess it. The word is a crystallisation of the story of Tantalus, who perished of hunger, with fruit hung just above him, and of thirst, with water round his neck. The word is correctly used by Dryden in

> Thy vain desires, at strife
> Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life.

And by Thackeray in Vanity Fair:

> The major was going on in his tantalizing way, not proposing, and declining to fall in love.

The distinction between trivial and trifling is often lost. Trivial is an abstract quality. A book may be trivial, its sales trifling. The word fruition has for a long time been losing its special and delicate meaning by being employed to denote fruit, fruitage, or the process of bearing fruit. "When the scheme comes to fruition" is a common phrase which ought not to pass. Mr. Plowden used the word rightly the other day when a man pleaded that he had got drunk because he had just obtained work which he was anxious to take up immediately. He had laid bricks, he said, since he was a child, and wished to go to work. Mr. Plowden humorously told him to go and lay bricks as fast as he could; he would not stand between him and the fruition of his dearest hopes. Here fruition means the enjoyment of fruit. In like manner Sir Thomas Browne wrote: "Let the fruition of things bless the possession of them." It is perhaps unnecessary to gird again at the use of the word phenomenon in the meaning of something remarkable. A phenomenon is simply an appearance, or a condition realised by the senses. Mr. Fitzgerald suggests the following explanation of the original perversion of this word:

> One can hardly be in error in tracing the vulgar meaning of the word to the lecture hall in which the man of science, or the populariser of scientific knowledge, would announce beforehand one of his experiments by saying: "The phenomenon you are now to see," &c.; and as the ignorant audience would the next moment see some striking effects of mixture of chemicals, or some strange electrical action, they would naturally suppose that "phenomenon" meant "scientific miracle." Some good writers have employed the word in this vulgar sense; but that, fortunately, has not availed to consecrate the vulgar usage.

The word refer is being overworked, and in many cases should be relieved by words like mention, recite, tell, or recount. Moreover, both refer and allude are frequently employed when the conditions under which they are admissible have been altogether overshot. Thus, if in a business letter or agreement a house or horse is fully described, and is the very subject of the agreement, it becomes wrong to speak of it in a final clause as the house or horse "here referred to," since this word is properly applicable only to something which has received no more than a passing or incidental mention.

Digitized by Google

Extra is an abused word. People say extra good or extra cheap in order to intensify good and cheap. But extra has no such force. So far from intensifying a given condition, it denies it by indicating that the thing so described lies outside the sphere or quality named. Thus extra-judicial does not mean more than ordinarily judicial, as though a judge had dredged his conscience in giving an opinion, but outside of judicial, and therefore incapable of being judged at all in the prescribed way.

A grievous fault is the use of identify in a phrase like this: "He is identified with the anti-vaccination movement." A man can only identify himself with another man or set of men. He can identify himself with the opponents of vaccination, and even here the word carries a shade of meaning of its own, distinguishing the phrase from such a one as "he joined the opponents of vaccination."

One should not speak of high or low calibre, but, remembering the meaning of calibre, one should apply to it only such adjectives as great or small.

It is wrong to speak of a consensus of opinion. The word consensus itself means an agreement of thought, and should stand alone.

Misconceived uses of the verb "to place" are many. It should usually be reserved for cases in which an actual enclosing and conditioning place is contemplated. You may place a bust in a niche, or your son in a school. But you should not "place" your hand on your heart, or even bait in a trap. The words put and set seem to be shunned as vulgar, but, as Mr. Fitzgerald says, this notion is held only by people who suspect the respectability of little and big, for which they must always use small and large.

To foreshadow is not the same as to predict. One event may foreshadow another, or one condition another, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer cannot foreshadow a surplus. The word exhaustive is certainly the "wild exaggeration" which Mr. Fitzgerald calls it. Journalists will even write that So-and-so has an exhaustive knowledge of China—a country of which no thorough knowledge exists in a Western mind. On the hysterical use of the word tremendous Mr. Fitzgerald is interesting. He traces it to the frequent chanting in old funeral services of the "Dies Iræ," with its Rex tremendæ majestatis. Consternation is often misapplied. When Queen Victoria died it was reported that consternation reigned in Vienna. There was no consternation even at Osborne.

We think that Mr. Fitzgerald goes too far when he objects to the word co-respondent on the ground that inasmuch as the paramour of a wife charged with adultery is not legally a party to the case therefore there can be only one respondent, the wife. But the moral and actual position is such that the word is highly convenient if not inevitable. Mr. Fitzgerald suggests no substitute.

Did space permit we would consider a few words not dealt with by Mr. Fitzgerald—words which have been fashionable of late and therefore abused. For some reason the word insistent has been in great favour of recent years, but in nine cases out of ten it is used where recurrent or repeated would be the fit word. Strenuous is a late favourite, and is constantly doing unfair duty for diligent or energetic. Resurge is another pet word spoiled. All kinds of things "resurge" when they might just as well recur, or come back, or repeat themselves. The word should be used in connection with death, where death is distinctly indicated. It is too much forgotten that some words require other words as their companions. "Hark at the dead jokes resurging!" wrote Thackeray in the Roundabout Papers, but had he written "Hark at the old jokes resurging!" he would have been open to censure. The straining for effect is the underlying mischief in much English of the day which calls for rectification. It seems finer to write "adventure" than "venture" or "try," and so of a trivial matter you read: "I felt almost inclined to adventure the experiment," where the "ad," by the way, is not more redundant than the "almost." So, also, "perdurable," a word of which Stevenson was fond, is dragged in on inadequate occasions. This noble word should be kept for great things. Shakespeare, it is true, wrote "cables of perdurable toughness," but we should question this to-day. The better use is seen in Lowell's essay on Wordsworth: "Two things, perhaps, retain their freshness more perdurably than the rest—the return of Spring, and the more poignant utterances of the poets."

Things Seen.

Two Speakers.

It was a gathering of mild rebels. By rebels I do not mean those who would use fire and sword, rifle and bullet, to gain an end. Far from it. Indeed, these worn, dome-browed men, and women with bright, eager eyes and pale faces, were anti-violence, as they were anti-everything else. They were against the rough-trampling world and all its ways. Everything should be done differently, and they were constantly indicating the way. They did not spare themselves. Meetings, discussions, and manifestoes punctuated their strenuous lives. Before all else they were serious. You will find them throughout the country. They belong to no particular locality. They are the malcontents, derided by the contents, but going quietly on, sighing, protesting, theorising, and perhaps slowly drawing towards a goal.

At any rate, happiness is theirs, for they are constantly at work, and they have always more to do than they can accomplish. "You are happy; you are eager; you are interested." Such was my mental comment as I entered the small room where they were holding one of their periodical meetings of protest. The system of education in vogue at the present day was the subject, and as earnest speaker followed earnest speaker I learned that they were against examinations, against prizes, against punishment, and against home work.

Two of the speakers said things that stayed with me: memorabilia that came from the heart, that had been checked by the brain, and by the salutary experience of life. One was a man, the other was a woman. He said teaching was valueless unless the teacher believed in and loved what he taught. It was useless to try to slur doubts, to pretend admiration for what he found tedious. If the teacher finds pages of Shakespeare dull, and many pages are dull (he said), then the pupil must be told that they are dull, and his enthusiasm preserved for what is fine and great. The woman stood forth as the champion of Milton. Just think of it! A champion for Milton in a schoolroom in the twentieth century! She pleaded for him: it was touching. He had been the stand-by of her youth, as of her middle-age: the house built upon a rock, where so much else was shifting and tumbling. "His golden words, his golden words," she repeated. "They have such shades of meaning, and the subtlety of meaning always falls on the ear with a new surprise. I cannot say how much I owe to him. But now ——"

She paused. I felt the contagion of a real grief. But I was not prepared for her last sentence. "I asked a schoolfellow of my daughter's if she knew Milton. 'Oh, yes,' she answered; 'we have him for imposition.'"

The Shipwreck.

We rested on our oars and listened. There was no doubt about it. Somewhere there were children raising their voices in lamentation. "Somebody is being drowned," he said, and we put our backs into it, and the boat sped through the narrow dyke into the broad. There, on the right hand, just where the water-lilies fringe the rushes, lay a large family-boat immovable. Round it were scattered fragments of broken oars, and a quant-pole stood rigidly upright beside it. In the stern sat a mother pale with terror, who clasped as many of her offspring as she could gather into her arms, they howling dismally the while. But the strangest sight of all was the father leaping nimbly from thwart to thwart in his stockinged feet until the large boat rocked beneath his weight. "Here is a madman," whispered my companion; "he has broken those oars on the heads of his family, and now he is trying to drown those that remain." The man paused in his dancing, looked round, and saw us. Then he tied a handkerchief round a fragment of oar, and waved it wildly to attract our attention.

Digitized by Google

We rowed up to within speaking distance. "What is the matter?" I asked. "We were trying to get some water-lilies," he replied, "when we ran on to this mudbank, and we can't get off. I was trying to shake her off by jumping. I've broken both the sculls, and the quant-pole is stuck fast, as you see. I was just going to get out and push when I saw you." "Lucky you did not," said my companion; "the mud is ten feet deep, and you would have gone right down to the bottom. You had better all get into our boat, and we'll tow yours off." So the seven children and the mother were handed over into our boat, the man got in with his boots in his hand, and we towed his boat off the mud and into the channel. Then we put them all back, lent them a pair of sculls, and watched them splash away for home.

But in the place where they had been a quant-pole, rigidly upright, kept watch over some fragments of broken oars.

Does Rhyme Connect Ideas?

Few languages are so poor in rhyme as the English language: the consequence is that certain rhymes and sets of rhymes recur continually in literature. At first sight it would appear as if such connections were governed wholly by chance, and as if it would require the greatest ingenuity to establish links between the alien ideas embodied in rhyming words. But, as a matter of fact, the most commonplace rhymes seem joined with a peculiar fitness—they are often the one the complement of the other—the abstract thought, perhaps, and its concrete symbol; and the question arises as to whether the ideas represented by these rhymes have coalesced simply by mutual contact, or whether some remote intellectual affinity in the beginning of things has brought them together.

Take a few examples. The number Seven governs the whole of the Revelation of St John. "The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." The book has seven seals, and the Lamb seven horns and seven eyes. Now "seven" is almost the only perfect rhyme for "heaven": and it is the mystical connection between seven and heaven that gives a spiritual beauty to the lines which tell of the Blessed Damosel "how the stars in her hair were seven," and of the holy St. Bride, how she was "sweet voiced amid the starry seven." Then, as an imperfect rhyme to "heaven" the appropriateness of "forgiven" is obvious at once.

The rhymes with which the word "God" is generally linked—"clod," "sod," and "rod"—give scope for many interesting speculations. Clod, the clay or mortality, and sod, the grave or death, find their connection in verse with "God," so that by their very earthiness they may point the more extreme contrast with the divine eternity and glory. Again, it is possible that the constant juxtaposition of "rod" and "God" in rhyme has helped to lay stress upon the sterner qualities of the Deity; and we do not hesitate to suggest that Puritanism—one of the most important and characteristic of our national traits—owes something of its strength to what in this case seems an accidental coincidence in sound. The constant occurrence of these rhymes, "God" and "rod," in hymns establishes a connection from which the mind can only with difficulty free itself.

The most curious example of unity in thought between rhymes occurs with reference to the words "love" and "dove." The dove is a symbol of both spiritual and sexual love: the Holy Spirit takes shape as a Dove; and Venus and her doves come down to us out of classical times. "Love" and "dove" are not therefore wedded by material bonds alone—they have concluded a true marriage of souls; and we can only suppose that the genius of the English language presided over the ceremony in a moment of unusual inspiration. For love, secular and divine, is the main theme of the poets; and the changes that can be rung upon its sounds are few.

To rhyme "love" with other than "dove" has the appearance of almost freakish ingenuity. Browning, that delighter in difficult ways, rhymes "love" with "clove":

> Flower o' the Clove
> All the Latin I construe is Amo, I love.

In our most ambitious attempt at an epic on domestic love we find "glove" very fittingly insisted on in connection with emotions that are circumscribed by upper middle-class surroundings. The Lady who is to become the Angel in the House wears a little lilac glove going to church; the Lover kisses the Lady's glove; and we hear of the Lover paying worship to a stolen glove. At the same time Coventry Patmore, in other of his works, has suggested a mystical bond of union between heavenly and earthly love; and no doubt he would be the first to acknowledge significance in the fact that the symbol for both is the same. "Move," "prove," and "grove" are brought with more or less success by various writers into touch with "love." Recently, Dante Gabriel Rossetti and Swinburne have used "thereof," and phrases ending with "of," in happiest conjunction with "love." It is noticeable that many of Dante Gabriel Rossetti's lines gain an haunting originality by his employment of very simple words at the close, not perfect rhymes, and, therefore, holding the music of a new combination.

But, if ingenuity is demanded in seeking rhymes for "love" outside "dove," it requires at least an equal ingenuity to find fresh points of contact between "love" and "dove." This novelty is not so much sought after by the writers of sacred poems, who are willing to trust to the original force of the symbol for their effect. Thus Christina Rossetti writes in her poems addressed to heavenly love: "Brood over me with yearnings of a dove"—and, again, very finely: "Make me a nest for dwelling of thy Dove." It is unnecessary to point out how aptly the word "above" matches with divine love.

When we come to the poems of secular love, we see that the poets have used all manner of invention within the limits of their rhyme. Doves are, of course, introduced in connection with most of the allusions to Venus. Thus William Morris:

> For o'er the daïs Venus fair
> Fluttered about by many a dove
> Make hopeless men for hopeless love
> Both sick and sorry.

Swinburne tells us that Queen Venus' raiment was painted with "Red mouths of maidens, and red feet of doves." No doubt the classical conception animates Coventry Patmore's tortuous quatrain:

> Love kiss'd by Wisdom wakes twice Love,
> And Wisdom is, through loving, wise.
> Let Dove and Snake, and Snake and Dove
> This Wisdom's be, that Love's Device.

Digitized by Google

But the Dove is not only used to personify Love or her attendants; it stands constantly in poetry as a symbol of the one loved. And at this point we seem to reach a juxtaposition originally of convenience, which has, however, made good its association of ideas. We read in the Sonnets from the Portuguese:

> Alas, I have grieved, so I am hard to love.
> Yet love me—wilt thou? open thy heart wide
> And fold within the wet wings of thy dove.

Endymion says to Peona:

> Thou art as a dove
> Trembling its closed eyes and sleeked wings
> About me.

Then there is the poor child in "In Memoriam" waiting for her love:

> Oh somewhere, meek, unconscious dove
> That sittest ranging golden hair . . .

Nor must we forget Mr. Francis Thompson's description of a lady:

> whose form is a grove
> Hush'd with the cooing of an unseen dove.

It is impossible even briefly to indicate all the allusions there are, in connection with human love, to the purity of the dove, to the mildness of the dove, to the "livelier iris" that "changes on the burnish'd dove." So universal had this association of ideas become that Shakespeare satirises the excessive use of this "sweet folly of the dove" in these lines of Thisbe's:

> Asleep, my love?—
> What dead, my dove?

and their influence has not been strong enough to prevent Mr. William Watson from writing:

> Hand within hand, my love,
> Heart within heart, my dove . . .

In conclusion, it will be seen that rhyme has far too long been regarded as a mere musical device. It is in point of fact one of the most potent instruments of language in establishing and rivetting association of ideas. Sometimes rhymes fall together with such exquisite appropriateness that we feel some great universal law must have governed their pairing: such unity of sound and idea are to be found in the perfect matching of "love" and "dove," in the admirable antithesis of "God" and "clod," and in the mystic connection of "seven" and "heaven." At other times alien conceptions are brought by rhyme into forcible juxtaposition, and an accidental association of ideas may be established, occasionally adventitious, as in the recently exploited rhymes of "mist" and "amethyst"; occasionally dangerous, as in the constant rhyming of "God" and "rod."

Of course, rhymes have to occur with a certain frequency before they are able to bend national thought to their sway: we have therefore only given our consideration to a few of the commonest rhymes. Most individuals will, however, acknowledge the potency of subtler rhyme-influences on their association of ideas. And when we realise that every nation has a set of rhyme-combinations absolutely peculiar to its own genius, it seems as if the differences in temperament between the nations may largely be due to the different thought-connections established by rhyme.

Correspondence.

Walter Pater.

SIR,—In your review of Pater's Essays from the Guardian in the ACADEMY of October 19 there is a remark with which admirers of this writer's books will cordially agree. I refer to your words which lay stress on the fact that Pater was much more than a stylist—that he was "primarily a thinker, concerned more with life than with literature, or with literature as the fullest and sincerest expression of life itself." It is allowable, I think, to go a step further than this, and say that Pater would confess that literature at its highest and its best has an inspiring influence; that it tends to make us live nobler lives than we could without its aid. One of his most successful books is the volume of Oxford lectures entitled Plato and Platonism. In one of these lectures he tells us that the study of the Platonic doctrine of ideas may promote in us ideals. To the careful, thoughtful reader Pater's own writings will not be found wanting in this respect. The spirit of the master rests upon the disciple.—I am, &c., H. P. WRIGHT.

Byrness, Otterburn, Northumberland.

"Joseph Khassan."

SIR,—Apropos the "Notes on Novels" in your last issue, in the course of which you quote the brief dedication of my new book, Joseph Khassan, may I be permitted to point out that the lines, as I wrote them, run as follows: "To a land of undying fascination, the home of a dying people, the author, who loves both, dedicates this book"? "Satisfaction" in place of "facination" makes nonsense of my dedication, to readers who know anything of Morocco (I wish with all my heart one might truthfully say that either word would serve), and so I venture to draw your attention to the misquotation.—I am, &c., A. J. DAWSON.

Croft, Crondall, Hants.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per ANNUM.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, and RUSSIAN BOOKS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.: 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

Digitized by Google

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE WORLD'S HISTORY,

A SURVEY OF MAN'S RECORD.

Edited by DR. H. F. HELMOLT.

With an Introductory Essay by the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.

To be completed in 8 super-royal octavo volumes. With many Maps, Coloured Plates, and Black and White Illustrations. Price, in cloth, 15s. net per volume, or in half-morocco, gilt edges, £1 1s. net per volume.

THE WORLD'S HISTORY

Presents the Story of Man and his Earth, not as it appeared to the Pagan or the Christian, to the highly-civilised Greek or the savage outer barbarian, to the monk who wrote history, or the Chinese chronicler, but as it was at the time when man first left a record of himself that has lasted down through every change and evolution till to-day, when for the first time he really is Master of the World.

Vol. I., PRE-HISTORY-AMERICA and the PACIFIC OCEAN, is Now Ready. With Portraits, Coloured Plates, Full-Page Plates, and Maps. Cloth, 15s. net; half-morocco, gilt edges, £1 1s. net.

A full and complete Prospectus will be sent on application, together with a Coloured Specimen Plate and Map. The First Volume may be obtained on approval.

ITALIAN JOURNEYS. By W. D. Howells With 12 Photogravures and 32 Full-Page and many Text Illustrations from Original Drawings specially made for this work by JOSEPH PENNELL. Pott 4to, 10s. net. Also 50 copies on Japanese vellum, price 42s net.

Uniform with the above.

A LITTLE TOUR in FRANCE. By Henry James. With 12 Photogravures, 32 Full-Page Engravings, and 40 Illustrations in the Text, reproductions from Original Drawings by JOSEPH PENNELL. Small 4to, 10s. net. Second Impression.

 Also a few copies on Japanese vellum, 42s. net.

THE LAST of the MASAI. By Sidney Langford HINDE, H.M. Collector, British East Africa Protectorate, and HILDEGARDE HINDE. With Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings. 1 vol., 15s. net.

The Daily News.—"At once humorous, fascinating, and pathetic. As captivating and bright for the ordinary reader as it will undoubtedly be invaluable to the anthropologist."

A VANISHED ARCADIA. By R. B. Cuninghame GRAHAM, Author of "Mogreb-el-Acksa," &c. 1 vol., 9s.

The Daily Chronicle.—"Like everything that Mr. Graham writes, the story is pervaded by his peculiar charm, and, above all by an abounding wit."

HYPOLYMPIA; or, the Gods in the Island. An Ironic Fantasy. By EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., 5s.

ESSAYS of an EX-LIBRARIAN. By Richard GARNETT, C.B., LL.D. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

The Globe.—"He is eminently fair and sympathetic, appreciative without gush, judicial without unnecessary censure."

FASHION in PARIS: the Various Phases of Feminine Taste and Æsthetics from the Revolution to the End of the Nineteenth Century. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With 24 Hand-coloured Plates and 200 Text Illustrations by FRANÇOIS COURBOIN. New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., 15s. net.

The World.—"It is a book for everybody. In addition to being a history of both male and female costumes for the past century, it affords interesting glimpses of the manners and customs of the people."

THE SOUL of a CAT. By Margaret Benson. With Photographs and Illustrations by Madame HENRIETTA RONNER. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

The Globe.—"A series of pleasant little studies of animal life, by one who loves and understands her subject. Miss Benson has not only observed carefully, she has observed with a fanciful and thoughtful eye."

FAIRY TALES. From the Swedish of Baron G. DJURKLOU. Translated by H. L. BRAEKSTAD. With Illustrations by T. KITTELSEN and ERIC WERENSKIOLD. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS AND STORIES.

THE RIGHT OF WAY.
By GILBERT PARKER, Author of "The Lane that had no Turning," &c.

THE ETERNAL CITY.
By HALL CAINE.

190,000 Copies sold in Great Britain and America up to the end of September

LOVE AND HIS MASK.
By MENIE MURIEL DOWIE.

SOME WOMEN I HAVE KNOWN.
By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

JOSEPH KHASSAN: Half-Caste.
By A. J. DAWSON, Author of "African Nights' Entertainment."

GILLETTE'S MARRIAGE.
By MAMIE BOWLES, Author of "The Amazing Lady."

THE GLOWWORM.
By MAY BATEMAN, Author of "The Altar of Life."

MR HEINEMANN'S Notes on some Forthcoming Books post free.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.

Globe 8vo, red cloth, 5s. per Volume.

A SELECTION OF

STANDARD WORKS IN PROSE AND POETRY

FROM ALL

PERIODS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

THE ACADEMY writes: "In truth, we can hardly imagine a pleasanter fate than to be locked for a year on some sunny island, with trees, a few friends, some food, and a stout wooden case containing the entire 'Eversley Series.'"

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.

CONTAINS 152 VOLUMES, AND PRACTICALLY FALLS INTO TWO MAIN DIVISIONS:

(1) STANDARD ENGLISH CLASSICS

SUCH AS

CHAUCER, 2 vols.
GRAY, 4 vols.
MILTON, 3 vols.
SHAKESPEARE, 10 vols.
LAMB, 7 vols.
WORDSWORTH, 12 vols.

(2) MODERN WRITERS,

SUCH AS

CHAS. KINGSLEY, 13 vols.
MATTHEW ARNOLD, 8 vols.
EMERSON, 6 vols.
HUXLEY, 9 vols.
R. H. HUTTON, 6 vols.
J. R. GREEN, 14 vols.
DEAN CHURCH, 10 vols.
JOHN MORLEY, 11 vols.
SIR R. JEBB, 1 vol.
SIR JOHN SEELEY, 5 vols.

A NEW COMPLETE LIST POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Digitized by Google

"Barbara West."

SIR,—I am sure your courtesy will permit me to correct a slip which, occurring in "Notes on Novels," not only makes nonsense of a quoted phrase, but, as chance would have it, misrepresents the point of view of my story, Barbara West. A printed note on the moral aim of the book, sent out, it seems, by the publisher, is made to speak of "Nature's just and kindly purpose" in the law of sex. It speaks of Nature's purpose as "great and kindly," not "just," which word is in this connection, unfortunately, a little ludicrous.
—I am, &c., KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN.
Leeds.

The Irish Brogue.

SIR,—Mr. Bartram's letter on the Irish brogue is so good—indeed, so admirable—that I hesitate to say one word that may seem in disagreement with his experience. But I think he will be interested to know that I did hear "completely" sounded "complately" in one of the first street ballads I ever heard (in Connaught). There was an ironic verse, which ran thus:

Ah, then Misther Whately,
Who came here lately,
He has complately
My heart trepanned;
Sure Julius Cæsar,
Or a Galway Blazer,
Or Naybuccodnaysur
Was not half as grand.

That, surely, is enough.—I am, &c.,
JOHN F. TAYLOR.
Devonshire Club, St. James's, S.W.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 109 (New Series).

LAST week our Competition was as follows:

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best critical plea for a poet, born since 1850, who is not dealt with by Mr. William Archer in his book, Poets of the Younger Generation.

In response we have received interesting "pleas" for the following poets:

Ada Smith,	Lewis Morrison Grant,
Norman Gale,	George Russell,
Constance Naden (2),	Olive Custance,
G. K. Chesterton (2),	Alfred Hayes,
Oscar Wilde,	Robert Bain,
Archibald Lampman,	Lord Alfred Douglas.

We award the prize to Mr. U. Sargent, Cattell-road, Small Heath, Birmingham, for the following:

MR. G. K. CHESTERTON.

In "The Wild Knight" Mr. Chesterton has shown himself a poet of sterling worth. He has a fine imagination (witness "The Holy of Holies"), a delicate fancy (witness "A Chord of Colour") and a lyrical gift equal to those which, combined with more conventional matter, have gained recognition for some contemporary poets. But the most striking thing about his work is that every poem is instinct with that joy in life which is the most poetical thing in the world. It is that abiding confidence in the life that now is which kept Stevenson happy—boisterously happy—through his long struggle with physical weakness. Other poets have thought the stars and the elements sympathetic to their melancholy, but to Mr. Chesterton

The stars are fresh and gay;
The world is a daring fancy,
And finished yesterday.

"Fresh" is old Chaucer's favourite and characteristic adjective, and I know no other poet since Chaucer (except Stevenson) who has so unreservedly declared that it is good to be alive. But his is not merely the exuberant optimism of the vigorous youth of a race, rather a self-conscious optimism, based on knowledge. He looks upon life up to date, sees it clearly and whole, and pronounces it emphatically good. The latest invention of yesterday has, for him, a share in the world's romance and poetry. In "King's Cross Station" and "The Lamp-Post" he celebrates the eternal romance and idealism that are in things regarded by most people as ridiculously commonplace.

Other replies are as follows:

ADA SMITH. B. 1875, D. 1898.

I would have this to be more of an appreciation than a plea. Ada Smith's death three years ago, together with the brief account of her career and the publication of some of her verses in the newspapers, affected me as none but that of a genuine poet could have done. In her poems I found an articulation of passion such as evoked in me a renewed impulsion of life. And so in the lyric mornings of early spring, when the frost-pearled grass sparkles in the brilliant sunshine, and the air is joyous with the song of birds, I think of the death-song of the Earth Lover:

Constrain me close, O Earth, in your dim house,
Draw bolts on sight and sound, make strong all bars,
For, O, when April days with the world carouse,
Drunk with sunlight or dumb with stars,
Should once the south-west wind blow past Death's door,
My sapless heart would leap and live once more.

And often in the autumn nights, out on the lone fell, in the strange silence, under the wide sky, my heart echoes her subdued questioning

If I might but understand
What the hueless twilight means,
And why, where the low sky leans
To the lonely-lying land,
Should be no comforting gleams,
But only the ancient woe
Of the strange, wild thing that screams
Above where the rushes grow.

.

And I on the vague moorland
Where the sky earthward leans,—
If I might but understand
What the hueless twilight means!

[H. R. S., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

LORD ALFRED DOUGLAS.

To write of "poets of the younger generation" and to omit the name of the gifted author of the ballad of "Perkin Warbeck" from the list is to have missed one of the sweetest voices in the throng. Lord Alfred Douglas has not published very much, but the small volume entitled "The City of the Soul" is a valued possession to those who care for real poetry—the poetry of life expressed in language that makes its own music. The mantle of Keats seems to have fallen on these young shoulders; the faults of Keats are the faults of this modern singer—a sweetness of utterance that almost cloys.

Almost—but not quite. It would be impossible for either poet to write an unmusical phrase, and there is always the thought behind, vigorous and clear, to temper the sensuousness of the melody. Of ballads, "The Ballad of Saint Vitus," "Perkin Warbeck," "Jonquil and Fleur-de-Lys" show what Lord Alfred Douglas can do with a stirring motive. Of his sonnets, the one written in memory of his brother's death in 1894, his sonnet "On the Sunset," and the one "To Sleep," are haunting in their beauty. Lyrics and songs seem to fall of themselves from his pen.

To quote much is impossible, but a stanza from the "City of the Soul"—that poem that stung all critics into admiration of its incomparable lines—may find room. The singer is questioning how his soul can "please the King," and the poem closes with the passionate cry:

Only to build one crystal barrier
Against this sea which beats upon our days;
To ransome one lost moment with a rhyme!
Or if fate cries and grudging gods demur,
To clutch Life's hair, and thrust one naked phrase,
Like a lean knife, between the ribs of Time.

[A. E., Oxford.]

Competition No. 110 (New Series).

IN view of the fact that we shall add a special Fiction Supplement to our issue of November 9, we ask our readers to send in the titles of the twelve novels published up to October 26th which they consider the best novels of the present year. To the sender of the list which most nearly answers to the general opinion, as determined by a plébiscite, we shall give a prize of One Guinea. All replies must reach us by next Wednesday.

RULES.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, October 30. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

FOURTH EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE HISTORY of SIR RICHARD CALMADY. By Lucas Malet, Author of "The Wages of Sin," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. A Limited Edition in 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

"The greatest work in fiction the New Century has seen. Good work, its foundation deeply set in human nature, its structure shapen by skilful hands. The supreme triumph of the artist."—Lunch.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE PROPHET of BERKELEY SQUARE. By Robert Hichens, Author of "Flames," "Tongues of Conscience," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD EDITION IN THE PRESS.

LIGHT FREIGHTS. By W. W. Jacobs, Author of "Many Cargoes." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"His wit and humour are perfectly irresistible. Mr. Jacobs writes of skippers and mates and seamen, and his crew are the jolliest lot that ever sailed."
"Laughter in every page."—Daily Mail. Daily News.

THE FORTUNE of CHRISTINA MACNAB. By S. MacNaughtan. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TALES of DUNSTABLE WEIR. By Zack, Author of "Life is Life." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE EMBARRASSING ORPHAN. By W. E. Norris. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A FOOL'S YEAR. By E. H. Cooper, Author of "Mr. Blake of Newmarket." Crown 8vo, 6s.

CLEMENTINA. By A. E. W. Mason, Author of "The Courtship of Morrice Buckler," "Miranda of the Balcony," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"'Clementina' is one of the best of Mr. Mason's romances. It is written in the true spirit of adventure; it holds the attention throughout."—Globe.
"A romance of the most delicate ingenuity and humour the very quintessence of romance."—Spectator.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE ALIEN. By F. F. Montresor, Author of "Into the Highways and Hedges." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Fresh, unconventional, and instinct with human sympathy."—Manchester Guardian.
"Miss Montresor creates her tragedy out of passions and necessities elementarily human. Perfect art."—Spectator.

ANGEL. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Peggy of the Bartons." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A most interesting and attractive book, marked throughout by vivacious and humorous touches."—Bristol Mercury.

A GALLANT QUAKER. By Mrs. M. H. Roberton. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

FORTUNE'S DARLING. By Walter Raymond, Author of "Love and Quiet Life." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A quaint and charming story."—Academy. | "Mr. Raymond's admirers will be delighted with this story."—Glasgow Herald.

THE DEVASTATORS. By Ada Cambridge, Author of "Path and Goal." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Powerful and suggestive."—Academy. | "A refreshing novel with an uncommon and delightful heroine."—World.

THE MILLION. By Dorothea Gerard, Author of "Lady Baby." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The whole scheme of the book is brilliantly conceived and dramatically executed."—Sunday Special.
"It is a powerful piece of writing, and in the intensity of its moral purpose the best the author has yet given us."—Morning Leader.

FROM the LAND of the SHAMROCK. By Jane Barlow, Author of "Irish Idylls." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Miss Barlow has the truth in her, and the people she describes are real people."—Morning Leader.
"A delightful volume."—Glasgow Herald. | "Poetic and pathetic."—Daily Telegraph.

THE YEAR ONE: a Page of the French Revolution. By J. Bloundelle-Burton, Author of "The Clash of Arms." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Vivid and picturesque."—Morning Advertiser.
"The historical background is painted in with no lack of strong colour, and the personages excite a ready interest."—Scotsman.

ROYAL GEORGIE. By S. Baring-Gould, Author of "Mehalah." With 8 Illustrations by D. Murray Smith. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book is one which will hold the reader's attention from start to finish. An excellent story."—Glasgow Herald.
"The group of strong characters arrest by their individuality and virility; the incidents are vivid and possible; the movement is dramatic; the conclusion satisfying."—Guardian.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

RICKERBY'S FOLLY. By Tom Gallon, Author of "Kiddy." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A good story, well told."—Glasgow Evening News. | "Very exciting."—Times.
"As absorbing a story as we have read for many a day."—Bristol Mercury. | "A clever book, not easily laid aside."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MASTER of MEN. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story stands quite worthy of its powerful title."—Glasgow Herald. | "A pleasant story, with dramatic situations."—Academy.
"It is quite a striking tale."—Star.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

THE LIFE of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. By Graham Balfour. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 25s. net.

Messrs. Methuen beg to announce that the First Large Edition of this book was exhausted before publication, and that the Second Edition is now ready.

THE ESSAYS of ELIA. By Charles Lamb. With 70 Illustrations by A. Garth Jones, and an Introduction by E. V. LUCAS. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

REGNUM DEI. The Bampton Lectures of 1901. By A. Robertson, D.D., Principal of King's College, London. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Shortly.

THE LIFE of FRANCOIS DE FENELON. By Viscount St. Cyres. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

PEACE or WAR in SOUTH AFRICA. By A. M. S. Methuen. With 2 Maps. Seventh Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s.; also demy 8vo, 3d. net. [Sixty-fifth Thousand.

A HISTORY of the POLICE in ENGLAND. By Captain Melville Lee. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE.

KING LEAR. Edited by W. J. Craig. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. With Introduction and Notes by R. B. Rackham, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. [OXFORD COMMENTARIES.

THE OLD TESTAMENT and the NEW SCHOLARSHIP. By J. W. Peters, D.D. Crown 8vo, 6s. [CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY.

ISAIAH. Edited by W. E. Barnes, D.D., Fellow of Peterhouse and Hulsean Professor of Divinity, Cambridge 2 vols., 2s. net each. Vol. I. [CHURCHMAN'S BIBLE.

THE LIFE of JOHN HOWARD. By E. C. S. Gibson, D.D., Vicar of Leeds. With 12 Illustrations, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; leather, 4s. net. [LITTLE BIOGRAPHIES.

THE CONVERSATIONS of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A., and JAMES WARD. Edited by Ernest Fletcher. With many Portraits. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH VILLAGES. By P. H. Ditchfield, M.A., F.S.A. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DEIRDRE WED, and other Poems. By Herbert Trench. Crown 8vo, 5s.

WOMEN and THEIR WORK. By the Hon. Mrs. Lyttelton. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOK GAZETTE and CATALOGUE will be sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand.

Digitized by Google

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch says: "Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."

Vanity Fair says: "An unusually able volume....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s

The People says: "A book to be read by men and women of the world."

The Western Morning News says: "As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s 6d

The Daily Chronicle says: "They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."

THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA Price 3s. 6d.

THE CASE of a MAN with his WIFE. By THEO. GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

LITTLE CHERIE. By Lady Florence DIXIE. Price 1s net. [Shilling Sporting Series.

REMINISCENCES of a GENTLEMAN HORSE DEALER. By HAROLD TREMAYNE 1s. net. [Shilling Sporting Series.

During NOVEMBER MESSRS. TREHERNE & CO., LTD., will publish the following Books:—

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

READY NOVEMBER 10th.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG.

Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'CONNOR, JUSTIN MCCARTHY, FRANK T. BULLEN, HERMAN MERIVALE, LADY BANCROFT, ADRIAN ROSS, SIR WM. INGRAM, BART., &c., &c. Price 1s.

READY DURING NOVEMBER.

TWO BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

By CICELY FULCHER.

Price 3s 6d. each.

BEHIND THE WAINSCOT. Illustrated.

UNCLE HARRY'S GATE. Illustrated.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LIMITED, 3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 1033.—NOVEMBER, 1901.—2s. 6d.

NIGHT. By "LINESMAN."—ON THE HIRE SYSTEM: A DRAWING-ROOM COMEDY. By L. LOCKHART LANG.—THREE BIOGRAPHIES: ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON—SIR GERALD GRAHAM—SIR ROBERT MURDOCH SMITH.—THE WESTCOTES. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH. CHAPS. IV.-VI.—A LEGEND OF TRINCOMALEE. By A. S. MOSS BLUNDELL.—A VILLAGE IN THE NEW FOREST. By CHARLES GLEIG.—THE CONQUEST OF CHARLOTTE. CHAPS. XI., XII.—LIFE IN LABRADOR. By W. T. GRENFELL.—WITH THE FLEET AT DELAGOA BAY. MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD: THE NEED OF EFFICIENCY—THE PRESS AND THE ARMY—SIR REDVERS CONDEMNED IN DESPATCHES—THE EVIDENCE OF HIS OWN SPEECH—GOVERNMENT MORE BLAMEWORTHY THAN THE GENERAL—THE NEW TRANSLATION OF TOLSTOI.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL PRICE ONE SHILLING.

"PATRICIA AT THE INN."

By J. C. SNAITH, Author of "Mistress Dorothy Marvin."

The present issue is the Twenty-first consecutive appearance of this popular Annual.

SONNETS. By RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin. This short selection of Sonnets has been made and designed by ALICE JOSEPHINE ROMILLY. Fcap. 4to, Art Paper, One Shilling.

THE GOOD RED EARTH. By EDEN PHILLPOTTS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "This is the best story he has written."—The Times.

IMPERTINENT DIALOGUES. By COSMO HAMILTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "Light and brisk."—Literature. "Clever and brilliant."—Review of the Week.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH, London: [SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co.

AN OFFER of £5 5s.—Owing to the large amount of curiosity as to the Authorship of "A SPORTSWOMAN'S LOVE-LETTERS," the Publishers have decided to offer the sum of Five Guineas to anyone who can discover the Author's name. To enable this to be done, the book must be carefully read. Full particulars, with conditions, will be found inside the book (or can be had post free on application), which will be ready at all Booksellers' and at the Publishers', on November 7th. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.; postage, 6d — R. A. EVERETT & Co., Publishers, 42, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE MOST VALUABLE BOOK of the SEASON, regarded from a strictly literary standpoint, is the Handsomely BOUND VOLUME of the Poems published in "THE THRUSH." Price 6s. net.

"The Thrush."

A BOOK OF ORIGINAL POEMS.

Edited by T. MULLETT ELLIS.

Inspired by several important Public Events, and containing also many works of beauty and imagination by the undermentioned and other Authors, mostly writers of eminent reputation:—

L. Alma-Tadema, Sir Wyke Bayliss, K.B., Francis Prevost Battersby, Harold Begbie, A. C. Benson, M.A., Clifton Bingham, Hon. Albinia Brodrick, Rev. W. J. Dawson, Lady Florence Douglas, T. Mullett Ellis, Norman Gale, Dr. Richard Garnett, C.B., Lady Rosa Gilbert, N. Carruthers Gould, W. E. Henley, Nora Hopper Keble Howard, The First Lord Lytton, Sir Lewis Morris, M.A., Louise Chandler Moulton, Dr. Gilbert Murray, M.A., Victor Plarr, M.A., Lady Margaret Sackville, Arthur Symons, E. Tindall-Atkinson, C. Whitworth Wynne.

£10. For particulars of the Prize Poem Competition, see "THE THRUSH" for NOVEMBER, price Fourpence Monthly. First Prize, Ten Pounds sterling. Six Prizes. Sole Judge: MR. MACKENZIE BELL.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.

CHEAP EDITION.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

SOMERLEY. Schoolboy and Undergraduate. By GILBERT SWIFT.

"Written with the brightness and good spirits of youth, and its irresponsible playfulness will scarcely fail to please anyone who can appreciate its hits at undergraduate nature."—Scotsman.

"A book to be read through at a sitting. The Cambridge scenes are particularly well drawn."

Illustrated London News.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months and 12 Months

CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON ARE NOW in CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand Surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE (Second Hand). Also a large Selection of

BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS

SUITABLE FOR

BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

From the Sunday School Union's NEW LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At 1s. 6d.

THE CAPTAIN'S FAGS: A School Story. By W. E. CULE, Author of "Barfield's Blazer," &c. Illustrated.

INTO STORMY WATERS: A Story for Girls. By Mrs. HENRY CLARKE, M.A., Author of "A High-School Girl," &c.

At 1s.

"RED NURSERY" SERIES.

Small 4to, boards, illuminated sides.

NEW VOLUMES JUST ADDED.

THE NEW PLAYFELLOW By Gertrude E. M. VAUGHAN. Profusely Illustrated.

STORIES from the PILGRIM'S PROGRESS Arranged by E. A. MACDONALD. With numerous new Illustrations by James R. Sinclair.

YOUNG ENGLAND A Splendid Gift-Book for Boys. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth extra, bevelled boards, 5s. Two Serial Stories, "The Emperor's Trumpeter," by Albert Lee, and "The Young Reporter," by William Drysdale. Stories of Life at the Great Public Schools by the Rev. E. E. Bradford, M.A. (Oxon). Illustrated Papers on a Boy's Workshop, by George P. Mooo. Talks with Boys, by the Rev. E. C. Dawson, M.A. (Oxon). "Hearts of Oak"; Stories of Naval Heroism and Devotion. Papers dealing with the Birds, Animals and Insects of our Islands. Biographical Sketches of Men worth emulating. Sketches and Stories of Life in Our Colonies. Stories of exciting Adventure, by David Ker, Charles Edwardes, Argyll Saxby, K. M. Eady, George Gale Thomas. Stories of School Life and Sports, by W. E. Cule, B. M. Aitken, Harold Avery, &c.

THE CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE Sixty-eighth Annual Volume. Full of charming Stories, Poems, &c. Profusely Illustrated. Serial Story by Mary E. Murray, entitled "The Wonderful Castle," illustrated by Rosa C. Petherick. A new feature. Series of composite Scripture Pictures by M. Ayoub, illustrating the International Bible Lessons for the Year. "Comical Birds, Beasts, and Fishes," illustrated by T. W. Culdery. Besides these, there is an abundance of Stories and Sketches, and verses suitable for Juvenile recitations, clever pictorial puzzles, &c., &c. Paper boards, 1s.; cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

At 1s.

"SPLENDID LIVES" SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards. NEW VOLUME JUST ADDED.

THE STORY of CATHERINE of SIENA. By FLORENCE WITTS, Author of "Frances Willard," &c.

At 1s.

HOW to be WELL and STRONG. Boy's Book of Health. By WALTER N. EDWARDS, F.C.S. Cloth boards.

NEWTON JONES: his Life-Story and Service for Christ. By the Rev. J. MILLER HAMILTON. Cloth boards.

At 9d.

GEORDIE'S VICTORY. By Margaret S. HAYCRAFT. With Illustrations. Cloth boards.

MARLEY'S BOY. By Jennie Chappell. Illustrated by Harold Copping. Cloth boards.

At 6d. Net.

NEW BOOKLET BY J. R. MILLER, D.D.

THE SHINING HOPE Charmingly Illustrated by Scott Rankin. White leatherette, gilt top.

From Mr. Melrose's New List.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At 3s. 6d.

HOW to PROMOTE and CONDUCT a SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL. By R. A. TORREY, Author of "What the Bible Teaches," &c. &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards.

ROYAL MANHOOD. By James I. Vance, D.D., Author of "The Young Man Four Square." Imp. 16mo, cloth boards.

156 CHILDREN'S SERMONS. For Ministers, Sunday School Teachers, and others. By Prof. AMOS R. WELLS, Author of "Sunday School Success." Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

NOTABLE MASTERS of MEN; Modern Examples of Successful Lives. By EDWIN A. PRATT. Imp. 16mo, cloth boards.

At 2s. 6d. net.

THIRD EDITION. NOW READY.

HENRY DRUMMOND: a Biographical Sketch (with Bibliography). By "CUTHBERT LENNON." With Portraits and a fine Drawing by Scott Rankin. Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

At 1s. 6d.

PRAYER: its Nature and Scope. By H. CLAY TRUMBULL. Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

At 1s. net.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY: the Story of His Life. By DAVID WILLIAMSON, Author of "Gladstone, the Man." With Illustrations.

At 2s. 6d.

"BOOKS FOR THE HEART."

Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top.

NEW VOLUME.

THE CHRISTIAN'S GREAT INTEREST. By WILLIAM GUTHRIE. With an Introductory Essay by Rev. ALEXANDER SMELLIE, M.A.

Booklet at 6d.

A CALL to ARMS: Address to Young Men and Upper Form Boys. By HORACE G. GROSER. Fcap. 8vo, blue leatherette, gilt top.

Price 7s. 6d.

BOYS of OUR EMPIRE. Amongst all the Boys' "Annuals" this is the best, as it is the newest. It contains: Five Serial Stories—"The Lone Star Rush," by Edmund Mitchell; "Contraband of War," by B. Aitken; "Cap'n Nat's Treasure," by Robert Leighton; "Chisholm's Chums," a School Story; and "The Secret of the Wondergat," by Ridgewell Cullum and Charles Wingrove. Fifty-two Articles on the leading Athletic Record Holders, &c., illustrated by well-known Artists. "How to Make": a Series of Articles on Carpentry, Modelling, Fretwork, &c., &c.

London: ANDREW MELROSE, 16, Pilgrim Street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION

OF

Chambers's Cyclopædia

OF

English Literature.

In Three Handsome Volumes, imperial 8vo, 10s 6d. each net.

VOLUME I. READY NOVEMBER 15.

EDITED BY

DAVID PATRICK, LL.D.

Illustrated with nearly Three Hundred Portraits, specially reproduced for this Book from the most authentic Paintings and Engravings known.

This edition, although based on the former book, is practically a new work, as it has been greatly extended, and in large measure reconstructed and rewritten. The Editor has been fortunate in securing the assistance of many of the best-known literary men of the day, and articles of special interest have been contributed to the present volume by the

REV. STOPFORD BROOKE.
MR. EDMUND GOSSE.
MR. A. W. POLLARD.
DR. S. R. GARDINER
MR. ANDREW LANG.
PROF. SAINTSBURY.
MR. SIDNEY LEE.
MR. F. HINDES GROOME.
PROF. P. HUME BROWN.
MR. A. H. BULLEN, &c.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 47, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

No. 297.—NOVEMBER, 1901.

ONE LESSON of the WAR—THE MILITIA BALLOT:
(1) By the EDITOR. (2) By HUGH R. E. CHILDERS.
WANTED—A BUSINESS GOVERNMENT. By EDMUND ROBERTSON, K.C., M.P.
GREAT BRITAIN and RUSSIA. By A. RUSTEM BEY DE BILINSKI.
THE TRUE ORIGIN of the NEWFOUNDLAND DILEMMA. By W. B. DUFFIELD.
NAVAL FASHIONS. By ARCHIBALD S. HURD.
THE PRESS-GANG. By W. J. FLETCHER.
DID ELIZABETH STARVE and ROB her SEAMEN? By Vice-Admiral Sir CYPRIAN BRIDGE, K.C.B.
OF the PERSONAL ELEMENT in HISTORY. By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS.
OMENS at CORONATIONS. By CHARLES BENHAM.
THE EMPLOYMENT of EDUCATED WOMEN. By Mrs. CREIGHTON.
CAN the SEA be FISHED OUT? By R. B. MARSTON.
THE FRENCH ASSOCIATIONS LAW. By WILFRANC HUBBARD.
A VISIT to the ARGENTINE REPUBLIC. By the Right Hon. G. J. SHAW-LEFEVRE.
THE NEW HARBOUR WORKS at DOVER. (With Charts.) By Sir WILLIAM CRUNDALL and WORSFOLD MOWLL.
THE ANXIETY of the HOUR. By the Rev. Dr. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.
LAST MONTH. By Sir WEMYSS REID.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.

Smith, Elder & Co.'s New Books.

STANLEY WEYMAN'S NEW NOVEL.

FIRST IMPRESSION NEARLY EXHAUSTED.
SECOND IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

Author of the "New Rector," "A Gentleman of France," "The Castle Inn," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Royal 8vo, 15s. net in cloth; or 20s. net in half-morocco.

SUPPLEMENTARY VOL. III. (How-Woodward) of

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Note.—Supplementary Volumes I. and II. were published on September 20.

TIMES.—"No Volume of the Dictionary is likely to be more constantly in demand and to attract a larger number of readers than that which brings it to a worthy and impressive close."

NEW VOLUME BY FRANK T. BULLEN.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

With 8 Full-page Illustrations by ARTHUR TWIDLE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEP SEA PLUNDERINGS:

A Collection of Stories of the Sea.

By FRANK T. BULLEN, F.R.G.S.,

Author of "The Cruise of the 'Cachalot,'" "The Log of a Sea Waif," "The Men of the Merchant Service," &c.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Impressive and rousing are these sketches of the deep sea.....Mr. Bullen depicts with a sure and sympathetic hand those who go down to the sea. Skippor and man, one and all are capital."

NEW WORK BY W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D.

ON NOVEMBER 12.—With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY.

By W. H. FITCHETT, M.A., LL.D., &c.,

Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "Wellington's Men," &c.

NEW 6s. NOVELS.

By Mrs. HODGSON BURNETT.

The Making of a Marchioness.

By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, Author of "The Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c. [Nov. 8.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON.

Richard Halpin

A Romance of the New Navy.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON, Author of "Spun Yarn," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," &c. [November 8.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

The Tory Lover.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT, Author of "The Queen's Twin, and other Stories," &c. With a Frontispiece. [November 12.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

A VERSAILLES CHRISTMAS-TIDE. By MARY STUART BOYD. With 53 Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Fcap. 4to, cloth gilt and gilt top, 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

DUMB. By the Hon. Mrs. Walter R. D. FORBES.

ONLY a NIGGER. By Edmund MITCHELL, Author of "The Lone Star Rush."

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by HIMSELF, and "Dedicated to all who Love." "A lively book."—Outlook.

THREE MEN of MARK. By SARAH TYTLER.

THE WEALTH of MALLERSTANG. By ALGERNON GISSING. "This finely conceived novel."—Glasgow Herald.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "In a Cathedral City."

THE CANKERWORM: being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By GEO. MANVILLE FENN. "Mr. Manville Fenn never told a more effective story than this. Wrought together with such constructive skill that it is not easy to lay the book down before it is finished.....The dialogue is brisk and natural and there is scarce a trace of waste in the book.....It should be popular at the libraries." Glasgow Herald.

A FIGHT to a FINISH. By FLORENCE WARDEN. "Full of sensational incidents.....Miss Warden understands her business, and knows how to keep her readers on the tenter-hooks.....A capital Christmas sensation, and should be read over the fire in the gloaming."—Manchester Guardian.

A SOWER of WHEAT. By Harold BINDLOSS. "We enjoyed reading it very much. It is difficult to grow tired of a book like this, which throbs and resounds with the commotion of real life."—Daily Chronicle.

THE TRIUMPH of HILARY BLACKLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-Runner." "Excellent, full of adventure and written with 'go.'.....This is a book to be read at once."—Leeds Mercury.

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." "George Darco is admirable—as good a sketch of an uncommon type as we could wish to see. The authors of 'Ready-Money Mortiboy' could not have drawn the generous, irascible eccentric better. It is a good story, excellently written." Literature.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. SHIEL, Author of "The Yellow Danger," &c. "In the way of sensational fiction no other modern writer can fairly be said to be the equal of Mr. Shiel.....'The Purple Cloud' is indeed remarkable. The idea at the root of it is tremendous, appalling, cosmic; and it is worked out with a force of imagination, a richness of invention, and a free lyrical power which are quite commensurate with the bigness of the idea.....The story is a profound psychology study, as well as a thrilling narrative of marvellous events."—Hearth and Home.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

TALES of a DYING RACE. By ALFRED GRACE.

AS a WATCH in the NIGHT. By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED.

A MISSING HERO. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE JOY of LIFE. By Emile ZOLA. Edited by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. "For dramatic force and for pathos there is nothing in the whole cycle to excel 'The Joy of Life.' It is one of those works which should be read in order to appreciate the versatility of M. Zola's realism."—Glasgow Herald.

A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c. By GEORGE R. SIMS. "This entertaining volume in Mr. Sims's happiest vein, pathetic and humorous by turns."—Lloyd's News.

FAMILIAR STUDIES of MEN and BOOKS. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. FINE PAPER EDITION. Cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

THE
COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BUCHANAN. 2 vols., crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, with Portrait in each volume, 12s.

STAG-HUNTING with the 'DEVON and SOMERSET': an Account of the Chase of the Wild Red Deer on Exmoor, 1887-1901. By PHILIP EVERED. With 70 Illustrations by H. M. LOMAS. Crown 4to, cloth, 16s. net. [Shortly.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

KIM.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Illustrated by J. LOCKWOOD KIPLING.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LETTERS OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN.
Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN.
With 3 Portraits. 8vo, 15s. net.

By FREDERIC HARRISON, M.A.
GEORGE WASHINGTON,
And other American Addresses.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A NEW NOVEL BY
F. MARION CRAWFORD.
MARIETTA: a Maid of Venice.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LATE AMÎR.
AT THE COURT OF THE AMÎR.
By JOHN ALFRED GRAY, M.B. Lond.
With Portrait. Second and Cheaper Edition.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

Globe 8vo, 5s. per Volume.
THE
EVERSLEY SERIES,
Contains 152 Volumes, among which are:

J. R. GREEN. 14 vols.
CHARLES KINGSLEY. 13 vols
MATTHEW ARNOLD. 8 vols.

 Complete List post free on application.*

Now is the Time to Subscribe.
NEW VOLUMES commence with the NOVEMBER NUMBERS.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.
Price 1s.—Contents for NOVEMBER.

PRINCESS PUCK. By the Author of "The Enchanter." Chapters XXIII.—XXVI.
FRANCESCO CRISPI. By G. M. FIAMINGO.
AN UNPUBLISHED POEM by ROBERT BURNS.
DICKENS and MODERN HUMOUR
GOLF (THE MAN and the BOOK). By MARTIN HARDIE.
THE LAND of the POPPY. By G. A. LEVETT-YEATS. IV. Its River Life.
THE NEW ART. By LEWIS F. DAY.
DINNERS and DINERS.
OVER the SLEEPING CITY. By the Rev. J. M. BACON.
TOM D'URFEY. By W. G. HUTCHISON.
THE MYSTERY of COLLABORATION.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.
Illustrated.—Price 1s. 4d.—Annual Subscription, post free, 16s.
The NOVEMBER NUMBER contains—
TWO LITTLE TALES. By Mark Twain.
SOME PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS of PRESIDENT McKINLEY. By JOHN D. LONG, Secretary of the Navy.
THE LEGEND of the WHITE REINDEER. By ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON.
The Third Instalment of a New Story by BRET HARTE, entitled "TRENT'S TRUST."
And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOW READY.

BEHIND the SCENES in the TRANSVAAL: Being Reminiscences of an English Official. By DAVID MACKAY WILSON, 7s. 6d.

MARINE PAINTING in WATER COLOUR. By W. L. WYLLIE, A.R.A. With 24 Coloured Plates, 5s.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY CATALOGUE. Containing upwards of 100 Illustrations and a List of all the Pictures Exhibited. With an Introduction by the Director of the National Gallery. 6d. net.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE, Yearly Vol., 1901. Including Rudyard Kipling's Great Story, "KIM." With upwards of 1,000 Illustrations. 8s.

THE LIFE and WORK of the REDEEMER. By EMINENT DIVINES. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. 6s.

THE CHILD'S BIBLE. Illustrated with 100 New Full-Page Plates, including 12 in Colours. By W. H. MARGETSON. Reset in New Type. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s 6d.

NOVELS
NOW READY.

THE GIANT'S GATE. By Max PEMBERTON. 6s. Already reprinted to meet the large and growing demand.

THE LAIRD'S LUCK, and other Fireside Tales. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH ("Q"). 6s.

A MAN of MILLIONS. By Samuel R. KEIGHTLEY. 6s.

THE AMBASSADOR'S ADVENTURE. By ALLEN UPWARD. 6s.

READY SHORTLY.

THE PRINCESS CYNTHIA. By MARGUERITE BRYANT. 6s.

LEPIDUS the CENTURION: A Roman of To-day. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD, Author of "Phra the Phœnician." 6s.

READY SHORTLY.

The First Volume of
THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF
SOCIAL ENGLAND.
Edited by the late H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L., and J. S. MANN, M.A. With about 2,500 Illustrations and numerous Coloured Plates reproduced from authentic sources. Vol. I. contains about 800 pages, gilt top, 12s. net.

LONDON AFTERNOONS: Chapters on Life, Architecture, and Records of the Great City and its Neighbourhood. By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A. With 60 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

THE EARTH'S BEGINNING. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., &c. With 4 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

CHINESE PORCELAIN. By the late COSMO MONKHOUSE. With a Preface and Notes by Dr. S. W. BUSHELL, C.M.G., Author of "Oriental Ceramic Art." Profusely Illustrated, and containing 24 Plates in Colours, 30s. net. This Edition will be limited to 1,000 Copies.

BRITISH SCULPTURE and SCULPTORS of TO-DAY. By M. H. SPIELMANN. Paper covers, 5s. net; handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

A MASQUE of DAYS: from the Last Essays of Elia. Newly Dressed and Decorated by WALTER CRANE. With 40 Full-Page Designs in Colour, 6s.

STRANGE ADVENTURES in DICKY-BIRD LAND. Stories told by Mother Birds to Amuse their Chicks, and Overheard by R. KEARTON, F.Z.S. Illustrated from Photos by C. Kearton. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; and cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, London; and all Booksellers'.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1539. Established 1869. 2 November, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THE issue of new novels has reached such proportions that it is impossible to deal even with the best of them in the space we are able to devote to fiction. Next week we shall publish a Fiction Supplement, which will contain reviews of a large number of new novels, and articles on the fiction of the year.

PRAYER as preface. Dr. Van Dyke, the well-known American minister, has written a unique preface to his latest story, The Ruling Passion. It runs as follows :

> Lord, let me never tag a moral to a story nor tell a story without a meaning. Make me respect my material so much that I dare not slight my work. Help me to deal very honestly with words and with people, because they are both alive. Show me that as in a river, so in writing, clearness is the best quality, and a little that is pure is worth more than much that is mixed. Teach me to see the local colour without being blind to the inner light. Give me an ideal that will stand the strain of weaving into human stuff on the loom of the real. Keep me from caring more for books than for folks, for art than for life. Steady me to do my full stint of work as well as I can, and, when that is done, stop me, pay what wages Thou wilt, and help me to say from a quiet heart a grateful Amen.

An admirable petition. But why print it?

WE remark in our review of two books on Fénelon on the duplications of literary work which are so curiously common. This applies to series even more than to individual works. Thus Mr. Heinemann is about to publish a series of classical French romances under the editorship of Mr. Maurice Hewlett, and under the title "A Century of French Romance." Excellent. And now Mr. Grant Richards a similar series under the general title of "French Fiction of the Nineteenth Century." We understand that the aim of this series will be to introduce writers who are less well known than the great masters, but whose works are yet necessary to a proper understanding of the literary art and the life and thought of France. Mr. A. R. Waller will be general editor of the series, and Mr. Arthur Symons will furnish a critical preface to each volume. A start will be made immediately with Salammbô, by Gustave Flaubert, translated by Mr. J. W. Matthews; and the second volume, also to appear in November, will be The Latin Quarter, by Henry Murger, translated by Miss Ellen Marriage. Both translators are thoroughly competent.

IN his remarkable address on "Possible Improvement of the Human Breed under the Existing Conditions of Law and Sentiment," delivered on Tuesday night to the Anthropological Institute, Mr. Francis Galton told a story that served his purpose very well. Speaking of the unwillingness of girls of culture to marry, he related that the president of a women's college was recently asked by a visitor about the after-life of the students. She replied that one-third profited by the education, another third gained little by it, and one-third were failures. "And what becomes of the failures?" "Oh, they marry."

A GOOD deal of enthusiasm is being shown in the formation of the Victor Hugo Museum, which, as we have already stated, will be opened in the poet's house in the Place des Vosges in January. The collection will be disposed on four floors. On the first there will be paintings and engravings inspired by Hugo's works, on the second, drawings and even furniture executed by this marvellously handy genius; on the third, Victor Hugo's death-chamber will be reconstituted; and, higher still, documents of interest will be stored. Many gifts are being offered, and one, which comes all the way from Tokio, is a set of translations into Japanese of three of Hugo's novels.

MR. HENRY JAMES, like most of us, is greatly puzzled by the relation between the literary popularities and the literary achievements of the day. He toils interestingly to discover this relation in an article on Rostand with which the November Cornhill opens :

> The novel, and even the poem, that sells, sells half a million of copies; the play that draws, draws vast populations, and for months together; and this, accordingly, is the puzzle, the worry—though we hope, as we try to deal with it, but the temporary one—that, do what we will, we are unable altogether to dissociate the idea of acclamation from the idea of distinction. We are in the presence of huge demonstrations, and we ask ourselves if there be really afloat in the world anything like a proportionate amount of art and inspiration. The demonstrations are insistent, the reverberation such as victory or peace, announced to distracted nations, would alone seem to justify, and we are consequently somewhat oppressed—which is the form taken by our embarrassment.

Applying his bewilderment to Rostand's works Mr. James says :

> "Cyrano" has been enjoyed, if I am not mistaken, through the length and breadth of the United States, and yet the glamour of "Cyrano" is intensely, exquisitely, in passionate, almost invidious national reference. The particular beauty of the play—and the remark is practically as true of "L'Aiglon"—is in the fantastic, romantic, brilliantly whimsical expression of an ardent French consciousness. The problem before the author was to weave into a dense and glittering tissue every illustration, every reminder that the poetry, history, legend of a particular period would yield; and the measure of his "success," exactly, is in the vividness of this tapestry. The tapestry is marvellously figured, but it is scarcely too much to say that the light of the consciousness aforesaid is required for following the design with intelligence. How much of that intelligence do M. Rostand's spectators and readers about the globe, those of his Anglo-Saxon public in especial, bring to the task? To ask the question is to move again in the world of wonder; for would not the upshot of pushing an inquiry into the relation between the glamour, as I have called it, of "Cyrano" and "L'Aiglon," and the state of mind of the alien populations that have absorbed them—would not this consequence be to make us ask ourselves what such exhibitions, in such conditions, have been taken for?

Precisely. What have "Cyrano" and "L'Aiglon" been taken for?

Digitized by Google

In the new Fortnightly M. Maeterlinck discourses in a highly Maeterlinckian strain on The Mystery of Justice:

> When we deceive or overcome our neighbour, have we deceived or overcome all the forces of Justice? Are all things definitely settled then, and may we go boldly on; or is there a graver, deeper Justice, one less visible, perhaps, but less subject to error: one that is more universal, and mightier? . . . The nature of Justice, and all our morality, depend on the answer; and it cannot be fruitless, therefore, to inquire how that great idea of mystic and sovereign Justice, which has undergone more than one transformation since history began, is being received to-day in the heart and mind of man. And is this mystery not the loftiest, the most passionately interesting, of all that remain to us: does it not intertwine with most of the others? Do its vacillations not stir us to the very depths of our soul?

The essay is one of four which will be published in book form.

From the contents list of the November Monthly Review:

Maksim Gorky R. Nisbet Bain.
Makar Chudra.....Maksim Gorky.

As a variant on "Peter Piper picked . . ." this might do for an exercise of the tongue on winter evenings.

Mr. Dent's "Temple Bible," of which the first two volumes, Genesis and Exodus, are published this week, resembles the "Temple Shakespeare" in appearance. It is issued in cloth at 1s. a volume, and in leather at 1s. 6d. Each volume has a frontispiece reproduced from a work of sacred art. To Genesis is prefixed a part of Sir Edward Burne-Jones's picture, "The Days of Creation"; to Exodus, Sir John Millais's picture, "Victory, O Lord," representing the holding up of the hands of Moses. Both pictures are very delicately reproduced in photogravure. The Authorised Version is used, and it is printed as continuous prose, with passages of poetry where the metre permits. But this is not all. The "Temple Bible" is provided with a critical accompaniment at once scholarly and modern. Dr. Sayce edits Genesis, and Dr. A. R. S. Kennedy Exodus. In each case the history of the book is given and its literary problems are discussed. At the end are notes, a map, and a table of "Biblical References in English Literature." No such Bible has yet been issued, and it is probable that this edition will have enormous influence on intelligent, if unlearned, readers. It presents the Bible as literature, with simple yet illuminating commentaries. Each book is light and small, and it is not too much to say that thousands of readers will find in them not only a newly-edited Bible, but new ways and opportunities of reading the Bible.

Does rhyme connect ideas? Apropos of our article on this subject, a correspondent informs us that he wrote some illustrative lines two years ago. Whether rhymes be scarce or plentiful (and they are both), there is no doubt that they do connect ideas under both circumstances. Our correspondent elects to consider them scarce, and bewails the fact as follows:

If you're in love you have to lug in "dove,"
"Her glove," or else appeal to "heaven above";
There's no alternative, alas! but "shove,"
For "move" and "prove" are makeshifts at the best,
Though you must oft with them contented rest.
Suppose you write of something that doth gladden,
To find your choice is limited to "sadden"
Or "madden" makes you mad as any hatter,
And fit your head against the wall to batter:
Then, too, when you have said your love's a pattern,
It's hard to find that you must drag in "slattern";
'Tis Hobson's choice; as also 'tis with amorous,
To which the only rhyme, alas! is "clamorous."
When you are praising Amaryllis' beauty
What can you do with "sooty," or with "duty"?
Or when you've said your love is quite obdurate,
How in the world are you to bring in "curate"?
Sometimes a lovely line that ends in silver
I've written, but to find no word like "dilver"
Or "quilver" doth exist—so must forego it,
A sacrifice to vex the mildest poet!
Suppose you write about your mistress's window,
The only rhyme that you will find is "Lindo,"
And though an actor of some little fame
Owns that cognomen—Frank is his front name—
To bring him in it would the cleverest tease,
Except in rhymes like Ingoldsby's—or these.
As hard the case is when you talk of chimney,
For what's the use of such a rhyme as "Rhymney"?
Or such a makeshift as a "slim-or-trim-knee"?

Oddly enough, Mr. Andrew Lang has just been demonstrating how rhymes connect ideas. He and some friends saw an eagle hovering over the scene of the massacre of Glencoe. Mr. Lang spoke darkly of writing a sonnet, and his friends hastened to encourage him, only insisting that he should say nothing about Liberty. "Rhymes were kindly suggested, such as eagle, beagle, regal, inveigle, illegal, and the town of Meigle; the last does not seem very useful, and I have not employed it." The sonnet, which appears in the "Sign of the Ship" in the November Longman's, is this:

GLENCOE.

(A sonnet, suggested by seeing an eagle hovering over the scene of the massacre perpetrated by the minions of a Dutch usurper.)

Far over hills no Saxon tongue can name,
Above the shadowy strath behold the Eagle!
He sees the glen where many a Campbell beagle
Did deeds of blood, and lust and wrath and shame,
The splendid spirits of the clans to tame.
To such an end did wily Stair inveigle
The loyal Celt, an action all illegal,
Which even Lord Macaulay notes with blame!

Spirit of Royal James in form of bird!
Thou dust behold the scene of gore and fire
Where vain was great MacIan's martial pith;
And hast thou heard the melancholy word
That no MacIan lords it now? The Squire
Comes of the Sassenach lineage of Smith!

Mr. Clement K. Shorter had an interesting note in last week's Tatler on Byron's valet, the dog-like William Fletcher, whom he thinks ought to have been included, along with many other worthies similarly neglected, in the Dictionary of National Biography. We cannot agree that the editors of the D.N.B. have been remiss in omitting Fletcher and the other people named by Mr. Shorter, having regard to the scale on which the Dictionary was planned. That scale was big enough in all conscience, but under whatever scale you could adopt there must be exclusions. However, Mr. Shorter's point is that writers like Shakespeare and Scott have been unduly favoured as to space. He might have pleaded Sterne, who occupies a disproportionate number of pages. Personally we look on the D.N.B. as a work of such enterprise and excellence that we are not careful to defend it. It has the flaws of every successful human undertaking. But Mr. Shorter's note on Fletcher is interesting in a small way. Readers of Byron's life do not need to be reminded of Fletcher's twenty years' devotion to his master, ended only when he had brought that master's body to England, and seen it reverently laid to rest. Mr. Shorter points out that no Byron enthusiast seems to have cared to trace Fletcher's after career. The following extract from a newspaper of 1833 is quoted by him:

> William Fletcher, the faithful valet of Lord Byron for twenty years, who received the pilgrim's last words at Missolonghi, and did not quit his remains until he had seen them deposited in the family vault at Hucknell, now keeps an Italian warehouse in Charles-street, Berkeley-square, and is there celebrated among the nobility for the fine quality of his macaroni.

Digitized by Google

THE November Macmillan is a very bright number. Young-literary-ladyism and fiction-as-she-is-wrotery are the ingredients of a clever sketch called "The Mystery of Collaboration," wherein the writing of a novel by seven young women, constituting the Minerva Literary Society, is described. The society's idea of collaboration was to fix upon a plot and then divide the story into seven parts, one for each member. These were written separately, and with an heroic disregard of length. However, the novel was finished in MS., and the Minerva Literary Society contemplated it with awe, as they well might do, for one member alone had written 140,000 words. The six others averaged about 70,000 words each. There were ructions and votes of censure, and, in short, the Minerva Society ceased to be. But shortly afterwards a firm of publishers announced a batch of seven new novels as follows:

AIGLE, a Tale of England; by Paolo Trevorski.
CYRIL AUGUSTUS'S SWEETHEART; by D. L. Burton.
THE GRANGE WEIRD; by Horace Palast.
AGLIONE, a Tale of Horror; by Evan Evans.
DEADLY MOAT; by Herman Bagster.
THE UNCLE, OR TRUE LOVE; by Francis Cartaret.
THE AUNT'S CURSE; by Lambert Grayling.

In another part of the magazine Mr. William G. Hutchinson has a readable article on Tom D'Urfey; and "Dickens and Modern Humour" is considered by a third writer. But the most mentionable item is an unpublished poem by Burns, which was found recently among papers belonging to the late Mrs. Barrington, of Monmouthshire. The lines were addressed by Burns to her friend and neighbour, Mrs. Curre, from whom she doubtless obtained them. Mrs. Curre, who died in 1823, was a Dumfriesshire lady. Of Burns's six stanzas we quote the first three:

Oh look na, young Lassie, sae softly and sweetly!
Oh smile na, young Lassie, sae sweetly on me!
Ther's nought waur to bear than the mild glance of pity
When grief swells the heart and the tear blins the e'e.

Just such was the glance of my bonnie lost Nancy,
Just such was the glance that once brightened her e'e;
But lost is the smile sae impressed on my fancy,
And cauld is the heart that sae dear was to me.

Ilka wee flow'ret we grieve to see blighted,
Cow'ring and with'ring in frost nippet plain;
The naist turn of Spring shall awauken their beauty,
But ne'er can Spring wauken my Nancy again.

IN the November Century Magazine Prof. W. P. Trent, of Columbia University, has a paper on "American Humour," of which he gives a retrospect. Much of the space, however, is occupied with portraits of the humorists, and these we do not find entertaining. Many of these men of fun and whimsicality look like representative anti-vaccinators, or what you please; their whiskers are out of fashion, and their clothes ill-fitting. We concur with Prof. Trent's selection of Artemus Ward's most typical jest, his message to Punch: "I've been lingerin' by the Tomb of the lamentid Shakspere. It is a success."

A CORRESPONDENT sends us further particulars of the play competition arranged by Mr. Grein eleven years ago in the columns of the Weekly Comedy. It seems that only forty-seven authors, and not, as we thought, "about 150," competed. "The winning play was announced in the Daily News of the 15th March, 1890, and Mr. Grein at once negotiated with a West-end management of standing for its production in their evening bill. The management, however, did not concur in the judge's choice—though that judge was no other than Mr. Pinero—and the author received from Mr. Grein a compensation for the non-production of his piece."

IN the November Chambers's Journal there are some interesting extracts from Robert Chambers's Commonplace Book. One item is a very unflattering portrait of "the first gentleman in Europe," which Chambers received from Rogers at the banker's breakfast-table in 1844:

> . . . Amongst other things which enabled George IV. to make a good impression at first were a couple of Latin quotations, which he was sure to bring forward, one from Horace and the other from Virgil. In reality he had no more, and when this was found out the credit he obtained from them was gone.

Chambers mentions that in 1850 Dickens was making three or four thousand a year, Thackeray was spending £1,400 per annum, and Mark Lemon was taking a house at £115 a year. The Punch staff dined Mr. Evans, their publisher, at £2 11s. a head, and at their ordinary dinners the port cost 9s. 6d. the bottle.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO. announce that they have arranged with the Trustees of the late William Morris for the publication of a limited edition of the following eight volumes in the Golden Type of the Kelmscott Press:

A Tale of the House of the Wolfings.
The Roots of the Mountains.
Grettir the Strong.
The Volsunga Saga and Three Northern Love Stories.
The Odyssey of Homer.
The Aeneids of Virgil.
Hopes and Fears for Art, and other Lectures.
Signs of Change, and other Lectures.

It was Mr. Morris's intention to print the full series of his works at the Kelmscott Press; but his death on October 3rd, 1896, led to the closing of the Press in March, 1898, before the project was completed. The wood-blocks for the initials and other ornaments designed by Mr. Morris were presented at this time to the British Museum, the type alone being reserved for future use by the trustees. The success of the five small volumes of Mr. Morris's lectures, hitherto the only books printed with it since the closing of the Kelmscott Press, has prompted the publishers to carry out this larger scheme. The new volumes will be uniform in size with Love is Enough, The Well at the World's End, and the other large quarto issues of the Kelmscott Press. They are being printed at the Chiswick Press in double columns with the Golden Type, under the immediate direction of the trustees, no pains being spared to make them worthy of a place beside the Kelmscott Press volumes, which are now so widely sought after. The edition will be limited to 315 copies, of which 300 only will be for sale. The eight volumes will be sold in sets only, at the net price of sixteen guineas per set. As each volume is printed the type will be distributed. The first volume, The House of the Wolfings, will be published on November 15, 1901, and the remainder at intervals of about a month, beginning in January, 1902.

THREE weeks ago we said we rather liked Dr. Duff, of Bradford. He complained to the Congregational Union recently that there is not "a really good bookshop in the West Riding." By that the learned doctor proceeded to explain that he meant that "there was no shop into which you could walk and ask to see what they had on Plato." And we don't doubt he is right. But much has happened in the interval. The doctor's remark has given pain in Leeds. Briggate is aghast, Boar-lane is stirred to its depths. There has been a correspondence, which we are asked to print. The protest of Leeds and the suave defence of Dr. Duff are as follows:

37, Briggate, Leeds, October 18, 1901.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to draw your attention to the enclosed newspaper cutting, and to ask if you are reported correctly therein. It seems so very unlikely if you are at all aware of the contents of several shops in this city alone, that you would make such erroneous statements.—Yours truly, H. WALKER.

Rev. Dr. Duff, Bradford.

Digitized by Google

9, Selborne-terrace, Bradford,
Oct. 21st, 1901.

DEAR FRIEND,—For such is anyone who does work like yours in this West Riding that I love. The writer of enclosed paragraph has managed to say just about the sheer opposite to what I tried to say. I was beseeching our Churches not to think of lessening the food for spiritual life of the people about us, who are so earnestly busy with material occupations, and whose souls have a deep, albeit unconscious hunger for such service as you do by your business and our Theological Colleges do by devoting themselves to study of the unseen.—Faithfully yours,

Mr. Henry Walker. ARCHD. DUFF.

The Editor of the Yorkshire Post adds:

> We cannot reconcile Dr. Duff's version of his speech with the testimony of the reporters who took a note of what he said. The passage which has interested the booksellers is a verbatim extract from his observations, embodying a specific statement. The paragraph published in the Evening Post was extracted from the fuller report in this journal, and that in turn is confirmed by the independent report in the Manchester Courier, which is as follows:
>
> The Rev. Dr. Duff (Bradford) said the value of ministerial colleges would not be appreciated until there was a more general love of the highest class of literature on the part of the people. There was not a good bookseller's shop in the whole of the West Riding, simply because among people who were all eagerly running after wealth there was no demand for the books which were precious to the true scholar.

For ourselves we hope to make a surprise Platonic visit to Leeds some day.

Bibliographical.

I HAVE been looking through the third volume of the Supplement of the Dictionary of National Biography, with an eye, in the first place, to the condensed bibliographies with which the memoirs conclude. These, obviously, cannot be exhausted; but I am surprised to find the author of the article on Mrs. Keeley ignoring altogether the book on The Keeleys on the Stage and at Home, written by Mr. Walter Goodman, and published in 1895. I think, too, that the writer of the notes of Frederick Locker might have made some reference to the bibliography of Locker which appeared a few years since in the pages of the Bookman—a bibliography whose compiler had had the assistance of Locker's daughter, Mrs. Birrell, and of his nephew, Mr. W. A. Locker. It will be news, by the way, to most people that the Rowfant Club, of Cleveland, Ohio, brought out in 1895 a little volume of Locker's verse, put together by himself, and entitled Rowfant Rhymes; also that Patchwork was printed privately for the Philobiblon Society before it was given to the general public in 1879. Everybody, again, does not know—what Mr. Secombe here tells us—that, "while in prison," Oscar Wilde "wrote a kind of apology for his life, a MS. amounting to about forty-five thousand words, now in the hands of his literary executor."

In the Dictionary's notice of Sims Reeves, the singer, Mr. F. G. Edwards states that "the professional name 'Sims' was adopted at the suggestion of Mme. Puzzi, a vocalist, as a euphonious prefix to Reeves." The great tenor's baptismal appellation was "John Reeves" simply. The "Sims" seems to have been used for the first time in 1847. One is reminded of a passage in the Recollections of J. C. Jeaffreson (1894), in which that writer tells us that "Walter Thornbury" was only the pen-name of George Henry Thornbury, who did not think that "George Henry" was sufficiently "euphonious" as the name of a producer of popular ballads. Jeaffreson goes on to say: "William Hepworth Dixon, my ever dear friend, did not receive the name of Hepworth from his god-parents, but assumed it at his own discretion. Charles Shirley Brooks, whilom editor of Punch, called himself Shirley, not because it was his name by baptismal rite, but because he wished to hear himself called Shirley." And if an actor or a vocalist or an instrumentalist may christen himself to his own liking, why should not a man of letters be permitted the same privilege?

I notice that "C. K. S." has drawn attention to the lack of proportion in the Dictionary. To take the biographies of men and women of letters: we find only half a page bestowed upon Jean Ingelow, while Miss Anne Manning has a page and a half, Miss Mary Kingsley two pages and a half, and Mrs. Oliphant three pages. To Frederick Locker is assigned a page and three-quarters, while John Nichol has two, F. W. Newman two and a half, F. W. H. Myers two and three-quarters, R. W. Hutton nearly three, and Tom Hughes a little over three. W. J. Linton is dealt with at rather greater length than his wife, Mrs. Lynn Linton. There will always be a difference of opinion as to the relative importance of notable people in the various arts and sciences, but Mr. Stephen and Mr. Lee might have got a little nearer to the general consensus than they have. A great deal of the space in the Dictionary has been absolutely wasted.

It would seem as if we were going to have a cult of cats. It was only the other day that Miss Benson gave us her pleasant and suggestive book, The Soul of a Cat, and now, I see, we are to have a book about cats called The Fireside Sphinx, from the pen of Miss Repplier. Six or seven years ago we had a goodly tome containing pictures of cats and kittens drawn by Mme. Ronner, with letterpress translated from the French. Prior to that, again, was that dainty little anthology, Concerning Cats, so well compiled by Mrs. Arthur Tomson, and so attractively illustrated by her husband. This last is one of the most enjoyable collections of its kind. Much the same thing was done, within the last few years, for dogs, but not quite so prettily and gracefully.

The Geste of Kyng Horn is to have, it seems, a new editor in the person of Mr. Joseph Hall. It has already been edited for the Roxburgh and Early English Text Societies, and is included, further, in Ritson's Ancient English Metrical Romances. Perhaps Mr. Hall may have something to say about the authorship of the Geste, which is generally attributed to one Kendale, who figured in the reign of Edward I. Chaucer describes the work as a "romance of price." An analysis of it, with quotations, is given by Warton. The ballad abridgment of the tale, called "Hynd Horn," is in most of the collections.

The volume on Thomas Wolsey, Legate and Reformer, promised by Mr. E. L. Taunton, is said to be based mainly on State papers, and may, therefore, have a special value of its own. The most recent account of the Cardinal in book form is that which the late Bishop of London wrote in 1888 for the series of "Twelve English Statesmen." That was a masterly little monograph, quite sufficient for all ordinary purposes. It is curious, by the way, to note the vitality of the old Life of Wolsey by Cavendish. There have been at least two reprints of that within the last sixteen years or so—one in 1885, and another in 1894.

It is a little singular that it should have been left to a publisher in the year of grace 1901 to bring out the first translation into English of Chateaubriand's Mémoires d'Outre Tombe. Very little, however, has ever been done for Chateaubriand in this country. I am not aware of the existence of any handy English memoir of him, though, of course, he figures in the cyclopædias.

Mr. Mackenzie Bell's new volume of Collected Poems will comprise the contents, rearranged and classified, of his Spring's Immortality and Pictures of Travel, with the addition of fugitive verses published by him since the appearance of the latter book. No volume of his earlier than Spring's Immortality will be drawn upon.

THE BOOKWORM.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

A Pastor of Courtly Sheep.

François de Fénelon. By Viscount St. Cyres, late Student and Lecturer of Christ Church. (Methuen. 10s. 6d.)

Fénelon, his Friends and Enemies. By E. K. Saunders. (Longmans. 10s. 6d. net.)

THERE is a theory, held by modern transcendentalists, which Mr. Clifford Harrison has recommended with some happy and persuasive rhetoric, that there are mental no less than electric currents, so that minds can act on minds from a distance, and ideas, without any figure of speech, may be "in the air."

If those who hold it wished for plausible confirmatory instances, they might well point to the recent course of the publishing world. The "trade" shows a marked tendency to give birth to twins, or even triplets; and this in cases where the lust of gain (one should think) would hardly tempt a publisher to "blanket" his rival. (We thank thee, Lipton, for the word! So much more handy than "take the wind out of his sails.") That might explain the flight of books on Cromwell, when everyone was talking Cromwell. But it seems the rule now that biographies, however unforeseen their heroes, come out in pairs, crossing the line together in a most level start. (Again, our acknowledgments to Sir Thomas.) It is not very long since we had to judge two books entered, so to speak, for the Danton Cup; and now two are launched simultaneously bearing the name of Fénelon. Yet Fénelon is not precisely a burning subject.

Once in the clutches of this seductively popular metaphor, it seems irresistibly convenient to call them Fénelon I. and Fénelon II.—carrying respectively the flags of Viscount St. Cyres and Mr. E. K. Saunders. Of the two, Fénelon I. seems to us the better—it certainly is the cleverer—book. Their construction is remarkably similar in their outward lines: they often follow each other chapter-heading for chapter-heading. But Fénelon II. is the usual panegyrical biography, and Mr. Saunders the usual biographer, with a firm faith in his hero's all-righteousness. From this standpoint he tells the story of Fénelon's life clearly and straightforwardly, though with no special graces of style. In point of substance there is not much to choose between them: neither has any advantage of information. But Fénelon I. is not merely a biography, it is a study—a clever study; and Viscount St. Cyres has a cultivated style, which keeps his book at a constant level of attractiveness. It has the disadvantage, perhaps, of seeming a little "down" on his hero: not because he has any real lack of admiration for him, but because he is continually holding level the scales between the violent partisans and violent assailants of Fénelon. For any faulting impression which this may cause, Mr. Saunders will be found an efficient corrective, never failing to put Fénelon's case as strongly as he can. Between them the reader can hardly fail to receive a full impression of the great Archbishop of Cambrai.

Viscount St. Cyres is of mind that Fénelon has suffered in his own land from the flux and reflux of extreme biography; and it was his aim to produce a judicial biography, clean alike of malice or extenuation. To our thought he has succeeded excellently well. Few English biographers could have kept such steady way among the quicksands of the controversy with Bossuet. The whole Quietist business turns on matters which John Bull has gruffly made up his mind that no fellow can understand, and, therefore, they cannot be worth any fellow's understanding. The beef and pudding of spirituality are good enough for him, and should be good enough for everybody else. That on the Fénelon and Bossuet matter Viscount St. Cyres largely countersigns John Bull's view does not betray him into obtuse contempt and slovenly misunderstanding. It is treated with singular grasp and judiciality, so that we doubt if an account as steadily impartial has appeared. Mr. Saunders on these affairs is given to cutting the Gordian knot with an amusingly Britannic lordliness of mishandling. Yet Viscount St. Cyres is human; he has "a bee in his bonnet" on the subject of the Jesuits, who never fail to irritate him from his calm, apparently because he has a special cult of the Jansenists.

It was time that Fénelon should find such a biographer, for he was exactly the character to arouse warring judgments. Born of an impoverished aristocratic family in Perigord, he was eminently a Southerner—quick, mobile, intelligent, various, of sympathetic adaptability, a man of many characters, yet far from a man of no character, as is too often the result of such combinations. Bossuet saw and said that he had no simplicity. This heterogeneity always fares ill at the hands of an impatient world, which loves to clap a hasty label on its great men, and know that they are ready docketed for future use. Therefore it has seized now one, now another prominent aspect of him, transferring him from this little drawer to that, and unwilling to confess that he belongs outright to neither. He has descended to us as a writer, but, like Johnson, it was the tongue which gave him greatest influence in his lifetime. Not all at once did he realise his true power. He aspired to Bossuet's eloquent reputation, and his first public employment was as a missionary to the Huguenots, then in process of state-aided conversion. Here idealisation begins at once, representing him as an enlightened apostle of toleration. But Viscount St. Cyres has little trouble in showing that his toleration was of a modified kind. He acquiesced in the general methods of his employers, softening them only in detail. For mild and humane he always was: so much of the legendary Fénelon is undeniable. His true powers developed when his friends, the Duc de Beauvilliers and the Duc de Chevreuse, introduced him to Mme. de Maintenon, and Mme. de Maintenon to the King and to Court.

He seemed born for a pastor of courtly sheep. Sincerely religious he was even then, sincerely ambitious he perhaps scarce ceased to be even in later days. The Duchess of Orléans draws him: a man "with deep-set eyes and ugly face all skin and bone, who talked and laughed quite unaffectedly and easily." And St. Simon, at the time of his appointment to Cambrai: tall, thin, well-built, pale with the exceeding pallor that has been called pulchrum virorum illustrium colorem by a Father of the Church, with a great nose, eyes from which fire and genius poured in torrents, a face curious and unlike any other, yet so striking and attractive that, once seen, it could never again be forgotten. His manners were exactly calculated to fascinate these high-bred men and women, among whom Madame de Maintenon had brought religion into fashion. He knew how to address them with a dexterous air of light and flattering raillery, and no man could better carry out St. Paul's counsel to be all things to all men in the service of religion. There was a woman in Fénelon. His ascendancy was of the feminine order, and he instinctively preferred the woman's road to rule—by subtle accommodation, persuasion, and adroit management; his love of power was almost a woman's love of power in its all-absorbingness, its lack of the magnanimity which can acknowledge an equal or a superior; his curious capacity for uniting the most inconsistent qualities in one undeniable personality, for surprising alternately by his greatness and his pettiness; his moods and subtleties—all these things were feminine, and so was his unaccountability to himself. "When I examine into my mind," he said, "I seem to dream; I am to my own conscience like a vision of the night." Woman-like, no less, was his instinctive resort in difficulty to indirect and evasive ways, of which doubtless he was but half-conscious.

Digitized by Google

Such a man was almost maternally in his place as educator of the Dauphin's son, the young Duke of Burgundy, to which position the De Maintenon influence procured his appointment. He had a difficult pupil—arrogant, passionate, with a keen, sarcastic tongue, quick of intellect, ready to argue with his master, curiously inaccessible to anything but reason, and not even to that in his rages. Yet withal the lad was affectionate. Fénelon has drawn him in his rebellions:

> Nothing without, everything within There was a wrinkle in his stocking this morning, and we shall all have to suffer for it. He cries, he roars, he alarms, he moves pity. Don't speak to him of what he likes best, for that very reason he won't hear a word in its favour. He contradicts others and tries to annoy them; he is furious that they will not be angry. Or else he turns on himself, is wretched, and will not be consoled. He wishes for solitude, but cannot bear to be alone; he comes back to us, and at once quarrels with us all. We must not be silent, we must not talk, we must not laugh, we must not be sad. There is nothing to do but wait until he recovers.

When he recovered, he was ready to jest at his own unreason—presently to give way to it again. This boy Fénelon treated with endless patience and tact, making his lessons a pleasure to him by skilfully humouring his intellectual propensities, and passing with an agreeable desultoriness from subject to subject. A child, he said, could not long fix his mind on a single theme. He appealed carefully to his dominant faculty of reason, attached the boy to him by his affections, and was ever at watch to preach the total regulation of life by principles of religion and humanity. Yet when banishment from Court interrupted the preceptorship, he left behind a one-sided pupil. He had trained him in religion and conduct; but he had deferred the training for royal duties as an after-matter. And there remained a painfully conscientious devotee, full of the most excellent maxims and ideas, but shy, morose, awkward, without decision or character. He had been broken to absolute obedience, but had never learned self-reliance, and the staff withdrawn, Burgundy had no power to walk alone. It was fatally proved when, in later years, he was sent, with Vendôme, to command against Marlborough and Eugene. Anxious and cautious, he originated nothing, opposed everything, would not fight unless sure to win, and prayed in his tent instead of mixing with his captains and soldiers. His return in disgrace cast obloquy on his old teacher:

> Acknowledge your pupil, my lord of Cambrai,
> When Lille is blockaded, he's far from the fray,
> In action takes never a part.
> His face is so doleful, his mien is so sad,
> That—answer me—is not the sanctified lad
> A Quietest after your heart?

Such was the contemporary epigram. Could Fénelon, indeed, have given his pupil those qualities of swift, masculine decision which, so far as we can see, he had not himself? At any rate, he never tried.

The Quietist controversy, to which this epigram alludes, was the turning-point of Fénelon's life. Coming just after his appointment to the Archbishopric of Cambrai, it banished him from Court, and showed his weakest side. It arose out of his acquaintance with that much-debated "mystic," Mme. Guyon. Viscount St. Cyres has the courage to question the praises which it is the fashion to heap upon her. Left a widow, she formed a peculiar "spiritual friendship" with a Barnabite priest, one Lacombe. Thereafter, her mysticism took strange forms. She virtually could not sin, for she was united with God: He gave her power to preach, and guided her pen from error:

> She could perform miracles, knew what was passing in the minds of others, had absolute power over their minds and bodies. And at her first meeting with Lacombe she developed a new mastery over Graces physically bestowed—the Plenitudes and Spiritual Maternity and Fecundity that an indignant Bossuet was one day to declare unexampled in the Church—and later defined as an influence so pure that there was nothing of human sentiment in it, a mere flux and reflux, that went from her to Lacombe, and back again, to lose itself in the Divine and Invisible Unity. And in her later career these Graces came upon her in such numbers that she must take to her bed till she could discharge them on someone; it was only after long practice that she learned how to bestow them in silence and from a distance.

She became acquainted with Fénelon through Mme. de Maintenon, and he fell under her religious spell. He was never very intimate with her, but, unhappily, he recommended and partly made himself responsible for her, while through her his own doctrine was called in question. Attacked by the Bishop of Chartres, she (by Fénelon's advice) appealed to the great Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux; and, after many troubles, a commission, headed by Bossuet, assembled at Issy, and condemned her writings in very guarded terms. Fénelon signed the articles reluctantly. But Bossuet proceeded to prepare a pamphlet, laying down the doctrine of the Church on the whole subject of mysticism, and the Quietist errors of which De Guyon was accused. Fénelon at first promised approval, but then withdrew his promise, and prepared a counter-statement of his own teachings on the matter, The Maxims of the Saints. He promised not to print it till Bossuet's pamphlet had appeared. But by giving it to his impetuous friend De Chevreuse for publication, without telling him that he had explicitly promised to delay it, he secured that De Chevreuse should issue it in his own absence, before Bossuet's pamphlet. Then, of course, he disavowed responsibility for the act. Bossuet was furious. He accused the Maxims of heresy; and a fierce conflict of pamphlet and tongue resulted in Fénelon's appeal to Rome. There the extravagances of Fénelon's system were formally condemned, together with the book; but his doctrine on the main issue was left cautiously alone, nor was he accounted heretical. He accepted the condemnation, and retired to his diocese, whither he was banished by the king.

It was a blessing in disguise, rebuking his ambition, deepening his religion, and educing his finest qualities. Thenceforward we see nothing but the great and wise Archbishop, energetically governing his diocese, winning all hearts by his sympathy, his adaptability, his humanity, his sagacious moderation, his charity; the great Director, guiding a flock of souls drawn from the élite of France, and to this day edifying men by the gentle wisdom of his letters to these many spiritual clients. The horrors of the war on the Flemish frontier filled Cambrai with sick and wounded soldiers, for whom his benevolence was untiring, lodging them in his palace, aiding them with food, medicines, clothes, money, and personal attendance. If with all his wisdom he still accustomed his clients to an over-reliance in himself, a too blind obedience; if he still had glancings towards the Court whence he was banished, these are human weaknesses. Of that Télemaque, which brought on him at first fresh obloquy, and finally lasting fame, as of his other writings, we cannot here speak in detail. The political and humanitarian wisdom of Télemaque, with its political and humanitarian extravagances; its beautiful, musical, and evenly-flowing prose; its anticipations of the eighteenth century and Rousseau—on all these things Viscount St. Cyres writes with admirable insight and judgment. But his chief praise is to have given a thinkable picture of a brilliant and bafflingly varied personality, and to have shown its greatness and wisdom, not excluding, but reconcilable with, its liability to error, tortuousness, and self-centredness. For there Fénelon recognised his own peril. Friendly and charitable to all, he took none to his inmost heart; and all his plans for the good of others he was under the necessity of centring round himself. "L'église, c'est moi," he might have said.

Digitized by Google

The Possible First Author of "Hamlet."

The Works of Thomas Kyd. Edited from the Original Texts, with Introduction, Notes, and Facsimiles, by Frederick S. Boas, M.A., Professor of History and English Literature in Queen's College, Belfast. (Oxford: Clarendon Press. 15s. net.)

ALL students of the Elizabethan drama owe a debt of gratitude to Prof. Boas for this volume, which is not only the first separate edition of Kyd in modern times, but the first reprint of the plays which has been collated with all the extant quartos, and retains the original spelling. It includes, moreover, all of Kyd that we possess, even to his two prose works (the Householder's Philosophie, translated from Tasso, and the pamphlet, Murder of John Brewen), and the fragments of verse from Allott's England's Parnassus. Besides these are documents concerning the charge of atheism for which Kyd was arrested and Marlowe brought in danger. Prof. Boas re-discovered the originals among the Harleian MSS., and is thus enabled to throw fuller light on the matter, even more important to the biographer of Marlowe than to the biographer of Kyd. His notes are models for their judicious proportion of brevity and fulness; while his introduction is a valuable essay on the numerous obscure and controverted points connected with Kyd's writings and life, no less than an able contribution towards the understanding of Kyd's true place in Elizabethan drama. In regard to the study of Kyd, indeed, it would be hardly an exaggeration to call this an epoch-making edition.

The most of us, if we know Kyd at all, know him chiefly by flouts and gibes. It was the custom of later dramatists to poke fun at his chief play, "The Spanish Tragedy." It is a butt for all manner of sixteenth and seventeenth century playwrights and poets, while Nash (who deserved the epithet of "asp," which Macaulay flung at George Steevens), of course, sneered at him. Hard is it for a dramatist to survive the allied laughter of Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. It may be doubtful whether Sly's burlesqued quotation came from Shakespeare; but the great poet has jested at Kyd elsewhere, while Jonson was never tired of it. Yet this innumerable laughter of later playwrights is in itself a testimony to the popular vitality of Kyd's chief play; while, when Jonson himself came to write seriously, he did not disdain to measure Shakespeare's greatness by his supremacy—among other supremacies—over "Sporting Kyd." Great men (except, perhaps, the femininely resentful Pope) do not trouble themselves to give more than a passing laugh to that which has no reputation. And Prof. Boas brings out most strikingly the fact that Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy" was overwhelmingly the popular play of its age. Its favourite "bits" passed into catch-words, like the sayings of "Pinafore" and other Gilbertian librettos in their day. "Go by, Hieronymo," became a form of slighting setting-by. "It is 'Go by, Jeronimo,'" meant "It is 'all up'" with a man or thing. And so forth with other stock-phrases from the play. After an interval, in which it seemed to have exhausted itself, it was furnished with additions (perhaps by the mocker Ben Jonson himself), and started on a fresh career of triumph, which lasted till the Puritans put drama to the axe with Charles I. Nor was this solely or chiefly through the crudity of public taste. It was one of the many instances in which, not for the last time, construction has borne out purely literary defects. "Hieronymo," as it was familiarly called, was a good acting-play. Kyd was, before all things, an expert playwright, a carpenter of plots, and his plots, withal, were imaginative plots. There was the stuff of great effects in them, such as the loftiest dramatist might not disdain.

If Prof. Boas and others be right, the loftiest of dramatists did not disdain it. He zealously upholds the view, which has been put forward before, that from Kyd Shakespeare took the plot of "Hamlet." To our mind, on the whole, he makes out a strongly plausible case. We know from contemporary reference that there was an early "Hamlet"; and a passage in Nash identifies it with a dramatist who, from very convincing circumstantial evidence, is almost certainly Kyd. Now the First Quarto "Hamlet" reveals an imperfect and transitional state of the play, in which many critics believe that we have remains of the early play. Prof. Dowden, indeed, thinks the whole of this First Quarto to show Shakespeare's hand. Prof. Boas, on the contrary, takes the view that the last three acts are quite unlike Shakespeare, while they contain distinct resemblances to Kyd. The plot itself of "Hamlet (he urges), where it departs from the original story drawn from Saxo Grammaticus, shows certain distinct affinities with the plot of "The Spanish Tragedy." We have not space to follow his argument on this point; but he seems to us mainly right, though he sometimes pushes things too far. When he comes to resemblances in the text of the last three acts, we may, however, quote his strongest instances. When Hamlet (in the First Quarto) asks his mother to help him in his revenge, she replies:

> I will conceal, consent, and do my best,
> What stratagem soe'er thou shalt devise.

Prof. Boas cites the dialogue between Belimperia and Hieronymo in Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy":

> BEL. Hieronymo, I will consent, conceal,
> And ought that may effect for thine avail,
> Join with thee to revenge Horatio's death.
> HIER. On then; whatsoever I devise,
> Let me entreat you, grace my practices.

On the news of Ophelia's death, Laertes cries:

> Revenge it is must yield this heart relief,
> For woe begets woe, and grief hangs on grief.

Hieronymo, in Kyd's play, cries over his murdered son:

> To know the author were some ease of grief,
> For in revenge my heart would find relief.

Moreover, he desires "to drown" him "with an ocean of his tears"; which parallels the preceding lines of Laertes:

> Too much of water hast thou, Ophelia,
> Therefore I will not drown thee in my tears.

The King in "Hamlet" says to Gertrude:

> We'll have Laertes and our son
> Made friends and lovers, as befits them both.

Kyd's Castille exclaims to his son and Hieronymo:

> But here, before Prince Balthazar and me,
> Embrace each other, and be perfect friends.

Finally, we may cite Laertes' words to the King:

> You have prevailed, my Lord: a while I'll strive
> To bury grief within a tomb of wrath.

With this compare another passage from Kyd:

> Thou hast prevailed; I'll conquer my misdoubt,
> And in thy love and counsel drown my fear.

Other parallels which Prof. Boas quotes seems to us weaker; one altogether weak, the original in both cases being a well-known passage in Genesis. Besides the parallelisms in the passages we have quoted from the first quarto, the un-Shakespearean movement of the blank verse is very strongly marked. In none of the plays which are certainly the entire work of Shakespeare is there verse so wooden and devoid of vital pulse. At the same time Prof. Boas admits that in the last three acts of the First Quarto "Hamlet" certain characteristics of Kyd are absent. He is driven upon the theory that the early, or Kyd, "Hamlet" had suffered alteration by other hands before Shakespeare finally took it up. Be this as it may (and it obviously weakens his case), we do yet think it strongly probable that Kyd was the author, or first author, of the play from which Shakespeare constructed "Hamlet." We go further, and think it likely that the scenario of "Hamlet" is essentially (though not, it is probable, integrally) that which Kyd constructed.

Digitized by Google

Of the plays assigned to Kyd in the present volume, "The Spanish Tragedy" is alone worth consideration in much detail, as it is alone indisputably Kyd's. "Cornelia" is a translation from the French poet Robert Garnier; while "Soliman and Perseda" is anonymous; nor does the internal evidence point to Kyd so conclusively as one could wish, though it may probably be his. "The Spanish Tragedy," to our mind, depends almost entirely upon a fine sense of stage-effect, and a cunning, though far from faultless plot. The text, as a rule, is best when it is simplest—a direct expression of the striking situations conceived by Kyd's imagination. No doubt there is a certain sententiousness, imitated from Seneca: but we cannot say that to our mind it ever becomes very striking. When Kyd most aims at being striking in his speeches, he either works himself into rant, or knots together a series of the most unutterable euphuisms. Upon these Ben Jonson's satire fastened: "O eyes, no eyes, but fountains fraught with tears!" "O life, no life, but lively form of death!" "O world, no world, but mass of public wrongs!" and so forth. Of the other kind, a favourable specimen is the passage which Prof. Boas admires, wherein the mad Hieronymo describes the imagined infernal dwelling of the man who has murdered his son:

> There is a path upon your left-hand side
> That leadeth from a guilty Conscience
> Unto a forest of distrust and fear,
> A darksome place and dangerous to pass:
> There shall you meet with melancholy thoughts,
> Whose baleful humours if you but uphold,
> It will conduct you to despair and death:
> Whose rocky cliffs when you have once beheld,
> Within a hugy dale of lasting night
> That, kindled with the world's iniquities,
> Doth cast up filthy and detested fumes:
> Not far from thence, where murderers have built
> A habitation for their cursed souls,
> There, in a brazen cauldron fixed by Jove,
> In his fell wrath, upon a sulphur flame,
> Yourselves shall find Lorenzo bathing him
> In boiling lead and blood of innocents.

Prof. Boas, by the way, in the eleventh line of this quotation, misprints "dost" for "doth"—the only error we have noticed. There is undoubtedly a certain imaginative power in the passage, though it never rises very high, and has always a certain perilous verging upon the confines of mere rhetorical effectiveness. But in the close it falls sheer into rant and "blugginess." The madness of Hieronymo, as a whole, placed beside the madness of Lear, is an instructive lesson in "how not to do it": a series of turgid ravings, which aim to represent madness by their inflated departure from nature and sense, instead of being, like the speeches of Shakespeare's maniacs, sense and nature "jangled out of tune." It is a supreme revelation of Shakespeare's innovating power.

The gift of characterisation which Prof. Boas claims for Kyd we totally fail to see. Except, to a certain rough extent, in the Machiavellian villain Lorenzo, and in the very subordinate comic characters, all the personages seem to us lifeless and colourless. Hieronymo himself is a quite generic, crazed, and revengeful old man, individualised in no one trait. But the imaginative contrivance of situation and plot is undeniable, and herein lies the strength of the play. The murder scene must have been thrilling to an audience which as yet knew not Macbeth. It leans towards horror, the killing and hanging being done on the stage; but it is imaginative, and points the way towards the supreme tragedy of Shakespearean murder, where horror becomes merged in terror. As to the finely ironic effect of the final tragedy, where the murder is done in sight of the murdered man's relations, who suppose themselves to be witnessing a play where the actors do but "kill in jest," there can be no question. Here, as elsewhere, when Kyd is most successful, the power lies in the stage-situation, and the dialogue which emphasises the tragic irony of the situation is studiously simple, even prosaic. In spite of the inartificiality with which the "hanging fire" of Hieronymo's revenge is accounted for, the too evident dragging-in of scenes for the mere purpose of getting effects to fill up the pause of waiting, the structure of the play is, on the whole, an admirable and powerful conception. The climax is, as we have said, that the assassins of Hieronymo's son are led to take part in a play which requires that they shall be stabbed on the stage. Their father and uncle look on, and applaud the realism of the performance, to learn at the close, from the triumphant lips of Hieronymo, that it has been realistic unto death. It is a splendid stage idea, marred, unluckily, by an orgie of needless horrors and murders at the finish.

As regards the dialogue alone, Charles Lamb's dictum remains true that "the salt of the old play" is certain interpolated scenes and passages. It is known that Henslowe paid Ben Jonson for additions to the drama; but against this must be set the fact that they are totally unlike Jonson's work and alien to all we know of his genius. Who wrote them we shall never certainly know. Coleridge showed less than his usual insight in thinking it might be Shakespeare; the verse has nothing of Shakespeare's movement, nor is the imaginative quality or diction quite in his style. Excrescences on the action of the play, they are of very high poetic merit; sometimes poignantly ironic, sometimes deeply imaginative. We quote Hieronymo's directions to the painter for depicting the murder of his son:

> "Well, sir, paint me a youth run through and through with villains' swords, hanging upon this tree. . . . Then, sir, after some violent noise, bring me forth in my shirt, and my gown under mine arm, with my torch in my hand, and my sword reared up thus: and with these words: 'What noise is this? Who calls Hieronymo?' . . . Bring me through alley and alley, still with a distracted countenance going along, and let my hair heave up my night-cap. Let the clouds scowl, make the moon dark, the stars extinct, the winds blowing, the bells tolling, the owls shrieking, the toads croaking, the minutes jarring, and the clock striking twelve. And then at last, sir, starting, behold a man hanging, and tottering, and tottering, as you know the wind will wave a man, and I with a trice to cut him down. And looking upon him by the advantage of my torch, find it to be my son Horatio. There you may show a passion, there you may show a passion!"

It is a wonderful miniature. "As you know the wind will wave a man": could anything be more grimly sinister? Then there is Hieronymo's description of the tree on which his son was hung: how he had sown, nursed, and watered it:

> At last it grew, and grew, and bore, and bore,
> Till at the length
> It grew a gallows, and did bear our son,
> It bore thy fruit and mine: O wicked, wicked plant!

That has the most intimate imagination. It is worth note that one of these interpolations anticipates (though roughly) the metre of "Samson Agonistes." Undoubtedly Prof. Boas's edition of Kyd is a gain to our knowledge of the influences which made the Elizabethan stage.

A Steward and Student of Books.

Essays of an Ex-Librarian. By Richard Garnett. (Heinemann. 7s. 6d.)

THESE essays, most—though not all—reprinted from various periodicals, or from the introductions to various books, deserve their collective title. For they bear, as they should do, the imprint of the writer's personality as a steward and student of books, interested in those nice minor questions which arise among professed bookmen, and of which the larger world of literature takes small count. They are the work of one curious in the odd corners and quiet by-ways of literature. Not that—with one exception—they are exactly recondite or out of the way. But they linger peeringly on what most would think trifles. Exceptions there are, where the author has followed the trodden ways of bookland. And all have the clear, unsuperfluous, sifted style of the scholarly littérateur.

Digitized by Google

One of the exceptions is the essay on Coleridge. Not much which is new can nowadays be said about Coleridge, and Dr. Garnett does not on the whole say anything new. But he traces, with more clearness than we have seen it traced before, the influence of Wordsworth on his friend's poetry. This portion of the essay is very interesting and discriminating. Dr. Garnett remarks that Coleridge's poems exemplify in themselves the transition from the convention left by Pope to the new style; and that for this reason his early poems have a value which does not belong to the inferior work of his contemporaries. The early poems are truly conventional in style, despite their underlying promise of originality. It was the influence of Wordsworth's talk, rather than of his writings, which revolutionised Coleridge's style; it was the opening to him of a new way, which he had not himself found. In all this Dr. Garnett is right. That was Wordsworth's gift to Coleridge; as his gift to Wordsworth was the exalting breath of a philosophic gospel which profoundly interfused and elevated all Wordsworth's subsequent work. A more far-reaching commerce does not exist in poetic history. Dr. Garnett selects, as showing the deep change worked upon Coleridge, that most Wordsworth-tinged poem, "Frost at Midnight." One sees Wordsworth in its subtle natural imagination, no less than in the "general panorama in miniature of the whole year, produced by a dexterous selection of striking picturesque circumstances," which concludes it:

> Whether the summer clothe the general earth
> With greenness, or the redbreast sit and sing
> Betwixt the tufts of snow on the bare branch
> Of mossy apple-tree, while the nigh thatch
> Smokes in the sun-thaw; whether the eave-drops fall
> Heard only in the trances of the blast,
> Or if the secret ministry of frost
> Shall hang them up in silent icicles,
> Quietly shining to the quiet moon.

The last four lines might well pass for Wordsworth's; and like his, too, is that touch of the "nigh thatch" which "Smokes in the sun thaw."

As Dr. Garnett says:

> Previously the poet has excelled in those departments which would have equally befitted a good writer of prose; his present performances have so little in common with prose that, were they even despoiled of their metrical form, they would still be poetry. They are better adapted than anything else in our language to exhibit the fundamental distinction between poetry in its purest form and the thought or narrative whose claims to the title of poetry are metrical expression and artificial diction. They have thus the merit of bringing to the plainest issue the question between the poetry of the intellect and the poetry of the imagination.

To the same class as Coleridge belong the essays on Moore, Emerson, Peacock, &c. Indeed, we have underrated the bulk and importance of the papers which deal with literary celebrities. Yet it remains true that the essays which strike one as distinctive deal with those obscure or disputed points which appeal to the bookman par excellence, and their merit is that they all leave clear some matter not previously unravelled, demonstrate, or seek to demonstrate, some new idea. They are not simply otiose. Of such is the essay on the "Date of 'The Tempest,'" which upholds the unpopular view that Shakespeare's play was composed to celebrate the wedding of the Elector Palatine and Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I., in 1613. Dr. Garnett in this follows Tieck, Meissner, and Prof. Goldwin Smith, against the unanimous ascription of an earlier date by other commentators. That "The Tempest" was performed on this occasion we know; and Dr. Garnett's arguments include the seemingly purposeless introduction of the two elaborate masques, which would be explained did Shakespeare write for a Court entertainment, the curiously slight shifting of scene (as if to suit the limited "properties" of a private performance), together with allusions in the play having some affinity with James's situation, and the atmosphere of adventurous discovery, fitting a time when the Virginia plantation was afoot. This theory makes Ferdinand and Miranda to be the royal couple, and Prospero (superficially, at least) James himself. The popular contempt for James has, Dr. Garnett thinks, been of weight in preventing the English acceptance of his view, which, however, has found favour on the Continent, notably with Dr. Brandes. To us it seems by no means unplausible. The essay on "Vathek" revolutionises the traditional idea as to Beckford's rapid composition of that story; "Shelley and Beaconsfield" reveals some unsuspected affinities between those unlike men; "Gycia" essays to correct a wholesale anachronism in Constantine Porphyrogenitus; and "Translating Homer" introduces some Homeric versions by the author himself. Nowhere can you open without being interested by these cultivated manifestations of a studious life; and the reason is that they have, in Dr. Garnett's own words, "preluded their appeal to public interest by interesting the author himself."

A Malayan Jungle Book.

Fables and Folk-Tales from an Eastern Forest. Collected and Translated by Walter Skeat. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. (Cambridge: University Press. 7s. 6d.)

THESE stories, fruit of "the Cambridge expedition of 1899 through the remoter States of the Malay Peninsula," are full of talking animals, and reveal nothing of the subtlety of Malay superstition. They have been rendered in a style appropriate to their simplicity, though once the translator makes the mouse-deer say in modern metaphor: "All right. I'm 'on the spot.'" And they have been illustrated with a care worthy of a text-book on Natural History.

The mouse-deer just mentioned strikes with his very much cloven hoof the keynote of the collection, which is the glorification of chicane. The mouse-deer is described as "a most beautiful little animal, with big dark pleading eyes and all the grace and elegance of a gazelle." His official position seems to have been Chief Dancer of the War-dance in the Kingdom of Solomon, but he appears most characteristically as the deceiver of tigers, who, as long as he is about, discover that they live in a land where it is always the First of April. He is more cunning even than the ape, against whom he is incidentally pitted in a case where Mouse-deer tries to save Friend Elephant from the penalty of losing a foolish wager with a tiger. Mounted on the elephant's back, he has already frightened the tiger away once by crying out, as if he were a dreadful beast of prey, "A single elephant is very short commons," the while the tiger mistakes a stream of molasses running down the elephant's legs for that gambler's life-blood. But the ape meets the retreating tiger and suggests that Mouse-deer was acting the part of the bogey, with the result that the tiger determines to face once more the sticky elephant and his rider.

> But Friend Mouse-deer, sitting on Friend Elephant's back, saw them coming and shouted: "Hullo, Father Ape, this is a dog's trick indeed; you promise to bring me two tigers and you only bring me one. I refuse to accept it, Father Ape."
>
> Now when Friend Tiger heard this he ran off as fast as he could . . . and to this day the Tiger is very wroth with the Ape for trying to cheat him.

Their glorification of chicane does not prevent the stories from exhibiting an exalted ideal of honour. Two tigers,

Digitized by Google

intent on man-eating, agree thus outside the proposed victim's hut: "Whatever you seize shall be your portion, but Whatever plunges down the steps (to escape) shall be mine." But the tiger who was to enter the hut heard "the tune that makes the tiger drowsy," and so fell from his post on the hut-ladder to the ground, > where he was seized by his companion. And when he objected, his companion exclaimed: "Did we not agree that whatever plunged down the steps was to be my portion?" and proceeded to devour him at his leisure.

Equally scrupulous is the winning crocodile in a similar bargain.

Tigers figure in these folk-tales as uniformly stupid, yet there is a Malay legend of tigers who could turn themselves into men, and one even hears of their dwelling under civic government in houses thatched with women's hair. But Mouse-deer has no difficulty in making his striped friend do such domestic work as a charwoman would declaim against; and as regards nerves, the tiger of Malay legend is a true decadent.

Before we leave the animals of this book, we may remark that they have obvious affinity with others that never entered the Ark. They are less didactic than those who figure in the apologues which constitute the oldest matter of the Arabian Nights. They are not always the work of skilled fancies, or we should never read of their doing things which the mind's eye cannot see such animals do. There is a good long stride from Hoffmann's Educated Cat to a conception such as Mouse-deer of Malay legend. Both are scientifically incredible, but the Cat persuades us of its felinity even when learning to read, whereas Mouse-deer might be any number of animals without losing or gaining as an illusion.

Mention of a cat reminds us that the, or perhaps more strictly a, Malayan Deluge was preceded by fights between "all manner of beasts." When the dogs and cats fought, "a great Flood came down from the mountains and overwhelmed the people that dwelt in the plains."

Human beings do not figure to advantage in these tales. We have a Tusky Prince who "commanded to slay a boy daily in order that he might eat the heart thereof, wherefore his tusks grew like those of a cannibal, two at top and two at bottom." That is a touch of the penny didactic dreadful. For the rest there is much eloquence in the calm casualness of the dreadful as herein displayed—e.g., the gobbling of living flesh. But one remembers that in The Travels and Surprising Adventures of Baron Munchausen we are supposed to laugh when the Baron fairly flogs a fox "out of his fine skin" to avoid tearing it. The Baron diverted the late eighteenth century of England. The Malay story-tellers need no better excuse for trifling with our sensibilities.

First-Hand.

Andrea Mantegna. By Paul Kristeller. English Edition by S. Arthur Strong. (Longmans. £3 10s. net.)

"In Padua," wrote Mr. Berenson some years ago, "masters such as Jacopo Bellini, Donatello, and Fra Filippo were all at work, and the younger men certainly studied their productions, and, it may be, enjoyed their actual teaching. It still remains for some investigator to reconstruct this art movement . . . and I venture to prophesy that the result of such researches will be to prove that, deducting the Florentine elements, the so-called school of Squarcione was nothing but an embryonic phase of the Venetian school." Well, Mr. Berenson has found his "investigator," and, better still, his prediction has come true. These are the main and most revolutionary results of Herr Kristeller's labours. The Paduan group, the brief movement that gave birth to the Eremitani frescoes, the statue of Gattamelata, and the high altar of Il Santo, are vividly and searchingly reconstituted; and poor old Squarcione is clearly proved to be what he undoubtedly was, a clever tradesman, employing and profiting by the work of well-chosen collaborators. He ran a large business, and, possessing commercial qualities of the highest order, secured numerous important commissions easily recognisable for the output of a distinguished and reliable firm.

Mantegna was adopted by this master, but he was also the son-in-law of Jacopo Bellini, the brother-in-law of Gian and Gentile. Squarcione's true relationship becomes evident when the younger man "brings his master before the courts of justice and demands the annulling of a contract which the latter had concluded with him in the year 1448, presumably for the common execution of works. The contract is, in fact, declared null and void on the ground that Mantegna was at the time of contracting still a minor and under the power of his father, and, as one of the judges rules, was deceived by Squarcione."

Squarcione, in short, recognising the lad's ability, gets him to sign certain papers at the age of seventeen, has the use of him for eight years, and evidently wants another eight. Mantegna, at the time foremost among Paduan-born painters, married to Jacopo's daughter, looking to Donatello, Antonio Vivarini, and old Bellini for guidance rather than to his alleged "master," has had enough of a relationship forced on him by the necessities of his penniless youth. The position is no uncommon one even at this day.

So much for the Squarcione myth—indeed, for Squarcione in general; and we now await the results of this most effective demolition of a gentleman who hitherto has been the most useful stop-gap in the history of painting, a fact which, no doubt, accounts for his extreme popularity. He was a saviour of time, labour, and research to all the cheap historians. They will miss him. One views his relegation with the more delight in that it is a further vindication of first-hand and first-class research. Herr Kristeller belongs to that devoted band similar even at this day to the clusters of scholars who exchanged correspondence and black-letter volumes in the times he writes about—the few but fit who have made no concessions to the popular demand for showy writing. Admirably equipped, a linguist, a critic of insight, courage, and sympathy, well versed in the history and personalities of his period, sober in argument and untiring in his search for evidence, he brings his whole experience to bear on this slow and difficult task. We follow Mantegna to the court of the Gonzagas, are made to understand his proud relationship to the family he served, the freedom and expansion of his genius. There is a certain Bohemianism in this story of princely expenditure followed by extreme fits of hard-uppishness. Mantegna suffered or profited by these fluctuations in the fortunes of his protectors, and finally died after passing forty-seven years in one service. We are told all that can be told about his paintings; he is considered as an engraver, and in an appendix is printed such correspondence bearing on the master as has come down to us. In brief, Herr Kristeller's book takes immediate rank as the standard work on Mantegna, a fact that is the more evident when we find so distinguished a scholar as Dr. Strong honouring himself and honouring his university by taking over the sponsorship of the English edition. And we may add that so well is the translation made that it might easily pass for an original.

Tit Thoughts.

The Vicar and his Friends. By Cunningham Geikie. (Longmans. 5s. net.)

Did not Dante once "propose to paint an angel," and did not "Rafael make a century of sonnets"? So likewise did Cardinal Wiseman write a novel, and Cardinal Newman two (to name great men), and Dean Farrar some, and Dr. Mivart one ; and, last, Dr. Geikie, whose works occupy a couple of pages of the British Museum Catalogue, comes along with a book shaped and named, at any rate, to simulate one.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Geikie has been at some pains to make his Vicar live ; he devotes his first chapter to that laudable purpose. Unfortunately he never succeeds in imparting any touch of individuality to the man ; he remains a mere universal—a type of the old-fashioned country parson, illuminated with a modern liberalism that is wholly unaware of the obligations of orthodoxy. Above all, it is his function to serve as a safety valve for Dr. Geikie's bursting reservoirs of general information. Not that he stands alone ; his friends are just like him. "The Doctor," for instance, not waiting even for an introduction, bursts out with : "Did you notice the sunset, gentlemen, and the broken clouds and films of vapour lit up to the zenith with embroidery of flame?" And on the next page he is reeling off figures :

> What would Socrates have said had he thought of the power required to raise these floods to the heavens and to hold their waters overhead till the time came to return them to earth? An inch of rainfall, gentlemen, means a hundred tons' weight on an acre ; but the average depth of rain in a year over England at large is thirty-one inches, so that every acre in it receives, say, 3,100 tons of downpour each year. Now, there are thirty-one millions and a quarter acres in England. . . .

—and so forth. And this gentleman serves equally well to discuss the origin of gunpowder, to calculate the quantity of fuel consumed periodically by the sun, or to crack you a wheeze about the cat that with the aid of a meat tin apparatus succeeded in passing herself off as a ghost. Any of them, again, could give you at a moment's notice a neat table of the reasons in support of the luminous principle : "Let each sex keep to the sphere assigned to it by nature." This encyclopædic book of general information and sound principles of moral conduct is even furnished with an index : Aborigines, Abyssinia, Accadians, Achilles, Acute senses—it begins. But let us try our luck. Here, at p. 218, under "Marriage," we have (the Vicar speaks) :

> "'My husband,' said a dear lady to me once, 'told me he wrote down the names of three young ladies when he thought of marriage, and laid them before the Lord, and I was the favoured one.' 'I don't think,' said her daughter, 'it was very complimentary to you that you were one of three!' Honest and simple man, yet shrewd enough, for his prayers directed him to the lady with plenty of money!"

Shrewd and simple Vicar! Well, at any rate, the point was not easy to miss! In fact, this is no more a book than would be a volume of Tit Bits or Great Thoughts ; but you might do worse with a few odd half-hours than expend them in browsing upon it.

A Long Memory.

Links with the Past. By Mrs. Charles Bagot. (Edward Arnold. 16s.)

This book calls for no criticism. It is a pleasant record by a lady of high social position and many memories, and its quiet pretensions are fulfilled. Mrs. Bagot saw the first train start from Watford, on the London and Birmingham (now the London and North-Western) Railway. As a girl, and an aristocrat, she was immensely pleased when it was rumoured that Lord Grey and Lord Brougham were to be taken to the Tower, where she devoutly hoped they would be beheaded for their naughty Reform Bill of 1831. She and her brothers and sisters flattened their noses against a window at Moor Park in order to stare at William IV. and Queen Adelaide, who were breakfasting there as the guests of Lord Westminster in 1831. She danced with her fiancé at one of Lady Jersey's great balls at Almack's. By her marriage she became great-niece to the Duke of Wellington, to whom she was then introduced in Lady Westmorland's box at the opera. "He took my hand and kept it throughout the act. My husband said to me afterwards, 'Why did you not speak to the Duke?' I had been brought up with such intense admiration of him by my father and uncles that I was struck dumb. I simply felt that I was sitting hand in hand with the saviour of England and Europe."

Mrs. Bagot thinks that before bicycling young women were much more beautiful. "They had no hard lines about the mouth, and their beautiful skins were preserved by the cottage straw bonnets of the early Victorian period."

Her life in Staffordshire leads her to recall the Rugeley murder. After Palmer's execution a deputation from the town waited on Lord Palmerston to urge him to change its name. "You may call it after me if you like," was his witty reply.

Mrs. Bagot brings her notes up to 1900, and appropriately ends with the mention of her last sight of Queen Victoria, when she drove round London to identify herself with her people in the present war. "On that day she looked so well and happy." It is, of course, a matter of personal impression, but others, we believe, will tell their children that on that day they observed, as never before, the signs of age and weariness.

Some Essays and an Epigram.

Essays in Paradox. By the Author of Exploded Ideas and Times and Days. (Longmans. 5s.)

This is a modest book of light, workmanly, and straightforward essays. Of the average tone, a good specimen is the essay on "Ornament." It enforces the view that ornament is based on use, and is intolerable where it defeats or has no relation to the purpose of a book or other work of art. This is no new doctrine. Ruskin long since set it forth, as regards the domain of painting and sculpture, with insurpassable grace and eloquence. But the present author puts it well in a clear, level-headed way. For instance :

> As dirt is matter out of place, so ugliness is ornament out of place. You may have all sorts of dirt in literature ; by which I mean that you may have poor similes where they are not wanted, or you may have excellent tropes where they are quite out of place. A church window when I want to see a fine view through clear glass is an impertinent obstruction. There are poems so encrusted with figures of speech, that you cannot, so to speak, see the trees for the leaves. Then you pray for more reticence in your author.

That shows the author's style. It is the fit clothing for a mind of which the prominent character is great good sense and level-headedness, rather than any specially brilliant gifts. The same qualities appear in another passage from the same essay :

> After all, a book is a man. It is not merely an enemy of ennui, and those who read them to fill empty hours have not learnt the first lesson in reading, and that is, that "books are for betterment." All books are school books. You cannot be quite the same after reading a book as you were before. You must either be better or worse. If the book is a good book you are better ; if a bad book you are the worse for it.

This, again, is not new ; but we can afford to have it repeated so directly. "All books are school books" is a quite memorable epigram. Of the other essays, some are sketchy and amusing, such as the concluding paper on "Possession," which shows that the owner is apt to be owned by his belongings. Here and there among these are trifles which are rather too "small beer" for inclusion in a volume ; nor do we much care for the author's deliberate sentiment. Baby-love may be "quite beautiful" (as the author says), but his recollections of it fatally recall the young loves of Master Copperfield.

Digitized by Google

If You are Building a House.

The Art of Building a House. By Barry Parker and Raymond Unwin. (Longmans. 10s. 6d.)

MESSRS. PARKER AND UNWIN are architects in the Midlands, who, having united their intellects in business, have now united them in literature. The result is a pleasant and stimulating book. What the advice of the sapient Mr. Punch would be to those about to erect a house we know not: but our own is—first consult the suggestive pages of Messrs. Parker and Unwin, for they certainly know what they are talking about. Personally we like their counsels better than their drawings. To many persons these counsels will often be trite enough, for at this late day there is little that is new to be said about domiciliation; but in such matters as architecture sane triteness is no vice. Only by hammering away can any good be produced. Other persons, who have never thought seriously on the subject at all, will find much that is fresh to dwell upon. For example, this statement: "A kitchen is best north-east or east, for the first coming down into the fireless house may well have its cheerlessness reduced for the servants by what sunshine is to be had at an early hour; later in the day, when the kitchen is hot with cooking, the heat of the sun should not be added." That is sound and kindly. Architects are not always on the side of the servants. Again: "We do not enough consider when we introduce for the first time into a valley a bright red roof how it will haunt the eye from every point of view, and may go far towards marring the beauty of the whole scene by destroying its restfulness." This again is sound and thoughtful. Architects are not always on the side of restfulness in nature. Altogether, we think Messrs. Parker and Unwin very good guides, and not least so when they are commenting upon cottages for the poor on the estates of the rich.

Between the Deep Sea and ——.

Deep Sea Plunderings. By F. T. Bullen. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

WHILE Mr. Bullen is writing descriptive sketches of whaling, of forecastle life, of "running down the Easting," of "hovelling," or even of the struggle of a pious mind among godless seamen, we know his value. But when he essays to tell stories we are puzzled, we cannot exactly place him. He does not seem to fill any niche. There are Mr. Conrad and Mr. Kipling on the far side, and Mr. Jacobs on the near, to do everything that Mr. Bullen does as a novelist, and do it in a vastly more entertaining way.

The good descriptive writer (and Mr. Bullen is a very good descriptive writer) usually fails as a narrator of human passions: the two gifts are so different. Think, for example, of those awful productions which the late George Augustus Sala labelled novels. Mr. Bullen does not wholly fail—we would not suggest that—but his stories, with one exception, can be left unread as easily as any that we have picked up these many months.

The exception is the tale of Elisha Cushing, the sphinx-like captain of the Beluga, sperm-whaler. This is a good yarn, well conceived and well told, with a spice of the supernatural in it. Moreover, it offers no room to Mr. Bullen's rather terrible form of humour, which, as is too often the case with people who are not humorists, turns chiefly upon the unreproducible badness of bad language—a tiresome topic. Mr. Bullen's dialect, which is also terrible, the story does not escape: but it survives it in a way that some of the others do not.

The book has pictures suitable to it.

Other New Books.

MRS. ALEC TWEEDIE is the clever lady who goes to places on things. She went through Iceland on ponies, through Finland on a cart, through Norway on snow-shoes, and now she has wandered over Mexico on a horse, astride. Why Mexico? She probably thought that good "copy" was to be found there. So she wound up her sitting-room clock to run for 400 days, and left. Mrs. Tweedie must have a way with her, for she could always motion the right people to her side when sight-seeing. Governors gave her their arms, and caused bands to play while she dined. She went impartially to cock-fights and cathedrals, and never saw such fighting or such devotion. She wept to receive flowers from descendants of the Aztecs, and was easily entertained in a typical Mexican restaurant. President Diaz asked her the age of Lord Roberts, and someone gave her a box of chocolates at Cuernavaca. When she arrived home her clock had still about five months to run, and, before winding it again, she prepared this live, confused, entirely agreeable and well-illustrated book, called Mexico as I Saw It (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE note of Mr. Cosmo Rose-Innes's little book, With Paget's Horse to the Front (Macqueen), is its breeziness and a certain frank acceptance of the animalism of soldiering. At Chelsea Paget's men were licked into shape by a Colonial lieutenant, of whom we read: "We knew, because we witnessed the fact, that night after night he racketed round town, a votary always of Venus and the god of wine; but we knew, too, because we witnessed the fact, that every morning, with a bright eye and clear head, he was punctually on parade as fresh as paint, and no tangled formation which our inexperience could effect caused him a moment's hesitation or embarrassment. . . . I suppose it was right that his services were dispensed with, but we had to run the risk of much stupid respectability in exchange for much dissolute ability." The 180 pages of this little record can be read in a short railway journey.

AN appeal to the "courteous reader" in the preface to a Dictionary is a gallant survival. The Rev. Thomas Davidson employs it in introducing Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary, of which he is the editor. The volume contains over 1,200 pages. A fair number of illustrations are let into the columns. Obsolete words found in Spenser, Shakespeare, Milton, and the Authorised Version of the Bible are included.

AN interesting and valuable compilation is brought to a close in the fourth volume of Mr. Bushnell Hart's American History told by Contemporaries (Macmillan. 8s. 6d. net). The ground here covered includes the Mexican war of 1835 and the events of last year. It is singular to find in the early part of the volume a description of a slave auction, taken from the New York Tribune, and in the last few pages an address on the future of the negro, full of moderation and enlightenment, by Booker Talinferro Washington, the negro poet and writer, who recently breakfasted with President Roosevelt at the White House.

WHO reads Harrison Ainsworth's novels now? Messrs. Gibbings answer this question by issuing them in a neat "Windsor" edition, and appropriately begin with Windsor Castle (2 vols., 5s. net). He is very satisfying in his conventional, full-blooded way.

> "Vain woman, your pride will be abased," rejoined Wolsey bitterly.
>
> "Vain man, you are already abased," replied Anne [Boleyn]. "A few weeks ago I would have made terms with you. Now I am your mortal enemy, and I will never rest till I have procured your downfall."

The scene might have been painted by Northcote.

Digitized by Google

Fiction.

Some Women I Have Known. By Maarten Maartens. (Heinemann. 6s.)

THE ingenue invented by Scribe is dead for ever—or at least she has passed simperingly out of respectable literary circles. But the famous femme incomprise, invented once for all by Richardson, and re-invented by Balzac, Turgenev, Paul Bourget, Marcel Prévost, and many others, still lives and cuts a figure in the smart world, her age a changeless thirty or thereabouts. Of the dozen women whom Mr. Maartens has known, the majority were decidedly incomprises. They have the correct nomenclature—The Duchess Eleanor, Madame de Liancourt, Diane de Bragade: their very names define them. We must not be suspected of a desire to launch a mild sneer at Mr. Maarten's book. We have enjoyed it, and we think it contains much excellent work. It has quite all the wit, the discretion, the utter worldliness of Mr. Anthony Hope's social studies; it possesses the air of having been written by the sort of man whom Mr. Charles Wyndham delights to portray on the stage. And it has, in addition, a genuine cosmopolitanism rare enough in English fiction. Reading it, one feels that to Mr. Maartens England, instead of being the centre of the greatest empire, &c., &c., is merely one country in Europe, and that Mr. Maartens knows exactly as much about several other countries as about the country of Charles Spurgeon. The faults of a volume of which the chief interest is feminine and psychological are shortly these. First, the author seems scarcely to have decided whether he was writing short stories or mere studies of character. And the result is an impression on the reader's mind that there should have been either no incident at all, or a little more than there is. Most of the tales, if they are tales, leave one in a condition of surmise. Second, the dialogue is apt to degenerate into an exchange of those vaguely suggestive similes which (it is a matter of common knowledge) real people never by any chance employ:

> "Shall we go to bed, mon Prince?" she said. "It is one o'clock. Cinderella . . . kept earlier hours than that."
>
> "You are always sleepy before anyone else is. It is a relic of Faussinières, where everybody sleeps all day in the eternal dulness of the woods."
>
> "Like the sleeping beauty," she answered. . . . "Mind lest the wrong Prince wakes me!"

Third, Mr. Maartens is too often content with a coarse and unoriginal characterisation—a rather annoying fault in a man who has shown himself capable of extreme subtlety in this respect. Here is an instance: "He is every man's envy! And every woman's ambition! The men bribe his tailor—the women?—for a woman it is the baton de Maréchal to have made the conquest of Guy de Belvalette." Fourth, and last, we must return to our starting-point, and take exception to the monotonous preponderance of the femme incomprise, that excellent dame who has now "lived in three centuries."

Circumstances. By S. Weir Mitchell. (Macmillan. 6s.)

IN a preliminary note the author says: "On a hilltop of an island endeared to me by many memories the ocean wind has permanently bent pine, fir, and spruce. Here and there a single tree remains upright—staunchly refusing to record the effect of circumstance on character." Hence, we suppose, the title. But the book is not such as the note would lead us to anticipate. We are not impressed by the warring of circumstance and character. We are not, indeed, impressed at all. The story is of the sort that might well be written by a doctor of wide experience in mankind and practised in the craft of English composition. That the book fails is merely a proof that something besides knowledge of men and the ability to write decent English is necessary to the outfit of a novelist. This something is creative power, imaginative force, denied to Dr. Weir Mitchell from the beginning. The fault is not his. In this complex narrative of American social and business life in the nineteenth century he has obviously made a serious and successful effort to put away the saccharine sentimentalism of his historical novels. He has tried to be realistic, and he is realistic. He has tried to see his characters with stern impartiality; his impartiality is occasionally so marked as to be painful. He is probably never wrong in his facts; there is nothing of the genial optimist about him here. In a word, the tale would be true—if it truly existed at all, if it made any genuine and convincing impression on the reader. As a projection of life it simply does not exist. It lacks, entirely lacks, the incommunicable breath of vitality. By virtue of that breath Blake could make even a

> Tiger, tiger, burning bright,
> In the forests of the night,

seem as real as a cat on a doorstep. A couple of lines and you see the enormous beast blazing at you through the impassable jungle of the front garden. How did he breathe life into ten ordinary words? Merely by seeing the tiger for himself first, by being himself fascinated by that savage glare, by himself trembling before that "fearful symmetry." Dr. Mitchell has not done likewise. He has ingeniously pieced a narrative together, but as for seeing, as for feeling—No!

Joseph Khassan, Half-Caste. By A. J. Dawson (Heinemann. 6s.)

THIS is a further addition to the already fairly long list of Mr. Dawson's Moorish studies. Apparently its moral is the old moral that you cannot expect anything from a half-caste except feminine charm and an absolute unreliability. Joseph Khassan, the offspring of a Christianised Turk and a Spanish woman, began his career in Morocco ("Morocco, basking like a tiger-cat beside the Mediterranean"), and, having married a pious Englishwoman, set up in London as a religious enthusiast. He had a kind heart, his brotherliness embraced the whole of mankind; and for a certain period he succeeded. Then he was found out—in licentiousness, in dishonesty, and in other smaller sins. He made a sham suicide, and returned to Morocco to adopt the profession of hermit. Mr. Dawson's portrait of Khassan is very clever, the one very clever thing in the volume. It is a rather convincing picture of a half-caste. The rest, we fear, is mainly agreeable sentences. The secondary hero, Dick Dunn, is just one of those good-natured Bohemian journalists whom Mr. Dawson seems quite unable to keep out of his romances. Khassan's wife is not satisfactory; nor are any of the London scenes realised as Mr. Dawson can realise a scene in, say, Tangier. The author's mannerisms show no tendency to disappear. We still have "anent," "from out," and other similar locutions. We also have clumsy English: for example, "the church hung fire," and "function" used in its wrong journalistic sense. We mention such trifles because Mr. Dawson has before now effectively classed himself with the few novelists who meticulously care for their language. Joseph Khassan is by no means a first-rate specimen of what Mr. Dawson can do. It suffers from its facility, from its occasional trivial smartness, from the very obvious influence of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, and from a central lack of imaginative power. It cannot compare, for instance, with Daniel Whyte, or with the best things in African Night's Entertainment. We esteem Mr. Dawson's talent, and we think the moment has arrived for him, of set high purpose to attempt and achieve a truly large work.

Digitized by Google

God's Rebel. By Hulbert Fuller. (Jarrold. 6s.)

For no apparent reason, except that a gambling scene has a sort of fascination for the third-rate novelist, this American novel begins in Monaco. Mr. Fuller twice makes his croupier utter a very curious phrase, Rein ne va plus. The iteration of this cryptic remark in the first chapter prejudiced us against the whole book. It is a tedious and confusing story, very much inferior to some American novels which we have been lately receiving. The interest is constantly shifted from person to person; the incidents are never illustrative, and the reader gradually loses all sense of direction. The style is an irritating admixture of trite figures and turns of speech.

> On the contrary, aside from a certain pugnacity of disposition which was oddly at variance with his dreamy nature, the lad grew up wedded to books and music.

Yet the author has had the ambition to write a novel which should embrace a wider field than the ordinary triangular love-story. He has tried to make a tale out of certain social and economic phenomena in America to-day. He has failed, partly because he does not know his craft, and partly because he lacks imaginative power. His manipulation of industrial enterprises, and the devious tricks of capital against labour, is marked by a painful clumsiness. Nor do his footnotes tend to smooth the reader's path:

> The facts confirmatory of this chapter may be read in the Congressional Report on Trusts, 1888, or in Mr. Henry D. Lloyd's Wealth against Commonwealth.

"May they!" the reader is likely to exclaim.

> The author trusts he need scarcely remind the reader that the above story is no fabrication. Time, scene, and facts may readily be verified.

It is possible.

In short, God's Rebel is an error of discretion.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

The Prophet of Berkeley Square. By Robert Hichens.

A tragic extravaganza. The prophet is a youth who comes under the influence of a charlatan—the astronomer, Sir Tiglath Butt—and suffers. The Prophet was "a man of thirty-eight, of excellent fortune, of fine connections and of admirable disposition." The Prophet was introduced to Sir Tiglath at the Colley Cibber Club. The astronomer had an "enormous brick-red face, round body, turned legs, eyes like marbles and a capacity for drinking port wine." The story is modern, amusing, and impossible, which is to hint that it is by Mr. Hichens. (Methuen. 6s)

Count Hannibal. By Stanley J. Weyman.

A French historical romance, in Mr. Weyman's well-known manner—hairbreadth escapes, moving accidents, &c. The story, which moves briskly, is laid in France in 1572, and before long we are in the horrors of the massacre of St. Bartholomew. "Suddenly a rush of feet, a roar of voices surged past the window; for a moment the glare of the torches, which danced ruddily on the walls of the room, showed a severed head borne above the multitude on a pike." (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

Marietta. By Francis Marion Crawford.

Mr. Crawford explains in a note that he has adapted an old Venetian story. The hero, Zorzi, a Dalmatian waif, is taken into the service of old Angelo the glass-blower, who feared that a man of his own caste would fall in love with his daughter Marietta. In the fifteenth century it was unlawful to teach a foreigner the art of glass-blowing, and old Antonio, intent on art, hardly realised that both Zorzi and Marietta were learning much. The course of the story is easily foreseen and pleasantly realised. (Macmillan. 6s.)

Irish Pastorals. By Shan F. Bullock.

Nine pastorals which should interest those correspondents who have written to us on the Irish brogue. "'Arrah, whisht wi' yours,' retorted Mike. 'D'ye think ye can tell me about meself? A lot o' good the sun or the spring does any man when the blood's cowld in him.'" The pastorals have such titles as "The Planters," "The Turf-Cutters," "The Mowers," "The Haymakers," "The Reapers," "The Diggers." (Richards. 6s.)

The Road to Frontenac. By S. Merwin.

A good, swinging historical novel, opening what time new France had acquired nearly all the fur trade of the Great Lakes. The English Governor, Dongan, of New York, dared not fight openly for it, but he armed the Iroquois and set them against the French. So in the spring of 1687 preparations were being made for a great campaign against the Iroquois. (Murray. 6s.)

A Soldier of Virginia. By B. E. Stevenson.

A tale of Colonel Washington and Braddock's defeat. "It was not until he had sneered at me openly across the boards that I felt my self-control slipping from me. 'Lieutenant Allen seems to have a poor opinion of the Virginia troops,' I said, as calmly as I could. 'Egad, you are right,' he retorted, his eyes full on mine.'" (Duckworth. 6s.)

The Story of Sarah. By M. Louise Forsslund.

A little Dutch seaside community in America supplies the author with her local colour and some of her characters. The story is not easily described, as its effect depends entirely on its faithful and humorous detail. As in so many American stories of the quieter types, the love-making gains much by its rough setting. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

Kitty Fairhall. By John Halsham.

Village life and character, and a story quiet as an old lady's yarn. A novel in which the lovers marry on eighteen shillings a week cannot be called sensational. She was to have married the gamekeeper fellow at Binestead, but preferred Harry Marchant, and the bells rang, and the procession walked, and the rector and the vicar moralised and quoted Latin to each other. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)

Love's Cross Ways. By A. M. Diehl.

"I am Roland Karl Heinrich Adolph of Hohenschlangenberg." We can understand Marie's agitation. For a woman to be told that by her dancing-master, with whom she has fallen in love at college, that he is all this is too sumptuously agitating; but then this is a sumptuously agitating story. A clasping, kissing story, in which someone is always yearning, or daring, to touch someone else's hand. (Digby, Long. 6s.)

We have also received The World and Winslow, by Edith Henrietta Fowler (Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.); Three Men of Mark, by Sarah Tytler (Chatto, 6s.); A Flower of Asia, by Cyril (Burns & Oates, 6s.); A Late Repentance, by T. W. Speight (Digby, Long, 6s.); The Case and the Cure, by Gertrude Gordon (Sands, 3s. 6d.); A Social Pretender, by Winifred Graham (Long, 6s.); Cynthia's Damages, by Reginald Turner (Greening, 6s.).

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

Where is the World?

'Where is the world," cries Young, "at eighty? Where
The world in which a man was born?" Alas!
Where is the world of eight years past? 'Twas there—
I look for it—'tis gone, a globe of glass!
Cracked, shivered, vanished, scarcely gazed on ere
A silent change dissolves the glittering mass.
Statesmen, chiefs, orators, queens, patriots, kings,
And dandies, all are gone on the wind's wings.

.

Ye annals
So brilliant, where the lists of routs and dances is,— Thou Morning Post, sole record of the panels
Broken in carriages, and all the phantasies
Of fashion,—say what streams now fill those channels?
Some die, some fly, some languish on the Continent,
Because the times have hardly left them one tenant.

THUS Byron in 1823, and for some such exclamation the time is always ripe. Byron's recurred to us in watching the elegances and vagaries of Count D'Orsay and Lady Blessington at Her Majesty's Theatre. Such a play as "The Last of the Dandies" must needs be interesting. It recalls the most brilliant part of life in a period which the old can remember. Perhaps it would not be easy to find in London a man who has seen Count D'Orsay, but it would be easy to find men who might have seen him. Sir Algernon West, we know, remembers him, and Gore House, at Kensington, the scene of the play. Crockford's, of course, he must have known well. He can recall the young Disraeli, that wondrous creature, who at Her Majesty's walks into Lady Blessington's reception room, in a black coat and knee-breeches, to tell the company, with his face to the footlights, that one day the House shall hear him. Oddly enough, Sir Algernon never heard at the time of the shouts of ridicule which that maiden speech called forth, or of Disraeli's historic back answer.

In some respects this impersonation of the young Disraeli is the most interesting thing in the play, though its appeal is almost entirely to the eye and to association. You thrill—you cannot help it—when the footman bawls his name. At this time, 1849, he had written all his novels save, of course, Lothair and Endymion. And an odd source of pleasure is the fact that the scenes which you are watching are more or less contained in Henrietta Temple, and are savoured in Tancred, Coningsby, and Venetia. The impersonation may be a disturbing element in the play and the interest it excites may be adventitious; but the truth is that "The Last of the Dandies" is important, not as a play, but as a series of tableaux. To enjoy it one should lean back in a cushioned seat and give oneself to 1849, to the London, the dress, the manners, the ideas, and the follies of the mid-century. There is a shallow yet very pardonable enjoyment to be had from this surrender. Thus people spake and looked! For our part we are not so sophisticated as to be unable to gaze with keen delight through such a loophole into "the world in which a man was born." We own that we can accept such personations with a certain child-like indifference to anything beyond—as, for instance, to the dramatic art which they are intended to serve. This, then, is the Countess Guiccioli! Not at all like her, to be sure, if portraiture has spoken truth; but you don't think of that while you look at yon black-haired beauty in a red robe sprinkled with lace. This is the bride who sprang from the husband who had bought her in Ravenna to the poet who loved her in Venice. This was she with whom Byron stood at Dante's tomb, and roamed the Ravennese pine-woods, and to whom he wrote in her copy of "Corinne": "You will recognise the handwriting of him who passionately loved you, and you will divine that, over a book which was yours, he could only think of love. In that word, beautiful in all languages, but more so in yours—Amor mio—is comprised my existence here and hereafter. . . . My destiny rests with you, and you are a woman, seventeen years of age, and two out of a convent." It was all mad, bad, and sad, of course; and the man of the world can join his sneer to the moralist's wrath; but Byron is before them both with his Ravenna diary:

Through life's road, so dim and dirty,
I have dragged to three-and-thirty.
What have these years left to me?
Nothing—except thirty-three.

They left something to the world which it will not willingly let die, and a desire in many minds to think the best of him who thus—and often thus—abased himself.

So the Guiccioli of "Her Majesty's" does not cross the stage unwatched. Her Byron, however, has been dead twenty-three years, and now Mr. Benjamin Disraeli is dancing with her. And some of us, who are yet young, have seen the traffic parted at Piccadilly Circus while Lord Beaconsfield, a grave and waxen figure, with every secret of Downing Street in his breast, walked slowly across on a policeman's arm! Perhaps no life of our age has presented a range so vast and striking as that of the Disraeli who lounged at Gore House, or at Crockford's tables, in embroidered waistcoats, his fingers covered with jewellery, in his hand a tasselled cane, and the Disraeli who annexed Cyprus and made Queen Victoria an Empress.

We cannot here pretend to recall the dazzling and prodigious gaities in which the author of Vivian Grey bore his part. The annals of those days are a library. At Gore House, on the rural Kensington Road, Lady Blessington and Count D'Orsay—living in relations which have never been defined though often denounced—received princes, statesmen, soldiers, poets, exiles. The overflowing hospitality, the splendour of the rooms, the pictures, the bric-a-brac, the beauty of the great garden where laburnum gilded the air and the nightingales sang in the thickets, the wit and beauty of the Countess and the polish and versatile perfections of D'Orsay carried all before them. Hither the most instant news was brought. Here State secrets were common talk. The Duke of Wellington, Lord Chesterfield, Brougham, and Landseer strolled on to the lawn. Lord Lytton, Thackeray, and Dickens were visitors in the zenith of their fame. Landor, who had spent the happiest days of his life with the Blessingtons in their villa on the Arno, found in Gore House the quintessence of London. In the great drawing-room Moore held these men spellbound with his songs. Nathaniel Willis relates that one evening he sang "When First I Met Thee" with a pathos that beggared description. "When the last word had faltered out, he rose and took Lady Blessington's hand, said good-night, and was gone before a word was uttered."

As for the Count, the diaries written by his friends reveal him, with all his private faults, as a man of incomparable charm, savoire faire, and generosity. He was above six feet in height, and in form a statue. He had a leg; his hip swelled like a summer wave; his coat collars rolled sublime, and tailors and valets served him with piety. Captain Gronow says: "When I used to see him driving in his tilbury, some thirty years ago, I fancied that he looked like some gorgeous dragon-fly skimming through the air: and, though all was dazzling and showy, yet there was a kind of harmony which precluded any idea or accusation of bad taste." Of such the world hath need. But the Count shone also as a painter, a horseman, a fencer, a wit, and a friend in adversity. As Count Mirabel in Henrietta Temple he radiates happiness, and his rescue of Ferdinand Armine from the sponging house is only like a transcript of one of his good deeds.

Digitized by Google

> The day wore away, the twilight shades were descending; Ferdinand became every moment more melancholy, when suddenly his constant ally, the waiter, rushed into the room. "My eye, sir, here is a regular nob enquiring for you. I told you it would be all right."
>
> "Who is it?"
>
> "Here he is coming up."
>
> Ferdinand caught the triumphant tones of Mirabel on the staircase.
>
> "Which is the room? Show me directly. Ah! Armine, mon ami! mon cher! Is this your friendship? To be in this cursed hole, and not send for me! C'est une mauvaise plaisanterie to pretend we are friends! How are you, good fellow, fine fellow, excellent Armine? If you were not here I would quarrel with you. There, go away, man." The waiter disappeared, and Count Mirabel seated himself on the hard sofa.
>
> "My dear fellow," continued the Count, twirling the prettiest cane in the world, "this is a bêtise of you to be here and not send for me. Who has put you here?"
>
> "My dear Mirabel, it is all up."
>
> "Pah! How much is it?"
>
> "I tell you I am done up. It has got about that the marriage is off, and Morris and Levison have nabbed me for all the arrears of my cursed annuities."
>
> "But how much?"
>
> "Between two and three thousand."
>
> The Count Mirabel gave a whistle.
>
> "I brought five hundred, which I have. We must get he rest somehow or other." . . .
>
> "By Jove, Mirabel, I never was so glad to see anybody in my life. Now you are a friend; I feel quite in spirits."
>
> "To be sure! always be in spirits. C'est une bêtise not to be in spirits. Everything is sure to go well. You will see how I will manage these fellows, and I will come and dine with you every day until you are out: you shall not be here eight-and-forty hours. As I go home I will stop at Mitchell's and get you a novel by Paul de Kock. Have you ever read Paul de Kock's books?"
>
> "Never," said Ferdinand.
>
> "What a fortunate man to be arrested! Now you can read Paul de Kock! By Jove! you are the most lucky fellow I know. You see, you thought yourself very miserable in being arrested. 'Tis the finest thing in the world, for now you will read Mon Voisin Raymond. There are always two sides to a case."

This scene from Disraeli's novel seems to have furnished Mr. Fitch with several good hints; indeed, in both versions of his career, D'Orsay appears as the mender of a broken love affair. Nor does Disraeli forget the dandy in the good fellow. "The best-dressed man in London, fresh and gay as a bird," he canters through Hyde Park. "He reins in his steed beneath a tree, under whose shade are assembled a knot of listless cavaliers. The Count receives their congratulations, for this morning he has won his pigeon match."

Even for Crockford, whose heavenly "hell" in St. James's-street is staged at Her Majesty's with interesting effect, Disraeli has a good word; but then he is writing of an age in which great excellences and great errors were often blended. We have always liked the passage in which Mr. Bond Sharpe surveys his gaming tables and opens his heart to Ferdinand:

> "I have risen by pursuits which the world does not consider reputable, yet, if I had not had recourse to them, I should be less than nothing. My mind, I think, is equal to my fortune; I am still young, and I would now avail myself of my power and establish myself in the land, a recognised member of society. But this cannot be. Society shrinks from an obscure foundling, a prize-fighter, a leg, a hell-keeper, and an usurer. Debarred therefore from a fair theatre for my energy and capital, I am forced to occupy, perhaps exhaust, myself in multiplied speculations. Hitherto they have flourished, and, perhaps, my theatre, or my newspaper, may be as profitable as my stud. But I would gladly emancipate myself. These efforts seem to me, as it were, unnecessary and unnatural. The great object has been gained. It is a tempting of fate. I have sometimes thought myself the Napoleon of the sporting world; I may yet find my St. Helena."
>
> "Forewarned, forearmed, Mr. Sharpe."
>
> "I move in a magic circle: it is difficult to extricate myself from it. Now, for instance, there is not a man in the room who is not my slave. You see how they treat me. They place me upon an equality with them. They know my weakness; they fool me to the top of my bent. And yet there is not a man in that room who, if I were to break to-morrow, would walk down St. James's-street to serve me. Yes! there is one; there is the Count. He has a great and generous soul. I believe Count Mirabel sympathises with my situation."

Of this London of fifty years ago, its daylight and its night fumes, Disraeli's novels are full. On a day we drive to Richmond in "the most perfect cabriolet in London," and come back by water. "It was a delicious summer evening. The setting sun bathed the bowers of Fulham with refulgent light, just as they were off delicate Rosebank." D'Orsay sang a Spanish serenade, thrumming on his sleeve. Westminster Bridge was reached, and in britscha and chariot the party dispersed. Ah, these golden evenings that have been—these unite the generations of Londoners. The salons may empty, the gaming-tables be broken, the gilt fade from wall and pillar, the sounds of the street may keep their endless gamut of change, but still on Lambeth Palace the sunset throws a quiet glory, still in Kensington Gardens the sheep wander and bleat, and the great trees grow greater in the squares, and the night wind blows freshly from the west in Oxford-street, while the lights shake for miles, and two friends, young, poetic, and amazed by life, elbow and chant their way through the crowd of the day and year. This was and is and shall be. Londoners go, and their graves are paved over, but London awakes every morning. To Youth, as to Mr. Yerkes, it is still "virgin ground."

Things Seen.

An Old Lady.

I OPENED a new volume of essays, and in one of them, under the title "On the Art of Taking Things Coolly," my eye fell upon this passage: "How much of the quiet happiness of the world depends on the careful thrift of self-denying men and women who have passed to their rest."

And I saw a little old lady who had passed her uneventful life from youth to age in an unimportant seaport town. Shy, sensitive, prim, she asked nothing but to be allowed to live out her days in her own way, pursuing her orderly ideal. She was of those to whom the practice of self-denial is a daily habit. With her the question always was: "What can I do without?" Clothes, food, pleasures, friends, were all reduced to a minimum. One unobtrusive servant she kept, and she always made her own bed. Her recreation was the collection of seaweed, which she dried and fixed neatly in monstrous albums. She never had but two dresses in wear. They were black, and one was worn only on Sundays. She was accused of meanness by the neighbours; she never resented the imputation. The conduct of her life had been carefully thought out and was ordered on a principle that gave her a gentle satisfaction. Why should she explain it to the world? When she died, at the age of seventy, besides her furniture and personal effects, the executors had to dispose of nine large volumes of dried seaweed. She also left sixteen thousand pounds—

Digitized by Google

"To be divided among my fourteen dear nephews and nieces."

So it happened that fourteen men and women scattered over the country each came into possession of a sum that made a permanent difference in their lives. It was not much, you may say, but it was enough to give them confidence in the day, to make them feel that they had a protection against the assaults of illness and bad luck. Most of them had never seen that little old lady, their shy relation, and none of them knew of the economies she was practising during her lifetime, of the comforts she denied herself in order to carry out the rule of life she had set herself. I thought of her when I read that passage—"How much of the quiet happiness of the world depends on the careful thrift of self-denying men and women who have passed to their rest."

The Circus Passes.

WHETHER I was awakened by the dog, or the din that awakened him, or both combined, I cannot tell. But I know I found myself out of bed, and craning out of the window, in time to see a procession much more effective than any I have seen under circus canvas. It was just gray day, no more, and through the mist there passed great vans, cars, horses, shouting men, elephants, and camels. The ground shook with their going; whips cracked; all the dogs of the village barked in chorus. The great gilded car which, later, would bear a circus-queen in triumph through a sleepy Surrey town was swathed in canvas. The horses which drew it were led by an Ethiopian, "black as the constant sun could make him." It was as though I had chanced upon a rehearsal for a Roman triumph.

The elephants interested me most. There was about them a majestic and patient innocence which seemed to be inspired by the memory of many generations. I wondered how they lived and how they endured such trivial bondage. One question was partly answered in an unexpected manner. The leader of the five paused at the garden fence which adjoins mine, and proceeded to appropriate cabbage after cabbage.

To him they were like cherries to a boy—no more.

The New Irish Movement.

A Conversation.

As he climbed into the railway carriage I instinctively recognised the enthusiast. A badge of the Gaelic League dangled at his button-hole, in one hand he carried a copy of An Claidheamh Solvis, and the green cover of O'Growney's Irish Grammar peeped from his pocket.

In a few minutes we drifted into conversation, and he told me he was going to spend his holidays at an Irish-speaking village in Donegal.

"Though I must confess," he added modestly, "that my knowledge of Irish is rather limited. I began it only last winter and I'm in the fourth part of O'Growney now—still it will be a splendid experience."

"But look here," I asked, "what's behind it all? Do you mean to do away with English altogether?"

He shook his head. "That is to look too far in front; at present our ambition is not so great. In the first place, we want our people to know something of their own land."

He pointed out of the window to the country steeped in the autumn sunshine, to the yellow corn-fields, the scattered white cottages, and the mountains covered with heather.

"As far as you can see," he said, "there's not a hill nor a stream that has not a legend or a tale connected with it; and without a knowledge of Gaelic the country is a closed book to you. This is one side of the movement that makes for success. We have opened people's eyes to the history of Ireland; a history nine out of ten of us know nothing about."

"I beg your pardon," I interrupted, "but that's surely wrong! Why, ever since I can remember, the Irish have deafened the world by appeals to history—what about Limerick, the Union, '98, the Penal Laws?"

"I daresay it sounds incomprehensible to English ears—but it's true nevertheless. We learned something of English Ireland but of Irish Ireland we know less than nothing. In our schools, for instance, Irish history is under a strict taboo. Of course, I know there were political reasons; but looking at it even from a purely English point of view it was a great mistake. The remedy was worse than the disease. You banished Irish history from the schools, and it found its home at the fire-side and the street corner. The natural result followed: one side are always angels and the other always devils. Sometimes an historian tries to hold the balance even; but there are few to listen to him—we have soaked ourselves so long with strong waters, that anything milder seems tasteless.

"With the language itself things were worse. In the forties it was still flourishing. Emigration and the Famine struck it a hard blow, but it lived. Then came the National Schools. They were well meant—I don't dispute that. What was their effect, though? It sounds like comic opera, but it's true, unfortunately. The children, to whom English was as intelligible as Arabic, were forced to learn everything through that medium, and schoolmasters took a pride in flogging the Irish out of them—you can imagine the result!"

"But," I interrupted, "if the people had really been in earnest they might have made a much better fight. They gave it up very easily."

He nodded. "I am coming to that, and it is the blackest thing against us. Even to-day the bitterest opposition we meet is from our own people. 'What's the good of it?' they say. 'It'll fail as everything else failed—look at O'Connell, Butt, Parnell.' The Gaelic-speaking population themselves have to a certain extent lost heart. It has been preached to them so often that Irish was barbarous, clumsy, and, greatest crime of all, 'not respectable,' that many of them disclaim all knowledge of it, and stultify their intelligence by adopting a jargon of 'pidgin English.'

"Still this state of affairs arose from a very natural mistake. For a long time even the best Irishmen fancied that to be equal with England all they had to do was to imitate England. That was the cardinal error of the Young Irelanders—the most unselfish Irish movement of the century. They thought a great part of the salvation of Ireland lay in reading Carlyle and stringing heroic ballads. If we had taken to Carlyle it would have done us a lot of good, but we never advanced that far. Look at the bookstall in the next station and you will see precisely where we stopped.

"I know nothing more depressing than to see the thousands of penny weeklies that are mailed off every Saturday to the smallest towns all over Ireland, where it is ten chances to one you would not find a copy of George Eliot or Sir Walter Scott if you searched the whole place."

"I have often heard these papers objected to on literary grounds, but I never knew they were considered harmful."

"Ah! you don't take my point. In England these papers are a nuisance, but I should scarcely call them actively injurious. In Ireland they are wholly artificial, as artificial as one of Kipling's cockney ballads would be to a Hindu. Indeed, in many ways the position of the lower classes in Ireland is very like that of those Hindus who have forgotten their own language for a smattering of English, picked up from cram books in missionary schools."

Digitized by Google

"And the object of the Gaelic League, I presume, is to remedy this?"

"As far as possible. We want to make an Irish Ireland—not necessarily an Ireland isolated from the rest of the world, but an Ireland capable of originating thought for itself, instead of borrowing wholesale from the thought of other nations.

"It has been a hard fight, but on the whole we are advancing, slowly, very slowly, but still advancing. Nearly every Irish paper to-day publishes a column of Gaelic, and that in itself means much. Then the different Feisanna all over the country have helped. Prizes are offered for unpublished Irish airs and original compositions in Irish prose and verse, with the result that instead of music-hall ditties and questionable stories, the people are beginning to sing the old songs and tell the old tales again.

"No doubt that does not seem a great achievement, but a little leaven leavens the whole lump. And when unbelievers sneer at us they should remember that up to the present we have been only clearing the road. The constructive work is still to come. We must give Irishmen something in place of the foreign importations they have left aside. We must teach them to stand on their own feet, to be self-sufficing, to mould what is good in other nations to their own necessities, not to be moulded by it. Nationality, that is what we want."

The train whistled suddenly, and he popped his head out of the window.

We were crawling along the bare flank of a mountain, in front was a huddle of weather-beaten houses, set in a stony, treeless valley, and beyond that the Atlantic stretched green and blue to the horizon. Everywhere a great stillness brooded, and the air was full of the scents of heather and peat smoke.

He waved a hand comprehensively. "Here it is at last—Irish Ireland. This is the bed-rock on which we are going to build."

The train drew up at the tiny station with a prodigious clatter, and I helped him out with his luggage. "If you come back in five years," he said, holding out his hand, "please God you'll find a different country."

As we steamed out I saw him in the midst of a knot of sunburnt peasants, chattering noisy welcomes: and on the fringe of the crowd I caught a glimpse of fluttering magenta shawls, and below the shawls a vision of flashing black eyes and smiling lips, from which I am sure the liquid Gaelic sounded like a caress. Someday I think I shall go there to study Irish myself. J. W.

Correspondence.

"Rather."

SIR,—Your article on "Words: Some True and False Uses," was most interesting, but I venture to call to your notice a most ill-used adverb whose case ought to be taken up. I mean the word "rather," which seems to be assuming the meaning assigned to it by the schoolboy who, when you ask him if he has enjoyed his holidays, will probably reply, "Rather," and we know what that means. But why in serious writing should "rather" be twisted from its real meaning and made to do the duty of "very"? But so it is, and in Lucas Malet's last book it comes in frequently: "A rather delightful house," "A rather tremendous" something or other.

Can anything be "rather tremendous"? This is an English error, and quite as offensive to me as the Americanism "right" delightful or "right" tremendous would be, though I am not an American.—I am, &c.,

ELIZABETH SEYMOUR.

[The use of "rather," objected to by our correspondent, is, of course, indefensible. It belongs, however, to Society slang rather than to any lasting bad habit of speech; and probably in Lucas Malet's novel it is put into the mouths of her characters.]

The Irish Brogue.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the correspondence which recently appeared in the ACADEMY on the subject of the Irish brogue, as represented by English writers.

May I observe that not only the brogue, but also the expressions common to Irish people, are often most ludicrously misrepresented?

In a serial story which went through the Sunday Strand about a year ago an Irish curate is represented as saying: "You'll be after wanting me to get so-and-so." Now such an expression is totally at variance with the Irish idiom, which solely refers to the past, and is, indeed, a literal translation from the original Celtic. "I'm after looking, after buying," &c., means that the speaker has just finished doing certain things, and is closely akin to the French idiom, "Je viens de chercher, viens d'acheter," &c., literally, I come from doing so-and-so. To garble the past with the future is an offence that no Irish person ever committed. "I'm after doing so-and-so" may be considered vulgar, but it is certainly not ungrammatical.

An expression which English writers frequently put into the mouths of their Irish peasants is "By jabers." I have lived the greater part of my life in Ireland, both in the north and south, but I have never heard it. "Bedad!" and "Begor!" are quite common, but not "By jabers!" It would be advisable for English writers to leave the Irish dialect severely alone, for they are sure to come to grief when they try to represent it. They generally produce an impossible jargon, built after the conventional stage pattern.

Not long ago, an English novel-writer, describing an arrival at a railway station in Ireland, mentioned that a "jaunting-car, drawn by a pair of spirited grey horses, was waiting to convey the travellers to their destination!"—I am, &c., C. J. HAMILTON.

The Plague of Women.

SIR,—Referring to the article in a recent issue, wherein you very justly satirise the "art" of such writers as "Rita," I venture to enter a protest against the tendency exhibited by women writers to monopolise the field of fictional work. Were the majority of these writers earning their daily bread by their toil, I would not for one moment make this protest, but it is a notorious fact that at least 75 per cent. of female novelists enjoy independent incomes (a) from property of their own, (b) from their positions as wives of wealthy men; and, in view of this fact, it seems scandalous that male writers, who have to rely for their existence upon the profits of their work, should find themselves excluded from well-nigh every journal which publishes serial fiction, simply because women will accept lower rates,

LONDON LIBRARY, St. James Square, S.W.
Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
Vice-Presidents—The Rt. Hon. LORD ACTON, the Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P., the Rt. Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P., D.C.L., HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.
Trustees—Rt. Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S., Rt. Hon. EARL of ROSEBERY, Rt. Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF.
The Library contains about 200,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room open from 10 till half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 1888 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D.,
Secretary and Librarian.

Digitized by Google

NOVEMBER 6th, Price 6s. net. NOVEMBER 6th, Price 6s. net.

"WHAT'S WHAT."

A LONG-WANTED

GUIDE TO MODERN LIFE.

THE CHEAPEST BOOK EVER ISSUED.

1.—The Only Single Volume including the subjects of all Works of Reference necessary to Modern Life.

2.—2,500 New Articles, every one written specially for this Book since October, 1900—i.e., absolutely up to date.

3.—The work of 56 Writers, including many celebrated Experts.

ILLUSTRATED BY

4.—Full-Page Colour Plates, Portrait of the Author, Tone and Line Blocks, Charts, and Maps, all specially designed and Engraved for this Book. 20 Full-Page cuts.

5.—Containing information for Travellers as to Towns of Interest, Hotels, Restaurants, Railway Fares and Trains; Journalism, Health; Climates suitable for Invalids; Tradespeople; Character and Cure of Diseases; Dress; Food; Houses, Flats, &c.; Nature of Raw and Manufactured Products; Social Matters; Management of Servants, Care of Children, Education of Girls; Sports and Games; Sketches of Celebrated People and Places; Medical Men; Training for and Chances in the Profession; Drugs and their Properties; Modern Poetry and Fiction; House Decoration and Furniture; Musical and Artistic Training; Stock Exchange Speculation and Gambling; and Scholarship; Public Schools; Books of Science, Novels; Gardening, &c.; the Army, Navy, and Civil Service; Employment of Women; Pictures; Shops; Religion, &c.

6 Length equal to Ten 6s. Novels; price equal to One.

HARRY QUILTER. SONNENSCHEIN & CO.

Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.'s List.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST.—JUST OUT.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS of JEAN INGELOW and her EARLY FRIENDS. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is pleasant to see this unassuming little memoir."—Athenæum.

A MEMOIR of the REV. HENRY TWELLS, M.A., Hon. Canon of Peterborough. By the Very Rev. WILLIAM CLAVELL INGRAM, D.D., late Dean of Peterborough. With Portrait and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"We are glad to have this account of a man who was as exemplary in his life as he was able and accomplished."—Spectator.

LAITY in COUNCIL. Essays on Ecclesiastical and Social Problems. By Lay Members of the Anglican Communion. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

"Worth reading as a guide to certain tendencies of opinion upon matters of vital importance to the Church."—Church Quarterly Review.

TWENTIETH EDITION.

This Revised Edition contains an Appendix on the Articles and considerably Enlarged Notes on the Occasional Offices and Ordinal.

THE PRAYER-BOOK: Its History, Language, and Contents. By the Rev. Canon EVAN DANIEL, M.A. Extra large crown 8vo, 700 pp., cloth boards, 6s.

"So large, wide, and speedy a circulation is proof of the high merit of this treatise."—Guardian (Second Notice).

MR. GORDON BROWNE'S NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOK.

FAIRY TALES from HANS ANDERSEN. With Introduction by HENRY CLODD, and numerous Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Uniform with "Grimm's Fairy Tales," &c. Large crown 8vo, extra cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

THE BOOK of KING ARTHUR and his NOBLE KNIGHTS. Stories from Sir Thomas Malory's "Morte Darthur." By MARY MACLEOD. Introduction by Prof. HALES. With Illustrations from Drawings by A. G. Walker, Sculptor.

"Truly beautiful. One of the most excellent gift-books of the year," Literature.

London: WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.

. . FROM . .

Mr. Grant Richards's Autumn List

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHRONICLES of the HOUSE of BORGIA. By FREDERICK BARON CORVO. With 10 Photogravure Illustrations. Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt extra, 21s. net.

"THE REVIVAL OF PHRENOLOGY."

THE MENTAL FUNCTIONS of the BRAIN: an Investigation into their Localization and their Manifestation in Health and Disease. By BERNARD HOLLANDER, M.D. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 21s. net.

"His book merits careful attention as a serious contribution to a subject of profound importance, in which lamentably little progress has been made."—THE STANDARD.

PRESENT IRISH QUESTIONS. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS, Author of "The Campaign of 1815," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE MAN CHRIST JESUS: a Life of Christ. By the Rev. W. J. DAWSON. With 8 Illustrations in Photogravure. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

"It deserves high praise for its freshness and power, its insight into characters and situations, its dramatic effectiveness, and its often brilliant word-painting."—GLASGOW HERALD.

ENGLISH CHURCH NEEDLEWORK. A Practical Handbook for Workers and Designers. By MAUD R. HALL. Illustrated. Crown 4to, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

IRELAND and the EMPIRE By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE REVISED EDITION of the WORKS of COUNT TOLSTOY. Edited by AYLMER MAUDE. I. SEVASTOPOL. Translated by LOUISE MAUDE. With Portrait of Tolstoy. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

MARAT: the People's Friend. By E. BELFORT BAX. (New and Cheaper Edition.) With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR FATE and the ZODIAC: an Astrological Autograph Book. By MARGARET MAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

D'RI and I. By Irving Bacheller, Author of "Eben Holden." Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

CASHEL BYRON'S PROFESSION. By BERNARD SHAW. A New Edition with a New Preface. With New Stage Version of the Story in Elizabethan blank verse, entitled "The Admirable Bashville; or, Constancy Unrewarded"; and a Note on Modern Prizefighting. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

EREWHON REVISITED. By Samuel BUTLER. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE TIMES says:—"The novelty and charm of the book consist..... in its vivid narrative, in its life-like verisimilitude, in its irony, in its satire, in its quaint and whimsical humour. To say that in these respects it is a worthy sequel to 'Erewhon' is to give it high praise, and quite enough to recommend it to all judicious readers."

EREWHON. By Samuel Butler. (New and Revised Edition.) Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE says: "It has..... a clearness and gravity like Swift's, a perfection of make-believe like Defoe's."

IRISH PASTORALS. By Shan F. BULLOCK. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE STORY of SARAH. By M. Louise FORSSLUND. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE WORLD'S CLASSICS.

NEW VOLUMES.

Pott 8vo, leather gilt, 2s. each net; cloth gilt, 1s. each net.

6. THE ESSAYS of RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

7. THE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN KEATS.

London: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

and will, in the words of an editor friend of my own, "write for the fun of the thing." Obviously, the "fun" is confined to themselves, for the readers do not participate in the same when reading the nauseous twaddle which usually goes to make up the average serial.

To me it seems almost uncanny and inexplicable that a woman, with an assured income of say £500 or £1,000 a year, should desire to spend many hours daily in turning out sickly slosh, when she might employ her time in a dozen different ways more interesting and more pleasant. In speaking thus, I am not referring to writers of the George Eliot type, whose authorship is as essentially a part of themselves as their hands, tongues, or hearts; but I am referring to those ladies who could make bricks, brushes, or anything else with the same skill as they write novels. Let them leave the art of fiction alone—they do nothing to elevate it, and they rob male writers of their living.

In no other profession does the wealthy female figure so prominently as in the literary profession. For one actress who could live without the exercise of her art, there are fifty women novelists who could live without taking up a pen for the remainder of their lives.

Lord Kitchener referred, some months ago, to the "plague of women in South Africa." The plague exists elsewhere, and nowhere more aggressively than in the field of modern fiction.—I am, &c.,

A Literary Free-Lance.

Playgoers' Club, W.C.

["A Literary Free-Lance" has expended more indignation than thought on his letter. It ought to be a matter of no difficulty for "male writers" to compete successfully against "sickly slosh." If they cannot do this their complaint lies not against the well-to-do women writers who produce it, but against the publishers, editors, and above all the public, who welcome it. Of course, male writers who are in the "sickly slosh" line themselves, and cannot make it pay, have a trade grievance. But for such our heart refuses to bleed.]

Dourness.

Sir,—In an extract which you give from Mr. Archer's article on Professor Masson there occurs the following sentence: "Dourness is the one national characteristic in which Professor Masson is lacking."

As a Scotsman Mr. Archer ought to know that the word "dour" means "sullen," or "sulky," and no man having any acquaintance with the character of the average Scot can say that of him.

Stubbornness or doggedness may be national characteristics, but "dour" conveys a deeper meaning. That there are Scotsmen to whom the epithet might justly be applied goes without saying, but there are also sulky Americans and Englishmen.—I am, &c.,

Roy Carmichael.

68, Mill-street, Alloa.

Our Weekly Competition.

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea to the sender of a list of the twelve best novels, published this year up to October 26, which should most nearly approximate to the general judgment. We have received a large number of replies, which are under examination. We shall publish the results, and award the prize, in our next week's issue, which will contain a special Fiction Supplement.

Competition No. 111 (New Series).

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best verses entitled "Bulbs." Not to exceed 20 lines.

Rules.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, The Academy, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, November 6. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

CHEAPEST GOOD BOOKS MADE

The "Unit Library" is the cheapest series of books ever published in England or America. To ensure proportionate prices a system of publishing has been evolved which is new to the English people. A unit of measure has been fixed upon, and it is this idea which the title of the series is intended to emphasize. This unit is 25 pages. The rate per unit of 25 pages is ½d. or 2d. per 100 pages. The paper cover will cost 1d. in addition to the total number of units, the cloth binding will be 5d. additional, and the leather binding 10d. additional.

HOW PRINTED, HOW BOUND

The books will be printed in a broad-faced legible type on an antique white wove paper, thin in texture, but strong. In size the books will be 4¼ by 6⅝ inches. They may be had in three attractive bindings—stout paper, cloth, and leather Considering 250 pages as the equipment of an average volume, it will sell at 6d. net in paper, 10d. net in cloth, and 1s. 3d. net in leather. A cheerful crimson is to be the uniform colour of the three bindings.

TRUSTWORTHY TEXTS CAREFULLY EDITED

The volumes will be unabridged, printed from the best editions, shorn of any editorial "appreciation" but furnished with such assistance as may enable the man in the street to understand the nature of the work and its place in the world's literature. Such assistance will take the form simply of tables of dates, bibliographical, biographical, and other encyclopædic memoranda.

TO KNOW MORE OF IT

Ask your bookseller or newsagent to supply you with one or two of the volumes in the "Unit Library." Or send your request direct to the publisher, mentioning the Academy and enclosing 1s. for a complete prospectus of this new publishing idea and two specimen volumes in paper and cloth bindings. A prospectus will be sent free on receipt of a postcard request if the Academy is named therein. The first 12 books to appear are:

1. Thackeray's Esmond.
2. Dickens' Christmas Books.
3. Darwin's Voyage of a Naturalist.
4. The Buccaneers of America.
5. Emerson's English Traits.
6. Doran's Monarchs Retired from Business.
7. Plutarch's Lives.
8. Horace in Latin and English.
9. Browning's Poems.
10. Surtees' Handley Cross
11. Dante's Divine Comedy
12. A Dictionary of Dates.

Address: Wilford Bell, 10, Norfolk Street, London, W.C.

Digitized by Google

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed CATALOGUE sent post free on application.
DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square, London, W.

CATALOGUE, 1901-1902.
PUBLISHERS' REMAINDERS, comprising Books in all departments of Literature, perfectly NEW IN CONDITION and greatly REDUCED IN PRICE.
WILLIAM GLAISHER,
Remainder and Discount Bookseller,
265, High Holborn, London.
We also issue a useful Catalogue of Popular Current Literature at Discount Prices, and a Catalogue of French Literature.

BOOKS.—10,000 WANTED. List free. 25s. each offered for Moore's "Alps," 1864; "Hawbuck Grange," 1847. Rare Books Supplied. Catalogues free.—HOLLAND'S Great Book Shop, Birmingham.

FINE ENGRAVINGS and ETCHINGS by OLD and MODERN MASTERS.—EXHIBITION NOW OPEN at Mr. R. GUTEKUNST'S GALLERY, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W. 10 to 6 Daily. Admission, One Shilling.

ATTRACTIVE PROFESSION.—JOURNALISM for BOTH SEXES.—Send stamp for particulars to "DEX," "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKSELLERS in BIRMINGHAM.—"EDWARD BAKER, John Bright Street, is the best second-hand bookseller in that town."—Editor, Bazaar.

BOOKS WANTED, £3 each offered.—Symond's Italian Literature, 2 vols., 1881; Mommsen's Rome, 4 vols., 1868; Gardiner's Hist. England, 2 vols., 1863; Freeman's Norman Conquest, 6 vols.; Tudor Trans., Montaigne, 3 vols.; Jane Eyre, 3 vols., 1847; Lorna Doone, 3 vols., 1869.—BAKER'S Great Bookshop, John Bright Street, Birmingham.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 words. Specimens and references.—Address, Miss MESSER, 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

LIBERAL RELIGIOUS WRITINGS by Martineau, Channing, Stopford Brooke, and others sent free on application to Mrs. SQUIRRELL-LYNTON, Stoneygate, Leicester.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., neat prompt, accurate, 10d. per 1,000 words. Duplicates, Translations, French Correspondence, and Literary or Technical Work.—Mrs. MICHEL, 31, Craven Street, Charing Cross

TYPE-WRITING.—Novels, Plays, Essays, Reviews, &c., Typed; or from Dictation (Shorthand if desired). Difficult MSS. receive special attention. Six years' experience. Send for Specimen Page, References to Authors, and Terms.—GRAHAM, 34, Strand, W.C. (near Charing Cross Station).

METHOD GASPEY-OTTO-SAUER
For the STUDY of MODERN LANGUAGES,
Published by JULIUS GROOS, Heidelberg.
JUST OUT:
GERMAN CONVERS-GRAMMAR. Practical Method of Learning the German Language. By EMIL OTTO, Ph.D. Revised by FRANZ LANGE, Ph.D., late Examiner in the German Language and Literature at the Victoria University, Manchester. Twenty-eighth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 5s.
THE GERMAN READER. A Selection of Readings in German Literature. With Explanatory Notes and a Vocabulary, in Three Parts, by Dr. EMIL OTTO. Revised by Dr. J. WRIGHT, at Oxford. First Part: Anecdotes, Fables, Descriptions, Fairy Stories, Parables, Tales, and Easy Poems. Seventh Edition. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
THE GERMAN READER. By Dr. EMIL OTTO. Revised by H. RUNGE. Second Part: Select Readings in German Literature, with Explanatory Notes and a Complete Vocabulary. Fifth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
London:
DULAU & Co., 37, Soho Square: D. NUTT, 57-59, Long Acre; SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co., Fetter Lane, Fleet Street.

TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE
For Matriculation, B.A., and B.Sc. Exams. Law, Medical, and other Preliminaries.
Tuition in any Subject.—Latin, Greek, French, German, Italian, Mathematics, Mechanics, Physics, Chemistry, Logic, Psychology, Political Economy, Book-keeping, &c.
Tutors.—The Staff consists of Graduates of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, and Royal Universities, Prizemen, Science Medallists, and Specialists.
Address—MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A.
(Honours, Oxon. and Lond.),
THE BURLINGTON CLASSES, 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

THE MOST VALUABLE BOOK of the SEASON, regarded from a strictly literary standpoint, is the Handsomely BOUND VOLUME of the Poems published in "THE THRUSH." Price 6s. net.

"The Thrush."
A BOOK OF ORIGINAL POEMS.
Edited by T. MULLETT ELLIS.
Inspired by several important Public Events, and containing also many works of beauty and imagination by the undermentioned and other Authors, mostly writers of eminent reputation:—
L. Alma-Tadema, Sir Wyke Bayliss, K.B., Francis Prevost Battersby, Harold Begbie, A. C. Benson, M.A., Clifton Bingham, Hon. Albinia Brodrick, Rev. W. J. Dawson, Lady Florence Douglas, T. Mullett Ellis, Norman Gale, Dr. Richard Garnett, C.B., Lady Rosa Gilbert, N. Carruthers Gould, W. E. Henley, Nora Hopper, Keble Howard, The First Lord Lytton, Sir Lewis Morris, M.A., Louise Chandler Moulton, Dr. Gilbert Murray, M.A., Victor Plarr, M.A., Lady Margaret Sackville, Arthur Symons, E. Tindall-Atkinson, C. Whitworth Wynne.
£10. For particulars of the Prize Poem Competition, see "THE THRUSH" for NOVEMBER, price Fourpence Monthly. First Prize, Ten Pounds sterling. Six Prizes. Sole Judge: Mr. MACKENZIE BELL.
SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.
Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 3s. each, post free.
THE BEATITUDES, and other Sermons.
"An excellent exposition of the Beatitudes.....full of thought and knowledge and power."
British Weekly.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.
"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.
CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.
"Felicitous exposition, rugged, intense eloquence, and beautiful illustration."—Word and Work.
PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.
"They are plain enough to be understood by the unlearned, and yet have sufficient richness and cogency to attract the most cultivated."
New York Observer.
London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Limited, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.
A GREAT ACTOR AND HIS FRIENDS.
BARRY SULLIVAN and his CONTEMPORARIES. By ROBERT M. SILLARD. 2 vols. Illustrated. 21s. per set net.
A STRIKING NOVEL OF LIFE IN AUSTRALIA BY A NEW WRITER.
STEPHEN KYRLE: an Australian Story. By Mrs. T. R. ANDREWS. Cloth, 6s.
THE TALE of a TOWN and an ENCHANTED SEA. By EDWARD MARTYN, Author of "The Heather Field," &c. Cloth, 5s.
SAMHAIN. By W. B. Yeats. DOUGLAS HYDE, GEORGE MOORE, LADY GREGORY, and EDWARD MARTYN. 6d.
THE FINEST ART BOOK OF THE SEASON.
GIOVANNI SEGANTINI. By L. VILLARI. The Story of his Life, together with 75 Reproductions of his Pictures in half-tone and Photogravures. In box, £1 1s. net.
THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.
NOVEMBER ISSUE, price 6d.
CONTRIBUTIONS BY
H. G. WELLS. | A. G. HALES.
ALBERT CHEVALIER. | S. L. BENSUSAN.
MRS. MARY E. MANN. | WILLIAM BARRY.
Uniform with "The Heart of the Empire."
ALCOHOLISM—A STUDY in Heredity. By G. ARCHDALL REID, M.B., C.M., F.R.S.E., Author of "The Present Evolution of Man," &c. Cloth, 6s. net.
BEFORE the GREAT PILLAGE, and other Essays. By AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D. 7s. 6d.
YORKE the ADVENTURER. By LOUIS BECKE. Cloth, 6s.
THE WOULDBEGOODS. By E. NESBIT. With many Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 6s.
A DOUBLE CHOICE. By JAMES BAKER. Second Edition. Cloth, 6s.
ITALIAN CHARACTERS in the EPOCH of UNIFICATION. By Countess E. MARTINENGRO CESARESCO. Cloth, 7s. 6d.
A JILT'S JOURNAL. By "RITA," Author of "Vanity." Cloth, 6s.
THE BOURGEOIS. By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE. Cloth, 6s.
OLD DUTCH TOWNS and VILLAGES of the ZUIDERZEE. With many quaint Woodcuts. Cloth, 21s.
London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY
(LIMITED).
ENLARGED AND CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE
(Over 500 pages, 8vo, bound in green cloth).
All the Principal Works in Circulation at the Library
ARRANGED under SUBJECTS.
Forming a Comprehensive Guide to Notable Publications in most Branches of Literature.
Books of Permanent Interest on POLITICAL and SOCIAL TOPICS, the ARMY, NAVY, ARTS, SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, SPORT, THEOLOGY, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, and FICTION. Price 1s. 6d.
Also a FOREIGN CATALOGUE, containing BOOKS in FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, and SPANISH.
Price 1s. 6d.
MUDIE'S LIBRARY,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET
241 Brompton Road; and 48, Queen Victoria Street, London.

Digitized by Google

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, in demy 8vo, bound in buckram, and printed on good paper, with broad margin for Notes, price £1 7s. 6d. net.

The New (FIFTEENTH) Volume

OF

BOOK-PRICES CURRENT.

Being a Record of the Prices at which Books have been Sold at Auction, the Titles and Descriptions in Full, the Catalogue Numbers, the Names of the Purchasers, and Special Notices containing the Prices for the Season, from October, 1900, to July, 1901.

"'Book-Prices Current' is a trustworthy guide and a reference book of the greatest value."—Athenæum.

Some of the earlier Volumes of "Book-Prices Current" are out of print, and greatly advanced in price. Information concerning these can be had on application to the Publisher; the more recent ones can still be had at the published price.

 AN INDEX TO THE FIRST TEN VOLUMES OF BOOK-PRICES CURRENT HAS BEEN PUBLISHED, PRICE 21s. NET.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MOMENTA of LIFE. Essays

Ethical, Historical, and Religious. By JAMES LINDSAY, D.D. (Glas.), M.A., B.D., B.Sc., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., M.R.A.S.

"The discussions are nowhere lacking in freshness or vigour of thought. While they keep their readers abreast of recent advances of philosophic thought, they have also a quiet suggestiveness that makes them likely to serve the best purpose of writings of this kind, and both inform and stimulate an independent judgment. The book will be read with interest by any thoughtful reader."—The Scotsman.

In crown 8vo, cloth, with Map, 3s. 6d.

TRAVELLING IMPRESSIONS

in, and NOTES on, PERU. By FELIX SEEBEE.

"From these travel sketches one gathers a good idea of South American life as it is to be seen on the slopes of the gigantic Andes."—Dundee Advertiser.

SECOND EDITION. In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH: a

View from Within. By STEPHEN SMITH, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, England.

CHEAP EDITION.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

SOMERLEY. Schoolboy and Undergraduate. By GILBERT SWIFT.

"A book to be read through at a sitting. The Cambridge scenes are particularly well drawn."
Illustrated London News.

NEW WORK BY DR. J. DUNCAN CRAIG.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LADY WILMERDING of MAISON

ROUGE: a Tale of the Riviera. By J. DUNCAN CRAIG, M.A., D.D., Soci dou Felibrice.

"Most entertaining and instructive."—Irish Times.
"Distinctly a book which should be read by all."
Rock.

"The story is a very attractive one, and well sustained."—Barrow Herald.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; half-bound morocco, gilt edges, 6s.

POEMS. By JOHN FARMER.

"The book has a simple, quiet charm of its own that may well win for it the admiration of any sympathetic reader."—Scotsman.

In paper covers, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

POEMS. By JOHN LLOYD.

"The poems have a thoughtful and benevolent end in view; they reveal a genuine love of mankind, of nature, and deep sympathy with the poor and the hardworking of our race."—Bristol Daily Mercury.

ELLIOT STOCK,
62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

SECOND EDITIONS NOW READY

OF BOTH

LADY LINDSAY'S LATEST POEMS.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PRAYER OF ST. SCHOLASTICA.

And other Poems.

By LADY LINDSAY,

Author of "The King's Last Vigil," "The Apostle of the Ardennes," &c.

"'St. Scholastica's Prayer' will fully maintain, if it does not increase, the gifted writer's already high poetic reputation."—St. James's Gazette.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"We have the inspiration, and the labour that gives it form; we do not ask to have the eccentric or the startling; the writer is too grave an artist to obtrude on us the merely obviously novel. Range is the note of this volume.....And, again, there is the poet's music—the artist's capacity for good technique."
Literature.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"The poem is profoundly touching; the humanity and the super-humanity of it, the gentle reminiscence, the quiet, unfathomable love, the submission, the faith, ...all these in verse, simple, musical, and dignified, give rarely felt pleasure to the reader."—World.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Of all the pieces in the present selection, we like best the little lyrics, such as 'In Praise of Spring' or 'My Maiden Beautiful.' The sentiment may be as old as love itself, but the thoughts are charmingly uttered, and ring with the sincerity of true poetry."
Morning Post.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Lady Lindsay's musical mastery of many forms of metre, from stately measures to lilting lullabies, is not the real secret of her charm.....It is the unceasing poet in Lady Lindsay that marks her apart above the mere versifier."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"In poetic grace, vivid power of description, and noble loftiness of tone, 'The Prayer of St. Scholastica' in no way falls short of Lady Lindsay's beautiful 'Chronicle of St. Hubert.'"—Month.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"From Lady Lindsay one can always depend upon receiving verse which is not only technically impeccable, but informed by sincere sentiment and refined reflection."—Globe.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Real poetry; sure, deep, and beautiful; its strength, being felt unmistakably through the delicacy of fancy and elevation of thought."
Bookman.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"The poem which gives its name to Lady Lindsay's new volume of verse contains some passages that could only be equalled by one or two poets of our own age."—Birmingham Daily Post.

THE PRAYER of ST. SCHOLASTICA
By LADY LINDSAY.

"These tales are told with grace and spirit.....'The Knitter,' suggested by a mining disaster, is a beautiful and pathetic ballad."—Glasgow Herald.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

THE APOSTLE OF THE ARDENNES.

By LADY LINDSAY,

Author of "The King's Last Vigil," "The Flower Seller," &c.

"A genuine poet. With what lofty purity of thought, what beautiful and intimate feeling, and what unfailing instinct Lady Lindsay enters into all these phases and makes them a perfect whole we cannot hope to show."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Few poems of equal length and beauty have been produced by living writers, and Lady Lindsay must be warmly congratulated on the success of her labour of love."—Morning Post.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"From the first page to the last an actual living piece of poetry. It gives its author a definite place among contemporary makers of poetry, and that place a worthy and distinguished one."
St. James's Gazette.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Lady Lindsay has written a really beautiful poem, a poem full of delicate description and interspersed with delightful lyrics. ...It should heighten her reputation and widen her audience."—Observer.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY

"Lady Lindsay has brought out the noble and beautiful features of her story with true poetic insight, and her many pictures of woodland life have a singular charm and vividness."
Dublin Daily Express.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Instinct with vividness of the imagination, fluent play of fancy, subtle little touches, and a curious blend of delicacy and firmness.....Full of beauty as a finely cut diamond is full of fire."
Newcastle Chronicle.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"By this poem Lady Lindsay attains a rank among the poets of our time high and indisputable. ...The poem deserves grave appreciation and the attribute of a keen emotion, for its qualities are very rare."
World.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"Worthy of Lady Lindsay's high reputation, which it will tend to enhance.....The verse is chaste, melodious, and stately."—Yorkshire Herald.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"No one will read this graceful poem without taking an interest in St. Hubert's name and memory."
Scotsman.

THE APOSTLE of the ARDENNES.
By LADY LINDSAY.

"In 'The Apostle of the Ardennes' one of the most accomplished of our living writers has written a beautiful poem."—Lady's Pictorial.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LIMITED,
Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1540. Established 1869. 9 November, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

THIS week, in a Fiction Supplement, we attempt to keep pace with the extraordinary issue (from a numerical point of view) of new novels this autumn. It remains but an attempt. In the last four days we have received thirty-one additional volumes of new fiction, besides several dozen bulky tales for boys and girls.

MR. W. E. HENLEY has written for the December number of the Pall Mall Magazine a sketch of R. L. Stevenson, which gives, we understand, a new and unconventional view of Stevenson.

"GEORGE DOUGLAS," the name which appears on the title-page of The House with the Green Shutters, a new Scottish novel of considerable power, is the pseudonym of Mr. G. B. Brown, late of Balliol College, Oxford.

MR. CHARLES MARRIOTT, author of The Column, has almost finished a new novel. Mr. Marriott, who, as we have before stated, was formerly a dispenser, has now adopted writing as a profession, and lives in Cornwall, near, if not at, the locality where the scene of The Column was laid.

"LUCAS MALET'S" History of Sir Richard Calmady has had a very successful sale. In the new edition of this novel it will be found that the author has omitted a certain scene.

THE November number of Current Literature, an American publication, has an article on Mrs. Meynell, in which appear nine of her poems, well enough known. Set in the midst of these, as if also copied from her volume, are two verses, entitled "On What Sea?" which will be quite new to Mrs. Meynell's readers in both England and America, and of which it is certain that she never wrote a line. A quotation would justify the disclaimer, but space forbids. What might be a little entertaining would be to know how this curious fly got into the amber. There have been several instances of the same sort of spurious attribution of late in Transatlantic magazines. It is bad enough when a poet has his early work revived against his will; but the case is worse when he is discredited by work which at no crudest stage of his career could he have produced.

IT is not often that the publisher of a book also writes the dedication. The new edition of Mr. Lane's beautiful issue of Gilbert White's Selborne contains this: "To A. E. L. in commemoration of August 13, 1898, this edition is dedicated by the Publisher."

To a Daily Chronicle interviewer Mr. Harry Quilter "chatted" about What's What, the new annual. Said Mr. Quilter, among other things:

> The main idea was to construct a volume which should exclude the need of others—that is, combine in itself the advantages of a book of reference—of all such books—of a novel, and of a review. You cannot easily master, still less carry about with you, guide-books to every country, educational handbooks, medical dictionaries, scientific encyclopædias, guides to art, business, amusement, health, literature, and theatrical matters. Was it possible, within a single volume, to take in the most useful characteristics of all these, to construct such a guide to life? The notion had been suggested to me by a remark of my wife's, made when we were discussing the question of the value and amusing quality of Who's Who, the well-known book of reference to contemporary biography. "Why not What's What?" said Mrs. Quilter, and I turned over in my mind what such a title would imply.

THE two lectures by Dr. Adolf Harnack, Professor of Church History in the University, Berlin, entitled "Monasticism: Its Ideals and History" and "The Confessions of St. Augustine" will shortly be published together in one volume. The translation has been made by Messrs. E. E. Kellett and F. H. Marseille.

DR. CHRISTOPHER NYROP, "a Romance philologist of high European reputation," some time ago brought his learning to bear on The Kiss and Its History. The treatise has gone through two editions in Denmark, and has been translated into German, Swedish, and Russian. It is now to appear in English.

IF Tolstoy is not widely known in this country, it is not the fault of the publishers. A few weeks ago we commented on the issue of the first two volumes of Tolstoy's collected works, translated by Mrs. Garnett, and published by Mr. Heinemann. This week we have received the first volume, Sevastopol and other Military Tales, of another complete edition, translated by Mr. and Mrs. Maude, and published by Mr. Grant Richards. Mr. Maude, in a preface of several pages, gives incidentally an account of the way a German translator handled the inscription to Anna Karénina —"Vengeance is mine: I will repay." That inscription was written by Tolstoy in the eccle-iastical Slavonic used by the Russian Church. Having an inkling of the first word, and misled by the sound of the Slavonic Az (which means I), the translator produced this rendering—"Revenge is sweet; I play the ace."

WHEN Green's Short History of the English People was published there was a general feeling among reviewers that he had not carried out his plan after 1660. In the volume of his Letters, reviewed on another page, Green gives this explanation:

> The truth was that when I reached 1660 I had to face the fact that the book must have an end, and that I must end it in about 800 pp. Something had to be thrown overboard, and I deliberately chose "Literature," not because Dryden or Pope or Addison or Wordsworth were strange to me, for I knew them better than the earlier men, and have much that I want to say about them, but because it seemed to me that after 1660 literature ceased to stand in the forefront of national characteristics, and that Science, Industry, &c., played a much greater part.

Digitized by Google

VOL. I., NO. 1. Samhain is the organ of the Irish Literary Theatre. Its first issue (Unwin, 6d.) contains editorial paragraphs by W. B. Yeats headed "Windlestraws," an account of the Literary Theatre by Mr. George Moore, and other matter. The bulk of the number is occupied by a play, printed in Irish, by Dr. Douglas Hyde, and an English translation of it by Lady Gregory. The play is called "The Twisting of the Rope," and it takes us back to a small merrymaking in the farmhouse of a woman named Maurya a hundred years ago. The rivalry between Hanrahan, an indigent bard, and Sheamus O'Hearan for the hand of Oona, Maurya's daughter, is the motive of the piece. Maurya is afraid for her daughter, who is showing signs of succumbing to the fascinations of the wastrel poet in another part of the room. Maurya discusses him with a neighbour:

> MAURYA.—Bad luck to the vagabond! It is well I know what sort he is, because there was a kind of friendship between myself and the first husband I had, and it's often I heard from poor Diarmuid—the Lord have mercy on him!—what sort of person he was. He was a schoolmaster down in Connacht, but he used to have every trick worse than another, ever making songs he used to be, and drinking whiskey and setting quarrels afoot among the neighbours with his share of talk. They say there isn't a woman in the five provinces that he wouldn't deceive. He is worse than Donal na Greina long ago. But the end of the story is that the priest routed him out of the parish altogether; he got another place then, and followed on at the same tricks until he was routed out again, and another again with it. Now he has neither place nor house nor anything, but he to be going the country, making songs and getting a night's lodging from the people; nobody will refuse him, because they are afraid of him. He's a great poet, and maybe he'd make a rann on you that would stick to you for ever, if you were to anger him.
>
> SHEELA.—God preserve us, but what brought him in to-night?
>
> MAURYA.—He was travelling the country and he heard there was to be a dance here, and he came in because he knew us; he was rather great with my first husband. It is wonderful how he is making out his way of life at all, and he with nothing but his share of songs. They say that there is no place that he'll go to that the women don't love him and that the men don't hate him.
>
> SHEELA.—And couldn't you put him out?
>
> MAURYA.—I could. There's no person here to help him unless there would be a woman or two; but he is a great poet, and he has a curse that would split the trees and that would burst the stones. They say the seed will rot in the ground and the milk go from the cows when a poet like him makes a curse, if a person routed him out of the house; but if he were once out, I'll go bail that I wouldn't let him in again.

VOL. I., NO. 1. This time it is the Commentator. Inasmuch as it is published in 32nd-street, New York, at 10 cents, the editor is, perhaps, well advised in remarking that "We do not expect to set the Thames afire." The Commentator is small and modern, and has been "planned to circulate mainly among the literary and art lovers." The editor continues:

> The Commentator will be open to the author-thinker who has something worth saying, and to the man whose MSS. no editor has dared to publish.
>
> It is better to make comedy out of tragedy than a farce from a comedy.
>
> Life is a comedy.
>
> We love life, and believe the Commentator will live long enough to learn the art of making good use of its voice.
>
> No, we do not expect to set the Thames afire.
>
> We are not reformers.

In a word, the Commentator is the organ of nonconformity in Emerson's sense. Already it is parting its sheep from its goats, for we read: "The correspondent who doubted our correctness in saying 'Life is a comedy' and the man who asked 'What does non-conformity mean?' had better not subscribe—because they wouldn't understand 'big words' and might want their money back. P.S. We have respectfully referred them to the New York Journal."

MR. HARRY FURNISS, whose reminiscences will shortly be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, thinks the world may be indebted to him for Peter Ibbetson and Trilby. Writing in Harper's Magazine under the title "Confessions of a Caricaturist," he thus refers to his acquaintance with Du Maurier:

> It is a curious fact that I really never had a seat allotted to me at the Punch table—I always sat in Du Maurier's, except on the rare occasions when he came to the dinner, when I moved up one. It was always a treat to have Du Maurier at "the table." He was by far and away the cleverest conversationalist of his time I ever met—his delightful repartees were so neat and effective, and his daring chaff and his criticisms so bright and refreshing. . . .
>
> Du Maurier's extremely clever conversation struck me the moment I joined the staff of Punch. As I went part of his way to Hampstead, we sometimes shared our cab, and in one of these journeys I mentioned my conviction that he, in my mind, was a great deal more than a humorous artist, and if he would only take up the pen seriously the world would be all the more indebted to him. He told me that Mr. James had for some time said nice things of a similar character.
>
> About ten days afterwards I received a letter saying that my conversation had had an effect upon him, and that he was starting his first novel. So perhaps the world is really indebted to me, indirectly, for the pleasure of reading Peter Ibbetson and Trilby. The fact is, that he had, with Burnand and myself, just visited Paris—the first time he had set foot in the gay city since his youth. Many things he saw had impressed him, and Peter Ibbetson was the result.

During the Paris visit (how were Mr. Burnand, Du Maurier, and Mr. Furniss spared from Fleet-street together?) Du Maurier amused his companions by excitedly pointing out no fewer than three houses in which he declared he was born.

MR. HEINEMANN'S promised series of French romances is begun this week with the issue of De Stendhal's La Chartreuse de Parme. The volume is in large octavo, and is most delicately produced in a blue and gold cover. Of Stendhal Mr. Maurice Hewlett writes:

> He was of your rare, slow-digesting order of genius, a writer who thought to excess, whose invention was pent up, whose power of production was conditioned by that, whose fastidiousness was extreme. It was but seldom that his conception found him high-spirited enough to combat all this; but when it did, as once it did, his audacity catches the breath. Put another way, it was but seldom that his critical faculty was drugged by a great theme; but when it was, the immortal part of him, unlimed and unhooded, towered high. You may take it that two ideas moved him profoundly—Italy and Napoleon. In L'Abbesse de Castro he had the first, in Le Rouge et Noir the second; but in La Chartreuse de Parme he had both, and produced what I soberly believe to be the greatest novel of France.

A portrait of Stendhal forms the frontispiece to this translation by Lady Mary Loyd, and the four illustrations in colour are charming in their delicacy. This series is under the editorship of Mr. Edmund Gosse.

WHAT is the "unit system" of publishing? It is explained, and it will shortly be put into practice on a large scale, by Mr. Howard Wilford Bell, one of the youngest of our publishers. The unit system was adopted thirty-four years ago by a Leipzig publisher, and it consists in fixing the price of a book by the number of pages it contains. It is therefore particularly applicable to series of books in which the volumes vary in size. Mr. Bell proposes to issue a great number of standard books on the unit system. The unit is twenty-five pages, and the price per unit ½d. or 2d. per 100 pages. The paper cover will cost 1d. in addition to the cost of the total number of units, the cloth binding will be 5d. additional, the leather binding 10d. additional. The price of the single volume, therefore, will be regulated by the number of units it contains. The series proposed by Mr. Bell will be called the Unit Library, and it will embrace good books of all kinds. It will aim to meet a want which Mr. W. Laird Clowes thus stated in the July number of the Fortnightly Review: "What I desire to see in every bookshop in the English-speaking world is a series of shelves from which, no matter what his tastes may be, the prowling reader or student may carry away the best books of the universe—not 'the hundred best books,' but all the best books save a few of the more recent—at a cost per volume not much more than is ordinarily paid for a cigar or a glass of sherry." A good format will, of course, be vital to the success of such a series, and the specimen page we have received encourages the hope that this important condition will be fulfilled. In size the books will be 4½ by 6⅝ inches. The prices will vary according to the volume, but taking 250 pages as the equipment of an average volume, it will sell at 6d. net (inclusive of a strong paper cover), at 10d. net in cloth, and 1s. 3d. net in leather. The same design upon all classes of books and upon the three bindings will make the series recognisable. A cheerful crimson is to be the uniform colour of the three bindings. We shall await the result of this experiment with interest. The preliminary list of a hundred books which are to be included in the series lacks nothing of variety. We clip a section of it at random:

Digitized by Google

Benvenuto Cellini's Autobiography.
Herman Melville's Typee.
Familiar Letters of James Howell.
White's Natural History of Selborne.
Strutt's Sports and Pastimes.
Dumas' Three Musketeers.
Washington Irving's Alhambra.
Wesley's Journal.
Chronicles of Froissart (Berners' translation).
Sterne's Sentimental Journey.
Le Sage's Gil Blas.
Evelyn's Diary.
The Poems of Burns.
Cuthbert Bede's Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green.
Observations of Sir Richard Hawkins.
Miss Mitford's Our Village.
Parkman's Conspiracy of Pontiac.
Poe's Tales of Mystery and Imagination.
Dickens's Pickwick Papers.
De Quincey's Essays.
Arthur Young's Travels in France.
Sir Thomas Browne's Vulgar Errors.
Wilson's Noctes Ambrosianæ.

The series will be jointly edited by Mr. W. L. Clowes and Mr. A. R. Waller. The books will be unabridged, and will contain of editorial matter only bibliographical, biographical, and encyclopædic notes.

MR. H. MILBERN writes to us asking whether any of our readers, by any chance, can provide him with the author's name and the context of the following lines? He found them in an old notebook, and had an idea they were Verlaine's, but is unable to discover them in any published edition of his works:

Sous un ciel ténébreux
Claquant, les arbres sont nus: et par l'eparses arées
Ils volent, fantômes, les feuilles mortes, fuyant la chasse
D'une brise glaciale, sans jour et sans odeur, qui passe
Questeur funest, questant toujours de larmes et d'orage
Une fosse des délices où restent fleurs désodorées.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us what we cannot but think s a particularly large and fine mare's nest in the way of plagiarism; and it may perhaps serve a useful purpose if we print his charge. Referring to our remark a few weeks ago that perhaps Robert Buchanan was "the poet of the greatest number of lines in the nineteenth century" our correspondent suggests that Buchanan was indebted to his poetical contemporaries and predecessors for his exceptionally copious outflow of language and ideas. He has been struck with the close similarity of many of his passages to those of other poets on the same subjects, and adduces two examples taken from his "Justinian":

To those fair elements whence first I came—
Water and earth and air—I shall return.
Buchanan.

To the elements it came from
Everything will return—
Our bodies to earth,
Our blood to water,
Heat to fire,
Breath to air.
Matthew Arnold, "Empedocles on Etna."

Buchanan's appeared first in the Contemporary Review during 1830; Matthew Arnold's in 1849, in his earliest volume.

Again:

By dint of such sweet scholarship,
A pedant in the lore of love.
"The Lover's Devotion," by V., "Monthly Review," 1829.

Since never teacher could be tenderer,
He did not miss the lore of love itself.
Buchanan.

Of course the idea of things returning to the four elements is common property, and the "lore of love" likewise.

"C. K. S.," of the Sphere, has intelligence of a monument erected to a wife in the little village of Crondall, near Farnham, bearing the inscription:

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

STUDENTS of Mr. Meredith's novels will do well to file Mr. R. Maynard Leonard's article in the November New Liberal Review on "Politics in George Meredith's Novels," though it cannot be said that the political allusions are many or important. Beauchamp's Career is Mr. Meredith's only real political novel, and it is taken up with electioneering rather than legislation. In the same number Mr. Stephen Gwynn writes on Sir Richard Calmady. He points out that the book is eloquent of its Kingsley origin, and is thoroughly English in its setting. Mr. Gwynn quotes admirably from Lucas Malet's descriptive passages. On the sinister aspects of the book he takes this line:

> It just comes to this: Are all things to be written on the assumption that girls will read them? If so, there is an end at once of the stories which will most powerfully exercise the adult intelligence. For, let it be observed, the humiliation which overtakes Richard Calmady is one that few men would have felt. I do not mean the public humiliation of insult, but the lasting sense that he had desecrated his own ideal. There is an implied austerity in the moral standard by which he judges himself—an unwillingness to excuse any lapse from his self-appointed code. Practically, as I have said before, the philosophy of the book is Charles Kingsley's philosophy, but applied by a woman from a woman's standpoint, and carrying with it a reference to the ideal figure not of a man but of a woman, disciplined by suffering, acquiescent, but not broken, a true pattern of human nobleness.

Adding: "Even when it is morbid and most horrible, the book never fails to exhilarate, and that is perhaps the touchstone of what is permissible in art." Exhilarate? Is that is the best word?

Digitized by Google

Mr. Hughes-Hallett, the dramatic critic of the Pilot, makes an amusing suggestion concerning "The Last of the Dandies," which as a play is sadly defective, though interesting as a panorama. He says: "While enjoying thoroughly this picture of life and manners, and lamenting the absence of human interest, an idea occurred to me. What if Mr. Beerbohm Tree were to change the play, recast the company, and produce 'Money' with this scenery and these dresses. Very little alteration would be necessary. What a treat it would be! Then at last would be silenced the voices that are so often raised against Lord Lytton's fine comedy, because it would be clear to everyone that the reason why Sir John Vesey seems an exaggeration nowadays, and Evelyn is found to bore, and Blount is too slow and Stout too fast, and Clara strikes an artificial note, lies in the fact that the play deals with a certain period, and that when modernised the characters become absurd."

To the current number of the Cornhill Sir Rowland Blennerhassett contributes some interesting recollections of Cardinal Newman. Certain books Newman always kept upon his study table. They were the edition of Gibbon with the notes of Guizot and Milman, Döllinger's Heidenthum und Judenthum, almost always the copy of Athanasius which had belonged to Bossuet, and which contained in the margin notes in the handwriting of the great bishop, the "last of the Fathers," as Newman delighted to call him.

Bibliographical.

One would like to see that selection from Mr. Swinburne's poems which, according to the Daily News, Mr. William Sharp has made specially for the Tauchnitz series. It must needs be more acceptable than the Selections from the Poetical Works published in this country fourteen years ago. I have always understood that that anthology was compiled by the poet himself, and we know that poets are not always good judges of their own performances. Moreover, in preparing such a volume the predilections of the public should be taken into account. The poet should select, not to please himself, but, in the first place, to please his admirers. I do not mean to say that Lord Tennyson, for example, should have issued selections from his works consisting mainly of such pieces as "The May Queen," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," and so forth; but I do think that in these cases attention should be paid first to the general consensus of educated opinion, and not entirely or principally to the personal preferences of the poets selected from.

The new English versions of La Chartreuse de Parme and of Salammbô—by Lady Mary Loyd and Mr. J. W. Matthews respectively — will, of course, be generally welcome. It need scarcely be said, however, that translations of these works are by no means new to the English public. Of Salammbô there have been, during the past decade, at least three English renderings—an anonymous one, printed in 1886; one by M. French Sheldon (last issued in 1893); and one by J. S. Chartres (third edition, 1899). The Chartreuse of Parma, translated by E. P. Robins, and fitted with thirty etchings, was published by Mr. Smithers in three volumes at the end of 1896. Mr. Grant Richards will follow up Salammbô with a version of Murger's Vie de Bohème, entitled The Latin Quarter. Mr. Vizetelly published in 1886 an illustrated translation called The Bohemians of the Latin Quarter. Since then, there have been the renderings published by Messrs. Gibbings and Messrs. Downey in June and November, 1895, respectively.

The Mr. Henry Van Dyke who is to give us a work called The Ruling Passion (surely an old book-title?) is, I take for granted, the American writer so-named who is best known over here by a volume on the subject of Tennyson and his works (1890). That volume had some interesting features, notably the list of the poet's Biblical quotations and allusions. Since then, Mr. Van Dyke has published over here two other contributions to the belles lettres—Little Rivers: a Book of Essays in Profitable Idleness (1895 and 1896), and The Builders and Other Poems (1897). In a more serious vein were Straight Sermons to Young Men (1893), The Christ Child in Art (1893), The Gospel for an Age of Doubt (1896), and so forth.

It is a little curious that Mr. Howard Bell should have singled out for reproduction Dr. Doran's old book on Monarchs Retired from Business. This dates back to 1857, and has not, I think, been reprinted within the last twenty years at least, during which time, however, there have been two new issues of Her Majesty's Servants and one of the Memories of our Great Towns. Doran was much read in his day. He had a happy knack at titles. One remembers especially his Table Traits, his Knights and their Days, and his Mann and Manners at the Court of Florence. He wrote an easy style, and did something towards popularising, and thus diffusing, knowledge.

Apropos to Mr. McColl's promised new translation of the Exemplary Novels of Cervantes, it is worth noting that a reprint of James Mabbe's version, which dates from 1640, was issued by Messrs. Gibbings in two small volumes only last year. A translation of the Novels, undertaken by Mr. Walter K. Kelly, made its appearance in 1881.

Mr. Aylmer Maude, in his preface to Tolstoy's Sevastopol, as translated by him, gives a sketch of the early years of Tolstoy, who, as a youth, lived with his aunt, "a grande dame, moving in and receiving the 'best' society." Of this lady Tolstoy wrote in "My Confession" that, "herself the purest of women, she always told me there was nothing she so desired for me as an intimacy with a married woman. 'Rien ne forme un homme comme une liaison avec une femme comme il faut.'" Herein the aunt was but putting into a single sentence the contents of whole pages in Chesterfield's Letters to his Son. Chesterfield, if I remember rightly, nowhere explicitly advises his son to have liaisons with grandes dames, but that is certainly the pith and marrow of his teaching on the subject of manner and deportment. Speaking of the Duc de Richelieu (1752, O.S.), Chesterfield says: "Women alone formed and raised him. . . . These early connections with women of the first distinction gave him those manners, graces, and address which you see he has."

I have had time only to glance through Mr. Arthur Stanley's collection of Patriotic Song, just published; but I observe in one of the Notes a singular inaccuracy. In the body of the book Mr. Stanley reprints Tennyson's "Hands all Round" and a couple of stanzas with the refrain "Britons, hold your own." Of these two pieces he says in the Notes that they "appeared in the Examiner in 1852." This is not the case. The version of "Hands all Round" which Mr. Stanley gives figured originally in Tiresias and Other Poems (1885); only the first of the three stanzas dates back to 1852. As for the "Britons, hold your own" stanzas, they are sections 3 and 4 of the poet's "Ode on the Opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition," which was included in the volume called Locksley Hall Sixty Years After (1886).

Do people still read Vathek? The publishers seem to think so, for, though it was reprinted twice last year by Messrs. Greening and Messrs. Gibbings respectively, Messrs. Methuen are now including it in their "Little Library." That library is also to comprise A Little Book of Light Verse, the editorship of which has been undertaken, very appropriately, by Mr. Anthony C. Deane, one of the brightest of "our literary lightweights." But what a mass of material he will have to select from!

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

"A Jolly Vivid Man."

Letters of John Richard Green. Edited by Leslie Stephen. (Macmillan. 15s. net.)

GREEN had temperament and personal magnetism. Those elusive qualities hide in his letters and diaries, but the testimony of his friends to their presence is unanimous. That of Tennyson is the most direct and the best remembered. "You're a jolly, vivid man," the poet said to Green, "and I'm glad to have known you; you're as vivid as lightning." Jolly is hardly the epithet we should have chosen for this eager, single-minded, unresting worker, this battler against disease, whose force of will and enthusiasm for his work, in Sir Lauder Brunton's opinion, "kept him alive for two years longer than any doctor would have thought possible." But vivid was certainly one of his epithets. Mr. Bryce, who heard him preach, recalls "the fiery little figure in the pulpit, with its thin face and bright black eyes"; and Mrs. Humphry Ward gives this picture of him in his last years: "There in the corner of the sofa sat the thin, wasted form, life flashing from the eyes, breathing from the merry or eloquent lips, beneath the very shadow and seal of death—the eternal protesting life of the intelligence. . . . There was in him a perpetual eagerness, an inexhaustible power of knowledge, that were ever putting idler or emptier minds to shame." He was a man of rare intellectual agility. He could "squeeze all the juice out of a newspaper in a few minutes," says Mr. Bryce, who also tells how once, when travelling abroad, they reached the town of Troyes early in the morning. Green explored it, "darting hither and thither through the streets, like a dog following a scent":

> In two hours the work was done. In the afternoon the party started for Bâle, reached it late, and went to bed. Green brought down to breakfast next morning an article upon Troyes, describing its characteristics, and tracing its connection with the Counts of Champagne during some centuries. He then walked with his friends through Bâle; and Green, on the spur of the moment, gave them an equally vivid history of the town, though he was seeing both places for the first time, and had made no special preparation. "He could apparently have done the same for any other town in France or the Rhineland."

Green was a born historian. Boy or man he never doubted his destiny. "My line and calling," he wrote to Mr. Freeman, "is to English history," and the composition of the Short History of the English People was the main task of his life. Its extraordinary success only urged him to further efforts. This little fiery, vivid man had grit. "People are beginning to comprehend that what I will to do, I do," he wrote to Mr. Boyd Dawkins in early life. And his life proved that what he willed to do, he did do.

Every penny he spent he earned. For many years he contributed regularly to the Saturday Review. On one occasion he wrote three articles in thirty-six hours. One was a review of a volume by Mr. Freeman, a second a "light middle," while a third dealt with the history of an English town. He had no particular advantages in life. His father, who died when he was fourteen, was the son of a tailor. The future historian was sent at eight years of age to Magdalen College School. He lived with his aunt, who was married to a Mr. Castle, a hatter in the High Street. The child was father to the man. When he was thirteen he read in a shop window Lord John Russell's Durham letter upon the "Papal Aggression." He saw the absurdity of the agitation, and condemned the abortive persecution of the Ecclesiastical Titles Act so vigorously as to incur the wrath of his uncle. The uncle forbade the house to him, and was only reconciled on condition of future silence upon the irritating topic. Green rose to the head of the Magdalen College School, was put under the care of a private tutor, read Gibbon from end to end, won an open scholarship at Jesus College, wrote for the Oxford Chronicle on "Oxford in the Last Century," planned a history of the Church of England, and then, attracted by the teaching of F. D. Maurice, he, "in a fit of religious enthusiasm," decided to take orders.

As a clergyman in the East End and at Hoxton he did not spare himself. He laboured among his people, and the time he could spare from them he spent at the British Museum. He had pluck—physical as well as moral. One incident of this period stands out. It was in 1866, when cholera was raging. During his visits to infected houses he found a man dangerously ill in an upper room. Some big draymen in the street refused to help. Green tried to carry the man downstairs, but he was unequal to the effort, and the two fell from the top to the bottom of the stairs together.

Green was a clergyman, chiefly in the East End, for nine years. It is plain from his Letters that he found no sure rest within the Anglican fold. Soon after he had taken orders he resolved that if he should be unable at any time to use the words of the litany, "Christ, have mercy upon us," with perfect sincerity, he would abandon the clerical career. In time he did abandon the clerical career: he also resigned the librarianship of Lambeth, which Archbishop Tait had conferred upon him. In 1864 he wrote thus to Mr. Boyd Dawkins: "Everything seems slipping from under me—faith, doctrine, all becoming unreal. Men talk of me as a 'rising' clergyman, and little know how near Deism I am drifting." A rational religion seemed to him possible in the present day as it never had been, "but we can only reach it by flinging to the owls and the bats these old and effete 'theologies' of the world's childhood." The spiritual life of the Mystics appealed strongly to him, and in the union of Mysticism with freedom of thought and inquiry, he was persuaded, would be found the faith of the future.

But references to Green's religious views have to be searched for diligently in his Letters. Many of them are of "monstrous dimensions." It is only the very busy man, or perhaps only the man who feels deeply, who can write letters as long as a magazine article to his friends. Here is an interesting passage of criticism. The book referred to is Mr. T. L. K. Oliphant's Sources of Standard English:

> His praise of Morris's poetry as a specimen of good English is fair enough; but then it should be remembered that Morris dealt wholly with outer scenes or definite actions, which are easily expressed in common English words. It is when one comes to the finer and more abstract side of things that the pinch comes. But I own that the reason why I stand a little on my guard as to the "English" restoration which is going on is that I am afraid we may lose through it certain elements of beauty in style which the mixed texture of our present speech gives us. In Shakespeare's famous burst about "mercy" in the "Merchant of Venice" line follows line in the simplest English; but when he wishes to heighten his tone at the close it is interesting to see how we get lines full of Latinisms:
>
> The quality of mercy is not strain'd,
> It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
> Upon the place beneath: it is twice blessed;
> It blesseth him that gives and him that takes:
> 'Tis mightiest in the mightiest: it becomes
> The throned monarch better than his crown;
> His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
> The attribute to awe and majesty,
> Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
> But mercy is above this sceptred sway;
> It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
> It is an attribute to God himself;
> And earthly power doth then show likest God's
> When mercy seasons justice.
>
> I only quote this because it so exactly expresses, as it seems to me, the musical value of Latinisms in English style, their value as alternatives, and their curious faculty

Digitized by Google

(perhaps from their mere length) of heightening the tone and giving majesty to a sentence. What Old English seems to me to lack is the Greek power of constructing a "long resounding line," and I believe that the musical instinct of people's ears, craving for greater dignity of structure and expression, has had much to do with the introduction of Latinisms.

For an example of Green's more vigorous style we may quote his account of the famous passage between the Bishop of Oxford and Huxley.

On Saturday morning I met Jenkins going to the Museum. We joined company, and he proposed going to Section D, the Zoology, &c., "to hear the Bishop of Oxford smash Darwin." "Smash Darwin! Smash the Pyramids," said I, in great wrath, and muttering something about "impertinence," which caused Jenkins to explain that "the Bishop was a first-class in mathematics, you know, and so has a right to treat on scientific matters," which of course silenced my cavils. Well, when Prof. Draper had ceased his hour and a half of nasal Yankeeism, up rose "Sammivel," and proceeded to act the smasher; the white chokers, who were abundant, cheered lustily, a sort of "Pitch it into him" cheer, and the smasher got so uproarious as to pitch into Darwin's friends—Darwin being smashed, and especially Prof. Huxley. Still the white chokers cheered, and the smasher rattled on. "He had been told that Prof. Huxley had said that he didn't see that it mattered much to a man whether his grandfather was an ape or not. Let the learned Professor speak for himself," and the like. Which being ended—and let me say that such rot never fell from episcopal lips before—arose Huxley, young, cool, quiet, sarcastic, scientific in fact and in treatment, he gave his lordship such a smashing as he may meditate on with profit over his port at Cuddesdon.

The volume has been edited by Mr. Leslie Stephen, who has brought to the task a sympathetic, yet detached, interest in his subject that gives to the work a distinction uncommon in modern biographies. Following Mr. Colvin's example in the Vailima Letters, Mr. Stephen has written for the four sections into which the book is divided introductory narratives in explanation of Green's position during successive periods of his life. These are models of biography in miniature. But in regard to the Letters themselves we should have liked a more rigorous standard of exclusion. The aim of the editor of a volume of letters should be to compel the reader to read every word. Once begin to skip, and interest slackens. Given a good book—well digested, well planned, well written—there is only one way to read it—word for word. Who wants to skip Matthew Arnold, or Renan? There are some letters in this volume that are valueless. One example of Green's playful mood would have sufficed. He was not a good trifler with the pen. The letter on page 218 may be taken as a specimen of correspondence that is not worth preserving—the letter which ends thus: "Oh, Olga, I weep; but farewell, one long, last, laster, longer, longest, lastest Fare-better, Fare-best.—Your ever and for more ever morer." Also the fragment on page 156 signed "Gone to Pot," and the letter on page 380 with its—"Have you a cole-hole (nay, even a coal-scuttle) into which I might creep on Saturday even and find a Sabbath's repose." These letters were written to grown women. An editor, too, should surely see that repetitions are avoided. Green's meeting with the American bishop, an excellent story, is told on page 322 to Mr. Freeman, and again on page 325 to Mr. Dawkins. The dimensions of the Palatine Hill are compared with the block between St. James's-street and the Haymarket, on page 334 and on page 338. Again, no doubt Green missed Mr. Stopford Brooke when he left Florence, but we do not want to be told twice of Mr. Brooke's departure. Small matters possibly, but they just make all the difference to the honest reader.

Green was a consumptive. The winters of his last years were spent in that search for sunshine which is life. The Riviera, Egypt, Italy, he went the old round, and, through all vicissitudes, he never ceased to work to the utmost of his strength. Death overtook him at Mentone. He died learning. Many years before he had written: "I know what men will say of me; they will say, 'He died learning.'" When he was told that the end was inevitable, he said: "I have something to say in my book still which I know is worth saying. I feel I could do good work. I will make a fight for it." It has been observed: "To the Initiated death is not an evil; it is a gain." By various ways the initiated approach their goal. Green found his own way.

A Miracle in Utopia.

Erewhon; or, Over the Range. Ninth Edition. By Samuel Butler. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

Erewhon Revisited: Twenty Years Later. By Samuel Butler. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

THE vigour and versatility which Mr. Samuel Butler has brought to the pursuit of literature are undeniable. Since the first publication of Erewhon, nearly thirty years ago, there are few subjects which he has left unassailed. He has written on the theory of evolution, and on the place of miracle in religion. He has produced a cantata and a solid biography of his father, the famous headmaster of Shrewsbury School. He has studied art and worship in the sanctuaries of Piedmont and the Ticino. He has translated the Iliad and the Odyssey, and has put forward a delightfully paradoxical speculation as to the authorship of the latter epic. Like most persons of an ingenious turn of mind, he has contributed his share to the obscuring of the problems offered by Shakespeare's Sonnets. And throughout he has succeeded in maintaining a freshness and originality of treatment and outlook which enable him to compel interest and respect even where he most provokes dissent. Nevertheless, we suppose that he is destined to go down to posterity as the homo unius libri. Erewhon occupies and deserves a notable place in the long list of apocalyptic works which stretches from Plato's Republic to Campanella's City of God, and from Lord Lytton's Coming Race to William Morris's News from Nowhere. To the present re-issue Mr. Butler prefixes an amusing preface, in which he describes the genesis and original production of the book. He tells us how the scenery of it, with its snow-clad ranges and rushing river, was taken from that of the Upper Rangitata district of the Canterbury province of New Zealand, how Messrs. Chapman & Hall rejected the book on the advice of Mr. George Meredith, who was then acting as reader for them, and, with a curious naïveté, how considerations of copyright have now led him to add some sixty pages to the primitive text when, upon purely literary grounds, he would sooner have expunged as many. He has perhaps done an even more audacious thing in adding to Erewhon, what is frequently so disastrous, a sequel. In this case, however, the audacity is justified, for Erewhon Revisited is in many ways the better book of the two. As Mr. Butler himself points out, it can at least claim to be an organic whole, whereas Erewhon, witty and entertaining as it was, undeniably rambled. It had a more serious defect in a constant shifting of the Utopian point of view. To follow this some understanding of the philosophy of Utopian writing is necessary. Obviously the conditions of existence in a Utopia must stand in some kind of intellectual relation to those which actually prevail in the real world. They may, for instance, hold up an ideal which the writer desires to press upon the attention of the real world. Or they may offer a satirical and exaggerated picture of the follies and inconsistencies of the real world. Or, again, they may caricature in a similar spirit, but with a different intention, the follies and inconsistencies not of the real world but of the reformed world which revolutionaries and dreamers would substitute for it. The Republic may stand as a model of the first type of Utopia, Swift's Lilliput for the second, the Cloud-cuckoo-land of Aristophanes for the third. But it is essential that, if literary unity is to be maintained, a Utopia should belong to the same type throughout; and it is the weakness of Erewhon that it fails to conform to this canon. If we understand Mr. Butler's intentions in the book aright, he is sometimes aiming at idealism, sometimes at satire. And the satire, again, is sometimes directed against the absurdities of the current civilisation, sometimes against those inherent in the theories and prophecies of reformers and advanced persons. Thus the account of the Musical Banks, with their caste of cashiers and their coinage, of which it was thought respectable to hold some, and secretly felt to be commercially fatal to hold too much, is obviously satire. So is that of the sect of the Ydgrunites and their high goddess, Ydgrun. So is that of the Colleges of Unreason, with its Professors of Inconsistency and Evasion, and its Professor of Worldly Wisdom, who was also President of the Society for the Suppression of Useless Knowledge and for the Completer Obliteration of the Past. On the other hand, when the Erewhonians are said to punish regularly ill-health with imprisonment or fine, while moral offences are treated in hospital or by the attentions of a "straightener," the sting of the satire is surely turned less against society as it exists than against Lombroso and his "criminological" school of social reformers. And, finally, the law by which the introduction of machines into Erewhon was forbidden, on the ground of the danger lest in their rapid development they should bring man into the same state of subjection into which he himself has brought the domestic animals, is clearly no satire at all, but an ideal paradoxically stated but seriously proffered to a machine-ridden age.

Digitized by Google

Erewhon Revisited has the advantage over Erewhon, not only of a better-woven plot and a comparative absence of digressions, but also of a more single eye in the distribution of its satire. It will be remembered that the sojourn of Higgs in Erewhon ended with his flight in a balloon before the astonished eyes of the king and queen with the girl Arowhena Nosnibor. His earlier love, the gaoler's daughter Yram, was left lamenting. (The astounding futility of the Erewhonian nomenclature has always amazed us, and now Mr. Butler has the impudence to tell us that Arowhena's name was really Nna Haras, while that of her friend Mahaina was Enaj Ysteb.) In Erewhon Revisited, Higgs returns to the country, and finds, to his amazement, that his own personality has become the central point of a new religious development among the Erewhonians, and the circumstances of his departure are already obscured by a cloud of myth. Mr. Butler works out his idea with extreme ingenuity and an ironical purpose which can hardly fail to hit its mark. The name of the new religion was Sunchildism. Originally an outgrowth of the popular wonder at the marvel of the balloon, it had been taken up by the managers of the Musical Banks to buttress their own falling reputation, and organised into a regular cult. Its chief priests were Professor Hanky, Royal Professor of Worldly Wisdom at Bridgeford; and Professor Panky, Royal Professor of Unworldly Wisdom at the same seat of learning. The difference between Hanky and Panky consisted in the fact that, while Hanky humbugged everyone except himself, Panky humbugged himself more than anyone else. In the myth Higgs was represented as returning with his bride to the palace of his father, the Sun, and the balloon had given place to a chariot drawn by four black-and-white horses. These horses were really, as Hanky knew, some black-and-white storks that happened to be circling in the air at the moment of Higgs's departure. But as horses they appeared in all pictorial representations of the divine event, and to mention storks in this connection would in due time become a heresy. Moreover, a relic had lately been found, in the shape of some miraculously-preserved droppings from one of the horses, which had been placed in a gold reliquary. When Higgs came to look at this marvel, he found that it consisted of some coprolites. He was also much astonished to discover how his casual sayings, when in Erewhon, on ethical and religious subjects had been elaborated and perverted in the sacred books and maxims of the new creed. Professor Panky, for instance, who was a critical scholar, had a theory on the words "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us." He argued thus:

> Can you not see how impossible it is for the Sunchild, or any of the people to whom he declared (as we now know, provisionally) that he belonged, could have made the forgiveness of his own sins depend on the readiness with which he forgave other people? No man in his senses would dream of such a thing. It would be asking a supposed all-powerful being not to forgive his sins at all, or at best to forgive them imperfectly. No, Yram got it wrong. She mistook "but do not" for "as we." The sound of the words is very much alike; the correct reading should obviously be "Forgive us our trespasses, but do not forgive them that trespass against us." This makes sense, and turns an impossible prayer into one that goes straight to the heart of every one of us.

Higgs visits a provincial town and hears the mayor counsel a father as to the case of a child who appeared to be irretrievably and hopelessly good by nature. He advised that she should be taught to lie, and quoted the Sunchild to support his view:

> The Sunchild (and here he reverently raised his hat), as you may read in Chapter Thirty-one of his Sayings, has left us a touching tale of a little boy, who, having cut down an apple-tree in his father's garden, lamented his inability to tell a lie. Some commentators, indeed, have held that the evidence was so strongly against the boy that no lie would have been of any use to him, and that his perception of this fact was all that he intended to convey; but the best authorities take his simple words, "I cannot tell a lie," in their most natural sense, as being his expression of regret at the way in which his education had been neglected.

Under the influence of Sunchildism Deformatories for children had been set up everywhere. Higgs inspected one of these, and found it ornamented with inscriptions from the "Sunchild Sayings." Over the schoolroom fireplace was, "Resist good, and it will fly from you," and on the façade:

> When the righteous man turneth away from the righteousness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is a little naughty and wrong, he will generally be found to have gained in amiability what he has lost in righteousness.

The tendencies of Sunchildism as interpreted by Professors of Worldly Wisdom and other managers of Musical Banks will now be clear. Perhaps the gist of Mr. Butler's somewhat daring satire will be clear too. In a preface he declares himself "a member of the more advanced wing of the English Broad Church," and states a general theory as to the course of development common to all new religions:

> In all cases the times are more or less out of joint—olden faiths are losing their hold on the masses. At such times, let a personality appear, strong in itself, and made to seem still stronger by association with some supposed transcendent miracle, and it will be easy to raise a "Lo, here!" that will attract many followers. If there be a single great, and apparently well-authenticated, miracle, others will accrete around it. How, in all religions that have so originated, there will follow temples, priests, rites, sincere believers, and unscrupulous exploiters of public credulity.

It remains to be said that the narrative interest of Erewhon Revisited is far greater than that of Erewhon. Naturally, the reappearance of Higgs was likely to introduce complications into the now established organisation of Sunchildism. One is reminded, by the way, of Clough's fragmentary poem on "The Shadow." The Musical Bank managers were on the point of dedicating a new temple to the Sunchild, and it would not do to have the function interfered with. So Professor Hanky determined quietly to suppress the dedicatee. The latter part of the book is mainly occupied with a lively story of the intrigues and counter-intrigues which lead to the frustration of this attempt. Higgs declares his identity at the dedication ceremony, and is hustled out of the way as a harmless lunatic. But he finds champions. It turns out that, without his knowledge, and certainly without the knowledge of the readers of Erewhon, he had had a child by the faithful and unfortunate Yram. This child is now ranger of the royal preserves in the neighbourhood of Sunch'ston. There are touching recognitions and forgivenesses. Yram and the ranger enter the lists against Hanky, who is convicted of eating the strictly preserved royal quails, on the pretence that he thought they were landrails, and Higgs is enabled to escape once more across the frontier. Sunchildism remains dominant, and Hanky, his crime passed over, is in due course canonised as a saint of the church. So ends a thoroughly entertaining and not altogether unprofitable book.

Digitized by Google

Sicily in Letters.

By the Waters of Sicily. By Norma Lorimer. (Hutchinson. 10s. 6d. net.)

THIS, apparently, is one of the innumerable progeny of An Englishwoman's Love-Letters. It is really a kind of tour in Sicily, illustrated by photographs of Sicilian scenery, and strung upon a slight story—of course a love-story. Equally of course, the book is in epistolary form, the writer, however, being (by allegation) a man. Not very masculine, however, is the style of the book, which has the merits and defects of a woman's writing. Here is a passage on Hyblæan honey:

> "I'm very sorry," she said . . . "but I prefer honey made by the bees of to-day. I will taste this, however, and give it a chance. Oh! it's horrid!" she said, making a wry face; "it tastes like sour vinegar."
>
> "You prefer honey made in London, where the bees are fed on beer and sugar, and where none of them have ever seen a flower in their lives, no doubt?"
>
> "I suppose I do," she said. "Anyhow, I don't like this: it smells like pomade and tastes like vinegar."
>
> "The smell is the scent of the asphodels, that have always grown on the Hyblæan hills; both the flower and the honey are classical."
>
> "Everything is classical here," she said with a sigh. "I can't even eat a modern breakfast. Did Socrates mention fresh eggs? I hope he did."

Information so conveyed remains in your mind. But we like not the syrupy set descriptions. It is a pleasant and interesting record of travel; and the story is merely the jam with the powder.

"Of the Gently Pleasing Kind."

Poems, Chiefly Lyric and Elgiac. By Arthur Munby. (Kegan Paul. 5s.)

THIS volume is dedicated "To my Friend of Forty Years, Austin Dobson." But it has nothing, nor aims at anything, of Mr. Dobson's quality. It is one more of the many books of verse with a certain moderate grace and accomplishment of form, but without originality of substance or any touch of poetic magic in expression. A certain gentle tenderness and pensiveness are its pervading qualities; while it is direct, clear, and aims at no adornment of imagery, of which, indeed, it is markedly destitute Since imagery always stands in the way of the average reader's comprehension, this is, so far, an element of popularity. Perhaps one of the best poems in the volume is "Haymaking," of which we quote partially the conclusion:

> Lucy aloft on the wain, with the hay-floods rising about her,
> Masters each mounting wave, spreads it and smoothes it around;
> Till from her settled throne, from the levelled and perfected summit,
> Pausing awhile to gaze timidly over the edge,
> She in a trice slips down by the well-comb'd walls of the waggon
> Into my arms, and I lead her at length to the farm.
> Sweet is the full farmyard, for the creatures she loves are within it;
> Sweet is the green little garth where she sits milking at eve;
>
> Ah, if I win her at last, there will not be aught of deserving;
> She has a treasure to give more than I dare to demand
> She will come down to my heart as a lark drops out of the heaven
> Into its homely nest, low in the whispering corn.

These lines (which, by the way, handle pleasingly the elegiac metre, which seems to be increasingly popular among recent poets) exhibit favourably the qualities we have noted; while the final image is decidedly pretty, if not very original. These are poems, in fine, which can neither be blamed nor overmuch praised; of the gently-pleasing kind.

Mr. Gosse's "Ironic Fantasy."

Hypolympia. By Edmund Gosse. (Heinemann. 5s.)

BY what right does Mr. Gosse label his book "an ironic fantasy"? Irony is for a reader to discover for himself; if he has not the intelligence to discover it, he need not be reading the book, nor will the label help him. Both the irony and the fantasy are of a disappointingly ordinary character. Mr. Gosse imagines a visit of the gods, exiled and made mortal, to a Lutheran island, where they examine the customs of the inhabitants, and comment, sometimes in prose and sometimes in verse. The machinery, though familiar, offers opportunities for caustic wit; but Mr. Gosse does not proceed beyond a certain mild and stilted facetiousness; while the poetical passages are not memorable. One object of Mr. Gosse's satire is the New Poetry; but there he seems to us to have merely missed the chance of being funny. The whole work suggests an exercise in Gilbertism by an essentially academic mind unwilling to let itself go. Mr. Gosse's letter to Stevenson concerning the English Immortals, where he was not standing on his dignity, and not bound in vellum, was worth a shelf of Hypolympias. We quote Mr. Gosse's only lyric:

> As I lay on the grass, with the sun in the west,
> A woman went by me, a babe at her breast;
> She kissed it and pressed it,
> She cooed, she caressed it,
> Then rocked it to sleep in her elbow nest.
>
> She rocked it to rest with a sad little song—
> How the days were grown short, and the nights grown long;
> How love was a rover,
> How summer was over,
> How the winds of winter were shrill and strong.
>
> "We must haste," she sang, "while the sky is bright,
> While the paths are plain, and the town's in sight,
> Lest the shadows that watch us
> Should creep up and catch us;
> For the dead walk here on the grass at night."

Digitized by Google

Fiction Supplement.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS
(A SELECTION).

JUST PUBLISHED.—A Novel, by the Writer of "An Englishwoman's Love-Letters," entitled:—

A MODERN ANTAEUS.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW 6s. NOVELS.

THE CAVALIER. A Tale of Life and Adventures among the Confederates during the Civil War in the United States. By G. W. CABLE. [Just out.

"A vivid and fascinating story, wherein style and substance alike demand and reward the reading of every line."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE ROAD to FRONTENAC. A Novel of the Days of the French Occupation of Canada. By SAMUEL MERWIN. [Just out.

NEW 2s 6d. net NOVELS.

UNIFORM WITH "THE COMPLEAT BACHELOR."

ANTONIA: A Story of the Early Settle- ments on the Hudson River. By JESSIE VAN ZILE BELDEN. [Just out.

THE GATHERING of BROTHER HILARIUS. A Romance of the Time of the Great Pestilence in the 14th Century. By MICHAEL FAIRLESS. [Just out.

"An idyll in prose.....A fascinating piece of mediæval romance." The Times.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of LADY SARAH LENNOX, 1745-1826. Daughter of the second Duke of Richmond, and successively the wife of Sir Thomas Charles Bunbury, Bart., and of the Honourable George Napier. From original documents preserved at Melbury; also a Short Political Sketch of the Years 1760 to 1763 by Henry Fox, first Lord Holland: and other Manuscripts found at Holland House. Edited by the COUNTESS of ILCHESTER and LORD STAVORDALE. With numerous Photogravure Portraits. 2 vols. Demy 8vo, 32s. net. [Just out.

JOHN CHINAMAN. By E. H. Parker, Professor of Chinese at the Owens College; Acting Consul-General in Corea, Nov., 1886—Jan., 1887; Consul in Hainan, 1891-2, 1893-4, and in 1892-3 Adviser in Chinese Affairs to the Burma Government. Large crown 8vo, 8s. net. [Just out.

This book consists of a series of anecdotes derived from the writer's own personal experience in China, and illustrating the character and customs of the Chinese in their social, political, religious, and commercial dealings among themselves and with other nationalities.

RECOLLECTIONS of the OLD FOREIGN OFFICE. By Sir EDWARD HERTSLET, K.C.B., for many years Librarian and Keeper of the Archives of the Foreign Office. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net. [Ready next week.

A DOCTOR in KHAKI. Impressions of War and of Hospital Work in South Africa. By FRANCIS FREMANTLE, M.A., M.B., M.R.C.P., late Civil-Surgeon with the South African Field Force, and Assistant Secretary to the War Office Committee on Army Medical Reorganisation. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready next week.

FINLAND AS IT IS. By Harry De Windt. With Map and numerous Full-page and other Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 9s. net. [Ready next week.

THE DAWN of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. A History of Exploration and Geographical Science from the opening of the Tenth to the Middle of the Thirteenth Century (A.D. 903—1250). By C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, Author of "The Dawn of Modern Geography, from the Conversion of the Roman Empire to 900 A.D." With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 18s. [Just out.

THE GREAT PERSIAN WAR and ITS PRELIMINARIES. A Study of the Evidence, Literary and Topographical. By G. B. GRUNDY, M.A., Lecturer at Brasenose College, and University Lecturer in Classical Geography. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 21s. net. [Ready shortly.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

KIM. By RUDYARD KIPLING.
Illustrated by J. LOCKWOOD KIPLING. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LETTERS OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN.
Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. With 3 Portraits. 8vo, 15s. net.

Times.—"A necessary and fascinating link between the man and his work.. ..Admirably edited None can read Green's letters without feeling with Mr. Stephen that they give a very vivid picture of a surprisingly many-sided character and intellect."

BY FREDERIC HARRISON.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, and other American Addresses. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVELS.
Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

F. MARION CRAWFORD. MARIETTA: A MAID OF VENICE.

By the AUTHOR of "ELIZABETH and her GERMAN GARDEN." THE BENEFACTRESS.

ROSA N. CAREY. HERB OF GRACE.

AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE. THE SECRET ORCHARD.

STEPHEN GWYNN. THE OLD KNOWLEDGE.

ERIC PARKER. THE SINNER AND THE PROBLEM.

A. C. FARQUHARSON. ST. NAZARIUS.

EVELYN SHARP. THE YOUNGEST GIRL IN THE SCHOOL.

S. WEIR MITCHELL. CIRCUMSTANCE.

THE WORKS OF

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.
Reprinted from the First Editions, with all the Original Illustrations, Facsimiles of Wrappers, &c.
In crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per Volume.
Vol. I. VANITY FAIR. Vol. II. The HISTORY of PENDENNIS.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

THE HOUSE of ATREUS: being the AGAMEMNON, LIBATION-BEARERS, AND FURIES OF ÆSCHYLUS.
Translated into English Verse by E. D. A. MORSHEAD, M.A.
Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.
Globe 8vo, 5s. per volume. Contains 152 vols., among which are—

JOHN MORLEY'S COLLECTED WORKS. 11 vols.
CHARLES LAMB'S LETTERS AND WORKS. 7 vols.
THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE. 10 vols.

 Send for new Complete List.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Digitized by Google

POPULAR FICTION

FROM

GREENING & CO.'S LIST.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

JUST OUT.

ROMANCE of a HAREM: a Story founded on Fact Translated from the French by CLARENCE FORESTIER-WALKER. Crown 8vo, crimson art vellum, with flaps, lettered in white, and tied with white satin ribbon. 5s. net.

ROMANCE of a HAREM: 5s. net.

(The author of this book was for many years in the Imperial Harem at Constantinople. The Sultan of Turkey, after reading the story, issued an order forbidding Mussulman families to employ European governesses.)

"— AND AFTERWARDS?" a Novel. By Mrs. Harold E. GORST, Author of "Possessed of Devils." 6s.

"It is a bright, go-ahead story, and the pictures of Bohemia and society are equally true to life."—The Candid Friend.

CYNTHIA'S DAMAGES: a Story of the Stage. By REGINALD TURNER. 6s.

"A most interesting book, bubbling with humour, and yet teaching a lesson to those who have the wit to understand what is written between the lines."
"A good story smartly told."—Morning Leader. North Star.

WHERE the ORANGES GROW. A Humorous Story. Translated by Count C. S. DE SOISSONS from the Russian of Nicholas Leyken (the "Mark Twain of Russia"). 6s.

"A light and lively story, full of good fun."—Scotsman.
"This is a book calculated to disarm the critic. After the first few pages, he finds his critical faculty entirely gone, and he gives himself over to the pure enjoyment of the reading; and when he has done reading, he discovers that he is the richer for it. Quite incidentally, and without a shadow of obtrusion, the book is as instructive as it is interesting.....Altogether, it is a delightful piece of reading, and the least one may do in return for the pleasure provided by author, translator, and publisher is to recommend their combined efforts to others; and this we do very heartily indeed."—Daily Express.

BACK to LILAC-LAND: a Story of Theatrical Life. By A WELL-KNOWN AUTHOR. 6s.

(This book is the most daring and most realistic story of the stage ever written. It is written by a well-known London Journalist, who has a very wide and intimate knowledge of theatrical affairs, both before and behind the scenes. Though a realistic work, it is not a depressing and morbid study, but a powerful, vigorous, and dramatic, yet bright and entertaining, tale, which will keep the reader interested from the first line to the last.)

AN IDOL of BRONZE: a Tale of Mexico. By Louise PALMER HEAVEN, Author of "Chata and Chinita." 3s. 6d.

RED FATE: a Powerful Novel. By Edmund Forbes. 6s.

"In 'Red Fate' we have a daring book. Messrs. Greening have in Mr. Forbes the writer of a strong book that will cause some talk."—Daily Despatch.

IRA LORRAINE: a Novel. By Coralie Fevez. 6s.

"Full of incidents and movement."—Illustrated London News.

OUR LADY of the ICE: an Interesting Story of Alpine Adventure. By Miss CONSTANCE SUTCLIFFE. Cloth, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY of a PEDIGREE: a Society Novel. By HUGO AMES. 6s.

"Can be recommended as a bright, terse, epigrammatic novel of to-day. There are so few writers who are capable of constructing a neat and telling epigram that the present volume is doubly welcome."—Sunday Special.

THE CIGARETTE SMOKER: a Powerful Indictment of Nicotomania. By C. RANGER GULL. 2s. 6d. Cover designed by the Author.

(Cigarette smoking has increased over 120 per cent. during the last six years, and many cases of homicidal mania have been traced to excessive consumption of cigarettes. The author has made a careful and exhaustive study of the mania, the result being a powerful and thrilling story.)

A DEAD WOMAN'S WISH: a Novel. By Zola. Hitherto not translated into English. 3s. 6d.

(This is one of the great French writer's early novels, and is full of youthful vigour. The story is interesting, powerful, and dramatic.)

MAD: an Exciting Story of Predestination. By J Pym LOUGHNAN. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"We must congratulate Mr. Loughnan on his originality in conceiving an extraordinary character and on working out the story with quite blood-curdling thrill."—Evening Times.

THE MAGNETISM of SIN: a Tale Founded on Fact. By "ÆSCULAPIUS." Cloth, 3s. 6d.

("The Magnetism of Sin" is a story as choke-full of mystery as any tale could be The author of the book—who is obviously a very daring young man—has written a story which is as remarkable in its way as "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.")

New Complete Catalogue post free on application.

London:
GREENING & CO., LTD., 20, Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

FIVE IMPORTANT NOVELS

READY OR NEARLY READY.

1.

By Mrs. FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY.—Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAKING OF A MARCHIONESS.

BY

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT,
Author of "A Lady of Quality," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c.

2.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

FIRST IMPRESSION nearly exhausted.
SECOND IMPRESSION in the Press.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,
Author of "The New Rector," "A Gentleman of France," "The Castle Inn," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Daily News.—"The thing is surprisingly well done.....Events follow one another with the same breathless sequence as in his previous romances."

COUNT HANNIBAL.

Scotsman.—"A very fine romance, a masterpiece in Mr. Weyman's own style of work.....The character of Count Hannibal is one of Mr. Weyman's most powerful and striking creations."

COUNT HANNIBAL.

Daily Mail.—"Mr. Weyman has drawn no figure whereon he may more safely base his claim to be a great novelist."

3.

By Miss JEWETT.

ON NOVEMBER 12th.—With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TORY LOVER.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT,
Author of "The Queen's Twin, and Other Stories," &c.

4.

By the AUTHOR of 'THE SOWERS.'

ON DECEMBER 3rd.—Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE VELVET GLOVE.

By H. S. MERRIMAN,
Author of "The Sowers," "In Kedar's Tents," "The Isle of Unrest," &c.

5.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON.

ON NOVEMBER 12th.—Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD HALPIN:

A Romance of the New Navy.
By MORGAN ROBERTSON,
Author of "Spun Yarn," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," &c.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

Fiction Supplement.

SATURDAY: 9 NOVEMBER, 1901.

Ten Months of Fiction.

POLITICAL and commercial conditions, which must of necessity influence—and influence profoundly—the secret and inexplicable processes of the artist, have not in the immediate past been very favourable to the art of fiction. And they will be even less so in the immediate future. This is a truism, but it needs to be emphasised. The general public, aware only that of late it has been less interested than usual in fiction, has only the vaguest idea of what that disinclination to buy and read novels means to the producer of novels. We do not hesitate to say that if the naked facts of the case were exposed, as they never will be, the public would be amazed at the spectacle of havoc. For ourselves, we know of instances of established and reputable authors the sales of whose novels have fallen ninety per cent. below the average, which is to say that where once they sold ten copies they now sell one. We know of instances of praiseworthy novels by new authors which literally have not sold at all, despite reviews and despite advertisements; the great libraries and the principal booksellers have declined to look at them on subscription; and the sales have been exactly proportionate to the number and loyalty of the authors' friends. Probably in no single month for many years have so many novels been issued as were issued last month. And as for the fiscal result, we have been told that a certain library was absolutely ignoring half-a-dozen new novels a day. Were it not for the blessed prop and stay of "serial rights," many authors whose names are literary household words would be in a position to regard the heaviest imposition of income-tax with sardonic indifference. We are not gloomy; we do not believe that the continuance of the war will involve the utter ruin of a respectable and industrious class of penmen. The calamity is not permanent. "This, too, will pass," and time will cure it. But pending the operations of that slow physician it has to be endured. And it is being endured with remarkable fortitude by both novelists and their publishers.

Artistically, the year, if not dazzlingly brilliant, has been far less dull than the circumstances would have excused. We cannot count either Mr. Meredith or Mr. Hardy as regularly active, and we have almost ceased to expect them to produce. Mr. Blackmore is dead, with a noble record behind him. In default of the Three, whom do we look to for serious effort in the art of fiction? We look (in alphabetical order) to Mr. Joseph Conrad, Mr. George Gissing, Mr. Maurice Hewlett, "John Oliver Hobbes," Mr. W. W. Jacobs, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mr. George Moore, Mr. Eden Phillpotts, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Mr. H. G. Wells, and "Zack." Of these, all but Mrs. Ward and Mr. Wells have furnished something during the year, though the productions of Mr. Conrad, Mr. Hewlett, and Mr. Phillpotts have not been of major importance. And, in the secondary rank of those who mirror the time with power and ingenuity, but without that poetic poignancy or that natural humour which differentiates fine art from clever craft, we have had Tristram of Blent and Sir Richard Calmady. Our list of the twelve best novels of the year shall stand as follows. We need not say that it is not meant for a list of the twelve novels that have made the most noise:

Kim. By Rudyard Kipling.
Sister Teresa. By George Moore.
Our Friend the Charlatan. By George Gissing.
The Serious Wooing. By "John Oliver Hobbes."
The White Cottage. By "Zack."
The History of Sir Richard Calmady. By "Lucas Malet."
Tristram of Blent. By Anthony Hope.
The Column. By Charles Marriott.
The Lost Land. By Julia M. Crottie.
Casting of Nets. By Richard Bagot.
The Lord of the Sea. By M. P. Shiel.
The House with the Green Shutters. By "George Douglas."

To these we must add a small, but rather unusual, group of short stories:

Light Freights. By W. W. Jacobs.
The Striking Hours. By Eden Phillpotts.
New Canterbury Tales. By Maurice Hewlett.
Tales of Dunstable Weir. By "Zack."

There is, by the way, far more humour in these four volumes than in all the twelve novels.

Our detailed criticisms of Kim and Richard Calmady are too recent to need recapitulation here. It suffices to say of Richard Calmady, that its success is definitely limited to three characters and its homogeneity marred by the intrusion of much unnecessary melodrama and extravagance. And in regard to Sir Richard Calmady and the other novels of modern English life in our list, we must remark that, as a body, the writers have scarcely succeeded in giving any broad picture of the era. Some of them have not tried to do so. Only Our Friend the Charlatan offers a version of the times at once inclusive and exact. Sister Teresa is the history of a single detached soul. The Serious Wooing is modern life wonderfully coloured by a prismatic personality. The White Cottage has no bigness. Tristram of Blent makes no pretence of seeing life whole and vehemently; it looks on casually and unmoved at the only class of English people whom Mr. Hope cares to survey. Casting of Nets, of which we gladly recognise the promise, is too obviously preoccupied with a trifle. We, of course, do not assert that every serious novel should attempt to deal with national manners as, for instance, Anna Karenina deals with national manners. But we consider that more of our writers might venture on such an enterprise. And we further think that a novel should not leave on the reader the impression, as too many do, that no life exists outside the limited life therein described. Our quarrel with the generality of serious novels is that they are like a page of an atlas—they picture in detail a given part of the earth's surface and show the surrounding parts white, uninhabited. No class nor community does or can exist independently; and it should be the business of the class-novelist and the community-novelist (we have both) to indicate the propinquity of the class above, the class beneath, and a world at large. We lay the more stress on our insular failure to produce novels that portray the era in that America has recently shown us how the feat may be performed. From that land of literary booms supereminently foolish have come two of the finest novels of the year. We mean:

The Octopus. By Frank Norris.
Sister Carrie. By Theodore Dreiser.

No one can read either of these admirable books without having learnt something—not merely about this person or that, this class or the other, but about America. The movement in them is large, racial; the vision poetic and comprehensive; the sentiment is never sentimentality. They exercise the highest function of the modern novel. With Mr. Frank Norris we were acquainted before, but the name of Theodore Dreiser is new. It stands for nothing but Sister Carrie; nevertheless Mr. Dreiser is beyond question one of the most promising novelists now writing in English. While touching on books by Americans, we should mention Mr. Henry James's The Sacred Fount, that reductio ad absurdum of Mr. Henry James, and the late Stephen Crane's The Monster—a volume of characteristic power and ferocity.

Digitized by Google

To return to our list, Mr. Charles Marriott's The Column, though curiously artificial, was vivid and compelling. It was also well written, but with a tendency, like many new books, to over-emphasis. The Lost Land, by Miss Crottie, is the only historical or quasi-historical novel that deserves mention in the fiction of the year. It is a convincing reconstitution of the eighteenth century in Ireland, rather fine than strong, but throughout of much beauty and true merit. There remains The Lord of the Sea, which we have included because its wild sensationalism was justified by much artistic writing, by psychological insight, and by real imagination. As a literary phenomenon Mr. M. P. Shiel has yet to be assessed. That he cannot be neglected is certain. The House with the Green Shutters, by Mr. "George Douglas," is reviewed in another column. It is a first book, and certainly shows power.

Other novels which honourably emerge from the welter are The Church of Humanity and Despair's Last Journey, two impressive and faithful studies by the veteran David Christie Murray, who is writing better now than ever he did in his youth; The Good Red Earth, by Mr. Eden Phillpotts, chiefly remarkable for some passionate descriptions of Devonshire scenery; Voysey, by Mr. R. O. Prowse; The Inheritors, a fantasia, by Mr. Joseph Conrad and Mr. Hueffer; The Grip of the Bookmaker, by Mr. Percy White, in the same kind, but not as good, as The West End; Mr. Walter Raymond's Fortune's Darling; Mr. James Prior's Forest Folk, and Mr. Marriott Watson's The Skirts of Happy Chance. Our readers will not expect us to include the dizzying notorieties of the year, and we shall make no other reference to them.

Were we asked what was the conspicuous lack of the year's output we should decidedly say Romance, in the old-fashioned sense. There is a fairly good supply of that romance which "brings up the nine-fifteen," and we appreciate it. But of that other sort, the Dumas sort, almost none. We cannot easily conceive anything more unromantic than Mr. Neil Munro's elaborately-wrought "romance," Doom Castle. If this is the best to be done by a clever and painstaking writer who yearns towards romance, may it not be said that the romantic spirit has indeed vanished from among us? Historical romances there are in plenty, and the very feeblest of them sell fabulously in the United States, but, with the exception of The Lost Land and New Canterbury Tales and Mr. Weyman's Count Hannibal, they are conventional and sentimental. The supreme point about Dumas is that he was never sentimental. His English and American imitators (and we excuse neither Mr. Neil Munro nor Mr. Frank Mathew, whose Royal Sisters is one of a series of disappointments from his pen) carry sentimentality to the verge of nausea, and often over the verge. Nor do they show any originality of conception, nor any masculine verve. We are inclined to call them, in Stevenson's phrase, a set of "anæmic and tailorish persons." A real historical romance would meet a want that is not only felt but frequently expressed, at the libraries and the shops, by people who know a book when they see it. In these columns we have felt bound constantly to preach the necessity of naturalism (by which we mean truth-facing) in the modern novel, but we have done this without prejudice to our profound belief that romantic fiction is, or should be, every whit the equal brother—equal in appeal, sanction, and artistic importance—of naturalistic fiction.

Our Plébiscite.

In the week before last our usual Competition took the form of a request for the twelve best novels published during the first ten months of this year. An examination of all the lists sent in has resulted in the following selection of novels which in the united judgment of the competitors are entitled to be considered the "twelve best" novels published in 1901 up to the end of October:

TITLE.	NUMBER OF VOTES.
Kim	80
History of Sir Richard Calmady	77
The Eternal City	61
Tristram of Blent	61
The Serious Wooing	44
The Right of Way	44
The Benefactress	39
Sister Teresa	35
The Column	35
The Octopus	31
The Crisis	30
New Canterbury Tales	29

It will be seen that the above selection agrees with our own in six instances. It must be remembered, however, that in a competition of this kind the popularity of novels as distinct from their literary value is certain to be taken into consideration by competitors, who, with a prize in view, feel themselves bound to consider the probable selections of the whole body of competitors. Last year, under the same conditions, agreement between our readers and ourselves was represented in six out of twelve novels, or one half.

The twenty novels which our readers consider come next in merit are as follows:

TITLE.	NUMBER OF VOTES.
Light Freights	20
Lysbeth	17
The White Cottage	15
Bubs the Impossible	14
The Visits of Elizabeth	14
Count Hannibal	12
The Luck of the Vails	12
A Lady of Lynn	12
The Secret Orchard	12
Doom Castle	11
Our Friend the Charlatan	11
The Death of the Gods	11
Jack Raymond	10
The Alien	9
A Nest of Linnets	8
Casting of Nets	8
Love and His Mask	7
The Good Red Earth	7
Forest Folk	7
An Englishwoman's Love-Letters	7

The Prize.

The prize winner, Miss E. M. Evans, of St. Mary's, Ely, Cambs., has selected eleven out of the twelve novels in the Plébiscite List. Not only has Miss Evans supplied eleven-twelfths of the Plébiscite List, but she has in a rather striking measure anticipated the voting in the sequence she has adopted. Her list is as follows:

1. Kim.
2. Sir Richard Calmady.
3. Sister Teresa.
4. Lysbeth.
5. The Benefactress.
6. Tristram of Blent.
7. The Serious Wooing.
8. The Right of Way.
9. The Column.
10. The Crisis.
11. The Octopus.
12. The Eternal City.

Three competitors gave ten titles out of the twelve in the Plébiscite List, and several gave nine and eight titles.

Digitized by Google

New Novels.

Tales of Dunstable Weir. By "Zack." (Methuen. 6s.)

THERE are six short tales in this book, and one long one of a hundred and thirty pages. "Zack" is the narrator, and "Zack" uses the Somersetshire dialect throughout. It must be said that some of "Zack's" own sayings are shrewd and witty:

> "Do 'ee reckon there's any truth in the tale, Zack?"
> "Well," I answered, scratching my head to ease out the words, "me and the village be one and the same mind in public, but when I gits by myself I has a single man's judgment."

But at the same time we think that Miss Keats made a mistake in art when she gave "Zack" the office of speaker. An artist cannot separate one of his works from the rest—that is where the mere artificer has an advantage. His works "go together." Now we have grown accustomed to regard "Zack" as a rare user of fine words, a highly skilled connoisseur in English. There are phrases in On Trial and The White Cottage which one remembers. How then can "Zack" be a villager among villagers with a rough and untutored tongue? The absence of any satisfactory reply to this question certainly impairs the basic verisimilitude of the book from end to end. The tales are very meritorious—restrained in manner, "strong without rage," calm without being flaccid, generally witty in the vein of pawkiness, and often humorous. In describing Martin the Silent, in "Benjamin Parrot's Fancy," "Zack" says:

> He wasn't no patriot, taking no interest in war or the grasping ways o' t'other nations, though there was not a child in the parish who couldn't have told him that if 'twasn't for England there would be little enough honesty left in the world, or religion either for the matter o' that. At election times he never went near the Red Lion, but just bided at home; and when the Squire had us all up to the great house to dinner, and said he hoped that we'd all vote "straight," Martin got up and said, "What was straight for one wasn't always straight for t'other," which the village held, for a silent man, was saying a deal too much.

In the matter of construction, we think several of the tales have the demerit of being too ingenious. Extreme ingenuity and originality of situation is never a characteristic of the authentic "village chronicle," as told in the inn or on the doorstep.

The House with the Green Shutters. By George Douglas. (Macqueen. 6s.)

"'Dim it!' said he. I like a man that says 'Dahm't.'" From this fragment of conversation you may learn that you are in the Kailyard, where men have the dialectic temper, and "the English" is little considered. But it is the Kailyard with a difference. Mr. Douglas has little use for sentimentality of the "Stickit Minister" order, and his humour is grim, rather than pawky. His aim is tragedy, a dour tragedy with a streak of savagery in it. As mere humorous relief, the daily foregathering of the "bodies" on the Bend o' the Brae would be a trifle obvious, but the "bodies" have another function besides that of humorous relief. Gourlay called them "a wheen damned auld wives"; and they are the chorus in the play of Gourlay's downfall. His was the House with the Green Shutters, "gawcey and substantial on its terrace, beneath the tremulous beauty of the dawn," the outward symbol of a domination over Barbie won by no special capacity of intellect, but by sheer brute force of a resolute narrow character. Gourlay's financial stability crumbles away at the coming of keener commercial wits. His personal dignity is ruined by the disgrace brought on him by an imaginative drunken son, whom he has bullied from childhood, and whose desperate reply to the girds with which his dismissal from the University is greeted ends the story:

> As Gourlay leapt, John brought the huge poker with a crash on the descending brow. The fiercest joy of his life was the dirt that went up his arm, as the steel thrilled to its own hard impact on the bone. Gourlay thudded on the fender, his brow crashing on the rim.

This is violent enough to stir even the jaded modern taste for such things. It is Mr. Douglas's frequent fault to be too violent, but he has a receptive eye and a power of vivid description beyond the common:

> Mr. Gourlay passed on to the inner yard, which was close to the scullery door. The paved little court, within its high wooden walls, was curiously fresh and clean. A cock pigeon strutted round, puffing his gleaming breast, and rook-tty-cooing in the sun. Large clear drops fell slowly from the spout of a wooden pump, and splashed upon a flat stone. The place seemed to enfold the stillness. There was a sense of inclusion and peace.

There is the right touch about this. One is less gratified, however, when Mr. Douglas insists upon seeing "thick slabs of rancid bacon, from the top of which two yellow eggs had spewed themselves away among the cold gravy." The House with the Green Shutters errs on the side of violence and over-emphasis. But as a first book it is remarkable.

The Right of Way. By Gilbert Parker. (Heinemann.)

THE first impression of one who, by some chance, comes new to Mr. Gilbert Parker's work is that he ought to be writing regularly for the stage. One can imagine a very successful melodrama made out of this very book. But in this we praise him not. It is by no means a merit in a novel to suggest the footlights, as The Right of Way does suggest them. For it is stagey in a high degree. There is too much "business," there is too much "curtain"; there is, in the dialogue, too much George Alexander. Beauty Steele is Mr. Alexander's part, and, to be frank, he is rather a bore. The specimens of his conversation do not convince one of the preternatural cleverness with which he is said to have been endowed, and he is not really effective even when he sets himself to be rude. And that eyeglass—does Mr. Parker think that an eyeglass can be used with real effect by a man who is not short-sighted? Well, it cannot; and there is nothing to lead one to suppose that Steele's eyeglass was used as an aid to vision. Also a complexion of cherries and cream is not, in this country at any rate, regarded as an element of masculine beauty. Steele is by way of being a sceptic, and he agnosticises at great length in a sufficiently obvious vein. But to compensate for Steele's shortcomings, there is in the book, and in the people among whom he moved as a stranger, after the brawl in which he was supposed to have lost his life, evidence of quick and sympathetic observation. The Curé is well drawn, so is the Seigneur, so is Mrs. Flynn, the Irish cook; so, in general, are the village folk, simple, but dangerous, with the inherited faith that is liable, on provocation, to flame out to fanatical fury. And Rosalie is a girl any man might be proud of. The irony of the situation in which Steele is placed—his wife alive but supposing herself married to another man, himself in love with Rosalie as Rosalie with him—is brought forcibly home. But the conclusion is rather huddled, and Mr. Parker should really have made up his mind whether the man died a Christian or not. Also the words last upon his lips happen to be a repetition of the least effective of all his reported impertinences:

> "I beg—your—pardon," he whispered to the imagined figure, and the light died out of his eyes, "have I—ever—been—introduced—to you?"

Digitized by Google

The Old Knowledge. By Stephen Gwynn. (Macmillan.)

THIS is a book dealing with the outer boundaries of mysticism, or rather with a combination of old Irish folk-lore and what is called the power of seeing the "invisible." A very modern and cheerful love story is the lighter motif of the volume; and somewhat far-fetched as the more mystical part of the book is, it contains certainly the better writing of the two. The modern love affair is largely comprised of light conversation, not visibly useful to the progress of the story. Its extreme futility becomes a little tedious in the end. But the peasant Conroy, visionary and seer, brings in a different atmosphere altogether. The invisible world in his presence becomes mystically alive, peopled with visions, potential and dangerous when worked upon by the will of a soul trained largely to discard the material, outer envelope of existence and people. Unfortunately for the success of the book, the mystical element is used too fitfully to produce any conviction. The reader is jumped backwards and forwards with amazing abruptness between the dual subjects—the trivial modern love affair and the fantastic peasant spiritualism—with the result of being engrossed by neither. For want of sustained treatment the Conroy episode, with its curious trial of mediæval spells and sheer will magnetism, borders, in fact, dangerously upon the grotesque; the imagination of the reader, unaroused by careful preparation, remains stolidly upon the commonplace and somewhat sceptical level of the very ordinary love story.

Clementina. By A. W. Mason. (Methuen. 6s.)

AMONGST the industrious novelists who ransack the theatrical wardrobes of history Mr. Mason holds a distinct and assured position. Clementina leaves that position unchanged. A prince in exile; a princess on her way to marry him arrested and imprisoned; a gallant Irish gentleman, our old friend the cosmopolitan adventurer, all steel and suavity, himself loving the Princess, yet sworn to bring her liberated to his King—these characters wear costume to the best advantage. 'Tis fiction in fancy dress. But Mr. Mason in Clementina deserves our thanks on more counts than one. His prince in exile, James Stuart, the old Pretender, has not yet grown quite stale in suggestion, and his character is not insisted upon as an historical portrait. Once one knows that one is in for a story of battle, murder, and sudden death one is not put off by a too improbable coincidence, nor deterred by one or two unnecessary mortal combats. Clementina is full of blood and wounds, but the softer element is not wanting, and the women are good. In the high-minded Charles Wogan, with his trio of faithful comrades, we have the inevitable reminder of Dumas; and in Mr. Mason's general style we have the equally inevitable reminder of Stevenson. Wogan says:

> Hearts cannot be commanded. Alas! Mademoiselle, it is a hard world at the end of it. It is mortised with the blood of broken hearts. But duty, Madam, duty, a consciousness of rectitude, these are very noble qualities.

One feels, indeed, that Stevenson would not have made much more of that scene in which Wogan, after overcoming single-handed five armed men, follows the princess to the lodge in the forest, and there, waiting for the dawn, makes his confession. Clementina is a bustling, and, at times, a moving story.

The Prophet of Berkeley Square. By Robert Hichens. (Methuen. 6s.)

REALLY, the major part of this "tragic extravaganza" is very amusing indeed. The story is one of those elaborate exercises in charming and sheer idiocy the secret of which was first discovered by the late Oscar Wilde. It is on the high, absurd plane of "The Importance of Being Earnest"—certainly the funniest farce of its generation. The sole aim of this kind of literature is to be ridiculous, but wittily ridiculous; to imitate the emotions of a lunatic asylum by means of an exceptionally acute intellect.

> The Prophet began to feel uncomfortable.
> "But——" he said.
> "There is no such thing as 'but' in my dictionary," retorted the lady.
> "Ah, an abridged edition, no doubt."

No reasonable person should refrain from smiling at that. And the virtue of The Prophet of Berkeley Square consists in that and a thousand similar trifles. Social satire abounds in the book—satire of the keenest; but Mr. Hichens only comes at it by chance in his quest of the absurd.

The whole book is very clever—cleverer than The Green Carnation, and somewhat less impudent. Our one fear on behalf of Mr. Hichens is that he may degenerate into a mechanical travesty of himself. There are scores of instances in this single volume to prove that he is not always funny when he has the intention so to be. We will give one instance:

> The final ejaculation melted away into the somewhat powerful discord produced by the impact of a brewer's dray with a run-away omnibus at the corner of Greek-street, which was eventually resolved by the bursting of a motor-car—containing two bookmakers and an acting-manager—which mingled with them at the rate of perhaps forty miles an hour.

No reasonable person should smile at that.

The Benefactress. By the Author of "Elizabeth and her German Garden." (Macmillan. 6s.)

THE announcement of a new book by the writer of Elizabeth and her German Garden was one of the pleasant items in the list of autumn publications. The delicate and joyous pantheism of Elizabeth cheered like a summer's day. But The Benefactress begins by being a little disappointing. The radiance of the garden is missing. We are in the middle of character studies, better than the average, but lacking the peculiar atmospheric freshness distinctive of the writer. Then suddenly Anna, Elizabeth under a different name, comes into a property in Germany, and the author's special charm flows back in its entirety. She is very lovable, this Anna, with her childlike tenderness and simplicity, and her quivering desire to mother the sad and comfortless ones of existence. The proposal to share her home with twelve of these forlorn and life-battered sister women results in some shrewd and rather humorously touching character sketches. It is the personality of Anna herself, however, that largely gives the book freshness, the Anna incapable of thinking an evil thought, and whose nature-worship was one of the most unstrained and poetic faculties under heaven.

The Glowworm. By May Bateman. (Heinemann. 6s.)

THIS, the latest, and certainly so far the best, of Miss Bateman's stories, has pleased us. It has quite a character of its own, it has charm, and it has feeling.

The story deals with the career of a girl from her childhood up to a point when the only thing which her old lover can do is to kill her. The circumstances entirely justify the action, as they have justified similar actions scores of times before. Asenath is a lovable, rebellious, eager, passionate creature from the first. Perhaps the most personal and delightful passages in the book occur in the earlier chapters, which are devoted to her childhood—a childhood full of dreams, of voluntary renunciations, and of devotion to the

Digitized by Google

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS'
LIST OF NOVELS.

By JOHN SINJOHN.

A MAN of DEVON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By A. LINCOLN GREEN.

THE END of an EPOCH: being the Personal Narrative of Adam Godwin, the Survivor. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By NELLIE K. BLISSETT.

THE MOST FAMOUS LOBA. With a Frontispiece.

"One of the best romances of its kind We hope Miss Blissett will write more romances of the same kind."—Morning Post.

By HUGH CLIFFORD, C M.G

BUSH-WHACKING, and other Sketches Second Impression Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A highly interesting and valuable work.....More interesting and valuable than a wilderness of modern novels."—Times.

By MILES FRANKLIN.

MY BRILLIANT CAREER. With a Preface by Henry LAWSON. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This story of the restless aspiration of an artistic girl in the uncongenial surroundings of a poverty-stricken dairy farm is a human document indeed." Literature.

By EDWARD HUTTON.

FREDERIC UVEDALE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A book to be read. A careful bit of psychology, the revelation of a human soul."—Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, in the Daily Telegraph.

By E. GERARD (Emily de Laszowska).

THE EXTERMINATION of LOVE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An immensely clever performance. The author has achieved a tour de force."—Vanity Fair.

"Shows both originality and imagination."—Standard.

By F. C. CONSTABLE.

MARRABLES' MAGNIFICENT IDEA. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is a cleverly constructed and very human story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By GRAHAM TRAVERS.

MONA MACLEAN, MEDICAL STUDENT. Fifteenth and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

WINDYHAUGH. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

FELLOW TRAVELLERS. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN.

THE FOWLER. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

IN VARYING MOODS: Short Stories. Thirteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HILDA STRAFFORD, and THE REMITTANCE MAN. Eleventh Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SHIPS that PASS in the NIGHT. Twentieth Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By BERNARD CAPES.

FROM DOOR to DOOR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

OUR LADY of DARKNESS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ADVENTURES of the COMTE de la MUETTE during the REIGN of TERROR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By NEIL MUNRO.

DOOM CASTLE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOHN SPLENDID. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LOST PIBROCH. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s 6d.

By ZACK.

ON TRIAL. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s

LIFE is LIFE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By SYDNEY GRIER.

THE WARDEN of the MARCHES. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

IN FURTHEST IND. Post 8vo, 6s.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ENGLISH GOVERNESS. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

AN UNCROWNED KING. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PEACE with HONOUR. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A CROWNED QUEEN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LIKE ANOTHER HELEN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE KINGS of the EAST. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
PUBLICATIONS.

MEXICO AS I SAW IT.

By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs and Sketches by the Author, and New Map of Mexico. 1 vol., crown 4to, 21s. net.

TO THE SOUTH POLAR REGIONS.

Expedition of 1898–1900. By LOUIS BERNACCHI, F.R.G.S. Fully Illustrated by Photographs taken by the Author. Maps, Plans, &c. 12s. net.

THE HEARTS OF MEN.

By H. FIELDING, Author of "The Soul of a People," &c. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

TO THE MOUNTAINS OF THE MOON.

Being an Account of the Modern Aspect of Central Africa and some little-known Regions Traversed by the Tanganyika Expedition in 1899 and 1900. By J. E. S. MOORE, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 4to, with numerous Illustrations and Maps, 21s. net.

FROM THE CAPE TO CAIRO.

The First Traverse of Africa from South to North. By EWART S. GROGAN and ARTHUR H. SHARP. Fully Illustrated by Drawings by A. D. McCormick (from Sketches made by E. S. Grogan), Original Drawings by E. S. Grogan, Photographs and Photogravure Portraits of the Authors, Maps, &c. 1 vol., crown 4to, 21s. net.

THE NEW NOVELS.

IN SPITE OF ALL.

By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," "We Two," &c. 6s.

FARDEN HA'.

By JOANNA E. WOOD, Author of "A Daughter of Witches," &c. 6s. [Next week.

STRAWS IN THE WIND.

By CARLTON DAWE, Author of "The Yellow Man," "A Bride of Japan," &c. 6s.

THE LITTLE SAINT OF GOD.

A Heroine of the Red Terror. By Lady FAIRLIE CUNINGHAME, Author of "A Wandering Star," &c. 6s.

THE CALL OF THE FUTURE.

By Mrs. BERTRAM TANQUERY, Author of "Hoya Corney." 6s.

FLOWER AND THORN.

By BEATRICE WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. 6s.

THE MARRIAGE OF MR. MOLYNEUX.

By CECIL HEADLAM, Author of "The Story of Nuremberg," &c. 6s.

POOR ELISABETH.

By M. HAMILTON, Author of "The Dishonour of Frank Scott," &c. 6s.

BLOOM OR BLIGHT.

By DOROTHEA CONYERS, Author of "The Thorn Bit." 6s.

AYLWIN.

By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. New and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Introduction and Portrait, 3s. 6d.

BEQUEATHED.

By BEATRICE WHITBY. New and Cheaper Edition. 3s. 6d.

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Digitized by Google

presences which she evolved from cracks in the nursery ceiling:

> She believed these cracks to be the outward and visible signs of actual presences—all-powerful, all-exacting. Alone, she would trace their outline in the air with a rigid forefinger. All her thoughts tended in Their direction; she dreamed about Them at night; she wondered about Them often in the day; at times They paralysed her. . . . Very soon They became to her as images of Fate, relentless and overmastering.

That strikes us as true of an imaginative and lonely child. Equally natural is it that Asenath should have fallen in love with the reputation of a soldier-hero, who, in fact, happened to be a good deal of a blackguard, as she discovered after she married him. The minor characters are all good, particularly the patient and unrewarded lover, who comes out strongly without appearing fatuous; and there is a pleasant humour always at hand to relieve a story otherwise tragical enough. As for the faults of the book, they are trifling: an occasional bit of over-writing, and now and then some over-elaboration of unnecessary detail.

The Darlingtons. By Elmore Elliott Peake. (Heinemann. 6s.)

MR. DARLINGTON owned a little railroad in the States. His son Bert was traffic manager; his daughter Carol was auditor; Bert was subject to maniacal fits of drunkenness; there were, besides, Mrs. Darlington and another daughter. This book is a slice out of the history of the family. It shows talent—considerable graphic power and a desire to be true to life. The author is at his best when he gets two of his characters into close argument on a question of conduct. He seems to be animated throughout by a deeply religious spirit, though this is never made obtrusive. The novel, however, is faulty. The incidents are feebly invented. Mad Bert running the special train into Hades at eighty miles an hour is a figure of sheer melodrama; the episode of the hero stopping the mettlesome horses which the heroine could not stop is scarcely better; it reminds one of a similar episode in E. P. Roe's From Jest to Earnest. In both cases the muscular Christian hero was ostentatiously careful to exert his strength gradually lest the harness might give way. By all the rules of fiction heroes are now forbidden to stop runaway teams when the heroine is on board. The dialogue is apt to become stilted at critical points. Here is part of a scene between Bert and the elder sister:

> "But if I do, Carol—if I ever, by my brutal appetite, bring shame and sorrow on that dear, devoted head, I hope that God will strike me dead."
>
> He was very solemn now, even tragic. His sister, none too easily impressed, looked up at him with glistening eyes.
>
> "I don't myself see how you can ever fall again now, brother," she said in a voice of low, rich melody. "You have so much to live for. And I don't believe you will fall. In spite of all the past, I have faith in you. I believe the turning-point has come. But, brother dear," she added, tightening her grasp upon his hands, "if you think the struggle is over, you will be disappointed. You can't always float with your head in the clouds, as it is now. But you can always be brave and true to yourself—and to her. It is not an impossible thing. Thousands of men do as much every day, and you can. And when you are tempted, as assuredly you will be, you will now have more strength to overcome the temptation."

The writing, too, is often slovenly, as thus: "She showed to better advantage, after her dissipation, than either Ruth or her brother, both of whom looked rather washed out." Some novelists of genuine talent, we are convinced, deliberately affect this slovenliness of diction out of scorn for the literary etiquette of the mincing minor magazine. It is a pity. Nevertheless The Darlingtons is quite praiseworthy.

A Sower of Wheat. By Harold Bindloss. (Chatto & Windus. 6s.)

IN a prologue, the imaginary narrator announces his intention of "telling the story simply and as it happened from the beginning." It is a pity that the author did not make him do so, for Mr. Bindloss has at times a pretty notion of narrative, together with an appreciation of nature's larger works. There is certainly fresh air in this tale of the Canadian wheat fields. But there is no "telling of the story simply." Far from that, Ralph Crosfield, hero, who must have read many novels in his spare time, deliberately set himself to narrate in the manner of the professional narrator. He chose sugary chapter headings, such as "The First Sowing," for the first chapter, and "A Bountiful Harvest" for the last. He thought of all the weird things that happen in novels, and, injudiciously selecting some of them, imported these dishonestly into the tale—for example, the adventure of the hero and heroine behind that famous vicious horse, Robert the Devil. He made absolutely no attempt to describe the beautiful heroine's mien as it appeared to him, but sought out professional descriptions of beautiful heroines, lighting on the phrase, "a certain grave dignity." Further, he interpolated many little fragments of episodes like the following (our italics):

> "I am sorry you had to come in search of me, Geoffrey," she said. "This is Mr. Crosfield—Captain Ormond. I think you have met before. I lost my way, and he kindly brought me across the moor. I have been telling him about Canada."
>
> The newcomer bowed with an easy indifference, for which, not knowing exactly why, I disliked him, as he said, "Don't remember that pleasure—meet so many people! Canada must be a very nice place; been thinking of going out there myself—drive oxen, grow potatoes, and that kind of thing, you know."

All this, and much more of the same sort, is a pity, because, as we say, the tale in its entirety has considerable merit. Next time Mr. Bindloss drops into fiction we trust he may forget all previous fiction whatever, and write down what comes "simply." The result will probably be worthy of praise.

The Alien. By F. F. Montresor. (Methuen. 6s.)

THIS is an interesting and sympathetic story. The plot is not original, but originality of plot is not absolutely necessary for a novel. The incidents of life repeat themselves incessantly; but their accessories and the manner of their repetition vary perpetually. And it is upon the treatment of a subject a good deal more than upon the subject itself that the final success of a work of fiction depends. In The Alien the skeleton of the plot consists of the attempt by an illegitimate son to impersonate his dead half-brother. This impersonation of the dead by the living has been done before; but its treatment here is fresh, individual; and until almost the end, when a regrettably unconvincing murder is introduced to bring about the climax, without any too sensational or melodramatic incident.

The Alien is the kind of novel of which one wishes there were more. Cleverly thought out, and full of sympathy and observance, it is a book suited to all kinds and sorts of people. The interest of the story, without being unendurably exciting, is never allowed to flag, while the quality of its character drawing gives it a delicate atmospheric beauty by no means common. Even the sinner is sympathetic, which, after all, is as it should be. For certainly the number of sympathetic sinners in the world is greater than that of the totally depraved, let alone that a sinner with redeeming qualities is a more interesting study than a sinner ungarnished by a single inconsistent quality of grace. A novel may be great that is a mouthpiece of denunciation or exposure. Nevertheless, it can scarcely be said to fulfil the proper purpose of fiction, which is surely above all to beguile and recreate. Miss Montresor's book is not a page untampered with from life, but it is a well-written story, and contains a number of deft character sketches, cleverly preserved from the danger of excessive sentimentality.

Digitized by Google

The Sinner and the Problem. By Eric Parker. (Macmillan. 6s.)

THIS novel seems to us to have been written under the influence of the "Elizabeth" school of literature, the great modern "garden" cult, which good-humouredly patronises nature, labels all its characters, is self-consciously broad-minded, and in its determination not to be priggish falls into a profound priggishness. Mr. Parker is not without merits, but he suffers through having adopted the literary mannerisms of his school. He can only call an innkeeper "mine host." And every person in his pages has his label. The two boy-heroes are called respectively the Sinner and the Problem. Then there is the Chief Butler, the Publican, the Other Man, and the Lady of the Lake. Here is a sample of the narrative. The Sinner and the Problem are chatting with the artist who tells the story :

> "Now I like a picture where you can see everything in it—little frogs and things in front, I mean; and something happening—a fight, or a house on fire."
>
> Lack-a-daisy, thought I, but this is a Philistine; and I declare I nearly launched at him the greater part of my views on Impressionism and other kindred matters, which would have puzzled him sorely, I should think, as mayhap they have puzzled others. Howbeit, I considered, such things are not for children to quack over, after all, and asked him another question. "So he paints?" said I, nodding at his playmate.

It is all like that—feebly pleasant. In the last result, of course, "I was left with the Lady of the Lake, who stood facing me." The book is continually sentimental, but there are good qualities in it, and especially a genuine appreciation of nature which no amount of patronising can hide. If Mr. Parker could cast the ruffle and the clouded cane, and just be himself without antics, he might write a tolerable novel.

The Diary of a Freshman. By Charles Macomb Flandran. (Heinemann. 6s.)

IT might, perhaps, be inferred from the appearance of this work in the "Dollar Library of American Fiction" that it is a Transatlantic version of The Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green. Such is, indeed, the case. The green and salad days of Mr. Thomas, alias "Granny," Wood were spent at Cambridge—not Cambridge on the Cam, but that other Cambridge hard by Boston, in which Harvard University is situated. The book is written in a lively fashion, but we do not find it as entertaining as, say, The Babe, B.A. It is not that we suppose American undergraduates to be any sillier or any duller than English undergraduates, but rather that the humour of all such writings depends so much upon its appeal to the associations of one's own undergraduate experiences as to be necessarily somewhat esoteric. Certainly there is nothing in English University life remotely corresponding to the hilarious initiation of Mr. Wood and his friends into an institution known as the Dickey. This appears to be a kind of formal and co-optative aristocracy, out of which the various "secret" clubs, with their mysterious Greek initials, are recruited. Cambridge (on the Cam) has, or had, if we may trust the Granta, its "bloods," but we understand this appellation of dignity to be conferred rather by informal public opinion than in any more regular way. The neophytes of the Dickey appear to be condemned for a week to make asses of themselves in any way attractive to the whimsical fancy of those responsible for their initiation. Mr. Wood was drenched with perfumes and sent to travel in a crowded tramcar. He was taken to the theatre and instructed to get up in his place at the end of the first act and shout, "This show is bum, and I want my money back." He had to kiss all the babies on Commonwealth-avenue (fifty-six in one afternoon) and explain that he was "passionately fond of animals." Other things he had to do which, if embarrassing to him, must have been even more objectionable to outsiders. We trust that in narrating these the chronicler of Harvard has relied less upon realism than upon romance.

The Bourgeois. By Henry de Vere Stacpoole. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

To read this book is rather like drinking dry champagne on an empty stomach. It is a story of the Latin Quarter. Frisson, ex-medical student, hypochondriac, playwright, is its true hero, and not the polite and serious young American with the gold-rimmed spectacles. The atmosphere is an atmosphere of squalor, in which busy, restless brains dare not leave off thinking lest the discomfort should become sensible; and thought must concern itself always with the lightest of trifles for terror of the big things behind. Frisson, with his Old Man of the Sea—medical student, aged seventy, and dependent on Frisson for his continued existence—is so admirable in the rush of his subacid babble that a plot seems rather a superfluity. However, there is one of a farcical sort, and it lands Mr. Alabaster—such is the strange name of the young American—in a sufficiently ridiculous position. It is not easy to give a notion of Frisson; he is rather a cumulative effect. How, away from its context (in which are set forth various excellent deterrents against diary writing), does this look ?

> "How strange," said Peter, "I had no idea that people could be so foolish as to enter such things in a book—crimes and things, you know. I should think it was quite bad enough to have them on one's conscience."
>
> "That's just it," said Frisson, "you must put a crime somewhere. Well, if you have no conscience, what are you to do? You put it in a diary instead. It's only people with consciences who are able to hide their crimes, and that is why so many conscientious people are reckoned good."

We may find room, perhaps, for the phrase in which the astronomer Carabin is hit off :

> Should he ever die it will simply be because he has forgotten to go on living, for he is wretchedly delicate, and lives simply because he has forgotten that he ought to be dead.

But how long has religieuse taken the place of dévote ? Presumably since they drove the nuns out of France.

October Brewings.

A Blind Marriage. By George R. Sims. (Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d.)

A Goddess of Gray's Inn. By G. W. Burgin. (Pearson. 6s.

Mary Anne of Parchment Buildings. By Lucas Cleeve. (Digby, Long. 6s.)

Farewell Nikola. By Guy Boothby. (Ward, Lock. 6s.)

The Court of Honour. By William Le Queux. (F. V. White. 6s.)

WHY do people read? The question is not quite so impertinent as it may appear. For people did not always read. Billions of men and women for thousands of years have contrived ordinary human happiness without the aid of half-penny newspapers and cheap reprints and the most remarkable novel of the year, just as the world went well enough without tobacco. Why—to narrow the question to the present purpose—do people read the books which we have named at the head of this column ? We do not wish to simply that they should not read them. Merely, having read them, we—well—why?

Digitized by Google

October is active in beer as well as in books. "Our October brewing" catches the eye that roams over the provincial papers. Publishers and publicans alike welcome the "pomifer annus"—the season of profits. And perhaps this vague connection between beer and books may furnish the ghost of a clue to our question's answer. Ask why people read, and you may be countered with the question why people drink. The proximate causes appear, on due consideration, to be four or thereabouts, if we put aside the root-and-branch teetotalers who will have it that people drink because they are wicked and for no other reason under the sky. Let us take the proximate causes in their proper order, scientifically, and it may presently be seen that there is something more than the calendar concerned in the coincidence of the October brewings and our autumn announcements. A man drinks because he is thirsty; that is the primal reason, based on his original sin, and you may see him doing it at the nearest drinking fountain. And a man reads for information, as the man who consults Bradshaw in a free library. Possibly, too, the readers—some of them—in the British Museum may claim moral equality with the searcher of Bradshaw who has no desire of illegitimate sensations, and the dipper in the drinking fountain, who merely wants to satisfy a legitimate thirst. Secondly, a man may drink because there is nothing else to do, as, for example, at a City dinner when the dinner is over. It is like chewing tobacco, a mere "filling in of gaps of time and teeth," or the whittling of a stick. So a man gets his "chew" or his stick for whittling from the railway bookstall a sixpenny Scott, or a halfpenny Cuts, to carry him over a vacant hour or two. Again, a man may drink to drive dull care away; and with beer, as with books, this is probably the commonest cause of bibbing. For one man who loves the taste of beer, and can distinguish nicely between the various brews, there are a thousand—five—ten thousand—who praise "beer, glorious beer," in the lump, merely as beer. Thus it is with the average customer of Mr. Mudie, it may be suspected. The people who flock to his bar want reading matter, and they are not very particular as to the brew so long as it is strong enough to act as an anodyne, and will make them forget for a couple of hours (the effects seldom last longer, we have found) that the world as it is is a world as it ought not to be. There is a fourth stage of the drinking habit; it comes when a man drinks, no longer for any one of the aforesaid more or less legitimate reasons, but because he simply cannot help himself. Even here the literary analogy is easily found. For there are men—mostly men of letters whose habit of reading has been compulsory, by doctor's orders, as it were—who have permitted the habit to run away with them. They hate reading at last, as the drunkard curses the drink, but they are quite unable to resist the appeal of printed matter. They cannot pass a newsboy without stopping for a dram; they turn their homes into hells by soaking in bookshops when they should be in the drawing room at tea. But this cacoëthes legendi is too serious a topic for more than allusion. Like the habitual drunkard, the habitual reader requires a medical monograph, legislation, and enforced seclusion.

Perhaps it is already evident under which heading we place the five volumes which stand above this column. So far as information goes they are useless; they are not Bradshaw books, and a Martian who descended upon Mr. Mudie and took them out as a guide to real life would lose his way before he had walked twenty yards along Oxford-street. To regard them as mere means of passing the time would be to do them some injustice. They are a little stronger than that. They may be recommended as anodynes, and we have picked them out as being representative of the best and purest make of literary anodynes. The tens of thousands who want to get away for an hour or two from the realities of life, to imagine themselves among people who never have existed and never could exist, in conditions that no conceivable combination of real persons and events could afford; who want, too, to be so deceived by common names and well-known localities that the delusion is clinched as Utopia, Barataria, and the Snark can never clinch it—these tens of thousands have their brew prepared. All these writers are well-known, and their ability to produce a competent and reliable brain-muddler is assured. We know Mr. Sims—not the sentimental humourist of the Referee, but the pure sentimentalist of The Blind Marriage, and we are glad to meet May and Mary, with their invalid mother.

> May and Mary, who had gone on the stage to earn money, sent every shilling they could spare from their modest salaries to defray the expenses and pay the doctors' bills.

Mr. Burgin, too, brews good muddlers. Groundsel Court never was in Gray's Inn, though it may have been situated somewhere in the Milky Way. Wotherspoon is a mild sort of Scrooge, and Crane is his Bob Crackitt: and Lilian, the goddess from the machine, melts everybody into philanthropists. "Do you really love her?" says Mrs. Harte to her son Bagot.

> "Love her! The first time we met I loved her for her pretty ways—her gracious presence—her sweet eyes—not sad eyes, but eyes sparkling with mirth—wells of limpid honesty and truth. Mother, I seem to have loved her always—never to have drawn breath of life before. She ——! Well, she took me for a clumsy fool when I answered at random, and laughed with such infectious gaiety that I laughed too, scarce knowing why."

And so on. This from a barrister to his mother. It is not of this world. Mary Anne of Parchment Buildings is also in love with her barrister, and, being also not of this world (though "on" at the Alhambra), did not let concealment prey on her damask cheek. Yet Mary's amazing innocence saved her, to say nothing of Valroy. "Nemo mortalium omnibus horis sapit," remarks Lucas Cleeve.

> It had been so with Herbert Valroy when he kissed Mary Anne. He was not in love with her—the difference in their positions made such a state of things impossible."

Here again we soar to worlds unknown, and put behind us the sad frailties we know too well. Mr. Le Queux pretends to take us to Monte Carlo. We meet, in a dream, as it were, a ruined gambler, a cosmopolitan adventurer, and a princess.

> Already, ere I became aware of it, I had thus been embarked boldly upon an adventurous search for the unknown, but rigidly guarded, secret—a search which proved so strange, so full of grave peril, and so utterly astounding in its results, as to surpass even the human imagination.

It does not surpass the imagination of Mr. Le Queux, however. And anybody who is dissatisfied with his own world may try a draught of the world of Mr. Le Queux; it will be a change. Mr. Guy Boothby takes us to a world where everybody at critical moments whispers to somebody else with surprising results.

> "To oblige me you will do it," he said; and then, drawing a little closer to him, he murmured something that we could not hear. The effect upon the Don was magical: his face turned a leaden hue, and for a moment I thought he would have fallen.

And so on. And, again:

> "Have you met Dr. Nikola lately?" I inquired. The effect it produced upon him was instantaneous. He shrunk from me as if he had been struck, and, leaning against the wall of the house behind him, trembled like an aspen leaf.

Nikola, whom academic pedestrians, from a nodding acquaintance with the hoardings, vaguely regard as a soap,

Digitized by Google

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

DUMB. By the Hon. Mrs. WALTER R. D. FORBES, Author of "A Gentleman."

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."

THE TRIUMPH of HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-runner," &c.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. SHIEL, Author of "The Yellow Danger," &c.

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by HIMSELF, and "Dedicated to all who Love."

THE LADY of LYNN. By Sir WALTER BESANT, Author of "The Orange Girl," &c. With 13 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN-HAMMOND.

A SOWER of WHEAT. By HAROLD BINDLOSS, Author of "Ainslie's Ju-ju."

THE CANKERWORM: being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN, Author of "Double Cunning."

A FIGHT to a FINISH. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "Joan, the Curate," &c.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR: a Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "In a Cathedral City," &c. SECOND EDITION.

THE WEALTH of MALLERSTANG: an Upland Tale. By ALGERNON GISSING, Author of "A Secret of the North Sea," &c.

THREE MEN of MARK. By SARAH TYTLER, Author of "St. Mungo's City," &c.

ONLY a NIGGER. By EDMUND MITCHELL, Author of "The Lone Star Rush," &c.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

TALES of a DYING RACE. By ALFRED A. GRACE.
A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c. By GEORGE R. SIMS.
THE JOY of LIFE. By EMILE ZOLA. Edited, with an Introduction, by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY.
TERENCE. By B. M. CROKER. With 6 Illustrations by SIDNEY PAGET.
THE INIMITABLE MRS MASSINGHAM. By HERBERT COMPTON.
THE BLUE DIAMOND. By L. T. MEADE.
A MISSING HERO. By MRS. ALEXANDER.
THE FOURTH GENERATION. By Sir WALTER BESANT.
ANDROMEDA. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.
NELL HAFFENDEN. By TIGHE HOPKINS. With 8 Illustrations by CHARLES GREGORY.
MRS. DUNBAR'S SECRET. By ALAN ST. AUBYN.
"AS a WATCH in the NIGHT." By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED.
PHILIP WINWOOD. By R. NEILSON STEPHENS. With 6 Illustrations.
HATHERCOURT RECTORY. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.
MARVEL. By Mrs. HUNGERFORD.

MAX THORNTON. By ERNEST GLANVILLE. With 8 Illustrations by J. SHAW CROMPTON, R.I. A NEW EDITION. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

POCKET VOLUMES. Printed upon fine and very thin paper. Post 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, with marker, 3s. net each.

THE CLOISTER and the HEARTH. By CHARLES READE.
IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.
THE DEEMSTER. By HALL CAINE. Shortly.
FAMILIAR STUDIES of MEN and BOOKS. By R. L. STEVENSON.

NEW SERIES OF TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.

NOW PUBLISHING. Handsomely bound in picture cloth boards, flat backs, 2s. each.

DORA MYRL, the LADY DETECTIVE. By McD. BODKIN, K.C.
THE RECORDS of VINCENT TRILL, of the Detective Service. By DICK DONOVAN.
DARK DEEDS. By DICK DONOVAN.
ST. KATHERINE'S by the TOWER. By WALTER BESANT.
IN a HOLLOW of the HILLS. By BRET HARTE.
THE WATERS of EDERA. By OUIDA.
THE LADY from NOWHERE. By FERGUS HUME.
IN LONDON'S HEART. By GEORGE R. SIMS.
JOAN, the CURATE. By FLORENCE WARDEN.
PLOTTERS of PARIS. By EDMUND MITCHELL.
SPORT and SPANGLES. By BYRON WEBBER.

A VERSAILLES CHRISTMAS-TIDE. By MARY STUART BOYD. With 53 Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Fcap. 4to, cloth, gilt and gilt top, 6s.
IN MEMORIAM: Memorial Verses for Every Day in the Year. Selected and arranged by LUCY RIDLEY. Small 8vo, cloth, red edges, 2s. 6d. net; leather, burnished edges, 3s. 6d. net.
THOREAU: HIS LIFE and AIMS. By H. A. PAGE. With a Portrait and View. NEW EDITION. Post 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.
THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BUCHANAN. With Portrait in each Volume. 2 vols., crown 8vo, buckram, 12s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Mr. HEINEMANN'S New Books.

A CENTURY OF FRENCH ROMANCE

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

A Library Edition in Twelve Volumes, demy 8vo, cloth extra, limited to 1,000 Sets. Price 7s. per Volume, or £4 4s for the set of Twelve Volumes.

VOL. I. IS NOW READY.

THE CHARTREUSE of PARMA. By Stendhal. With an Introduction by Mr. MAURICE HEWLETT. With 4 Coloured Plates by EUGENE PAUL AVRIL, a Photogravure, and Portraits.

To be followed by—

CARMEN; COLOMBA. By PROSPER MERIMEE. Introduction by Mr. ARTHUR SYMONS. With 4 Coloured Plates by PARYS, a Photogravure, and Portraits. December 1st.

MAUPRAT. By George SAND. Introduction by JOHN OLIVER HOBBES (Mrs. CRAIGIE). With 3 Coloured Plates by EUGENE PAUL AVRIL, a Photogravure, and Portraits. January 1st.

An Illustrated Prospectus post free, and the first volume can be obtained on approval.

THE WORKS OF TOLSTOI.

NEWLY TRANSLATED BY CONSTANCE GARNETT.

ANNA KARENIN. With Portraits. 2 vols., 15s.

From Blackwood's Magazine.—"We are exceedingly grateful to Mrs. Garnett, since she has given us for the first time the complete and workmanlike version of a masterpiece."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS AND STORIES.

THE RIGHT of WAY. By Gilbert Parker.

Contemporary Review.—"In Charlie Steele Mr. Parker has achieved a notable bit of portraiture."

Empire Review.—"It is finely worked out. The book grows in power and intensity as it draws to the end."

THE ETERNAL CITY. By Hall Caine.

SPINDLE and PLOUGH. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney, Author of "Folly Corner."

JOSEPH KHASSAN: Half-Caste. By A. J. Dawson, Author of "African Nights Entertainment."

THE GLOWWORM. By May Bateman, Author of "The Altar of Life."

THE BALLET DANCER; and ON GUARD. By Matilde SERAO, Author of "The Land of Cockayne."

SOME WOMEN I HAVE KNOWN. By Maarten Maartens.

GILLETTE'S MARRIAGE. By Mamie Bowles, Author of "The Amazing Lady."

A DRONE and a DREAMER. By Nelson Lloyd, Author of "The Chronic Loafer." 4s. [Dollar Library.

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

By Sir WALTER ARMSTRONG,

Director of the National Gallery, Ireland.

With an Introduction by the late R. A. M. STEVENSON, and a Catalogue Raisonné of Raeburn's Works by J. CAW, Curator of the National Portrait Gallery of Scotland. With 70 Plates, of which 66 are in Photogravure and 4 in Lithographic Facsimile. Large Imperial 4to, £5 5s. net.

[Tuesday.

THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

A SURVEY OF MAN'S RECORD.

Edited by Dr. H. F. HELMOLT.

With an Introductory Essay by the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.

To be completed in eight super-royal octavo volumes. With many Maps, Coloured Plates, and Black-and-White Illustrations. Price in cloth, 15s. net per volume; or in half-morocco, gilt edges, £1 1s. net per volume.

VOLUME I. With many Plates and Maps.

PRE-HISTORY: AMERICA and the PACIFIC OCEAN.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"The survey of American history is as clear, impartial, compressed, accurate, and at the same time interesting, as could be wished, and the plates with which it is illustrated are curious and well chosen."

A full and complete Prospectus will be sent on application. The first volume may be obtained on approval.

ITALIAN JOURNEYS. By W. D. Howells. With 12 Photo-gravures, 32 Full-page Plates, and many Text Illustrations from Original Drawings specially made for this work by JOSEPH PENNELL. 1 vol., 10s. net.

Outlook.—"A charming narrative with equally charming pictures."

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

A LITTLE TOUR in FRANCE. By Henry James. With 12 Photogravures, 32 Full-page Plates, and 40 Text Illustrations from Original Drawings by JOSEPH PENNELL. 1 vol., 10s. net. [Second Impression.

FASHION in PARIS. The Various Phases of Feminine Taste and Æsthetics from the Revolution to the end of the Nineteenth Century. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With 24 Hand-coloured Plates and 250 Text Illustrations by FRANÇOIS COURBOIN. New and Cheap Edition. 1 vol., 15s. net.

THE ESSAYS of an EX-LIBRARIAN. By RICHARD GARNETT, C.B., LL.D. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

HYPOLYMPIA; or, The Gods in the Island. An Ironic Fantasy. By EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., 5s.

Mr. Heinemann's Notes on some Forthcoming Books, Fall, 1901, post free.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

seems to have disappeared to Thibet. That is a great pity, for Mr. Boothby's Nikola brew is a really effective literary anodyne, and leaves the reader—whose head is unaccustomed to such fumes—mentally helpless for hours. So, on the whole, the October brewing provides plenty of reliable intoxicants which will transport a man—we should rather say a woman—well away from the world of taxes and politics and other worrying realities.

Propriety and Passion.

The Embarrassing Orphan. By W. E. Norris. (Methuen. 6s.)
Gillette's Marriage. By Mamie Bowles. (Heinemann.)

THESE two novels we place together because they come from opposite poles. Not that in any sense they represent respectively the zenith and the nadir of accomplishment. The skilled handicapper would start them at about level weights in the race for popular favour, balancing the youth of the one against the experience of the other. They come from different stables—our knowledge of the turf will scarcely carry the metaphor through—and illustrate the merits of different systems of training. Everyone, the most ignorant, has his fancy, and in the race between passion and propriety we are inclined to back passion. In the one of these two books there is little that a calm judgment can approve, in the other nothing that it can condemn. Mr. Norris takes us into the drawing-room, and refuses to let us out even when we are transported to the Ile Perdue. There is no fault to be found with the manner in which he presents the orphan, a girl and an heiress whom few know to be an heiress. In the tones of an educated old gentleman (Sir Edward Denne, to wit), we follow the fortunes of his ward, whom her mother's French relatives strive to annex, for Mr. Norris has every turn and twist of technique at his pen's point, and never once can you slam down the book and say: "That's wrong." The characters talk—as people talk. No one of them does anything that could not conceivably be done by people our wives have upon their visiting lists. Moreover, Mr. Norris has retained through all these years of production a light and pleasant style, with the unvarying manner of a gentleman. He never loses his head. Nevertheless—or should we say therefore?—he never carries us away. Our head approves of Mr. Norris, and as we sit with him in the drawing room we feel we are in distinguished company, where any slip is a tumble to the depths.

Of Miss Mamie Bowles no level head could approve. She carries us for a wild romp through the passions. Gillette, the stubby girl, who is stupidly religious, a vegetarian, and an heiress, George Spenser, the hypochondriacal hero, who loathes her and marries her for her money; Ellice Bastien, the dainty woman he loves and who loves him—they are all outrageous, and mix themselves up in a tumult of passion which makes the reader's brain reel. Miss Bowles enters into the spirit of the romp. Ellice's teeth, for instance:

> Sometimes they struck him as the drifted petals of a white rose, sometimes as being like a narrow strip of moon emerging through the crimson of sunset, sometimes as recalling a little stream of sparkling water one craved to press one's feverish mouth against.

Men who live in the country with dyspepsia are not struck in that way. Again:

> "Do you know what love and passion are, Ellice?"
> He gazed at her with lean, haggard face. The woman leant back against the carriage feeling her heart swollen, till the thin envelope of her frame was near to creaking.

But for all her ladies whose frames come near to creaking with their passion, for all her impossible characters, her amazing exaggerations and hilarious metaphors, Miss Bowles interests one. She is like the Miss Terrys and the Mrs. Campbells of the stage, at whom you must needs look, however bad the play may be. The only explanation we can offer of our interest in Gillette's Marriage, as of our interest in Mrs. Campbell when playing an absurd part, is that the artist, or the writer, has "charm." It is not much of an explanation, even though you proceed to such vague extensions as "personality," or "magnetism," for it is something that can be felt, but defies any speedy mode of analysis. But here, at least, it is the writer, rather than her puppets, who interests the reader. She feels keenly, and if the striking passion produces as yet too strident a tone, the receptive nature is there.

Religion in Fiction.

Hearts in Revolt. By Henry Gilbert. (George Allen. 6s.)
Memory Street. By Martha Baker Dunn. (Jarrold. 6s.)
Deborah. By James M. Ludlow. (Nisbet. 6s.)
A Gallant Quaker. By Margaret Roberton. (Methuen. 6s.)
The Coming of the Preachers. By John Ackworth. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)
The Comedy of a Suburban Chapel. By J. D. Causton. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

IT is one of the misfortunes of a highly complex social development that it tends to remove the individual further and further from the end towards which his labours are directed. It was more interesting to be a soldier in the days of Hastings than it is to be a unit in a column employed in a combined movement for sweeping an invisible enemy from a range of hills which personally you don't want. Similarly one may conceive the life of the village shopman into whose little store are gathered products of every clime, to be one far more absorbing than the lives of ninety-nine out of a hundred of the spruce young clerks and shopmen who stream backwards and forwards daily between the suburbs and the City. In fact, in our own day, the men to whom their work is an end in itself, are an infinitesimal minority. To the rest, whose time is occupied principally in adding up enormous columns of other people's money, their daily work is no better than an irksome condition of their gaining food, clothing, and shelter. Than such a society what better ground for the growth of pessimism? Among the more thoughtful of its members the plant springs of its own accord. Such "sure and certain hope" of an ineffable future as our fathers felt is torn to tatters in the conflict of religious teachers. The churches tend more and more to become mere social centres, and religion to be identified with thrift and the disuse of alcohol. The old choice must be made; is it pleasure we must live for, or wisdom?

That practically is how the question presented itself to Mr. Gilbert's hero. He never solves it; but there it is facing him all the time, importunate. Mr. Gilbert has been to school to Mr. George Gissing. He deals with the same class of people—the people of the suburbs. Let us rather say (lest we seem to traduce many good and cultivated people who find it convenient to live there), a certain element which would, probably, be proud to hear itself described as fast. More exactly, it is coarse, sensual, and unspeakably silly. Mr. Gilbert has not Mr. Gissing's faculty of eclectic realism. In his determination to shirk nothing, he occasionally breaks away from the customary restraint of English writers. But he succeeds, at any rate, in creating such an atmosphere as serves to test the stuff of which his hero is made. First there is the dingy home in which a brutal father maltreats the weak and gentle mother, who takes refuge in drink. Then the Birkett Institute and the unspeakable scandal of unchastened adolescence. Next, the suburban dancing classes and drawing-rooms, and the young ladies who describe their friends' brothers as "such a jolly fellow," love dancing because it is "so dreamy," and loll away whole afternoons on half a chair. Ernest comes, on the whole, very well out of it to the serious attachment of his life. The author has spent a good deal of pains upon the creation of Connie Nevile. He has not failed to present her as a really charming and amiable young woman, busy on building up her character on St. Thomas à Kempis. It is unfortunate that he has not better contrived the impediment to her union with Ernest, whom she heartily loved. It is difficult, no doubt, to set bounds to what may happen among the professors of asceticism as it is understood in the Church of England; but it is hard to believe that the most amateurish of directors would advise a girl that, because she had been minded to enter a sisterhood, it was her duty to precipitate the step because she had fallen in love. A Jesuit—or, for that matter, any ordinary confessor of the Church that knows about these things—would have laughed her into common sense in the space of a Pater noster. As it is, she emulates St. Elizabeth of Hungary, in the picture of Mr. Calderon; and Ernest marries a comfortable, wise woman of thirty, who knows all about the state of his affections, but likes him well enough to want him anyway. We have devoted so much space to Mr. Gilbert's Hearts in Revolt because, despite of such faults and a lot of ineffectual effort to find the right word, it did lay hold of us to the point of making us forget sometimes that we were reading it as a matter of business.

Digitized by Google

The next on our list, Memory Street, is very different in manner and spirit. It is a formless yarn of a young girl's life. Neighbours come on, and gossip, and go; the young are casually mated; and Mrs. Day loses that "poor transient creatur'," Mr. Day, and "I believe was a better woman all her life by reason of trying to live up to the heroic qualities with which she finally endowed him." The heroine is most engaging in childhood, as she sits on a stool behind the door of the pew, mentally correcting the traits of the Deity as presented by the preacher, and, despite remonstrances against the impiety of "makin' over" God, liking him best "the way she fixed him." American books—like American people—must always gain in this country a certain advantage from the perpetual flicker of unusualness that lights up the most commonplace lives. There is everywhere in this "street" some slight eccentricity that keeps the English explorer in a kindly humour.

No such remark applies to Deborah, which is a painstaking attempt to rehabilitate the times of Antiochus Epiphanes and the Maccabees. Deborah is a beautiful Hebrew who would emulate her namesake of proto-canonical fame; but when she sets her hand to the workman's hammer her arm is apt to be unnerved by human affections. Captain Kleon would seem to have possessed the power of permanently winning affection that Sisera so notably lacked. And as to the manner of the narrative, it is matter for regret that, whereas such an essay demands a singular perfection of literary form, the text is disfigured by solecisms for which no amount of archæological detail, easy in these days to import, can win forgiveness. What are we to think of an author who can write: "Slowly the rhapsody faded from her face"? Obviously at one moment, at least, Deborah deserved to be called a "human document."

A Gallant Quaker and The Coming of the Preachers are closely akin. Each represents one of those phases in post-Reformation England, when the necessary reaction from a swinish apathy concerning things spiritual set the country in a flame. Change the names and a few other details, and the Quaker story might pass for the story of the Wesleys. Both are eminently reminiscent of George Eliot: that also was to be expected. Dinah's sermon is, after all, the last word descriptive of English emotional religion. And here from A Gallant Quaker is a saying well found to indicate the normal English habit:

> They are a wonderful people, dear niece, and I would fain join them; but thou knowest it is written, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." Now, the State and the Church are Cæsar's, and it would ill become me, as mayor and thus a bit of Cæsar, to absent myself from church, or thee-and-thou the parson and keep hatted before my superiors; but, as a private man, I say thee and thou when I choose, and wear my hat and attend any meeting that should happen to be taking place as I pass by. Thou seest my meaning clearly?

Clearly.

Mr. Canston, in the Comedy of a Suburban Chapel, has gone to work upon right lines. Here the chapel is the social centre. Sunday-school, choir practice, the annual trip to the seaside—these are the occasions which bring together youth and maiden, and foster the attachments that have their end in matrimony. But though it shows evidence of observation, this is a rather disappointing book. The story is constantly on the point of becoming interesting, but it never quite fulfils its promise. The scheming of Mrs. Neve to secure eligible young men for her eight daughters is too gross and palpable, and the daughters themselves are shadowy creatures. And the conversation is not wholly convincing. Far the most successful figure is that of Mr. Blout, the principal pillar of the conventicle, the head of the Sunday-school, the rich man of the congregation. Not consciously insincere, he betrays in every speech the spirit of vulgar worldliness. Here is his simple confession of faith:

> "I always try to make my addresses impressive, to leave a distinct impression upon their minds. I started in this way: 'Hands up those who know the eighth commandment?' Every hand went up. I called upon one boy to repeat it, and then I made them say it altogether. 'Now,' I said, 'not one of us wants to be a thief, but supposing we haven't any money, how are we going to get all the nice things in life we want without stealing?' . . . 'I can tell you—serve God. "Seek ye the Kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you." I have found that true. God has given me everything I wanted, and when you've got everything you want, you know, boys and girls, you won't have any temptation to steal; you'll have no trouble in keeping the eighth commandment.'"

This good man's daughter, however, turns out a Jessica of the baser sort; whereupon one is conscious of an unholy exultation. And she is the centre of some rather ingenious complications.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE HAPPENINGS OF JILL. BY "IOTA."

JILL is described as "a brilliant Irish girl with a temperament." She is certainly original. Here is a fragment of her conversation: "'Oh, perhaps you're good-natured. If you are, the Lord help you!' said Jill, in her grandmother's soft, low bass, 'and damn! damn! damn good-nature!'" Grandmother Devereux says some sensible things. "'The greatest loss ever sustained of the nation is the loss of an honest belief in the devil. . . . A devil at least preserved us from this giggling ease in sinning.'" A strong, unconventional story. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

THE FIERY DAWN. BY M. E. COLERIDGE.

A French historical novel by the author of that capital story The King with Two Faces. In a "note" at the beginning Miss Coleridge remarks: "Writers of historic fiction are, for the most part, thieves. Many of the following pages have been stolen from Imbert de Saint-Amand,

Digitized by Google

some from Louis Blanc, a few from the Memoirs of Alexandre Dumas. The chapter called 'Maison Botherel' was composed — almost every word of it—many years ago, by Lamartine, Feydeau, and Théophile Gautier." (Arnold. 6s.)

THE SHOES OF FORTUNE. BY NEIL MUNRO.

The author of Gilian the Dreamer has left his native Argyll to record how "The Shoes of Fortune"—the hero's sole inheritance—"brought to manhood, love, adventure, and content, as also into divers perils on land and sea in foreign parts and in an alien army, Paul Greig of the Hazel Den in Scotland, one time purser of the Seven Sisters brigantine of Hull and late lieutenant in the Regiment d'Auvergne." The story deals with the plots and intrigues of the Jacobites to place the Young Pretender on the throne.

A MODERN ANTÆUS. BY THE WRITER OF "AN ENGLISHWOMAN'S LOVE-LETTERS."

This much-advertised writer of love-letters has industry. A Modern Antæus runs to over five hundred pages. Two sets of verses are printed on the leaf facing the conclusion. "They differ; yet each of them in its way defines a life which the world has to regard as a failure." That life was Tristram Gavney's. Its story is here set forth from childhood till one evening late in August when "Tristram Gavney lay dead." "In the beginning," says the anonymous author, "you shall see him vigorously at suck; and at the end you shall not find him properly weaned." (Murray. 6s.)

WITHIN THE RADIUS. BY ALBERT KINROSS.

"An Entertainment" is the author's sub-title to these stories, and as two of them are divided up into sub-tales, and as in the preface he states that after reading Stevenson's Dynamiter and New Arabian Nights he remarked, "We will continue," it is plain that Mr. Kinross is indebted to R. L. S. for the scheme of his book. He has a ready pen, and an easy invention. (Duckworth. 6s.)

CYNTHIA'S WAY. BY MRS. ALFRED SIDGWICK.

A pleasant story of modern life—a welcome story, for youth and happiness sparkle through the pages. In the beginning Cynthia is reading her seventh proposal of marriage.

"'I defy you to say I'm not pretty,' cried Cynthia.

'If you were ugly you'd know it was the money men came after. Now you can never make up your mind whether it's you or your millions,' said Mary." (Arnold. 6s.)

THE TRAITOR'S WAY. BY S. LEVETT-YEATS.

"Thank God! I am the last of my house! Thank God! No young feet patter up and down the long corridors; no young voices shrill through these silent walls. They would grow up to know me as the 'shame of Vibrac.'" The speaker is Gaspard de Vibrac, who tells this doublet-and-hose French romantic story. Mr. Levett-Yeats is the author of The Honour of Savelli. (Longmans. 6s.)

SPINDLE AND PLOUGH. BY MRS. HENRY DUDENEY.

A modern story of home life, love affairs, minor troubles, and the amenities of social life. "Shalisha stood drooping by the gate after the little grey-horsed brougham was out of sight. . . . Then she turned, with a swing of her big hips and a proud lifting of the red head that Sydenham had pronounced atrocious in shade, and re-entered the house." (Heinemann. 6s.)

NAZARUS. BY A. C. FARQUHARSON.

A romantic story. "Sebastian, Count of Oldenburg, was the second and youngest son of his father, the old Count Rudolf, now dead." "As Sebastian rode alone through the forest his mind was in a mood of unusual preoccupation. He guided his horse with the instinctive certainty of a long-practised rider, but his thoughts were absent." (Macmillan. 6s.)

ONLY A NIGGER. BY EDMUND MITCHELL.

A grave story of East and West, of a Hindu who loved an Englishwoman. He dies, or, as he expresses it, goes "to the realms of the Great Unknown, where perhaps the ban of blood that has separated us here may be removed by the gentle hand of a pitying angel." His name was Ashutor. He was a Bengali, and he had a "great dome-shaped forehead surmounting delicately-chiselled features." (Chatto. 6s.)

TALES OF A DYING RACE. BY ALFRED A. GRACE.

For seven hundred years the Maori was a fighter. Then came the pakeha "and spoiled everything." In these twenty-eight short, virile stories Mr. Grace tells of the Maoris, and of the impact of the white man on the doomed race. Most of the stories appeared in the Sydney Bulletin. For two of the folk-lore tales the author is indebted to "his ancient Maori friend Karepa, Te Whetu." (Chatto. 6s.)

VISITING THE SIN. BY EMMA RAYNER.

A tale of mountain life in Kentucky and Tennessee. In a preface, written at Boston, the author states that although the plot of the book is fictitious, the incidents, with a few exceptions, are founded upon real happenings, taken directly from the mouths of old residents. The details of the fight before the door of the church were furnished by a native of the hamlet where the skirmish occurred. Miss Rayner seems to think that accuracy of incident is vital to a story. (Putnam. 6s.)

THE GOLDEN SPUR. BY J. S. FLETCHER.

A modern romance, told in the first person, and of the Prisoner of Zenda school. "My companion looked at me with something like a flash of displeasure illuminating the unfathomable depths of her eyes, and two tiny creases, eloquent of inquisitive feeling, showed themselves about the crimson of her lips. She, too, paused, and her foot tapped impatiently upon the pavement. 'Well, sir?' she said." (John Long. 6s.)

WE have also received: Stephen Kyrtle, by Katherine Andrews (Unwin); King Fritz's A.D.C., by F. Hird (Bell); The Peril of the Prince, by Headon Hill (Pearson); The Winds of Cathrigg, by Christabel Coleridge (Isbister); The Redemption of Neil Maclean, by David Lyall (Hodder); O'er Moor and Fen, by Joseph Hocking (Hodder); In Our County, by Marion Harland (Putnam); Half My Life, by W. T. Hickman (Arnold); The Arbiter, by Mrs. Hugh Bell (Arnold); God Save the King, by Ronald Macdonald (Hutchinson); Maude Ormond, by Norah Bagnall (Macqueen); A Manufacturer's Daughter, by A. C. Gunter (White); A Drone and a Dreamer, by Nelson Lloyd (Heinnemann); A Man of Iron, by J. Morgan de Groot (Long); The Curse of Eden, by the author of The Master Sinner (Long).

Digitized by Google

From J. NISBET & CO.'S LIST.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES.

10s. 6d. net. By ANTHONY HOPE. And 6s.

A NEW SERIES and a NEW ISSUE, with 8 Illustrations by Mr. Christy.
Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, with 18 Illustrations, special binding, 10s. 6d. net.

"Got up with every indication of perfect taste.....A most acceptable gift-book—one of the best of the season."—Liverpool Mercury.

KATHARINE TYNAN'S NEW NOVEL.

A UNION OF HEARTS.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"It may be doubted if ever Katharine Tynan herself has written a more fascinating tale."—Scotsman.

"Mrs. Hinkson is at her best in 'A Union of Hearts'.....a bright, humorous, touching, and well-constructed novel."—World.

WHEELS OF IRON

A NOVEL. By L. T. MEADE.
Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

THE KEY TO THE RIDDLE.

A Historical Story of Huguenot Days.
By MARGARET COMRIE
Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

"Introduces some exceedingly interesting characters, whose adventures captivate our interest and sympathy from the outset, and do not relax their hold on them till the very end."—Glasgow Herald.

DEBORAH.

A Tale of the Times of Judas Maccabæus.
By JAMES M. LUDLOW, Author of "The Captain of the Janizaries," &c. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"Cannot be read without interest."—Newcastle Chronicle.
"This is the best historical novel we have seen this season."
Aberdeen Free Press.

ROBESPIERRE. A Study and Biography.

By HILAIRE BELLOC, late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford; Author of "Danton," "Paris," &c.
Demy 8vo, 16s. [Ready shortly.

J. NISBET & CO., LTD., 21, Berners Street, London.

W. THACKER & CO'S LIST.

THE WORKS OF G. J. WHYTE MELVILLE.

(AN EDITION DE LUXE.)

Edited by the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Demy 8vo, gilt tops. 24 vols. £12 12s. net.

The volumes are printed from new type on hand-made paper, specially manufactured for this edition, and handsomely bound in buckram with gilt tops.

Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese vellum, and full-page Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, H. M. BROCK, C. E. BROCK, G. H. JALLAND, HARRINGTON BIRD, CECIL ALDIN, E. CALDWELL, FRED ROE, and others.

RIDING RECOLLECTIONS.	SONGS AND VERSES and BONES AND I.	KATE COVENTRY.
KATERFELTO.	BLACK BUT COMELY.	ROSINE and SISTER LOUISE.
UNCLE JOHN.	THE BROOKES OF BRIDLEMERE.	CERISE.
MARKET HARBOROUGH.	THE WHITE ROSE.	QUEEN'S MARIES.
CONTRABAND.	ROY'S WIFE.	HOLMBY HOUSE.
M. OR N.	SATANELLA.	GENERAL BOUNCE.
TILBURY NO-GO.	DIGBY GRAND.	GLADIATORS.
	SARCHEDON.	GOOD FOR NOTHING.
		INTERPRETER.

The Times.—"The edition has everything to recommend it externally."

The World.—"An edition more worthy of the novelist has certainly not been issued before."

Manchester Guardian.—"It is as handsome a volume as one could wish to see."

The Times.—"Good paper and type and a good serviceable binding."

The Field.—"Altogether a pleasure to read."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A handsomely printed edition."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"These tasteful buckram volumes are worthy of the man and the matter in them."

St. James's Gazette.—"These capital books.....the work of a born story-teller."

Saturday Review.—"Fulfils every requirement of the book lover in paper, type, illustrations, and binding."

Athenæum.—"The edition is evidently going to be a success."

Country Gazette.—"The publishers may be congratulated on the style in which the work is turned out."

Truth.—"Has every claim to be considered an Edition de Luxe."

Spectator.—"The pleasant setting of this handsome edition."

W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

SANDS & CO.

6s. NOVELS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MEN v. DEVILS. By T. KINGSTON CLARKE. Illustrated by J. Hassall. An Exposure of Dishonest Company Promoting, containing startling revelations. First Edition of 10,000, printed to meet the numerous orders received before publication.

READY NOVEMBER 11.

PETER: A PARASITE. By E. M. ALBANESI, Author of "The Blunder of an Innocent."

THE MARRIAGE OF LAURENTIA. By MARIE HAULTMONT.
"In many respects remarkable.....Alight and alive with passionate conviction."—Athenæum.
"Well worth reading."—St. James's Gazette.

CONCERNING SOME FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY. By NEWTON SANDARS. A clever character-sketch of married life under trying circumstances.

LENA LAIRD. By W. J. LAIDLAY, Author of "The Royal Academy: Its Uses and Abuses."
"This book, which has roused so much feeling and created so much violent discussion."—The Queen.

TAKEN BY ASSAULT. By MORLEY ROBERTS.
"Goes with a swing from start to finish."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Breathlessly exciting."—The Queen.

THE HERITAGE. By EDWIN PUGH and GODFREY BURCHETT.
"Clever and strong."—Outlook.
"Powerful and deeply interesting."—Literary World.

3s. 6d. NOVELS.

PRINCE CHARMING. By "RITA." A Fantastic Episode of Court Life.
"Absolutely charming."—Aberdeen Press.
"It is many a day since we read anything so touching, so brilliant, so full of humour."—Publishers' Circular.
"A delightful story."—Daily Telegraph.

THE CASE AND THE CURE. By GERTRDE GORDON.
"Bright and unaffected."—Outlook.

THE SACRED PRECINCTS OF THE CLOSE. By SYDNEY WARDASE. A pretty story of social life in a cathedral city.

THE PLACE OF DREAMS. By the Rev. W. BARRY, D.D

12, BURLEIGH STREET, STRAND.

ISBISTER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEIL MUNRO'S NEW NOVEL.

THE SHOES OF FORTUNE. By Neil Munro.
Illustrated by A. S. Boyd. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

The Glasgow Herald says: "In incident, and stir, and movement, and in the diverse qualities covered by the word 'go,' Mr. Neil Munro's new story must take a high place, if not the highest, among his writings. It is a genuine tale of adventure that never lags or hangs in the telling, and ever and anon stirs the blood and catches the breath."

CHRISTABEL COLERIDGE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE WINDS OF CATHRIGG. By Christabel COLERIDGE. Illustrated by Frances Ewan. Price 6s.

CHRISTOPHER HARE'S NEW NOVEL.

HOW CYNTHIA WENT A MAYING: an Historical Romance. By CHRISTOPHER HARE. Price 3s. 6d.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

THE MIRACLES OF JESUS: as Marks of the WAY OF LIFE. By the Right Rev. COSMO GORDON LANG, Bishop of Stepney. Crown 8vo, gilt top, price 6s.

MEMORANDA PAULINA: Studies in St. Paul's Epistles. By Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., Author of "The Table Talk of Jesus," "Judgment," &c. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

A NEW VOLUME OF BIOGRAPHY BY F. D. HOW.

NOBLE WOMEN OF OUR TIME. By F. D. How, Author of "Life of Bishop Walsham How," "Life of Bishop Selwyn," &c. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, gilt top, price 5s.

REGAL GIFT BOOKS.

"GOOD WORDS." Annual Volume, 1901. Profusely Illustrated and handsomely bound. Royal 8vo, full gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

"THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE." Annual Volume, 1901. Charmingly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, full gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

ISBISTER & CO., LTD., Covent Garden, London.

Digitized by Google

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN
Price 6s.
Punch says: "Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."
Vanity Fair says: "An unusually able volume....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.
The Westminster Gazette says: "A daring idea is well carried out....a more than readable book. We shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."
The People says: "A book to be read by men and women of the world."
The Western Morning News says: "As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON.
Price 3s 6d
The Daily Chronicle says: "They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."

THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

THE CASE of a MAN with his WIFE. By THEO. GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

LITTLE CHERIE. By Lady Florence DIXIE. Price 1s. net. [Shilling Sporting Series.

REMINISCENCES of a GENTLEMAN HORSE DEALER. By HAROLD TREMAYNE 1s. net. [Shilling Sporting Series.

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT
Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

READY NOVEMBER 15th.
LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.
Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG.
Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'CONNOR, JUSTIN MCCARTHY, FRANK T. BULLEN, HERMAN MERIVALE, LADY BANCROFT, ADRIAN ROSS, Sir WM. INGRAM, Bart., &c., &c. Price 1s.

READY DURING NOVEMBER.
TWO BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.
By CICELY FULCHER.
Price 3s. 6d. each.
BEHIND THE WAINSCOT. Illustrated.
UNCLE HARRY'S GATE. Illustrated.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LIMITED,
3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

In picture cover, price 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
WINTER'S ANNUAL,
Seventeenth Year of Publication,
ENTITLED
Lord Broke's Wife.
By JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

NEW & POPULAR NOVELS
Price 6s. each.

THE COURT OF HONOUR.
By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.
FOURTH EDITION.

A MANUFACTURER'S DAUGHTER.
By ARCHIBALD CLAVERING GUNTER.

IN THE HOUSE OF HIS FRIENDS
By RICHARD HENRY SAVAGE

A LOSING GAME.
By HUME NISBET.

FROM DEAL TO SOUTH AFRICA
By HELEN C. BLACK.

F. V. WHITE & CO., LTD,
14, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.

MR. JOHN LONG'S NEW LIST.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE CURSE of EDEN. By the Author of "The Master Sinner."

THE REAL CHRISTIAN. By LUCAS CLEEVE, Author of "Plato's Handmaiden," &c.

THE LOVELY MRS. PEMBERTON. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c.

AN ILL WIND. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON, Author of "Bitter Fruit," &c.

BARBARA WEST. By KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN, Author of "The Web of an Old Weaver," &c.

THE GOLDEN SPUR. By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "The Three Days' Terror," &c.

THE DIVA. By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. PENDER CUDLIP), Author of "Denis Donne," "Comrades True," &c.

THE LORDS of LIFE. By BESSIE DILL, Author of "The Final Goal," "The Story of Bell," &c.

BLUE BONNETS UP. By THOMAS PINKERTON, Author of "The Ivory Bride," &c.

MISS PAUNCEFORTE'S PERIL. By Mrs. CHARLES MARTIN, Author of "Two Loves," "Ethel Mildmay's Follies," "Petite's Romance."

A SOCIAL PRETENDER. By WINIFRED GRAHAM, Author of "Meresia," "The Beautiful Mrs. Leach," &c.

IN the BLOOD. By WILLIAM SYLVESTER WALKER ("Coo-ee"), Author of "Virgin Gold," &c. With 16 Half-Tone Illustrations on Art Paper by John Williamson.

ANNA LOMBARD. By VICTORIA CROSS, Author of "Paula," &c.
 This powerful and realistic Novel is now in its Fifteenth Edition.

A MAN of IRON. By J. MORGAN-DE-GROOT, Author of "A Lotus Flower," "Even If," &c.

A DAUGHTER of ENGLAND. By MAY CROMMELIN, Author of "A Woman Derelict," &c. [Immediately.

THE GREEN TURBANS. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN, Author of "I'd Crowns Resign," &c. [Immediately.

THE MISSION of MARGARET. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of "The Story of a Penitent Soul," &c. [Immediately.

HOUSES of IGNORANCE. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The Progress of Pauline Kessler," &c. [In preparation.

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

PAPA, LIMITED. By W. CARTER PLATTS. Author of "The Tuttlebury Tales," &c. With 40 Illustrations by the Author.

A CORNER in BALLYBEG. By NICHOLAS P. MURPHY.

FORBIDDEN PATHS. By MARCUS REAY, Author of "The Love Affairs of a Curate," &c.

AN ISLAND INTERLUDE. By JOHN AMITY. With Cover Design by Mrs. Mary F. Raphael.

THE DESIRED HAVEN. Anonymous. With Frontispiece.

LONG'S SIXPENNY LIBRARY of COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

NEW VOLUMES.

THE CRAZE of CHRISTINA. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

THE BOHEMIAN GIRLS. By FLORENCE WARDEN.

THE VEILED MAN. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

THE CRIMSON CRYPTOGRAM. By FERGUS HUME.

A PASSING FANCY. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

KITTY'S ENGAGEMENT. By FLORENCE WARDEN. [November.

London:
JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!
6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.
LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.
London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST. THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE NORFOLK BROADS. THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
BRECON and its BEACONS. THE WYE VALLEY.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW. THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, PENMAENMAWR, LLANFAIRFECHAN, ANGLESEY, and CARNARVON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
CONWAY, COLWYN BAY, BETTWS-Y-COED, SNOWDON, & FESTINIOG.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.
NORWICH, LOWESTOFT, YARMOUTH, and the NORFOLK BROADS.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.
LONDON AND ENVIRONS
By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.
With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co. Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRENTANO'S.

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
" Quarterly 5/0
" Price for one issue /5

The Art of Life.

A Pedigree of Counsellors.

A CERTAIN bleak energy of head and heart distinguishes Claudius Clear's Letters in the British Weekly. Their driving alertness gives them a separate place in journalistic writing. What they lack is anything which one would point out as specially radiant, gracious, or playful. It is not that Claudius Clear is without bowels and mercies, or that he does not love a good story, or that he is a hard judge of his fellow men. He is hard, not harsh; but his hardness is justified by his temperament and by facts. As he sees life he comments on it, and if you read him—well, you are likely to receive a jog or a knock in your turn. His is not a great, easy, and smiling spirit, but an alert, sure, and intent spirit. He jokes without difficulty, but never without purpose. His limitations are plain, but so, within them, is his power. He is all for fibre and efficiency and to-day. When, therefore, he puts his Letters into a book called Letters on Life, you stretch your hand for them and mentally gird your loins.

Speaking of one or two books of character which he likes—such as Theophrastus, La Bruyère, and Earle's Microcosmography—Claudius Clear remarks that often the lessons of life are best conveyed indirectly. We should say that they are always best conveyed indirectly. They come not as hammered precepts but as stealing and overcoming persuasions. If you would be brave read the Iliad, if virtuous Milton, graceful Tennyson. In a poem like Milton's "Comus" even the purely descriptive passages have such a pitch of austere beauty that they lift the soul as hill air lightens the body. Shakespeare is different. He casts all lessons and all conclusions on the shores of drama, and, drawing human nature as it is, leaves that human nature to survey itself. He feelingly persuades us what we are, and well knows that the lessons of life are self-enforcing, if only life itself can be seen steadily and whole. Perhaps he thought of nothing but to see life like that. After all, it were a kind of impiety, and perhaps an immedicable error, to know more than we do of Shakespeare's mind. He is the supreme stater of the facts of life. The sonnet is unlike the composition of any other mind. There is something ineffable in its sombre humanity and detachment. In such definitions, because they are true and complete, all teaching and all reproof and all pity are implicit.

> An expense of spirit in a waste of shame
> Is lust in action,

Is then the art of life not to be taught directly? Assuredly. But there is a hierarchy of such teaching. The largeness of life is vindicated in the fact that the book on the art of life which lives has never been the book of direct advice or nervous teaching, but has always shown the peculiarities and divagations of a temperament. Horace expounded an art of life so clear and calming to the mind, and expressed it in words of such a cameo perfection of phrase, that this easy-going, unambitious Roman has been taken to the heart of thousands and thousands of strenuous men with fervid, un-Horatian temperaments, who have loved his gospel of contentment and the golden mean, and of the heart that is pleased with a little and is master of itself and the day. Down the centuries come his dozen lines of advice to Leuconöe not to question the morrow or ask whether this be the last winter she shall see, or whether in winters still beyond count she shall hear the Tuscan surge beating on the shore. Then, having piled up his prohibitions, he breaks forth with the simple injunction, Sapias, vina liques—be wise and strain your wines. And the whole thing is so perfect and chiselled, and answers so aptly to a frequent mood, that men will never let the trifle die. Horace's teaching is indirect, inasmuch as it is exaggerated. No one really models his life on Horace. We cannot all have a Sabine farm and leave the smoke and noise of Rome, to possess our souls unvexed by money cares, and smile at all turmoil and disquiet because life is brief and full of frustrations.

Montaigne, again, is not a teacher to be followed as if he were an altogether sane and practical counsellor in the common obligations of life. His sagacity is too spacious, too encyclopædic, and it veers too often and too grandly to be anything but a school from which each scholar must take his own into the paths of life. He is to be read on a large scale, and with a lively sense of average and application. Else his large reflections and wide allowances and open confessions may well mislead the man who is to rise from his chair and go into Cheapside. Montaigne may easily persuade him to cry "I am what I am," and shut the door on new efforts. He has much to say of "Experience in her own precinct" and of a man's sufficiency to himself. He is against all strong affirmations and eager maxims. He loves a wisdom "easie, quiet, and salutarie," and will advise a man to commit himself somewhat freely to nature. "Oh, how soft, how gentle, and how sound a pillow is ignorance and incuriosity to rest a well composed head upon. . . . When, by other's reason, I finde my selfe convicted of a false opinion, I learne not so much what new thing hee hath told me; and this particular ignorance; which were but a small purchase; as in generall I learne mine owne imbecility and weaknesse, and the treason of my understanding: whence I draw the reformation of all the masse. The like I doe in all my other errours: by which rule I apprehend and feele great profit for, and unto my life. I regard not the species or individuum, as a stone whereon I have stumbled. I learne every where to feare my going, and endevour to order the same. To learne that another hath eyther spoken a foolish jest, or committed a selfish act, is a thing of nothing. A man must learne, that he is but a foole."

If you now come down to a writer like Hazlitt you find a less permanent and spacious wisdom of life, but yet a great deal that is anything but local and temporary. We do not wish to quote Hazlitt every week, though to refrain is difficult in a theme like this. His essays on "Application to Study," "The Spirit of Obligations," "On Going a Journey," "Egotism," "Living to One's Self," and "Vulgarity and Affectation," are admirably keen deliverances, and no one who reads them will forget their saline teachings.

To mention Hazlitt is useful, because the step from Montaigne to Claudius Clear would have been Gargantuan. This sketchy pedigree of counsellors is not made to belittle Claudius Clear. There is no case of belittling. But we wish to place a book like this in a true perspective. Compared with Hazlitt (we are speaking of teaching, not style) it is local and temporary, compared with Montaigne . . . well, there is no need for a comparison which no living writer on the art of life could stand. If one thing is unimaginable, it is the spectacle of Claudius Clear pillowing his head on ignorance and incuriosity. His counsels have been delivered from week to week to the readers of a religious newspaper, in which the art of making the best of both worlds is kept constantly in view. And by this world Claudius Clear means the world in which goods are sold, and fabrics weaved, and papers sent to press His counsels are for live men and women, whose capacity for being alive and useful he wishes to increase. Attention to life, interest in life, order and efficiency in life, are his ideals in these essays. He has gravel for the fool and the half-baked man and the half-asleep man. He says: "There are multitudes of people who never look at a newspaper, and some of them even make a boast of it. That grown-up men and women in an age like ours should not care to know what is going on is, beyond measure, disgraceful." He has been struck—rightly, perhaps—with a curious listlessness in many people in their days. They do not care about things sufficiently. They have no news. They are bored, and they bore. "How refreshing it is to see an old man full of vitality, anxious to be at his newspaper in the morning, hurrying to the station for his evening sheet, thirsting for information about new books, new movements, new men. Jowett may not have been all that his pupils thought him, but I like him for saying that the last ten years of life are the best." That parenthetic "Jowett may not have been all that his pupils thought him" is characteristic of Claudius Clear. He is always critical, always careful to say as much as he means and no more. Indeed, he seldom praises without hinting that he could blame. He will write: "And the best thing I know about Rousseau is that, when he was modestly provided for, he got rid of his watch, with the singular and joyful reflection that he would never again need to know what time it was." This occurs in an essay on "The Sin of Overwork," for Claudius Clear has his schedule of allowances. He would "fire out" fools from business establishments, he is scornful of the average unserviceable clerk who cannot look up Corregio in an encyclopædia without questions and haltings, and he is fascinated by the all-roundness and sleepless intelligence of Leonardo da Vinci; but, nevertheless, he sees the danger of letting the world be too much with us. Here we will take our opportunity to quote:

Digitized by Google

> It may be doubted whether we have a right to sacrifice life to the work of life. Life, it has been said, is not for working, neither is life for learning, but learning and working are for life. A man is so eager in pursuit of his toil that he practically sacrifices everything to it. He has no leisure. He scarcely knows his own children—at least, with any degree of intimacy. He has no time to trim the lamp of friendship. In the life of the great critic Ste. Beuve we read that he surrendered everything to his work. No influence was allowed to interfere with the distinctness and truthfulness of his impressions. During a large part of his career he cultivated no intimacies. He even laid upon the altar all his early friendships. His haunting dread was that he might have to part with his intellectual youth. The last period of his career was lonely and dark. He suffered from a hopeless and distressing disease, which he bore with the greatest calmness, continuing his critical writing to within a fortnight of his calamitous death. There was a great deal of kindness in his criticisms, though I do not forget such papers as that on Lamartine in the first volume of the Causeries. And yet, perhaps, he would have lived longer, and would have been greater, if he had surrendered himself more freely to the claims of humanity. . . . The weakness of his personal attachments has already chilled his writing, even as it darkened his life. An excessive restlessness and activity prevents the best fruit of the mind from ripening. . . . Quiet meditation will yield its result sooner or later to the patient. Let us not watch the clock too eagerly. I read with delight Thoreau's vindication of his days of reverie which his fellow-townsmen thought so idle. "My days," said he, "were not days of the week bearing the stamp of any heathen deity, nor were they minced into hours and fretted by the ticking of a clock."

The philosophy of this essay is scarcely that of "Firing Out the Fools," "A Fellow by the Name of Rowan," and "Order and Method"; but that is nothing. Life will run away with any writer, and it is vain to expect of a man's teachings a surface oneness. As to the complexion of Claudius Clear's counsel, it has a certain pervading severity, which is felt even in his essays of consolation, in which you feel that the reins are still gripped. Never does he suffer fools gladly. A kind of remorseless intelligence is always there. But his plain vigour of statement and counsel is very welcome. Thus: "The horrible phrase, 'Oh, I forgot.' The misery, the anger, the disappointment, the loss caused by forgetting is unspeakable. If you cannot remember, you must keep a note-book. Mark in it every promise you make, and examine it from time to time." . . . "If prosperous young people are wise, they will not, unless compelled, go to live in more expensive houses. A great deal depends on the rent of a man's house." . . . "In every business establishment there are many who are not worth their wages." That is the note. He will exclaim: "I do not believe this in the very least," or in an argument which suggests that some subtlety and patience is required, he will ejaculate: "Nonsense!" But this dryness and bustle are not to be laid to Claudius Clear's charge as if they were wholly characteristic and a fault. These essays—which, we ought to say, are illuminated by wide reading and the fruits of much good talk—assuredly have the virtues of their defects. "We have need of such tart, cathartic books," as Emerson might say. We can commend the book to anyone who wants a Monday morning moral shake-up. And who does not?

Things Seen.

The Fog.

I.

To leave a lighted room at midnight and to step out into a familiar street, which has suddenly lost all landmarks, and where distance has ceased to exist, is to come within the dreadful circle of the unknown. A midnight London fog also unites men. They have but one desire—to get home.

As I made my way up Victoria-street, stepping like the blind, caressing the corners of the houses, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, but shouts and cries from the roadway, where viewless vehicles had collided, I felt the sympathy of a common desire with the shrouded, bent figures that passed me. We were all, somehow, for home. That is the rule in a dense fog. But every rule has an exception, and somewhere about Pall Mall I met him. It was just after I had refused the services of a youth carrying a torch, who offered to light me on my way. At that moment the Exception appeared on the steps of a building that might have been a club. The fog had no effect upon him. His overcoat was open, showing a white shirt front. Geniality shone on his face, his lips were parted with amusement, and on his shining boots the reflections from the torch shimmered. The link boy and I stopped to observe this bright interlude in that depressing night. He was one of those exceptions who rise above circumstance. He stood on the steps smiling. In his mouth was a cigar. He fumbled in his pocket for a match, but although the pocket was empty he did not cease to smile. He looked about him. Then his eye fell upon the flaming torch. "What a delightful world," I imagined him saying; "I need a light, and here is one waiting for me."

He stepped briskly down, advanced towards the boy, lighted his cigar, threw back his head, blew a wreath upwards, and strolled off.

II.

He was not a perfect waiter. The perfect waiter should have a detached geniality, and he should be alert. This man's manner was too anxious; he underlined his desire to please, and showed his sense of his own limitations too plainly. But he gained by his very timidity. I, for one, always seated myself at a table controlled by this lank exile from Italian skies.

Digitized by Google

One night—owing, perhaps, to the fog—the restaurant emptied sooner than usual. At ten o'clock I was the sole guest at the tables which were allotted to him. When I had paid my bill, he hovered about me, and we talked. He began the conversation. I do not attempt to transcribe his spasmodic English.

"Is the fog very bad?" he asked.

"Very bad. It's worse further west."

"Has the traffic stopped? Can I get to Wandsworth later?"

"By walking," I said. "But why do you live at Wandsworth? Why don't you live near your work?"

"It would cost too much in rent," he answered. "I have a wife and two children."

"What hours do you have," I asked.

"I get here at eight, and I get home about one the next morning—that is, if I take my two hours off in the afternoon. If I don't take the two hours I get home at eleven."

"What wages do you get?"

"Nothing. We pay six shillings a week to wait."

"Are there any English waiters here?"

"No. Englishmen wouldn't stand the hours."

"Then why do you stand them?"

"To save enough money to go home."

"To Italy?"

"To North Italy."

"It seems your life is all work?"

"All work."

"You haven't much time for reading books?"

"Oh, my God!" he said.

I went out into the fog, more content with my own lot than when I entered the restaurant. But I could not sleep for thinking of that son of Italy walking to Wandsworth in the small hours, feeling his way through the fog—to Wandsworth.

Concerning Sub-Fiction.

It is all very well for us to take Fiction seriously, and ask to be supplied with the titles of the twelve best novels of the year; but as we go about London, and watch the readers in trains and omnibuses, we sometimes think that the "novels of the year" are no more than the Gulf Stream of Fiction forcing its way through an ocean of slacker water. Everywhere we see penny, twopenny, and threepenny novels being read. We say novels, for the word "novelette" is disdained by these publications, which are frequently of novel length. The 3d. Budget Story Books run to well over 60,000 words each. The 1d. Empire Bouquet Novels seem to average 35,000 words, and the My Pocket Novels 40,000 words. The Empress Dainty and Handy Library novels are not a whit behind. Moreover, many of these penny novels appear to be well established. The Branded Foot: a Romance of a Monstrous Impersonation Fraud is the 589th volume in the Budget Story Books! Alick's Love, containing, say, 40,000 words, is the 53rd novel in this penny weekly series. We could multiply such facts, but we doubt whether we could convey any idea of the enormous weekly production of penny novels averaging 40,000 words each in length. This is what we venture to call Sub-Fiction, and apparently it exceeds Fiction as the unseen waters of the sea exceed in volume those which heave on the surface.

Many of these series emanate from the same publishing house. The launching of a new one is the veriest bagatelle in face of the insatiable hunger of the clerk, the nursemaid, and the shop girl. All that is required is a scented title for the new series, and a rearrangement of colours for the cover. Then the editor's word goes round, the Mississippi of manuscript imperceptibly increases, and the printer receives a first order for 150,000 copies. The public does the rest. Each bait is but ground-bait for another novel in another series. Thus Alick's Love, in the "My Pocket" series, contains a decoy chapter of A Deep Design in the "Empire Bouquet" series, and vice versâ. Back numbers are diligently advertised, and the lists of them complete the bewilderment of the present writer, whose table is spread with a large but casual catch of these amazing productions. In the library called "Romance" nearly two hundred copyright novels have been issued, and the eye travels down such titles as Bitterly Tried, Sir Raymond's Sweetheart, Fated to Wed, A Woman Without Scruple, The Blood of the Desmonds, Valerie's Secret, Miss Moonlight, and Maid Mystery (No. 190), with the knowledge that it is exploring only one little corner—nay, only a tuft of grass—in this field of Sub-Fiction which week by week the critics complacently ignore. Their complacency is justified if their single thought is of literature, but not so if they have some regard for life. The man in the street may, perhaps, pass these gaudy booklets by, but his wife and his daughter and his maid-servant read them in their millions with the silent devotion of opium eaters.

And what is it that they read? Trash, someone replies. Well, it is trash; but the monosyllable is hardly industrious or judicial. It is the word if the subject bores you. But even trash differs from trash in kind and glory. We find little that is unhealthy in these novels. The habit of reading them day in and day out is certainly unhealthy, but, taken singly, these stories are not unwholesome. They are crude—crude with a vengeance. They are sentimental—sentimental with a full brush. The more they are looked into the more they appear to be the answer to the suburban life which toils along Upper-street, Islington, or through the Brixton Electric-avenue, on Saturday afternoon. They are the answer to the tram-ride and the office rules, to the dreary perspectives of £20 a year houses, to Monday morning, to the Sunday night which closes without bringing a lover. They are the vin ordinaire of life which the poorest typewriting miss can afford to buy. We have no doubt that the backgrounds and accessories of these stories count in their success quite as much as their saccharine love-making. Love and its frustrations are the indispensable dish, but luxury and fashion are the relishes. On the back of a penny novel called A Noble Reparation (No. 315 of the "Romance" series) we find a drawing of a scene in the Row, in which every figure, from the coachman to a child on the footpath, is depicted in the last degrees of polish, frills, and summer idleness. In this story we observe, not for the first time, what yeoman's service is done by five-o'clock tea as a means of creating the atmosphere of wealth and leisured sentiment. The hero takes tea with Ruby and her pupils in the Rectory garden.

> "This will do for the children. You, as presiding genius, must be dignified with a chair, Miss Furness. I will sit on this lump of wood here."
>
> "You will be horribly uncomfortable."
>
> "Not a bit. This is the sort of thing I like," he added contentedly, leaning back against the tree and looking at Ruby, whose slender hand held the brown earthenware teapot.

When, in the next chapter, Colin calls on Lady Wimbury in London, the same device is employed:

> "I could not think of remaining out of town while Paul lies so ill," she said to Colin, as she handed him some tea.

A secondary love motive in the story is also nourished on tea:

> Later on, Valerie had tea brought into the garden, and she and Leonard Wayde drank it undisturbed.

The pouring out of tea is suspended while a shooting accident, with the usual ministrations and pathoses, is being developed, but breaks out again when the heart-to-heart stage is reached :

Digitized by Google

> "You are positively cold, as a usual thing—either that, or charmingly sarcastic and indifferent. Is it always going to be so?"
>
> "How should I know?" asked Ruby, taking up the teapot with a trembling hand.
>
> "Because I must know," Colin said, aware now that he was sounding depths he had not touched before.
>
> "For what reason?"
>
> Ruby put down the teapot, having poured most of the tea into the saucer.

Not all these stories open in great country houses, with turrets and mullioned windows, but the turrets and mullioned windows nearly always arrive even when the story opens in a Bloomsbury boarding-house or a third class railway carriage. You are sure of the real thing if you wait.

> MIRAMAR, the residence of Lord Brereton, was a show place for the whole county, whilst, as was well known in the neighbourhood, architects and artists often came all the way from London to see it.

Or—

> Elgar Abbey, the ancient and splendid seat of the Earls of Elgar, had for months been pervaded by a chill, funereal gloom.
>
> Here the young heir to all its glories had been suddenly struck to the grave, in the full flush of early manhood; and here the inconsolable father . . . immured himself in the library from early dawn till late night.

Or,

> He led the way through room after room, pointing out almost with personal pride various treasures gathered together by one and another of the family to which the present owner of Castle Chase belonged.
>
> When they reached the library, a magnificent apartment lined from floor to ceiling with books, Mr. Lorrimer showed a well-worn writing-table that stood in one of the windows.
>
> "It was here that your uncle spent the best part of his time," he said. "See, here are his pen, his inkstand, and other writing materials, just as he left them."

For some reason the library is nearly always selected as the most appropriate room for a violent scene or a murder. Murder, by the way, is too common in these stories. It is nearly as common as tea-drinking. But we refuse to examine the plots of these stories—that way madness lies. In The Branded Foot the long arm of coincidence ceases to be an arm, it become a measureless tentacle.

After all, there is not such a world of difference between the substance of Fiction and the substance of Sub-Fiction. The difference is one of mind. In Fiction there is more or less attempt to lead the reader, in Sub-Fiction there is absolutely none. One admires the sureness of the appeal to the nursemaid. But this appeal differs in plane rather than in kind from that which is made by much of the successful Fiction of the day. Nursemaids are not the only people who like to read about the "smart set." In Wednesday's Pall Mall Gazette the clever writer of "Notes About" unconsciously gave his educated readers a description of West End life which a writer of penny novels would be sure to cut out and use as a document. He is describing the "Little Season," which London sees in November; and both his background and incident would admirably serve the purposes of Sub-Fiction. The gulf to be bridged is one of mind. The passage was as follows :

> It is a pleasant little season of tea-cup tables, and parties carrées, and play-going. There is a first night which is, at any rate, good enough for a supper at the Savoy. There is everybody, from everywhere, passing through the town on their way to everywhere for the winter and, somehow, not in too great a hurry to effect the passage. There are things to get, chiffons to assort, modistes to interview, before the passenger can feel fit. There are tickets to take, seats to secure. There is the Riviera crowd. There is the Cairo crowd. There are the Davos-Platzers, and the Canary Islanders. And the crowd of all sorts is mostly pedestrian. In the little season, it is the mode to walk. So Cynthia is not wheeled by you in the roadway; you find yourself foregathering with her on the Piccadilly pavement, what time the lamps are beginning to twinkle and the mist to float. Wonderful what a good time that seems for walking! I don't know even that when the mist thickens and the head-line begins upbraiding the "fog-scourge," the little season is very much affected. The scourge may drive mamma away to St. Leonard's for a day or two; still, one needs must dine, though one dine without her. It seemed to me that the scourge did not make itself greatly felt among us. Nor did it seem to do so in the case of a couple of castaways whom I came upon at midnight in Grosvenor-square. They were in a hansom. The fog, I suppose, had caught them returning from some entertainment of the stage. The hansom was drawn up close to the railings of the enclosure. The cabman was under the impression that he had arrived at his destination in Mount-street, and was engaged, by the light of one of his lamps, in looking for the bell. Edwin and Angelina, from the glimpse I caught of them through the closed window, did not seem to mind how long he took to find that bell. It rather went to my heart to have to undeceive him, and I doubt his fares were over-grateful. It was their little season.

Our readers may amuse themselves by translating this into the language and sentiment of Sub-Fiction.

Correspondence.

The Plague of Women.

SIR,—In your issue of the 2nd inst. there appears a somewhat foolish letter from the pen of "A Literary Free Lance." I should like to know why he selects my name from among a crowd of others as a peg on which to hang his complaints? I certainly have not monopolised the field of fiction with any other object than that of making a livelihood and supporting a family by my pen. I have no doubt there are plenty of writers who do rush into print for the glory of seeing their names in publishers' lists, but their successes are, as a rule, short-lived, and their efforts die a natural death. And, with all due respect to "A Literary Free Lance," his sex are just as great offenders in this line as the other. With regard to his puerile complaint that we women rob "male writers of their living," I should like to inform him that good work, whether by man or woman, can always find a place and make a mark. If your fretful complainant is a novelist, and an unsuccessful one, I should be inclined to say the fault is his own; and if his books in any way resemble his letter I am not surprised that they have won for him but a small meed of popularity. His views are decidedly narrow. If he refers to that article in your issue of the 5th ult., he will find that Mr. Crockett and myself share the same criticism and are accused of the same failure with regard to the "art" of literature. Yet Mr. Free Lance ignores the man-writer's faults, and pitches into the woman. This is the sort of chivalry one meets with nowadays for showing the "superior sex" that we are quite able to work for ourselves—even to win name and fame without their help and despite their lack of sympathy. For twenty years I have written books of more or less merit, have faced adverse criticism, private and public jealousy, have helped others whenever it has been in my power, and have won for myself a public that never fail me. It may not be "art" to have done this—art according to the canons of the ACADEMY critic, or its petty complainant, "A Literary Free Lance" But it is at least satisfactory to myself and those dependent on me.

To return to the point at issue, let me ask your correspondent whose names figure most constantly in the serial lists of ladies' papers? Surely those of men writers, strange as it seems to find them in periodicals exclusively addressed to fashion and frivolity. Again, to whom do we owe the fictional monstrosities made notorious by flaming posters and vulgar advertisement? the melodramatic, sensational stuff beloved of servants, and shop-girls, and butcher boys? Is it not the male author who thus woos fame, and drags down literary "art" to the level of so many shillings the thousand words? It is unfair to say that women are the chief offenders in the matter of writing or publishing "sickly slosh" (whatever that may mean). And it is childish for a man to write complaints of women's successes or women's competition in the field of literature and suggest that they interfere with his more valuable (?) services. If his work is worth having he can find a market for it. If it is not, let him turn his own attentions to some other branch of industry, as he so generously proposes women writers should do.—I am, &c. "RITA."

Digitized by Google

"Rather."

SIR,—Allow me to uphold the schoolboy.

"Rather" is a unique word. Long ago it had a positive and no superlative. Now it is an adverb in the comparative degree, and has neither a positive nor a superlative. Originally the positive was "rath," a word which has been obsolete for many a year. "Rath" meant "tending to become," or "premature." This is the sense in which it was used by Bishop Hall in the sentence: "Those rath-ripe wits prevent their own perfection; and, after a vain wonder of their haste, end either in shame or obscurity." Similarly, May, in his translation of Virgil, wrote of "rath-ripe" fruit, meaning fruit which had matured quickly. When "rath" became obsolete, the comparative of the word developed new shades of meaning, all, in as far as I am able to trace them, justifiable. "Rather" was used in most cases to denote a preference. Here are two instances:

> I'd rather be a dog and bay the moon than such a Roman.
>
> Almighty God, who desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. . . .

"Rather" as meaning tending to some feeling or event, is to be found in a couplet from Dryden:

> He sought through the world, but sought in vain,
> And, nowhere finding, rather feared her slain.

Again, here, from Shakespeare, is a meaning of another shade:

> You are come to me in a happy time,
> The rather for I have some sport in hand.

In these lines "rather" means particularly. This is the sense in which, with a further addition to the significance of the word, an addition that I purpose to justify, the schoolboy said "Rather!" when Miss Seymour asked him whether he had enjoyed his holidays. He meant her to understand that he had enjoyed them particularly well. Also, he had a true literary instinct. An elementary secret of the literary art lies in the use, when some strong emotion has to be expressed, of quiet words, positive adjectives or adverbs, instead of superlatives, or of adjectives or adverbs so strong that they cannot be compared. That is why "rather tremendous," in the novel of "Lucas Malet," is a bad phrase. In short, the schoolboy conveyed his feelings exactly. "Rather!" is effective, artistic, and accurate. "Very much," an expression in the superlative degree, would have been unspiritual, unintellectual, limp.—I am, &c., W. E. H.

The Devonshire Club, St. James's, S.W.

Books for Boys.

SIR,—The English boy is a strange creature, little understood by his elders, and a deep mystery to himself. He is popularly supposed to be a wild animal, with a never-satisfied thirst for adventure and blood; in reality, he is a sentimentalist, acutely conscious of the ridiculous, and, therefore, afraid to show himself in his true colours. So those who write books for him describe battle-fields, hair-breadth escapes from death, and impossible adventures in flying ships, motor cars, and torpedo boats. The result is absolute boredom. The English boy cares very little for this gorgeous display of the impossible. He may be attracted by it at first, but it soon ceases to interest, and in despair he turns to the books that his sisters read, and, though he will never confess it, enjoys them. But the truth of the matter is, that these bloodthirsty instincts with which the English boy is credited do not belong to him; it is only the uneducated, callow youth who finds enjoyment in these lurid pictures of battle, murder, and sudden death. The healthy-minded, intelligent lad of fifteen still waits for an author who shall write simple, direct stories of romantic life—the life that Sir Walter Scott depicts for older readers. That he cannot read Sir Walter with enthusiasm is no indication that he is lacking in intelligence, for the Wizard of the North bores the young, eager mind by his mass of detail and long descriptions of scenery, and his manner of writing is not always so direct as schoolboys could wish for. Besides, it is rather unfair to expect children to digest food only suitable for their fathers and mothers; and the mere fact that his novels are often given to them to read as "holiday tasks" is quite sufficient to prejudice them against Sir Walter until they reach years of discretion. All the elements of romance, chivalry, and dignified adventure that constitute so much of the charm of the great Scotsman appeal with extraordinary power to many boys; but the fact that this particular author is labelled a "classic" is one of the reasons why to them he must always remain anathema.

Robert Louis Stevenson is a man more after their own hearts; but even he does not fulfil all their expectations. In his earlier books he is excellent, but in his later works he is much too subtle. Boys turn from Treasure Island to Ebb Tide with amazement; they are unable to believe they are both the work of the same man. Kidnapped excites their enthusiasm, but they find Weir of Hermiston quite incomprehensible. Psychology is not their strong point, and they cannot appreciate the beauty of Stevenson's nervous, rich, and sometimes glittering English. Fine writing is beyond them; what they like most of all is common sense; and they dearly love a beautiful girl—a girl with spirit, dash, and "go." But Stevenson's women are not always successful creations, and sometimes he has no women at all. So Fenimore Cooper is taken up, then Henty, Conan Doyle, Rider Haggard, and Kipling; but excellent as is the work of these authors, it is not precisely what the schoolboy wants. He reads them, it is true, but only because he must read someone, and there is no one else.

What is required is a writer with a direct and simple style, a clean, healthy outlook upon life, a soul that delights in adventure, and a heart that is young and fresh. It seems to me that the average lad of fifteen is a much finer production than his father of fifty; he may not be so clever or so deep, but his instincts are in every way more admirable, and his sense of justice and decency is more refined and reliable. He is not an ignorant fool who must at all costs be kept shielded from all knowledge of evil; but he does believe that the less evil is talked about the better for all concerned, and he instinctively rejects any writer who touches on indelicate subjects. Our modern writers of books for boys have failed to understand the kind of public for which their works are intended, and that is perhaps why none of them has as yet been able to obtain a large circulation. Will no young novelist give us that of which we are so much in need? We do not ask for a genius; what we want is a writer who has not lost the beautiful ideals and instincts of his boyhood, and who can remember that the world is not a dark, dreary place, but a playground for life, adventure, and love.—I am, &c., C. FRED. KENYON.

Ellesmere Park, Eccles.

Digitized by Google

Poetic Spelling.

SIR,—In last week's ACADEMY you account for the vividness of a poem by William Blake by stating that before writing it he first saw "the Tiger." No, sir, he did not. He saw a "Tyger."

When Blake came to write his vision, the word which fitted the terrific subject of it was "Tyger," not "Tiger." And, certainly, to all who will not submit to the iron rules of our time, the alteration must appear not only justifiable, but necessary. "Tiger" is a mere ordinary traditional beast, but "Tyger," a living, hitherto unknown, horror, burning bright; you are not surprised to learn that such an animal made the stars throw down their spears and water heaven with their tears.

I am aware that many will think "Tyger" the variant of a lunatic, or, at any rate, not worthy of note, rightly to be modernised; for we are apt nowadays to put down the vagaries of the earlier authors' spelling either to caprice or ignorance. But they were means of conveying marvellous subtle shades of meaning, shades that the ear could not appreciate, only possible to be told to the brain through the eye. The damnable exactitude of modern spelling will have none of this.

It is well known that the Errata to Paradise Lost contained this: "Lib. 2, V. 414, for we r. wee," and few would deny that the passage would gain by being so printed, a gain unattainable by italics. Again, what difference is there, in the hands of Sir Roger L'Estrange, between "whoreson" and "hoarson"?

Could not the ACADEMY revive what we may call the spelling of impulse, and banish from its pages the precise spelling which Pedantry has determined and Philistia applauded? At least, let it never again state that William Blake wrote a marvellous poem called "The Tiger."—I am, &c., L. A.

?

SIR,—Perhaps the novel which is sought for by your correspondent (p. 234, No. 1,573) is Lady Bluebeard, by the author of Zit and Xoe, published by Blackwood in 1888. The scene of the first chapter of that novel is "the original Garden of Eden" at the head of the Persian Gulf.—I am, &c., E. MONTEITH MACPHAIL.

Madras.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 111 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best verses entitled "Bulbs." The verses sent to us in this competition are unusually good. We award the prize to Rev. R. F. McCausland, Whitby, for the following:

'Neath the green coverlet of the churchyard plot,
Resting betimes, you share the common lot;
Here in the earth enshrouded
Under clear skies and clouded
Your life in death you keep,
All through the drear November,
The drearier December,
Nor lengthening days remember,
Till March winds stir your sleep.
April's warm tears the froze sods uncongeal,
You rise responsive to her soft appeal.
Such golden daffodillies,
Such silver wealth of lilies
Recall Persephone's bliss:
Flower-laden I behold her
'Ere Pluto's arms enfold her
Behind the porphyry boulder
That guards the hall of Dis.
Sooner or later, He who all things made
Draws from each grimy scabbard its bright blade.

Other verses sent to us are as follows:

If ever onomatopœic word
Was framed by man, 'tis bulbs; almost absurd
How the growth amorphous swelleth true to name!
Gross onion, lily, squill, and æsthetic daffodil
Are bulbs that look, unplanted, much the same.

"One touch of nature" shows them far from kin,
Pacë Shakspeare! natures various lie within;
Let them touch their native home—the thing is done;
Like Antæus, brought to earth, they gain a second birth,
Though the painter of their colours is the sun.

The hyacinth hastes to ope her hundred bells,
Unsheathes his sword the gladiŏlus; all tells
That spring, with youth perennial, wakes to life:
'Twas feigned, their seeming sleep; that snowy blanket deep
Only guards from storm and stress of winter strife.

True prophecy, each year fulfilled to man!
True heralds ye, since first the world began;
Your message is yet folded up, obscure,
But spring shall give each seer strength to make his meaning clear
And the minor, with the major, shall endure!

[T. C., Sussex]

Scarce were we yet! Gemm'd with refracted fires,
Each dew-filled bud stood up from moon-drenched leaves,
When he, strong singer of the Spring's desires,
Quir'd rapturous eves.

Purple and gold, on painted gaudy wings
Flaunted the flowers, when Summer onward drew.
Below, and watched of creeping obscene things,
To being we grew.

Lusty we were, and green, when Autumn flung
Through all her courts the conquering oriflammes:
Then came the chill, and dead leaves, withering, hung
Upon dry stems.

From sodden days, and hours of sobbing dark,
Faint to our nests the burrowing death-scents crept.
Visions were ours: the bare woods straining stark
And skies wind-swept.

Now all is quietness: pall'd with untrodden snows
Earth's pulse lies frozen, but our hearts are fire.
Deep in each sheath a core of rapture glows,
One small green spire!

[A. K., London.]

What ardent spirit seeking for pale truth
In sunless cloister cold and dull,
Grew so divinely fair in love and ruth
As you who bloom so wonderful?

Offspring of nature's sullen hardihood!
Who gave you grace beneath the mould
To gather sweetness while you darkly brood
And shoot your green against the cold?

Who gave you eyes to seek the waning light
When all fair things of summer mourn;
And waxing in the womb of nature's night
Flower first to greet the sun's return.

Immaculate things who come to us in snow
And dream in icy chains:
Oh, with what lonely purity ye blow,
And bloom till spring is in the lanes.

Till with her comes the mild-eyed daffodil
To hush the haughty tulip's pride
As hyacinthus shamed the saffron's bill
When the pale snowdrop drooped and died.

[B. G. H., Inverness.]

Fifteen other poems received.

Competition No. 112 (New Series).

WE offer a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of the prize-winner's verses in the Competition decided this week. Not to exceed 200 words.

RULES.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, November 13. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

Price 6s. net. NOW READY. Price 6s. net.

"WHAT'S WHAT."

A Long-Wanted GUIDE TO MODERN LIFE.

THE CHEAPEST BOOK EVER ISSUED.

1.—The Only Single Volume including the subjects of all Works of Reference necessary to Modern Life.

2.—2,500 New Articles, every one written specially for this Book since October, 1900—i.e., absolutely up to date.

3.—The work of 56 Writers, including many celebrated Experts.

ILLUSTRATED BY

4.—Full-Page Colour Plates, Portrait of the Author, Tone and Line Blocks, Charts, and Maps, all specially designed and Engraved for this Book. 20 Full-Page cuts.

5.—Containing information for Travellers as to Towns of Interest, Hotels, Restaurants, Railway Fares and Trains; Journalism, Health; Climates suitable for Invalids; Tradespeople; Character and Cure of Diseases; Dress; Food; Houses, Flats, &c.; Nature of Raw and Manufactured Products; Social Matters; Management of Servants, Care of Children, Education of Girls; Sports and Games; Sketches of Celebrated People and Places; Medical Men; Training for and Chances in the Professions; Drugs and their Properties; Modern Poetry and Fiction; House Decoration and Furniture; Musical and Artistic Training; Stock Exchange Speculation and Gambling; and Scholarship; Public Schools; Books of Science, Novels; Gardening, &c.; the Army, Navy, and Civil Service; Employment of Women; Pictures; Shops; Religion, &c.

6.—Length equal to Ten 6s. Novels; price equal to One.

HARRY QUILTER. SONNENSCHEIN & CO.

THE MOST VALUABLE BOOK OF THE SEASON, regarded from a strictly literary standpoint, is the Handsomely BOUND VOLUME of the Poems published in "THE THRUSH." Price 6s. net.

"The Thrush."

A BOOK OF ORIGINAL POEMS.

Edited by T. MULLETT ELLIS.

Inspired by several important Public Events, and containing also many works of beauty and imagination by the undermentioned and other Authors, mostly writers of eminent reputation:—

L. Alma-Tadema, Sir Wyke Bayliss, K.B., Francis Prevost Battersby, Harold Begbie, A. C. Benson, M.A., Clifton Bingham, Hon. Albinia Brodrick, Rev. W. J. Dawson, Lady Florence Douglas, T. Mullett Ellis, Norman Gale, Dr. Richard Garnett, C.B., Lady Rosa Gilbert, N. Carruthers Gould, W. E. Henley, Nora Hopper, Keble Howard, The First Lord Lytton, Sir Lewis Morris, M.A., Louise Chandler Moulton, Dr. Gilbert Murray, M.A., Victor Plarr, M.A., Lady Margaret Sackville, Arthur Symons, E. Tindall-Atkinson, C. Whitworth Wynne.

£10. For particulars of the Prize Poem Competition, see "THE THRUSH" for NOVEMBER, price Fourpence Monthly. First Prize, Ten Pounds sterling. Six Prizes. Sole Judge: Mr. MACKENZIE BELL.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.

RATIONALIST PRESS ASSOCIATION (LIMITED) LIST.

LAST WORDS on MATERIALISM and KINDRED SUBJECTS. By Professor LUDWIG BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," &c. With Portrait of Author and Biographical Sketch by his Brother, ALEX BUCHNER. Translated by JOSEPH McCABE. 6s. net.

THE RIDDLE of the UNIVERSE. By Professor Ernst HAECKEL. Second and Revised Edition. 6s. net.

THE BIBLE in SCHOOL: a Question of Ethics. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, late M.P. for Leicester, and formerly Member of the London School Board. Cloth, 2s.; paper, 1s.

London: WATTS & CO., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, Limited.

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months, and 12 Months CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON ARE NOW IN CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand Surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE (Second-hand). Also a large Selection of BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS SUITABLE FOR BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.; LONDON;
And at 10 to 12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

ADVERTISEMENTS (Select Trade) for the COVER PAGES of the ACADEMY should be sent not later than Noon on Thursday to 43, Chancery Lane. Terms, &c., on Application.

Important Works Recently Published

JANE AUSTEN:

Her Homes and Her Friends.

By CONSTANCE HILL,

Author of "Story of the Princess Des Ursins in Spain."

Illustrated by E. G. HILL.

Demy 8vo, 21s. net. [Ready Tuesday.

THOMAS WOLSEY.

Legate and Reformer.

By ETHELDRED L. TAUNTON,

Author of "The History of the Jesuits in England," &c.

Containing 21 Full-Page Lithographs by T. R. WAY.

Demy 8vo, gilt top, 15s. net.

"This monograph on Wolsey as an Ecclesiastic is a slight addition to the study of the causes which led up to the Reformation. No other writer has treated this side of the character of the great Cardinal of York. His work as a Churchman has been lost sight of in the secular triumphs he achieved, and yet Wolsey was before everything a Churchman, and one with a keen sense of the realities of religion. Such evidence as I am able to lay before my readers goes to strengthen the conviction I arrived at several years ago that had his plans for reform not been interfered with by the divorce, the religious history of England would have been very different."

THE WESSEX OF THOMAS HARDY.

By Professor BERTRAM WINDLE.

With nearly 100 Illustrations by EDMUND H. NEW.

Demy 8vo, gilt top, 21s. net. [Just out.

In writing the above book the author has had valuable assistance from Mr. Hardy. Each place has been visited, and the account of it written from actual observation. The book is illustrated with nearly one hundred drawings made especially for it by Mr. E. NEW POETS OF THE YOUNGER GENERATION.

By WILLIAM ARCHER.

With 33 Full-Page Portraits reproduced from Woodcuts by ROBERT BRYDEN

Demy 8vo, gilt top, 21s. net. [Just out.

"Mr. W. Archer has done a capital piece of work, which all those who care for the imaginative and artistic efforts of our generation will be glad to keep on their bookshelves."—Daily Telegraph.

KING MONMOUTH:

Being a History of the Career of James Scott, the Protestant Duke, 1649-1685.

By ALLAN FEA.

With 14 Photogravure Portraits, a Folding-Plan of the Battle of Sedgemoor, and upwards of 100 Black-and-White Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, 21s. net. [Just out.

"Valuable as an eminently fair and unvarnished account of Monmouth's career, historical students will welcome the large number of portraits and other illustrations introduced. These include several historic houses and facsimile documents."—Contemporary Review.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON'S NEW VOLUME.

A WIDOW AND HER FRIENDS.

Uniform with "The Education of Mr. Pipp." Oblong folio (12 in. by 18 in.), 20s.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONGS.

With 11 Full-Page Illustrations, a Cover Design and Ornaments, by HENRY OSPOVAT.

Imperial 16mo, 3s. 6d. net. Uniform with SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS. Illustrated by the Same Artist.

THE JUST AND THE UNJUST.

By RICHARD BAGOT,

Author of "A Roman Mystery," and "Casting of Nets." 6s.

"The book is well worth reading. Mr. Bagot will, no doubt, have given 'smart' Society a good deal to talk about and, possibly, to think about."—The Onlooker.

"He deserves the success he is almost certain to obtain The chief personage is a delightful old gentleman, one of the most attractive and convincing examples of the social diplomatist that we have met in our extensive rambles in fiction This excellent novel."—Morning Post.

NOW READY.

THE USURPER.

By W. J. LOCKE,

Author of "Derelicts," "Idols," "White Dove," &c. 6s.

"Mr. Locke has all the qualities that make for a wide success; he writes easily and without affectation He has the sound gifts of a skilful novelist..... 'The Usurper' has character and force, and it tells a good story in a thoroughly workmanlike fashion. Wholesome, vigorous, intelligent fiction."—Daily Chronicle.

Mr. John Lane has prepared attractive catalogues and prospectuses of his various works, and will be glad to forward them free on application.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, Vigo Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

ALBERT CHEVALIER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY will be ready on NOVEMBER 18th.

BEFORE I FORGET

Being the Autobiography of A CHEVALIER D'INDUSTRIE. Written by ALBERT CHEVALIER. With over 60 Illustrations, full of Interesting Experiences and Bright Stories by a Unique Entertainer. 16s. net. Early application will be necessary to secure copies of the First Edition.

"Gorky is to be the new illumination for the world of the thoughtful."

FOMA GORDYEEF (Thomas the Proud). By MAXIM GORKY. Translated from the Russian by ISABEL F. HAPGOOD. Cloth, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE DOCTOR."

THE BOURGEOIS. By H. De Vere STACPOOLE. (UNWIN'S GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.) 6s

"We have seldom, if ever, opened a book and read it through at one sitting with more unalloyed delight than we have felt for 'The Bourgeois.'.....Remarkable as a study and excellent for its qualities."—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN EDITOR'S SERMONS ON DAYS OF THE CHURCH YEAR, and other Subjects. By Sir EDWARD RUSSELL Editor of the "Liverpool Daily Post," Author of "That Reminds Me," &c. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP of HEREFORD. Cloth, 6s. net.

A BANKER'S LOVE STORY. By Archibald McILROY, Author of "By Lone Craig-Linnie Burn," &c. Cloth, 6s.

BARRY SULLIVAN AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES. By R. M. SILLARD. 2 vols. Fully Illustrated 21s. per set net.

ALCOHOLISM: a Study in Heredity. By G. ARCHDALL REID. Cloth, 6s. net.

STEPHEN KYRLE: an Australian Story. By Mrs. T R ANDREWS Cloth, 6s.

SECOND EDITION.

A JILT'S JOURNAL. By "Rita," Author of "Vanity: the Confessions of a Court Modiste," &c. (UNWIN'S GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.) 6s.

YORKE, THE ADVENTURER. By Louis BECKE. (GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY) 6s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST of SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch says: "Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."

Vanity Fair says: "An unusually able volume.....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

The Westminster Gazette says: "A daring idea is well carried out.....The book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."

The People says: "A book to be read by men and women of the world."

The Western Morning News says: "As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s 6d.

The Daily Chronicle says: "They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."

THE WOMAN of ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By Dr. HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

READY NOVEMBER 15th.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG.

Containing nearly 100 Original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'CONNOR, JUSTIN MCCARTHY, FRANK T. BULLEN, HERMAN MERIVALE, LADY BANCROFT, ADRIAN ROSS, Sir WM. INGRAM, Bart., &c., &c. Price 1s.

THREE OCTOBERS: a Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.

STAGE SILHOUETTES. By Sidney Dark Price 1s.

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., LIMITED, 3, Agar Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

JARROLD & SONS' NEW BOOKS.

FIRST AND SECOND EDITIONS OVER-SUBSCRIBED. THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

MAURUS JOKAI'S NEW NOVEL.

HALIL THE PEDLAR

(THE WHITE ROSE).

By MAURUS JOKAI. 6s.

Authorised Edition, Translated by R. NISBET BAIN.

With a recent Photogravure Portrait of Dr. Jokai.

Author of 'The Poor Plutocrats,' 'Black Diamonds,' &c.

The theatre of the story is Stambul in the eighteenth century, and every phase of life in the great metropolis is described with singular fidelity. The chapter on the Tulip Gardens of the Grand Seignior and their fatal influence on character is moreover an exceedingly fine piece of grim humour in the master's best style.

NOW READY. FROM THE FRENCH OF RENE BAZIN.

AUTUMN GLORY.

Translated by Mrs. ELLEN WAUGH.

With a specially Engraved Portrait of René Bazin.

Mr. EDMUND GOSSE, in reviewing M. René Bazin's novels in the Contemporary Review, says: "The most successful and, I think, the best of his books is the latest, 'Autumn Glory.' The subject, briefly, is the draining of the village by the city....He takes in 'Autumn Glory' the agricultural class, and shows how towns, with their offices, cafés, railway stations, and shops, are tempting it away from the farms, how—under the pressure of imported produce—the land itself is dying of a slow disease."

TWO NEW "SUBSCRIPTION" BOOKS.

LETTERS OF LADY HESKETH

TO THE (Now ready.)

Rev. JOHN JOHNSON, LL.D., concerning their Kinsman,

WILLIAM COWPER THE POET.

Including Portraits of COWPER, by Romney, COWPER'S MOTHER'S PICTURE, by Heine, COWPER'S HOUSE at DURHAM, &c., &c.

Edited by CATHARINE BODHAM JOHNSON.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; half-roxburgh, 6s. 6d.: postage, 6d.

ISSUED BY SUBSCRIPTION. (Now ready.

BY THE HON. KATHERINE VEREKER.

DAIRINE, and Other Poems.

By the Hon. KATHERINE VEREKER.

Silk cloth, gilt edge, 10s 6d.

The annals of the Celtic race teem with incidents worthy of the garb of poetry. The theme of "Dairine" gives full opportunity for poetic imagination and originality of treatment.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

EVOLUTION, AND ITS BEARING ON RELIGIONS.

By A. J. DADSON.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, price 2s. 6d.

This book contains a concise statement of all the known facts of Evolution, in plain and simple language, and forms an introduction to the great subject of the origin, construction, and growth of the endless variety of forms organic and inorganic, throughout Nature. It deals with the bearing of the greatest and most far-reaching of all the laws known to us on the origin, growth, and decay of Religions, the relation of man to the Universe, his place in Nature, his origin and probable end.

CONTENTS: Ancient Evolutionary Thought.—Inorganic Formation—Organic Formation—Palæontology—Embryology—Rudimentary Organs—Darwin's Law—The Soul-Evolution of Religious Ideas—Jesus—Pre-Christian Civilisation—Decadence of Rome—From the Rise of Christianity to Constantine—Constantine the Great—From Christantine to the Crusades—Crusades to Reformation—Modern Christianity.

London: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co., Ltd., Paternoster Square, E.C.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s. each, post free.

THE BEATITUDES, and other Sermons.

"An excellent exposition of the Beatitudes.....full of thought and knowledge and power."

British Weekly.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"Distinguished by the finest scholarship and most exquisite literary finish."—Christian Leader.

CHRIST'S "MUSTS," and other Sermons.

"Felicitous exposition, rugged, intense eloquence, and beautiful illustration."—Word and Work.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"They are plain enough to be understood by the unlearned, and yet have sufficient richness and cogency to attract the most cultivated."

New York Observer.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Limited, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, Holborn, W.C.

H. VIRTUE & CO.'S NEW LIST.

COMPANION VOLUME TO "BOOK PRICES CURRENT."

In Preparation.

Demy 8vo, about 600 pp., price 30s. net.

ART SALES OF THE YEAR.

Current Prices of Pictures and Engravings.

Being a Record of the Prices obtained at Auction for Pictures and Prints sold during 1901, with Notes, References, and a copious Index.

Compiled and Annotated by J. H. SLATER Editor of "Book-Prices Current."

Price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

Japan Paper Edition (limited) 12s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF

B. W. LEADER, R.A.

By LEWIS LUSK.

Being the ART ANNUAL for 1901, or CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL.

With 3 Full-Page Plates: THE VALLEY of the LLUGWY, TINTERN ABBEY, and ENGLISH COTTAGE HOMES, and about 50 other Illustrations.

[Shortly.

Third Edition, Revised, and with new Illustrations.

Crown 4to, cloth gilt, gilt top, 15s. net.

Uniform with "THE HIGHLAND TAY."

THE RIVIERA.

By the Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D.

Opinions regarding previous Editions.

"The best of the numerous descriptive and illustrated books on the Riviera."—Saturday Review.

"An almost indispensable companion to sojourners on the Riviera."—The Times.

Crown 4to, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

New Edition. New Binding Design and New Photogravure Frontispiece after Percy Robertson.

With 46 Illustrations and 2 Maps.

THE PILGRIMS' WAY

From Winchester to Canterbury.

By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. Henry Ady).

"A really good book, well written and well illustrated.....Readers will find in the author a guide well acquainted with the literary and historical associations of her theme."—Spectator.

"Unusually elegant in appearance and inexpensive."

Athenæum.

Price 2s. net per Volume.

THE TURNER HOUSE CLASSICS.

Edited by WILLIAM MACDONALD.

NOW READY.

BRET HARTE'S TALES of the ARGONAUTS and SELECTED VERSE.

THACKERAY'S HENRY ESMOND.

IN PREPARATION. [Shortly.

AN ANTHOLOGY of HUMOROUS VERSE.

Edited by THEODORE A. COOK.

BALZAC'S PERE GORIOT. (New Translation.)

"A bold stroke in the way of publishing that thoroughly deserves to meet with the favour of the public.... Admirably printed.....bound in a dainty and handy shape that cannot fail to attract."

Pall Mall Gazette.

"The format adopted is strikingly original and attractive, being a bold, yet delicate effect in black, white, and red."—Academy.

London: H. VIRTUE & CO., LIMITED, 13, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1541. Established 1869. 16 November, 1901. Price Threepence.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Literary Week.

In the early part of next year a volume of philosophical essays by Oxford men, edited by Mr. Henry Sturt, will be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. Among the contributors are Drs. Stout, Rashdall, and Bussell, and Mr. F. C. S. Schiller, all well-known names among the younger generation of English thinkers. The object of the volume is to prove how idealism may be combined with a fuller recognition of personal experience than is accorded by those who are just now the most prominent representatives of Oxford philosophy.

Mr. William Sharp has written for the Pall Mall Magazine an article dealing with "the close relationship that has existed so long between Mr. Swinburne and Mr. Watts-Dunton." It will be called "A Literary Friendship."

A book to buy is the latest addition to the Eversley Series—the Lectures and Essays (two volumes) by the late Prof. W. K. Clifford, edited by Mr. Leslie Stephen and Sir Frederick Pollock. The introduction, written in 1879, is a model of sympathetic biography.

We cannot help being struck by the King's versatility. He has just accepted a copy of the first volume in "The Cloister Library"—a new edition of Sir Arthur Helps's Thoughts in the Cloister and the Crowd.

In connection with the article on the late Miss Kate Greenaway which we print on another page, it may be interesting to quote Mr. Dobson's lines on this charming artist, written some years ago, under the title "Household Art":

> "Mine be a cot," for the hours of play,
> Of the kind that is built by Miss Greenaway;
> Where the walls are low, and the roofs are red,
> And the birds are gay in the blue o'erhead;
> And the dear little figures, in frocks and frills,
> Go roaming about at their own sweet wills,
> And play with the pups, and reprove the calves,
> And do nought in the world (but work) by halves,
> From "Hunt the Slipper" and "Riddle-me-ree"
> To watching the cat in the apple tree.
>
> O Art of the Household? Men may prate
> Of their ways "intense" and Italianate,
> They may soar on their wings of sense, and float
> To the au delà and the dim remote,
> Till the last sun sink in the last-lit West,
> 'Tis the Art at the door that will please the best;
> To the end of Time 'twill be still the same,
> For the Earth first laughed when the children came!

The Girls' Realm has established an exchange page, in which its young readers may advertise articles of which they wish to dispose and state what they would like in return. We notice in the current number a very human appeal by a reader at Bournemouth, who "wishes to exchange Gill's School Geography, nearly new, for any one of Guy Boothby's books, except The Red Rat's Daughter, or any other nice book she has not read." There is something almost pathetic about that "nearly new" and "any other nice book."

Max Adeler has been silent for a long time. During his silence the "new humour" flowered, faded, and died. But many have remained faithful to him. "Parts of Elbow Room are about as funny as things can be," an admirer remarked the other day. Nobody knew why Max Adeler had ceased to write amusing books, and the curious who referred to Who's Who had to be content with the information that he was living at Walnut-street, Philadelphia, and editing the Textile Record. The explanation is that, like all true humorists, Max Adeler is at heart a serious person. His editorship of the Textile Record is big with meaning. But let the author of Elbow Room speak for himself. A new book from his pen has just appeared—a humorous book, called Captain Bluitt, with a preface from which we extract the following:

> More than a quarter of a century ago, the writer of this tale produced three or four books containing material designed to supply amusement. Concluding then that enlargement of the world's stock of foolishness was not one of the needs of the race, nor likely to confer dignity upon him who engaged in it, he turned his attention to serious matters, and endeavoured to persuade himself and his fellow-men that political economics, among secular things, embodies highest wisdom, and may bring honour to him who can deal with it successfully.
>
> Experience and observation now incline the author to believe that very much of the material commonly received as economic wisdom, and put into practice in public affairs, is closely related to foolishness; while not a little of that which is looked upon as foolishness has indeed some claim to be regarded as wisdom.
>
> He has had, therefore, an impulse to resume the work of producing literature for entertainment, in the belief that the race may find larger advantage by reading avowed fiction in which, as in real life, fun is mingled with seriousness, than by accepting, at its surface value, falsehood pretending to be fact and nonsense masquerading as philosophy.

The late Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse often amused himself by writing nonsense rhymes on the "Lear" pattern. A collection of these was made only a few weeks before his death, and will be issued immediately, with illustrations by Mr. Gilbert Chesterton. It will be published by Mr. Brimley Johnson, who will also publish Mr. Monkhouse's final volume of serious poetry. Mr. Austin Dobson has written a "prefatory note."

In Memory of W. V.—"a brief memorial of Winifred's little life, completing the book which has made her the child of so many households besides our own"—has been written by Mr. William Canton.

Digitized by Google

Readers of French standard fiction are in luck, for two such series as Mr. Heinemann's twelve French romances and Mr. Grant Richards's French novels of the nineteenth century provide a veritable library. The novels in Mr. Richards's series are to have introductions by Mr. Arthur Symons, and the first of them, Salammbo, is before us. The yellow paper cover of French novels is reflected in the yellow buckram covers of this series. After pointing out that in Madame Bovary Flaubert reconstructed the modern novel, Mr. Symons says :

> In writing Salammbo Flaubert set himself to renew the historical novel, as he had renewed the novel of manners. He would have admitted, doubtless, that perfect success in the historical novel is impossible, by the nature of the case. We are at best only half conscious of the reality of the things about us, only able to translate them approximately into any form of art. How much is left over, in the closest transcription of a mere line of houses in a street, of a passing steamer, of one's next-door neighbour, of the point of view of a foreigner looking along Piccadilly, of one's own state of mind, moment by moment, as one walks from Oxford-circus to the Marble Arch? Think, then, of the attempt to reconstruct no matter what period of the past, to distinguish the difference in the aspect of a world perhaps bossed with castles and ridged with ramparts, to two individualities encased within chain-armour! Flaubert chose his antiquity wisely: a period of which we know too little to confuse us, a city of which no stone is left on another, the minds of Barbarians who have left us no psychological documents.

On Flaubert's wonderful sense of vision, Mr. Symons says :

> Salammbo is written with the severity of history, but Flaubert notes every detail visually, as a painter notes the details of natural things. A slave is being flogged under a tree: Flaubert notes the movement of the thong as it flies, and tells us: "The thongs, as they whistled through the air, sent the bark of the plane trees flying." Before the battle of the Macar, the Barbarians are awaiting the approach of the Carthaginian army. First, "the Barbarians were surprised to see the ground undulate in the distance." Clouds of dust rise and whirl over the desert, through which are seen glimpses of horns, and, as it seems, wings. Are they bulls or birds, or a mirage of the desert? The Barbarians watch intently. "At last they made out several transverse bars, bristling with uniform points. The bars became denser, larger; dark mounds swayed from side to side; suddenly square bushes came into view; they were elephants and lances. A single shout, 'The Carthaginians!' arose." Observe how all that is seen, as if the eyes, unaided by the intelligence, had found out everything for themselves, taking in one indication after another, instinctively. Flaubert puts himself in the place of his characters, not so much to think for them as to see for them.

There will be a welcome for the late Mr. Grant Allen's posthumous book, County and Town in England, together with Annals of Churnside. The book is described by Mr. Frederick York Powell, who writes the introduction, as a guide to local English history, a kind of book which in a special degree lay within Grant Allen's powers. What those powers were most of us know, but Mr. Powell's re-enumeration of them is not the less interesting. The book is not as complete as Mr. Allen would have made it had he lived, but as it is a great many counties and towns fall under his view. Mr. Powell says :

> He would not write of a place without having seen it, sharing in this the practice of Freeman, who once told me he had never written in detail of a place he had not seen save Arques, where, as he said, he accordingly made mistakes that five minutes' eyesight would have saved him from. But the places Allen had seen were so varied, were, in fact, such "typical developments," that it will be an easy task for those with the requisite local knowledge and trained enthusiasm to carry out his work on its present scale to the few remaining counties and the rest of the big and famous towns of England.

Peacock told Shelley that poetry was only inverted sense. When Newton was asked for a definition he repeated Barrow's remark that poetry was a kind of ingenious nonsense. Attacks like these, says Prof. Francis B. Gummere, of Haverford College, in The Beginnings of Poetry, just issued by the Macmillan Co., "are as old as poetry itself, which, 'like the Service, sir,' has been going to the dogs time out of mind, and very early formed the habit of looking back to better days." Such an inquiry, though not that of a pioneer, is sure to be interesting. To be sure, a chapter heading like "The Differencing Elements of Communal Poetry" is a little forbidding, but American professors will dare anything. Dipping casually into the professor's voluminous pages, our eye alights on an unexpected juxtaposition of authors. Here it is :

> With Christianity emphasising the value of a single soul, with the emancipation of the individual from State, guild, Church, and with the secularisation of letters and art, this habit of referring wide issues of life to the narrow fortunes of an individual made itself master of poetry. The emotion of a clan yielded to the emotion of a single soul. A progress of this sort is seen in "Sir Patrick Spens," "Macbeth," and Matthew Arnold's "Dover Beach." Chronology in its higher form makes the ballad a mediæval and communal affair, the play a thing of art. Each deals with a Scot as centre of tragedy. In the ballad not a syllable diverts one from a group made up of the sailor, his comrades, and their kin. The men put to sea and are drowned; the ladies who will sit vainly waiting, the wives who will stand "lang, lang, wi' their gold kaims in their hair," give one in belated, unconscious, and imperfect form a survival of the old clan sorrow, a coronach in gloss. The men are dead, the women wail, and that is all. But Macbeth, as the crisis draws near, bewails along with his own case the general lot of man; "der Menschheit ganzer Jammer fasst ihn an." Finally, in "Dover Beach," modern subjectivity wails and cries out on fate from no stress of misfortune, but quite à propos de bottes and on general principles. Subtract now the changes due to epic, dramatic, lyric form; the progress and the curve are there.

An interesting experiment in the way of public entertainment has been for some time on foot in Berlin, and is now being copied in other cities, including Vienna. It originated in the idea of the German novelist, Ernest von Woltzogen, to establish an artistic kind of variety entertainment such as we usually associate with Paris. His Buntes Theatre, otherwise known as the Ueberbrett, or over-stage, is thus described by the Berlin correspondent of the Novoye Vremya for the benefit, and imitation, of St. Petersburg :

> In founding his Ueberbrett, Woltzogen had in view several distinct objects. To encourage and facilitate the spread of new ideas in literature and art; to emancipate the progressive and original dramatists from the restrictions of commercial managers, and to give the thoughtful public an opportunity to become acquainted with the poets and writers of the day; and to provide a new form of entertainment, not inferior in quality to the drama, but different from it and in harmony with the spirit of the age.
>
> The artists are not all professionals. Amateurs are welcomed, and the authors are encouraged to read their own works—poems, stories, humorous sketches, &c. The programme, therefore, is extremely varied—just as diversified as vaudeville, but freed from knockabout farce, from gymnastics, from vulgar songs and dancing, and similar "stunts." One-act plays are presented, and pantomime is a prominent feature. "Moving pictures" and other reproductions of current events are likewise included.

Woltzogen points out that people like to spend their evenings at places where they can have entertainment under freer conditions than those prevailing in theatres. Why should not men be allowed to have their comforts while enjoying the best things in literature and art? He hopes to see his scheme adopted in all leading cities, and variety thus made a means of developing the popular taste. He has had no difficulty in securing the co-operation of poets, humorists, authors, singers, and actors. Tickets have to be obtained long in advance, so popular has this theatre already become. The prices are not high, since the authors gladly appear for little or no pay. The new venture will probably soon attract attention in England, where "variety" flourishes and shows no symptoms of decline.

Digitized by Google

THE open-access system in Free Libraries has been a bone of fierce contention among those peaceable folk, librarians. We fear that the controversy will only be fanned by the following notice which has just been issued :

> In consequence of the serious loss and mutilation of books due to the admission of borrowers to the shelves, the Governors of the Bishopsgate Institute, London, have decided to abolish open access and adopt the indicator system, by which the borrowers will be served much more rapidly and satisfactorily.

IN a recent copy of the United Irishman we find an article by Mr. W. B. Yeats on a little book by John Eglinton called Pebbles from a Brook, which has not come our way. Mr. Eglinton's Two Essays on the Remnant found a few warm admirers some years ago. Mr. Yeats explains the essayist's point of view thus :

> A single argument is to be found in all these essays' and, in spite of their curious, furtive style, this argument is so formidable that if a few thousand people believed in i and tried to arrange their lives as it would have them they would become like the foxes that dragged the torches into the Philistines' corn. He thinks that States and every other institution of man begin by fostering men's lives, and then gradually perfect themselves at the expense of men's lives, becoming more and more separated from life, until at last they become fixed as by a kind of frost, so that men, if they would keep alive and not be frozen, must fly from them as the Children of Israel fled from Egypt. He imagines that the Children of Israel, the idealists, are now wavering between Egypt, comfort, civilisation, as they call it, and the wilderness, the unworldly life; and he would persuade them to hesitate no longer.

FINALLY, Mr. Yeats expresses his own partial agreement with Mr. Eglinton :

> I believe him right in thinking that the great movement of our time is a movement to destroy modern civilisation; but I cannot but believe him wrong in thinking that it will be ended by "liberated individuals" who separate themselves from the great passions, from the great popular interests, from religion, from patriotism, from humanitarianism. The movement against it takes the form now of collectivist, now of anarchist, now of mystical propagandas, now of groups of artists who labour to make the things of daily life, plates and candlesticks and the like, beautiful again; now of the awakening of the smaller nations, who preserve more of the picturesque life of the ancient world than do the big nations. "The Remnant," the men and women who have learned whatever modern life has to teach, and grown weary of it, should be the leaders of these movements. They are a small body, not more than one in five thousand anywhere, but they are many enough to be a priesthood, and in the long run to guide the great instinctive movements that come out of the multitude. They should be, as Walter Pater said of Leonardo da Vinci, like men "upon some secret errand," and in sharing in a great passion should look beyond the passion to some remote end; and they must be as ready to sacrifice themselves as those are who have never seen beyond the passion. Their labour must be to live as the blind do for the most part, to live as if they had but one idea, who have so many; but there will be times when they may have to bear witness for the end for some far-off thing, and seemingly against the passion itself, the idea itself, and John Eglinton may call this being ready to drink the hemlock. I think that if they have not this simplicity, this singleness of mind, they may do many beautiful things, write madrigals and the like, and be good critics, but they will not, while the world remains what it is to-day, make the most weighty kind of literature, or give the world the impulse it is waiting for.

IT is joy to a commentator to comment, but it is, perhaps, greater joy to discover. Mr. E. V. Lucas, who has become a recognised authority on Lamb, and is at work on an extensive edition of his writings, has been able to enlarge the list of Lamb's works by adding to it a children's book, of which he easily convinces us that Lamb is the author. In consulting the Lamb-Wordsworth correspondence in the possession of Mr. Gordon Wordsworth at Ambleside, Mr. Lucas found in a letter, dated February 1, 1806, a list of books which Lamb says he has just despatched to Wordsworth by carrier from London, and among these "a Paraphrase on the King and Queen of Hearts, of which I, being the author, beg Mr. Johnny Wordsworth's acceptance and opinion." This was the clue, and Mr. Lucas followed it up with diligence. The last stage in his hunt, described by him in a letter to the Athenæum, was as follows :

> The next thing was to obtain a copy. This was less simple. As I have said, the British Museum Catalogue has no reference to it under any possible heading. Certain specialists in old children's books were asked, but they had never heard of it. The book was advertised for. All in vain. Ultimately the catalogue of the sale of the late Andrew W. Tuer's children's library (at Sotheby's, July 17, 1900) was consulted, and there the book was, with two or three others, in Lot 59. Messrs. Sotheby revealed the name of the dealer who had bought it; the dealer revealed the name of the collector for whom he had acted; and in a few days' time the collector—Miss Edith Pollock, whose house is a treasury of quaint juvenile literature—entrusted the little volume to me.
>
> The cover—a yellow-paper wrapper—bears the following lettering and date, concerning which I have something to say later:—"The King and Queen of Hearts, with the Rogueries of the Knave who stole the Queen's Pies. Illustrated in Fifteen Elegant Engravings. London: Printed for M. J. Godwin, at the Juvenile Library, No. 41, Skinner Street, Snow Hill; and to be had of all Booksellers. 1809. Price 1*s*. Plain, or 1*s*. 6*d*. Coloured."

IN his book, Culture and Restraint, just published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, Mr. Hugh Black applies himself to the consideration of questions of great import to those who are drawn two ways by a faith which demands renunciation and a culture which demands self-expansion. His book is an attempt to do justice to both calls, and it is by no means untimely. From Mr. Black's earnestly written introduction we quote the following remarks :

> The problem suggested by the opposing ideals of culture and self-denial is no academic one, but in some form or other is a very real and practical difficulty, which demands some solution from every one. Should a man obey his nature or thwart it, seek self-limitation or self-expansion? In some moods it appears to us as if the best attitude, as it is certainly the easiest way to peace, is to accept simply what seem the surface facts of our nature, and give up the long passion of the saints after the unattainable. Yet in other moods we recognise that life gains in dignity and solemn grandeur, when a man realises even once that for him in the ultimate issue there are in all the world only God and his own soul. We no sooner take up one of the positions than doubts pervade the mind as to its sufficiency. If we say that the secret of life is just to accept our nature, and seek its harmonious unfolding, immediately the question arises, whether self-culture is not only a subtle form of self-indulgence. If, again, we make renunciation the infallible method, we cannot keep out the question, whether it is not moral cowardice, that we refuse to live the larger life and to wield the wider power which culture seems to offer.
>
> The counsels of the great teachers also are varied and conflicting on this problem. Some say with assurance that "self-love is not so vile a sin as self-neglecting," and that no human capacity was given to be renounced; others declare passionately, "Thou must go without, go without—that is the everlasting song which every hour all our life through hoarsely sings to us." Even if we do not trouble much about the general statement of the problem, and are not concerned about a plan of life that shall commend itself to reason and to conscience, we do not escape the many practical difficulties in many things on the border line about which there is often no clear guidance, such as amusements, and our attitude towards certain kinds of art and literature.

Digitized by Google

WHERE shall an author live? Writing from Hampstead, a correspondent of the Globe points to the injury which will be caused if the School Board occupy a site in Well Walk—viz, the depreciation of high-class houses, representing a value of £50,000, without any compensation in the present state of the law. He adds: "Several authors have expressly come to live in these roads because of the quiet for literary work, and have invested in their houses. . . . The right of quiet for doing work is brutally invaded by so many needless disturbances that at least we may be spared the destruction by the School Board of one of the quietest refuges that now remain." The School Board is gaining an unenviable reputation for destroying old houses and places.

THE "likely-to-be-popular" novel is now quite a recognised literary asset in America. The author of a "likely-to-be-popular" novel is duly photographed in the literary papers.

THE directors of the Daily News have made permanent the temporary arrangement previously made, whereby the control of the paper—editorially and commercially—was placed in the hands of Mr. D. Edwards. Mr. Harold Spender and Mr. F. Moy Thomas will be joint acting editors—Mr. Spender superintending the politics of the paper and the correspondence, and Mr. Thomas the news and the review department.

NEXT Thursday afternoon a representation of Shakespeare's "Henry the Fifth" will be played, under Elizabethan conditions, in the Lecture Theatre of the old University buildings, Burlington Gardens. The play will be performed by Mr. Ben Greet's dramatic company, under the direction of Mr. W. Poel. This is probably the first time for over three centuries that this play has been given in accordance with the words spoken by the chorus.

M. WIRT GERRARE, who is preparing the new edition of Baedeker's Guide to Russia, has just returned from the Far East. He was not allowed by the Russian authorities to enter Manchuria, and was denied access to all sources of information respecting the railways in construction there. Mr. Gerrare entered the forbidden territory in disguise, and travelled through from east to west without being detected by either the railway officials or the military guards.

Bibliographical.

THE new edition, in one volume and at a moderate price, of Planché's Recollections and Reflections should come as a boon to many. We do not hear much of Planché nowadays, but in his time he was an accepted authority on costume, and his dramatic extravaganzas were among the very best of their class. Mr. W. S. Gilbert, I fancy, learned a good deal from Planché, whose work was always decorous as well as bright and "literary," and who, in one of his inventions, most certainly anticipated Mr. Gilbert's Pooh-Bah. For the rest, Planché now lives mainly in a few isolated lyrics and in his autobiography, now reprinted, which would have been more acceptable had it been more rich in dates and other details. It was published originally by Tinsley Brothers in two volumes just thirty years ago. I have not yet seen the new edition, but I hope it has been endowed with an index, without which a book of this sort has little real utility, however readable it may be. A portion of the Recollections and Reflections first saw the light in London Society (April to October, 1871).

That Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Watts-Dunton, and Mr. Bret Harte should have agreed, with others, to write introductions to certain "units" in a new American edition of Dickens will surprise no bookish person. In the well-known poem "Dickens in Camp" Mr. Harte long ago testified to his sympathy with Dickens-worship. Mr. Swinburne's sonnet on Dickens—enshrined in the volume called Tristram of Lyonesse and Other Poems (1882)—is probably not very familiar to the average reader. It is characteristically enthusiastic in tone and phrase, the sestett running:

> Where stars and suns that we behold not burn
> Higher even than here, though highest was here thy place,
> Love sees thy spirit laugh and speak and shine,
> With Shakespeare and the soft bright soul of Sterne,
> And Fielding's kindliest might and Goldsmith's grace;
> Scarce one more loved or worthier love than thine.

Mr. Watts-Dunton, too, has a sonnet on Dickens in The Coming of Love thus ending:

> City he loved, take courage on thy way!
> He loves thee still, in all thy joys and fears.
> Though he whose smile made bright thine eyes of grey—
> Though he whose voice, uttering thy burthened years,
> Made laughters bubble through thy sea of tears—
> Is gone; Dickens returns on Christmas Day.

Mention may be made here of Gems of Poesy by Present-day Authors (London: George Kenning), because, though mainly an anthology, it contains a few hitherto unpublished pieces, one of which, at least, is by a writer of some note—a quasi-sonnet, called "The Woman of Samaria," by Mr. A. C. Benson (page 114). A new sonnet (page 130) is also contributed by the Rev. Richard Wilton, some of whose sonnets and rondeaus have merit above the average, and should be studied in his various volumes.

The Lectures and Essays by W. K. Clifford, which Messrs. Macmillan have just added (in two vols.) to their Eversley Library, came out originally in 1879. In 1886 they were re-issued in one volume, into which was introduced some verses addressed by Clifford to George Eliot. In the Eversley edition the Introduction concludes thus: "The bibliographical sketch of Clifford's work which formed part of this Introduction in the first edition is considered to have served its turn, and is not now reproduced." This is a mistake. The public is not so familiar with Clifford's work that any guide to it should be withheld in this way.

I see that Mr. Harry Quilter has been good enough to include in his extraordinary gallimaufry called What's What a column and a half on Bibliography. This article has in it more information and more sense than most of its companions. It is, however, too brief to be of any very special use. There should have been some description of, and comment on, the bibliographical "authorities" mentioned, not all of which are equally commendable. That the subject should be dealt with in Mr. Quilter's book at all is one more proof of the growing interest with which Bibliography is regarded.

It is pleasant to know that the posthumous volume of poems by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse will include "The Christ on the Hill," which was originally published separately in an édition de luxe, copies of which are now practically unobtainable. For many, of course, the chief charm of the volume would be in the pictorial illustrations. The poem, I venture to think, was one of the author's best, and, if I remember rightly, has not been "collected" till now. Some day it would be a pious thing for one of Mr. Monkhouse's friends—Mr. Dobson, for example—to make a selection from his verses.

THE BOOKWORM.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Pasteur's Way.

The Life of Pasteur. By René Vallery-Radot. Translated from the French by Mrs. R. L. Devonshire. With Portrait. 2 vols. (Constable. 32s.)

In his youth it is sometimes extremely difficult to distinguish the great man from the praiseworthy and excellent plodder. Louis Pasteur, born in 1822, was the son of a provincial tanner, and came up to the École Normale in Paris. The perusal of biographies inspired him with a generous ardour. He was so conscientious that he could never skim a book, even a feeble one. "There seemed to him no better way of spending a holiday than to be shut up all Sunday afternoon at the Sorbonne laboratory or coaxing a private lesson from the celebrated Barruel." His companion Chappuis used to wait for him, "philosophically sitting on a laboratory stool until the experiments were over"; and at last Pasteur would take off his apron, saying, "half-angrily, half-gratefully, 'Well, let us go for a walk.' And, when they were out in the street, the same serious subjects of conversation would inevitably crop up—classes, lectures, readings, &c." He was the most affectionate son and brother, wrote home thick budgets at regular intervals, and sent presents to his sisters beyond his means. "For my part," his father reproved him, "I should prefer a thousand times that this money should still be in your purse, and thence to a good restaurant, spent on some good meals that you might have enjoyed with your friends." Pasteur's politics were of the simplest. He "had visions of a generous and fraternal republic." The words drapeau and patrie moved him "to the bottom of his soul." He profoundly believed in Lamartine as a politician. (What would he have thought of Balzac's portrait of Lamartine in Modeste Mignon?) In 1848, when crossing the Place du Panthéon, he saw the famous Autel de la Patrie erected; going back to the school he emptied a drawer of all his savings and returned to deposit 150 francs on the altar. "You have probably kept a receipt, with mention of date and place," wrote the old tanner, who also advised him to advertise the gift in Le National. At the age of twenty-six he proposed for the hand of Mlle. Marie Laurent, and his letter to Laurent père is full of the phrases of the industrious apprentice—"assiduous work," &c. To Mme. Laurent he wrote: "There is nothing in me to attract a young girl's fancy; but my recollections tell me that those who have known me very well have loved me very much." Travelling in Germany, he visited Dresden and the picture gallery. "There is a most beautiful museum," he wrote, "containing pictures by the first masters of every school. I spent over four hours in the galleries, noting on my catalogue the pictures I most enjoyed. Those I liked I marked with a cross; but I soon put two, three crosses, according to the degree of my enthusiasm. I even went as far as four." When his father died, he wrote to his own little daughter: "He died on the day of your first communion, dear Cécile; those two memories will remain in your heart, my poor child. . . . Your prayers will have been acceptable unto God, and perhaps the dear grandfather himself knew of them, and rejoiced with dear little Jeanne over Cécile's piety."

France and England are well stocked with such exemplars—conscientious, cautious, industrious, orthodox, sentimental, affectionate; bereft of wit and humour (Pasteur had neither); the backbone of the nation, "voting straight"; reverent towards authority; tediously and incurably correct. We have all known them, and they usually rise to be bank cashiers, professors, confidential clerks to millionaires, stewards to dukes, and small merchants of shining respectability. They have everything needful to a grandiose success, except the quality of imagination. One man in a million of them has imagination, and it is as absolutely certain that he will succeed as that the apple will fall to the ground. Pasteur had imagination, which is the basis of every scientific experiment that leads to a discovery, and he was further one of the greatest observers of his century. His renowned master, J. B. Dumas, wrote to him:

> The art of observation and that of experimentation are very distinct. In the first case, the fact may either proceed from logical reasons or mere good fortune. . . . But the art of experimentation leads from the first to the last link of the chain, without hesitation and without a blank, making successive use of Reason, which suggests an alternative, and of Experience, which decides on it, until, starting from a faint glimmer, the full blaze of light is reached. Lavoisier made this art into a method, and you possess it to a degree which always gives me a pleasure, for which I am grateful to you. Take your time, Lavoisier has waited seventy years! . . . What are weeks and months?

Not till you get him in the laboratory, or in the lecture room defending some thesis, of which he is sure, do you begin to see the greatness of Pasteur. Watch his ecstasy as he labels the bottle containing the sixty grammes of elemental phosphorus which he has obtained himself. There is the great chemist in embryo! Listen to him smashing up the theory of spontaneous generation, and standing by his own discoveries about polarisation. When he has convinced himself, the customary humility of the great man suddenly vanishes, and you perceive a spirit that would not give way even were it to avert cosmic disaster. He said: "A man of science should think of what will be said of him in the following century, not of the insults or the compliments of our day." Long before spontaneous generation was abandoned by its prophets, Pasteur conducted a certain experiment with water and a couple of vases. At the end he said, with sublime conceit: "Never will the doctrine of spontaneous generation recover from the mortal blow of this simple experiment." It didn't. He asserted that hens did not take anthrax, and a bitter opponent retorted that nothing was easier than to give anthrax to hens. "Bring me a hen suffering from anthrax," said Pasteur. After months the opponent owned that he could not. "Now," said Pasteur, "I will myself bring you a hen that shall die of anthrax." Entering a maternity hospital for the first time in his life, he criticised the appliances without hesitation, and time proved him to be right. Listening to a lecturer on the causes of puerperal fever, he rose and said: "None of these things causes the epidemic. It is caused by a microbe." When the orator satirically feared that that microbe would never be found, Pasteur jumped up and drew an image of the creature on a blackboard. "There, that is what it is like!" And it was so.

The public thinks of Pasteur as the man who found out how rabies might be (sometimes) cured. Rabies was the merest incident in his career, which began with the phenomena of crystallisation and polarisation, and then went on to germs in general. The normal course of his studies was interrupted by an elaborate research, undertaken at the instance of the French Government, into the causes of the silkworm epidemic, which for years had ravaged the silk industry, and which in 1865 attained the proportions of a national calamity. Pasteur knew nothing of silkworms, yet he was appointed to this quest—so great was his reputation as an observer and experimenter. His efforts were entirely successful; he invented a system by which the disease might be stamped out. Italy and Austria eagerly adopted his views; but years passed—years of misconstruction and violent opposition—before the prophet of the pébrine-remedy came to honour in his own country. After Sedan, Pasteur wrote a paper, "Why France found no superior men in the hours of peril." He laid stress on "the forgetfulness, even disdain, that France had had for great intellectual men, especially in the realm of exact science." He "enumerated the services" rendered by science to his country. He remarked that all modern defence and attack had been made possible solely by the discoveries of men of science. He might have pointed out that previous to his labours on the silkworm the losses caused to sericiculturists by the pébrine epidemic amounted to fifteen hundred millions of francs in twenty years. He might have produced "the passport to immortality" sent to him by Tyndall, and the letter from Lister in which that great man stated that Pasteur's researches had furnished him with "the principle upon which alone the antiseptic system could be carried out." And, later on, he might have referred to the revolutionising influence of his work on the wine industry, the beer industry, agriculture. But that was not Pasteur's way. He lived only for the work itself. "Pasteur does not understand life," said Bertin; "he is a genius, that is all." He could not often see a joke (though he enjoyed the witty conversation of Dumas fils and appreciated the homage paid to him by the author of Denise; he did not even see the joke when la patrie (reconnaissante aux grands hommes) settled on him, who had put an end to an annual leakage of seventy-five millions of francs, an annuity of something less than five hundred pounds a year.

Digitized by Google

Ferocious when science was slighted or impugned, scathing in defiance of prejudices which refused to accept a demonstrated fact, he was a remarkably tender and loving man, and by some magic he shed affection round him and drew it towards him while sacrificing even family ties to the laboratory. His wife had the supreme virtue of recognising the paramount importance of his mission. When Claude Bernard (bête noire of anti-vivisection leagues) lay sick and melancholy with a gastric disease, Pasteur conceived the brilliant idea of enheartening him by publishing a review of his friend's works: Claude Bernard, the Importance of his Works, Teaching, and Methods. It appeared in the Moniteur Universel, and had its due effect. His sensibility to pain in others was extraordinary; he often went home ill from the operating theatres. When the little Alsatian boy, bitten fourteen times by a mad dog, and Pasteur's first patient for rabies, came to Paris with his mother to be cured, Pasteur had a bedroom comfortably arranged for the mother and child in the old Rollin College, and the little boy was very happy amidst the various animals—chickens, rabbits, white mice, guinea-pigs, &c.; he "begged and easily obtained of Pasteur the lives of several of the youngest of them."

Pasteur died peacefully at 4.40 in the afternoon of September 28, 1895, in a room of almost monastic simplicity, surrounded by his family and disciples.

M. Vallery-Radot's biography is painstaking, thoroughly comprehensive, and, we doubt not, accurate. It has an air rather Teutonic than Gallic; it is a treasury of facts rather than a shapely biography. The author does not possess the gift of rendering the history of science agreeable. He seldom presents the man behind the man of science; he does not write with a smooth pen; he has not been overwhelmingly fortunate in his English translator. Still, if you persist to the conclusion of these handsome volumes, you will arrive at a full, if somewhat blurred, portrait of a genius.

A Lady of Quality.

The Life and Letters of Lady Sarah Lennox, 1745-1826. Edited by the Countess of Ilchester and Lord Stavordale. (Murray. 32s. net.)

THE period covered by the life of Lady Sarah Lennox was a period which saw extraordinary changes in manners, in political life, and in the European situation. It is a far cry from the '45 and the last great Stuart effort to 1826 and the beginnings of Catholic Emancipation. The time was not essentially a romantic time, although the names of Clive and Hastings, of Nelson and Wellington ring through it; it was rather a time of growth which only a few of the greatest realised, a growth by no means obvious to men whose vision was narrowed by a too personal ideal. It is, perhaps, the lack of the picturesque element in politics which discouraged Lady Sarah Lennox from following their course very closely; at any rate, as she grew older she appears to have taken less and less interest in such matters. Indeed, in these volumes, there are no sidelights of any great value upon affairs; their worth consists in the intimacy of the letters, in a certain sweetness and justice of outlook which grow stronger as the writer's years increase, and, it should be added, in their freedom from scandal. It may be that one who was herself the centre of a somewhat notorious scandal shrank from touching upon the weaknesses of her contemporaries, but we are inclined to think that the reason lay rather in the writer's natural delicacy.

Lady Sarah Lennox was the fourth daughter of the second Duke of Richmond: her eldest sister was the first Lady Holland, mother of Charles James Fox; another sister was the first Duchess of Leinster, mother of the noble and unfortunate Lord Edward Fitzgerald. Nearly all Lady Sarah's letters are addressed to Lady Susan Fox Strangways, who, to the horror of her family, married an amiable gentleman connected with the stage called O'Brien. The first of these letters is dated 1761, at a time when Lady Sarah was like to become Queen of England. The infatuation of George III. for the beautiful and high-spirited girl was perfectly serious, apparently, and he made proposals to her in a characteristically awkward manner. Lord Holland wrote in his Memoir: "He is in love with her, and it is no less certain she loves him." As to her affection for the king, we may be permitted to doubt it, but, however that may have been, she had to content herself with playing bridesmaid at the king's wedding. Also, there were other distractions. Lord Holland writes again:

> To many a girl H.M.'s behaviour had been very vexatious, but Lady Sarah's temper and affections are happily so flexible and light, that the sickness of her squirrel immediately took up all her attention, and when it, in spite of her nursing it, dy'd, I believe it gave her more concern than H.M. ever did. That grief, however, soon gave way to the care of a little hedge-hog, that she saved from destruction in the field and is now her favourite.

Some twelve months later Lady Sarah was married to Charles Bunbury, who not long afterwards succeeded his father, Sir William Bunbury. Sir Charles was an easy and pleasant person, given to sport and horse-racing (he owned Diomed, the first Derby winner), with whom Lady Sarah seemed to live on terms of great affection for nearly seven years. The letters of this period are made up of Newmarket, horses, chatter about relations, and visits to town. "I danced with Ld. Petre," she says on one occasion, adding, with charming inconsequence, "and he is a nasty toad, for I longed to spit in his face!" In another place she writes:

> Mr. Garrick (sweet soul) is gone for some time to Italy; the play-house goes on the same, and has only some additional forces, particularly a Mr. Powell—who, I hear, is a very good recruit for tragedy—and Foote; in short, it will flourish very well for one winter, I fancy, and then the angel will come back.

And again she says of Garrick:

> Only think of Mr. Garrick that acts for ever, is not it charming of him? I do propose to attend the Play constantly this winter when he acts, coute que coute, for I would not give up the pleasure of seeing him act for all the good opinion of this vile, scandalous, ill-natured world.

Here is her not inapt reference to Rousseau:

> By way of news, Mr. Rousseau is all the talk; all I can hear of him is that he wears a pellise and fur cap, that he was at the Play, and desired to be placed so that he might not see the King, which as Mrs. Greville says is a "pauvreté worthy a philosopher." His dressing particularly I think is very silly, and if, as the papers say, he told Mr. Garrick that he made him laugh and cry without understanding a word, in my humble opinion that was very silly too. . . . He sees few people, and is to go and live at a farm in Wales, where he shall see nothing but mountains and wild goats. "Autre pauvreté."

Digitized by Google

In 1768 Lady Sarah gave occasion of offence to "the vile, scandalous, ill-natured world" by leaving her husband for the protection of Lord William Gordon. This episode was brief, and we have no record of it in the letters before us, Lady Susan O'Brien having preserved none of her friend's correspondence between 1768 and 1775. A few months after this escapade Lady Sarah returned to her brother, the Duke of Richmond, at Goodwood, where, for some years, she lived a life of complete retirement, wholly occupied with the daughter whom she was to lose later on the verge of womanhood. It was not till 1776 that a divorce was granted to Sir Charles Bunbury, who seems to have behaved throughout the affair with great good-nature, as well as with a, perhaps, too complacent magnanimity.

In 1781 Lady Sarah married the Hon. George Napier, a marriage which was good for England as well as for the parties concerned. Of the eight children born of the union three were distinguished soldiers, who all fought in the Peninsular War, and were afterwards knighted. One, Sir Charles Napier, was the conqueror of Scinde; another, Sir William, was the author of the History of the Peninsular War. After her marriage much time was spent in Ireland, which at that period was in so critical a state. Lady Sarah appears to have thought the situation exaggerated. "I suppose you won't forgive," she writes, "my saying nothing of our Irish politics, as they sound so terrible." In the same letter she says, "Edward Fitzgerald has acted a romance throughout all his life, and it is finished by his marriage with Pamela Seymour." But the romance of Lord Edward Fitzgerald's life was by no means finished then; it ended in prison in 1798 after the failure of the scheme for which he had nobly sacrificed all. Writing to the same correspondent, Lady Sarah says:

> Your sense and sensibility, my dear Ly Susan, have pointed out the causes of my silence too plainly to need excuses, and in sacred silence would remain my afflicted heart relative to my dear nephew Edward Fitz-Gerald, if the cruelty of persons both in and out of power did not try to make misfortune double, by their infamous false witnesses kept in continual pay. . . . I therefore declare that I knew he was born with the most romantic, benevolent heart, that his imagination carried him beyond the bounds of practical philanthropy, and the times led too plainly to the strong desire of freeing his fellow-creatures from the real and manifest cruelties and oppressions of the Governt. of Ireland. . . .

The later letters become more and more domestic in character, and increasingly informed with a fine spirit of tenderness and resignation. For many years Lady Sarah was almost blind, although she appears to have kept her beauty to a late age. That beauty was chronicled more than once by Sir Joshua Reynolds. In these handsome and beautifully-printed volumes there are many excellent reproductions of portraits in photogravure, no less than nine being from the brush of the great and benign Sir Joshua. The notes to the work are concise and not too obtrusive, and the index unusually accurate and full. Prefixed to the first volume is a "Memoir on the events attending the death of George II., and the accession of George III.," by Henry Fox, first Lord Holland, and also Mr. Henry Napier's Memoir of her mother's early life, but we have preferred to draw upon Lady Sarah's own letters for the light which they throw upon her character and circumstances. The character which they reveal is a curious and interesting compound of simplicity and complexity, perhaps the dominant note is honesty. Certainly there was no affectation either as child or woman about Lady Sarah Lennox.

A Novelist and his Disciples.

The Wessex of Thomas Hardy. By Bertram C. A. Windle. Illustrated by Edmund H. New. (Lane. 21s.)

SOME years ago a man of letters, being asked to furnish a list of self-educator books, preferred to give a list of the kind of works that the self-educator should never read. It included books about books, and books that try to prove anything. While not endorsing that view, we suggest that there are at least two qualities which those who write about books should possess—industry and enthusiasm. These qualities Mr. Bertram C. A. Windle certainly has. He has also an encyclopædic acquaintance with all Mr. Hardy has written; he knows the Wessex country as an actor knows the Strand, and he has visited every locality used by Mr. Hardy. The result is a volume of over three hundred pages, with maps, and some fifty odd illustrations by Mr. Edmund H. New. Discipleship could go no further. As a guide-book to the Wessex country, as a topographical history of the novels, the book is final; but we cannot say that we have derived much exhilaration from reading it. For example, with the memory of how Mr. Hardy has written of Egdon Heath, it is a little like eating toast that has been standing for an hour to read Mr. Windle:

> Egdon is a portion of Dorset over which the lover of wild nature will do well to linger: its "abrupt slopes" and its dark valleys will afford him a series of views varying in character from the confined to the spacious, but always satisfying, always new. It is a place from which those who have learnt to love it tear themselves with difficulty, and to which they return time after time with ever intensified feelings of delight.

Or take the beginning of the pages which Mr. Windle devotes to Jude:

> Jude the Obscure is also a highly topographical novel, and centres round a district far removed from any yet considered in this book. Jude himself was born at Mellstock, where so many Wessex incidents happen; but at the commencement of the tale he is living with a relative at Fawley Magna, in the Berkshire Downs. The spot is most easily reached from Wantage——

And so on. Yes, Mr. Windle certainly has enthusiasm and industry, but he has not the power to impart his enthusiasm, and he has not the charm, variety of mood, joy in sun and wind, and the emotion of the hour that goes to the making of the ideal guide book. But those who want an honest and evenly written guide to Mr. Hardy's Wessex will find it in this volume.

Mr. Hardy, as thinker and writer, has a singular power of making disciples labour to his honour. Much has been written on the Wessex country by ardent students of his books, and seven years ago an entire volume was written on The Art of Thomas Hardy. Indeed, Mr. Windle has done us the service of sending us again to Mr. Lionel Johnson's admirable volume, and to Mr. Lane's excellent bibliography printed at the end. Who remembers that Mr. Hardy's first published article was called "How I Built Myself a House"? It appeared in Chambers's Journal in 1865. And who remembers that it was Mr. Hardy who wrote William Barnes's obituary notice. It appeared in the Athenæum, and is reprinted in Mr. Lionel Johnson's volume, with the full text of that fine ballad, "The Fire at Tranter Sweatley's," a bowderlised version of which appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine in 1875. It takes a novelist to give a lifelike picture of a man in an obituary notice. Here is Mr. Hardy's characterisation of William Barnes, poet and philologer:

> There were few figures more familiar to the eye in the county town of Dorset than an aged clergyman, quaintly attired in caped cloak, knee-breeches, and buckled shoes, with a leather satchel slung over his shoulders, and a stout staff in his hand. He seemed usually to prefer the middle of the street to the pavement, and to be thinking of matters which had nothing to do with the scene before him. He plodded along with a broad, firm tread, notwithstanding the slight stoop occasioned by his years. Every Saturday morning he might have been seen thus trudging up the narrow South-street, his shoes coated with mud or dust according to the state of the roads between his rural home and Dorchester, and a little grey dog at his heels, till he reached the four crossways in the centre of the town. Halting here, opposite the public clock, he would pull his old-fashioned watch from its deep fob, and set it with great precision to London time. This, the invariable first act of his market visit, having been completed to his satisfaction, he turned round and methodically proceeded about his other business.

Digitized by Google

These two books should certainly have a place on the Hardy shelf, and Mr. Johnson might bring his study up to date.

More and More Memories.

Then and Now. By Dean Hole. (Hutchinson. 16s. net.)

Dean Hole is a veritable geyser of memories, and we have no reason to suppose or wish that he is here "active" for the last time. In 1892 we had The Memories of Dean Hole: in 1895 his More Memories; and to-day we are confronted by the above portly volume. All these books might be shaken up together and re-divided in almost any way without injury to the Dean's literary reputation, which is that of a very kindly, tolerant, all-round cleric, to whom the worlds of sport, society, city, and country have been familiar these eighty years. To be entertainingly wise is the Dean's aim, and although he is often just going to be grave, he rarely, if ever, succeeds. Indeed, the Fatal Jocularity of Deans is a subject which may yet have to be discussed, and the material is abundant. On page 199 of this book we find Dean Hole and Dean Ramsay foregathered in pleasant discourse. The Edinburgh Dean reeled off stories about the familiarity of certain ministers in their addresses to the Almighty, at the same time insisting on the genuine piety and reverence of these worthies, one of whom put up the following frenzied petition on behalf of Queen Adelaide: "O Lord, save Thy servant, our sovereign lady the Queen; grant that as she grows an old woman she may become a new man; strengthen her with Thy blessing that she may live a pure virgin, bringing forth sons and daughters to the glory of God; and give her grace that she may go forth before her people like a he-goat on the mountains."

Once more Dean Hole appears as the champion of the moderate use of alcoholic drinks. He condoles with, not extols, those who, with no inclinations to excess, have pledged themselves to total abstinence. Their zeal is not according to knowledge. They have clever evangelists, but to these the Dean applies the couplet:

> Some to whom Heaven in wit has been profuse
> Want as much more to turn it to its use.

As for the example-to-others argument, it has been "a dismal failure."

> For many years I have searched and inquired for some successful results, for one man who would prove to me that, being a drunkard, he was so much impressed by the example of his clergyman, who, for his sake and imitation, ceased to drink his glass of beer at luncheon, his glass of port at dinner, or his glass of whisky and water at night, that he broke away from his vicious indulgence and became a sober man. I am waiting to receive him, but until he arrives I shall retain the sorrowful suspicion that there is a strong resemblance between this total abstainer and the native of Japan who disembowelled himself before an Englishman whom he hated, expecting him to follow his example, in accordance with the custom of the country, and the brutal Briton put his thumb to his nose. . . . I have heard a cadaverous preacher say that when a man began to take alcoholic liquors he was sowing the seeds of mortal illness. My father sowed until he was ninety, and I was at eighty engaged in the same occupation; and I murmured, sotto voce, "Rubbish!"

The Dean's stories and illustrations are nearly always of a robust type, and one realises that though he has been many things—squire, sportsman, traveller, and warrior—he can never have been a mincing curate or a solemn rector. On any and every subject—Children, Wives, Nurses, Recreations, Locomotion, Preaching, and Games—the Dean turns on the same easy flood of stories and large-hearted comment. Indeed, quotation is too easy to be easy. In his chapter on Books Old and New he runs over the reading of his boyhood, in which there are no surprises, though we rather doubt whether boys of to-day read such good stuff as Thaddeus of Warsaw, The Scottish Chiefs, The Mysteries of Udolpho, the Castle of Otranto, Tales of a Traveller, The Pilot, and other books which nourished the Dean's youthful mind. Byron he read freely, and wept with Gulnare upon the chains of Conrad; he learned "The Dream" by heart; could quote any amount of "Childe Harold"; and devoured "Don Juan" in a hayloft. Of the last-named work he only remarks: "I agree for once with the fast young lady who said that 'it was not quite the book which you could give to the dear rector's daughters'; but I am not aware that it did me harm, and I believe that in this case, as in many others, if there were no denunciations, not many young folks would care to read it." We can endorse this. The present writer has a lively recollection of being asked at intervals of a year or so, by an elderly female relative, whether he had read "Don Juan." She asked it with stern solicitude; as if it were a catastrophe at once probable and destructive of his character and future, in which she would then be able to take no further interest. If he did not read it, it must have been because books and haylofts were not so freely at his disposal as they were to the embryo Dean of Rochester. It must not be supposed, however, that the Dean's tolerance is so wide as to have no shores. Nourished on Dickens, Thackeray, and John Leech—whose praises he is never tired of singing—he has no mercy on the modern "sex novel," with its attacks on marriage and its translations of vice into smartness or self-expansion. None of the Dean's opinions provoke argument. They are so genial, personal, and mellow, that one takes them as they come—with a frank armchair enjoyment and, sometimes, a little surprise.

A Positivist Retrospect.

George Washington, and Other American Addresses. By Frederic Harrison. (Macmillan.)

This volume is the fruit of a visit paid by Mr. Harrison to America in the course of last spring, during which he was called upon, in the Transatlantic fashion, to give a number of addresses to the members of various universities and literary societies. Appropriately enough, it opens with the Chicago address on the birthday of George Washington, the delivery of which was the primary object of the tour. Other discourses are upon such heroes of the Positivist "calendar" as King Alfred, Abraham Lincoln, Oliver Cromwell, and William the Silent; upon the more abstract topics of "Municipal Government," "Republicanism and Democracy," and "The Nineteenth Century," and—perhaps the most interesting of all—upon the speaker's "personal reminiscences" of the great men of the present century with whom he has lived and talked, and, for the most part, battled. Many of these subjects Mr. Harrison has, of course had occasion to handle elsewhere and more fully; but the lucid and trenchant estimates into which he has here managed to compress the results of much study and much thought have an interest of their own distinct from that of more elaborate and detailed work. As a Positivist, Mr. Harrison has always been fated to stand more or less in isolation from the main current of ideas outside the doors of his Church; and it is curious to notice that, although the isolation is certainly not less to-day than it was a decade ago, yet it is coming to depend on somewhat different barriers. If the sanguine Imperialists of the twentieth century dislike Mr. Harrison for his openly avowed aversion from military conquest and preference for a Republican form of government, they will, on the other hand, probably be more inclined than were their fathers to condone his contempt for parliamentary institutions, and even to sympathise with the stress which, in the true spirit of Comte, he is wont to lay upon the importance of dominating personalities as factors in history.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Harrison does not persuade us to be a Positivist; but he has our respect as a brave fighter and a stimulating thinker. He has taken his full share in the intellectual combats of half a century, and, as his great contemporaries pass away, his own position as a survivor becomes an interesting one. It cannot have been without a thrill that the young ladies of the Women's College, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, listened to one who could tell how he had spoken in the flesh with Comte and Mazzini, with Carlyle and Turgenef, with George Eliot and John Stuart Mill, names shining dimly to them out of an historic past. Not that Mr. Harrison's reminiscences are in themselves, for the most part, more than trivial. Carlyle he describes sitting by his fireside, exactly like Whistler's portrait of him, "wishing that many people and things 'might all be dawmed down to hale.'" Huxley he met in many a sparring match at the Metaphysical Society, where "he would fly at a Positivist with even more zest than at a bishop." He knows "how warm a heart, what fire of enthusiasm lay covered up, like a volcano under snow, beneath the dry, formal, antiquated official which the world saw as Mill." Turgenef he met carrying the shoes of some French girls in a brown-paper parcel from Versailles to the Rue de Madrid, and Victor Hugo, pontificating in his own salon, in appearance a stout, weather-beaten sea captain, bluff in manner, imperative in tone and gesture, hearty with his own family, and somewhat impatient with outside people. From a literary point of view, Mr. Harrison's best note is of Tennyson.

> He once told me how he came to write those magical lines in the "Princess":
>
> "Tears—idle tears—I know not what they mean."
>
> He had been wandering alone, he said, among the ruins of Tintern Abbey, thinking of the monks and their solitary lives in the epoch of its foundation, and then, looking up across the Wye, he saw its harvesters—girls, men, and boys gathering in their crops in the fulness of life and merriment. And the contrast of the old world and the new filled him with emotion, so that the lines came to him as a spontaneous inspiration, as if he were simply recalling some familiar song that haunted his memory.

What inspirations Tintern Abbey has given to poets and artists! We hope no one will compile them.

Other New Books.

The Tale of the Great Mutiny. By W. H. Fitchett. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

Mr. Fitchett has established himself as the popular historian of the empire. His easy, bright power of narrative appeals to boy and man. His new volume is a brief and popular narrative of the Indian Mutiny. Within its limitations it is a good narrative, written with picturesque selection and energy, and illustrated with maps and portraits of the leaders. One only regrets that portraits of the chief native leaders were not added. Even now, it is impossible to read without excitement the story of that epical struggle, diversified by details which are the essence of romance. Take the escape of Sir T. Metcalfe Deputy Commissioner of Delhi. Pursued from Delhi by native horse, his steed broke down, and a chance native hid him in a cave. The native flogged Metcalfe's steed out of sight, and when the pursuers, after questioning him, proposed to search the cave, he > burst out laughing, and raising his voice so that I [Metcalfe] must hear, he said: "Oh yes, search the cave. Do search it. But I'll tell you what you will find. You will find a great red devil in there; he lives up at the end of the cave. You won't be able to see him, because the cave turns at the end, and the devil always stands just round the turn, and he has a great long knife in his hand, and the moment your head appears round the corner he will slice it off, and then he will pull the body in to him and eat it. Go in; do go in—the poor devil is hungry. It is three weeks since he had anything to eat, and then it was only a goat. He loves men, does this red devil; and if you all go in he will have such a meal!"

They went in, single file. The leader's head peered round the corner, and Metcalfe smote it from the body. With a yell of terror they all fled. "Did you see him?" asked the native. "Do go back; he wants more than one." But they declined. Asked by Metcalfe why he had saved him, the native replied: "Because you are a just man." And the reason he gave for this opinion was that Metcalfe had once decided a case against him, which by concerted lying he had won in all the inferior Courts. "If you had given the case for me I would not have saved your life!" This fine story is not so undoubted as one could wish it. But it is a sample of the stirring things in the volume—things which could only happen in India.

John Chinaman, and a Few Others. By E. H. Parker. (Murray. 8s. net.)

Mr. Parker's book is based on his consular experiences in China; and its object is, not to give a scientific and systematised account of China or the Chinese, but to familiarise Westerns with the Chinese by frankly desultory sketches of the individual types which he has known. Of course he introduces what amount of system is possible by gathering the types under certain general headings in separate chapters. Nor does he confine himself exclusively to Chinese; the various races inhabiting or neighbouring China receive attention. It is an interesting book, as every record of personal experience among a quite strange people is bound to be, when it is made by an intelligent and friendly observer. And Mr. Parker, though he has no passion for John Chinaman, sympathises with him as a human being; and believes in the virtue of kinder treatment than Westerns are at present given to employing towards him. The coercion of China, he holds with Sir Robert Hart (most experienced of English officials in those parts), is bound to fail as an ultimate policy. You have sketches such as that of Chang Shu-shêng—a grizzled old Taiping, married to the sister of his conqueror, Li Hung Chang—whose "chief feature was a single jagged green tooth or tusk in the upper jaw, and he spat freely into your face as he addressed you." Or his Chinese teacher, Ou-yang the incorruptibly virtuous, yet mean exceedingly in private life; "he used to intrigue round his arch-enemy the 'boy' in order to get a meal gratis: furtively swallow opium pills to conceal the fact that he had once been an opium roué; grow purple in the face when bargaining with boatmen about a few copper cash; and catch rats for his dinner in order to make the coy hair grow. He was never tired of impressing on me the barbarism of my nature." And you have versions of classic Chinese poems, two to three thousand years old, which you can guess are tender and excellent in the original. A very instructively entertaining volume, with no aim at style, though not unliterary.

Digitized by Google

Sir Robert Murdoch Smith. By H. K. Dickeon. (Blackwood. 15s. net.)

FEW people can have any knowledge or recollection of the Halicarnassus Expedition, which was undertaken immediately after the Crimean War. Its object was not warfare, but the discovery of the famous mausoleum of Mausolus, Prince of Caria, which was erected in the fourth century B.C., and was probably destroyed in the Middle Ages by the Knights of St. John, when they built the castle at Budrum with the stones and sculptures of the ancient Halicarnassus. Major-General Sir Robert (then Lieutenant) Murdoch Smith was one of the Engineer officers chosen for this task, and among those who spent some time with the expedition were the artists Messrs. G. F. Watts and Val Prinsep. It was owing chiefly to Murdoch Smith's intuition that the site of the mausoleum was discovered, and the account of the excavations drawn from the young officer's letters home is as interesting as a romance. After the Halicarnassus Expedition, Murdoch Smith, who was at Malta, proposed the Cyrene Expedition to a city which was once the capital of a flourishing Greek colony, but has been unoccupied for more than a thousand years. The principal finds there were the Temples of Apollo and Dionysos, and when the business was successfully accomplished Murdoch Smith's next move was to Persia, where he was appointed to the Persian telegraph staff. The greater part of his life was thenceforward spent in Persia, though later on he was made Director-in-Chief of the Indo-European telegraphs. The fault of the book is a tendency to prolixity, which here and there weakens the narrative. The illustrations and index are good, and the maps and plans especially to be commended.

Travels Round Our Village. By E. G. Hayden. (Constable. 7s. 6d. net.)

THIS is one of those books of which, like books on gardening, we have had too many. To write amiably about one's village, and extract the humours of the quaint bodies therein, offers, like writing about flower-beds, a temptation which few amateurs of the pen can withstand. But old Biddy's sayings are surely worth recording for the amusement of all the world? Certainly; if one has the art to reproduce their flavour in type. Unhappily, few writers have this trifling gift; whereas many can take up a patronising pen and report Biddy sufficiently accurately for the satisfaction of themselves, who remember her tones. Miss (or Mrs.) Hayden's portly book has many rustic conversations in dialect, but their original character is rarely communicated. We have read pages and pages with no more than languid interest, and without seeing exactly why they should have been reprinted from the periodicals in which they, or their substance, appeared. There are, however, some very pleasing old country recipes for wine and cordials which are worth remembering. We cannot admire Mr. Leslie Brooks's pictures as much as we should like to.

The Adventures of Picklock Holes. By R. C. Lehmann. (Bradbury, Agnew & Co.)

THIS book is a reprint of contributions to Punch some years ago, when Sherlock Holmes was first attracting an attention which is to-day almost too excessive. Probably no fictional hero and no stories ever lent themselves more naturally to the parodist than Mr. Conan Doyle's detective and Dr. Watson's narrative of his exploits. Indeed, to a certain extent the burlesque is automatic; it writes itself. Mr. Lehmann's travesty is amusing, but it lacks that concentrated force which the best parody should possess. The same criticism applies to the perversion of Mr. Meredith in the same book, although a greater expenditure of brain has been brought to bear on it.

The Idler's Calendar. By G. L. Apperson. (Allen.)

MR. APPERSON'S little book is confessedly a collection of "turnovers" from the Globe, a form of writing in which many distinguished authors have won their way to ease of expression. But not many have reprinted their efforts. Mr. Apperson's essays are pleasant and neatly turned, touching upon such subjects as April, the Dancing Sun, Honeysuckle, Idleness, Autumn Haze, and Fireside Travels; and they show a pretty familiarity with the quieter authors. Somehow, however, a "turnover" is a better thing in the Globe than out of it. Mr. Apperson, in his next volume of essays, should, for a salutary change, try to say only those things that no one else would. The result would be less suitable "turnovers," but a better book.

THE stillness of old libraries, the warm tones of lecterns and stalls, the odour of leather bindings where books are few and good and old, make up the charm of Mr. John Willis Clark's work The Care of Books (Cambridge University Press, 42s.), which is nevertheless no impressionist or sentimental work, but a severe and scholarly essay on the development of libraries and their fittings from the earliest times to the end of the eighteenth century. We do not often meet with a book on which so much love and pains have manifestly been spent. Out of labour rather than design has come beauty, for alike in the development of its subject and its pictorial illustration this work is a treasure. Few people realise the pedigree of a set of bookshelves, still less do they imagine that this pedigree has interest and importance. Mr. Clark traces it historically and philosophically, and his endeavour to impart human interest to a great mass of facts is entirely successful.

If you want fine local colour without the embarrassment of a screech-advertised story in the foreground, just ask at your library for Mr. Paul Fountain's The Great Deserts and Forests of North America (Longmans, 9s. 6d. net). It is good to be told yet again of these vast regions — homes of silence and the wolf and the mocassin snake. The great swamps in the Southern States attracted Mr. Fountain, who deliberately chose to wander in the most desolate regions. Yet his book reminds us that man is vile. His description of Carson City twenty-five years ago is veiled, but it spells unnameable horrors. "And there were women here; oh, God! such women. No pen dare reveal the abominations . . . treated as excellent jokes to be rewarded by roars of laughter." A book of reality and America thoroughly worth reading.

Fiction.

The Novel of Autobiography.

Mousmé. By Clive Holland. (Pearson. 6s.)
For Love or Crown. By A. W. Marchmont. (Hutchinson. 6s.)
When the Land was Young. By Lafayette McLaws. (Constable. 6s.)
Our Lady of Deliverance. By John Oxenham. (Hutchinson. 6s.)
The Ambassador's Adventure. By Allen Upward. (Cassell. 6s.)
The Lover's Progress. Told by Himself. (Chatto. 6s.)
The Place of Dreams. By William Barry. (Sands. 6s.)
Romance of a Harem. Trans. by Clarence Forestier-Walker. (Greening. 6s.)

BEFORE the days of publishers' lists and mechanical romance, the writer's art was delightfully personal; it was ideal autobiography. To put himself into imaginary parts is for many a one the only way of living a life whose extinction he would regret.

The artist's autobiography is as often as not ex-personal in expression, though with personality in every line. The great artist has as many "I's" as the hydra had heads, and he can afford to stand outside any one of them and write of it "in the third person." Even so it will live, and he will feel it live. The smaller artist finds the outward form of autobiography less an accident than a necessity if he is to gain inspiration. That is the best apology that can be made for many a vigorous narrative in its grievous breaches of discipline. For there is a discipline even for the writer of autobiography. He is to be conceived, if a gentleman, as not, for instance, wearing the hearts of ladies on his sleeve. Yet in For Love or Crown, the baronet, who is both hero and historian, spares us scarcely a kiss or a nestle: "I felt that her love must have its course," he says. The hero and narrator of Our Lady of Deliverance is equally communicative. "I covered her face with kisses, until she pressed her rosy palms on my lips and broke away." The husband in Mousmé even affords a glimpse of the nuptial chamber, and puts on record his cook's surprise at finding the little Geisha "was a lady after all." There is no lack of English domestic sentiment in any of these three novels; they are, thank heaven! touchingly monogamous; Mr. Coventry Patmore could not angelicise woman more rosily than Messrs. Marchmont, Oxenham, and Holland. Their error lies in making the fond husbands of their dreams the showmen of their wives' love. Husbands with the incomes allotted to these by their benevolent creators have no excuse for publishing their bliss. Mr. Marchmont, who has erred before in this matter, amuses one as his imagination, like that of Mr. Anthony Hope, roves among the exalted ones of this poor planet, his heroine being the nominal heir of a German Duchy, though distressingly prosaic of conversation. Mr. Oxenham, who has found a novel in the Dreyfus case, with a Utopian variation on Devil's Island, is so obviously deficient in technique as to raise hope of an education (albeit one carried on in public). He errs apparently through ignorance, and atones by the charm of a pretty Denise. Mr. Holland infuses so much grace and tenderness into his creation, the Japanese wife who in these sequent pages visits England and becomes a mother, that one hesitates to debit his talent with imperfect manners, but rather with a forgetfulness of one of those little devices which excuse a candour that is only proper when a man writes of himself or with the remoteness of the historian.

Digitized by Google

Of the sins of invented autobiography the sin of an excessive copiousness of information is one of the most common. Mr. Marchmont's self-conscious baronet quotes verbatim the dreadfully noble letter he wrote, to be delivered to his Celia if his rival killed him. Mr. McLaws, writing in the person of a Carolina captain in James the Second's days, is as explicit as Robinson Crusoe, although gaudier in his "sensations." We have one of those miraculous girls who masquerade in man's attire; she is a Crockettress, for all she comes from America and has fenced with the boldest duke that ever disguised as a buccaneer. Indian torture, Spanish torture, the city of the Chocktaws, Morgan the pirate, and, as a wind-up, the Grand Monarque, compose a ragoût as stirring as was ever made by mortal cook. Defoe and pepper, that is the method; but autobiography should relieve us of the tedium of what everybody said (except their profanities). As it is, the autobiographical captain has a marvellous memory. The boys who read him will be direly happy; the stay-at-home of forty may be slightly bored.

The captain's prodigal memory is matched by the lover's and that of Mr. Upward's ambassador. The ambassador talks over three hundred crown octavo pages at one recital. He has assisted at the rescue of a little King of Navarre from Anarchists, and there are reasons why he should hold his tongue about it. The ingenuity of the tale is indisputable, but it as indisputably exposes by unconscious parody the inherent absurdity of the Hope-Dumas romance, where the antics of Renaissance heroism are to be observed in frockcoated gentlemen of the nineteenth or twentieth century. Defoe is nearer to Mr. McLaws's extravagance than to such growths.

Why? Because there is a residue of the real in Mr. McLaws. "I tugged at my arms until the sharp fetters cut deep into my flesh and I could feel the blood trickle down my hand . . . until I longed to be a dog, that I might lap my own blood." Thirst is finely imagined there; one must remember the man who was thirsty for his own blood. At the same time one demands of autobiography many touches not less vivid and even more intimate, though less violent, than this. And that is where fictional autobiography is woefully deficient. A Veronica Verdant (vide a recent novel) may head a chapter, "I am Kissed," and advertise a cosmetic in a footnote, but abruptness of self-exposure may fail of value through the insignificance of the exposed. It is possible, indeed, to expose even virtue in such a way as to deface it. Miss Esther Summerson's humility, for instance, has ever, through the intolerable stress on it, seemed neighbourly to Uriah Heep's. Thus is an ineptitude of Dickens punished by his genius. His Copperfield, however, offers Romance an enduring type of excellence in gentle autobiography. Here's a man never too heroic to write of himself with propriety. Neither is the lover in The Lover's Progress. He has a large nose; he is jilted; he squanders his substance. Of all the books before us it has most air of being a true book. The writer knows his France—France of the Terrible Year and later—and his sketch of a Parisian Theatre of Varieties is quite brilliant. The lover surrounds each of his three passions with a nimbus; yet is there a sobriety in his writing that bears witness to the crowding world of work and interests which forces even grief to acknowledge its impermanence.

The accident of this article brings into prominence Father Barry's "De Profundus Clamavi," the first of four characteristic stories which make up a volume of reprints. It is a rather good example of a story failing, through thrift of information, from producing the effect at which it aims. The priest who relates it has made the acquaintance of a modern sorcerer, who obtains manifestations from the world behind the veil. But where the sorcerer would fain see a forgiving face he sees only an old fault—his own—and its horrid sequel re-enacted before his eyes. There is suggested a more intellectual view of this marvel than commonly redeems its threadbare relatives of fiction and legend; but Father Barry has not artistically justified himself in it. His mist of glamour is but gradually unfurled; in the space of this story it has no time to encompass us.

If the assertion of the "I" in Father Barry's short story is met with by a perfunctory smile of incredulity, the smile broadens perceptibly in reading Romance of a Harem, which professes, with touching vehemence, to be true. We skimmed the original some years ago in an Algiers yellow-back called Mémoires d'une Circassienne, since when it has found the more pompous title of Dans l'Ombre du Harem. The narrator was frankly in love with Prince Halim, and avers that she was cognisant of the plot to dethrone Abdul Aziz, and witnessed his death, which occurred after a murderous violence had been done on him. She is in respect of her position such an indefinite mixture of a Nobody and a Somebody that she would seem, were she a little less French and vulgar, a sort of Spirit of the Harem. She views in the harem the ideal existence for woman. Among Moslems she discerns true honour and the riches of Aladdin. Yet it makes her suddenly sad to sit on a sack of pearls, and one likes her all the better for it. One feels that she has been "written up" (or down), but that a substratum remains which is herself and her experiences, and worth encountering.

And so good bye to the novel of autobiography, but not without a final word of comment. First, most novels in "I" should be re-written in "He" or "She." Secondly we may remind our novelists that such old servants as served the Master of Ballantrae are still not to be despised as narrators, though they may forget a few caresses. Thirdly, that it is not a bad thing for the hero-autobiographer to impress us with the belief that his ostensible business is the celebration of a hero he deems better than himself. We learn effectively enough that William Brower rose to the top, but he called his book Eben Holden.

Digitized by Google

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE MAKING OF A MARCHIONESS. BY FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

A pleasant, sympathetic story of modern life. The scene is laid in an English country house, where a marquis is the centre of matrimonial interest on the part of both the English and Americans present. Among the guests was Emily Fox-Seton, poor, beautiful, and "nice," and—but we will not disclose the plot. Emily "was such a simple, normal-minded creature that it took but little to brighten the aspect of life for her, and to cause her to break into her good-natured, child-like smile." (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

THE USURPER. BY W. J. LOCKE.

A straightforward, well-told story, with the love and disillusionment of a poet as one of the lesser threads of interest. The Usurper is a man who, amassing fabulous wealth, uses it for the benefit of others. But the property that formed the foundation of his fortune was feloniously acquired, and the time comes when he makes public confession of his crime—and wins something. Mr. Locke has the gift of handling melodramatic situations delicately. (Lane. 6s.)

FANCY FREE. BY EDEN PHILLPOTTS.

A medley of verses, sketches, stories, and satires, illustrated by Mr. J. A. Shepherd, Mr. Sime, and others. The volume is in Mr. Phillpotts's humorous manner. He has even parodied Poe's "Bells," calling it, of course, "The Bills":

> Hear the postman with the bills—little bills!
> What a secret misery the sight of them instils!

(Methuen. 6s.)

THE BALLET DANCER. BY MATILDE SERAO.

Two stories. The second is called "On Guard." An "at home" portrait of the distinguished authoress—very determined, very busy—forms the frontispiece to the volume. Carmela "possessed three pairs of tights, and had not bought a new pair for a long time; the oldest pair was so worn and discoloured that by the light of the footlights it looked quite white, and she could no longer wear it. She still kept it, however, for economical reasons." (Heinemann. 6s.)

DUMB. BY THE HON. MRS. WALTER FORBES.

A novel of modern Scottish life, with a strong and interesting story running through it. The Prologue tells of Castle Craig, of Sir Douglas, and his wife, who died, leaving a son. Towards the end of the story there is fighting. "I—I am afraid it is bad news," he said slowly; "still, you know I don't much believe in these telegrams; and I have wired up to a friend of mine at the War Office." (Chatto. 6s.)

THE FAILURE OF SUCCESS. BY LADY MABEL HOWARD.

A modern story, dealing mainly with Rhoda Webster and her love affairs. Her father had "amassed a large fortune, and had left it all, absolutely and unconditionally, to his daughter on her reaching the age of nineteen." The motto on the title-page is from an old Persian prayer—"O God, be merciful to the wicked; to the good Thou hast already been merciful in making them good." (Longmans. 6s.)

MEN v. DEVILS. BY T. KINGSTON CLARKE.

A City novel, not the City of Wood-street and Cheapside warehouses, but the City of company promoters, and "startling realistic revelations of Stock Exchange practice." Woolfe Finklestein, the millionaire, was "a man of the typical Hebrew type—frail, lank, and bony," whose career had begun in the Seven Dials, where he lent money. Here are a few of the chapter headings: "A Little Deal in Milwaukees," "Hamer's Shocking Attempt to Blackmail," "Shylock Claims His Bond," "Finklesteins are Ruined." (Sands. 6s.)

A BANKER'S LOVE STORY. BY ARCHIBALD MCILROY.

It was on a snowy January morning that Marcus Gray entered the service of the Spindleton Union Bank. That is the keynote. The story deals with the vicissitudes of a bank official's life in City head offices and country branches. Woman comes into the story after office hours, which, as observation of life, is correct. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

RICHARD HALPIN. BY MORGAN ROBERTSON.

"A Romance of the New Navy." Book I. is of school life; Richard, being accused of an offence of which he is innocent, goes to sea. His adventures follow. Book IV. is founded upon actual events. "It is night on the Santiago blockade—a hot July night. . . . There are three lines to this blockade: an outside semi-circle of the heavy ships—turreted fighters, with range of gun-fire greater than the radius . . ." (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

TATTY. BY PETER FRASER.

The sub-title is "a study of a young girl." Her name was Tatty, and she was born in Owen's Buildings, near the Angel. In a preface the author writes "a few words" (it is really eight pages) about "the two main psychological problems which are raised by the following story." Of Tatty herself he says: "Her spiritual Ego was united to one man and her material Ego to another." "Hence," says Mr. Peter Fraser, "there were tears." (Treherne. 6s.)

SWEETHEART MANETTE. BY M. THOMPSON.

A mild, American novel, by the author of Alice of Old Vincennes. One of the characters is a novelist. The Sweet Sister was a great success—"chiefly, perhaps, on account of some law-suits it stirred up between certain citizens of Bay St. Louis and its publishers." (Macqueen. 6s.)

IN SEARCH OF MADEMOISELLE. BY G. GIBBS.

Historical adventure. Period: the Huguenot colonisation of Florida. The hero is an Englishman who twice rescues "Mademoiselle" from the hands of the Spaniards. Mr. Gibbs takes the writing of historical romance seriously. In a "Note" he says: "I have carefully read the original or authorised editions of the writings of Hakluyt, René de Landonnière, and a number of others." But has Mr. Gibbs breathed the breath of life into his characters? That is the question. (Hutchinson. 6s.)

We have also received Farden Ha', by Joanna E. Wood (Hurst & Blackett); The Canker Worm, by G. M. Fenn (Chatto, 6s.); Great Lowlands, by Annie E. Holdsworth (Hodder, 6s.); A Younger Son, by V. Fetherstonhaugh (Downey, 6s.); The Woman of Orchids, by Marvin Dana (Treherne, 6s.); A Parfit Gentil Knight, by Charlton Andrews (Chicago: McClurg, 6s.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage, One Halfpenny, Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscription, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

What's "What's What"?

Two ambitions mark the literary age: the ambition of editing and the ambition of self-expression. The one gives us texts and books of reference, the other gives us poems, essays, and a large class of novels. The two activities are poles asunder, and usually employ very different minds. It has been reserved for Mr. Harry Quilter to try to join them in one work. His What's What, which now oppresses our hands by its weight and our mind by its scope, is as much a budget of his opinions as a collection of facts. Explore where you will the Alphabetical What, you shall find yourself ambushed by the Quilterian Ego. The very title is tremendous when you find that it connotes all whats, and not merely the knowing little whats contemplated in the verbal phrase ot everyday use. Obviously it follows the analogy of Who's Who; but that title connotes only persons, and only persons in whom the public is interested. We now expect to see on our table a Where's Where, which would be no bad title for a gazetteer, and a When's When, which will surely be the title of the next dictionary of dates. Even a Why's Why, dealing with the hither side of scientific questions may conceivably arrive. But "What's What"! Here, indeed, is ambition, for, as we have said, the title must be interpreted in the Quilterian sense, and in the Quilterian sense it has no bounds. Ammonia is a what, Pickles are a what, the Greek and Latin literatures are whats, and Mr. Hardy, Mr. Meredith, Omar Khayyam, and Robert Browning and London and Mexico and Oriental Music and Bachelorhood or Marriage? are whats. On the other hand the Quilterian scope has its puzzles. In a book so entitled we expect to find information on such obvious subjects as Vaccination, Hooliganism, Shakespeare, Röntgen Rays, and Submarines, none of which seem to be treated. If there is a subject on which the users of What's What are entitled to information it is surely on our friends the enemy—the Boers. But under Boers we are referred to "War in South Africa," and when we turn to the W section we find that promise unfulfilled. The most insistent fact of the time is crowded out, and we can only suppose (not without sympathy) that the inclusion of Writer's Cramp may be taken as a silent explanation of the omission. For, if anyone has a claim to suffer from writer's cramp it must be Mr. Quilter to-day. He has produced these 1,228 double-column pages since he began work at Mullion Cove, Cornwall, on Sunday, the 2nd of October, 1900, though the actual writing began five days later in Bryanston-square. For Mr. Quilter is nothing if not autobiographical, and lest we, or posterity, should imperfectly grasp the genesis of this amazing volume he provides us with a water-colour sketch of Mullion Cove, by his own hand, beneath which is the momentous inscription "Where I Started What's What." To-day only the surf whitens and roars round these rocks, only the kittiwakes . . . but we will restrain ourselves. The first edition of What's What has consumed six-and-twenty tons of paper, and contains, according to our reckoning, very nearly 900,000 words, of which Mr. Quilter himself pleads guilty to 350,000. All the matter and illustrations are new with the exception of a drawing of the Palazzo Dandolo, "an early design by myself, which appeared in the long out-of-print édition de luxe of Preferences, 1892." These are the main historical facts about What's What. Goodness! No. We had nearly overlooked the statement that "the final batch of copy was sent to press on Thursday, October 10, at 6 p.m." And to think that we—we ourselves—were at that very hour sending to press the last batch of an issue of the ACADEMY. Was it a fine night, or a wet one? What was the price of soles? One short month ago, and all is a blank!

What's What's What? The burden of answering our own question is still upon us. On his title-page, and facing his signed portrait, Mr. Quilter prints these lines by Browning:

> Mankind i' the main have little wants, not large:
> I, being of will and power to help, i' the main,
> Mankind, must help the least wants first.
>
> Only continue patient while I throw,
> Delver-like, spadeful after spadeful up,
> Just as truths come, . . .
> What one spread fails to bring, another may.
> In goes the shovel and out comes scoop—as here!

As here. And so we are supplied with information and comment on Accident Insurance, the Privileges and Responsibilities of the Adult, the Actor as Gentleman, Agnostics, Agony, The "Sweet Reasonableness" of the American Civil Service, Aniline Dyes, Anthony Hope, the Apocrypha, the Aquarium at Westminster, and Article Writing. We are only brushing the skirts of these rolling veldts of information, and already we pant. Let us say at once that much real information and entertainment await the reader—or shall we say the skimmer?—of these pages. But he will be wise to take things as he finds them—information, opinion, facts, and fancies. The book is a vast medley, and not the least part of its charm is that in it, as in life, the unexpected is always happening. The facts are often incomplete, and the opinions are often such as you will scout; but sometimes the facts and opinions are both sound and interesting. Mr. Quilter can write of Dean Farrar: "It is nearly half a century since he wrote his first, and, probably, his best, book, Eric; or, Little by Little, a tragic story of boyhood," and omit all mention of his Lives of Christ and St. Paul, his Eternal Hope, or, indeed, a single one of his Scriptural and theological writings. The literary judgments of all kinds sprinkled through the volume are, no douht, by different hands, and they vary considerably in merit. Mr. Quilter draws heavily on his experience as an editor and an art critic. Under the heading Editor he indulges in the following not very amusing statement of what he considers is the moral code of editors:

> All articles are too long, and most should not be written.
> News, rather than opinion.
> Avoid a series.
> Suspect criticism, and leave it out if possible.
> Don't let your contributors be personal; that's an Editorial privilege.
> An Editor does not argue, he asserts.
> All contributions should be cut occasionally—keeps the staff in order.
> An Editor should be grumpy—that's business.
> Editors are invisible—except by appointment, and sometimes then!
> Editors have enemies, but no friends. The former are persons of the lowest character; the latter, if they existed, would be the angelic host.
> No contribution is better than the paper deserves.
> A contributor should always be thanked (even if he be dismissed), but never praised.
> Everyone is to work all day and every day if required—he does it himself!
> An Editor's judgment is infallible. His pen, however, sometimes "slips."

Digitized by Google

Never apologise—except to insult.

Mistakes are inevitable, mis-statements excusable, compensation inconceivable.

Full acquaintance with the law of libel is necessary.

Never see Clergymen, Inventors, or Educators.

Never take a favour.

Be liberal with your best men, and mean with your worst.

Bully your staff—but discreetly.

Have at least one, if possible two "close" days in every week.

Read the provincial papers.

Always notice, but never mention a rival periodical.

Praise actors, picture-dealers, dress-makers, politicians of your own party, sailors, sportsmen, popular novelists, and music-hall singers. "Take it out of" men of science, religion, literature, and art; these last only make good copy when they do wrong.

Have a waste-paper basket like a bucket, a constitution like a horse, a revolving arm-chair, and a heart like the nether millstone.

Glancing through the C's—Clacton-on-Sea, Clairvoyance, Condy's Fluid, Consols, Contents of a Christmas Number—we find an article on the Contributor, in which "cutting" by editors is gently explained as a necessary evil: "The present writer speaks feelingly on this point from personal experience; Lords, Divines, Professors of History and Science, Story-tellers and Essayists of every sort, having at one time or another scolded, abused, and upraided him for this Procrustean offence, this scandalous mutilation."

Autobiographical allusion of this kind wells up everywhere. Not very long ago we attempted to give an account of the genesis and growth of the Omar Khayyam cult, but we confess that our summary took no notice of some facts set forth in Mr. Quilter's encyclopædic apologia. Thus: "We yield to none in our admiration of FitzGerald's poem, for in reality it is FitzGerald's more than Omar's. And, indeed, many years before the founding of the Omar Khayyam Club we printed, quite unlawfully, the plain, unannotated text of the poem bound in brown cardboard, and printed on sugar-loaf paper, in big Old English type—all that there was of the most æsthetic. Possibly the club grew through this very edition. For we remember, with a certain amount of amusement, that several copies thereof were applied for by a gentleman, who shall be nameless, afterwards very prominent in the cult of Omar. Possibly it was in accordance with the principles of the old Persian Bohemian that no payment of base coin accompanied this transaction."

Literary and artistic subjects have much space alloted to them, and we leave readers to accept or dispute the free criticisms passed on living novelists, merely remarking that Mr. Quilter is evidently out of sympathy with what may be called the novel of thought as distinct from the novel of story-telling. We are to believe that Mr. Meredith is "rather a cold-blooded person" who "has not any flesh-and-blood narrative that he wants to tells us, but in front of him a set of puppets into whom, one by one, he breathes the breath of showman life," and that his novels will remain as marvellous specimens of epigrammatic observation in the England of the nineteenth century, but they have not, in our opinion, any chance of life for their drama or their narrative."

We demur strongly, too, to the advice offered to Mr. Gissing, who is here told—as he is persistently and absurdly told elsewhere—to put more sunshine into his novels. If there is one novelist among us who has chosen his path, and kept it, it is Mr. Gissing, and his choice of "depressing" themes is not, as some critics imagine, a freak or a habit from which he can be weaned without injury to his executive ability. Mr. Gissing draws life where and as he has seen it, and will draw it in no other way; while hundreds of novelists are ready to visit casually any field, or produce any emotional climate which the critic or the market may demand.

With all its vagaries and vanities, What's What contains hundreds of good articles. It is evident, however, that two circumstances have controlled inclusions and exclusions in What's What more than they ought to have done: first, Mr. Quilter's personal interests, which, nevertheless, give the egotistic spice to the pudding; and, secondly, miscalculation of the number of subjects to be allotted to each letter. The half-way point in the book brings us only to the middle of F. The foreseen result occurs. Whereas 160 pages are given to B, only 5 are spared for W, and whereas C obtains 161 pages, T is fobbed off with 14. These differences cannot be accounted for in any other way. For reasons which it is perhaps not difficult to guess, Mr. Quilter has rushed his work through at top speed, and it is clear that the five days of preparation at Mullion Cove had better have been extended to fifty. As it is, Mr. Quilter has produced a Preference, not a Reference, Book.

Things Seen.

The Bookseller.

The windows of the bookshop, stacked high with attractive volumes, arrested me. Slowly I moved past them till I reached the open door. It was an invitation to enter. I strolled round the counters, dipping into a volume here and there, quite enjoying myself, and reflecting how many books there are in the world one does not want to read. Presently a voice at my elbow asked if there was anything I required, and, as the salesman spoke, the scene between Spinoza and the Amsterdam bookseller, narrated by Mr. Zangwill, which I had lately been reading, came into my mind. You remember! Spinoza's favourite book-shop was in the Spuistraat, where among "the old folios and the new Latin publications and the beautiful productions of the Elzevirs of Amsterdam" he found safety and delectation:

> "A good book thou has there," said the bookseller. "By Musæus, the Jena Professor. The Tractatus Theologico-Politicus ad Veritatis Lancem Examinatus—weighed in Truth's balance, indeed. A title that draws. They say 'tis the best of all the refutations of the pernicious and poisonous Tractate."
>
> "Of which I see sundry copies here, maskel in false titles."
>
> "'Sh! Forbidden fruit is always in demand. But so long as I supply the antidote too——"
>
> "Needs fruit an antidote?"

Well, I am not Spinoza, and this assistant at my elbow was not the learned Amsterdam bookseller. But, as he desired to know what "I required," I considered, and said: "Have you Renan's St. Paul?" "We don't stock it, sir," he answered. I suggested that he might be able to procure it for me. "Certainly." With that he produced a pencil and a piece of paper, and began to write. I suggested that Renan was not spelt with a V. He made the alteration, and then, doubtless, feeling that his reputation for universal knowledge had not come untarnished from the ordeal, he said with a pleasant confidence: "Paul! let me see; he was a great traveller, was he not, sir?" "He travelled a great deal," I answered courteously, "but he is better known as the apostle."

The Schoolmistress.

That part of the Irish coast has always attracted me. And though to-day the clinging mist hid everything twenty yards away, I lounged on the rail of the lighthouse and smoked a pipe with great satisfaction. Below me a tiny coaster swung lazily at her moorings, the skipper, in a pair of carpet slippers, reading his newspaper by the galley; while to seaward I could hear the boom of fog-signals on the Copelands and an infernal din of bells, sirens, and tin pots as benighted vessels edged their way in fear and trembling along that rock-sown coast.

Digitized by Google

As I smoked and watched, a darker patch gradually disengaged itself from the grey in front, and I made out the sails of a lugger running for the harbour. Wind and tide were both against her, and as she beat up for the entrance, one caught only a glimpse of her masthead above the leaping waves. Already a little knot of fishermen were gathered at the landing-place to watch her approach. "She'll be from the Island," said one, staring under his hand, and then, as she came nearer: "Aye, it's Kelly's boat; I know her by the patched lug."

We could see her plainly now as she ran into smooth water under the wall; her bows were littered with sacks of potatoes; a man in a white beard stood by the mast, with a boat-hook in his hand. "Faith," said a voice behind me, "if that isn't the new schoolmistress aboard! She's fair mad for the sea, they say": and as the sail dropped I caught a glimpse of scarlet amongst the shining oilskins of the crowd in the stern. The next minute the boat bumped against the steps, and the schoolmistress sprang lightly ashore.

Through the fog the hooting of sirens sounded louder than ever.

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE re-publication of the late J. J. Weiss's Lectures on Molière, given at the Athénce in 1866, forms an interesting volume. Weiss was an important figure among the brilliant journalists of his day. Are we all getting dreadfully old, or is the world going to the dogs, or what has happened that journalism and literature seem so much more brilliant fifty years ago than to-day? In France I find the same striking dearth of genius as in England. It has been said that the severe censure of the Press under the Second Empire produced such finished journalists as Weiss, Prévost Paradol, Scherer, &c., when it was necessary to acquire the art of suggesting much and saying little. Certainly when you turn back to the old dramatic feuilleton of Weiss, and compare it with the dramatic feuilleton of Sarcy or M. Faquet—dullest of mediocre writers—or even with the polished and popular M. Larroumet, we have to admit that they did some things fifty years ago better than to-day. Weiss's style in these lectures is fluent and limpid, a notable sample of clear, elegant, and excellent French prose. Elsewhere he is often full of charming humour. But let me here insert an amusing personal anecdote of the illustrious journalist in which humour was lamentably absent. About twelve years ago, when I came to settle in Paris, I had a letter of introduction to M. Weiss. He was then old, half paralysed, and librarian in the Palace of Fontainebleau. Here he had delightful rooms overlooking the famous Cour d'Adieu, and he invited me to lunch. I spent a pleasant morning and day with him about the grounds and galleries of Fontainebleau talking of vanished literary features of Paris, I questioning him about the different great men he had known. Towards evening, as we leisurely strolled to the station, the talk turned on Daudet. I praised the writer with my guide's approbation. But when it came to the writer's physique, and I referred to his picturesque and beautiful head of Provençal poet, Weiss grew sombre, morose, and fidgetty. He did not like it, clearly. At last his endurance gave way, and to my stupefaction he faced me in a kind of dry protestation: "But do you know I, too, when I was young, was most beautiful. I also had a poet's head, but a Flemish poet's. I had golden locks and clear fresh cheeks, beautiful beaming blue eyes, and a blond, vaporous moustache." I stared, for an uglier old man I had never seen. However, my obvious duty to my host was to be perfidious and polite, so I said gravely: "It is very evident." He believed me, adjusted his coat-collar with what fatuity a stiff and trembling arm permitted, and exclaimed: "Oh, I am old now, but I was once the handsome J. J. Weiss." Shortly afterwards I had occasion to speak to one who knew him intimately in youth, and was told that Weiss was always incomparably ugly, dirty, and untidy. So strangely may a man of intellect cherish illusions about himself.

Le Mirage, by Mme. Jean Bertheroy, is not a particularly brilliant study of modern Parisian life for the author of what was really a remarkably brilliant evocation of Pompeiian life in the Danseuse de Pompeii, that appeared in the Revue de Paris some years ago—a capricious and delightful tour de force which raised expectations Mme. Bertheroy has not since fulfilled. I wonder why it is that when modern French writers wish to portray (or, perhaps, unconsciously portray) a perfect cad, they invariably choose a nobleman. There is nothing to prevent a roué from being a gentleman, but these titled gallants of modern French fiction are very dreadful indeed. When the enriched burgess in Le Mirage entertains the nobility, we know perfectly well that the sparkling young viscount will conduct himself on the second page so as to deserve a kicking. The engineer, whom the heroine eventually marries and by whom she is afterwards nobly rescued from the evil designs of the titled cad, is a model of all the virtues. The characterisation is not distinguished, and I hardly know whether to be more amazed at the quickness and coarse quality of the heroine's temptation, or the rapidity of her triumph. It is doubtful if a woman, happily married, could fall so readily because a viscount, in the beau sabreur fashion, brutally embraces her, and, having done so, could find moral buoyancy enough to rise so quickly above error.

Much more interesting and fresh is George Beaume's study of Provençal provincials lost in Paris. Les Robinsons de Paris is a mordant satire on provincial ambition. Small proprietors who count themselves big people in Provence suffer endless humiliations in their efforts to pass as somebodies in Paris. They lead with lugubrious unsuccess a little Provençal colony in Paris, and of course we have the troubadour, the idler, the guitar-twanger with conquering moustache, the eternal exploiter of and sponger on woman. A Frenchman in a modern comedy, complaining bitterly of the effusiveness of his wife, cries: "Good heavens, one would think I was a tzigan." And Abel, the violinist, being something of a tzigan, is loved to distraction by the little wood engraver and designer, Estelle, a pathetic figure with much Southern charm and grace. Her unhappy marriage, with the bitter deceptions of undying animal love which tragically survives esteem and affection, constitutes the tragedy of the colony. But the whole group is wonderfully well cast and characterised. What a pack of humbugs and failures; and all the men, except Hugues, the young and ardent lover of a brave and radiant little Provençale, happily named Claire, unmitigated brutes. Verily, it is not a study to send a woman to Provence in search of a husband, and it is not often in a French book that one finds so many husbands roughly informing their wives that they are their masters. It is surprising how much colour and variety in sin and suffering the author has gathered into one little corner of Paris: pride overthrown, free love happily mated and virtuous, married wretchedness, adultery—all depicted with art and restraint and not a hint of coarseness—the charlatan senator, the deceptive hope of the colony of his compatriots, the bogus society of the Pomme d'Amour, lying, avarice, rascality of every kind, and the central note of it the animal, instinctive clinging of man to unworthy woman and woman to unworthy man.

H. L.

Digitized by Google

Kate Greenaway.

THE little paragraph in the papers a week ago stating simply that Kate Greenaway was dead must have come as a shock to thousands of people. One had never thought of death in connection with this delicate and joyous artist. Her name had called up for so long only pleasant, sunny associations: memories of green meadows with grave little girls and boys a-maying; quiet, restful rooms with tiny fireplaces, daffodils in blue vases on the high mantelpieces, and grave little girls and boys a-playing; and trim village streets, where everything was well-kept and well-swept, and all the roofs were red and all the garden gates and fences green, and more grave little girls carried dolls, and more grave little boys rolled hoops, and very young mothers with high waists gossiped together over their grave little babies' infinitesimal heads. Some such scenes as these have for twenty years been rising before one whenever Kate Greenaway's name was heard, bringing with them a gentle breath of ancient repose and simplicity and a faint scent of potpourri. And now the hand that devised this innocent communism of quaintness and felicity, this juvenile Arcadia, is still for ever!

For some years Miss Greenaway has not been the power that once she was. Her greatest triumphs were in the early eighties, when she illustrated Jane and Ann Taylor's Original Poems, and wrote and illustrated verses of her own writing, and put forth every Christmas a little almanack, with scenes fitting to every month, and delicate and dainty borders of the old-world flowers she loved best. It might almost be said that she invented the daffodil. That was the time when flowers were being newly discovered, and while the æsthetes were worshipping the sunflower and the lily Miss Greenaway was bidding the cheeriest little daisies spring from the grass and the chubbiest little roses burst from the bushes, and teaching thousands of uninitiated eyes how beautiful the daffodil is. Wordsworth had done so before, it is true; but between Wordsworth and Kate Greenaway how wide a gulf of stuffy taste was fixed—the forties, the fifties, the sixties, and the seventies! Kate Greenaway came like a fresh southern breeze after a fog. The æsthetes were useful, but they were artificial; they never attained to her open-air radiances. In the words of a critic whom I was reading somewhere the other evening, Kate Greenaway newly dressed the children of England; and the effects of her influence will probably never be lost. And to a great extent she re-furnished England too. There is not an intelligent upholsterer or furniture dealer in the country at this moment whose warehouses do not bear witness to Miss Greenaway's unobtrusive, yet effectual, teaching. She was the arch-priestess of Happy Simplicity.

As an illustrator of dramatic stories, such as the domestic tragedies set forth of the Sisters Taylor, or Mr. Bret Harte's Queen of Pirate Isle, or The Pied Piper of Hamelin, Miss Greenaway was not quite successful. Her genius bent rather to repose than action; or, at least, to any action more complex than skipping or dancing, picking flowers, crying, or taking tea. (No one in the whole history of art has drawn more attractive tea-tables.) Drama was beyond her capacity, and her want of sympathy with anything unhappy or forceful also unfitted her. Her pictures prove her the soul of gentleness. Had she set out to draw a tiger it would have purred like the friendliest tabby; nothing could induce her pencil to abandon its natural bent for soft contours and grave kindlinesses. Hence her crones were merely good-natured young women doing their best—and doing it very badly—to look old; her witches were benevolent grandmothers. To illustrate was not her métier. But to create—that she did to perfection. She literally made a new world where sorrow never entered—nothing but the momentary sadness of a little child—where the sun always shone, where ugliness had no place, and life was always young. No poet has done more than this. It seems to me that among the sweet influences of the nineteenth century Kate Greenaway stands very high. The debt we owe to her is beyond payment; but I hope that some memorial will be considered. Randolph Caldecott has a memorial in the crypt of St. Paul's; Lewis Carroll in the Great Ormond Street Children's Hospital; Kate Greenaway must have one too.

E. V. LUCAS.

Memory: an Art or an Instinct?

SINCE the middle of last century, when civilisation began to become complex and the burden of things to remember rather too heavy to bear, well-meaning thinkers have been devising systems of mnemonics. They have been endeavouring, that is to say, to give memory artificial aids. A few of these systems we studied at the times of their publication, and had forgotten them; but, behold! here are they all again, blent, with additions, into a synthesis by Mr. Eustace H. Miles. It would be impossible to overpraise the ingenuity and the industry with which Mr. Miles has compiled his work, How to Remember (Warne); but that is the most we can say in its favour. Let us give a sample of what we are invited to "cram" from nearly every one of his 265 pages:

> XVIII. Now look at the list again (below), and let us suppose that you want to remember those five Headings about "the Romans themselves"—viz., the Senate, Unity, Character, Organisation, Father's power in the Family. How is this to be done?
>
> The Loisette or Link-System will be applied first of all. We want to link these together into a single firm chain. I will give one way here, leaving the explanations for Section XXIII.
>
> Senate*—sanity—Unity:
> Unity*—one man—many parts—actor*—Character:
> Character*—to carry—a barrel-organ—Organisation:
> Organisation*—far-reaching organisation—Father's power:
> Father's power*.
>
> Read this through slowly and on the principles laid down in Section XV., realising each main Heading as you come to it. Then take it backwards. Then try it by yourself, and strengthen the weak Links (e.g., a barrel-organ and to carry) by practice.

We imagine that anyone who could assimilate and remember a book written in this strain can have no need for aids to memory. Already he must be gifted with a power of recalling all the details of his past equal to that with which the elephant is supposed to be endowed.

We have not, however, set out to criticise Mr. Miles's book. That were a task quite beyond us. What we rather seek to do is to look into an entertaining question which the book suggests. Constantly we hear of some person that he has a bad memory, and often we hear of some other that his memory is wonderful. Usually this is a superficial view. If we enquire into any particular case, we shall almost certainly find that the person to whom one attributes a bad memory is a person whose interests are not one's own. For example, if one is concerned about the literature and the history of political economy, one would not reap much benefit from a conversation on the subject with a Scotch farmer, although, in all probability, the farmer had the doctrines of Adam Smith driven into him at school and college. Contrariwise, oneself would be at a disadvantage in relation to the farmer if the conversation turned upon the exact dates of the hard winters during the last forty years. In short, all persons, excepting such as have softening of the brain or other malady of the mind, remember about the subjects in which they are interested, and forget about the subjects in which they are not; and the person with the

* Cp. Shakespeare, "And one man in his time plays many parts."

Digitized by Google

"wonderful memory" is simply the person, like Mr. Gladstone, whose interests are many.

Still, that does not by any means probe to the bottom of the subject with which Mr. Miles deals so earnestly. What is memory? Is it a reawakened vibration in the mind-stuff which was originally caused by the impact of an experience? It is; but how is the vibration recalled? There is one category of answers from which many interesting cases could be given. We will indicate a few of the simplest kind. If one has travelled in the East, scenes of the Orient will be instantly recalled when one saunters through the tropical garden in a London park. If one sails through Loch Lomond, and notices the mist on the mountains and the ripple on the water, all the incidents of some grand day's sport on some other Scotch lake, incidents apparently lost, will flash vividly across the mind. Some peculiar perfume in a ball-room, however unconcernedly one may enter, will instantly fan into flame the unregarded embers of a romance seemingly long dead and buried. There are instances of what may be called memory by association. What are we to make of memories of the other kind? How are we to account for the fact that there is many a person who, having heard a complicated piece of music for the first time, can go home and reproduce it all, quite accurately, on a pianoforte? This seems direct memory, as distinct from memory by association of perceptions; but it is not really so. What seems a miracle is the outcome of the player's intimate knowledge of the laws of music. The first few bars give him the theme; and the theme works itself out just as a theorem in geometry would work itself out in the brain of a man skilled in the methods of Euclid. A similar explanation applies to "literary memory." The man who can repeat a new poem after reading or hearing it once is able to do so because, having a keen critical interest in poetry, he knows the inevitable words and the inevitable sequence of the thoughts and phrases. We ourselves are acquainted with a journalist who, having gone to hear a speech by Mr. Chamberlain in order to write a leading article, to his great astonishment found, on sitting down at his desk, that he did not require the reporter's flimsy from which to verify his quotations. He had the speech by rote from beginning to end. It was the first time the journalist had listened to Mr. Chamberlain, in whose ideas and phraselogy he was intensely interested. Lest this should seem incredible, we remind the reader that Mr. Perry reported the debates in Parliament before shorthand was devised.

Shorthand? That is another artificial aid to accuracy of repetition upon which one can look with only a modified approval. We do not deny that it is useful. It enables men of modest intellect to do necessary work which otherwise would fall upon men of great intellect. It makes for economy in what may be called the mental capacity of the nation, and therefore for progress. Still, we cannot but suspect that shorthand must arrest the cerebral development of those who use it. It must leave the memory unexercised, and therefore frail. We fear that Mr. Miles's well-meant work, written "lest we forget," must fall under the ban of the same reasoning. Saith Francis Bacon: "It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire to persons of judgment, to see what shifts these formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem body that hath depth and bulk." Memory is an instinct, a faculty, not an art; and, instead of being strengthed, it will be seriously demoralised by any attempt to assist it by artificial means.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

With 2 Photogravure Portraits and 8 other Portraits and Illustrations 8vo, 16s. net.

THE LIFE OF

SIR WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I.,

Author of "The Annals of Rural Bengal," "The Old Missionary," "A History of British India," &c.

By FRANCIS HENRY SKRINE, F.S.S., Late of H.M. India Civil Service.

MARY RICH (1625-1678), COUNTESS OF WARWICK: her Family and Friends. By CHARLOTTE FELL SMITH. With 7 Photogravure Portraits and 9 other Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 18s. net.

* This work is based upon a large mass of autobiographical material hitherto unpublished, and is illustrated by portraits from the collection of the Earl of Cork at Marston, the Earl of Leicester at Holkham, and from other collections, public and private, and also with three original drawings of Lees Priory by Mr. J. Walter West, A.R.W.S.

MEMOIR OF SIR GEORGE GREY, BART., G.C.B., 1799-1882. By MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., late Vicar of Embleton, &c., and Bishop of London. With a Preface by Sir EDWARD GREY, Bart., M.P. With 3 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

* This is a reprint of a volume privately printed in 1884. Sir George Grey held various offices in the Ministries of Lord Melbourne, Lord John Russell, and Lord Palmerston, but he is chiefly remembered as Home Secretary during the Chartist troubles of 1848.

FREDERICK THE GREAT ON KINGCRAFT. From the Original Manuscript. With Reminiscences and Turkish Stories. By Sir J. WILLIAM WHITTALL, President of the British Chamber of Commerce of Turkey. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

LAST ESSAYS. By the Right Hon. F. MAX MULLER K.M. SECOND SERIES—Essays on the Science of Religion. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CONTENTS.—Forgotten Bibles (1884)—Ancient Prayers—Indian Fables and Esoteric Buddhism (1893)—The Alleged Sojourn of Christ in India (1894)—The Kutho-Daw (1895)—Buddha's Birthplace (1896)—Mohammedanism and Christianity (1894)—The Religions of China (1900): 1. Confucianism; 2. Taoism; 3. Buddhism and Christianity—The Parliament of Religions at Chicago (1894)—Why I am not an Agnostic (1894)—Is Man Immortal?

HENRY SCHOMBERG KERR: Sailor and Jesuit. By the Hon. Mrs. MAXWELL-SCOTT, of Abbotsford. With 2 Portraits and a Map of the Jesuit Mission on the Zambesi. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

THE MARQUIS D'ARGENSON; and RICHARD THE SECOND. Two Critical Essays. By REGINALD RANKIN, M.A., late Exhibitioner of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Author of "A Subaltern's Letters to His Wife," &c. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

BIBLIA INNOCENTIUM. By J. W. MACKAIL, sometime Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Part II.: Being the Story of God's Chosen People after the Coming of Our Lord Jesus Christ upon Earth, written anew for Children. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH FROM WITHIN. With a Preface by His Eminence CARDINAL VAUGHAN, Archbishop of Westminster. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

THE MIND OF A CHILD. By ENNIS RICHMOND, Author of "Boyhood," and "Through Boyhood to Manhood." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE VICAR AND HIS FRIENDS. By CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D., LL.D., late Vicar of St. Mary's, Barnstaple. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"The book, as a whole, may not be one which young women will readily turn to, but once they get a hint of the amusing character of the chapters on love and marriage, the 'Vicar and his Friends' will be sure to be run upon at the libraries. More sedate people will find enjoyment in the discussion of a variety of graver subjects."—Scotsman.

FICTION.

THE FAILURE OF SUCCESS. By Lady MABEL HOWARD, Author of "The Undoing of John Brewster." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAITOR'S WAY. By S. LEVETT-YEATS, Author of "The Honour of Savelli," "The Chevalier d'Auriac," &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STRANGE CASE OF DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE, WITH OTHER FABLES. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Re-issue. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

 This re-issue is bound in buckram, with gilt top, uniform with other volumes of the Author's works.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

The French Nuns.

SIR,—One of your reviewers in last week's ACADEMY states, in connection with a novelist's incorrect use of the word "réligeuse," that the nuns have been turned out of France. This is a gross misstatement of facts. The nuns have not been turned out of France. If here and there some orders of women choose to play the martyr for the gallery, the French Government has nothing to do with it. On the contrary, from the very beginning the Law of Associations pronounced the immunity of all the women's orders. In this I regard the Republic to have acted with a chivalrous denseness, for the French convents bring up their pupils as actively hostile to the Republic as the Jesuits, if not, indeed, more so. These girls are the future French mothers, with far more influence over their sons than the Jesuit-bred fathers. The Government would have been wise in its own interests to have attacked a no less inveterate and disloyal enemy than the Jesuits in the orders of the Sacred Heart and the Assumptionists.—I am, &c.,

HANNAH LYNCH.

[I acknowledge that my expression is not literally accurate. I gather that Miss Lynch wishes it were. The official list showed, about a month ago, that some 120 communities of women had fled the country—playing to the gallery, Miss Lynch explains; but surely these ladies know best how far the conditions of authorisation are consistent with their various Rules. What ground Miss Lynch has for asserting that the Law "pronounces the immunity of all women's orders" I cannot imagine. I have read the thing through from end to end, and venture to suggest that she had better do the same.—YOUR REVIEWER.]

 Owing to pressure on our space several letters are held over.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 112 (New Series).

THE Competition which it is our task to judge this week originated in our "Bulbs" poetic competition, in which the Rev. R. F. McCausland won the prize for the following lines:

1 'Neath the green coverlet of the churchyard plot,
2 Resting betimes, you share the common lot;
3 Here in the earth enshrouded
4 Under clear skies and clouded
5 Your life in death you keep,
6 All through the drear November,
7 The drearier December,
8 Nor lengthening days remember,
9 Till March winds stir your sleep.
10 April's warm tears the frore sods uncongeal,
11 You rise responsive to her soft appeal.
12 Such golden daffodillies,
13 Such silver wealth of lilies
14 Recall Persephone's bliss:
15 Flower-laden I behold her
16 Ere Pluto's arms enfold her
17 Behind the porphyry boulder
18 That guards the hall of Dis.
19 Sooner or later, He who all things made
20 Draws from each grimy scabbard its bright blade.

We offered a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of these lines. Before proceeding farther, we have to state that the phrase, "froze sods uncongeal" in the tenth line was a misreading of the writer's MS. Mr. McCausland wrote "frore sods uncongeal." This is material to many of the criticisms received, and enables us to prove as well as assert that these criticisms, as a whole, show great discrimination. Critic after critic points out the cacophony of "froze sods"; but, of course, "frore sods," as we now print it, is another matter. We consider that, on the whole, the prize is due to Miss Edith Rickert, 3, Great James-street, Bedford Row, W.C., for the following:—

A poem written to order is not a thing divinely born, therefore must be judged only as a piece of workmanship. The most serious defect of this poem is that, instead of being a single complete thought—like, for example, Tennyson's "Flower in the Crannied Wall"—it consists of three distinct ideas—the parallel between the quiescence of the bulbs and human death, which is followed by the classical (hence conventional) description of spring, in turn followed by the concluding couplet, which, though its form suggests a moral or summary, has no obvious connection with the preceding lines, but presents a third idea.

The metre, though elaborate, scarcely sings itself. The triple-rhymed lines contain good tone-colour (marred in the second instance by imperfect rhymes); but the probably intentional harshness of the "froze sods" line does not suggest a thaw.

The conventional phrases, "April's warm tears," "soft appeal," "golden daffodillies," "silver . . . lilies," detract from the freshness of the poem: but the concluding metaphor, though out of keeping with the earlier imagery, shows some power of poetic vision, and, indeed, the whole line, by its arrangement of accents, shows skill in employing metrical irregularity for a desired effect.

[D. R., London.]

From other papers received we extract the following remarks:

The idea of the bulb "resting betimes" is true in fact as well as in poetry; but the related words, "life in death," hardly preserve the idea of rest and "sleep." [A. E. W., Greenock.]

The lines "are pure patchwork—the first couplet an example of the Popeian Alexandrine, as practised by the generations who followed the master, and poor at that. The next seven, and especially the last four, are resurrected Keats with a dash of Christina Rossetti, and then we have again the post-Popeian—of a higher quality than before, however; and so the process repeats itself."

[P. H. W., London.]

But worse follows [line 11], artificiality dominates the remainder. Pretty enough the opening couplet, though marred by the harsh recurring such—the simpler the were preferable. But the subsequent lapse into classical allusion strikes the note of pedantry, and all sincerity departs: while the intruding personal pronoun is a solecism—a shock which the substitution of lo, or there, had mercifully spared. Finally, the important canon of art which enforces cumulative effect is contravened: the end, in this instance, crowns not the work! Let there be grateful recognition of a new rhyme to bliss—when expectation stood trembling at the impending kiss! [A. J. E.]

. . . a haunting rhythm in the line, "You rise responsive to her soft appeal," which merits notice. The allusion to Persephone is apt, but seemingly renders incongruous the last couplet.

[E. H. H., Sutton.]

Do bulbs "remember" and "rise"?

[Rev. A. J. M., Glasgow.]

The description of the weather is pretty padding. The allusion to Plutus and Persephone—conventional enough, in all conscience—is quite out of harmony with the last two lines. They are not on the same plane of thought. You have a religious—almost a Christian—idea placed side by side with a piece of Pagan mythology. To put it shortly, the verses are overweighted with too many thoughts, each good enough in its way. Mr. McCausland has shown that the subject is capable of poetic treatment, but he has just failed to give it.

[W. A. C. C., London]

Dr. Watts and his dogs, and Macaulay with his "thunder-riven oak," are precedents for libels on long-suffering Nature. Still—bulbs rest in the hot summer months. Whilst the poet imagines they, in death-like slumber, "forget to remember the fifth of November or foggy December," they are hard at work below ground throwing out fibrous roots, which eventually support the blades drawn from "grimy" scabbards. M'yes, it is a remarkable fact that those scabbards peeping through the heaviest, wettest clay are perfectly clean. [E. H., London.]

We wish to add that no competitor has disputed the propriety of the award to Mr. McCausland, and if—as is proper—we have quoted the more critical remarks of his rivals, we have suppressed—as is necessary—many warm praises given to his lines.

Competition No 113 (New Series).

WE offer a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of a book published this year—excluding fiction. Not to exceed 250 words.

RULES.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery-lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, November 20. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon: otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST.—JUST OUT.

Some Recollections of Jean Ingelow and her Early Friends.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is pleasant to see this unassuming little memoir."—Athenæum.

A Memoir of the Rev. Henry Twells, M.A., Hon. Canon of Peterborough.

By the Very Rev. WILLIAM CLAVELL INGRAM, D.D. With Portrait and Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"We are glad to have this account of a man who was as exemplary in his life as he was able and accomplished."—Spectator.

TWENTIETH EDITION.—This Edition contains an Appendix on the Articles' and considerably enlarged Notes on the Occasional Offices and the Ordinal.

The Prayer Book:

Its History, Language, and Contents. By the Rev. EVAN DANIEL, M.A., Formerly Principal of the National Society's Training College, Battersea, Hon. Canon of Rochester, Vicar of Horsham. Extra large crown 8vo, 700 pp., cloth boards, 6s.

"So large, wide, and speedy a circulation is proof at once of the interest which the subject possesses, and of the high merit of this treatise on it.... Most valuable."—Guardian (SECOND NOTICE).

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. net.

Our Modern Christian Life.

Advent and Lenten Addresses. By the late Rev. J. P. F. DAVIDSON, M.A., Vicar of St. Matthias, Earl's Court.

THIRD EDITION.—A Fourth in the Press.

The Afterglow of a Great Reign.

By the Right Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON-INGRAM, D.D., Bishop of London. Fcap. 8vo, art linen boards, 1s. 6d.

"It strikes us as one of the best and truest of the many appreciations of the late Queen's character."—Times.

The Life of the Waiting Soul in the Intermediate State.

Addresses delivered at Holy Trinity, Hastings. By the Rev. R. E. SANDERSON, D.D., Canon-Residentiary of Chichester. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Fifth Edition.

"Dr. Sanderson's nine brief addresses have pleased us very much. They are plain, thoughtful, earnest, and Catholic, declaring all that is known or that may reasonably be held....and the plain man who wants to know what he may safely believe on the state of the waiting souls and our relation to them has here all that he needs."—Church Times.

The Social Teaching of the Lord's Prayer.

Addresses delivered before the University of Oxford. By the Very Rev. CHARLES W. STUBBS, D.D., Dean of Ely. Crown 8vo., cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"A vigorous appeal for the carrying of our Christian principles into the details of social and commercial life."—Saturday Review.

BY THE BISHOP DESIGNATE OF WORCESTER.

The Creed of the Christian.

By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, M.A., D.D., Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition, gilt top, 2s. 6d. [Fifth Edition.

Prayer, and the Lord's Prayer.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d. [Second Edition.

MR. GORDON BROWNE'S NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOK.

Fairy Tales from Hans Andersen.

With Introduction by EDWARD CLODD, and numerous Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE, R.I. Uniform with "Grimm's Fairy Tales," &c. Large crown 8vo, extra cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

Uniform with the above.

The Book of King Arthur and his Noble Knights.

Stories from Sir THOMAS MALORY'S "Morte d'Arthur" by MARY MACLEOD. Introduction by Professor HALES. With Illustrations from Drawings by A. G. WALKER, Sculptor.

"Truly beautiful. One of the most excellent gift-books of the year."—Literature.

IN THE PRESS.

The Fairchild Family.

By Mrs. SHERWOOD.

Revised, with Introduction, by MARY E. PALGRAVE, And numerous Illustrations by F. M. RUDLAND.

Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, fancy cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON and CO., London.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE BIOGRAPHY OF THE LATE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

JUST PUBLISHED. With a Portrait. Large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN,

Author of "The Life of Charles Stewart Parnell," "Fifty Years of Concessions to Ireland," &c.

Times.—"Lord Rosebery's censor of biographies would, we are inclined to think, pronounce a very favourable opinion on Mr. Barry O'Brien's Life of the late Lord Chief Justice, and would say that he had accomplished a difficult task with great skill and tact."

Westminster Gazette.—"One brief, vivid and masterly volume, conveying the character of the man as surely and forcibly as Mr. Sargent does in the portrait which is reproduced for the frontispiece, and we hazard a guess that this book will be read when the biographies of most lawyers are dust and waste paper."

Daily Chronicle.—"A Life which is at once official and excellent. It contains no padding, and not one dull page. It is a vivid account of a man who was intensely alive, a live and fearless biography."

NEW WORK BY W. H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D., &C.

JUST PUBLISHED. With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY.

By W. H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D., &c., Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "Wellington's Men," &c.

Academy.—"A good narrative, written with picturesque selection and energy. Mr. Fitchett's easy, bright power of narrative appeals to boy and man."

Globe.—"A vivid picture of the fierce struggle. A volume which cannot fail to be as practically serviceable as it is pleasantly readable."

ON NOVEMBER 28. With a Portrait. Large Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

By HERBERT W. PAUL,

Author of "Men and Letters."

Important New Novels.

ON DECEMBER 3. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE VELVET GLOVE.

By H. S. MERRIMAN,

Author of "The Sowers," "In Kedar's Tents," "The Isle of Unrest," &c.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of "The New Rector," "The Castle Inn," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND IMPRESSION SELLING RAPIDLY.

Times.—"A picturesque and vigorous romance. The narrative will be followed with breathless interest."

Guardian.—"Mr. Stanley Weyman's 'Count Hannibal' is fully worthy of his great reputation—the style is brilliant, easy and clear; the invention of subject and the turns of fortune in the story surprising; above all, the subtle painting of a man and a woman's heart done with inexhaustible knowledge."

Daily Telegraph.—"A stirring historical romance. There is a fine sense of bustling movement in every page."

Spectator.—"The book is genuinely exciting up to the last page."

British Weekly.—"A thoroughly spirited, exciting, and thrilling tale."

THE MAKING OF A MARCHIONESS.

By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT,

Author of "The Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Manchester Guardian.—"Mrs. Burnett's great gift is that of a portrait painter. Her characters have the pre-eminent charm of life, and Emily Fox-Seton, later raised to the position of Marchioness of Walderhurst, brims over with it."

Globe.—"Whatever Mrs. Hodgson Burnett writes is sure to be very much above the average and very well worth reading. . . . The novel is emphatically one to be perused."

RICHARD HALPIN.

A Romance of the New Navy.

By MORGAN ROBERTSON,

Author of "Spun Yarn," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TORY LOVER.

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT,

Author of "The Queen's Twin, and Other Stories," &c. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By Professor W. M. SLOANE, PhD. L.H.D. Magnificently Illustrated with all of the Pictures in the Subscription Edition. In Four Volumes Quarto. Three Guineas net.

TIMES.—"The most magnificent of modern Lives of Napoleon.

LETTERS OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. With three Portraits. 8vo, 15s. net.

NOW READY at all Libraries and Booksellers.

S. R. CROCKETT'S
NEW NOVEL,
THE FIREBRAND.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY
S. MERWIN & H. K. WEBSTER,
Authors of "The Short-line War,"
CALUMET "K."
Globe 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE LIFE OF THE RIGHT HON. SIR WILLIAM MOLESWORTH, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. By Mrs. FAWCETT, LL.D. With Photogravure Portraits. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Extra Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

THE ISLE OF THE SHAMROCK. Written and Illustrated by CLIFTON JOHNSON.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.
New Volume.

THE HOUSE OF ATREUS: Being the AGAMEMNON, LIBATION-BEARERS, and FURIES of ÆSCHYLUS. Translated into English Verse by E. D. A. MORSHEAD, M.A. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.

Globe 8vo, 5s. per Volume.

Contains 154 Volumes, among which are:—

LECTURES AND ESSAYS BY THE LATE WILLIAM KINGDON CLIFFORD, F.R.S. Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN and SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK. Third Edition. 2 vols., 10s. Just Published.

JOHN MORLEY'S COLLECTED WORKS. 11 vols.

EMERSON'S COLLECTED WORKS. 6 vols.

CHARLES LAMB'S LETTERS and WORKS. 7 vols.

WORKS OF WORDSWORTH. 12 vols.

 Send for new Complete List.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE WORKS OF THOMAS KYD. Edited from the Original Texts, with Introductions, Notes, and Facsimiles, by FREDERICK S. BOAS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Professor of History and English Literature in Queen's College, Belfast; Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 15s. net.

ACADEMY.—"All students of Elizabethan drama owe a debt of gratitude to Prof. Boas for this volume.... His notes are models for their judicious proportion of brevity and fulness; while his introduction is a valuable essay on the numerous obscure and controverted points connected with Kyd's writings and life, no less than an able contribution towards the understanding of Kyd's true place in Elizabethan drama. In regard to the study of Kyd, indeed, it would be hardly an exaggeration to call this an epoch-making edition.

KING HORN. A Romance of the Thirteenth Century. Edited from the Manuscripts by JOSEPH HALL, M.A., Head Master of the Hulme Grammar School, Manchester. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. (Uniform with the Library Editions of Chaucer and Gower.)

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF JOHN GOWER. Vols II and III. Containing the English Works. Edited from the Manuscripts, with Introductions, Notes, and Glossaries, by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, buckram, with a Facsimile, 16s. each.

THE OXFORD BOOK OF ENGLISH VERSE. 1250-1900. Chosen and Edited by A. T. QUILLER-COUCH. Third impression. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.; Fcap. 8vo, on Oxford India Paper, cloth extra, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

MILTON'S PROSODY. By ROBERT BRIDGES, and Classical Metres in English Verse, by W. JOHNSON STONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

THE ALFRED JEWEL. An Historical Essay. By JOHN EARLE, M.A., LL.D., Rector of Swanswick, Prebendary of Wells. Rawlinsonian Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. Small 4to, buckram, with Illustrations and Maps, 12s. 6d. net.

THE WELSH WARS OF EDWARD THE FIRST. A Contribution to Mediaeval Military History, based on Original Documents. By JOHN E. MORRIS, M.A., formerly Demy of Magdalen College, Oxford. With a Map. 8vo, cloth, 9s. 6d.

GOETHE. Hermann und Dorothea. Edited, with Notes, by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., M.A., late Professor of the German Language and Literature in King's College, London, and EMMA S. BUCHHEIM. With an Introduction by EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D., D.C.L., Professor of Oratory and English Literature in the University of Dublin; and a Biographical Sketch by E. S BUCHHEIM. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

AN ENGLISH COMMENTARY ON DANTE'S DIVINA COMMEDIA. By the Rev. H. F. TOZER, M.A., Honorary Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

NOTES ON ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY. Chiefly reprinted from the Transactions of the Philological Society. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth with a Portrait of the Author, 8s. 6d. net.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by Dr. J. A. H. MURRAY and Mr. H. BRADLEY.
A re-issue in monthly numbers, each consisting on the average of 88 pages, 3s. 6d. each.

Also published by Henry Frowde.

THE OXFORD CHAUCER. The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited, from numerous manuscripts, by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., LL.D., M.A., With a Portrait and Glossarial Index. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top. On Oxford India Paper, cloth extra, gilt top, 8s., and in various leather bindings.

THE OXFORD BROWNING. The Dramatic Lyrics and Romances, and other Poems of ROBERT BROWNING. Miniature edition, in one volume, printed on Oxford India Paper, 32mo, 3s. 6d., and in various leather bindings.

List of New and Recent Books post free on application.

LONDON:
HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST.

NOW READY.

THE "PORTFOLIO" MONOGRAPHS.—No. 42.

MEDIÆVAL LONDON. By the Rev. CANON BENHAM, D.D., F.S.A., and CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A., Librarian to the Corporation of London. With a Frontispiece in Photogravure, 4 Plates printed in Colour, and many other Illustrations. Super royal 8vo, 5s. net.; or in cloth, gilt top, 7s.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHEMISTRY OF PAINTS AND PAINTING. By A. H. CHURCH, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Academy of Arts. Third Edition. Revised and Enlarged.
Also an Edition of 50 copies on Hand-made Paper, of which 25 only are for sale, 10s. net.
"In all respects a model of what such a work should be."—Athenæum.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

SACHARISSA. Some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland. By Mrs. HENRY ADY (JULIA CARTWRIGHT). Author of "Madame, &c." With 5 Portraits. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.
"We have nothing but praise for the way in which the author has done her work."—Spectator.

CHEAP EDITION.

GENERAL JOHN JACOB. Commandant of the Sind Irregular Horse, and Founder of Jacobabad. By ALEXANDER INNES SHAND. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.
"Jacob of Jacob's Horse was an ideal organizer and leader of irregular cavalry. In South Africa to-day he would be hunting the Boers as they never have been hunted."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY.

OLD BLACKFRIARS. In the Days of Van Dyck. A Story by BEATRICE MARSHALL, Author of "The Life of Emma Marshall." With 8 Illustrations. 5s.
"Miss Marshall has the delicacy in drawing the lines of character, the kindly and sympathetic spirit, which we have learnt to associate with her name."—Spectator.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WIDOW WILEY, and some other Old Folk. By BROWN LINNET. With 20 Illustrations, mostly photographed from life by the Author. Crown, 8vo, 5s.
"A literary and artistic pearl of great price. . . . The actual people and scenes described are reproduced by the same artist soul and hand that has written them down for us. And what delightful writing it is—restrained, humorous, thoughtful."—Manchester Guardian.
"The comedy of 'Widow Wiley' and 'The Settling of Tabitha' is exquisite."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

COMING; or, the Golden Year. A Tale by SELINA GAYE. Author of "The Great World's Farm," &c. With 8 Illustrations. 5s.
"A remarkable tale. A very thoughtful and beautiful book."—Guardian.

FOREST OUTLAWS; or, St. Hugh and the King. By the Rev. E. GILLIAT, Author of "In Lincoln Green." Cheaper edition. With 16 Illustrations. 5s.
"A thoroughly interesting and fascinating book, written with much ability and knowledge."—St. James's Gazette.

NOW READY.

IN THE DAYS OF THE DRAGONS. Talks with Boys on some Subjects of Interest to Them. By the Rev. E. C. DAWSON, M.A., Author of "The Life of Bishop Hannington," &c. 1s. 6d.
"The little volume is written with a spirit and verve that will commend it to young people."—Scotsman.

A WAYSIDE SNOWDROP. By M. E. WINCHESTER, Author of "A Nest of Sparrows," Adrift in a Great City," &c. 2s. 6d.
"With all her tenderness and grace Miss Winchester narrates one of those pathetic tales that at once arouse the loving sympathy of children."—Guardian.

SECOND EDITION.

EMMA MARSHALL. A Biographical Sketch. By BEATRICE MARSHALL. With Portraits and other Illustrations, 6s.
"For the manner in which this charming little sketch of a beautiful and heroic life has been written we have nothing but praise."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MRS. MARSHALL'S LAST STORY.

THE PARSON'S DAUGHTER, and How She was Painted by Mr. Romney. A Story by EMMA MARSHALL, Author of "Under the Dome of St. Paul's," &c. With 8 Illustrations after Romney and Gainsborough, 5s.
"Written with that charm and feeling for the perfume of a period which the author has so frequently brought to bear on similar themes."—Outlook.

London: SEELEY & Co., Limited, 38, Great Russell Street.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1542. Established 1869. 23 November, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

On December 7th, we shall issue a Special Illustrated Number of the Academy, which will include classified reviews of the Christmas books published this season, including new illustrated editions, art books, gift books for children, story books for boys and girls, and nursery books.

To the eighth edition of The Foundations of Belief Mr. Arthur Balfour has added "a summary of the argument," of 21 pages. He has also written an introduction of 28 pages, from which we quote a passage:

> Surveying the work after an interval of years, with a rested eye, I perceive in it certain peculiarities, or, if it be preferred, errors of construction, which may well leave the reader more impressed—favourably or unfavourably—by particular arguments and episodes than by the ordered sequence of the whole. A well-known theologian [Principal Fairbairn] (who, by the way, has himself completely failed to catch my general drift) observed in a review, which he has since republished, that the book is redeemed by its digressions; and though I cannot be expected gratefully to accept so dubious a compliment, I admit that the interest of certain branches of the subject has occasionally betrayed me into giving them a relative prominence which the bare necessities of the general argument hardly seem to justify. Examples in point are the æsthetic discussion in the second chapter of Part I., and the chapter on Authority in Part III. I have made no attempt to correct this fault, if fault it be. Had I done so the book would, no doubt, have been a good deal altered, but I doubt whether it would, on the whole, have been altered for the better. It might have gained in proportion and balance; but it would, perhaps, have lost whatever freshness and spontaneity it may ever have possessed. I have, therefore, contented myself with providing, in the argumentative summary mentioned above, a corrective to the too detailed treatment of certain portions of the work, hoping that by thus unsparingly thinning out the trees I shall enable the most careless wayfarer to understand without difficulty the general lie of the wood. I desire, however, emphatically to express a (perhaps not unbiassed) opinion that the book is something more than the expansion of its summary, and that no extract or essence can really reproduce the qualities of the original preparation—whatever those qualities may be worth.

Messrs. Williams and Norgate send us the following:—"Philosophical activity at Oxford seems to be taking a decidedly novel form, to judge by what purports to be a new philosophical periodical entitled Mind, the Christmas Number of which is ready for publication. It appears to be a comic "double" of its namesake Mind, and in addition to a number of parodies in the style of most of the famous philosophers, contains also a very serious vein of ridicule directed against the "Absolutism," which seems just now to be fashionable in English philosophy. Though all the contributions profess to be pseudonymous, the pseudonyms are often pretty transparent, and the editor and most of the contributors practically divulge their identity to the attentive reader."

It having been stated that a new edition of Darwin's Origin of Species has been prepared by a publishing firm, in view of the approaching expiration of the copyright of the first edition, Mr. Murray wishes it to be known that the edition which passes out of copyright at the end of this month is the imperfect edition, which was subsequently thoroughly revised by Mr. Darwin. If it were reprinted it would, he adds, be without the consent or authority of Mr. Darwin's representatives. The only authorised and complete editions are those published by Mr. Murray, and they do not lose copyright for several years to come.

Mr. Henley's new volume of poems, which is published to-day, contains under the heading Hawthorn and Lavender, fifty-two poems; thirteen "London Types;" the Prologues to "Beau Austin," "Richard Savage," and "Admiral Guinea," and seven In Memoriam poems, under the heading "Epicedia." The volume also contains a dedication to Mrs. Henley, and this Prologue:

> These to the glory and praise of the green land
> That bred my women, and that holds my dead,
> England, and with her the strong broods that stand
> Wherever her fighting lines are thrust or spread!
> They call us proud?—Look at our English Rose!
> Shedders of blood?—Where hath our own been spared?
> Shopkeepers?—Our accompt the high God knows.
> Close?—In our bounty half the world hath shared.
> They hate us, and they envy? Envy and hate
> Should drive them to the Pit's edge?—Be it so!
> That race is damned which misesteems its fate;
> And this, in God's good time, they all shall know,
> And know you, too, you good green England, then—
> Mother of mothering girls and governing men!

Messrs. Treherne and Co. have purchased Crampton's Magazine, and the December number will be issued by them. The magazine will be edited by Mr. Harold Tremayne, author of Dross.

Owing to the increased interest taken in aerial navigation, Messrs. Iliffe and Sons have decided to issue a quarterly magazine, entitled Flying.

The author of The History of Sir Richard Calmady, we learn from the Westminster Gazette, has been expressing herself with frankness to the American interviewer:

> "The main drawback of American society," said "Lucas Malet," "is that the young girl is of too much importance. I should like to see your influential men give more tone to society, as they do in England. Young girls are, of course, very pretty, and sweet, and charming; but it is not to be expected that they should be intelligently interesting. The consequence is, that when you grant them such an important place, men of thought and position come to regard society as beneath their dignity, unworthy of serious consideration." "You don't seem to have an especially high opinion of your own sex?" said the surprised interviewer. "Well," said "Lucas Malet," "the fact is, that women can't teach me anything I don't already know, being a woman myself, whereas men can teach me a great deal."

Digitized by Google

Mr. E. V. Lucas is editing for Messrs. Methuen a new series of children's books, which bears the general title of "The Little Blue Books for Children." The aim of the editor is to get entertaining or exciting stories about normal children, the moral of which is implied rather than expressed. The first two volumes are The Air-Gun, by T. Hilbert, and The Beechnut Book, by Jacob Abbott.

Messrs. Macmillan have nearly ready a biography, in two volumes, of Lowell, written by Mr. H. E. Scudder, who has had the advice of Mr. Norton, editor of the Letters of James Russell Lowell, also access to some unpublished material.

It is difficult to associate two such novelists as Mr. Anthony Hope and Samuel Richardson, but the living writer gracefully offered his tribute to the "Father of the English Novel" on Wednesday evening at St. Bride's Institute. The occasion was the unveiling of a bust of Samuel Richardson, whose close connection with the parish and with the art of printing had inspired this memorial. The bust was the gift of Mr. Passmore Edwards. Mr. Hope, as was fit and inevitable, spoke brave words about the future of the novel. In another column we say our own say about Richardson. We observe that in an excellent leading article, probably by Mr. Herbert Paul, in the Daily News our own view of the importance of reading Clarissa is shared. Clarissa cannot be skipped or parodied is one of the writer's points. It is a magnificent tale and we hope Mr. Leslie Stephen was wrong when he said in the Dictionary of National Biography that Macaulay was Richardson's last enthusiast. We have already drawn attention to Messrs. Chapman and Hall's beautiful complete edition of Richardson's works.

Commenting on the bust just unveiled, the Manchester Guardian compares Richardson's career as a printer to that of Luke Hansard, the founder of the famous reports of Parliamentary debates. Richardson, who was the son of a Derbyshire joiner, and who died about the time that Hansard was born, was apprenticed to a London printer, became printer to the House of Commons, Master of the Stationers' Company, and part printer to the King. Hansard, who came from Norwich, was apprenticed to Mr. Hughes, the printer to the House of Commons, became a partner and eventually sole proprietor of the business. But the Guardian is wrong in stating that Richardson is buried in the church of St. Clement Danes, in the Strand. He is buried in St. Bride's, Fleet Street, by the side of his wife. His grave is in the middle aisle, not far from the Communion rail, and is usually hidden from sight by the cocoanut matting. The courteous verger, however, will roll this down the aisle for any visitor who wishes to see the gravestone. There is also a brass tablet to Richardson high up on the wall of the north aisle, in the shadow of the gallery: this can only be read by the aid of a step-ladder and a taper, as we know by experience.

The latest manifestation of the Omar Khayyam cult is an Omar Khayyam calendar to hang on your hall. It is pictorial, and has been executed by Miss Blanche McManus, and is issued by the De La More Press, of High Holborn. Quite a pretty thing, and the Fitzgerald quatrains are very applicable. The general motto of the calendar is the 4th quatrain of Fitzgerald's first translation:

> Now the New Year reviving Old Desires,
> The thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires,
> There the White Hand of Moses on the Bough
> Puts out and Jesus from the Ground suspires.

Apropos of Fitzgerald, the following juxtapositions in Messrs. Sotheby's latest book auction catalogue are not without a certain fitness:

> 564 Fitzgerald (E.) Polonius: a Collection of Wise Saws and Modern Instances, first edition, fine copy. 1852
> 565 Keene (Charles) The Work of, with an Introduction by Joseph Pennell, and a Bibliography, 140 illustrations fol. 1897

Eighteen years ago Keene wrote to Fanny Kemble: "Next week I am expecting my grave friend Charles Keene, of Punch, to come for a week, bringing with him his bagpipes and a book of madrigals, and our Archdeacon will come to meet him and to talk ancient music and books, and we three shall drive out past the hedges and heaths, with their furze in blossom—and I wish—yes, I do, that you were of the party."

Beginners in letters do not want for encouragement in America. They are hustled into the sunshine with a glad promptitude which we have not the heart to dislike. Just listen to this prattle of a Boston literary gossiper, Miss Lilian Whiting:

> Grace Ellery Channing Stetson is one of the younger authors of Boston who is destined to contribute something of permanent value to the world of letters. The granddaughter of the famous and saintly divine, she inherits the literary touch of the Channings, and her life in Italy and in California has surrounded her with that atmosphere of beauty which her pen reflects and interprets so admirably. As the wife of that notable artist, Charles Walter Stetson, she dwells not "among the untrodden ways" like Wordsworth's "Lucy," but in an atmosphere of ideal resplendence in form and color. Her collection of stories under the caption of The Fortune of a Day will soon be followed by another volume, of which the title is to be announced. Oscar Fay Adams, whose inimitable collection of short stories under the title of The Archbishop's Unguarded Moment has made his name so well known, has just finished a complete novel, which will doubtless be among the successes of next spring. But this is anticipating.

It certainly is anticipating. But in Boston you are famous to-day and publish to-morrow.

The life and work of Mr. B. W. Leader, R.A., form the subject of the Christmas number of the Art Journal just issued. The artist's progress is carefully traced, and the events of his life so far as they are of public interest.

A recent Handbook to Prose Fiction, compiled for the use of borrowers at Free Libraries, does not appear to be a very helpful publication. Of Jane Austen we are told that she was "a gem of the first water." Of Sir Walter Besant, that "his works are well known and much thought of." Miss Marie Corelli is compared with Balzac, and her Barabas is declared to be supplementary to the New Testament narrative. The Master-Christian is said to be a "sermon." Mrs. Croker "gives a 'good time' to her readers without unduly straining their mental powers."

Digitized by Google

Oliver Goldsmith is "one of the most distinguished ornaments of English literature." Voltaire is merely "a French writer of considerable talent and note." The Last Days of Pompeii fares thus: "Climbing Vesuvius, the author studies Italian antiquities and observes Italian manners with a wide reading of Latin literature and of Greek philosophy." A "specular mount" indeed! Of The Water-Babies we are told: "When read to a dying child on one occasion, the simple criticism by the little one was that 'it was like fresh air.'"

THE price of Mr. John Willis Clark's work, The Care of Books, which we noticed last week, is 18s. net, and not, as we stated, 42s. We regret the error, which was no doubt due partly to the sumptuous appearance of the volume. The Cambridge University Press can be congratulated on their inexpensive workmanship.

THE pièce de résistance of the Christmas number of the Pall Mall Magazine is Mr. Henley's article on R. L. S., which we discuss elsewhere; but another article of literary interest is provided in Mr. William Sharp's notes on the well-known literary friendship of Mr. Swinburne and Mr. Watts-Dunton, who for many years have been co-tenants of "The Pines" at Putney. The following picture of their everyday life will interest many:

> At their joint home each lives a busy and yet serene life. Most of Mr. Swinburne's time is spent in the open air or in his pleasant study on the first floor of The Pines: often in the long, tree-shadowed, secluded garden—or natural alley, for there is little of the conventional villa-garden—or in long rambles on Wimbledon Common. Mr. Swinburne never writes out of doors, nor uses the garden for what Rossetti was wont to call (though rarely to use as) "a thought-walk." Here, however, Mr. Watts-Dunton spends much of his time, loving well to remember, to think, and to dream, under the green boughs which recall youth and Rhona Boswell, and much that has happened since the old gypsy days. Here, too, occasionally, the friends spend an hour or so resting and chatting. Mr. Swinburne, like Lord Tennyson, has no great love of seeing strangers; but the many visitors to Mr. Watts-Dunton make daily demands upon his time. Of an afternoon the front door is seldom left long unopened, for this "partner in the Pines" has not only a multitude of friends and acquaintances, but is constantly being sought by strangers on one literary plea or another. And a very delightful garden it is, with its high waving elms and beeches beyond, and its pretty corner behind the cherry-trees with the statue of a bending nymph, or its mid-space where stands a fine statue of the Vatican Venus, once the occupant of a like commanding situation in Rossetti's garden at Cheyne Walk.

"THAT vulgar Heretick, who caught the Ear of the Semi-literate with his low German Accent." This is Carlyle as seen by our eccentric and impetuous friend the Rambler. It is written apropos of Mr. Birrell's surprising digression about Carlyle in his preface to his edition of Boswell. After taking from Mr. Birrell Carlyle's picture of the peasant who aided Charles II. in his escape after Worcester ("This, then, was a genuine flesh-and-blood rustic of the year 1651; he did actually swallow bread and buttermilk with these hobnailed shoes has sprawled through mud roads in winter . . . was born, was a son, was a father," &c.), the Rambler proceeds: "In all the dull, stupid, endless, ignominious volumes of that heavy half-foreign Fool, is it possible to chuse a more hopelessly characteristick Summary? And this it is that Mr. Birrell selects for the Admiration of his Readers. The clear Conclusion is that Mr. Birrell is also contemptible." We should say that a clearer conclusion than this might be arrived at, though we are afraid it would be not less personal.

THE current Rambler is, indeed, all literary, and some readers will doubtless enjoy Mr. Helm's onslaught on Macaulay as a balladist. His text is Ivry, a poem known to every schoolboy, and the marrow of his criticism is this:

> We cannot pause to point out all the Absurdities of this rhapsodical Composition, but we must really draw the Attention of our Readers to one "Derangement of Epitaphs" so nice that even the immortal Type of middle Age and feminine Ignorance, conceived of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, could not have improved upon it. The Poet places in the Mouths of his extraordinary Huguenots Pæans of Joy because, among other Performances never-equalled on Battle-field before or since,
>
> "... The good Lord of Rosny has ta'en the Cornet white.
> Our own true Maximilian the Cornet white has ta'en,
> The Cornet white with Crosses black, the Flag of false Lorraine.
> Up with it high; unfurl it wide; ..."
>
> and so on. Now, so far as we know, a Cornet, as a possible Object of Capture on the Field of Battle, can only be one of two Things. It may be a Species of Trumpet, with which we are most of us only too familiar, or it may be the youthful Commander of a small Number of Horse-soldiers. Either might conceivably be described as white, the first if it was of Silver, the other if he was pale with Fright. But to what the "Crosses black" refer, we cannot imagine, unless a young Officer is supposed to have worn Strips of sticking Plaister to close some slight Sword-wounds in his Face. Even so, it would be ridiculous to describe either Trumpet or Subaltern as a Flag, though the Term seems for a moment to afford a Clue to the Author's Intention. By Cornet he perhaps means Ensign, in the Sense of Standard-bearer. But no, for in the next Line the Huguenot Host are called upon to unfurl it wide. Now a Cornet of Horse may undoubtedly go on Furlough, but he cannot be unfurled, and, as for a Trumpet, there is no Grain of Sense discoverable in the Application of the Verb.

AMERICA is still trying to make up its mind whether to give Gorky a warm place in its heart or not. Meanwhile the garbs in which he is presented by two translators are being compared, not without perplexity. One reader sends to his literary paper the following parallel passages from the renderings of Miss Hapgood and Mr. Bernstein:

MISS HAPGOOD.	MR. BERNSTEIN.
My heart is high as a blade of grass (p. 218).	Like a blade of grass my heart has withered (p. 217).
Carouse away, without regard to anything. . . But if you mix your heart up with it—the porridge gets spilled and the bowl is smashed on the floor (p. 285).	Enjoy yourself without looking back at anything. And then, when the gruel is eaten up, smash the bowl on the ground (p. 281).
The itching curiosity of Eve will be your undoing (p. 293).	How the itching curiosity of Eve gives you no rest (p. 289).
. . . . shouted Foma, bursting into a hearty laugh (p. 326).	. . . exclaimed Foma, longing to hear it (p. 320).
. . . something is said about tears (p. 344).	There is something there about dreams (p. 337).
No, I cannot endure it any longer. You are the first I ever had (p. 411).	No, I can't bear it any longer, I am nervous (p. 401).
His collar covered his teeth (p. 439).	 and the collar covered his lips (p. 427).
Neither in fire nor in boiling mire shall you be roasted (p. 436).	Not in fire, but in boiling mud you shall be scorched (p. 424).
Rendered helpless by the disgrace of his conquest (p. 437).	Exhausted by the disgrace of his defeat (p. 425).

MESSRS. PICKERING AND CHATTO, of the Haymarket, have issued a catalogue of books for sale which is itself a noble volume. It is in quarto, illustrated. Every kind of book is catalogued; and title pages, illustrations, illuminated

Digitized by Google

MSS. and bindings are reproduced in profusion. Among nearly six thousand entries our eye falls on an old medical work with which Shakespeare may have been familiar: Ulricus Hutten's treatise, Of the Woode Called Guaiachii that Healeth, &c. In some owner's handwriting, and dated 1539, the following verses appear:

Three score & ten the age & life of man
In holy Davids eyes semde but a span
And half that tyme is spent and lost in sleepe
Soe onely thirtie five for us wee keepe.

Our days of youth must be abated all
Childhood and youth wise Salamon doth call
But vanity, mere vanity he sayes
In what befalls us in our childish dayes.

Our dayes of age, wee take noe pleasure in
Our dayes of youth wee wish had never beene
Soe age deducted youth & sleep & sorrow
Onely one span is all the lyfe wee borrowe.

What is our lyfe, a play of passion
Our mirth the musicke of division
Our mothers wombes the lyringe houses be
Where wee are drest for lives short comedie

Heaven the Judicious eye spectator is
To see whats acted well & whats amisse
The grave which hides us from the scorching sonn
Are lives drawen curtein when the play is donn
Thus actinge haste we to our latest rest
And then wee dye in earnest not in jest.

Written the 3d of November, 1638.

Excellent, too, is the illustrated Caxton Head Catalogue just issued by Mr. James Tregaskis, of High Holborn. It describes manuscripts for the mediævalist, incunabula and early typography for the great libraries—some of them hitherto unknown or undescribed—bookbindings ranging in period from the stamped leather of the fifteenth century, through the fine Venetian and French work to that of modern times.

Bibliographical.

It is to be regretted that Mr. W. H. Fitchett did not prefix or append to his Tale of the Great Mutiny a bibliography of the subject. In his opening pages he discusses some of the larger and more important works thereon. But, as a matter of fact, there is a whole literature of the Mutiny, and a list of the works which have reference to it would have been a very considerable boon. Few things are more common nowadays than the publication of the biography or autobiography of a soldier who saw service in India during those troublous times, and has something to add to the general stock of information. Mr. Fitchett would have been the very man to put together such a bibliography as I suggest, coming, as he does, fresh from a careful study of all the available authorities. I am glad to see that in the preface to the new memoir of John Howard Mr. E. C. S. Gibson reviews, with comments, the labours of his predecessors in the same field. Such reviews are very useful to those who desire to embark upon a further study of the topic dealt with.

It has hitherto been impossible, save by guess-work based on internal evidence, to assign either to Professor Aytoun or to Sir Theodore Martin the authorship of any one of the Bon Gualtier Ballads. The dual authorship has been sedulously maintained, the mystery guarded. At last, however, Sir Theodore has divulged one of the secrets of the prison-house. He has informed Mr. Anthony C. Deane, the compiler of A Little Book of Light Verse, that Aytoun was "responsible" for "The Massacre of the Macpherson." This is well worth noting. Moreover, it is a fact—is it not?—that since the publication of the Ballads Sir Theodore has never printed over his own name any verse conceived in the same delightful and admirable spirit.

A well-known literary gossiper has been telling his readers that the Mr. Ralph Hall Caine who, it would seem, has purchased the copyright of Household Words and proposes to continue the paper, is not a brother but a son of the novelist, and is only eighteen years old. If that be so, who is the Mr. Ralph H. Caine who, in 1892, brought out a collection of English love poetry (thus following Lyrics of Love, 1874, and anticipating Lyric Love, 1894)? In 1892 the Mr. R. H. Caine of the gossiper would be about nine years old; so I feel curious as to the respective identities of the two Messrs. Ralph Caine.

The title and subject of Mr. James Burnley's Summits of Success remind me of a volume, published a good many years ago, and very similar in aim, called The Secret of Success. Smiles's Self-Help was, of course, the inspirer of both books, as it has been the inspirer of many another volume for the instruction of youth. Mr. Burnley, I may add, has a chapter on "Men who have Fallen by the Way," which recalls to me a work entitled Men Who Have Failed, issued not so very long ago by the S.P.C.K.

Bibliographers should note that the second series of Max Müller's Last Essays, just published, contains a paper on "Ancient Prayers" which (to the best of the editor's knowledge) has not been printed before. It also includes an essay, "Is Man Immortal?" hitherto published only in the columns of some American newspapers.

Glancing through the pages of the new volume of The English Catalogue (1898-1900), I am struck by the fact that space might have been saved if the full names of authors had been less frequently employed. Why, for instance, should so long a name as "Rosa Nouchette Carey" be given more than once? In all the following entries it could be cut down to "Carey, R.N.," or "Carey, Rosa N." The point is a small one, but everything which might save space is worth considering, especially when so large a field is covered.

It seems that the biography of Mr. W. E. Gladstone, which Mr. Herbert Paul wrote for the Dictionary of National Biography, had to be cut down before publication by about two-thirds. It is now to be brought out in volume form, as originally written. Mr. Paul is more lucky than most contributors to Dictionaries. Let us hope that the publishers will be equally kind to others similarly placed. Some of the larger memoirs will well bear reproduction in separate volumes. Some day, perhaps, as has been suggested, the Dictionary will be split up into sections and re-issued in that fashion. Why not? The original work, in its completeness, would still remain an object of desire by thousands. Study nowadays is largely, almost necessarily, specialised, and why should not the big Dictionary be parcelled out into little Dictionaries of ecclesiastical, military, naval, literary, artistic, commercial biography, and so forth? Then would come the opportunity to supply omissions, to bring information down to date, and to expand the bibliographical element very considerably.

I think of christening myself anew. The fact is, I have been looking through Mr. Cockerell's little work on Bookbinding, and have read with mingled feelings the couple of pages he assigns to Bookworms. He quotes M. Jules Cousin as recommending that, where they show themselves, they should be confronted with pieces of linen soaked in essence of turpentine, camphor, or an infusion of tobacco. "A little fine pepper might also be scattered on the shelf." "Possibly," adds Mr. Cockerell, "Keating's Insect Powder would answer as well [as] or better than pepper." "Bookworms," he remarks, "do not attack modern books very much"—(which is a comfort). "Probably they dislike the alum put in the paste and the millboards made of old tarred rope." "Old tarred rope!" Can such things be? I join with my namesakes in their mute but practical protest.

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Mr. Thomas Hardy's New Poems.

Poems of the Past and the Present. By Thomas Hardy. (Harper & Brothers. 6s.)

In Mr. Hardy's new volume of poetry, even more than in his Wessex Poems, we are in the company of a profoundly serious sympathiser with human nature, a disillusioned observer of life, a frustrated searcher after divine purposes; while the curious mastery of sombre measures and grave and intricate rhyming schemes is even more noticeable—so much so that Mr. Hardy (like his friend and fellow-countryman, William Barnes, before him) seems often to have set himself difficulties for the mere pleasure of overcoming them, without in any way injuring the argument of the poem. But in no other way, save in an occasional mention of the same localities, is Barnes suggested. Between the lyrical cheerfulness and simple piety of the singer of Blackmoor Vale and Mr. Hardy's gloomy recognition of chaos and wrong the widest gulf is fixed. Barnes was, after Burns, perhaps as good an example of the natural poet as could be found. Mr. Hardy is too self-conscious, too deliberately rhetorical, too monotonously disenchanted, for the word poet to spring naturally to our lips at all in connection with this book. There is more of sheer poetry in his novels. Mr. Hardy has his lyrical moments, as we shall show later, although we feel that he has had difficulty in urging his vocabulary to keep pace with them; and we know perfectly well that, under happier conditions, he could sing with the best. But the time is not now. To-day it seems as if his world-weariness, his sense of the transitoriness, the illusion, of all happiness, so preoccupy him that for poetry pure and simple he has no time. He feels too strongly. His melancholia is so absorbing that anything extraneous, anything that might divert his mind towards something frankly beautiful or joyous, must be eschewed.

We are not complaining—we are merely stating the case. For this is a very remarkable book, which, personally, we would not have altered. Mr. Hardy's hopelessness is no pose; it is the genuine condition of mind reached, probably very unwillingly, by a sincere student of life, and expressed with great power and lucidity. No other living writer could have written this book.

Let us give, without further remarks, some idea of the character of the work. On page 111 is a poem "To an Unborn Pauper Child," suggested by the sentence of a magistrate: "She must go to the Union House to have her baby." We quote three stanzas:

> Had I the circuit of all souls
> Ere their terrestrial chart unrolls,
> And thou wert free
> To cease, or be,
> Then would I tell thee all I know,
> And put it to thee: Wilt thou take Life so?
>
> Fain would I, dear, find some shut plot
> Of earth's wide world for thee, where not
> One tear, one qualm,
> Should break the calm.
> But I am weak as thou and bare;
> No man can move the stony gods to spare!
>
> Vain vow! No hint of mine may hence
> To theeward fly: to thy locked sense
> Explain none can
> Life's dismal plan:
> Thou wilt thy ignorant entry make
> Though skies spout fire and blood and nations quake.

The prominent notes of Mr. Hardy's thought are struck there: the helplessness of man, the unavoidability of destiny, the carelessness of the gods. It is wrong to say that he sees no good in life; on the contrary, he sees much. The very fact that men and women, the sport of Fate, can be friendly to each other—that they are subject, in a word, to such an impulse as that which has prompted Mr. Hardy himself to address the unborn pauper child in these kindly verses—would probably be to him sufficient reason for continuing the present scheme of things, however awry. Hence the effect of the book, though sad, is also sweet, for we remember no work that, between the lines, so urges kindness and tolerance between man and man. When Heaven is blind and hard let us be doubly watchful and considerate—that is Mr. Hardy's implicit moral.

Take these stanzas from another poem, "The Bedridden Peasant to an Unknowing God":

> That some disaster cleft Thy scheme
> And tore us wide apart,
> So that no cry can cross, I deem;
> For Thou art broad of heart,
>
> And would'st not shape and shut us in
> Where voice can not be heard:
> 'Tis plain Thou meant'st that we should win
> Thy succour by a word.
>
> Might but Thy sense flash down the skies
> Like man's from clime to clime,
> Thou would'st not let me agonize
> Through my remaining time;
>
> But, seeing how much Thy creatures bear—
> Lame, starved or maimed, or blind—
> Thou'dst heal the ills with quickest care
> Of me and all my kind.
>
> Then, since Thou mak'st not these things be,
> But these things dost not know,
> I'll praise Thee as were shown to me
> The mercies Thou would'st show.

It is a very beautiful, a very Christian, type of Agnosticism that can prompt such a poem as that. Indeed, it has been left to Mr. Hardy, among non-believers, to construct a new gospel of kindliness, a spiritualised "service of man." The ordinary agnostic who has serious thought for his fellows offers a hard materialism in the place of the religion in which he finds no solace. Mr. Hardy, who is not ordinary, might be called an unbelieving mystic. This little poem, "The Subalterns," illustrates what we mean:

> "Poor wanderer," said the leaden sky,
> "I fain would lighten thee,
> But there be laws in force on high
> Which say it must not be."
>
> "I would not freeze thee, shorn one," cried
> The North, "knew I but how
> To warm my breath, to slack my stride;
> But I am ruled as thou."
>
> "To-morrow I attack thee, wight,"
> Said Sickness. "Yet I swear
> I bear thy little ark no spite,
> But am bid enter there."
>
> "Come hither, Son," I heard Death say;
> "I did not will a grave
> Should end thy pilgrimage to-day,
> But I, too, am a slave."
>
> We smiled upon each other then,
> And life to me wore less
> That fell contour it wore ere when
> They owned their passiveness.

Two other poems might be mentioned in this connection, wherein Mr. Hardy, for whom, the readers of Wessex Poems will remember, the dead have always a romantic fascination, sets up what is to us a new theory of life in the grave. This poem, dated 1899, first states the theory:

Digitized by Google

HIS IMMORTALITY.

I saw a dead man's finer part
Shining within each faithful heart
Of those bereft. Then said I: "This must be
His immortality."

I looked there on a later day,
And still his soul outshaped, as when in clay,
Its life in theirs. But less its shine excelled
Than when I first beheld.

His fellow-yearsman passed, and then
In later hearts I looked for him again;
And found him—shrunk, alas! into a thin
And spectral mannikin.

Lastly I ask—now aged and chill—
If aught of him remain unperished still;
And find, in me alone, a feeble spark,
Dying amid the dark.

In the poem that follows it, "The To-Be-Forgotten," the idea is carried further, the dead in the churchyard being overheard to complain, not of their first death, which is bearable, but of that second and final and dreaded death, when the last friend in whom their memory is being kept sweet on earth dies also.

We cannot think Mr. Hardy always successful. The poem describing the dream in which he visits Heaven to wrest from God some answer to the cry of the sons of earth is not what it should be. So tremendous an idea should be expressed finally the first time. Mr. Hardy has not given it the best form nor the dignity we expect from his verse. Again, "The Ruined Maid" is a mistake. The poem has six stanzas, but the first says all. Thus:

"O 'Melia, my dear, this does everything crown!—
Who could have supposed I should meet you in Town?
And whence such fair garments, such prosperi-ty?"
"O didn't you know I'd been ruined?" said she.

The rest is anti-climax.

We have left ourselves no space wherein to remark upon Mr. Hardy's war poems, which bear, as might be expected, rather upon those left behind than those at the front: the grief of the wives and widows, with a reminder, hardly to be avoided by one of Mr. Hardy's temperament, of the circumstance that the struggle is raging in the year of our Lord 1901. Nor have we left ourselves room to say anything of Mr. Hardy's poems of frustrated love, that persistent subject of his thoughts. There are several remarkable ironical lyrics on this theme (one sweetly tender lament, entitled "Lezbie Brown"), and a curiously chilling ballad, "The Return to Athelhall"; but the Wessex Poems had perhaps finer work in the same manner. Neither have we noticed Mr. Hardy's exercises in translation, or the dainty French forms which were popular some twenty years ago, and which he handles with much skill but rather too much gravity.

We prefer to end our remarks by quoting two other short poems complete. This sonnet, a kind of verse for which Mr. Hardy's deliberate movement and heavily Latinised vocabulary especially suit him, seems to us worthy to stand in any collection devoted to that measure:

IN THE OLD THEATRE, FIESOLE.
(April, 1887.)

I traced the Circus whose gray stones incline
Where Rome and dim Etruria interjoin,
Till came a child who showed an ancient coin
That bore the image of a Constantine.

She lightly passed; nor did she once opine
How, better than all books, she had raised for me
In swift perspective Europe's history
Through the vast years of Cæsar's sceptred line.

For in my distant plot of English loam
'Twas but to delve, and straightway there to find
Coins of like impress. As with one half blind
Whom common simples cure, her act flashed home
In that mute moment to my opened mind
The power, the pride, the reach, of perished Rome.

We quote now one of Mr. Hardy's reflective lyrics, a very memorable little poem:

MUTE OPINION.

I traversed a dominion
Whose spokesmen spoke out strong
Their purpose and opinion
Through pulpit, press, and song.
I scarce had means to note there
A large-eyed few, and dumb,
Who thought not as those thought there
That stirred the heat and hum.

When, grown a Shade, beholding
That land in lifetime trode,
To learn if its unfolding
Fulfilled its clamoured code,
I saw, in web unbroken,
Its history outwrought
Not as the loud has spoken,
But as the dumb had thought.

In these poems, as in his last volume, Mr. Hardy seeks to give poetic form to the poetry of the last majestic sentence of Tess.

In A.D. 2000.

Anticipations. By H. G. Wells. (Chapman & Hall. 7s. 6d.)

IF a man had tried in A.D. 1800 to forecast the state of affairs in A.D. 1900, what sort of a jumble would he have made of his prophecy? An acute thinker might certainly have foretold the spread of what is called democracy; he might conceivably have hinted at the development of the United States, and it is possible that he could have suggested the concentration of the German speaking peoples against the aggressiveness of the French. But if he had even noticed the pump-engine—which is unlikely—he would not have foreseen the Canadian-Pacific railway, the Atlantic cable, the telephone, and all that they imply. And this consideration makes one rather suspicious of the prophet who pries into the future and maps out the lives of our great-grandchildren. These Anticipations by Mr. Wells, however, have a special justification. The past century differed in an extraordinary way from all previous centuries. Hitherto the social systems of the world had all stood upon the same basis, whatever the variety of their developments. Horace and Pope could have met on equal terms, and discussed the backward and forward swing of the pendulum from the point at which they met. Under Augustus the wind blew men as fast across the sea, and the horse galloped as swiftly across the land, as could be expected under Anne, and except in certain speedier methods of destroying one's enemies, men found themselves in both epochs with the same problems to face and the same means of facing them. But with the nineteenth century the world left its groove. An unexpected, unprecedented influence came into force, sending it in quite another direction. Already it has sent it a certain distance. What will happen if that influence persists, as it must, and grows, as it almost certainly will? There is Mr. Wells's justification. He fastens on the new influence, indicates its present force and effect, and follows out the lines upon which it is impelling us. With these data he presents a rough sketch, filled in now and again with careful detail, of the world as it will be in A.D. 2000, a world which it is reasonable to suppose will differ from to-day's as much as to-day's differs from that of Pitt, Bentham, and Nelson. He puts aside such deflections as sentiment may cause—and even in a century of telephones and aeroplanes we have Christian Scientists and Satanists and occultists of all sorts; and there may come another Buddha, another Mahomet, another Messiah to set the world in another swing. But Mr. Wells follows sanely and soberly the lines of present development. What is to be the effect of this new influence which has already shown its direction? In the answer to the question the scientific imagination which is his serves him well. We will not lavish compliments, but say simply that his book, as a criticism and forecast of society, is a serious, important, and memorable work.

Digitized by Google

Let us indicate some of the results which Mr. Wells deduces from this new element which has entered into the life of the world. That phrase gives the clue. For in the future it is the life of the world which must be dealt with, and not that of this and that isolated autonomous society, hoeing its own furrow and eating its own bread. Ease and rapidity of travel and communication are throwing the world into a state of deliquescence. In his earlier chapters he traces the evolution of the railway from the pump-engine, and, following on from the development of motor-cars and the reorganisation of the present lines of traffic, foresees a London spreading over the whole of South-Eastern England, but containing a number of urban regions each with its own centre. But from the annihilation of distance by telephone, telegraph, and rapid transit follow social effects of much more import than a redistribution of population. In the old days a man had to live, as it were, over his shop, or at least in easy touch of his estate. The possession of wealth implied some sort of responsibility. A new class has sprung up: it embraces all classes but those of the abyss, as Mr. Wells terms it—a class of shareholders who are, in so far as their wealth from shares is concerned, functionless. And there is no sign that this class is not destined to persist. Hence Mr. Wells infers, for A.D. 2000, a class of shareholders who will be the ornamental part of society. On the other hand, the nineteenth century has produced the germ of another class—the engineers. By "engineers" Mr. Wells denotes all those whose business is with the mechanical side of life, from Sir John Aird to the plumber—who so far guards his ignorance as a woman guards her virtue. The railway, motor-car, cycle, and so forth, have begun to evolve a class of skilled and capable men, who must by the mere impulse of their employment become more and more capable as they seek the education and training necessary for new developments. And it is to this class of engineers that Mr. Wells looks for the salvation of the world-society when the inevitable moment arrives.

We have, then, as the constituents of the society of, say, A.D. 1950, the three classes—shareholders, engineers, and those of the abyss—for the offscourings of the social organism must always be with us. Here we may note a slight confusion. Why should the shareholder and the engineer be "sharply contrasted"? Even now, as Mr. Wells shows, nearly everyone of moderate means lives partly as a shareholder; and as this latter class tends to expand, it is probable that a capable engineer will not be blind to the advantages of investment. But if we take the broad distinction between the wealthy who do not care to work and the moderately well-to-do who need to supplement their means, the division may be a useful one. And in sketching the typical homes of the serious, strenuous engineer and of the wealthy shareholder Mr. Wells throws out a notable possibility. Will the shareholder be able to "buy up much of the womankind that would otherwise be available to constitute those severe, capable, and probably by no means unhappy little establishments to which our typical engineers will tend, and so prevent many women from becoming mothers of a regenerating world"? There is much in the present life of cities which points the question. "The life of a woman is all accident." A man's career depends mainly on himself; a woman's on the man with whom she associates herself.

> With the continued growth of the shareholding class, the brighter-looking matrimonial chances, not to speak of the glittering opportunities that are not matrimonial, will increase. Reading is now the privilege of all classes. There are few secrets of etiquette that a clever lower-class girl will fail to learn; there are few such girls, even now, who are not aware of their wide opportunities, or at least their wide possibilities, of luxury and freedom; there are still fewer who, knowing as much, do not let it affect their standards and conception of life. The whole mass of modern fiction written by women for women, indeed, down to the cheapest novelettes, is saturated with the romance of mésalliance.

Putting aside this alarming suggestion as a mere possibility, and passing over the forecasts of a society in which inquiries as to marriage status shall be as "bad form" as dinner-table squabbles over religious questions, we may ask how the capable engineer—the new, intermediate regenerating class—will enter into power. This will come, Mr. Wells thinks, by the inevitable development of "democracy"—the inverted commas will indicate Mr. Wells's opinion of this form of so-called government. The party machine requires an alleged "patriot." Patriotism does not flourish in the void; one needs a foreigner. A patriotic party is an anti-foreign party, and the party machine must insist on dangers and national differences to drive the voters to the polls.

> Nearer, and ever nearer the politicians of the coming times will force one another towards the verge, not because they want to go over it, not because anyone wants to go over it, but because they are, by their very nature, compelled to go that way; because to go in any other direction is to break up and lose power. And consequently the final development of the democratic system, so far as intrinsic forces go, will be, not the rule of the boss, nor the rule of the trust, nor the rule of the newspaper; no rule indeed, but international rivalry, international competition, international exasperation and hostility; and at last—irresistible and overwhelming—the definite establishment of the rule of that most stern and educational of all masters—War.

And then will come the turn of the engineers. War will no longer be a "thing of days and heroisms." Mr. Wells ignores the growing sentimentalism which—with other foolish qualities—we have shown in South Africa—and pictures the future war as a pitiless affair of disciplined imagination. But—it may be suddenly—it will become clear that the whole apparatus of power is in the hands of a new class of intelligent and scientifically-educated men—the roads and railways and carts and cities, the drains and food supply, water and electricity, with guns and curious implements of destruction. With the apparatus of control in their hands they may say

> "Suppose instead of our turning them and our valuable selves in a fool's quarrel against the ingenious and subtle guns of other men akin to ourselves, we use them in the cause of the higher sanity, and clear that jabbering war-tumult out of the streets"

That situation implies two things. Firstly, it implies that the engineers of the quarrelling nations are at one in knowledge and sympathy; and for that Mr. Wells has provided in his hypothesis. It is obvious, indeed, already, that science has no national frontiers. But secondly, we think, so momentous a decision implies a leader. Mr. Wells hints at the bare possibility of Cæsarism as a temporary expedient, but misses the path when he turns aside from it. And with this evolution of the capable man what language or languages will survive in that "large synthesis" of nations to which Panslavism, the union of the Latin nations, and so on points, to say nothing of the tendency of Americans to pay for introductions to English society—for a snob is a straw to show the wind's direction? The urban region developing between Chicago and the Atlantic is that marked out as the intellectual, political, and industrial centre of any permanent unification of the English-speaking States. And here, as in South Africa, English must win, while Welsh and Basque and Lithuanian must inevitably go under. In most places the man who speaks one of these and no other is practically dumb. But the victory of English as against French (which as against German has simplicity in its favour) is not assured. It is a matter of the engineering class again.

Digitized by Google

> Among peoples not actually subject to British or American rule, and who are neither waiters nor commercial travellers, the inducements to learn English, rather than French or German, do not increase. If our initial assumptions are right, the decisive factor in this matter is the amount of science and thought the acquisition of a language will afford the man who learns it There is neither honour nor reward—there is not even food or shelter—for the American or Englishman who devotes a year or so of his life to the adequate treatment of any spacious question, and so small is the English reading public with any special interest in science that a number of important foreign scientific works are never translated into English at all.

English, French, German, with the strange possibilities of Chinese; these will be the contending linguistic forces of the year two thousand.

A Great Intelligence.

The Life of Lord Russell of Killowen. By R. Barry O'Brien. (Smith, Elder. 10s. 6d. net.)

This life of a lawyer by a lawyer is a success. Mr. Barry O'Brien shares the late Lord Russell of Killowen's love of keeping to the point and putting the salient things in a clear light. A harmony between subject and writer is pleasantly felt all through the book, and is helped by the fact that Mr. O'Brien's biographical intentions were known to Lord Russell, who willingly talked to the purpose. Mr. O'Brien would drop into the Law Courts at luncheon time, find the Lord Chief at a simple repast in his room, and engage him in talk about his early and later practice. From the notes thus taken and the papers supplied by Lord Russell's family he has been able to construct a simple, lively, and convincing record of a man whose life presented, after all, no enigma. We all remember the Sir Charles Russell of countless causes celèbres. In the very newspapers you felt his power, his magnetism. It was a power that no one could dispute because it was personal. Lord Bowen described him as "an elemental force," and his biographer puts it well when he says that he was one of those men whose coming in and going out of a room made a difference. He was masterful in the smallest matters. Few men could refuse a game of cards with Russell if he wanted a game, which he generally did. When he was making his giant strides to the front on the Northern Circuit his roughness to solicitors was deeply resented. When reproached with this he said he could not help it: it all came of his intense interest in his cases. At a consultation he would say, without any preface whatever: "Well, Mr. A., I have read every word of your brief, and there is neither sense, fact, nor law in it from beginning to end." He was irritated by every sort of stupidity, delay, and affectation, and would snap at a solicitor for appearing before him in a fur-collared overcoat—a kind of dress he hated. Here is a story which illustrates the personal power of which we are speaking. After a long and hard fight in a case at Liverpool, Russell perceived that he had at last reached the minds of the jury. At this very moment the judge intervened to save the jury from his influence. There was a sharp altercation, in which Russell and the judge were really arguing for the future control of the case, and the situation was acute. While they discussed the point, the respectable family solicitor who had briefed Russell rose in all the benevolent dignity of his broadcloth and kid gloves and nicely-trimmed whiskers, and whispered with great deference, "Mr. Russell, you will allow me ——." "Damn you! sit down," was all he got, in a voice heard by judge and jury. "The effect," we read, "was electrical. The solicitor sat down. The judge said no more. The jury collapsed. He then blazed away fiercely for another half-hour without interruption from anyone. The judge delivered a Balaklava charge against him, but the jury gave a verdict in his favour without leaving the box."

"To what do you ascribe Russell's great success?" a friend said to Lord Coleridge; "he does not seem to me to possess more remarkable qualities than other eminent men, to be a better speaker, to have more intellectual power: how does he do it?" "He imposes himself upon the jury and the Court" was the answer, and his Lordship added: "He is the biggest advocate of the century." Someone else said: "It is a pity that Russell is not a little more tolerant of the judge." It is notorious that he cowed some judges. This mastery over persons became irresistible when it was perceived that to pierce through or resist it was only to find yourself in the presence of a complete mastery over facts. Russell was an intellectual gymnast, with not a lazy fibre in his being. He had a hunger for facts, an unrivalled common sense in dealing with them, and an impetuous determination to impose both his facts and conclusions on others. He seemed to be always rather more watchful, informed, and resolute than his stoutest opponents. In cross-examination it was just his remorseless directness that told. He once explained what he thought English juries liked as follows:

> In dealing with an English jury it is better to go straight to the point; the less finesse the better. It is different with an Irish jury. An Irish jury enjoys the trial. They can follow every turn of the game. They understand the points of skill; the play between an Irish witness and an Irish counsel is good fun, and they like the fun, and they don't mind the loss of time. They get as good value out of a trial as they would out of the theatre. With an English jury it is different. They are busy men, and they want to get away quickly. The great thing in dealing with an English jury is not to lose time. Mere finesse they don't appreciate; go straight at the witness and at the point; throw your cards on the table. It is a simple method, and I think it is a good method.

It was Russell's method, and it may be studied in perfection in his terrible cross-examination of Pigott in the Parnell inquiry, where the perspiration was soon streaming down the face of the forger under a hail of aimed and reasoned questions. Yet, at a pinch, Russell could use finesse, and he thought that one of his best pieces of work was the cross-examination of an adventuress, who called herself Miss Wilberforce, in Wilberforce v. Philp. It was a libel case, and Russell's task was rendered peculiarly difficult by the pretty, suppliant, mouse-like way of the plaintiff, who was accommodated with a seat on the Bench, in order that Mr. Justice Field, who was getting very deaf, might hear her evidence. She made the most of this position, and smiled and trembled her way into the Judge's heart. Russell saw that he must make his exposure gradual, and this he did. Miss Wilberforce's attempts to edge her chair nearer and nearer to the judge, who seemed to like it, became to Russell the measure of his failure. He had to play the game with great care. When, at last, on the third reassembling of the Court, the judge waved his hand toward the young lady, sharply saying: "Not so close, madam, not so close," Russell knew that his time had come, and he pressed her until her whole story was shown to be a fabrication.

Digitized by Google

Lord Russell married in 1859, when his uphill fight in London was but begun. In that year his earnings were £117; in 1860 they were £261; in 1861, £441; and in 1862, £1,016. In the following year he made £1,089; in 1864, £1,739; in 1866, £2,367; and in 1870, £4,230. In 1874 he made no less than £10,800, being engaged in many election petitions; and in the last whole year of his practice at the Bar (1893) he made £22,517.

The Lord Chief Justice's recreations were not Parnassian. His greatest pastime was horse-racing, of which he was an excellent judge. Cards he loved. He was happy at a dinner party and at a first-night at the theatre. The sort of play which pleased him best was a simple drama, founded upon some story of deep human interest." He liked good, straight, clean talk, but an unclean story he would not tolerate. He was not a great reader, and his acquaintance with current literature was superficial. Wishing to be civil to Mr. Stanley Weyman he said: "My young people, Mr. Weyman, speak constantly of your books, and tell me I ought to read them. I have read your Prisoner of Zenda with much pleasure." He read Shakespeare, and thought the most perfect lines of poetry were those in the "Merchant of Venice": "Look how the floor of heaven . . ." Moore's Melodies he knew from boyhood, when his mother had sung them in Ireland. Two books he always carried with him—Locke on the Human Understanding and the Imitatio Christi. Once, when ill at Leeds, he had the Adventures of Sherlock Holmes read to him.

Of Lord Russell's private life we have only glimpses, and those glimpses are discreet; and although again and again, in the course of the narrative, the reader has learned to see kindliness, generosity, and chivalry under a rough manner and an apparently impatient mind, he will find yet deeper cause to respect Lord Russell's character in the letter which he addressed to his daughter on her decision to take the veil

The Psychology of Battle.

Words By an Eyewitness: The Struggle in Natal. By "Linesman." (Blackwood. 6s.)

"Words by an eyewitness! You have there the words which a son of Adam, looking on the phenomenon itself, saw fittest for depicturing it." These words of Carlyle's are the note of this book, in which a certain large and simple interpretation of war as a death-struggle between two sets of men is ever present, giving it a position which, on the whole, is unique in the literature of the Boer War. "Linesman" is curious about the real Tommy Atkins and the real Boer, and about the true inwardness of fighting. He maintains that Tommy Atkins does not desire glory, and for our part we find less novelty in this proposition than he seems to anticipate we shall find in it. We never yet could detect in the mind of a returned British soldier the slightest recognition of glory, and we are quite prepared to hear that Tommy is an unconscious hero, who is "prone to forget, with surprising quickness, deeds which live for ever in the minds of his compatriots at home." "Linesman" adds: "He is everything, in fact, that a soldier should be, save in one particular; and it is difficult as an Englishman not to secretly accord him yet another good mark, when we learn that the missing virtue is cunning!"

Of the private soldier's coolness, "Linesman" gives many examples. The little camp affairs of the moment, like the serving out of tea, are not disturbed by shell-fire; and a man who thinks he is not receiving his full share maintains his grievance, and continues his grumbling even when his chances of ever drinking tea again are being awfully attacked. In the hottest hell of Colenso men were content with the ideas and jokes of Bird Cage Walk or Aldershot. Here is an instance: "Farther on, when we had entered that spitting, humming zone of rifle-fire, the like of which no living soldier had ever before witnessed, a bullet skimmed along the top of a man's head, just grazing the skin, and flicking off the hair in its course. Surely the time for a prayer, or even a shriek, if ever there were one. 'I've just had a free 'air-cut, mates!' was the only observation heard by the officer who witnessed this ghastly jest of the Pale One." That is admirably put. For it is the Pale One, of whom we all think of so vaguely and dreadfully, who is thus encountered.

What of the corporate feeling of an army in action? On this point, too, "Linesman" has interesting words. The unanimity of a mob we know, but "Linesman" says it is nothing to the unanimity of an army in which every man in the fighting line "is a moral sympicosometer in himself if he only knew it The emotions which speed along a fighting-line come sometimes almost as a shock to oneself; they are so resistless, often so inexplicable and disconnected with the actual events in progress. But they come all the same, and come to all at once; and a moment of joy, a week of gloom, to one is joy or gloom to all. The general who can create this joy or dissipate this gloom has nothing to learn in his profession." News, too, travels with inconceivable rapidity in the hour of crisis and knotted brows. Thus at Spion Kop: "The grass is set on fire and burns furiously, and all over the battlefield, as if sent by the telegraph-wire, runs the dreadful news that twenty wounded Boers are being immolated among the flames." When the blood is cool, and the fight all to begin, very different conditions prevail, and "Linesman" notes the curious hesitation "as to which side is to say 'Good morning' to the other first on any particular day, even though the situation is perfectly well-known to both."

There is no doubt that our author carried an unusual temperament through the hot fights about the Tugela, and kept it in the weird muddy retreats, and in the nights of chill and sodden rearguard misery in which he bore his part. Temperate, humane, resolute to observe Man as well as to be an English officer with the Boer for foe, he lifts the whole subject; and one is struck by his ability to broaden all his conceptions of war without relaxing his grip on his sword-hilt. His analysis of the Boer—whom he calls the most unclubbable man on earth—is patient, subtle, and, coming from a soldier, utterly modern. He thinks that the motives of the average fighting Boer have been a good deal misunderstood. That he desired conquest he does not believe: "the very notion of conquest, what it implies, and the advantages accruing from it, must necessarily be absent from minds stunted by generations of the pettiest agricultural calculations, and inhabiting bodies which have existed upon the same mealie fields since they became bodies." "Linesman" thinks that our average Boer took the rifle simply because he was told to. "He is not a heroic scoundrel, but an oafish, solid, slow, and obedient underling, who does 'what he is told,' and would not understand his Adelphi reputation if it were explained to him." In short, in the Boer nation he sees a dull majority controlled by a smart minority which has manufactured its ambitions, and he looks for a not very difficult transference of allegiance.

In a fine "L'Envoi," the writer considers more deeply the psychology and, as it were, the religion of war. Here is the spirit of Maeterlinck. Already, in an earlier chapter, he has told us that the memory of bygone battles renders a man more thoughtful and analytic than any other experience of life, and has made a good point when he says that one may see even in Napier's great narrative "how impossible it is for an eyewitness to describe the fights of civilised men without becoming dreamy and irrelevant." In the following passage "Linesman" pleads for the consecration of certain words, the words which, standing for the inmost realities of war, are yet squandered over the newspapers and flung into casual paragraphs. Such a word, for example, as hero:

Digitized by Google

> Reader, have you ever considered what it is to be dead, to be so far as this jolly old world is concerned Nihil, out of it, no more than a memory; to have loved company and now to be less intimate and companionable than the smoke curling up from your pipe; to have loved talk and beauty, and to be for ever silent and hideous; to have loved thought, and to have become but a thought? (Tis but an ancient platitude, all this, but we are by conspiracy kissing platitudes to get what return we may.) And more, have you considered what it is to be not only dead, but killed, casually and unimportantly killed, cut off as the poor beetle that we tread upon, with as little diminution of anguish as he, because great poets have sung of the mischance? Why, it is as if our strong runner again were to vanish in midstride, or a fine singer after one glorious note; it is as anything that is miserably ended in full and beautiful career, or but scarce begun, leaving behind the immense, because unmeasured, void of what it might have been. Thus all who go forth to meet the Pale Horseman in duty's name are but a shade less than heroes, very nearly quite heroes if they face him unmoved, as many, not all, face him, answering stare with stare as dreadful, planting firm feet when he rushes, joying not over-loudly when he departs and fades, turned by a stronger Horseman than himself, He who rides on the thunder, the Lord, and Omnipotent General of all hosts, living or dead.
>
> But would not the world do well to keep the order of "heroism" sacred to those whom the Pale One rides down, seeing in his sword-stroke the only accolade thereto, for, having fallen, they can do no more, neither with body nor spirit? Poor bodies, how low they lie; happy spirits, how high they soar, both at the extremest end of all things; should not some extremest title of all be theirs, and what better, if not already too debased, than that of hero?

We had marked many other passages for quotation, but must perforce leave them. However, even slighter efforts to interpret these remarkable pages would have served: they speak for themselves. More, perhaps, than any other book which the struggle in South Africa has evoked, this record relates itself to the war not of to-day only but to the war of to-morrow—to all war between civilised nations.

Mr. Lang on Tennyson.

Alfred Tennyson. By Andrew Lang. (Blackwood. 2s. 6d.)

It is with faint expectation of pleasure to come that one opens most books on Tennyson. The dish is so much better than the trimmings; and, moreover, it needs so little help to enjoy Tennyson! With a different relish, however, one approached the little volume in the series of "Modern English Writers" which bears the name of Andrew Lang; and there is no disappointment. Here, at any rate, is a book on Tennyson which one reads with pleasure. In the first place, Mr. Andrew Lang, if not a Tennyson, is himself a poet;——that little more, and how much it is! when a poet is to be dealt with.

You are easily able to discern Mr. Lang's trained sense of poetic significance at the outset. Anecdotes of the child Tennyson we have had often, with no apparent discrimination of what was salient in them. But Mr. Lang sifts them, and picks out unerringly the two or three which have a foreshadow of character. In Tennyson's childish cry, "I hear a voice that's speaking in the wind," in his early haunting by the phrase, "Far, far away," he perceives the mystical nature-sense so strong in the man. At the age of eight the poet wrote a line:

"With slaughterous sons of thunder rolled the flood," which he thought amazingly fine, though "great nonsense" to his mature judgment. "It was fine," says Mr. Lang, with instant sensitiveness, and Mr. Lang is surely right. Meaning is not its strong point, but there is a power of movement very singular in such a child, and strikingly Tennysonian, as Mr. Lang again remarks.

This swift sense of what things are noble and of good repute in poetry it is which enables Mr. Lang so successfully to achieve the uneasy feat of reburnishing (so to speak) a great poet about whom all the things have been said. His mere criticism is mostly excellent, and excellently illustrated. Once he gets the chance of making what will be to many of this day a novel point, as we confess it is to us, and seizes it with all his dialectic quickness. He shows beyond cavil that the teachings (if you can call anything so little dogmatic by so dogmatic a word) of In Memoriam are far from the mere echoes of Tennyson's day and contemporaries which a neglect of dates has allowed us to conclude them; that the eminent teachers who harmonise with him had not begun to write when the poem appeared. Especially, and with special force of surprise, does he show this regarding the evolutionary stanzas of In Memoriam. They were written before Robert Chambers' Vestiges of Creation was published, and long before Darwin, Huxley, and other apostles of evolution had begun to sound the trumpet. In regard to In Memoriam, Mr. Lang has done Tennyson important service altogether.

Here, and again over the Idylls of the King, he crosses swords with Mr. Frederick Harrison, and his trick of fence was never more adroit. That Tennyson has belied the Arthurian epic by introducing a chivalry, a sense of conscience, a mildness of manners, and advancement of ethics in general foreign to his sources (as Mr. Harrison asserts), he disproves utterly. His gaiety of fight, as he quotes text after text from Malory in Tennyson's support, to the confounding of Mr. Harrison, is irresistible. His sly irony plays like autumn lightning.

But if Mr. Lang is always interesting, his book is not ideal. He gives us, it must be confessed, a mere thread of biography. And there is a certain superficiality about the book which betrays the hand of the ready journalist. His praise is too unlimited. One cannot quarrel with it in any important particular, but one gets from him no glimpse of Tennyson's defects or limitations. It is, perhaps, an important particular that he speaks of Tennyson's later work in the same strain of eulogy which he employs with regard to the earlier work. One would think that "The Ring," "Merlin and the Gleam," "The Churchwarden and the Curate," were still on the same plane with Œnone," "Ulysses," or "Love and Duty." Even the "Voyage of Maeldune," one of the few later poems which retains a likeness of the early splendour, lacks something of the absolute magic of the earlier work, but Mr. Lang would never lead you to think so. Even with regard to that earlier work, he has some curious indiscriminations of judgment. The "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington" he calls "a splendid heroic piece." Yet it was surely a failure in its first form, and careful revision has failed to make it more than a poem of lines and passages, craftsmanlike, but uninspired as a whole. Tennyson had the stately manner, but not the central furnace-fire required for the Ode; and he felt this, for he never really essayed it again. Mr. Lang tells the reader that the Idylls are not (in his opinion) the crown of Tennyson's work; but he is too busy in defending them against the excessive attack of Mr.

Digitized by Google

Frederick Harrison to let the reader know why and how they fall short of Tennyson's greatest.

Again, Mr. Lang's allusiveness is somewhat exasperatingly in evidence. It deflects him into tags which are purposeless, and, obiter dicta, which are superfluous and often aggressive. Having mentioned Jowett's suggestion of poetical topics to Tennyson, he turns aside to discuss the Master of Balliol's taste—or want of taste—in Burns, which has nothing whatever to do with his advice to Tennyson. He cannot mention the Bride of Lammermoor, but he must tell us (in parenthesis) that Thackeray dropped his acquaintance with that novel after losing his hat in the Kelpie's Flow. A well enough scrap of anecdote, but what is it doing dans cette galère? He cannot discuss the woman question (in itself an excrescence) à propos of The Princess, but he must fling in the reader's face the assertion that "two names exhaust the roll of women of the highest rank in letters—Sappho and Jane Austen." It is an assertion needing an essay for its defence, and it is tossed out gaily in a popular book on Tennyson! The reader has full right to resent both the statement and the manner of its presentment.

Indeed, throughout the book Mr. Lang goes out of his way to rouse animosities. We sympathise, for instance, with his deftly ironical defence of Tennyson against the aggressively materialistic or agnostic critics who have attacked his principles, or the "Little Englanders" who dislike his politics. But was it necessary, is it even fair, to write as if the majority of younger critics belonged to this kind? There is, in fact, an acid assumption (implied, if not asserted) that Mr. Lang stands superiorly alone, the last of a school from which we have all degenerated. And that does no good to Mr. Lang or his cause, with which we might otherwise have no quarrel.

A Man of Empire.

Life of Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I., &c. By Francis Henry Skrine. (Longmans. 16s.)

A MERE recital of the heads of the life work of this great Anglo-Indian would devour our space. The direction of the Statistical Survey of India was perhaps his greatest task as a civil servant. But Sir William Wilson Hunter had the pen of a ready writer, and he made it the servant of his career. We will not attempt even a catalogue of his books, which are of the monumental order; but lovers of Thackeray should remember that his Thackerays in India is the repository of much interesting information about the great novelist's early years. With Mr. Kipling, too, Sir William Hunter came into interesting contact. He reviewed the third edition of Departmental Ditties in the ACADEMY in 1888, and this was the first English review that reached Mr. Kipling. The conclusion of this article is worth recalling, for it suggests the life and interests of both men and the India they loved:

> Besides the silly little world that disports itself throughout most of these ditties, there is another Anglo-Indian world which, for high aim and a certain steadfastness in effort after the personal interest in effort is well-nigh dead, has never had an equal in history. Some day a writer will arise—perhaps the destined man—who will make that noble Anglo-Indian world known as it really is. It will then be seen by what a hard discipline of endurance our countrymen and countrywomen in India are trained to do England's greatest work on the earth. Of this realistic side of Anglo-Indian life Mr. Kipling also gives us glimpses. His serious poems seem to me the ones most full of promise. Taken as a whole, his work gives hope of a new literary star of no mean magnitude arising in the East.

Ten years later Sir William had seen the star rise and been satisfied. He writes to Mr. Kipling about a theme remote (apparently) from Indian life. He had been struck by the small size of the Atlantic fishing craft described by Mr. Kipling in Captains Courageous, and wrote to ask him for the actual dimensions and tonnage of these schooners, adding that they seemed to "throw valuable light on the achievements of English seamen from Cabot's expedition in 1497 down to the establishment of the East Indian Company in 1600." A word about Hunter's own magnum opus, The History of British India. Few historical works of modern times present a nobler literary ambition. We reviewed the first volume in April, 1899; of the second Hunter lived to complete 323 pages. He knew the value of this work, and wrote to Sir George Birdwood: "I have done a good piece of work in the History, and I know it. So let the world wag. Whatever the reviewers may say or not say about it now, those who really wish to learn the facts about India will find them there and there alone." Although this biography is of the bulk that all too frequently makes us groan, it is but suitable to the spaciousness of Hunter's life. He was a man of Empire. One curious fact we cull as we go: Green's Shorter History killed a favourite scheme of Hunter's to write a work on exactly similar lines.

Other New Books.

Widow Wiley, and Some Other Old Folk. By "Brown Linnet." (Seeley. 6s.)

This is a collection of sixteen rustic and industrial "idylls." The word is already old-fashioned, and the book, too, seems old-fashioned; it is an essay in a mode of yesterday. Yet, though the very name of idyll must be offensive to those who have suffered under the plague of sentimental exercises that followed the proto or "Auld Licht" idyll, "Brown Linnet's" book is not unattractive. It is simple, even artless, and quite free from any sort of affectation; it must be the frank, unmannered expression of a mind that observes and feels sincerely, if not with much originality or power. The records of the marriage of a bachelor of eighty with a widow of seventy odd, through the death of an old sow; of Mrs. Brown's visit to the Manor House and her tea-drinking while the mistress, the Hon. Miss Hurst, lay under the sofa; of the peculiarities of the dame who kept the village shop; of the poetry and death of the "miner poet,"—these utter trivialities, with others of the same kind, are set down with a charming naiveté, and—we must add—with a literary breeding, that almost redeem them from the sin of being negligible. What the book chiefly lacks is mere force. And "Brown Linnet" seems able to achieve pathos only by means of an unexpected death. In this matter she ranges herself with all the great army of the idyllists:

> Never again would that childish laugh ring out over the fields, where the ox-eyed daisies were growing taller and taller in the grass—for Gladdy was going away—going away for good.
>
> The glow fell full upon old Johnnie's face. He was smiling contentedly.
>
> They were together again.

"Brown Linnet" is mistaken: that childish laugh will go on "ringing out" so long as there is an author in the land who cannot distinguish between the true and the false pathos. As for that "glow" which invariably falls full on the dying faces of aged persons, surely it must by this time bring a cruel smile to the mouth of the least hardened! Such passages, so feebly invented, are blots on an otherwise agreeable volume. The photographic illustrations disclose an extraordinary ingenuity on the part of the photographer, and they are good examples of camera-work. We have, however, an instinctive objection to them. The camera cannot lie, but the subjects of the camera can lie, and these pictures, in their woodenness and artificiality, give the lie to life.

Digitized by Google

Fancy Free. By Eden Phillpotts. (Methuen. 6s.)

We are sorry to have to say that Mr. Phillpotts' fall below his true level, in the pages of this book, is prodigious. As in turning it over we think on the one hand of the patient, sincere work of his Children of the Mist, and on the other of the light, debonair humour of The Human Boy, we find ourselves wondering, by the light of the ordinary artistic conscience, how competent and serious authors in full career come to permit unequal medleys, dating from outgrown periods, to be put forth. Can it be the influence of the agent, against which Mr. Heinemann, speaking in the interests of Literature, has been inveighing? The question of expediency alone should deter them. Here is Mr. Phillpotts, who is just taking a high place among English novelists, and also among humorists, asking his readers to welcome a miscellany of old exercises in the New Humour, over which, with the best feeling towards their author, we have been unable to beat up the faintest smile.

From Cyprus to Zanzibar. By Edward Vizetelly. (Pearson.)

Those who have read Mr. A. H. Beaman's Twenty Years in the Near East will find much that is familiar in this volume of the veteran journalist, Mr. Edward Vizetelly; but they will find it all freshly told, and will see it through the spectacles of another individuality. Mr. Vizetelly was in Athens when he learned, in 1878, that Cyprus had been added to the British Empire, and he at once joined the rush to the island. He met with many queer adventures there, which he tells with much humour. Having exhausted the resources of Cyprus, Mr. Vizetelly then went on to Egypt, "the land of miracles," in February, 1882, arriving just in time to be in the thick of the Arabi Pasha movement. Here he saw everything, and describes the events of those stirring times in cheery and unconventional style. After they had settled down, Mr. Vizetelly joined Mr. A. H. Beaman on the Times of Egypt, and later on had an unpleasant experience over a libel action, which resulted in imprisonment. However, he prosecuted his enemy for perjury, and gained a verdict. His best adventure was with Mr. James Gordon Bennett, for whom he went as special correspondent to Zanzibar, to meet Stanley returning from his great expedition. He successfully carried out his mission for the New York Herald, and presented Stanley with an American flag, his efforts being rewarded with £2,000 from Mr. Bennett. The book gives one the impression of having been written at top speed. The English is rather slovenly; and there are anecdotes of persons connected with the Near East which it would have been in better taste to have omitted. But Mr. Vizetelly is no respecter of persons; he seems to have been always more or less "agin the Government," and to have a happy knack of falling in and out of adventures.

Nearly seven hundred years have rolled by since Mr. John Iwyn, of Stinking Lane, in the parish of St. Nicholas Shambles, gave a property in that salubrious neighbourhood to the first party of Franciscans who settled in the City of London. The Grey Friars monastery grew in wealth and unlikeness to the ways and aims of St. Francis, was despoiled by Henry VIII., became a City hospital for foundlings, and finally, in 1552, a school filled with waifs of the streets, of whom we read that many "dyed downe righte" when taken from their native dunghills into "swete and cleane keping." Charles Lamb, Coleridge, Leigh Hunt, and the rest came to the school—no other than Christ's Hospital—later; and now the Bluecoat School is moving to Horsham, and the old buildings are likely to come down or be absorbed in St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The famous Newgate Street railings will be a memory, and a brag of our latter years. Now the rest of the chronicles of Christ's Hospital, are they not written in Annals of Christ's Hospital, by Mr. E. H. Pearce (Methuen. 7s. 6d.) —a well-compiled and well-illustrated record?

The wild red deer hunting of Somersetshire and Devon is a world of its own, full of moor-craft and wood-craft and local lore. It is the subject of Mr. Philip Evered's admirably-illustrated volume, Stag Hunting with the Devon and Somerset, 1887-1901 (Chatto). You need not be a follower of these hunts, or have ever seen an antlered deer pounding over Dunkery, to enjoy these pages, in which the breeze and the heather and the warmth of rocks and the music of hounds are recalled. "They are off over the Holnicote Vale, by way of Luccombe Mill and Blackford," and so on by places like Up Manor Allotment, Kittucks, and Sweetworthy Coombe. It is inspiring to hear of certain great deer that for years have defied the huntsman, like the great Nott stag of Dunkery, or the switch-horned stag of Haddon, or the old one-horned stag that still roams Dunkery. The huntsmen, too—men like Huxtable, of the Devon and Somerset, and old Jim Wensley, the harbourer —are interesting.

We recently referred to the kind of bookseller's assistant who, when asked for Pepys's Diary, will reply: "Sorry, we don't stock that, sir, but we have Letts's." This, however, is the season when the real catastrophe is to be offered Pepys's Diary in lieu of the ever-punctual and useful Letts's. We have received our usual generous batch of diaries for 1902 from this firm, which, it is no secret, is Messrs. Cassell. For scribbling and business purposes the Rough Diaries No. 31 and 33, with their interleaving of blotting paper, are all that can be desired. For private or literary purposes commend us to the veldt-like expanses of Letts's No. 1, although the octavo No. 9 will meet most people's requirements. Some very good leather pocket diaries, with the usual postal and other information, complete the batch. Firm binding and good all-round workmanship continue to be the features of these indispensable diaries.

Photograms of the Year 1901 (Dawbarn and Ward) is an interesting record for the ever-growing photographic public. It shows by scores of examples how photographic artists are seeking to produce the effects of manual art, even the subtlest. Titles like "When the Gloamin' Fa's," "Day Dreams," and "In and In and Out, Turn and Turn About," almost persuade us that we are giving up our umbrella at Burlington House. The volume is not without literary interest, for it contains the portrait of Mr. Bernard Shaw which helped to inspire his recent rhapsody on the Sun as an artist, at the expense of bunglers like Rembrandt and Velasquez. A fine portrait it is, we admit, but we notice that the Sun is frequently glad to work "after" Mr. Leader, Mr. MacWhirter, Mesdag, and the Glasgow impressionists.

Among new editions we have received Dr. Conan Doyle's The Great Boer War (Smith, Elder. 7s. 6d.), of which, says the author, "there is hardly a page which has not been worked over." Mr. Lane begins his issue of Anthony Trollope's novels with Doctor Thorne (2s. net). The size is "pocket," and the print excellent. Students of Mr. Meredith's novels should not overlook the really excellent pocket edition now being issued by Messrs. Constable. The volumes are almost magically light and thin, yet the paper has substance and the type is excellent. The novels will make fifteen volumes, and these are issued at 2s. 6d. net each in cloth, or 3s. 6d. net in limp leather.

Digitized by Google

Fiction.

Seven Books for the Home, and Another.

The Marriage of Laurentia. By Marie Haultmont. (Sands & Co.)
The Awakening of Helena Thorpe. By Rentoul Esler. (S. W. Partridge.)
The Fortune of Christina M'Nab. By S. Macnaughton. (Methuen.)
T' Bacca Queen. By T. Wilson Wilson. (Arnold.)
Ivy Cardew. By Perrington Primm. (Jarrold & Sons.)
Sylvia's Ambition. By Adeline Sergeant. (Hodder & Stoughton.)
Flower and Thorn. By Beatrice Whitby. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THIS batch of stories is essentially the kind of fiction serviceable at the present time of year. Moreover, these are the kind of books wanted by a large class of people, the people who may be said practically to devour light literature, and to whom quantity must, in consequence, be almost the supreme necessity. To the inveterate novel reader any one of them would be a welcome present, while they fill besides a gap that grows enormously as fiction becomes more and more a medium of many things besides a wholesome story, relying for its successful sale mainly upon the popularity of its plot.

Frankly, these are novels for the unliterary, a fact which does not prevent them, however, from being perfectly readable and interesting. They are not the best, but it is incontestable that to a great number they will be infinitely less difficult to digest than a literature with more elaborate intentions. The Marriage of Laurentia, Ivy Cardew, The Awakening of Helena Thorpe, Flower and Thorn, and The Fortune of Christina M'Nab, are all novels to give confidently to the young person. In saying this it is by no means implied that they are only suitable to the young person, but that they have all pleasant, cheerful plots, and are not concerned with the more questionable side of existence and humanity. The young girl marrying the rich and desirable husband for the sake of an impoverished family, and, after various tribulations, finding the desirable affection in the choice made, is the theme of both Laurentia's Marriage and The Awakening of Helena Thorpe, and no plot is more popular among a certain class of readers. In life, it is possibly more frequent to marry the desirable husband from a personal hankering after riches than as victim to the importunities of distressing relatives; but, if the psychology might be more relentlessly human, the charm of the heroine would be sensibly less, and the glowing love scene at the end probably unattainable. Ivy Cardew, the account of a lonely child's affection for a man eighteen years her senior, whom she subsequently marries, possesses much the same atmosphere. A slight vulgarity of tone offends here and there, but, on the whole, the story is pleasant enough, and entirely devoid of harrowing incidents. T' Bacca Queen and Sylvia's Ambition are, to a certain extent, in a different class. In these, unrighteousness is touched upon, though, on the whole, slightly and unobtrusively. There is no condonement of the sinner, moreover, and the deserving heroines are made happy in both. Flower and Thorn deals principally with the difficulties of the early years of married life. Here the subject itself is almost congested with possibilities. Nothing is more virgin ground to interesting treatment than the days subsequent to the marriage service. Miss Whitby's new novel, however, is not a study in unrelaxing realism. It is an account of the more trivial domestic disillusions, and flows over an undercurrent of encouraging optimism.

Of them all, perhaps The Fortune of Christina M'Nab is the best reading. The story has both shrewdness and humour, and shows more direct observation than any of the previous volumes. Some of the character sketches—that of Mrs. Welkes for one—are excellent, and the personality of Christina herself is fairly convincing. Her visits among the aristocracy, for the double purposes of learning how to become a lady and of marrying a lord, provide some amusing writing.

Taking these volumes en masse, however, they may be said to float well above any turbid revelations. The theory that all modern novels are unfit for family reading should be pleasantly loosened by them. Here are seven new novels, and all are free from the muddy darknesses at the depths, and possessed of an optimistic undercurrent too rarely found in fiction.

A Modern Antæus. By the Writer of An Englishwoman's Love-letters. (Murray. 6s.)

That the "writer" of the E. L-L. (one is obliged to invent an abbreviation) could put a story neatly together we knew, and also that he could be sentimental prettily, and handle a metaphor with the cleverest neo-Meredithian of them all. This novel carries us no further than his first effort. It is precisely the book one would have predicted from him. The very chapter-headings proclaim the writer's limitations:

> "Showing that out of a mare's nest may spring night-mare."
> "Arboreal Childhood."
> "Tristram's heart has its growing-pains."
> "Antæus drops to earth."

The book is so obviously inspired by Meredith, and the hero so obviously drawn from the young man whom Adrian Harley patronised, that it would have been no shock to find a chapter headed:

> "Crisis in the apple-disease."

"The reader will by this time be perceiving that what is to be told here is history and not fiction." So begins the fifth chapter (doubtless the "writer" had the E.L-L. in mind). But the fact is that the story is essentially conventional. A whole generation of novel-readers are acquainted with the Tristram Gavneys of fiction, those naughty boys so wise and strange as children, who grow up a sorrow to their misunderstanding parents, and then die off, like boy-sopranos in drawing-room ballads, in the last chapter but one. Fifty episodes proclaim the precise character of the youth. Here is one:

> "I'm not tired," said Tristram, "I went to sleep in the cart." But he went and curled himself down on the coat. One of his queer instincts was to judge of people with whom he wished to make friends by the smell of their raiment. Before altogether trusting him he wished to know what sort of smell this new acquaintance carried about with him. A very brief sniff approved to his judgment the man he had to deal with: the coat actually bore the scent of lavender.

A dainty touch, but surely those two "wents" at the beginning reveal an oversight on the part of the fastidious "writer." The following is an example of the "writer's" ingenuity:—"Young life picking out its five-fingered exercises sounds monotonous when heard without intermission; only now and then does accented experience break in on the routine. Then the exercise changes and becomes a sort of tune; out of it the gods get humorous promptings of what troubles their puppet is likely to be in hereafter, and, having heard, set the callow tunester back again to his stiff digital drill."

On the whole, a bon-bon.

Digitized by Google

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE FIRST MEN IN THE MOON. BY H. G. WELLS.

With pictures, which are quite as wonderful as the adventures of the travellers. One of them is marooned on the moon. This holiday flight of Mr. Wells's imagination appeared in the pages of the Strand Magazine. Chapter III. is "The Building of the Sphere," Chapter VI. is "The Landing on the Moon," and in Chapter XXIV. we find this: "Of the condition of the moon sexes, marrying and giving in marriage, and of birth and so forth among the Selenites, I have as yet been able to learn but little. I am of opinion that, as with the ants and bees, there is a large majority of the members in this community of the neuter sex." (Newnes. 6s.)

STORIES IN THE DARK. BY BARRY PAIN.

Ten studies in the grotesque and the terrible. There are books—too many of them indeed—warranted to cure insomnia. Given the right nervous temperament in the reader these condensed and inexplicable horrors should ensure it. "The Undying Thing," "The Gray Cat," "The Green Light" are some of them. (Grant Richards. 1s.)

THE FIREBRAND. BY S. R. CROCKETT.

Those who like Mr. Crockett's robustious manner of telling a story, his "midnoon" style, his damsels in distress or in trousers, and his method of flicking a character in your face, will like The Firebrand. His is not the good old way of gently introducing a character. No! Mr. Crockett begins "right there," like this: "Ramon Garcia, called El Sarria, lay crouched like a wild beast. And he was a wild beast. Yet he smiled as he blinked into the midnoon heat, under his shaggy brows, from his den beneath the great rock of limestone that shadowed him." (Macmillan. 6s.)

SONS OF THE SWORD. BY MARGARET L. WOODS.

A Romance of the Peninsular War. "The young man smiled insolently." "To what, then, do you pretend, Mademoiselle?" . . . "I pretend, Monsieur le Colonel, to nothing in the world, except some personal tastes!" "There was a silence in the room: only the stiff plastron of gold on the soldier's strong chest crackled a little." "And, I do not suit, then?" (Heinemann. 6s.)

FOMA GORDYEEFF. BY MAXIM GORKY.

Translated from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. There are two frontispieces to the volume: one a portrait of the author, whose pseudonym, we are informed, signifies "the bitter one"; the other a photograph of "Nizhni Novgorod and the Volga." The story, which is realistic, is about the merchant class in Eastern Russia, who make their living on the Volga. The author, who is becoming known in this country, has been in turn shoemaker, pedlar, painter, dock-hand, baker and tramp. (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

THE TORY LOVER. BY SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

Historical, introducing Paul Jones, and mainly concerned with the voyages of the "Ranger." Captain Paul Jones "might have shipped his crew on the river many times over. The ease of teaching England to let the colonies alone was not spoken of with such bold certainty as at first, and some late offences were believed to be best revenged by such a voyage as the 'Ranger' was about to make." A portrait of Mary Hamilton is given as frontispiece. (Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.)

CHRISTOPHER DEANE. BY E. H. LACON WATSON.

"A character study at school and college." Christopher Deane was "the hope of the family." After two years at the Market Atherstone Grammar School, he went to Winchester, thence to Cambridge. The story is told by his friend, who remarks at the end of the book: "It is now some seven years since I saw Deane off on his voyage. A good deal has happened in that time, to both of us. He has seen life—and death—in the Soudan, where he acted as correspondent during the late campaign." (Elkin Matthews. 6s.)

CONCERNING SOME FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY. BY NEWTON SANDERS.

A modern story—slight and mild, with a Great Thought at the beginning of each chapter, and, on the title-page, this:

> I want the moon, the silver moon. . . .
> Only when dying, man ceases sighing,
> For that moon.

Kitty Crofton was "young, charming, and very daintily dressed in some kind of pink fluffiness." Kitty's hat blew off. The Rev. Peter Winch "gallantly leaped into the stream, rescued the hat, and, wading to the bank, handed it to its fair owner." (Sands. 6s.)

THE PROVING OF PRISCILLA. BY LOUIE BENNETT.

Mainly concerned with Priscilla. The first chapter is devoted to her childhood, and includes some extracts from her diary. On page 54 Priscilla and John Lennox are married, and the "proving of Priscilla begins." A well-told story: those who like to be entertained by the domestic troubles of others will like the book. The motto on the title-page is Browning's "I go to prove my soul, &c." (Harpers. 6s.)

THE END OF AN EPOCH. BY A. LINCOLN GREEN.

"Being the personal narrative of Adam Godwin, the Survivor." Says the narrator—"I have shrunk so many times from attempting to write an account of the last ten years that I doubt, even now, whether I shall have the resolution to complete it. At best it can only be a lame and feeble story, for the task of preparing a fitting record of the Calamity which overwhelmed mankind soon after the close of the Victorian era is wholly beyond my power." The Calamity was the Great Epidemic that swept over the surface of the world "like the huge shadow of an eclipse." (Blackwood. 6s.)

THE IDEALIST. BY GROVE JOHNSON.

The cover shows the Idealist gazing, in a rapt attitude, at a piece of sculpture placed against a green curtain. The story opens in the Junior Common Room, where the occupants had assembled "for the last debate of the season." The subject was—"Whether, in the opinion of this House, has Science or Art the greater influence upon Religion?" (Greening. 6s.)

THE FALL OF LORD PADDOCKSLEA. BY LIONEL LANGTON.

A presentment of modern politics and political society, "dealing, under thinly-veiled disguises, with many of the leading personages of the day." It begins: "George Stukeley and Robert Forbes were Liberal members of Parliament, but not of the conventional type—neither coal-owners, cotton spinners, stockbrokers, company promoters, nor merchants of tea, butter, or soap. . . . They were young country gentlemen of easy fortune, belonging to Whig families of some historical repute." (Heinemann. 6s.)

We have also received War to the Knife (new edition), by Rolf Boldrewood (Macmillan, 6s.); An Island Interlude, by John Amity (Long); Forbidden Paths, by Marcus Reay (Long); Shrouded In Mystery, by the Misses Stredder (Drane); The Dropping of an H., by Ina Garvey (Drane); The King's Guide, by Naunton Covertside. (Simpkin, Marshall.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
" Quarterly 5/0
" Price for one issue /5

The Richardson Revival.

Is Life Long Enough?

THERE are signs that Samuel Richardson, who was compared by his contemporaries with Moses, Homer, Euripides, Sophocles, and even with the Deity, is once more to enjoy a "vogue": which is to say that his novels, charmingly printed and illustrated, will be bought even if they are not read. And we do not think that they will be read, beyond the respective first volumes of each novel. Richardson is not for the wireless age—an age which, since it has found itself unable to appreciate the great realists of the nineteenth century, will surely fail to appreciate the greatest realist of the eighteenth, disadvantaged as he is by grotesque mannerisms and an almost infinite tedium. Richardson is not dead; never will be. On the other hand, he is not alive, as Defoe and Fielding are kickingly alive. He is in the intermediate and unsatisfactory state of being "taken for granted." The fault is partly his own and partly that of Time, an agency responsible for quite as much injustice as justice. Richardson so intimately belonged to his century that no other century could hope fully to possess him. In the days when it was a case of Homer and Richardson (with Shakspere somewhere at the foot of this dual throne), Richardson's novels were read aloud in the family circle. At the pathetic passages the hearers would retire to their rooms to weep, and the reading was continued after they had regained command of themselves. We laugh at that; we must. We laugh also when we remember that Richardson, after fifty years of respectable and lucrative trading, began to write Pamela, not in the least at the bidding of a creative impulse, but upon the suggestion of two enterprising booksellers who wanted "a volume of familiar letters as patterns for illiterate country writers." Pamela is shorter than Clarissa, but it is as long as The Eternal City, and Richardson composed it from end to end—a quarter of a million words—in exactly two months. The whole circumstances of its production, and all its superficial characteristics, are against its acceptance by a public which has been forced by a dynasty of proud and self-conscious artists to regard the novel as a separate and highly specialised craft. Great novels, we say to our cultured selves, are not written so. Barring miracles, they certainly are not; and miracles have long since been disposed of. Nevertheless, if only we could recognise it, Richardson was a miracle—perhaps the supreme miracle of English fiction. Decidedly no writer was ever such an artist sans le savoir. Imagine the result of a dialogue between de Maupassant and Richardson on the art of fiction! It would be too funny! Yet we doubt whether any novel in English conforms more perfectly to the ideals which vitalise Une Vie, that relentless tragedy of a woman, than Clarissa, that equally relentless tragedy of a woman. We doubt whether any two novels are more at one in their inmost spirit than these two.

And here we shall try to show that Richardson, despite his comical limitations, carried the naturalistic conception of the novel higher than it had ever been carried before, and left it high and dry at a point which no one in England succeeded in touching for more than a hundred years. Defoe was the first English novelist, in the modern sense of the term novelist; and although his greatest work, Robinson Crusoe, is a romance and therefore not naturalistic, he was in the main a naturalistic writer. Moll Flanders is an example of an absolutely naturalistic novel. In that admirable tale, no concessions are made to sentimentality. It is Life, rendered shapely, but otherwise untampered with. What, then, is the difference between Moll Flanders, the record of a courtesan, and say, de Goncourt's La Fille Elisa, the record of a courtesan? The difference is almost solely one of poignancy. We repeat that word—poignancy. One may read Moll Flanders unmoved, but not La Fille Elisa. Defoe realises his scenes with unerring accuracy of psychological and documentary detail, but he is not passionate; he does not make you feel that he feels; his detached and imperturbable coldness resembles that of the old chroniclers. He, in fact, chronicles; he sets down; he is intellectual rather than sensuous. He achieves none of that sympathetic and personal coloration which is the mark of La Fille Elisa, and of the distressing close of Une Vie. In other words, he is never pathetic. At that time pathos, in fiction, had, we think, only been compassed in verse. Swift, master of irony, made no attempt after either naturalism or sensuousness. Next came Richardson, who, at his first effort, failed. Pamela may have passages of pathos, but it is not consistently naturalistic. The sub-title, Or Virtue Rewarded, puts it instantly among the novels in which truth is sacrificed to moral or immoral purpose. We are all aware, as Richardson's contemporary readers must have been aware, that the figure of the virtuous and high-minded waiting-maid, who, by her excellent and sweet fortitude, turned an unscrupulous rake into an exemplary husband, is not drawn from life itself. After Pamela, Richardson imbibed through Addison the Aristotelian principles of dramatic art, and he made a new beginning. At the age of fifty-five, the printer, marvellously flowering like the giant cactus that flowers once in a generation, developed into the artist. To blossom so is sheer and mighty genius, and only on the hypothesis of transcendent genius can the brief phenomena of Richardson's artistic career be explained. There is nothing about virtue rewarded in Clarissa, and everything about virtue unrewarded. It is The History of a Young Lady: comprehending the most important concerns of private life; and particularly shewing the distresses that may attend the misconduct both of Parents and Children in relation to Marriage. This, in fact, is life, without sugar and cream, or any nonsense whatever. Richardson has been called sentimental, but, for our part, we have found no sentimentality in Clarissa. But we have found, side by side with grandeur and nobility, side by side with humour and wit, a naturalism as unflinching, complete, and exact, and a sensuous pathos as beautiful and moving, as any that the nineteenth century can show. This is high praise, even for Richardson, but it can be substantiated. For naturalism and unsentimentality see the character-drawing everywhere. For realism of the Zolaesque sort, see the unmatched narration of Clarissa's adventures under Mrs. Sinclair. For wit and humour see, amongst others, the earlier letters of Miss Howe. For sensuous pathos, read this fragment of an interview between Clarissa and her mother.

> You know, my dear, what I every day forego, and undergo, for the sake of peace. Your papa is a very good man, and means well; but he will not be controuled; nor yet persuaded. You have sometimes seemed to pity me, that I am obliged to give up every point. Poor man! his reputation the less for it: mine the greater: Yet would I not have this credit, if I could help it, at so dear > a rate to him and to myself. You are a dutiful, prudent, and a wise child, she was pleased to say, in hope, no doubt, to make me so; you would not add, I am sure, to my trouble: You would not wilfully break that peace which costs your Mother so much to preserve. Obedience is better than sacrifice. O my Clary Harlowe, rejoice my heart, by telling me I have apprehended too much! I see your concern! I see your perplexity! I see your conflict [loosing her arm, and rising, not willing I should see how much she herself was affected]. I will leave you for a moment—Answer me not—[For I was essaying to speak, and had, as soon as she took her cheek from mine, dropt down on my knees, my hands clasped, and lifted up in a supplicating manner]. I am not prepared for your irresistible expostulation, she was pleased to say. I will leave you to recollection: And I charge you, on my blessing, that all this my truly maternal tenderness be not thrown away upon you.

Digitized by Google

>
> And then she withdrew into the next apartment, wiping her eyes as she went from me; as mine overflowed; my heart taking in the whole compass of her meaning.

It is in such passages, and possibly only in such, that Richardson rises superior to Defoe at Defoe's best. But Richardson could not live up to Clarissa. In Grandison he fell away. Clarissa had been too true. The villain was so exasperatingly human that women loved him as they loved rakes in real life. This could not be countenanced, and Richardson pattern of virtue, wrestled with Richardson the artist and defeated him. Sir Charles Grandison is nearly as inhuman as the heir of Redcliffe.

Still, the naturalistic and sensuous novel had been accomplished. Fielding never accomplished it. Joseph Andrews was so far from naturalism as to be a confessed parody of Pamela. Jonathan Wild was another instance of the subordination of naturalism to satire. Tom Jones, immortal, is frequently caricature, and truth in it is often sacrificed to diversion. Amelia belongs to a more serious order of naturalistic art, but it is spoilt by the strained happy ending, just as Far from the Madding Crowd is so spoilt. In stating these obvious facts, we have no wish to exalt Richardson over Fielding; we consider Fielding to be the greater man; we merely assert that Richardson excelled in naturalistic art. There remained only one thing to be done for the novel, and Scott did it: he showed man amid the influences of inanimate nature. But Scott knew nothing of naturalism. Thackeray has been held to be a realist. But was he? Were any of the mid-Victorian novelists realistic in the Richardsonian sense? We know that in the main they were not. And an examination of all their great works will reveal spots upon which we can put a finger, and say, "Here truth to life was sacrificed to sentimentality or to the desire to 'round off' a story." The proof that austere naturalism had waned away is the fact that when Flaubert wrote Madame Bovary the book was accepted as something quite new in the art of fiction. Yet the newness of it was exactly as old as Clarissa.

We have not touched on the dark, the tedious side of Richardson's fiction. The makers of the coming vogue will soon enough discover that for themselves. We picture the courageous attack about to be made on Richardson by the average cultured reader. That reader will choose Clarissa, of course, and, braced and firm, he will commence the perusal. In the first fifty pages he will probably be beaten off with great loss. But he will return to the charge and have his reward. He will be amazed and delighted by the truth, the power, and the beauty of this new author. Occasional longueurs will not terrify him. He will discover Richardson to his friends, and preach it abroad that Richardson was the greatest novelist that ever lived. . . . And then, perhaps about the fiftieth letter, he will stop suddenly and meditate, like a boy in the middle of a feast of unlimited cake. The longueurs will seem to be more frequent, though they are not so. The monotony, the narrow view, the appalling unity of theme, the unremitting pietism, the vast masses of triviality, will present themselves to him in a sinister and dreadful light. He will perceive that he has journeyed through one-eighth of the entire work. His fancy will conjure up an awful vision of the remaining seven-eighths. He will put the first volume down, and for some weeks will feel ashamed at his cowardice in not taking up the second. At length he will recover his good opinion of himself, and will jauntily remark, as he glances at a certain shelf, "No! Life is too short!"

Things Seen.

The Bookseller.

"You see," said the lady with the jewels and furs and presence, "we've taken a new 'ouse, and we're fitting up a library. Sir Isaac, that's my husband, has been measuring the space, and we want sixty feet of books." I put down the First Edition of Lavengro—priced, to my regret, at two guineas—and glanced at my friend the bookseller. He wore his most blameless expression. "Quite so, Madam," he answered. "I quite understand. You would like to see some handsome sets, that are used more particularly for that purpose?" "Big books with nice bindings," she assented. "Exactly so, Madam," he said, with becoming gravity, though, as his eye wandered over in my direction, I could perceive the slightest of twinkles in it. Thereupon I watched with interest, keeping one eye on the pair and the other on the International Library of Famous Literature, which stood in an imposing row just behind them. As I expected, he turned round sharply and pointed to it. "This is a favourite set," he explained: "it has been mentioned favourably in all the leading papers." She looked at the handsome binding with approval, and said, "Yes, that will do nicely for a start." Then her natural genius asserted itself, and she pounced on—no, indicated—two large books bound in brown calf with very gilt edges. "What are those?" she asked. "Dictionaries," he said: "very useful books." He displayed one; it bore the arms of—but no, I will not name the school. Suffice it to say that it had all the attributes of a school prize, being in fact a Liddell and Scott; the other had the same characteristics, and was a Lewis and Short. "A gentleman who was in here the other day," he said, without a blush, "thought they might be the arms of Queen Elizabeth." This was enough, and the lady decided to have the volumes at once. Then ensued a wild scene of bibliographical extravagance. The Encyclopedia Britannica, Chambers's Encyclopedia, a complete set of Ruskin's works on large paper, the library edition of Burton's Arabian Nights, enough volumes of Bohn's helpful library to fill a good-sized bookcase—nothing came amiss to her; and when finally she agreed to pay a large sum for the volumes of Punch complete from the beginning, I felt that I had been present at a function.

"A good customer?" I suggested, when she had gone. The Bookseller permitted himself to smile at last. "Well, yes," he said. "If it wasn't for such customers our trade would be in a bad way. It's the ignorant and omnivorous who make bookselling at all possible."

The Return.

I WAS seated in the train at Southampton when they jumped into the carriage, with rugs and kit-bags. Their sunburnt faces, their khaki uniforms, their air of freshness announced them to be officers just back from the war. Indeed, the steamer had but a little while ago touched port, and they had caught the train at a gallop. Of the two soldiers, one was middle-aged, with a beard; the other was young, with an alert moustache, and they had one desire in common—to read newspapers. They had swept the bookstall. Each was laden with papers, and before the train had started they had begun to read. The bearded man read gluttonously. His eyes went steadily down the columns. What he read did not apparently signify. It was news of sorts—that was enough. The younger man's attention wandered occasionally, and when he looked from the window he always made some enthusiastic remark, such as: "What colours you get in England! By gad! look at those autumn tints!" or, "That's a thing you don't see in Africa—a grey church tower. Gad, it's fine." The bearded man would raise his eyes for an instant; then they fell again to the paper. Not until the train had stopped on the bridge just without Victoria Station did he put the newspapers from his mind. It was a typical November afternoon—moist, misty, miserable. He gazed half affectionately, half disapprovingly, at the prospect, as a mother might look at the dirty face of an only child, till his eyes caught the dim outlines of the Houses of Parliament. "By Jove!" he said, "that looks like home." The younger man made no comment. His mind was intent on something else. Half-an-hour before he had drawn on his gloves, twirled his moustache, cocked his hat, and remarked to his companion: "My people will meet me at Victoria." But, somehow, his people did not meet him. I saw him peer eagerly up and down the station. He waited five minutes, then called a cab. But the driver shook his head. The fog grew thicker. There were no more cabs. It seemed rather a dreary welcome home.

Digitized by Google

The Candid Friend.

Having read Mr. Graham Balfour's Life of Robert Louis Stevenson, Mr. Henley finds himself "discontented, dissatisfied, still looking for more." That "more" he gives to the world in the pages of the Pall Mall Magazine, being, as he says, "oppressed by the thought" that in Mr. Balfour's Life Stevenson is shown only as he "may well have wanted to be." Mr. Henley attempts to belittle Stevenson. In our opinion he has not succeeded.

Mr. Henley hits and hints, and at the same time exposes his own breast, so keen is his delight in battle and his contempt for cover. He is also quite candid. So it comes about that in his remarks on R. L. Stevenson, he who reads between the lines may see the reasons, perhaps unconscious, that prompted Mr. Henley to write that pain-giving article. "My relation to him," says Mr. Henley, "was that of a man with a grievance." There is the clue. Mr. Henley is a man with a grievance—perhaps two grievances. One would seem to be that his share in the making of Stevenson has not been fully recognised. Here are two of many passages where Mr. Henley pleads his own cause:

> I published his first sustained achievement in fiction (The New Arabian Nights); I procured him the first cheque for an hundred pounds he ever earned; I did my best for his works, in fact, until he asked me to take a commission of five per cent. on the receipts. I refused, and he went for some time in his own way. Then Mr. Charles Baxter, an infinitely better business man than I, and with (I am sure he will agree) a far more marketable commodity to sell than I had had, came on; and Stevenson, beginning with a pound a month from his parents, ended by spending something between £4,000 and £5,000 a year. How he spent it Heaven and Mr. Baxter alone know. Mr. Balfour gives the figures; but one needn't go further than to rejoice in them. To finish with myself: I was (I can say it now) for something in the contrivance of the Edinburgh Edition; so that first and last I may claim to have done my part . . .
>
> I take up a volume of the Edinburgh Edition, and I read that, included in the plenishing of his ideal house, are "a Canaletto print or two"; and I recall the circumstance that his taste for Canaletto prints, even as his Canaletto prints themselves, came through and from me. I bought them, I remember, in the Knightsbridge Road, and he paid me what I gave for them, which was some six or seven shillings apiece. I turn the page, and read of "Piranesi etchings on the walls"; and I remember who placed them there, and the blessed hours I've had in their neighbourhood. I turn the page again, and I come on the Moral Emblems and Not I; and once more the Muse of Memory is too much for me, and, as in a dream, I see myself touting in the interest of these works, taking sixpence of this one and eightpence of that other, and embezzling these receipts: for I neither paid the laborious graver-poet the price of his endeavour, nor delivered the works for which I was acting as agent.

Mr. Henley's other grievance is that the Robert Lewis Stevenson who went to America in 1887 did not remain the same Stevenson who was Mr. Henley's intimate friend for thirteen years. Mr. Henley, it seems to us, resents Stevenson's growth. What right had he to pass out of Mr. Henley's school, and take his own view of the mystery of life? What business had the soul of R. L. S. to develop? by what right did he pray and preach? "The first [Stevenson] I knew, and loved; the other I lost touch with, and, though I admired him, did not greatly esteem." Well, Mr. Henley makes his lack of esteem for Stevenson very clear. He can thrust thus at the man "I knew and loved": "I learn of his nameless prodigalities—and recall some instances of conduct in another vein." What of that? May not a man try again, and do better the next time? And have friends ceased to bear their friends' infirmities?

Here is another "charge." Is not the reference to a word of three letters done nicely?

> He gave himself out for the most open-minded of men: to him one point of view was as good as another; Age's was respectable, but so was Youth's; the Fox that had a tail was no whit more considerable than the Fox whose tail was lost. Et patati, et patata. 'Twas all "as easy as lying" to him, for 'twas all in the run of his humanity. But in the event it was academic; for where he was grossly interested, he could see but one side of the debate; and there are people yet living (I am not one of them) who, knowing him intimately, have not hesitated to describe him in a word of three letters, the suspicion of which might well make him turn in his grave. And yet I do not know.

"An artist in morals" is another of Mr. Henley's contemptuous phrases. "I am not interested in remarks about morals," says Mr. Henley. The Stevenson of latter years was, and a few others have also been interested in morals in the course of the world's history. Mr. Henley will have none of him, either as man or writer. "If I want reading I do not go for it to the Edinburgh Edition." Stay! he allows that Stevenson was a fine talker. The explanation is just that Stevenson outgrew the Stevenson that Mr. Henley knew—"my old, riotous, intrepid, scornful Stevenson." That sticks in Mr. Henley's gorge. He will not even give Stevenson credit for sincerity. "Plainly the Shorter Catechist was what was wanted," says Mr. Henley, implying that latterly Stevenson played down to a certain public. How much of the Shorter Catechist, we ask, is there in Weir of Hermiston?

Mr. Henley has done his worst for Stevenson. What is the result? What do we learn from him? That "Stevenson was incessantly and passionately interested in Stevenson"; that "no better histrion ever lived"; that in the years that Mr. Henley knew him Stevenson did not always practise what he preached; that he did not originate all the youthful pranks that his biographers have fathered upon him; that Mr. Henley spent himself more in the service of "the Lewis that I knew and loved" than the world wots of, and that a candid friend, with a grievance against the biographee, does not make a convincing biographer.

Digitized by Google

If Mr. Henley's article is a specimen of the "new biography" from the pen of the friend who knows, then give us the official Life. We have already said what we thought of Mr. Balfour's colourless but conscientious Life; but that, in conjunction with the Letters and Mr. Colvin's biographical chapters, gives, we believe, the true picture of the man. Mr. Henley's pages, with their trivial accusations of frailty, add nothing, prove nothing.

Stevenson is beyond the reach of praise or blame. He was neither whole saint nor whole sinner, but, like most of us, something of both. He was a man of infinite variety. In early life his many-sided nature, his lively fancy, his eagerness for experience ran him hither and thither; later it settled into a broad, deep stream. He could always be kind, and just, and sympathetic in his estimate of others. That, his paper on Burns shows. He knew how little we understand one another, how "greatly dark" a man we have known even for thirteen years may be. Hear him!

> Alas! I fear every man and woman of us is "greatly dark" to all their neighbours, from the day of birth until death removes them, in their greatest virtues as well as in their saddest thoughts; and we, who have been trying to read the character of Burns, may take home the lesson and be gentle in our thoughts.

What is Light Verse?

The value of making up one's mind and sticking to it is only too well illustrated (by inversion) in Mr. Anthony C. Deane's Little Book of Light Verse (Methuen), for, pretty and agreeable though it be, it is a very long way from what its title leads the anticipatory reader to expect. And all because Mr. Deane had not determined whether by light verse he meant vers de société, comic verse, or parody. At the first blush one might suppose that he meant all three; but a glance at his pages disproves that, for if he did he would have included more that is comic. His definitions, in the introduction, point principally to vers de société, and the fact that the bulk of the book is devoted to poetry in that genre supports the theory; and yet the statement that "amusement is its primary object," and the presence of various parodies and Hood's "Sally Brown," pulls us up short.

That all comic verse is light is an hypothesis which could easily be maintained; but that light verse is comic verse, or that amusement is its "primary object," is not defensible. Of course, it depends a little upon what Mr. Deane means by amusement; but if he means laughter, he is, we hold, wrong. The whole duty of light verse is to be graceful and charming. It may be witty too, and it may even lead to laughter (though it had better not, perhaps), but it must first of all be graceful and charming. Mr. Deane is perfectly right and worthy of all respect for his statement that a master of light verse should not be lightly dismissed as a minor poet; on the contrary, he is a major in his own domain, a domain in which poets do not compete. But holding, as he does, this very proper and unusual view, we are the more surprised that he treats Matthew Prior so casually. "It is very doubtful," he says, "if the art [of light verse] existed before the days of the Anti-Jacobin and Rejected Addresses—that is to say, roughly speaking, before the beginning of the nineteenth century." This is roughly speaking indeed: it clears away at a blow Skelton, who is the English father of the art; Herrick, Wither, Suckling; Prior and Gay, whose place in English literature is based solely on their light verse, which they wrote in great quantities; Swift, who practised the art of light verse very assiduously with Dr. Sheridan; Pope, perhaps the greatest master of light verse English literature will ever know, and Goldsmith and Cowper. Mr. Deane, it is true, includes examples from many of these writers in his book, but just now we are concerned with his introduction, and with the statement that the Anti-Jacobin and the Rejected Addresses began the convention. Apart from the names we have mentioned to show that light verse had been consciously practised for some centuries, there is such an immediate predecessor of Canning and Frere as Christopher Anstey, of The New Bath Guide, a masterly exercise in Mr. Deane's medium, and one that had a far-reaching influence. Altogether, we cannot consider that Mr. Deane's introduction, although later it does include mention of some of the earlier light-verse writers whom we have enumerated, says quite so authoritative a word on the subject as the reader is entitled to.

Coming to the book itself, we find that Mr. Deane's irresolution about the true character of light verse has led to his collection being none of three things: it is not a good anthology of vers de société, because comic verse and parody intrude; it is not a good anthology of parody, because vers de société and comic verse intrude; it is not a good anthology of comic verse, because vers de société and parody intrude. It remains a not clearly defined collection of light poems, comic poems, and parodies, which Mr. Deane finds amusing; and, considering the wealth of material, is only a meagre collection at that. Of course, we know nothing of the conditions under which Mr. Deane compiled this book for Messrs. Methuen's "Little Library," but if the excellent Little Book of English Lyrics in that series contains between four hundred and five hundred pages, we see no reason why a Little Book of Light Verse should stop at page 188. While Mr. Deane was about it he might—had his taste been more rigorous—have made a pocket collection comparable in value to Lyra Elegantiarum; which, by the way, Messrs. Ward, Lock, and Co. should put into pocket form. It is just the book to slip into one's coat, and peep at now and then on a railway journey.

In its way Mr. Deane's little book is a pleasant enough possession; but its editor's taste is not always sound, not always stern enough. He likes parodies too much. His defence of the inclusion of "Delia's Pocket Handkerchief," by Southey, would be interesting reading; and of Hook's "Daylight Dinners," and of Browning's "Pope and the Net," and of the efforts of Mr. Cholmondeley-Pennell and Henry S. Leigh, and of the song from Mr. Gilbert's Yeomen of the Guard, and of Mr. Godley's "Vernal Verses." Mr. Godley is neat and high-spirited; but the specimens of his work given in this book are of very ordinary undergraduate quality. Henry S. Leigh and Mr. Cholmondeley-Pennell are never classic, never more than skilful and gay; and a book of this size could have been made wholly classic. Mr. Gilbert's Bab Ballads and Savoy libretti lack finish; they show no lapidary work, as light verse should. Browning also is disqualified as a light verse writer by Mr. Deane's own dictum: no one could say of any of his efforts that they "run as smoothly as talking." As for Hook's "Daylight Dinners," it is nasty, which good light verse could not be; while Southey's lines on the handkerchief are feeble, and do not always rhyme.

We could make many further objections, but it all comes back to the fact that Mr. Deane's conception of light verse is muddled. We can show in a nutshell how his theory and our own differs. Mr. Deane chooses from Milton the lines on Hobson, the carrier, which, in addition to being technically faulty (it has such rhymes as one, overthrown; known, down; home, come; inn, chamberlain—inadmissible in good light verse, by Mr. Deane's own showing in his introduction), is a not very extraordinary production.

Digitized by Google

We should have chosen from Milton either the sonnet to Mr. Lawrence or to Cyriack Skinner, each of which is true light verse, urbane, smiling, technically faultless. We should also have given something from Don Juan itself, and not contented ourselves merely with the Smiths' parody of it; and we should have gone to Thomas Love Peacock, a born light verse writer; and to Leigh Hunt for "Jenny kissed me," a perfect example of light verse; and our selections from Landor would have been very different; and Tennyson's "Will Waterproof" would not have been ignored; and from Goldsmith we should have taken "Retaliation" before we took the "Mad Dog"; and Moore and Hood would both yield other selections than Mr. Deane has chosen. And all, not because we are better judges than Mr. Deane, but because we should have had a stricter sense of the meaning of the phrase "light verse."

Correspondence.

An Anonymous Poet.

SIR,—In a recent issue Mr. H. Miltern put a question regarding the authorship of some French verses, and I rather hoped some pundit amongst ACADEMY readers would be able to answer the question, and thus satisfy Mr. Miltern's curiosity and my own. However, I see no one has come forward yet with full information; and, though I cannot give Mr. Miltern any certain reply as to the author, I can tell him when and where the verses were first published.

In the middle seventies—when the Murger quarter was still the only really fashionable haunt of budding genius, and Montmartre had as yet but few Olympian pretensions—a small volume of verse appeared which created quite a furore amongst the young lions of the quarter. It was bound in brown paper and execrably printed, and the lines Mr. Miltern refers to—the second one, by-the-way, is ungrammatically misquoted: it should run "par les éparses orées"—appeared in the title poem "L'Apotheosé." The quality of the verse was distinctly good, but for some mysterious reason the volume appeared anonymously, and even the publisher's name and address were pure inventions: a circumstance which caused a police inquiry, much réclame amongst my then intimates, and a good deal of spouting of the perfectly innocent verses in our café haunts.

I have always attributed the volume to one of the Parnassiens in my own mind: and it is interesting to find Mr. Miltern fixes them upon Verlaine. Certain lines stick in my memory out of the little brown covered volume, and they have a certain tang of Verlaine.

Oh, Madelon!
Sur les planches de bois
Quand que tu danses, et je m'assieds:
Pulsant je vois,
Sur les planches de bois,
Deux petites flammes que sont tes pieds.

Deux flammes ils sont
Oh, Madelon!
Brûlant toujours, sur les planches de bois,
Un luth épuisé,
Et un cœur brisé;
Et le cœur, et le luth, et les flammes—ils sont moi.

Mr. Arthur Symons, perhaps, could "an' he would," tell us something of the anonymous poet.—Believe me, sir, yours faithfully, H. MORRIS.

18, Jerningham Mansions, Willesden Green.

The French Nuns.

SIR,—The Président de Conseil and the Commissioner of the Law on Associations proclaimed, before even the Debates began, that in no instance would the demand of any order of women for authorisation meet with refusal from the Government. If this is not immunity, I am curious to know what your reviewer regards as immunity. Would he maintain that this liberal assertion implies a spirit of persecution? I have studied the law as well as he, and still contend that it is far too mild, considering the provocation received by the Republic. I am of the opinion of M. Cornély, Conservator and Catholic, that the modern congregations in France have dabbled too much in politics, commerce, and calumny, and too little in Christianity. The 120 communities of women who have fled from France, as your reviewer romantically puts it (one would think we were back in the days of the Inquisition, the Elizabethan persecution, or the Revolution, when there really was sense in describing people as "fleeing") do not deserve in the least his sentimental sympathy, for an association which cannot ask for and quietly accept State authorisation seems to me an association of dubious morality. Communities were more harshly treated under the kings of France, and one wonders how Napoleon would have treated such enemies as the Assumptionist Fathers.

Your reviewer gathers that I desire the expulsion of nuns from France. I desire the expulsion of nobody. What I should like to see is the closure of all educational communities of women, and the opening of all hospitals to the nuns. I think, also, that nuns should be prevented by State interference from exploiting the labour of orphans and girls entrusted to their charge, and thus spare us such scandals as the recent revelations of the trial of the Bon Pasteur, a scandal brought about not by an anti-clerical Government, but by the Archbishop of Nancy, who was the principal accuser of nuns in his own diocese.—I am, etc.,

HANNAH LYNCH.

The Dairymaids to Pan.

Goatfoot, we know you,
Though we cannot see you;
Goatfoot, Goatfoot,
Lightfoot do we flee you.
When we hear the flocks at night
Bleat as to the shepherd's light
Then we girls clasp close in bed,
Draw the coarse sheet over-head,
Whispering, afraid to sleep,
"'Tis the good god Goatfoot
Fondling the sheep."

Goatfoot, we hear you
At the cow-house door,
Goatfoot, Goatfoot,
Through a single floor.
Barefoot in our nightgowns then
Timidly we wake the men;
To the byre they venture slowly—
As each happy cow lows lowly,
Each hind in his turn repeats,
"'Tis the good god Goatfoot
Easing their teats."

Goatfoot, do not fright us
In the woodland meadows,
Goatfoot, Goatfoot,
When the kine have led us
Far from home at milking-time
Down dark groves of scented lime
To the weedy water where
Deep they wade for cooler air.
Think of all your fruited feasts;
Be the good god Goatfoot
To herd us our beasts.

G. BOTTOMLEY.

Digitized by Google

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 113 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of a book, old or new, but excluding fiction, published this year. We award the prize to Mr. Herbert Jameson, Hadley Wood, Middlesex, for the following:—

"BY THE IONIAN SEA."

In its own department of letters Mr. George Gissing's volume of travels, "By the Ionian Sea," strikes me as one of the outstanding books of the present year. The primary interest is that it has come from Mr. Gissing, whose versatility all admirers of his singularly good work as a novelist must here be proud to recognise. From this modern civilisation, which he depicts with true yet eclectic realism, and in his heart grieves over, he escaped for a while to the scenes of an old-world civilisation that especially attracted him, and the result is this vivid, personal, and always informing series of papers. A book of travel must have individuality or it is dull. A cultured scholar, steeped to the finger-tips in classic lore, Mr. Gissing writes of what he saw and heard with a vigour of interest that carries the stay-at-home reader with him to this unfrequented land. You catch his impressions red-hot; you feel the measure of the fascination. Finely as the scenery is described, it is always made subservient to the human foreground; the people of to-day he meets are described with a novelist's insight. His enthusiasm is evident, yet purple patches are absent; the style has ease, fluency, and occasional passages have quite a lyrical charm. Altogether, "By the Ionian Sea" is a contribution to the literature (as distinguished from the journalism) of travel that deserves to live.

From fifteen other replies we select the following:—

[The writer of the criticism of "Anticipations" would have taken the prize had he observed our condition as to length.]

"ANTICIPATIONS."

So long as the writer confines himself to applying the scientific discoveries of this age to the practical life of the next, he gains our assent, as in the chapters on Locomotion and on Diffusion of Cities. So it is in the chapter on War—the best in the book—containing fine descriptions and vivid sarcasms. So, too, in those chapters where he shows a more sympathetically just appreciation of France and a truer measurement of the commercial prosperity and naval ambition of Germany than is usual, yet in which, strange for one of his imagination, he underrates the vast potentialities of Russia. It is when he deals with the future Man that the writer fails. His stern scientific people, without humour, love or pity, are not real; even the shareholder cutting up Army sausage does not grasp the humour of it, but solemnly does his duty. In dismissing philanthropy from future ethics, he is inconsistent. Men who so realise their responsibilities to the race that they marry, not lightly, according to inclination, but with grave thoughts for the future of their children, are philanthropists; and such men would evolve a better method for the elimination of vice than the lethal chamber. The writer has not realised that with the intellectual development of the race will grow a greater, albeit a clearer-sighted, love, pity and patience, and we feel that the coming man might have been drawn with a larger touch, a freer imagination, and a more human sympathy. But the book remains a stirring, mind-gripping, thought-inspiring work, and although the reforms it advocates will probably not be accomplished before the twenty-fifth century, it contains excellent suggestions for millionaires, who will doubtless make more allowance than the writer for the influence of industrial tidal waves on the abyss, apart from the character of those thus flung there. [J. P., Finchley.]

"LIFE OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON."
By Graham Balfour.

Stevenson affirmed that there were three modes of writing a novel. Possibly there are more in these discursive times, but he was near enough the mark for his purpose. There are certainly not more than two worthy modes of writing a biography. But of these two, whichever is selected, one infallible rule remains to be observed. The chief aim of the man described must be always before his biographer. For example, in dealing with the life of an eminent physician or lawyer you write of them principally as physician and lawyer, and only bring in the other facts and circumstances of their lives as a background and filling-in of the picture. In the case of Stevenson—who excelled in every form of literature, and was essentially a litterateur rather than novelist or essayist—we look for a Life, if it is to be an authoritative record of him for all time, treating him mainly from this standpoint. Mr. Balfour's Life fails to realise these expectations, and cannot but be a disappointment to all real lovers of Stevenson's works. Doubtless, the result is satisfying and sufficiently gratifying to relatives and intimate friends, but the Life of R. L. S. ought to have been written for his readers and the public—not for family connections and bosom friends. We could well have dispensed with many pages of dreary detail and small events for a careful appreciation of the various productions of one who was certainly the most versatile and cosmopolitan of Scottish writers. And how captivating would have been a long chapter devoted to a study of the factors and causes of this cosmopolitanism, and the Cervantes-like character, so totally at variance with all our ideas of Scottish character and literature! It seems a pity that a countryman and relative should have been entrusted with the task of writing his Life; it was essentially one for an Englishman and an unbiassed friend, for Stevenson is one of the world's great authors, and not a mere pleasant conversationalist and delightful companion to a select coterie of friends and acquaintances. In this respect—if in this alone—the Life is defective. It does not give us a full and true picture of the man portrayed. [A. A. B., West Bromwich.]

"THE LIFE OF THE BEE."
By Maurice Maeterlinck, trans. by Alfred Sutro.

We have here the story of an insect turned into a fascinating prose-poem that is at once idyllic, epic and dramatic. Idyllic because the book has its tender emotional atmosphere perfumed with the very breath of flowers and honey. Epic because the march of action in it—albeit the action only of a host of tiny winged creatures—is strenuous, significant, momentous, actually exciting, as it works on to culminate in passionate climax. Dramatic because it presents this action with a direct infusion of vivid personality in the actors and informs it with that representative quality which means a discernment of the universal in contact always with the partial. Philosophic in conception thus, and scientific in construction in so far as the Life of the Bee is portrayed with a fine sense of its progression in the three parallels of the individual, the hive and the race, the work has for its leading characteristic a pregnant vitality resulting from roots that grip far down below the surface. It is, in truth, itself like the hive—exquisite with its immaculate sculpture of honeycomb, its scientific facts holding the golden honey of poetic fancy. . . .

[E. H., Ealing.]

Competition No. 114 (New Series).

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of some small dramatic point or incident in Shakespeare.

MR. R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON'S NEW BOOKS.

By "G. K. C."

THE DEFENDANT.

By G. K. CHESTERTON.

Large Crown 8vo., Buckram, gilt. 5s. net. Ready Nov. 27th.

A Series of Essays—in Defence.

Among the subjects "defended" are "Penny Dreadfuls," "Rash Vows," "Ugly things," "Farce," "Humility," "Slang," "Baby Worship," "Detective Stories," Patriotism," etc., etc.

By the same Author:

GREYBEARDS AT PLAY.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

By C. F. KEARY.

TWIXT DOG AND WOLF.

F'cap 8vo, cloth gilt. Price 3s. 6d. Ready Nov. 27th.

Impressions of the Supernatural.

By the same Author:

A WANDERER.

Small F'cap, gilt edges. Price 3s. 6d. net.

BY THE LATE

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

PASITELES THE ELDER.

With a Prefatory Note by AUSTIN DODSON.

Crown 8vo, cloth. Price 5s. net.

By the same Author:

NONSENSE RHYMES.

Illustrated by G. K. C. Price 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON: R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON,
8, YORK BUILDINGS, W.C.

Digitized by Google

Volume I. Ready 25th November, price 10/6 net.
To be completed in Three Volumes.

New Edition of

CHAMBERS'S CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

EDITED BY DAVID PATRICK, LL.D.

A HISTORY CRITICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL OF AUTHORS IN THE ENGLISH TONGUE FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TILL THE PRESENT DAY, WITH SPECIMENS OF THEIR WRITINGS

VOLUME I.

CONTAINS CONTRIBUTIONS BY REV. STOPFORD BROOKE, PROFESSOR P. HUME BROWN, A. H. BULLEN, DR. SAMUEL R. GARDINER, EDMUND GOSSE, F. HINDES GROOME, ANDREW LANG, SIDNEY LEE, A. W. POLLARD, PROFESSOR SAINTSBURY, AND OTHERS

LONDON AND EDINBURGH:
W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

The DECEMBER issue will contain NOTICES of Christmas, New Year, and all the Latest Books Published.

PUBLISHERS

should avail themselves of the FACILITIES OFFERED in this issue by the Special Announcement Supplement.

Full Information from THE PUBLISHERS,

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW,
43 & 43a, Fetter Lane, E.C.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. DENT'S LIST.

* Illustrated Catalogue Post Free.

NEW AUTHORISED LARGE-TYPE

THACKERAY.

ILLUSTRATED BY C. E. BROCK.

THACKERAY'S PROSE WORKS, Complete by Arrangement, Illustrated throughout by C. E. BROCK, and Edited by WALTER JERROLD. In Thirty Volumes. Small Crown 8vo, 3s. net per vol. One Novel monthly. Also a Large Paper Edition, limited to 100 sets. Just published:
VANITY FAIR, with 30 Illustrations (3 vols.).

* See Special Prospectus.

HAZLITT'S COLLECTED WORKS.

Edited by A. R. WALLER and ARNOLD GLOVER.

With Introduction by W. E. HENLEY. With Portraits. In 12 vols., 7s. 6d. net per vol. Limited to 500 Complete Sets. Vol. I immediately. [See Prospectus.

FLORENTINE VILLAS.

By JANET ROSS.

Illustrated with Photogravure Reproductions of Zocchi's Rare Engravings, &c.; also with Text Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Imperial 4to. £3 3s., Limited to 200 Copies. Also an EDITION DE LUXE, Limited to 60 Copies. [See Prospectus.

THE TEMPLE BIBLE.

The Authorised Version As LITERATURE. Each Volume Edited by a Leading Scholar; and with a Photogravure Frontispiece. (Uniform with the TEMPLE SHAKESPEARE).
Per Volume: Cloth, 1s. net; Leather, 1s. 6d. net.

THE ACADEMY: "No such Bible has yet been issued. . . It presents the Bible as literature, with simple yet illuminating commentaries. Each book is light and small, and it is not too much to say that thousands of readers will find in them not only a newly-edited Bible, but new ways and opportunities of reading the Bible."

Two Volumes Monthly Just Published:
GENESIS, by A. H. SAYCE, D.D., LL.D.
EXODUS, by A. R. S. KENNEDY, D.D.

Early Volumes will be:
MATTHEW, MARK, by DEAN OF ELY.
LEVICTICUS, by J. A. PATERSON, D.D.

* See Special Prospectus.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. A Library Edition of LANE, with a Volume of Popular Stories from DR. SCOTT. With 100 Photogravures by S. L. WOOD. In 6 vols., 21s. net.

LADY CHILLINGHAM'S HOUSE-PARTY. An English Version of PAILLERON'S "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie." By SEBASTIAN EVANS and F. B. GOLDNEY. Illustrated by H. M. BROCK. 3s. 6d. net.

MENDELSSOHN. By STEPHEN S. STRATTON. With numerous Illustrations. ("Master Musicians"—V.) 3s. 6d. net.

The MONASTERY OF SAN MARCO, FLORENCE. With the Story of Savonarola and Fra Angelico. By G. S. GODKIN. With Reproductions, Portraits, &c. 3s. 6d. net.

MY ISLAND (Sketches of Anglesey). By EILIAN HUGHES. Illustrated by LADY STANLEY, 2s. 6d. net.

MARY RICH, COUNTESS OF WARWICK 1625-78. By MARY E. PALGRAVE. Illustrated. ("Saintly Lives"—IV.) 4s. 6d. net.

THE TEMPLE BRONTE. 12 Vols. with Photogravure Frontispieces. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; Lambskin, 2s. net per vol.

J. M. DENT & CO., Bedford St., London.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST OF SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch says:—"Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."
Vanity Fair says:—"An unusually able volume..... a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

The Westminster Gazette says:—"A daring idea is well carried out....the book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."
The Western Morning News says:—"As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.

The Daily Chronicle says:—"They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."

THE WOMAN OF ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

THE CASE OF A MAN WITH HIS WIFE. By THEO. Price 3s. 6d.

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

READY NOVEMBER 25th.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG.

Containing nearly 100 original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'Connor, Justin McCarthy, Frank T. Bullen, Herman Merivale, Lady Bancroft, Adrian Ross, Sir Wm. Ingram, Bart., &c., &c. Price ONE SHILLING.

THREE OCTOBERS: A Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever bit of work....witty and entertaining,

STAGE SILHOUETTES. Illustrated with Photographs. By SIDNEY DARK. Price 1s.

ANTHONY TREHERNE and CO., Ltd.,
3, AGAR STREET, CHARING CROSS, W.C.
Office of Crampton's Magazine.

NOW READY.

Part I of the hitherto Unpublished

SONGS OF A CHILD AND OTHER POEMS.

By "DARLING," (LADY FLORENCE DOUGLAS, now LADY FLORENCE DIXIE), with introductory Poem by the first LORD LYTTON, the famous novelist. Popular Edition, with coloured Portrait of the Author when a child. (Second Edition in the Press.)

LONDON: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd.,
50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. Two-and-Sixpence.

EDITION DE LUXE, beautifully bound in White Vellum, and with Coloured Portrait, Seven-and-Sixpence.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

"Albert Chevalier's Autobiography."

BEFORE I FORGET. Being the Autobiography of a Chevalier D'Industrie. Written by ALBERT CHEVALIER. With over 60 Illustrations, full of interesting experiences and bright stories by a unique entertainer. 16s. net. Early application will be necessary to secure copies of the first edition.

'Gorky is to be the new illumination for the world of the thoughtful."

FOMA GORDYEEFF (Thomas the Proud). By MAXIM GORKY. Translated from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. Cloth, 6s.

"PROSPEROUS" BRITISH INDIA. By WILLIAM DIGBY, C.I.E., Author of "The Famine Campaign in Southern India, 1877-79." With diagrams and maps. Demy 8vo., cloth, 12s. 6d.

ELGIVA, DAUGHTER OF THE THEGN. By D. R. GRIFFITHS. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

AN EDITOR'S SERMONS. By Sir EDWARD RUSSELL, Editor of the "Liverpool Daily Post." Introduction by the Lord Bishop of Hereford. Cloth, 6s. net.

BARRY SULLIVAN AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES. By R. M. SILLARD. Two vols. Illustrated. 21s. per set net.

ALCOHOLISM: A Study in Heredity. By G. ARCHDALL REID. Cloth, 6s. net.

A JILT'S JOURNAL. By RITA. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

YORKE THE ADVENTURER. By LOUIS BECKE. (Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

WALES. By O. M. EDWARDS, Lecturer on Modern History at Lincoln College, Oxford. (Story of the Nation Series.) 5s.

Professor Edwards's history possesses a special advantage as being the first continuous popular history of Wales. It is full of detail, and at the same time has a broad and clearly defined plan and point of view in regard to the different periods, enabling the reader to understand the evolution of Welsh history, political and social, and the relation of period to period. It contains, moreover, some very charming writing, especially when dealing with the literature of Wales—writing with the Celtic "note" of delicacy, simplicity and colour. For the many Welshmen abroad with their active literary interests in home matters it should prove very attractive, as well as to the general reader.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS ON THE INSTALMENT PLAN.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN takes this opportunity of drawing attention to a subscription edition of the Nations Series, which he has prepared in 56 volumes.

This edition is got up in very handsome form on special paper, and with new binding designs, and issued at a reduction of more than 40 per cent. from the usual rates.

These 56 vols. (including the above-mentioned work on Wales) will be supplied on the INSTALMENT plan—in cloth bindings on receipt of a preliminary payment of 8s. (which is less than 2d. per vol.) and 16 further payments of 10s. each; in half-morocco for a preliminary payment of 15s., and 15 further payments of £1 each.

Those who prefer to pay cash may buy at a still further reduction—viz., £8 for a set, cloth; and £15 for the morocco edition.

The STORY OF THE NATIONS is the greatest Historical Library in the world, and is a widely-popular series written by specialists in history.

Only a limited number of sets have been prepared, and immediate applications for them should be made to ensure delivery.

Sets of the library, both in cloth and morocco bindings, may be seen at the Publisher's offices, 11, Paternoster-buildings, London; and also at many of the booksellers.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster-square, E.C.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRETANO'S.

Digitized by Google

NEW BOOKS.
FROM MR. MELROSE'S LIST.

At 3s. 6d.

First Edition exhausted on publication.
Second Edition is being rapidly pushed forward.

HOW TO PROMOTE AND CONDUCT A SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL. By R. A. Torrey, Author of "What the Bible Teaches," &c., &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards.

ROYAL MANHOOD. By James I. Vance, D.D., Author of "The Young Man Four Square," &c. Imperial 16mo, cloth boards.

156 CHILDREN'S SERMONS. For Ministers, Sunday School Teachers and others. By Prof. Amos R. Wells, Author of "Sunday School Success." Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

NOTABLE MASTERS OF MEN. Modern Examples of Successful Lives. By Edwin A. Pratt. Impl. 16mo, cloth boards.

At 2s. 6d. Net.

(Third Edition, with added matter.)

HENRY DRUMMOND. A Biographical Sketch (with Bibliography). By "Cuthbert Lennox," with portraits and a fine drawing by Scott Rankin. Crown 8vo, cloth boards.

In Preparation. Ready Shortly.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON. A Biographical Sketch. By One Who Knew Him Intimately. Crown 8vo, cloth boards. Illustrated with photographs, and a fine drawing by Scott Rankin.

At 2s. 6d.

"BOOKS FOR THE HEART."
Foolscap 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top.
New Volume.

THE CHRISTIAN'S GREAT INTEREST. By William Guthrie. With an introductory Essay by Alexander Smellie, M.A.

At 1s. Net.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY. His Life Story. By David Williamson, Author of "Gladstone, the Man," "The Life Story of D. L. Moody," &c. Illustrated with photographs, &c.

At 1s. 6d.

PRAYER: ITS NATURE AND SCOPE. By H. Clay Trumbull. (Crown 8vo, cloth boards.)

At 7s. 6d.

BOYS OF OUR EMPIRE.
(First Annual Volume.)

Amongst all the Annual Volumes for Boys this is the best, as it is the newest. The leading contents comprise :—

FIVE SERIAL STORIES—

"The Lone Star Rush," by Edmund Mitchell;
"Contraband of War," by B. Aitken;
"Captain Nat's Treasure," by Robert Leighton;
"Chisholm's Chums": a School Story; and
"The Secret of the Wondergat," by Ridgewell Cullum and Charles Wingrove.
All profusely illustrated.

FIFTY-THREE ARTICLES
on the leading ATHLETIC RECORD HOLDERS, &c., illustrated by well-known Artists.

"How to Make." A Series of Articles on Carpentry, Modelling, Fretwork, &c., &c.

SHORT STORIES
of Adventure and School Life, by leading writers, abound in hundreds in this volume.

Talks with the Boys, by the "B. O. E." Chaplain.

"HOW TO BE STRONG."
A series of Articles and Exercises by SANDOW.

LEAGUE CLUB NOTES.
Being a record of the doings of the "Boy's Empire League" in its various branches throughout the Empire. (This League has over 3,000 members.)

Twelve Fine Coloured Plates are given in this volume.

The Volume is splendidly bound in cloth bevelled boards with Specially Designed Cover, and is an ideal gift book for a boy.

ANDREW MELROSE,
16, Pilgrim Street, LONDON, E.C.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

A NEW BOOK by the BISHOP of DURHAM.
FIRST EDITION EXHAUSTED.
SECOND EDITION EXHAUSTED.
THIRD EDITION EXHAUSTED.
FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

THOUGHTS FOR THE SUNDAYS OF THE YEAR. By the RT. REV. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. Also in French morocco, gilt edges, 5s. net (by post 5s. 4d.), and in padded paste grain, gilt line, round corners, gilt edges, gold roll, 6s. net (by post 6s. 4d.).

Record.—"There is not a chapter in the book which does not yield some wise direction, some searching or some bracing thought."
Rock.—"New and suggestive sidelights upon even the most familiar passages."
Globe.—"Whatever his topic, Dr. Moule contrives to avoid the purely commonplace."

THE STORY OF SOME ENGLISH SHIRES. By the late MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., Lord Bishop of London. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net (by post 6s. 4d.).

The Times.—"Few historians have paid more attention than Dr. Creighton to local history in its larger aspects. Few possessed a happier gift of exhibiting the particular history of each county or district alike in its local characteristics and in its organic relation to the larger history of England. He never forgets the relation of part to whole, nor overlooks the individuality which belongs to the part."

AN ARTIST'S WALKS IN BIBLE LANDS. By HENRY A. HARPER, &c. With a Photogravure Frontispiece and 55 other Illustrations from drawings by the Author. Super royal 8vo., cloth gilt, 6s. net (by post 6s. 5d.).

Spectator.—"Mr. Harper has a ready and powerful pen, and to this gift he added that of artistic drawing. We are in the hands of a guide who knows his way, and tells what to see and how to see it."
Churchman.—"Of real interest to the Bible Student."
Literature.—"Pleasantly written, reverent, suggestive."
St. James's Gazette.—"The illustrations are excellent."

WOODLAND, FIELD, AND SHORE. Wild Nature Depicted with Pen and Camera. By OLIVER G. PIKE. With Two Coloured Plates, and 101 engravings of birds, animals, and insects from photographs taken direct from nature. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net (by post 5s. 4d.).

Spectator.—"A very pretty book."
Athenæum.—"Admirable."
Academy.—"A fascinating book."
Amateur Photographer.—"Every lover of nature should possess it."
Westminster Gazette.—"All the illustrations are excellent."

SILAS HOCKING.—THE AWAKENING OF ANTHONY WEIR. A new and powerful story. By SILAS K. HOCKING, Author of "God's Outcast," "The Day of Recompense," &c. With Seven Illustrations by Harold Copping. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. Second Edition now ready. The First Edition of 10,000 copies was sold in a few weeks.

Literature.—"A careful study of the mental evolution of a man who becomes a minister with a strong vein of worldliness in his nature."
Contemporary Review.—"The best story which Mr. Silas K. Hocking has written for many a day. A tale that is at once interesting and elevating."

LE FEUVRE.—HEATHER'S MISTRESS. By AMY LE FEUVRE, Author of "Probable Sons," "Dwell Deep," "On the Edge of a Moor," &c. With 15 Illustrations by J. S. Crompton. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Manchester Courier.—"A capital and wholesome love-story."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

LYALL.—THE GOLD THAT PERISHETH. By DAVID LYALL, Author of "The Land o' the Leal," &c. With Seven Illustrations by W. H. C. Groome. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Glasgow Herald.—"Mr. David Lyall has made a strong story. From the first chapter to the last there is not a dull chapter."

TURNER.—THE WONDER-CHILD. An Australian Story. By ETHEL TURNER (Mrs. Curlewis), Author of "Seven Little Australians." Illustrated. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Scotsman.—"Full of life and incident."
Globe.—"Very interesting."

PALGRAVE.—DEB CLAVEL. By M. E. PALGRAVE, Author of "Driftwood," "Between Two Opinions," &c. With Seven Illustrations by Frank Dodd. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

DOUDNEY.—LADY DYE'S REPARATION. By SARAH DOUDNEY, Author of "Janet Darney's Story." with Four Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

LESLIE KEITH.—CYNTHIA'S BROTHER. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Our Street," "Ralph Ellison's Opportunity," &c. With Five Illustrations by Harold Copping. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

OXLEY.—NORTH OVERLAND WITH FRANKLIN. By J. MACDONALD OXLEY, Author of "Archie Mackenzie," "Standing the Test," &c. With Three Illustrations by Lancelot Speed. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

56, Paternoster Row, and 65, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.
Please write for the Society's New illustrated List of Gift Books.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW LIST.

A FIRST EDITION OF 10,000 COPIES. Price 6s.

THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY. The New long Novel by RALPH CONNOR, Author of "Black Rock" (Fifth Edition, 6s.) and "The Sky Pilot" (Seventh Edition, 6s.).

[Ready on Monday.

"The Man from Glengarry" is considered by all who have read it to be the author's finest piece of work. The story deals with the life of a Scottish Highlander among the Lumbermen of Canada, and is full of the local colour and the types of Scottish, French, Canadian, and American character which have proved so attractive to readers of Ralph Connor's work.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.
8vo, cloth gilt, 8s.

A GIFT BOOK for the HOME. Poems by His Grace the DUKE of ARGYLL, K.T. With Illustrations from the Old Masters, &c.

IAN MACLAREN'S GREAT SUCCESS.
SECOND EDITION IN A FEW DAYS.
Cloth, 6s.

YOUNG BARBARIANS. By Ian MACLAREN, Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING.

"In its humour and pathos equal to anything Ian Maclaren has written. 'Bulldog' is almost as good as the Doctor dear to Drumtochty."—Punch.

"Ian Maclaren has seldom done anything better—certainly he has never done anything more humorous—than the 'Young Barbarians.'"—Times.

"Highly enjoyable. We have seldom seen a book more full of genuine irresistible fun."—Spectator.

JOSEPH HOCKING'S BEST BOOK.
Seventh Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

O'ER MOOR and FEN. By Joseph HOCKING. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by Harold Copping.

"A highly interesting and clever description of Lancashire and Methodist life. The Revival scene, in particular, is so powerful that we can realise something of that overpowering rush of conviction which used, at any rate, to be of the essence of Methodism."—Daily Express.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY. 6s.

The WORLD and WINSTOW. By EDITH HENRIETTA FOWLER.

"A novel much above the average, and which does not depend for its success on a straining after epigrammatic diction or sensational incident, but on genuine good work."—Aberdeen Free Press.

SECOND EDITION NEARLY READY. Cloth, 6s.

The POTTER and the CLAY. A Romance. By MAUD HOWARD PETERSON.

"'The Potter and the Clay' is a notable piece of work—a moving story—a fine study."—Punch.

"Destined for success."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GREAT LOWLANDS. By Annie E. HOLDSWORTH (Mrs. LEE HAMILTON).

"The characters are vigorously and freshly drawn, with sure touches of human nature. Some of the situations are strikingly dramatic, others are full of that pathos which Mrs. Lee Hamilton puts in with a sure hand."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, 6s. cloth.

KITTY FAIRHALL. By John HAL-SHAM, Author of "Idlehurst," &c.

"John Halsham is undoubtedly one of the greatest masters of style among us, a most charming, delicate, and accomplished writer."—CLAUDIUS CLEAR in the British Weekly.

"We heartily recommend an exceptionally good novel."—Spectator.

SECOND EDITION READY SHORTLY.
Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LETTERS on LIFE. By Claudius CLEAR.

"Shrewd, suggestive, and kindly."—Illustrated London News.

"Their driving alertness gives them a separate place in journalistic writing.....Illuminated by wide reading and the fruits of much good talk."—Academy.

"Claudius Clear's 'lay sermons' may do the arm-chair reader as much good as the sermon preached from the pulpit."—Literature.

"A DAINTY DELIGHTFUL BOOK."
White-vellum-bound volume, pale blue ribbons. 6s.

The BRIDE'S BOOK. By Mrs. E. T. COOK.

"That Mrs. Cook has been able to write a book of twenty chapters on this subject without a single lapse from what is in entire good taste is in itself a creditable performance."—Westminster Gazette.

THE RED LEATHER SERIES.
FIRST THREE VOLUMES. 16mo, 2s. 6d. each net.

Mary Wilkins.—CINNAMON ROSES.
Alfred Tennyson.—IN MEMORIAM.
With a Commentary by L. MOREL, LL.D.
George Borrow.—ISOPEL BERNERS.
The Text, with Introduction by THOMAS SECCOMBE, Assistant Editor of the "Dictionary of National Biography."

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Digitized by Google

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A STUMBLE BY THE WAY, by L. T. MEADE, author of "An Adventuress," is now ready.

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, author of "Joseph's Coat."
"We are fascinated by the lonely man."—Speaker.

THE TRIUMPH OF HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, author of "The Gun-runner," &c.
"A book to be read at once."—Leeds Mercury.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. SHIEL, author of "The Yellow Danger," &c.
"Mr. Shiel's imagination is certainly unique since Poe died"—Morning Leader.

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by HIMSELF, and dedicated "To all who Love."
"Of all the books before us it has most the air of being a true book."—Academy.

THE LADY OF LYNN. By Sir WALTER BESANT, author of "The Orange Girl," &c. With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN-HAMMOND.
"Very clever . . . very entertaining."—Daily Chronicle.

DUMB. By the Hon. Mrs. WALTER R. D. FORBES, author of "A Gentleman."
"A strong and interesting story."—Academy.

A SOWER OF WHEAT. By HAROLD BINDLOSS, author of "Ainslie's Ju-ju."
"A fresh, manly, interesting story."—Vanity Fair.

THE CANKERWORM. Being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN.
"Mr. Fenn may be said to have excelled himself."—Globe

A FIGHT TO A FINISH. By FLORENCE WARDEN, author of "Joan, the Curate," &c.
"An absorbing story."—St. James's Gazette.

THE HOUSE ON THE SCAR: a Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS, author of "In a Cathedral City," &c. Second Edition.
"A fresh and well-written story."—Hereford Times.

THE WEALTH OF MALLERSTANG. By ALGERNON GISSING author of "A Secret of the North Sea," &c.
"A powerful story."—Court Circular.

THREE MEN OF MARK. By SARAH TYTLER, author of "St Mungo's City," &c.
"A good story."—Outlook.

ONLY A NIGGER. By EDMUND MITCHELL, author of "The Lone Star Rush," &c.
"Highly readable."—Scotsman.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS

TALES OF A DYING RACE.
By ALFRED A. GRACE.
"Virile stories."—Academy.

A BLIND MARRIAGE &c.
By GEORGE R. SIMS.
"Full of human nature."—Scotsman.

THE JOY OF LIFE. By EMILE ZOLA. Edited with an introduction by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY.
"Painted with all M. Zola's painful power. —Truth.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BUCHANAN.
With Portrait in each Volume. Two vols., crown 8vo, buckram, 12s.

A VERSAILLES CHRISTMAS-TIDE. By MARY STUART BOYD. With 53 Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Fcap 4to, cloth gilt and gilt top, 6s.
"Bright and full of character."—St. James's Gazette.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By CHARLES READE. A new edition, set in handsome type, and illustrated by 16 Photogravures and 84 half-tone Illustrations by MATT. B. HEWERDINE. Small 4to, cloth gilt and gilt top, 10s. 6d. net.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.
One Shilling Monthly.

CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER:

HARVEST ON THE PRAIRIE. By HAROLD BINDLOSS. THE APPARITION OF MRS. VEAL. By RALPH HAROLD BRETHERTON. AROUND THE THREE TOWERS OF GRASSE. By F. G. DUNLOP-WALLACE-GOODBODY. THE EARL OF BUTE. By J. A. LOVAT-FRASER. DID MARY STUART LOVE BOTHWELL? By AMY TASKER. JEWELRY AND GEMS. By EMILY HILL. THE CENSORSHIP OF PLAYS IN FRANCE. By MAURICE DAUMART. MATRIMONY AND MUSIC IN CHINA. By J. CUTHBERT HADDEN. THE SPECTATOR. By T. R. PEARSON. CIVILISATION VERSUS BARBARISM. By SYLVANUS URBAN.

LONDON:
CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Illustrated Edition of Social England.

NOW READY. Price 12s. net.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF

The Illustrated Edition of

Social England.

A Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Industry, Commerce, Literature, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By various writers. Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L., and J. S. MANN, M.A.

THE COMPLETE WORK WILL CONTAIN ABOUT

2,500 ILLUSTRATIONS

And Numerous Coloured Plates,

REPRODUCED FROM AUTHENTIC SOURCES.

A Prospectus will be sent Post Free on application.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LONDON AFTERNOONS: Chapters on the Social Life, Architecture, and Records of the Great City and its Neighbourhood. By W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A. With 60 Full-page Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE EARTH'S BEGINNING. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., &c. With 4 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BRITISH SCULPTURE AND SCULPTORS OF TO-DAY. By M. H. SPIELMANN. With about 200 Illustrations. 5s. net; handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVELS.

LEPIDUS THE CENTURION: A Roman of To-day. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD, Author of "Phra the Phœnician." 6s.
"As amusing as anything we have read this season; an admirable tale."—Daily Telegraph.

THE PRINCESS CYNTHIA. By MARGUERITE BRYANT. Author of "Morton Verlost," "A Woman's Privilege," &c. 6s.

THE GIANT'S GATE. By MAX PEMBERTON. 6s.
"The most charming of love stories."—British Weekly.

THE LAIRD'S LUCK, and Other Fireside Tales. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH ("Q"). 6s.
"'The Laird's Luck' is a masterpiece."—Monthly Review

A MAN OF MILLIONS. By Samuel R. KEIGHTLEY, M.A., LL.D. 6s.
"Of engrossing interest from the first page to the last."—Newcastle Chronicle.

THE AMBASSADOR'S ADVENTURE. By ALLEN UPWARD. 6s.
"Reveals a noticeable development of its author's powers."—Scotsman.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LONDON, and all Booksellers.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

MACMILLAN'S GUIDES.

With numerous Maps and Plans based upon the latest information and prepared expressly for these Guides. Globe 8vo.

Guide to Eastern Mediterranean - 9s. net.
Guide to Western Mediterranean - 9s. net.
Guide to Palestine and Egypt - - 10s. net.
[Ready on Tuesday.
Guide to Italy - - - - - - - 10s. net.

Guardian.—"Conciseness is aimed at to the extent that we get the whole of Italy in one small volume. . . . The maps are excellent. . . . We are of opinion that what cannot be found in this volume does not come among the facts which a guide-book is expected to describe."

LETTERS OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN.
Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. With 3 Portraits. 8vo. 15s. net.

Now Ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries.
S. R. CROCKETT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE FIREBRAND.
Crown 8vo. gilt top. 6s.

THE ISLE OF THE SHAMROCK.
Written and Illustrated by CLIFTON JOHNSON.
Extra Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES

Globe 8vo, 5s. per Volume.
Contains 156 Volumes, among which are:—

OXFORD STUDIES. By John RICHARD GREEN. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss K. NORGATE. [Ready this day.

MORE LETTERS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. [Ready this day.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S WORKS. 8 vols.

R. H. HUTTON'S COLLECTED ESSAYS. 6 vols.

WORKS BY SIR JOHN R. SEELEY, Litt.D. 5 vols.

WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE. 10 vols.
 Send for New Complete List.*

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER:
PRINCESS PUCK. By the Author of "The Enchanter." Chapters XXVII.-XXX.
DR. JOHNSON AMONG THE POETS. By H. C. Minchin.
THE ART OF FRIENDSHIP.
WARDS OF GOD. By Gerald Brenan.
A SONG OF DARTMOOR.
THE STORY OF EVANGELINE. By Charles Edwardes.
THE ETHNOGRAPHIC SURVEY OF INDIA. By F. H. Brown.
SOME AUSTRALIAN VERSE.
A SNUG LITTLE SHOOTING BOX. By T. E. Kilby.
DOLLS THE GOLDFINDER.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, post free, 16s.
The CHRISTMAS (DECEMBER) NUMBER contains:
THACKERAY IN THE UNITED STATES:—1. The First Visit. By J. G. Wilson. Portraits of Thackeray and reproduction of letters and original sketches by him, not before published.
CHRISTMAS IN FRANCE. By Th. Bentzon.
BLACKGUM AG'IN' THUNDER. A story. By Frank R. Stockton.
OFFICER BRADY. (The Modern Recruit.) By Robert W. Chambers.
And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Illustrated. Price 1s. Annual Subscription, post free, 12s.
The CHRISTMAS (DECEMBER) NUMBER contains:
HE IMP'S CHRISTMAS VISIT. By Josephine Dodge Daskam.
THE PRINCESS LOVELY-LOCKS. (A Christmas Fantasy.) By Helen Gray Cone.
THE BOY AND THE BARON. Complete Story. By Adeline Knapp.
THE STORY OF BARNABY LEE. Serial. By John Bennett.
And numerous other Stories for the Young.
 Also ready Vols. XXVII. and XXVIII. Nov.-Oct. 1900-1. Price 8s. 6d. each.*

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1543. Established 1869. 30 November, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

Mr. Henley's article on Stevenson has been more discussed and more written about during the past week than any other literary topic. We gave our opinion of that article in our last issue. Mr. Henley has been interviewed on the subject by the Sun "man," who found the author of Hawthorn and Lavender "implacable." Mr. Henley quoted Bishop Berkeley: "They say, What say they? Let them say." Mr. Henley also observed that the criticisms upon him were not worth the trouble of retort, and that this was not the first time that he had fought a forlorn hope. Mr. Henley's article on Stevenson has been called many things by various writers, but it occurred to nobody else to call it a forlorn hope.

The fourteen poems contained in Pasiteles the Elder and Other Poems were chosen by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse some months before his death in July of the present year. Mr. Austin Dobson contributes a Prefatory Note to the volume, from which we take the following:

> A critic in the first place, and a critic of exceptional equipment, insight, and honesty, he would probably have been more pleased to have successfully enshrined an elevated idea in a flawless sonnet, than to have produced a whole volume of carefully-considered essays. He was interested in questions of metrical dexterity, and he was not averse from the playful treatment of a subject; but he was inexorable to mental haziness and obscure expression. He knew—no one better—that verse cannot exist by style alone; but that an informing conception, a defined purpose, and above all, a genuine and an overmastering impulse, are indispensable, if it is to have any chance of ultimate survival in a crowded world. His dream, through a life of many duties, was of a leisure when he might listen to his own thoughts, and set them to a fitting music. But Death left that dream unrealised.

Mr. Stephen Phillips's Ulysses will be produced by Mr. Beerbohm Tree at Her Majesty's Theatre early next year. Calypso will be played by Mrs. Brown-Potter.

Among Messrs. Greening and Co.'s forthcoming books, "in active preparation," we notice the following:—W. E. Henley and the National Observer Group, by George Gamble; The Parnassian School in English Poetry (Andrew Lang, Edmund Gosse, and Robert Bridges), by Sir George Douglas; also Richard Le Gallienne, by C. Ranger Gull. The demand for critical monographs seems to be unabated—or is it only the supply?

A correspondent asks if any of our readers can tell him the name of the author of the following verses, and where they are to be found:

> A fire mist and a planet,
> A crystal and a cell,
> A jelly fish and a saurian,
> And caves where the cavemen dwell.
> Then a sense of law and beauty,
> And a face turned from the clod,
> Some call it evolution,
> And others call it God.
>
> A haze on the far horizon,
> An infinite tender sky,
> The ripe, rich tint of the cornfields,
> And the wild geese sailing high;
> And all our upland and lowland,
> The charm of the golden rod;
> Some of us call it autumn,
> And others call it God.

Another correspondent is anxious to discover the origin of the saying that the pith of a woman's letter is in the postscript.

Our readers are so frequently able to identify quotations of which the origin is desired that we will pass on to them a question asked by a correspondent of Notes and Queries. He wishes to know the title of a small octavo child's book, popular in the sixties, in which each page was headed by a picture of an English monarch in red and black. Underneath were verses, "more or less of the nonsense order," and like unto these about Henry VIII.:

> Highty, tighty, flighty, Ho!
> Whither away doth my little man go?
> To see my Lord Mayor, hys Feaste or hys Showe?
> No; not for ye Feaste, nor yet for ye Showe,
> Have I donned my best Beaver and fayre Bridal Bowe;
> But to see our Kyng's nuptials,
> His wedding, I trowe.

Another Notes and Queries querist would like to know the author of a poem which winds up on the following bass note of resignation:

> Your friends will bury you;
> That's all that they will do?

It depends, however, on who you are.

"He has become a kind of classic in négligé." Thus Mr. Arthur Symons hits off Henry Murger in the translation of Scènes de la Vie de Bohème, which Mr. Grant Richards issues under the title of The Latin Quarter. He adds:

> His Scènes de la Vie de Bohème sum up an epoch, give us the map of a country: it is the Bohemia of the Latin Quarter, as it existed at the Romantic epoch. And it is also the eternal Bohemia, a country where people love lightly and sincerely, weep and laugh freely, are really hungry, really have their ambitions, and at times die of all these maladies. It is the gayest and most melancholy country in the world. Not to have visited it is to have made the grand tour for nothing. To have lived there too long is to find all the rest of the world an exile. But in Murger's pages, perhaps, after all, you will see more of the country than anything less than a lifetime spent in it will show you. . . .

Digitized by Google

. . . The Bohemians of Murger are like children playing at life with all the gay seriousness of children. They have never unlearnt the child's gesture of grasping at any shining thing, the vehemence of his desire for the moon, the irrational tempest of his tears or of his mirth, the regardlessness of anything but the desire of the moment. They realise very keenly that I am I, they can admit frankly that you are you, when you cross their path; but nothing has ever been able to teach them, any more than the child in the nurse's arms can be taught, that there exists a vague and vast abstraction, neither you nor I, but made up of infinite identities that have allowed themselves to be swallowed up for one another's benefit: the intangible, inexplicable monster that we call Society.

In conclusion Mr. Symons remarks: "He gives us every sentiment for its own sake, taking part with it uncritically; and, in his forgetfulness to be an artist, seems to come closer to us, like a comrade."

It may not be generally known that "Colonel" Lynch, the newly-elected member for Galway, is also a poet. Mr. William Platt sends us some verses from "Colonel" Lynch's A Koran of Love, published some years ago, with the assurance that the volume contains "many equally striking passages":

I love thy beauty in its wildest mood;
I love all beauty with a pagan force,
As if an instinct scarcely understood
Had turned my thoughts to beauty's golden course,
And every pang of nerve and leap of blood
Had owned that impulse as its primal source;
As if my thoughts and hopes and hot desires
Were touched to life in Beauty's lambent fires.

How can I utter that impassioned call
That rings from out the depths within my soul
When some rare thing of beauty over all
Comes near my life, disdaining my control?
My pride hath vanished, I am Beauty's thrall,
My life and service I would fain uproll,
And sacrifice them all to Beauty's gain,
And find reward in that voluptuous pain.

And, therefore, mightily do I rejoice
In those rare moods that seem to open Heaven
Unto our minds, and gift us with a voice
That spreads through earth a finer sort of leaven,
And moves us ever to the better choice
Of all the gifts of Fate profusely given—
Bereft of the ideal, man's a clod,
The poet's spark transforms him to a God.

A Coronation Ode, like a novel, is easy enough to write, but very difficult to write well. But many will soon be trying, as Good Words offers a first prize of £50, and lesser prizes for the best Coronation Ode. The attempts will be judged by a small committee of literary men.

Collectors of literary curiosities may like to note the following lines by Dr. Chivers, the eccentric poet, who died in Decatur, Ga., in 1858, whose verse it has been suggested from time to time suggested to Poe something of his peculiar vocabulary and rhythm. The following string of bejewelled phrases will serve as an example:

Many mellow Cydonian suckets,
Sweet apples, anthosmial, divine,
From the ruby-rimmed, beryline buckets,
Star-gemmed, lily-shaped, hyaline;
Like the sweet golden goblet found growing
On the wild emerald cucumber tree,
Rich, brilliant, like chrysoprase glowing,
Was my beautiful Rosalie Lee.

Some of our ode-makers, too, may like to know in time for the Coronation how thickly a poet who gives his mind to the poetry of pomp can "lay it on." Dr. Chivers's Fourth of July rhapsody, called "The Heroes of Freedom," read in Washington, Ga., in 1856, was "wholly composed of lines like these":

Hark! the Asar-Cock crows, filling Gimle with thunder,
Answering Heimdall's great Horn, blowing loud for the brave;
While from Hela they march, singing, full of sweet wonder,
Up to Valhalla's Halls, shouting, Wave, Banners, Wave!
Up to beautiful Baldar from the infinite Nadir,
Chanting Odin's sweet Runes, by three Nornir upborne,
Soar Eternity's Heroes where Almighty Alfader
Sits crowned in Bethshimmin on the Mountains of Morn.
Now like clouds of sweet fragrance from Altars uprising,
Wreathing Nosegays of Eden's bliss wide as the sea,
Floats the incense of song, all their comates surprising
With the joys of the Beautiful, the joys of the Free.

Mr. Andrew Lang, and a working-man described as "X.," deliver themselves in the current Cornhill on "The Reading Public." Mr. Lang's own remarks are as discursive as usual, and as entertaining. We will give a passage from each writer. Mr. Lang says:

> The practical man reads all the newspapers, nothing else. Millions of readers peruse only cheap illustrated magazines, which are often wonderfully good, but do not pretend to be literature. Intelligent ladies in the country read quantities of miscellaneous things without an order or an aim, just what the librarian chooses to put into their boxes. The circulating libraries often do not send a book of any special sort; when asked for, 'It is out,' and it never gets an innings. In place of it are sent six-shilling novels which nobody asked for. The wearied applicant at last forgets about the book she wanted, and asks for another, and does not get it. As to buying a book, he or she would usually as soon think of buying a boa-constrictor, unless he is specially a book-collector. I have had the amusement of seeing a volume of my own sold for £7 10s. a volume which, for twenty years, the public would not have at three-and-six. The bookseller helps. Lately a Swedish lady sent for one or two books of mine to 'the trade' of a large town in this country; she then wrote to me complaining of being told that all my books were out of print. Now, an author cannot reach the public, and the public cannot get at an author, while booksellers adopt this vigorous policy.

"X.," a labourer in a large town with whom Mr. Lang came in contact, has been induced by him to give particulars of the amount and kind of study done by working-men. His paper is decidedly interesting. After naming the authors in whom he takes delight (they include Æschylus, Shakespeare, Lamb, Milton, Byron, Carlyle, Adam Smith, and others), "X." says:

> It is not to be assumed that working-men generally take an interest in the authors I have named; on the contrary, I should find a difficulty in naming a dozen workmen of my acquaintance with whom I could discuss for half an hour all or any of the books in my small library. Were I to take an average working-man, and leave him alone for an hour or two in a room containing my books and a year-old newspaper, I dare wager that on my return I should find him reading—if he were reading at all—the ancient newspaper. I recently heard a fellow workman remark that he had been to hear a debate between a Spiritualist and a Freethinker, and, deeming that was rather an unusual form of amusement, I entered into conversation with him, during which he told me he had read a few of Dickens's and Marryat's books. He had never read any of Scott's works, so I lent him Ivanhoe.

Digitized by Google

Still, I have known a few working-men who did take some interest in good literature. There was one—he was a labourer too—whose most treasured literary possession was a paper-covered second-hand volume of Shakespeare's plays. I believe he knew almost all the plays by heart, and he would argue by the hour on the subjects of Hamlet's 'nor-nor-west' madness, or whether Falstaff really deserved such a bad character as many good people credit him with. He believed Shakespeare's to be the greatest mind of all time; and, living not a great way from the bard's birthplace, and being well-acquainted with many of the legends concerning him, he considered that the poet's alleged appreciation of good ale rather enhanced than detracted from his merits. My friend was a little perturbed a few years ago when the American, Donelly, was attempting to prove Bacon's authorship of Shakespeare's works.

In the same magazine General James Grant Wilson begins a series of papers on Thackeray in the United States. Thackeray's biography is being written after all bit by bit, and he who gathers up the fragments will soon find himself in possession of that forbidden loaf. The memories here presented are personal and brisk, and most readable. Among many Thackeray manuscripts in the collection of Major William H. Lambert, of Philadelphia, is the following invitation to Richard Doyle to attend the first lecture on the English Humorists in Willis's Rooms, in London, on May 22, 1851:

> My dear D.—I hope you will come to the tight-rope exhibition to-morrow, and send you a card. You and your friend will please to sit in distant parts of the room.
>
> When you see me put my hand to my watch-chain, you will say, "God bless my soul, how beautiful!"
>
> When I touch my neckcloth, clap with all your might.
>
> When I use my pocket handkerchief, burst into tears.
>
> When I pause, say "Brav-ah-ah-ah-vo," through the pause.
>
> You had best bring with you a very noisy umbrella, to be used at proper intervals: and if you can't cry at the pathetic parts, please blow your nose very hard.
>
> And now, everything having been done to ensure success that mortal can do, the issue is left to the immortal Gods.
>
> God save the Queen. No money returned. Babies in arms NOT admitted.—By yours ever,
>
> W. M. T.

Some good stories of Thackeray's encounters in America are not wanting. "Wishing to see a specimen of the red-shirted Bowery boy and volunteer fireman of that period, of whom he had heard much both before and after his arrival in the States, he made his way to that broad thoroughfare, and soon saw one of the species seated on a hydrant. Approaching him, he politely said, 'Please, sir, I want to go to Brooklyn.' 'Well,' answered the Bowery boy, 'why the h— don't you go?'" To "Sam" Ward, one of his New York friends, Thackeray said: "Sir, respect your dinner; idolise it; enjoy it properly. You will be, by many hours in the week, many weeks in the year, and many years in your life, the happier if you do." A Boston lady said to him very smartly, apropos of his novels: "Mr. Thackeray, I feel extremely sorry for you, for it seems that you never knew a good woman who was not a fool, nor a bright one that was not a knave." General Wilson tells us that Thackeray "was not shocked with slavery as he saw it in several of the Southern States, but thought the negroes in the good families 'the comfortablest race of menials.' With American scenery he was not favourably impressed, saying: 'It is a dreary, unpicturesque country for the most part. I have not seen a dozen picturesque views in all my wanderings, nor even cared to use my pencil except to sketch a negro or two.'"

From a collection of Children's Witticisms by Dr. T. J. Macnamara in the December New Liberal Review we take the following three admirable definitions, of which the first, unfortunately, is a "chestnut," and, we fear, a manufacture:

> The marriage customs of the ancient Greeks were that a man married only one wife, and this was called Monotony.
>
> Faith is that quality which enables us to believe what we know to be untrue.
>
> Parliament is the place where they go up to in London to talk about Birmingham.

There is a pleasant paper on "Dr. Johnson Among the Poets" in the new Macmillan, and it contains no pleasanter passage than the following:

> One day, when Johnson and Garrick were sitting together, the latter repeated an epitaph which a Dr. Wilkes had composed upon Phillips. Johnson was dissatisfied with the "commonplace funereal lines," as Boswell justly calls them, and said to Garrick, "I think, Davy, I can make a better." "Then," the biographer adds, "stirring about his tea for a little while, in a state of meditation, he almost extempore produced the following verses:
>
> 'Phillips, whose touch harmonious could remove
> The pangs of guilty power and hapless love,
> Rest here, distress'd by poverty no more,
> Find here that calm thou gav'st so oft before;
> Sleep undisturb'd within this peaceful shrine,
> Till angels wake thee with a note like thine.'"
>
> Any musician might covet such an epitaph; any poet might be proud to have written it.

Illustrated book catalogues are the order of the day, and we find much to admire in the list published by Messrs. Cornish Brothers, of Birmingham, with frontispiece portrait of Mr. George Meredith in his Surrey garden. Nor do we take amiss the assertion, of the trade tradey though it be, that "It was an excellent saying of the younger Pliny that Cornish's Catalogue. . . ." A little redolent of commerce, too, is the assertion that "the assets of humanity have been increased by the creation of such characters as Lucy Desborough, Emilia, Carinthia, Deborah Beltham, and even the much-vexed Diana." We assent also to the proposition that "Cornish Brothers need make no apology for bringing to the notice of their readers no fewer than six new editions of the works of our immortal Shakespeare." Verily, no: Edgbaston, we doubt not, can absorb them all.

On Tuesday, December 3, an Exhibition will be opened at the depôt of the Guild of Women-Binders, 61, Charing Cross Road, consisting of original portraits of His Majesty the King and of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, water-colour drawings by the late Empress Frederick, and a large collection of coloured and other rare engravings, illustrating the Coronations of English Monarchs, together with a number of scarce books on the same subject. There are also some old and rare engravings of royal palaces. The Exhibition will be open from 9 a.m. daily, and will be free to the public. The Press view will be on Monday next, from 9 a.m. The Princess of Wales has given permission to the Guild of Women-Binders to reproduce the cover of the album which was made by the Guild for Her Royal Highness to take to Australia, South Africa, Canada, etc. It contains autographs, and views of the places visited, and will be of historical interest. The reproduction will form the frontispiece of a volume entitled The Bindings of To-morrow, which is to be published by the Guild by private subscription. The volume will contain facsimile reproductions in colour of fifty of the finest bindings by the Guild, and the Princess has given permission for it to be dedicated to herself.

Digitized by Google

Bibliographical.

It is well known that on September 27, 1855, at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Browning, D. G. Rossetti made a surreptitious sketch of Tennyson as he sat on a sofa reading Maud to a distinguished company. That sketch Browning, a few years before his death, spoke of "still possessing." The Daily News accordingly suggests that the drawing of Tennyson (in the same circumstances, and by Rossetti) which was sold this week at the Cosmo Monkhouse sale, "was possibly a second sketch made the same evening." The facts are given by Mr. W. M. Rossetti in his Præ-Raphaelite Diaries and Letters (1900). Dante Rossetti did make of the first sketch a duplicate, which became the property of Mr. Monkhouse. The poet-painter, his brother goes on to tell us, also made a triplicate, which he sent to Miss Elizabeth Siddal. This third drawing remained in the possession of the Siddal family till 1899, when it was presented to Mr. W. M. Rossetti, who reproduces it in Præ-Raphaelite Diaries and Letters (opposite page 233). It is dated September 27, 1855, and was therefore obviously drawn on the evening of the reading. At the right-hand top corner are written the words from Maud—"I hate the dreadful hollow behind the little wood."

It would be interesting to know, for certain, the author of the lines beginning "Three score and ten the age and life of man," printed on page 474 of last week's Academy. The last two stanzas there given, beginning "What is our lyfe, a play of passion," figure, with slight differences, in Dr. Hannah's anthology, The Courtly Poets (1870), where they are signed "Sr W. R." and ascribed to Sir Walter Raleigh. This is Dr. Hannah's version:—

> What is our life? The play of passion.
> Our mirth? The music of division:
> Our mothers' wombs the tiring-houses be,
> Where we are dressed for life's short comedy.
> The earth the stage; Heaven the spectator is,
> Who sits and views whosoe'er doth act amiss.
> The graves which hide us from the scorching sun
> Are like drawn curtains when the play is done.
> Thus playing post we to our latest rest,
> And then we die in earnest, not in jest.

Dr. Hannah says in a note that these lines were printed anonymously in a music-book of 1612, and are to be found also in the Ashmolean MSS., 36 and 38. He likewise refers his readers to Censura Literaria, ii., 103 (2nd edition).

Writing in the Sphere, "C. K. S." remarks, concerning "a favourite writer" of his, that "some of Ann Radcliffe's books have not been reprinted for fifty years." This may be true of her Castles of Athlin and Dunbayne, her Sicilian Romance, her Journal through Holland, or her Poems; but it is not true of her three most notable works—The Romance of the Forest, The Mysteries of Udolpho, and The Italian. Of the Romance of the Forest there was a sixpenny edition in 1882, and a two-shilling issue in 1887. The Mysteries also came out in 1882 at a florin, and was reprinted at the same price in 1891. There was likewise a sixpenny edition of The Italian in 1884. Every student of English literature ought to read these three stories, and also the Sicilian Romance, and I should say they would be popular with the "tit-bits" public if brought out cheaply enough. I fear, however, that there is no chance of our seeing them in an edition de luxe.

"C. K. S." is my authority for the statement that Mr. Wilfred Whitten (not Whitton, good "C. K. S.") is writing a short Life of Byron. Well, there is room for such a book. We have had no small, portable monograph on the poet since Mr. Roden Noel's contribution to the "Great Writers" series in 1890. Professor Nichol's memoir in "English Men of Letters" series is extant, but neither of these books closes the way against another short biography. Though I do not think that Mr. Murray's revised and enlarged edition of the Letters, Journals, and Poems adds anything material to our knowledge of Byron, and though I am quite sure that Mr. W. Graham's second-hand gossip about the poet (1899) is of next to no value, a new Memoir of Byron, from a fresh point of view, should be both interesting and useful.

The announced abridgment of Scott's novels for the use of schools is no doubt a good idea, but it is not a new one. It is just twenty years since Miss Braddon started an enterprise practically identical, though her's, I fancy, was intended for the benefit of the general public. However, in 1886, Messrs. Chambers brought out an abridged edition of Kenilworth for schools, and two years later came Messrs. Bell with The Talisman dealt with in the same fashion. No doubt there are passages—nay, whole chapters—in Scott which the present-day schoolboy is inclined to skip. Still, those who set out to abridge the Great Magician should do their spiriting gently.

We are promised the Works of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell in ten volumes of uniform size and style. But can they be got into ten volumes? Here is a list of those which the British public have already made acquaintance:—In War Time (1885), Roland Blake (1886), Prince Little Boy and Other Tales (1887), The Masque and Other Poems (1888), The Cup of Youth and Other Poems (1889), Far in the Forest (1889), The Psalm of Death (1891), Francis Drake (1892), Characteristics (1892), The Mother and Other Poems (1893), When all the Woods are Green (1894), Collected Poems (1896), Hephzibah Guinness (1897), Hugh Wynne (1897), Dr. North and his Friends (1900), Wayes and Other Poems (1900), and Circumstance (1901).

It has been suggested that Shirley Brooks's memorial verses in Punch should be collected and issued in volume form. With this I do not agree, for Brooks was by no means a poet, though he was a wit and a humorist (vide his volume of verse called Wit and Humour, of which a new edition appeared in 1883). His serious verse, like his prose, "Essence of Parliament," was good journalism, but that is all. Much more is to be said for his three novels—The Silver Cord, The Gordian Knot, and Sooner or Later, of which there has been no new edition, certainly for twenty years. These are books which a publisher might well be encouraged to reproduce.

There is a small bibliographical point involved in the appearance of Mr. Watts-Dunton's "Xmas at the Mermaid" in the "Flowers of Parnassus" series. Hitherto (in all editions, known to me, of The Coming of Love), one of the personages in "Xmas at the Mermaid" has been the mysterious "Mr. W. H.," of Shakespeare's Sonnets. In the new booklet we have, instead of "Mr. W. H.," "A Friend of Shakespeare."

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

About Dreams.

Dreams and Their Meanings. By Horace G. Hutchinson. (Longmans. 9s. 6d. net.)

It is difficult to see why Mr. Hutchinson should have labelled his book with a title so misleading as Dreams and Their Meanings, which might naturally convey the idea that it was a book on the interpretation of dreams, an elaborate rival to the many "Dream-Books" which beguile the pence and the reason of servant girls. It is true there is a chapter on this art in various times and countries; but it is a mere disquisition for the curious, and has nothing to do with the object of the book, which is a discussion of those forms of dream common, more or less, to all men. In order, however, to swell the volume to book dimensions, and give it what we must needs think a fictitious completeness, we have likewise prefatory chapters on the scientific view of dreams, on their association with ideas of immortality, and on divination from dreams. These are frank compilations, of necessity more or less cursory and incomplete. The real pith of the book is contained in one lengthy chapter, which is in effect several chapters. As the author explains, it grew out of an essay on the more frequent dreams which most of us have. Numerous correspondents were induced by it to favour him with their own dream-experiences, by way of addition to or correction of the experiences touched on in his essay; and his method has been to reprint this essay, following it by the amplifications of his correspondents, interwoven with his own commentary on their communications.

It must be said that the result is somewhat desultory, and that the book as a whole has an unsystematic and patchwork air. The prefatory chapters (already mentioned) were surely unnecessary by way of introduction to a disquisition so light and amateurish, which avowedly has nothing to do with any scientific treatment of the subject. Doubtless the somewhat desultory aspect of the main portion was unavoidable, having regard to the author's aim. But the result is that we seem to get into a bath of dreams, splash about for a bit, and get out again, without tangible result or object. He does not, like Mr. Frederick Greenwood, in his interesting Imagination in Dreams, attempt the psychological aspect of the subject—the subtle and intricate considerations suggested by the enlargement of the powers of the dreaming mind. He would probably plead, indeed, that he had no imagination in dreams; that his design was to discuss the dreams common to the prosaic person in general, from the standpoint of a prosaic man. To discover and catalogue what dreams are dreamed by all men, what are their typical forms and chief modifications—this appears to be his sole aim. He does discuss occasional explanations suggested by correspondents, or offer alternative explanations of his own. But these are sufficiently superficial, and not very satisfactory, getting little further than ordinary association of ideas, physical suggestion, or lobster salad.

He shows, indeed, some inability to comprehend the more subtle operations of dream or potencies of the dreaming mind. He will not entertain the idea that "Kubla Khan" was composed in dream, or that coherent composition of any value is possible in such a state. This arises from miscomprehension of poetic psychology—the supposition that metrical composition demands a deliberate and difficult effort. Whereas to a poet, while he finds an effort to express himself in prose, poetry is very easy. Apart from Coleridge, we know instances of poets composing to some extent in dream—one, in particular, who composed a fine passage of considerable length, included in his published work. There should be no difficulty, therefore, in admitting the dream-composition of "Kubla Khan," though how far it was afterwards improved is another matter. Mr. Hutchinson is too confident, also, in some of his assumptions; such as that, in the common dream of falling from a height, nobody has ever reached the bottom. One instance to the contrary is given by a correspondent of his own; and the present writer constantly had the same experience as a child.

A prolonged bead-roll of dreams which we all know in kind, if not in detail, with no new circumstance to cast any light on their causes or enlarge our knowledge of what the dreaming mind can do, is not enthralling: we doubt even whether it have much value as possible material for science. Yet here and there is an interesting point. One person, for instance, sees new kinds of flowers, and even unknown colours. Mr. Hutchinson, of course, with usual scepticism, is sure that this person only imagined the colour to be unknown, and that waking vision would have recognised it. We are not so sure. We know from our own experience that dream may reveal new senses, unguessed by waking experience. New colour, therefore, does not seem impossible, especially when we consider that the spectrum has a whole range of unseen colours. Might not the strange heightening of the dreaming senses light on some hint of these? We see the difficulties of the suggestion, none the less. Mr. Hutchinson, by-the-way, does not notice, in discussing dream-scenery, the preternaturally splendid light which invests them—with many people, at least. One thing worth record he notes—that dreams of sight are most frequent, next those of hearing, lastly those of smell, touch, and taste. Would this hold good with musicians, one wonders? Their pursuit ought to make hearing far more frequent in dream. When the present writer was a frequent concert-goer, he had musical dreams which have vanished with the cessation of that practice.

But the most interesting portion of the book, to our mind, is the final section on telepathic and premonitory dreams, where Mr. Hutchinson has given over the pen to another hand. Drawn chiefly from the records of the Society for Psychical Research, it possesses a more systematic arrangement, and an evidential value. Here are dreams as much uncommon as the others are familiar, while they have the advantage of pointing a conclusion—if you please to accept it. Let us end this notice by one or two quotations. Here is the story told by Mrs. Venn, of St. Peter's Terrace, Cambridge:

> I think the oddest experience I ever had with [my son] was one night at Bournemouth, when he slept in my room. I dreamed a dream and woke with it, and he immediately (asleep still) in his sleep began to talk about it, proving that he was dreaming the same thing. It was a very queer dream, and involved the question of how many inches (of a row of candles) should be cut off each candle. He gravely begged me to "cut off six inches, do, mamma;" when I was feeling four would be enough. It was a fête in our dream, and we were lighting up some room. No real thing had happened to suggest it to us, but we both dreamt it together, apparently.

Dreams, then, may be infectious? Well, you have the alternative that some words spoken in the mother's dream may have suggested the dream-answer to the boy. But other cases here given cannot be so explained, though we have taken this for its brevity. The next we must condense; it is the dream which saved the life of Mr. Brighten, when as an articled clerk at Norwich he took a trip with a friend on a small river-steamer. The steamer was moored for the night, stem and stern, to a wherry in the river at Great Yarmouth. Mr. Brighten retired to his cabin, and fell asleep in his berth. He dreamed:

> I thought my eyes opened, and that the top of the cabin had become transparent, and I could see two dark figures floating in the air above the funnel. They appeared to be in earnest converse, pointing towards the mouth of the river, and then at the ropes by which the boat was moored: at last they turned to each other, and, after some gestures, they seemed to have resolved upon a plan of action, and each floated in the air, one to the stem and the other to the stern, holding out a forefinger, and at the same moment each forefinger touched a rope and instantly burned it like a red-hot iron. [The boat drifted towards the rapids at the river-mouth; while Mr. Brighten, knowing the boat would founder there, made vain efforts to arise and give the alarm. All the time the two figures floated above the steamer, uttering musical sounds.] At last . . . we came where the swift waters were hurrying . . . over the bar . . .; and in those waters we were soon whirling, when the musical sounds . . . were exchanged by the two figures for hideous screams of triumph, as the boat began rapidly to sink. . . . I was drowning, choking. [He sprang up, burst the cabin doors, and was on deck in the moonlight, awake.] I instinctively turned to the head-rope; to my horror it had just parted. Turning for the boathook, I saw beside me my friend C., . . . and he shouted that he saw the stern-rope go at the same time. We both held on to the boat-hook . . . but our cries woke up the wherryman, who came to our assistance. Next day I could calmly reflect that had we remained asleep when the ropes parted, the tragedy I dreamed of must certainly have taken place in all its literal detail.

Digitized by Google

This is sensational enough; and the last two sections of the book are full of narratives no less extraordinary. For their sake, at any rate, the book is interesting reading.

"A Fit Vessel for Great Thoughts."

A Study of the Ethics of Spinoza. By Harold H. Joachim. (Clarendon Press. 10s. 6d. net.)

With the judgment of the angels and of the saints we excommunicate, cut off, curse, and anathematize Baruch de Espinoza, with the consent of the elders and of all this holy congregation, in the presence of the holy books: by the 613 precepts which are written therein, with the anathema wherewith Joshua cursed Jericho, with the curse which Elisha laid upon the children, and with all the curses which are written in the law. Cursed be he by day, and cursed be he by night. Cursed be he in sleeping, and cursed be he in waking, cursed in going out and cursed in coming in. The Lord shall not pardon him, the wrath and fury of the Lord shall henceforth be kindled against this man, and shall lay upon him all the curses which are written in the book of the law. The Lord shall destroy his name under the sun, and cut him off for his undoing from all the tribes of Israel, with all the curses of the firmament which are written in the book of the law. But ye that cleave unto the Lord your God, live all of you this day.

So runs the sonorous denunciation by the little Jewish community of Amsterdam of the man who "affirmed with Paul that all things are in God and move in God." It was not only from the tribes of Israel that Spinoza was cut off. Few men have suffered from so universal an anathema. The Church of Rome placed his works upon her Index of the forbidden, and Protestants of every shade of belief vied with one another in condemning and "refuting" him. The Lutheran pastor, to whom we owe most of our knowledge of the details of his life, was too honest and simple-minded to deny him the praise due to a life ordered in singularly strict conformity with the Christian ideal; but it is the testimony of an unwilling witness, filled with a pious horror of his "impious" doctrines, and lost in a simple wonder how such virtues and such doctrines could find a home in a single personality. Even Voltaire saw in him a man who "renversait tous les principes de la morale, en étant lui-même d'une vertu rigide." Even Hume (a strange champion of orthodoxy!) trembled at his "horrid hypothesis."

The central principle of the "horrid hypothesis" lies in the sentence already quoted—"All things are in God and move in God," or, as it appears in the Ethics, in language still very close to that of St. Paul, "Whatever is is in God, and without God can nothing be nor be conceived." The system starts from God, and in God it ends, or rather the system is God. In Him every attribute exists in its absolute completeness, and the number of His attributes is infinite. The world and all that is therein, the light of setting suns, the round ocean and the living air, the blue sky and the mind of man, all these are not indeed unreal, but their reality is a part or aspect of the reality of God. To see things "under the form of eternity" is to revise most of the commonplaces of human thought. The opposition of beauty and ugliness, of truth and error, of good and evil, assumes a new aspect. The ugly, the erroneous, the evil are all seen to be really the imperfect, and imperfection is no absolute quality, but the absence of something; not, Spinoza tells us, of something which ought to be there, but of something for which we look only because we fail to attain the standpoint of eternity. What place in this philosophy has the mind of man? Like all other finite things, it has only an unreal reality. It is one of God's ideas, and man's personality is a fragment of God's omnipotence. But this personality he can strengthen and make more real by a discipline of mind and body, until he becomes for himself what he is in reality, one of the states of the being of God. It is then that he attains to true freedom, and to that love of God which is a part of the infinite love wherewith God loves Himself.

This is the semi-mystic conclusion to which we are conducted along the path of the "geometric method" in the fifth book of the Ethics. In the fourth will be found most of Spinoza's system of practical morality. "The good which each one who follows virtue seeks for himself, he will desire also for the rest of mankind, and that desire will be the greater, the greater the knowledge of God which he has attained." "The free man thinks of nothing less than of death, and his wisdom is a meditation not of death but of life."

These are specimens of the maxims with which Spinoza "renversait tous les principes de la morale." But if Voltaire's judgment furnishes food for laughter, the instinct of theologians was right in recognising a foe in Spinoza. For God to take upon Himself the nature of man was for him as little credible as for the circle to put on the nature of the square, and his system is fatal not only to Christianity, but to any religion which is dependent on the personal element. Every creed to some extent fashions its God in the likeness of man, and sets man in a more intimate relation to God than the rest of the universe. But Spinoza's God is the universe, in which man is a fragment among fragments: the rational coherence of things actual is not, in Kant's phrase, "a God who can interest us"; the love of which He is the object is only a passionless faculty of mind.

What manner of man was this maker of a new universe, this "labefactator" of established beliefs and creeds? How did the spectator of all time and of all existence face the trivialities and commonplaces of everyday human life? He showed in all things that moderation which is, perhaps, more proverbially than really characteristic of the philosopher. "It is scarce credible how sober and frugal he was all the time. He lived a whole day upon a Milk-soop done with Butter, which amounted to threepence, and upon a Pot of Beer of three half pence. Another day he eat nothing but Gruel done with Raisins and Butter, and that Dish cost him fourpence half penny." He was not one of those who seek to make the sublimity of their speculations an excuse for neglecting the humble duties of sympathy and kindliness. "He was, besides, very courteous and obliging; he would very often discourse with his Landlady, especially when she lay in." Nor did he preach his doctrines out of season to those to whom they must have brought pain without understanding. He took no delight in killing a simple faith or angering an obtuse intolerance. "He put the children in mind of going often to Church, and taught them to be obedient and dutiful to their Parents." These things have their value, even to a man who has risen above the strife of creeds to the standpoint of the eternal truth. "He also took Pleasure in smoaking a Pipe of Tobacco; or, when he had a mind to divert himself somewhat longer, he look'd for some Spiders, and made 'em fight together, or he threw some Flies into the Cobweb, and was so well pleased with that Battel, that he wou'd sometimes break into Laughter." The picture we have of him is of a man simple in his tastes, by no means a lover of melancholy, a steady friend, unselfish, courageous, not easily moved, but fired once at least with righteous indignation, when he would have risked his life in order publicly to stigmatize as ultimi barbarorum the mob that had murdered his friends and patrons, the de Witts; altogether a lovable man, and a fit vessel for great thoughts. Mr. Joachim is a welcome addition to the more than respectable list of English commentators on Spinoza. His exposition of the Ethics is admirably lucid, and the argument is copiously illustrated from Spinoza's other writings. There is no attempt to minimise the difficulties and inconsistencies of the system, but controversial discussion is generally made to follow the careful presentation of Spinoza's own view. The threads of criticism and exposition are not confused, and the hard task of attaining to Spinoza's own point of view is essayed with no little success. If the root of right understanding is sympathy, then Mr. Joachim is well qualified to be Spinoza's interpreter. In a book of exceptionally even merit, the psychological exposition and the treatment of the problem of personality may perhaps be singled out for especial praise.

Digitized by Google

New Light on Hodge.

The Bettesworth Book. By George Bourne. (Lamley. 5s.)

These "talks with a Surrey peasant" constitute a social document of singular interest. They are what they pretend to be—records of conversations with an agricultural labourer, and Mr. Bourne has set them down, not indeed without art, but without "doctoring," and without any of that "artful aid" which a novelist might perhaps have been forgiven for lending to crude actuality. The book makes us think again of the once fashionable phrase, tranche de la vie. It is a tranche de la vie in a rather literal sense, and it leaves upon the mind a distinct impression that the real, typical Hodge (Mr. Bourne roundly asserts that Bettesworth may be accepted as typical of his class) is far removed from the Hodge of political speeches and of fiction, even of Mr. Hardy's fiction. Indeed, he appears as a churl to be admired, a clown who is a clown only in the Shakespearean signification of that fine word, a model whom in many respects the learned, the superior, the elegant, and the wise of this world might imitate with advantage. We must quote—this is the sort of book that must be appreciated by means of quotations:

> When to this poverty were added mishap and illness, from which he arose visibly aged, the comedy of Bettesworth's talk and its unconquerable good temper veiled so much silent suffering as to make me wonder and admire where before I might have laughed. Meanwhile, admiration was already springing up on other grounds. The man's stoicism was a thing familiar enough and to spare among the poor; but as talk followed talk, and I heard more and more about Bettesworth's life, I saw that his power of Endurance, however admirable, was as nothing in comparison with his power of effective Doing. I had read of adventures: this man had lived adventurously. While I had sat at the window looking out upon existence as at a lion in the street, Bettesworth had met it face to face every day; he had been at death-grips with it, and had come off victorious. I had not before talked so intimately with a man of this stamp; and for many months I thought of him as something exceptional—a Mulvaney in the army of workers. But, as I know him better and know more about his neighbours, and as I consider the import of his conversations, I begin to perceive that it is not so much in the narratives themselves that there is anything unusual, as in the circumstance that I have been permitted to hear them.

Some of the conversations seem at first sight trivial, but upon reflection we think that none of them is really so: each helps to complete the portrait of this Englishman. The best chapter is that entitled "Philosophy." Bettesworth's philosophy would have delighted Carlyle, and his bitter observations upon the plethora and unnecessariness of "pa'sons" are certainly the expression of that widespread feeling which keeps the village church so regularly empty:

> "Look at the cost o' keepin' all they. And what good do't do? If a man don't know right and wrong hisself, the pa'son en't no good; and it don't matter for a man to know more than that, and to know how to right hisself. I don't see what else you need trouble about; and I been through the world and have seen it. That's what you want to know; and after I'd had my scholarship, I went though the world, and I knowed right from wrong and how to see myself righted, and I always got a livin'! Pa'sons!—what can they do? There was poor old Colonel Sadler [a parson]—and I believe that man was about as right as he could be—he come to see me that time I was a-bed with my broken leg, and he ast me, 'Which do you consider is the best religion?' 'Why, sir,' I says, 'do onto others as you would be done onto.' And so 'tis. But the Colonel, that didn't suit he. He purty soon took up he's hat and was off. That's my idear though—that, and to know right and wrong, and how to right yourself. . . . Cert'nly for these lords and so on 'tis all very well to have their fal-de-rals, but everybody don't want it. . . ."

Fred Bettesworth would be called ignorant, and here is an example of his ignorance. His wife's cousin recently returned from America; she had been away forty years, and married and lost her husband during that time:

> "But she's got so much a week comin' in. Her husband was killed, and she gets some sort of a pension for'n. He belongs to what they calls The Civil War." After thirty years, rumour of the great Secession War reaches Bettesworth, and he takes it to refer to a sort of benefit society.

But Mr. Bourne points out that although Bettesworth may have "some qualified respect for the people who would instruct him in this sort of thing, he betrays not the slightest desire to resemble them." And indeed why should he? Despite his "ignorance," Bettesworth and his like are far more learned than nine out of ten haunters of libraries. The peasants have their own knowledge and their own great men.

> His admiration is only whole-hearted for men of his own class who are really effectual. He is always ready to talk enthusiastically of a certain "old Billy," who is a notable man for managing horses. Thirty years ago, perhaps, Billy was working for a timber-merchant, and drove a team of six entire horses—an accomplishment, truly, evidencing a native valour beside which most of the virtues of culture look puny.

And yet there are times when Bettesworth regrets his lack of education.

> He brought me a hedgehog not long ago, and told me how hedgehogs are guilty of sucking cows, "and it spoils

Digitized by Google

> the cows, ye know." Upon this, I looked up White's Selborne on hedgehogs, and read to Bettesworth what Gilbert White has to say. Afterwards he remarked, though not to me, "It seems a nice sort o' book."

Would any tribute have pleased White more?

"When Bettesworth is done for," says Mr. Bourne in conclusion of his excellent book, "and his old wagging tongue at length still, the same brave qualities, spontaneous as in him and his neighbours, will be moulding other men after his pattern, controlling their actions, shaping their thoughts, putting into their mouths conversations like these, and in them all carrying on invisibly those unconscious traditions, habits, instincts, that are surely a valuable part of what we think of as the English Race."

It is a refreshing, earthy book. Somewhere in A Week on the Concord Thoreau passionately exclaims in revulsion against certain forms of superfine culture: "Let us get back to the Report of the Committee on Swine!" And we would say that, after a prodigious course of superfine, nature-patronising garden-volumes, we have got back, in The Bettesworth Book, to old earth again.

A Doctor in Kabul.

At the Court of the Amîr. By John Alfred Gray. (Macmillan. 6s.)

TWELVE years ago Mr. Gray started with Sir Salter (then Mr.) Pyne and two other English engineers for Kabul to enter the service of the Amîr. This book is the record of his life in Kabul and its neighbourhood, and particularly of his medical and surgical practice under the strange conditions of an Eastern Court. The narrative is lively from beginning to end, a circumstance which may partly be traced to the fact that it is compiled, as Mr. Gray tells us, from letters written to the lady who is now his wife. The charm of the book is its easy, open, picturesque communicativeness. Mr. Gray's first impressions of the late Amîr, for whose memory he has a profound respect, were not too favourable. From the Royal geologist, a British officer, he heard at the outset stories of the Amîr's character and of life in Afghanistan which were not reassuring. His informant > had heard of the terrible punishment that had been inflicted on the rebel followers of Sirdar Ishak and their unfortunate families. One form of punishment appeared to have been introduced from Russia. Men were described as being tied, in the bitter winter of Turkestan, naked, to a post; water was thrown over them, and they were left to freeze: a strong man would last two days. Girls had been fastened to the earth and tortured; women and children sold as slaves—and much more.

However, Mr. Gray soon began—as one may admit was inevitable and necessary—to see such things in perspective. He perceived that to denounce such acts in the terms which would be applicable in Europe is simply to ignore the different ideas and sanctions of the East. "The Amîr was simply proclaiming, in language that Asiatics understand, his determination of being King in Afghanistan." To forget this "is an injustice, for education and civilisation cannot advance with such strides in an isolated Eastern country as in Europe, and without the progress of knowledge the sons cannot learn better than their fathers." To himself the Amîr was all graciousness, and Mr. Gray soon found himself invested with the charge of the military hospital in Mazar, with authority over all native doctors—called Hakims—except only the two chief Hakims and one Hindustani doctor. That he had need of this supremacy is shown by his queer stories of native doctoring, and the prejudices he encountered. Indeed, his position is sprung upon us with a quaint unexpectedness when we are told that on his first visit to the hospital a sentry was posted at the gate of the inner garden with orders to shoot any Hakim attempting to enter. Naturally, tale-bearing and intrigue dogged the English doctor's steps. They would have brought his work to nothing but for the unfailing firmness and loyalty of Abdurrahman, who put two of his detractors to the torture of the wedge and post. The wedge and post torture is simple and gruesome. "There is an upright post in the earth. The criminal is seated on the ground and his feet lashed to the post; wedges are inserted between the sole of the foot and the post, and are hammered home. It is a painful process, they say, but a dogged Afghan will sit till the bones of both feet are crushed before he will utter a sound."

Mr. Gray presents the Amîr to us as a man of wide knowledge, much enlightenment, and many generous impulses. He was greatly interested in Dr. Gray's talent for portrait painting, and himself gave sittings. The resulting portrait was the admiration of the Court, and its reproduction as the frontispiece of this volume throws no discredit on the artist or his judges. One awful incident marked its progress on the easel. It occurred in this way:

> I was working at the watch-chain, but presently His Highness moved, and the chain became disarranged. Without thinking where I was—for I was absorbed in the painting—and acting as if he were an English gentleman, and not an Oriental Prince whose life had already been attempted, I walked suddenly up to the Amir to rearrange the chain. There was a dead silence, though I hardly noticed it at the time, but I saw that the Amîr looked very hard at me. Then with a bow I went back to my work. Nothing was said.
>
> When we reached home the Armenian told me that he and every one else in the Court were exceedingly startled by my walking suddenly up to His Highness. He was just as likely to have shot me as not. It was contrary to etiquette to approach near uninvited; and the suddenness was so very suggestive of evil designs. However, His Highness was not seriously annoyed. He saw at once that I meant no evil, nor any disrespect.

The Armenian mentioned in this passage was our author's interpreter, philosopher, and servant-friend, and a very good fellow he is. He rejoices us by his remark: "Sir, let me see London. If I die then—don't matter." Less flattering was his assumption that Englishmen sell their wives, which he supported by the following staggering argument: "I mean this: an English woman becomes wearied of her husband, and prefers another to him. The man who is preferred is called a co-respondent. Straightway they go before the Kasi—the Magistrate—and, after much discussion, it is decided at what price the co-respondent shall buy the woman. The money is then paid to the husband."

The following scene is well written and realised, and it is characteristic in every detail. It was not, however, witnessed by Dr. Gray, who had it as a Court story:

> There had been brought to His Highness, as a present, a very beautiful shield inlaid with gold. This was when he had come to the throne, and was Amîr.
>
> Everyone in the Durbar Hall feasted his eyes upon this beautiful thing, and the courtiers edged anxiously nearer the royal chair, in the hope that "Amîr Sahib" might perhaps, as he sometimes did, bestow a present upon a "faithful and deserving slave." The Amîr slowly cast his eyes round the ring, and each heart beat high, as the Amîr's eyes rested a moment on this man or that. Suddenly, the Amîr called out,
>
> "Nassir, Pesh biár," "come forward."
>
> Out of a far corner came Nassir. The Amîr turned to the anxious circle, and said,
>
> "Look upon this man. He was with me in Samarcànd." The hearts of the courtiers sank; Nassir, then, was to be the recipient of the shield.
>
> "He was with me in Samarcànd, and for a little thing

Digitized by Google

he turned and cursed me. These were his words"—and the Amîr repeated the curse. "Is this so?" he said to Nassir. The old man hung his head in shame.

"He cursed me; he half drew his sword on me, his master. What is this man worthy of?"

There was a dead silence: the shield was forgotten, for behold Nassir's day had come. It had; but not in the sense anticipated.

"Give him the shield," said the Amîr. "He was with me in Samarcànd."

I should finish the story by saying Nassir treasured the shield as the apple of his eye, and showed it me with honest pride—but no, he sold it next day for what it would fetch. Afghanistan!

Mr. Gray's medical and surgical work was highly appreciated in Kabul, yet the Amîr would not give him precedence of the ignorant Hakims in attendance upon himself, and our author accordingly declined the offer of a permanent residence and employment. The recent death of the Amîr, and the succession of Prince Habibullah, of whom Dr. Gray speaks in high terms, add to the importance of this book, which, however, is valuable chiefly as a faithful and crowded picture of the daily round in a barbaric Court.

Elia and Another.

The Essays of Elia. Illustrated by A. Garth Jones. (Methuen. 10s. 6d.)

Outwardly and inwardly this is a handsome volume, and seen lying on a table—for it is a table rather than a shelf book—it will draw you irresistibly across a room. We are sorry that a nearer acquaintance hardly confirms our prepossession. Attempts to illustrate Lamb's Essays are not to our mind. We cannot think that either the necessity or opportunity for artistic illustration exists in the Essays. Lamb's highly intellectualised descriptions of men and places, his highly literary fancies and whimsical inventions, mock all attempts to render them pictorially. They do their own business so well that illustrative help seems an intrusion and a bathos. They will bear but one stamp—that of Lamb's personality. The only kind of illustration that seems to us proper to be applied to them—and even this seems to menace one's appreciation of the Essays as essays—is plain portraiture of men, women, and places mentioned by Lamb. An Elian museum we can understand, but to interpose an artistic commentary between Lamb and his readers is enterprise indeed. Mr. Garth Jones can draw well, though the vigour of his line and the general hardness and blackness of his work seem to us to dissociate him in some degree from work of the kind which he here attempts. But his real disqualifications are chargeable to his task. How is it possible to offer to the true lover of Lamb a black and white drawing which shall not diminish and dilute his enjoyment of an image or observation in Lamb's text? In his "Grace Before Meat" Lamb asks: "Why have we none for books, those spiritual repasts—a grace before Shakespeare—a devotional exercise proper to be said before reading the 'Fairy Queen'?" And so the artist gives us a fancy drawing of Lamb saying grace over a folio with a mutilation of this sentence below the drawing. Again Lamb's remark, in the midst of his playful argument, that "the moment of appetite (the judicious reader will apprehend me) is, perhaps, the least fit reason for that exercise", precipitates a full-page drawing of be-wigged gourmands falling to work on their soup. Cui bono? "In tale or history your Beggar is ever the just antipode to your King," says Lamb elsewhere. To this purely literary remark is tacked a full-page fantasy in which, apparently, the North and South Poles are represented with King and Beggar as their respective tenants. Again, "His riches are always about him." Lamb is describing the "true Caledonian" in "Imperfect Sympathies." The sentence is one little touch in a piece of cumulative moral portraiture. And lo, we have a Scotchman in shawl and tam-o'-shanter, seated on a box of books, and encylopædia on his knees, and a globe and compasses and documents strewn around him. This is not illustration: it is rather artistic parallelism, and we fear that Lamb's text and Mr. Garth's drawings share the well-known property of parallel lines, which being continued indefinitely in either direction can never meet. We have no wish to be severe on a competent artist. But the wider question, that of the illustrateability of Lamb, is important; other attempts will be made, and, as we think, are doomed to failure. Mr. E. V. Lucas contributes a good biographical introduction, in which he takes Lamb's side in rejecting the epithet "gentle" as applied to Elia. Mr. Lucas suggests "understanding" as a better word. It is a better word, but is it not rather usurpatory?

From "Mr. Punch

Mr. Punch's Dramatic Sequels. By St. John Hankin. (Bradbury.)

It appears to us that Mr. St. John Hankin, in attempting these fourteen "sequels" to a list of plays which begins with the Alkestis and ends with a (non-existent) dramatised version of Omar Khayyám, has fallen between the stool of a mere parody and the stool of a mere sequel. He says, in neat-enough rhyme:—

Plays end too soon. They never show
The whole of what I want to know.

The curtain falls and I'm perplexed
With doubts about what happened next.

Did HAMLET'S father haunt no more
The battlements of Elsinore?

* * * * * *

Will AUBREY take to wife one day
Another MRS. TANQUERAY?

Do ECCLES and his stepson wrangle?
Has anything been heard of DANGLE?
What has become of MRS. WANGEL?

But his invention is decidedly unequal to the demand which he makes upon it. His continuation of Alkestis, in which he portrays Alkestis as a clacking shrew and Hercules at the request of Admetus unsuccessfully trying to force Death to take her back again, is a gloomy piece of fooling, belonging to the same order of ideas as that which Mr. Dan Leno illustrates, without gloom, at the Pavilion, the Oxford, and the Tivoli. Here is a sample of the humour:—

ALKESTIS.

[Tired of getting in one line at a time] Iov! Iov! What thankless things are men!

To exactly the same order of ideas belongs the brilliant and original notion of turning Omar into a drunken and chambering lout. Here is another example of the humour:—

SAKI.

Fie; An old man like you!

OMAR.

Old! Thank goodness I am old. When I was young I went to school and heard the sages. Didn't learn much there! They said I came like water and went like wind. Horrid chilly Band-of-Hope sort of doctrine. I know better now.

[Drinks from the jug in his hand.

Digitized by Google

A third Leno-ish idea is to present a third Mrs. Tanqueray as a tart and sinister platform-woman, who starves and bullies poor Aubrey, and is grossly rude to his friends.

We have discovered one rather clever thing in a book which might have been diverting and is the opposite of diverting—a song in imitation (not in parody, but in imitation) of Mr. W. S. Gilbert. It occurs in the sequel to Patience. We quote a couple of stanzas:—

When you once have your commission, if you want a high position in the Army of the King,
You must tout for the affections of the influential sections of the Inner Social Ring.
If you're anxious for promotion, you must early get a notion of the qualities commanders prize;
You must learn to play at polo, strum a banjo, sing a solo, and you're simply bound to rise!
For every one will say,
In the usual fatuous way:
"If this young fellow's such a popular figure in High Society, Why, what a very competent commander of a troop this fine young man must be!"

You must buy expensive suits, wear the shiniest of boots, and a glossy hat and tall,
For if you're really clever you need practically never wear your uniform at all.
You probably will then see as little of your men as you decently can do,
And you'll launch a thousand sneers at those foolish Volunteers, who are not a bit like you!
And those Volunteers will say,
When you go on in that way:
"If this young man's such an unconcealed contempt for the likes of such as we,
What a genius at strategy and tactics too this fine young man must be!"

But the modest merits of this single piece are scarcely sufficient excuse for the shortcomings of the entire volume.

Chaucer Undefiled.

The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited from numerous manuscripts by the Rev. Walter Skeat. (Oxford, Clarendon Press; London, Henry Frowde. 3s. 6d.)

For some things we have to thank the age in which we live, and among them is the privilege of getting such an edition of Chaucer as this, at a student's price. Into a few closely-printed prefatory pages Professor Skeat has compressed all the essential information about Chaucer's work which the ordinary reader is likely to require. Besides a chronological list of his writings, stating the influences under which he worked in the three periods of his career, you have notes on Chaucer's grammar, metre, versification, and pronunciation—all of great use and value. Chaucer's pronunciation must have been a startling thing to our modern ears. Perhaps it may partly have resembled Tennyson's reading of his own poems, "mouthing out his hollow oes and aes." Thus our closed "a" sound (as in cat) had no existence for him. The nearest thing to it was the "a" of our as. The "a" in such words as face was pronounced long and broad, like the Continental "a," or our own "a" in father. So was the "a" at the end of a syllable, as in age. There was a long open "e," like the "a" in Mary; as in clene (clean), pronounced claenĕ.

But these things do not affect the actual reading of the poems. The gain here lies in the fact that, without luxurious expenditure, the ordinary lover of Chaucer has for the first time a text in which it is possible for him clearly to follow the poet's metre, without the impediments introduced by corrupt texts, or editors whose understanding of metre and study of manuscripts did not enable them to give us what Chaucer actually wrote. Dryden declared that on no theory was it possible to reduce Chaucer to metrical harmony. With the texts of Dryden's day, such a conclusion might well appear inevitable. In reality Chaucer is one of our finest masters of versification. The recollection of a few principles, not very difficult to master, will resolve his lines into a movement as strong, various, flexible, yet regular, as that of any modern poet, or of Dryden himself. The sounding of the final "e" in such words as strengthe, of the "e" before the final consonant in wordes (for example), are the chief things. Chaucer also admits, sometimes, an extra syllable before the cæsura, or pause in the middle of the line, which gives time for a light extra syllable to be pronounced. For instance:

"For him was léver have át his béddes heéd."

where the cæsura and extra syllable are at "lever" (i.e., liefer). A few more minutiæ are all that is needed; and they are briefly and clearly stated in Professor Skeats' hints on the poet's versification. Perhaps the sole irregularity, according to later laws of versification (for the extra syllable before the cæsura is also used by Shakespeare and others) is that very occasionally a line drops the unaccented syllable of the first foot—becoming trochaic:

"Ginglen in a whistling wind as clear," &c.

But where each letter is so important, it can be perceived that a final "e" where none should be, or the absence of it where it should be, throws the whole line out of metre. Yet such transgressions have been frequent in previous editions. Professor Skeats' laborious restoration of a correct text has removed all such obstacles.

He has banished, too, all poems which research has shown not to be Chaucer's. Our old friends The Flower and the Leaf (which Dryden modernised) and The Cuckoo and the Nightingale disappear—as we may hope they will from all future editions of Chaucer. This is, indeed, a Chaucer not only praiseworthy for what it has, but what it has not. It is entirely unsuperfluous. If ever Chaucer can be popularised, this edition should do it.

Other New Books.

Some Feudal Coats of Arms. By Joseph Foster. (James Parker & Co. 63s.)

The mob of mankind supposes Heraldry to be as extinct as Adam, or, at most, that it survives only in poetic tradition or on carriage panels. And yet many patent and everyday things make war upon this vulgar belief. Against it the bunting of street-triumphs flickers, and flaps, and flutters: the painted and gilded arms over provision shops by "special appointment" protest; the emblazoned "Peerages" thunder. These for the obtuse senses of the herd. For the considerate eye of the "Student" and the "Man of Family," for whose delight Mr. Foster has laboured, and to whom explicitly he presents the harvest of his pains, are there not the lambent heraldries of church windows, the intimate appeal of armorial book-plates, the personal sympathy of signet rings? Is there not Mr. Foster himself, seated like "the Calligate knight Diligence," in old Gerard Leigh, among "bookes of ancient Jests, and deeds of Honour, and orders of Coronations, Creations, and Dubbings, studiously keeping those Monuments from wormy wemes"?

This latest stone of the monument which the indefatigable Mr. Foster is building to his own heraldic fame is as prodigal of record as an Assyrian brick. It contains no less than about 2,000 illustrations, mostly in quite spirited

Digitized by Google

"trick," but including also baronial seals, inlaid tiles, engraved and sculptured effigies, and even combats of Greek warriors—"fine confused feeding." But all these things have their real bearing upon each other and upon Heraldry at large, and aptly assist the text, which is primarily a collection from certain heraldic rolls. The chief to which the compiler is indebted are those which preserve the names and insignia of the leaders at Falkirk, Carlaverock, the Dunstable Tournaments, the Battle of Boroughbridge, the Siege of Calais, and before Rouen, ranging in date from 1298 to 1418. The most interesting of these is that of Boroughbridge. What reader of Drayton (and every lover of England should read Drayton) can forget his glorious blazon of the knights in the action which preceded that battle, "when the crests and badges of each nobler name against their owners rudely seemed to stand"? Here are to be found "the silver saltire upon martial red" of the "valiant Nevill," the "lady's sleeve" that "high-spirited Hastings wore," the "bright crescent" of the Percy, "great Warren's blazon," and "the colours that Ross and Courtney did unfold." Has it ever occurred to the non-heraldic reader that, could modern eyes gaze upon the troubled phantasms of old battles, a herald, and a herald alone, could unerringly identify each ghostly warrior?

But Drayton has lured us from our text. It may be sufficient, however, to add that the result of Mr. Foster's collection is a really valuable alphabetical list of the full Christian and family names and simple bearings of hundreds of redoubtable warriors: a list of the greatest interest, prior "to the incubation of the College of Arms," and emphatically useful to both the heraldic student and the heraldic artist. The compiler frankly takes his stand upon antiquity—"a standpoint," as he says, "the very opposite to that of those who seek to foist on the newly-armigerous person a 'nobility' obtained by him in return for a cash payment."

In an Unknown Prison Land. By George Griffith. (Hutchinson. 17s. net.)

MR. GRIFFITH describes his book as "An Account of Convicts and Colonists in New Caledonia, with Jottings Out and Home." The jottings out and home occupy considerably more than a third of the volume, and are of so familiar an order that they cannot be regarded otherwise than as the merest padding. In a book of such outward pretension, dealing with a subject of such deep human interest, we do not in the least desire to read the impressions of the author concerning mosquitos and his casual fellow-passengers. When we come to the real matter of the book, we find the same tendency to irrelevance, the same flippancy, tempered with straining after effect. Mr. Griffith apparently had quite unusual facilities granted him by the Director of the Penal Administration for the examination of the whole French system of New Caledonia, but only to a limited extent does he seem to have availed himself of those facilities. The book is interesting, but too general and unscientific; it is, in fact, a popular publication, and in our opinion popular publications upon such subjects are of small value, and often quite undesirable. However, Mr. Griffith sets forth a good deal which the English public will no doubt be surprised to hear concerning the extreme leniency with which the average New Caledonian convict is treated, as well as the provision made by Government for his advancement as a libéré or relégué. The question of the wisdom of the system is much too wide for discussion here, but it may be remarked that in the broad tendencies of the system there is too much sentimentality and too little recognition of the true criminal instinct. Sentimentality is the most dangerous of qualities where criminals are concerned, and it must not be forgotten that it was sentimentality which abolished the lash in New Caledonia, only to establish in its place the horrors of the Cachot Noir. Still, it must be admitted that we have something to learn from French penal administration.

London Afternoons. By W. J. Loftie. (Cassell. 10s. 6d. net.)

Mr. Loftie is a writer on London whose industry and knowledge have long ago been recognised. Here he indulges in a number of historical studies of subjects as various as "Newgate," "Ancient Rivers," "The Older City Churches," "Wren's St. Paul's," "Camberwell," etc. We agree with him that "it is a serious thing to add another to the number of London books"; but the observation need not be turned against himself. There is solid and interesting matter in these essays. Still, it is just in the rare instances in which he draws on his own recollections that he is at his best, and the following passage is, to our mind, worth any dozen pages of historical probings. Mr. Loftie is writing of London fifty years and more ago:

> I remember one street in 1843. I was a child, very young, but observant as all children are, while as yet everything seems new. . . . I was taken to see the Tower, Greenwich Hospital, the Surrey Zoological Gardens, and a Palace—I think Buckingham Palace. My recollections of the Tower are very distinct. I think there was some kind of tramway or a railway at Greenwich. But the most vivid picture I can call up is the view, westward, up hill, towards the Park gate in Oxford Street: a wide street paved with large round stones, bordered on either side by low, two-or-three storied houses; a few, very few, foot passengers, a blind man playing drearily on a tin whistle, a single vehicle rumbling up the hill, a hearse, with people following on foot, and two little children all in black. There seemed to be no other traffic. The tin whistle and the hearse were connected indelibly in my mind.

That picture of an all but empty Oxford Street, with its small every-day sights, is intimate, natural, and, as an evocation of the London of 1843, valuable.

Mediæval London. By William Benham and Charles Welch. (Seeley. 7s.)

Dr. Benham, who is rector of St. Edmund the King, in Lombard Street, and Mr. Welch, who is Librarian to the City Corporation, have produced, with the help of their publishers, a volume somewhat of the album type, but without any of the literary superficiality of albums. For although fulness is not possible in eighty pages of text, we have here a scholarly survey of mediæval London, considered first as a whole, then under the headings of "Civic Rule," "The Thames," "Religious Life," "Fortress, Palaces, and Mansions," and "The Passing of Mediæval London." By mediæval London our authors mean the London which emerged from King Alfred's reign and was consumed in the Great Fire of 1666. It is the London over which John Stow brooded with so many regrets for greater glories and more splendid pageants than even in 1600 were to be seen. The vastness of the subject almost entitles the authors to immunity from criticism. They have wisely selected typical and interesting matters for mention instead of reducing their material to a tasteless jelly of facts and dates. Dipping casually, we find the interesting story of the origin of the stone gallery which from the tower of St. Mary-le-Bow Church looks down on Cheapside. To stand in that little stone gallery when a royal pageant is proceeding to the Guildhall must have been the dream of many. Well, this gallery is a survival, or rather a repetition, of a scaffold from which royalty was wont to enjoy the tournaments in what was then the great square of Chepe. In the reign of Edward III. this scaffold once gave way, and the fatalities were numerous. Our present historians tell us that "it is said that the King, with true Plantagenet violence, ordered the head carpenter to be hanged, and was turned from his purpose, as at Calais, by the intercession of the Queen. It led to an alteration. The royal gallery was firmly fixed to the wall of the church, and so remained. Years later, after the Great Fire, when Wren rebuilt the church and surmounted it with its present beautiful spire, there was a stipulation that there should be a royal gallery. And there it is still; the passer-by can see it from the street." Another mediæval feature is perpetuated in the arched base on which the spire of St. Mary-le-Bow rests, for this recalls the arched chamber in the original tower in which the Court of Arches sat. The name of the church is but Sancta Maria de Arcubus anglicised.

Digitized by Google

The illustrations adorn greatly the volume, and we are particularly grateful for the admirably reproduced series of Antoine van den Wyngaerde's drawings of Elizabethan London now in the Bodleian Library. It is believed that his great drawing of London from Westminster to the Tower was made in 1561 for Philip II. of Spain, whose interest in London was explained—and extinguished—at a later period.

Shakespeare in Music. By Louis C. Elson. (Nutt. 6s. net.)

This compilation, apparently of American origin, is "animated by a desire to show how closely the great poet allied himself to the divine art." It in no way comes up to the level of the excellent little book, Shakespeare and Music, written some five years ago by Dr. E. W. Naylor. That was a work of real value to the scholar—learned, thorough, and methodically arranged by a competent first-hand student, both of Shakespeare and of musical literature. Mr. Elson is a much more superficial writer, and appeals to those who prefer a gossipy antiquarianism to exact science. As there are already 3,250 works dealing with Shakespeare in the Boston Public Library, there is perhaps no great harm in adding a 3,251st; but to the philosophic mind, watching the welter of unnecessary books that pours from the presses of two continents, it is always a little annoying to see a moderately well-done thing intervening between the public and a thing supremely well done. However, Mr. Elson wanders amiably through a number of topics more or less connected with each other, with Shakespeare, and with music. To name a few only: he discusses the instruments known to Shakespeare, the technical musical terms used in the plays, the position of music and musicians in Elizabethan days, the history of English dances, the songs borrowed or written by Shakespeare, the music written for the plays by composers of eminence. He quotes fully most of the texts bearing on musical points, and inserts a number of illustrative airs in modern notation. The chapter dealing with music, and Shakespeare's opinions about music, from a psychological and ethical point of view, need not be taken very seriously; it does not belong to the finer æsthetic criticism. Mr. Elson quotes from the "Merchant of Venice":

> The man that hath no music in himself,
> Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
> Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
> The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
> And his affections dark as Erebus:
> Let no such man be trusted.

Here he observes: "We are not disposed to regard the last six lines of this sentence as absolute statement of fact," and proceeds to give the entertaining comment of the eighteenth century editor, Steevens:

> The present passage, which is neither pregnant with physical and moral truth, nor poetically beautiful in an eminent degree, has constantly enjoyed the good fortune to be repeated by those whose inhospitable memories would have refused to admit or retain any other sentiment or description of the same author, however exalted or just. The truth is that it furnishes the vacant fiddler with something to say in defence of his profession, and supplies the coxcomb in music with an invective against such as do not pretend to discover all the various powers of language in inarticulate sounds.

One almost feels that Steevens must have himself suffered from tone-deafness.

Chivalry. By F. Warre Cornish. (Sonnenschein. 4s. 6d.)

We are conscious of some disappointment at this last volume of the "Social England" Series. The Vice-Provost of Eton has before now proved himself a writer of charm and distinction. He is able to draw for the purposes of his present subject upon the stores of a wide reading in mediæval history and literature. The subject itself is a fascinating one. Yet the book as a whole is unsatisfactory, not for lack of incidental interest or picturesqueness of treatment, but because it is without a logical and well-planned scheme of structure. "There is not much to be done with Chivalry," says Mr. Cornish, in effect, "but to re-tell a well-worn tale":

> Much light has been thrown in modern times upon the wars of the Middle Ages, the religious and political institutions, the history of law, feudalism, and commerce. More facts are known, and a mass of mediæval literature has been brought to light since the days of Sir Walter Scott. But the facts are for the most part of the same character as those which he found in Anna Commena, Villehardouin, Froissart, and Monstrelet; and the romances and romantic and epic poems tell the same story as Sir Thomas Malory in the Morte d'Arthur. Little can be added to the conception of chivalry as it was evolved from mediæval records by Curne de Ste. Palaye, and set forth by Scott, Southey, and their followers, whose obligations to Ste. Palaye cannot be exaggerated. A writer, whose aim is rather to sketch a state of Society, than to chronicle a period, can do little more than clean after the harvest has been reaped.

We do not at all agree that little can be added to Ste. Palaye. The whole question can be treated in a different, and surely a more philosophic, manner than his. A picture of chivalry as an organisation of Society, based upon data drawn indifferently from chronicles and other documents of actual life, and from romances and other documents of literature, necessarily suggests a question as to its reliability. Yet such a picture is, in the main, what Mr. Cornish, no less than Ste. Palaye, gives us. His series of chapters upon "Knighthood," "War," "Tournaments," "Heraldry," and other subjects more or less connected with chivalry, is learned and interesting enough, but they do not distinguish much between the real and the imagined facts, and they leave the reader to gather for himself, with the assistance of some introductory generalities, the answer to the main question—how far was the ethical ideal of chivalry merely an ideal, reflected in romantic literature, and how far was it effectively operative in real life? Is there not some advance still to be made beyond Ste. Palaye on such lines as these?

Messrs. Cassell can be heartily congratulated on the first volume of their illustrated edition of Social England (Vol. I. 12s. net). The application of pictures to this fine work, edited by the late Mr. H. D. Traill and Mr. J. S. Mann, has been done with profusion and discrimination. The result promises to be a great success. We can wish no intelligent reader of history, schoolmaster, or public library a better, a more nourishing, possession than the six volumes of which the first is before us. The record is here brought from the Celtic twilight to the formation of Parliament in the thirteenth century. It is with the illustrations, however, that we are chiefly concerned. They range from Saxon coins to views of cathedrals and churches, from facsimiles of the writings of early authors like Caedmon to the Bayeux tapestry, and from photographs of Roman tombs and Saxon pottery to a drawing which shows how twelfth century Englishmen wore their hair and beard. A particularly fine illustration is a view of a scene on which we are glad to have looked—Hadrian's Wall, as seen from a spot near Housesteads. Inasmuch as the illustrations were not contemplated by Mr. Traill and his coadjutor, and are also in bountiful excess of the actual requirements of the text, they are made the subject of a series of preliminary notes which are in themselves of great value. The printing and workmanship of the volume are all that can be desired.

Digitized by Google

The clergyman as a guide has come to the front in recent years, and now the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes joins those of his brothers who have made it their mission to lead men up and down this world a little, as well as in the straight and narrow way to the next. His volume, The Morning Lands of History, is sure of a welcome, and we think it deserves it. In Rome, Athens, Syracuse, Constantinople, Jerusalem, and Cairo Mr. Hughes will be found interesting and zealous. The book is based on a journal kept by Mrs. Hughes, in which, on one occasion, she thanks God for a good porthole in her cabin. To which Mr. Hughes responds: "I echo that devout exclamation. A good porthole is invaluable in a cabin." Mr. Hughes studied with special care the battles of Salamis and Marathon, the Eleusinian Mysteries, and the site of Calvary. On the way back he visited Monte Carlo, and was admitted to the gambling rooms without a ticket, being taken for an habitué. Within them he saw "trembling arms" outstretched, and "extreme melancholy" on every face. Lord Rosslyn will be dismayed to learn that at the tables all is pure chance, and "there is no room whatever for skill or calculation." A useful itinerary, in which a good many occasions are brightly and briefly improved.

The late Dr. Mandell Creighton's working opinions as a bishop are embodied in a volume entitled, The Church and the Nation. (Longmans. 5s. net.) The title is well chosen, for it represents what is common to the largest number of these "Charges and Addresses," and what is their most constant inspiration, a desire to make clear the position and meaning of the Church of England in its relation to the life of the nation. The book is for clergymen and Church workers, but no reader is likely to dip into it without some refreshment. Whether he is handling a large problem like Biblical Criticism or The Mass, or is only enjoining country clergymen to keep their churches open all day, Dr. Creighton is brisk and engaging.

Pouchet's well-known popular science book, The Universe; or, the Infinitely Great and the Infinitely Little, is issued in a new and revised edition by Messrs. Blackie. With its simple descriptions and glowing illustrations it is the book to give to an inquiring boy.

Among other new editions we have received from Mr. Murray a "popular impression" of the corrected copyright edition of Darwin's Origin of Species. This work, in its original form, passes out of copyright next week, but the edition which Darwin revised will be under copyright for some years to come, and it is now issued in a thoroughly popular shilling form by Mr. Murray.

The "Edinburgh Waverley" reaches its fourteenth and fifteenth volumes in The Bride of Lammermoor and The Legend of Montrose. Messrs. Jack can be congratulated on their unfailing punctuality.

Fiction.

The Happenings of Jill. By "Iota." (Hutchinson. 6s.)

This novel opens in the following manner:

> "Wounds must be inflicted and endured in decent silence," said Jill Devereux, her inexorable eyes fixed upon the three Fontaines; slim, delicate-moulded slips of girls, who towered like tall white lilies high above the little brown elf of a thing who swayed their counsels and controlled their persons. "Now," she proceeded, in a soft, cold tone of disbelief, "do you ab-so-lutely understand?"
>
> "We do ab-so-lutely understand!" shrieked the three in one thin quaver. In moments of apprehension the Fontaines always shrieked together. It seemed to endue them with a strength not their own.
>
> "Hem! That hardly sounds like it. However, come on, and let's see."

We make the quotation because in these few lines is displayed the whole book, is displayed the whole of "Iota's" production, at once so strong and so limited. Her heroines are always thus—little brown elves, creatures of powerful intellect, passionate heart, and unconquerable spirit. They are always unusual, for the reason that "Iota's" artistic talent is not broad enough to sympathise with and so to uplift the ordinary. Jill! Why Jill? Is one woman in a million called Jill? But it is just because Jill is "queer," and because it forms a piquant contrast to the aloof aristocracy of Devereux, that "Iota" has chosen it. The name illustrates her heroine. We know in advance what kind of things will occur to this Jill—how she will be misunderstood or uncomprehended, how she will suffer in marriage and out of it, how she will prove the supremacy of the human soul over all mere events, and how the fine fire of her nature will shrivel up the meannesses of others. "Iota" keeps writing the same story over and over again, evoking the same atmosphere and inducing the same catastrophes. "Wounds must be given and endured in decent silence." That sentence almost states her philosophy. And we must admit the spiritual distinction of her work. Her conceptions of womanhood, if monotonously similar, are at least noble. Jill is a rare creature, and Jill's grandmother is a rare creature; they never either of them open their mouths without proving the fact.

As for "Iota's" literary workmanship, we have on several occasions sorrowfully found fault with it. Were she not ignorant of the axioms of composition, "Iota" would have a style. She has the something which cannot be acquired, but the something which can be acquired she lacks. To say as much is to condemn her, and we are bound once more to condemn her. Greatly gifted, she is unable to use her gifts. She can neither construct a plot, nor select her material, nor write decent English. Consider the title—The Happenings of Jill!

Stories in the Dark. By Barry Pain. (Grant Richards. 1s.)

This is one of the books that are more pleasant to read than to write about. At any rate, the fact that, having read it, we set to work after a brief interval and read it again, glances in that direction. First of all, it is most beautifully short. These ten stories—you could look at ten photographs in the same time. And, unlike the customary photograph, they represent each of them an intellectual impression—engrave it in choice essential lines upon the memory.

Three of the stories describe the workings of a disordered mind; two suggest notions of the state of the departed; three touch imaginatively upon the preternatural. In order that a story of the preternatural may be really effective, it seems as though it were necessary that the reader should be at least sub-conscious of a naturalistic solution hanging in the air. It must not be a complete and satisfactory solution, of course: that would destroy the character of the story. It should give a kind of moral credibility at the very moment when we reject it in favour of the preternatural alternative. This latter, again, must not be precise, or our common sense starts up and reminds us that it involves the admission of some principle or theory that we have long since finally rejected. It is not easy, therefore, in this age to write a story of the gruesome kind which shall be at all convincing. This Mr. Pain has achieved, not in "The Moon-Stone"—the story of a girl who was drawn monthly by the influence of the moon to a certain lawn, where she danced to its music, and was finally joined by a partner whose step left the mark of a cloven hoof—but, admirably, in "The Undying Thing" and "The Grey Cat." It is not often that you find in current literature anything so strong as the tale of the monster banished, new born, to the Planting, where it lived through three generations of its family, rumoured of but rarely seen—by persons who thereafter saw nothing. This is how it was seen, by the head of the family, for the last time:

Digitized by Google

> Sir Edric rushed to the dining-room door, opened it a little and looked in. Then he turned to Guerdon, who was just behind him.
>
> "Go back to your room," he said, authoritatively.
>
> "I won't," said Guerdon. "Why? What is it?"
>
> Suddenly the corners of Sir Edric's mouth shot outward into a hideous grin of terror.
>
> "It's there! It's there!" he gasped.
>
> "Then I come in with you."
>
> "Go back!"
>
> With a sudden movement, Sir Edric thrust Guerdon away from the door, and then, quick as light, darted in and locked the door behind him.
>
> Guerdon bent down and listened. He heard Sir Edric say in a firm voice:
>
> "Who are you? What are you?"

That change in the form of the question is a good touch; and in its proper place, prepared by a skilful use of legend and suggestion, as effective as you like.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

'Twixt Dog and Wolf. By C. F. Keary.

By the author of A Marriage de Convenance and A Wanderer. The title is taken from a French poem, Entre Chien et Loup:

> A dog is howling at the court-yard door;
> Within, the horses drag their halter chains. . . .
> And now from a near pinewood into sight
> Steals one grey wolf.

This small volume contains three short stories—"The Message from the God," "Elizabeth," and "The Four Students." Also ten Phantasies. (Brimley Johnson. 3s. 6d.)

Lepidus the Centurion. By E. L. Arnold.

An original plot, certainly. A bored Englishman of fortune discovers in his park a Roman British tomb, and in it the body of Lepidus the Centurion. By the free gift of half his vitality the bored Englishman restores the Centurion to life, and is convinced that the Roman is a former incarnation of himself. "The dust of centuries fissured and cracked from side to side, the broad soldier forehead puckered itself into a portentous frown"—and he sneezed. Then follow situations and complications. (Cassell. 6s.)

Calumet "K." By Merwin—Webster.

The authors, Mr. S. Merwin and Mr. H. K. Webster, are engaged on the task of writing a set of novels to illustrate the romance of trade. Calumet "K." describes the attempt of rival capitalists and grain men "to balk the building of an elevator by a set date." The heroine is the hero's stenographer. The story begins in a businesslike way. "The contract for the two million bushel grain elevator, "Calumet K," had been let to McBride and Company, of Minneapolis. (Macmillan. 6s.)

The Eyes of Light. By Arthur Moore.

A brightly told story of modern life, in which an Oriental casket plays a part. The narrative opens in a village in Brittany, disclosing Cynthia in the act of writing a love-letter. But it is not posted. Cynthia's amatory correspondence is all deposited in an Oriental casket containing four boxes. One is already full. This casket has adventures. (Arrowsmith. 6s.)

The Princess Cynthia. By Marguerite Bryant.

This story belongs to The Prisoner of Zenda class. The period is nowhen, the place is nowhere, but it was called Brambria, and there the Princess Cynthia held her court. She was as "beautiful as night," and she talks thus to Sir Floridas: "You look very nice. I should never have made so picturesque a victor. Since you have done so valiantly, you may kiss my hand." The motto on the title-page is, "It is not what men are, but what fair women make of them, that is the trouble," which is more untrue than most mottoes. (Cassell. 6s.)

Peter, a Parasite. By E. Maria Albanesi.

A story of modern life with plenty of worldly characters—and Margaret. Peter was nearly forty. He never cared to remember his failures, "and whenever he thanked the Almighty for mercies bestowed (which was not often) he never failed to express deep gratitude for the luck that had saved him from sharing in the ruin and disgrace that had become Margaret's portion.

"And yet he had really cared for her." (Sands. 6s.)

Elgiva. By D. Rylls Griffiths.

Thus speaks one of the characters: "Great chief, thy son hath sent me. He bade me tell thee that Hardicanute is dead: that he died as he stood at his drink in the house of one Osgod Clapa, at Lambeth." Earl Godwin and his sons are among the characters in this long historical novel, which is a love story as well as a romance of the sword. (Unwin. 6s.)

Our Lady of the Ice. By Constance Sutcliffe.

A story of the Alps, dedicated "to my guide." "'And what does your Englishman do when he has climbed up to the top of his mountain?' demanded the little wife from the lowlands. 'He just climbs down again,' replied Max, the guide, and he saw no humour in the reply." Love and adventure come into the story, and the cover depicts a blood-curdling accident. (Greening. 6s.)

A Stumble by the Way. By L. T. Meade.

A melodramatic story of modern life; the kind of story that arouses just enough interest to carry the reader on from chapter to chapter. It begins straight away upon a love scene between Rosalind and Philip Wingate. Says Philip: "I almost wish the kind old gentleman who left me his estates had given them to somebody else. If it were not for Wych Hall and its thousands, I might work up something worth having in the Diplomatic Service, and carry you off, my darling, at once." "Oh! I can wait," answered Rosalind. (Chatto. 6s.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6

„ Quarterly 5/0

„ Price for one issue /5

The Young Man Excogitant.

In these latter days the predominance of style over matter has been deplored by good critics. We speak inexactly, for style and matter cannot of course be considered as two entirely separate ingredients in a literary dish. A predominance of good style over good matter is impossible, and the safest of all advice about manner is, Get matter. "With brains, sir," was Wilkie's recipe for mixing his colours, and young writers have been well advised to put brains into their ink, and then let it flow naturally. But such precepts are to be considered as mere exclamations extorted by a general condition of things, and for that reason they are liable to constant revision in particular cases. Such a case is that of Mr. G. K. Chesterton, the young poet and journalist whose name has become familiar of late to readers of the Daily News and Speaker. No one would think of advising Mr. Chesterton to get matter or mix his ink with brains. He has the one, and does the other.

We have spoken of Mr. Chesterton as a poet. In reviewing his Wild Knight and Other Poems a year ago we said that his philosophy is somewhat crude and juvenile, but that he has the poetic gift of expressing his ideas unexpectedly so that they come home with a sudden thrill. It is curious how well this serves to describe Mr. Chesterton's book of essays called The Defendant, just issued by Mr. Brimley Johnson. Only, we are bound to add, the crudeness and juvenility of Mr. Chesterton's matter is less tolerable in prose than in verse, and the thrills, though many, are less charged with redemption. One can always read a good deal of thought into verse, given a chance; but prose stands for what it is, and the judicious reader insists on organic and purposeful thought. This is what Mr. Chesterton does not give us. His ideas are so plentiful that he has enough to do simply to give them off. The wheels of his matter skid under the energy of his thinking, the result being much steam and glory but little motion. He is your lightning meditator, and will give you original ideas on whatever subject any lady or gentleman will be good enough to write on a slip of paper. It is this prowess as a mental gymnast that has brought Mr. Chesterton his early and well-deserved success. Weary old men have read him in the train and have said to themselves, "Bless us, how does he keep it up?" We are not old or weary, but we have asked the same question ourselves. And the answer that we have found is that Mr. Chesterton does not keep it up; that is to say, he does not keep on performing the feats of which first he appears to be master. His energy is great, but it does not move or lift. Invited, as we imagine, to see him swim the Hellespont, we discover that we are only privileged to see him splash cleverly in his bath. How cleverly he splashes readers of his articles know, and it is just because we enjoy Mr. Chesterton's work, and have faith in his future, that we are careful to point out what we think is his weakness. He must put a leash on his prancing sagacity, and assert himself among his ideas. As it is, we find it difficult to take him seriously, or to feel that he believes, or even remembers, half the clever things he says. Let him exchange this blindfold hurry of thinking for a wakeful attention to the value and direction of his thoughts, and he will delight us.

At present the only observable trend in Mr. Chesterton's furore of meditation is a desire to prove that life is happier and more curious than men suppose it to be. Which is good as far as it goes. But Mr. Chesterton seems to think that he can make the world seem fair by proving that it is so. That is a mistake. No amount of ratiocinative ingenuity of optimism, or feats of paradoxical defence, can lighten the burden. A man will not find happiness by seeking for it like a hard-thinking terrier. A curious dismalness of nothingness settles down on us after reading Mr. Chesterton's Defence of Skeletons, his Defence of Publicity, his Defence of Nonsense, his Defence of Planets, his Defence of China Shepherdesses, his Defence of Useful Information, his Defence of Farce, and his Defence of Ugly Things. The paradoxical defence is the natural device of your young man excogitant, be he the shining light of an Essay Society or a rising star in the London literary firmament. It is a good device, sparingly used; but unless it is done with almost Elian discretion and pawkiness, it is apt to suggest that the writer has adopted it as a means of laying a train of epigrammatic gunpowder with time fuses carefully adjusted.

Mr. Chesterton's defence of Skeletons is a characteristic exercise. Anyone can find something to say on such a theme. But the value of what is said will assuredly lie in some intimate and straightforward communication in which the taint of the original snap-paradox is burned up as by fire. Mr. Chesterton is remorselessly clever all through. Surely, he tells us, "the idea that its leaves are the chief grace of a tree is a vulgar one, on a par with the idea that his hair is the chief grace of a pianist. When Winter, that healthy ascetic, carries his gigantic razor over hill and valley, and shaves all the trees like monks, we feel surely that they are all the more like trees if they are shorn, just as so many painters and musicians would be all the more like men if they were less like mops. . . . Without claiming for the human skeleton a wholly conventional beauty, we may assert that he is certainly not uglier than a bull-dog. . . . One would think it would be most unwise in a man to be afraid of a skeleton, since Nature has set curious and quite insuperable obstacles to his running away from it," and so on. You turn the page to find this terribly ingenious young man begin another paragraph with: "The truth is that man's horror of the skeleton is not horror of death at all." You turn another page, and, as if he had not pirouetted enough, he makes a fresh spurt: "There is a peculiar idea abroad that the value and fascination of what we call Nature lie in her beauty." There is, indeed; and you feel that some day you will make time to hear Mr. Chesterton confute it. Just now you are feeling rather dazed by his confutations, by his statements of what "the truth is" or what "the fact is," or what "I have long thought." Besides, there are more digestible cates at hand. Mr. Chesterton is a poet, and every now and then the shuttle-clack of his brain is hushed by a burst of music. Even on the subject of skeletons he can wander into a strain of grotesque meditation at once legitimate, interesting, and touched with poetry. As thus:

> Has the poet, for whom Nature means only roses and lilies, ever heard a pig grunting? It is a noise that does a man good—a strong, snorting, imprisoned noise, breaking its way out of unfathomable dungeons through every possible outlet and organ. It might be the voice of the earth itself, snoring in its mighty sleep. This is the deepest, the oldest, the most wholesome and religious sense of the value of Nature—the value which comes from her immense babyishness. She is as top-heavy, as grotesque, as solemn, and as happy as a child. The mood > does come when we see all her shapes like shapes that a baby scrawls upon a slate—simple, rudimentary, a million years older and stronger than the whole disease that is called Art. The objects of earth and heaven seem to combine into a nursery tale, and our relation to things seems for a moment so simple that a dancing lunatic would be needed to do justice to its lucidity and levity. The tree above my head is flapping like some gigantic bird standing on one leg; the moon is like the eye of a cyclops. And, however much my face clouds with sombre vanity, or vulgar vengeance, or contemptible contempt, the bones of my skull beneath it are laughing for ever.

Digitized by Google

That is good, or, shall we say, on the road to be good; for little is gained by its pervasive muscularity. In his heat and swing Mr. Chesterton spoils many a good passage by phrases like "the whole disease that is called Art," and sometimes he is capable of a sort of remote bathos, as when in his Defence of Publicity he exclaims: "Along the base of every noble monument, whatever else may be written there, runs in invisible letters the lines of Swinburne:

> This thing is God:
> To be man with thy might,
> To go straight in the strength of thy spirit, and live out thy life in the light."

Our admiration of Mr. Swinburne does not carry us so far as this, and without disparaging these lines in the least we are thankful that they are inscribed on the Great Pyramid and on Westminster Abbey in "invisible" letters. The same paper yields an example of Mr. Chesterton's rather frequent falls into humorous turgidity, reminiscent rather than native: "Perhaps the most hideous and depressing object in the universe—far more hideous and depressing than one of Mr. H. G. Wells's shapeless monsters of the slime (and not at all unlike them)—is the statue of an English philanthropist." It is on such sallies that the chairman of a suburban essay society bestows his most knowing and infectious smile. Let us sandwich good points and bad as far as we may. Mr. Chesterton has one equipment of very great value to any writer: he has read his Bible. Again and again he uses the words of Scripture with effect. Take an example from his Defence of Nonsense:

> It is significant that in the greatest religious poem existent, the Book of Job, the argument which convinces the infidel is not (as has been represented by the merely rational religionism of the eighteenth century) a picture of the ordered beneficence of the Creation; but, on the contrary, a picture of the huge and undecipherable unreason of it. "Hast Thou sent the rain upon the desert where no man is?" This simple sense of wonder at the shapes of things, and at their exuberant independence of our intellectual standards and our trivial definitions, is the basis of spirituality as it is the basis of nonsense.

But then, again, how are you to endure the midnight cleverness of the Defence of China Shepherdesses, in which Mr. Chesterton seems not only to be writing by the lamp, but to be pitting his brains against his dwindling supply of kerosene. So far from objecting to the Ideal Shepherd, he would welcome an Ideal Grocer to whom we could attach delicate ideas of grocery as we do to the shepherds of Theocritus and Pope. It is when he proceeds to elaborate his grocer that we throw up our hands.

We do not think that we need multiply examples of Mr. Chesterton's too irresponsible expatiations. Reflection asks time. Of course Mr. Chesterton is not always to be taken seriously. He does not seriously believe that his onslaught on the Greek ideal of man's physical beauty counts for anything, or that he is really the protagonist of the poetry of the new knowledge in a passage like the following:

> For some mysterious reason this habit of realising poetically the facts of science has ceased abruptly with scientific progress, and all the confounding portents preached by Galileo and Newton have fallen on deaf ears. They painted a picture of the universe compared with which the Apocalypse with its falling stars was a mere idyll. They declared that we are all careering through space, clinging to a cannon-ball, and the poets ignore the matter as if it were a remark about the weather. They say that an invisible force holds us in our own armchairs while the earth hurtles like a boomerang; and men still go back to dusty records to prove the mercy of God.

He knows quite well that poetry must concern itself mainly with the things which are necessarily and usefully present in men's hearts and bosoms, and not with dimensions and operations which can never be more to men than Eternity is to Time. On the other hand, we like the malice and thrust of the epigram: "Profanity is now more than an affectation—it is a convention. The curse against God is Exercise I. in the primer of minor poetry." But this was truer ten years ago. Well, we hope we have shown that Mr. Chesterton is a very clever young essayist. There we leave him for the present. When he becomes more, —and less—clever, we shall return to him with a larger hope.

Things Seen.

Sound, Sight, and Sentiment.

THREE men were sitting alone in a room in a hamlet. On the table was a volume of Turgenev, open at the section called "Poems in Prose," and these companions had been reading from it in turn. One had chosen "The Old Woman," the second "The Dog," the third "The Beggar."

"The Russians take you straight to the front door," said the First Man. "Turgenev writes as if he were laying wood-blocks in a road, and he always chooses the right block. He doesn't waste time over preliminaries. How clean, how direct are the beginnings of the things we have been reading: "I was walking over a wide plain alone . . . " "Us two in the room; my dog and me. Outside a fearful storm is howling . . ." "I was walking along the street. I was stopped by a decrepit old beggar" Simple enough, but they awaken the imagination. There was silence for some minutes.

"It's very difficult," said the Second Man, "to describe things exactly as they happened. The imagination will always be colouring, and splashing in and out of the truth; but it holds the true vision somewhere, although you often have to dig for it. Suppose we try an experiment. We are all fresh from London, and its impressions. Suppose we tell, simply, some incident, something we have lately seen, or heard, or felt, that has remained with us." There was, again, silence. Then the First Man spoke:

"Mine has to do with sound—a horrible sound, that haunts me. I heard it in my sleep last night, and woke trembling. It happened in the reading-room of the British Museum, where, I suppose, in the whole course of its history, nobody had ever before raised his voice above a whisper. You know the stupor that comes over one after spending some hours there. You forget that the wind ever blew, or that the sun ever shone. You know that there is a book before your eyes; that you are surrounded by men and women with books before their eyes; that there is an odour of leather and old clothes, and a continuous murmur of shuffling feet, coughs, sniffs, and wheezings. It was late in the afternoon. I think I was dozing, when, suddenly, a piercing, long-drawn-out scream brought me back to life, as if I had been slashed across the face with a whip. Everybody started and stood up, bewilderment and fright on their faces. Then the scream was repeated. It echoed round the roof—horrible. I didn't see him carried out. I turned again to my book, but the page had no meaning, and I had but one wish—to get out into the open air. As I walked towards the door I saw that the table where he had been sitting was bare, and every seat was vacant. I haven't been there since. The place is inhabited—not by books, but by a scream. It doesn't leave me."

Digitized by Google

The Second Man spoke: "Mine is of sight. It is also painful—but quietly so. There is a certain street in London—a gloomy, narrow street—which is my shortest way home. But I never take it now. I was making my way home once by this street after midnight, when I came to a building, the windows of which were not dark. Yet they were not light. Behind the calico blinds a dim illumination shone that was neither light nor darkness. It was the half-light that reminds the sick of the world from which they are debarred. The shadow of a figure moved quickly behind the blind. It crossed the room again. Then two arms were thrown up—skinny arms. I crossed the road and read the brass plate affixed to the railings. It was a hospital where they treat a terrible disease.

The Third Man spoke: "Mine is of sentiment. I had been spending the evening at one of those Institutions peculiar to our time, where men and women go to be interested, instructed, and amused. It was a large building, with a hall, a library, club-rooms, lecture-rooms, class-rooms, a gymnasium, and I know not what else. My guide led me through the rooms, and everywhere, in cheerful progression, was some form of intellectual or social activity. Some were listening to a lecture; others were learning to dance or to cook; others were singing, practising gymnastics, debating, reading, playing billiards, grappling with French, and so on. It was really very encouraging. Everybody was exercising mind or body. To the individual life something was being added, of knowledge, interest, or pleasure, and each was the gainer. But it was none of these things that made the definite impression on my mind."

"Well?"

"It was something I saw by chance, as it were, something quite unofficial. To get from one part of the building to another we had to pass through a small kind of ante-room, and in it were three women, silent but happy, sewing. They were making warm garments to give to the unnoticed at Christmas-time."

The three looked at each other, and one said: "Let's have some more Turgenev."

Primal Sanities.

One hopes that the day of controversies as to the artistry of Walt Whitman is over. They have been more than usually profitless. Whether the things which he writes are to be called poems or not, resolves itself almost entirely into a question of categories; and categories are of the highest importance to those who make them. There remains the growing recognition of Walt Whitman as one of the little band of writers—they are not always the greatest, although Wordsworth, Shelley, Browning, Meredith, are of the number—who, whatever their merits or demerits for criticism, must not be denied as spiritual forces. The adequate soul at grips with the "Leaves of Grass" may be attracted or disconcerted: it can hardly be indifferent. Hence, it may be supposed, it is that so many thoughtful men of letters find it necessary sooner or later to have their say out about Whitman. It is so now with Mr. Edmond Holmes, the author of The Silence of Love, himself an admitted poet.* Mr. Holmes bears us out.

> Long before I had finished that extraordinary work (poem I cannot call it), the Song of Myself, I felt that I was face to face with an abnormally vivid and aggressive personality by which I was alternately, not to say simultaneously, fascinated and repelled. Had Whitman been a lesser man I should have read his poetry, admired its beauties, laughed at its eccentricities, shuddered at its crudities, and then laid the book aside and gone on to something else. But the very fact that his personality seemed to be wrestling with and striving to impose itself upon mine made me determine, at all costs, to understand him, to discover the secret sources of his poetry, to wrest from him the key to his heart and mind.

Mr. Holmes is inclined to talk the language of the schools, and of Hegelianism in particular, but whoso takes the trouble to translate him will find much of the truth about Whitman in the pages of his brief essay. Whitman is a spiritual force because of the immense reserve of optimism which he brings to the rescue of a humanity balanced in unstable equilibrium between the poles of exaltation and despair. His optimism, says Mr. Holmes, is "the direct outcome of physical and spiritual joy"; and "his poetry is a veritable pæan, a song of thanksgiving and triumph." Obviously this is not a wholly new note in literature. Browning has sung "the wild joys of living," and Wordsworth told us how

> The sounding cataract
> Haunted me like a passion.

But not even Wordsworth, and certainly not Browning, has voiced the gusto of life in the large, direct, and monotonous manner so characteristic of Whitman. Coleridge called Shakespeare the "myriad-minded man." No conceivable epithet could be more inapplicable to Whitman. He is the single-minded man, the lyre of a single emotion, which he has uttered again and again in countless modes, just as the sea is one at heart beneath the infinitely various waves of its surface. The Whitman mood is that in which we are most vividly conscious of the value of life as life, of the secret something which makes for content and sanity in the recognition of what we have in common, not only with the meanest of other men, but with flowers and trees, and beasts, and dawn and sunset, and all inanimate things. To assert life and not to deny it; to yield oneself to the rhythm of existence with an abandon that accepts not life only, but death itself—"Sweet, peaceful, welcome death"; to trust immeasurably; such is the gospel, or rather the instinctive creed, according to Whitman. The pantheist's sense of his own identity with the soul of things breathes through his most intimate apprehensions of external nature. He has the ecstasy of kinship.

> I am he that walks with the tender and growing night,
> I call to the earth and sea half-held by the night.
> Press close bare-bosomed night—press close magnetic nourishing night!
> Night of south winds—night of the large few stars.
> Still nodding night—mad naked summer night.
>
> Smile O voluptuous cool-breath'd earth!
> Earth of the slumbering and liquid trees!
> Earth of departed sunset—earth of the mountains misty-topt!
> Earth of the vitreous pour of the full moon just tinged with blue!
> Earth of shine and dark mottling the tide of the river!
> Earth of the limpid gray of clouds brighter and clearer for my sake!
> Far-swooping elbow'd earth—rich apple-blossom'd earth
> Smile. for your lover comes.

Or again:—

> By broad Potomac's shore, again old tongue
> (Still uttering, still ejaculating, canst never cease this babble?)
> Again old heart so gay, again to you, your sense, the full flush spring returning,

* Walt Whitman's Poetry: A Study and a Selection. By Edmond Holmes Lane.)

Digitized by Google

Again the freshness and the odors, again Virginia's summer's sky, pellucid blue and silver,
Again the forenoon purple of the hills,
Again the deathless grass, so noiseless soft and green,
Again the blood-red roses blooming.

Perfume this book of mine O blood-red roses!
Lave subtly with your waters every line, Potomac!
Give me of you O spring, before I close, to put between its pages!
O forenoon purple of the hills, before I close, of you!
O deathless grass, of you!

Take, too, those "songs of the open road." What is at the heart of them but the last and finest expression of optimism, the willingness to trust oneself to the unknown whithersoever it may lead, even once more to death itself, in the sure and certain hope that the end will somehow be good. Here as elsewhere other men have felt as Whitman feels. The perverse Mallarmé himself, when "the flesh is weary," and he has "read all the books," cries to his heart:—

"Mais, ô mon cœur, entends le chant des matelots."

But the mood is Whitman's own, by virtue of the frequency, the intensity, with which it dominates him.

O, we can wait no longer,
We too take ship, O soul,
Joyous we too launch out on trackless seas,
Fearless for unknown shores on waves of ecstasy to sail
Amid the wafting winds (thou pressing me to thee, I thee to me, O soul),
Caroling free, singing our song of God,
Chanting our chant of pleasant exploration.
O my brave soul!
O farther, farther sail!
O daring joy, but safe! are they not all the seas of God?
O farther, farther sail!

Presently comes some acute person—Mr. Holmes in fact—and begins to point out the weaknesses of pantheism. Whitman finds the divine in all men and things, and argues therefrom that all men and things are therefore "on a common level, utterly regardless of the distinctions of intellect, virtue, station, or any height or lowliness whatever." He denies the gradations of the divine, and is arrogant for himself and for others.

What do you suppose I would intimate to you in a hundred ways,
But that man or woman is as good as God,
And that there is no God any more divine than yourself.

"There is," says Mr. Holmes, full of his Hegel, "a lack of idealism here. Whitman has forgotten to notice that the element common to man as man is rather the 'promise and potency' of the divine than the actualised divine itself." These are not his words, but this is the gravamen of his criticism. It is perfectly true, but then Walt Whitman's admirers are nearly all ready to admit that he is vulnerable to philosophical criticism at every possible point. He is full of theories, which are the direct translation into intellectual terms of his emotions, and may safely be disregarded. He is full of absurdities also, when his inspiration is not sufficient to purge them away. They are too flagrant to call for any attention from a serious critic. A man who can write:

How plenteous, how splendid, how resumé!

must be held to refute himself. But it is no less true that when Walt Whitman is inspired—and he is very often inspired—he can find large and classical utterance for essential human moods, and that to many a soul no lesson has been more tonic than his cri du cœur:

Give me solitude, give me Nature! Give me again, O Nature,
Your primal sanities.

Not as the Bookmen.

". . . and being a person who prefers life to art, and who knows it is a far finer thing to be in love, or to risk a danger, than to paint the finest picture or write the noblest book, I begin to regard what remains to me of my life as very shadowy . . . was regretting a high average of sins . . . had been recently reminded that I had outlived some friends, and wondering if I had not outlived some friendships. . . ." Thus, from his sick-bed, wrote Stevenson: upon at least two hundred pages of the Letters one may see and know the living man as clearly as one sees him there; and yet the old debate has broken out again: What manner of man was this? Of Mr. Henley and his share in this revival perhaps the less said the better: if he has dishonoured the dead, he will know it time enough. In any case, he stands for the city-folk, the super-civilised, the pedants and purists and bookmen, who could not follow Stevenson beyond the threshold of his greater self, that he found and crossed, when first he set out to drink deep of the real, the rude and turbulent life that he had thirsted for so long. Hence this welter of misunderstanding of him that they have brought upon us. These literary godfathers and godmothers would have us believe that they taught him to give us of his best. They did him and us great service—and infinite hurt. The finest that was in him is not in his books; the sponsors helped him greatly to become the most accomplished writer of his age: they taught him how to give us all of himself—except Robert Louis Stevenson. The man we know now, by and through the Letters, is not to be found in any of his volumes. In early days he fell a victim to style, precision, the chosen word, and never gained his freedom. The right word to make him the exponent of his many selves in writing was never spoken: Whitman might have spoken it; but there was no such one amongst his early guides. The things that Whitman stood for—sunshine and free air, and the naked soul of man—were truly seen and felt, too late. That was in the South Seas. He was moulded then: even his defence of Father Damien smells of the study. He was fixed by then in his literary shell; yet not irrevocably, since he knew it, and was on the way, so far as might be, to escape. If he had lived first, and had taken counsel subsequently with the bookmen, all might have been well; but fate had decreed that he should live his life wrong end foremost.

It is a case for lamentation, not for reproach: for lamentation upon what Stevenson might have been, rather than for reproach of what his literary counsellors made of him—what the dull, pedantic gods at whose feet they sit have decreed that they shall make of any man who shall chance to fall into their hands. For they are all—in a literary way without doubt, and likely enough in every other way—all honourable men. They did what they conceived to be their duty by him. Only the master was wanting: they made Stevenson a literary man; the master would have given the man himself a freer utterance, and the world would have been infinitely richer to-day.

If they who took upon themselves the charge of him made of him what they should have made, how is it that, to us who knew him not in the flesh, we find the man and truly love him, first and only in the Letters? Because the literary self was schooled to efface the living self—to efface and polish and re-write him out of recognition. Take him on one of his hundred sides alone. The sight of something pitiful, of suffering, of a child in tears, would set him crying. Who has ever cried over a page, a line, of his literary works? Who has not cried, or has not at least come to the brink of the well of tears, over his Letters? It was the bookmen who dried up the tears that should have stopt upon his pages. They dried the tears, and made him give us—what? A chiselled phrase. It was a poor exchange.

Digitized by Google

As for the question: Would he have cheapened, vulgarised himself had he been led to give us more of his essential self—to weep, rage, bemoan, exult, fling down his phrases hot and thrilling and let them lie, and not arraign them so relentlessly in the court of Style? It is sheer blasphemy to debate it. If he had been led that way we should have now in his books the steadfast friend, the imperishable boy, the sprite, the patriot and statesman that look out upon us in fleeting glimpses from the pages of his Letters. The hand was held that should have given us all that. He, with his amazing zest of living, was meant to be a man amongst men first of all, to know and share in all the sordidness and gaiety and heroism of the common folk—to look over the edge of the world, to fear and exult in what he saw there, and to tell us of it afterwards, in his own way; not in the way of the official, the ladylike, the person of Fleet Street, Bloomsbury, and the suburbs. He should have spoken "as one having authority, not as the bookmen."

When Mr. Churton Collins—whose soul must surely be of leather—reviewed the Stevenson Letters as literary exercises, he cried, in effect if not in words, "Save me from my friends." There, doubtless by accident, and not knowing the full significance of what he said, he uttered the living truth. If Stevenson had, early enough, been rescued from the friends that marred his destiny, these lamentable controversies as to what manner of man he was would never have arisen. He would have told us himself. The Samoans—the loving barbarians that hewed the steep track and carried his body over it upon their shoulders to his grave—do not dispute amongst themselves as to what kind of a man was Tusitala. They know, and are silent; and amongst them he sleeps sound. Would that our warring bookmen might read a lesson from it!

HERBERT C. MACILWAINE.

Correspondence.

"The To-be-Forgotten."

SIR,—In your review of Mr. Hardy's Poems of the Past and Present the theory of life in the grave, as set forth in "His Immortality" and "The To-be-Forgotten" is spoken of as something new.

The following quotation from a letter written by Mrs. Lynn Linton to an unknown correspondent goes to show that an article written in the Queen in February, 1889, unintentionally suggested the same idea to at least one of its readers:

"I am very sorry that anything I have written should have caused you pain, but it is pain you have given yourself. You have read into my words a meaning they were not intended to convey, and have fastened on to me a declaration of opinion I had not the slightest idea of myself. The words of which you complain were simply meant to show the transitory nature of individual remembrance, which lasts for the generation only. It had nothing to do with the soul or the life beyond the grave, or any "ism" whatever. It was simply the pathetic truth, that when those who loved and remembered an unnoted little child died that child itself would be forgotten and pass into oblivion."—I am, &c.,

G. S. LAYARD.

"Ivry."

SIR,—In the ACADEMY of to-day there is a quotation from the Rambler consisting of a criticism of Macaulay's "Ivry," in which the writer absurdly tries to ridicule Macaulay's use of the word "cornet." He considers that a cornet must be either a kind of trumpet or a youthful commander of horse, and consequently cannot be "unfurled," &c. As, Sir, you have refrained from commenting on this criticism, possibly some of your readers may consider it justified. I would, therefore, ask to be allowed to point out that, in the Imperial Dictionary of the English Language, I find cornet (among other meanings) may be the flag or standard of a troop of horse:

"In his white cornet Verdon doth display
A fret of gules."

—DRAYTON.

A writer must be singularly ignorant of Macaulay to think him likely to be ignorant in such a matter.—I am, &c.,

T. V. HOLMES.

28, Crooms Hill, Greenwich Park.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 114 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best criticism of some small dramatic detail in Shakespeare's plays. We are struck by the insight shown in many of the replies. These prove that among our readers there are many real students of Shakespeare. The lady contributors to this competition have excelled. The allotment of the prize is not easy, but, after careful consideration, we award it to Miss Jessie Phillips, 48, Huntingdon Road, East Finchley, N., for the following:—

"TWELFTH NIGHT."—SCENE II., ACT IV.

MALVOLIO: "I think nobly of the soul, and in no way approve his opinion."

In criticising any point in a play, one must bear in mind its effect on spectators. In the representation of "Twelfth Night" by Mr. Beerbohm Tree, his mournful enunciation of this line thrilled me as it had thrilled me when, as a child, I first read it. One suddenly left the altitude of detachment necessary to appreciate the comic side of another's woes, and for a moment flung oneself into Malvolio's position, for however comic the situation is to us, it was tragic indeed to him. The sport seemed to fall rather flat: it would have been fine fun if Malvolio, frantic for freedom, had been led on to subscribe to Pythagoras' doctrine. What scope for teasing him afterwards? But the fish did not rise Malvolio, with obstinate truthfulness, refuses to say what he does not think, and we are forced to acknowledge an element of greatness in him. And in the light of this line we see that his very faults are weak greatnesses; his colossal credulity, that arising from his own honesty, cannot comprehend the subtlety of deceit; his magnifying of his office, his taking himself so seriously, his bland waving aside of all social distinctions and seeing nothing incongruous in an union with the Countess, have all something of the sublime in them; but there is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and Malvolio is always ridiculous; except that here we get the sublimity from which he has stepped, and that his faithfulness, and loyalty, and stubbornness have their root in something great in the character.

The effect of this line is to insensibly alter our conception of the man, and this was strikingly illustrated in the last scene. When Malvolio, speechless with rage, turns at bay, it was curious to note that no one laughed; or, rather, the audience began to laugh and checked itself, as if it were ashamed. There was a strained feeling in the atmosphere, as if everyone thought the situation was comic and demanded laughter, yet somehow they could not comfortably do so—as you see sometimes boys teasing another, when gradually something in his demeanour silences them, and they sneak shamefacedly away. So it is here, and what is it that creates that atmosphere? It is that line. Our minds unconsciously turn to the dungeon scene, and in the man baited by his enemies we see, not the gullibility and conceit, but the honest credulity of one who, when tempted to make his escape by agreeing to what he thought a lie, said simply and steadfastly: "I think nobly of the soul."

This final scene is linked to that by this one line, seemingly a small point in itself, yet in its subtle psychology revealing the touch of the master's hand, lifting this part of the play out of mere farce into that highest comedy where humour is linked with sympathy. [J. P.]

Other replies are as follows:—

THE OLD LADY.

In the play of "King Henry VIII." there is a small point which seems to have been overlooked by the innumerable critics of

Digitized by Google

Shakespeare. According to the leading authorities, this play was written in collaboration with Fletcher, "not together, but alternately, upon distinct portions of it" (Spedding).

Modern scholarship, with patient investigation, has applied certain tests, by which we can ascertain almost with certainty the scenes written by each writer, and among those ascribed to Shakespeare are act two, scene three, and act five, scene one, in both of which appears the most humorous character in the play. This is the Old Lady, a friend of Anne Boleyn, who, in the earlier scene, was present when the Lord Chamberlain announced to Anne the honour conferred on her by the King by creating her Marchioness of Pembroke.

In the later scene the Old Lady announces to the King the birth of Elizabeth. Now this old lady is the creation of Shakespeare, and as such—as the most humorous character of what was probably his last play (date about 1612)—she possesses some extrinsic interest in addition to her delightful individuality. She had been seventeen years at Court, being evidently a privileged person there, and so little in awe of the terrible King that she dared to scold his Majesty! When she informs him that the baby is as like him "as cherry is to cherry," he orders Sir Thomas Lovell to give her an hundred marks, and then hurries to the Queen.

"An hundred marks! By this light, I'll ha' more.
An ordinary groom is for such payment.
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl was like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay't; and now
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue.

And exit the immortal old woman who was not afraid of King Henry VIII.! ["Issor," Bayswater.]

"RICHARD III."

It would be unreasonable to expect historical accuracy in Shakespeare's historical plays, despite Bolingbroke's reliance on them, but dramatic propriety and plausibility we have surely a right to demand. How then can we account for or excuse Shakespeare's, in "King Richard III.," making the Lady Anne accept a ring from the Duke of Gloster, who has murdered her husband, within sight of the corse of her father-in-law, whom he has also slain? Considering, too, that just previously she has tried to avenge, and not unnaturally, the slaughter of her relatives, her sudden apparently motiveless inconsistency and pusillanimity are too bewildering for words, and must sink her to an unimaginable depth in the opinion of all. One can only say, like the personage in Ibsen, "People do not do these things." I fancy I have touched on the weakest spot in Shakespeare's life-work.

[A. G., Worcester.]

IAGO.

It is exactly the small things in Shakespeare which often weigh most heavily from a critical point of view, as Coleridge has pointed out in the case of Desdemona's dropped handkerchief. In the speeches which we are tempted to pass by unnoticed may sometimes be found the true key to a character, revealed in a few words of no apparent moment; or in a portion of a scene which, upon a first perusal, it might appear could have been omitted altogether without prejudice to the particular play. There is no scene more pregnant in meaning than that in which Iago, Emilia, and Desdemona discuss the merits of different women; but a surface judgment would pronounce that it does not affect the action of the play. Neither does it; yet it throws a sudden and a dramatic flash of light upon the character of Iago. After enumerating the virtues of a deserving woman, he pauses upon the words:—"She was a wight, if ever such wight were——" and when Desdemona asks: "To do what?" he answers: "To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer." The implied doubt, and the unexpected, bitter conclusion put the key-stone to the arch of villainy, and show Iago in his true light—as a non-moral man, who has not the faintest conception of virtue, nor a fragment of belief that it anywhere exists. His callousness might have proceeded from blind revenge; his advice to Roderigo, "Put money in thy purse," from a cynical spirit; but the above speech differentiates him from other villains; and if there are degrees of wickedness shows him to be the most consummate villain ever presented upon the stage. Richard III. pays to virtue the tribute of simulation, Macbeth falls slowly to lower depths, but Iago is a more perfect villain than either because of his negative limitations, for he is without pity, remorse, or honour; knowing neither love nor gratitude; and as the speech which we have quoted proves, he not only has no motion towards virtue himself, but wholly disbelieves in its existence in others.

[A. E. W., Greenock.]

Competition No. 115 (New Series).

We offer a prize of One Guinea for the best Christmas Carol. Not to exceed twenty lines.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

No. 298. DECEMBER 1901.

A MESSAGE FROM AMERICA. By Sir Wemyss Reid.
OUR UNDISCIPLINED BRAINS—The War-Test. By Charles Copland Perry.
MARRIAGE AND MODERN CIVILISATION. By W. S. Lilly.
A NEW LIGHT ON THE BACON-SHAKESPEARE CYPHER. By W. H. Mallock.
THE FIELD OF THE PRINT COLLECTOR. By Frederick Wedmore.
HOW TO PUT AN END TO PROFESSIONAL CRIME. By Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B.
A PLEA FOR THE CIRCUIT SYSTEM. By the Hon. Mr. Justice Grantham.
BACK TO THE LAND—A Sequel. By the Right Hon. Earl Nelson.
"BIGODS." By the Countess of Warwick.
A NATIONAL THEATRE: An Appeal to the London County Council. By John Coleman
SKETCHES IN A NORTHERN TOWN. II. By Mrs. Henry Birchenough.
WHY THE RELIGIOUS ORDERS LEAVE FRANCE. By J. G. Snead Cox.
CHILD-SETTLERS FOR SOUTH AFRICA. By Francis Stevenson.
OFFICERS' EXPENSES. By Major G. F. Herbert, R.F.A.
CADET CORPS FOR SCHOOLBOYS OF ALL CLASSES. By Major W. Elliot. (Hon. Sec. Lads' Drill Association).
THE WHITE PERIL. By George Macaulay Trevelyan.
LIGHT-WEIGHTS TO FINISH THE WAR. By Sir Henry Meysey-Thompson, Bart., M.P.

London: Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ld.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 1034.——DECEMBER, 1901.——2s. 6d.

DAY. By "LINESMAN."—CAMPING ON LAKE WINNIPEG. By C. HANBURY-WILLIAMS.—NEVER MARRIED.—HER SISTER. By MOIRA O'NEILL. JONES OF PANNMAEN.—BYRON, 1816-1824. By G. S. STREET.—THE WESTCOTES. By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH. Chaps. VII.-IX.—RECENT FICTION.—THE STATE OF INDIA.—THE CONQUEST OF CHARLOTTE. Chap. XIII.—LI HUNG-CHANG. By ALEXANDER MICHIE.—MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD: Two Years of Emotion—Great Occasions and their Pageantry—The Return of the Duke of York—Our Colonial Empire The Confusion of Tongues—The Old Radical and the New—An Edition of Hazlitt—His Political Prejudices—His Interest In Life and Letters—William Hazlitt and Samuel Johnson.—THE MINISTRY AND THE WAR.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

J. W. ARROWSMITH.

Crown 8vo, 424 pp. 6/- Specially designed cover.

THE EYES OF LIGHT By ARTHUR MOORE.

"The story is brightly told, not without a touch of extravagance, and deals with a mysterious Oriental casket which is at the bottom of many desperate, humorous, romantic, and surprising adventures."

Crown 8vo, 186 pp. Price One Shilling.

PATRICIA AT THE INN. By J. C. SNAITH. Being Arrowsmith's Christmas Annual.

"A stirring Romance of adventure."—Scotsman.

The present issue is the Twenty-first consecutive appearance of this popular Annual.

Bristol: J. W. Arrowsmith.
London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

Evolution and its bearing on Religions
By A. J. DADSON.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

London: Swann, Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd., Paternoster Square, E.C.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

AN HISTORIC VIEW OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. The Jowett Lectures for 1901. By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Professor of Classical Archæology in Oxford University, Author of "Exploratio Evangelica." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A HEBREW GRAMMAR. The Elements for Students and Ministers as in Recent Scientific Treatises. By ARCHIBALD DUFF, LL.D., B.D., Professor of Old Testament Theology, United College, Bradford; Author of "Old Testament Theology. Crown 8vo, cloth. price 2s. 6d. net.

PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, Vol. III. (Books IV. and V.) Completing the Work. By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh; Author of "Money and Monetary Problems," "Historical Progress" and "Ideal Socialism," "Strikes and Social Problems." Demy 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

SOCIAL LIFE OF SCOTLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. Fourth Edition. By the Rev. HENRY GREY GRAHAM. One Volume, demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.

SUNSHINE AND SURF. A Year's Wanderings in the South Seas. By Douglas B. Hall and Lord Albert Osborne. With Map and 36 full-page illustrations from Photographs. Post 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"It gives a really delightful and picturesque narrative of the habits of the various native tribes, and it is full of good stories."—The Daily Mail.

"Written in a pleasant, lively style, and contains excellent descriptions of the islands visited as well as the dances and customs of the natives."—The Field.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

Digitized by Google

FROM MR. GRANT RICHARDS'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LIFE AND TEACHING OF LEO TOLSTOY.

By G. H. PERRIS. Crown 8vo, Cloth Gilt, 6s.

French Fiction of the Nineteenth Century.

I. SALAMMBO. By GUSTAVE FLAUBERT. Translated by J. W. MATTHEWS. With a Preface by ARTHUR SYMONS. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, Cloth Gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

II. THE LATIN QUARTER. By HENRY MURGER. Translated by ELLEN MARRIAGE. With a Preface by ARTHUR SYMONS. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, Cloth Gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

COUNTY AND TOWN IN ENGLAND.

By GRANT ALLEN. With Prefatory Note by Professor YORK POWELL. Crown 8vo, Cloth Gilt, 6s.

The Daily Chronicle:—"It is an excellent example of the attractive style and the wonderful teaching power of its author, and upon it, we venture to think, his reputation as a historian will rest."

THE SUMMITS OF SUCCESS:

HOW THEY HAVE BEEN REACHED. With Sketches of the Careers of some Notable Climbers. By JAMES BURNLEY Crown 8vo, Cloth Gilt, 6s.

HOW TO SPECULATE IN MINES.

By WALTER W. WALL. Crown 8vo, Cloth, 6s.

NEW FICTION.

STORIES IN THE DARK.

By BARRY PAIN. Fcap 8vo, Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Paper Covers, 1s. Also a Large Paper Edition, limited to 250 Copies, numbered and signed by the Author, 5s. net.

The World's Classics.

"The last word in cheap literature."—Review of Reviews.

Cloth, 1s. net each. Leather, 2s. net each. New Volumes Just Published.

THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS. 616 Pages. OLIVER TWIST. By CHARLES DICKENS. 522 Pages.

WUTHERING HEIGHTS. By EMILY BRONTE. 388 Pages.

LONDON: GRANT RICHARDS, 9, HENRIETTA STREET, W.C.

Price 2/6. Price 2/6.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For DECEMBER will contain:

1. MILITARISM IN POLITICS AND LORD ROBERTS' ARMY REORGANISATION SCHEME. By JEAN DE BLOCH.
2. OUR UNHAPPY DIVISIONS: A PLEA FOR THE RECOGNITION OF NON-EPISCOPAL CHURCHES. By Canon HENSLEY HENSON.
3. THE NEW REIGN IN ITALY. By BOLTON KING.
4. JOURNALISM FOR UNIVERSITY MEN. By F. S. A. LOWNDES.
5. ANTHROPOLOGY RECONSTRUCTED. By The Rev. W. W. PEYTON.
6. MAXIME GORKY. By Count S. C. De SOISSONS.
7. A DIARY OF THE NATAL CAMPAIGN. By RAYMOND MAXWELL.
8. LITERARY SUPPLEMENT: CHRISTMAS AND OTHER BOOKS. By "A READER."

LONDON:

THE COLUMBUS COMPANY, LIMITED,

COLUMBUS HOUSE, 43 & 43A, FETTER LANE, E.C.

Price Half-a-Crown Monthly.] [All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

The DAWN of CIVILIZATION.—EGYPT & CHALDÆA.
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged by Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to, cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco, gilt edges (bound by Riviere), 48s.

This, the fourth of the English editions of "Les Origines," has been thoroughly revised by the author, who has incorporated into it the results of recent research in Egypt and Mesopotamia, and submitted at the same time the theories founded on these results to a searching criticism. This work and the two succeeding volumes, it may be safely said, are the most important contributions which have ever appeared on the early history of Egypt and Mesopotamia.

The STRUGGLE of the NATIONS (Egypt, Syria, and Assyria). By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

"The translation by M. L. McClure is in both cases excellent. Prof. Maspero's presentation of the new learning is at once eminently popular and attractive."—Times.

"The author has throughout attempted to reproduce for us the daily life of the various peoples of whom he treats, and in this he has succeeded admirably."—Academy.

The PASSING of the EMPIRES. 850 B.C. to 330 B.C.
By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and numerous Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

"Scholars, as well as unlearned seekers after unbiassed facts, owe M. Maspero and Mrs. McClure a deep debt of gratitude."—St. James's Gazette.

"An interesting book, and one which will give the reader a good general view of a most eventful period in the history of the world."—Nature.

"For some time it must form the standard work upon the subject."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The work is beautifully produced, and the hundreds of illustrations are in the highest style."—Daily Chronicle.

The HOLY GOSPELS. With Illustrations from the Old Masters of the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Centuries.

More than 300 works, dealing exclusively with the events of our Lord's life, have been chosen from among the greatest examples of the Italian, German, Flemish, and French Schools for the subject of these Illustrations. The Work contains 384 (imperial 4to) pages, and over 350 Illustrations, 48 of these being separate plates printed in two tints. Half bound, paste-grain roan, 47s. 6d.; whole bound, paste-grain roan, 56s.

"No more sumptuous edition of the Gospels has ever been produced in English, nor any that approaches this for wealth and beauty of illustrations."—Church Times.

"The pictures are, to all who can appreciate religious art, uncommonly beautiful."—Queen.

REFLECTED LIGHTS from CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI'S "The FACE of the DEEP." Selected and arranged by W. M. L. JAY. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in Red and Black on Hand-made Paper, buckram, top edge gilt, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

The FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

CHRISTINA GEORGINA ROSSETTI: an Apprecia- tion of the late. A Sermon by the late Right Rev. B. F. WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L. With a Preface by the Rev. Prebendary GLENDENNING NASH, M.A. With a Frontispiece of the Memorial Panels at Christ Church Woburn Square. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 4d.

The MESSAGE of PEACE, and other Christmas Sermons. By the late R. W. CHURCH, Dean of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, on hand-made Paper, top edge gilt, buckram boards, 2s 6d.; imitation crushed morocco, 7s. 6d.

EARLY CHURCH CLASSICS. A Homily of Clement of Alexandria, entitled "Who is the Rich Man that is being Saved?" By the Rev. P. MORDAUNT BARNARD. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

THOUGHTS by the WAY. By the Rev. F. C. Wood- HOUSE, M.A., Author of "The Life of the Soul in the World." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

A HANDY BOOK of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the late Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D. With an Appendix bringing the Book up to the End of 1900. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

"The volume is likely to make good its title of a 'handy book.'"—Times.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS: Studies of Non-Christian Religions. By ELIOT HOWARD. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Nine other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

A REVIEW of "CHRISTIAN SCIENCE." By MARGARET BENSON. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 2d.

STAR ATLAS. Containing Maps of all the Stars from 1 to 6·5 Magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and of all Nebulæ and Star Clusters in the same Region which are visible in Telescopes of moderate Powers. With Explanatory Text by Dr. HERMANN J. KLEIN. Translated by EDMUND McCLURE, M.A., M.R.I.A., F.L.S. With 18 Maps. Third Edition (R.A. and Dec. brought up to 1900 as far as Text is concerned), Revised and Enlarged. Imperial 4to, cloth boards, 10s.

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the Present Day. By EDMUND McCLURE, M.A., M.R.I.A., F.L.S. Containing 18 Coloured Maps, besides some 50 Sketch Maps in the Text. 4to, cloth boards, leather back, 16s.

"Both the readers of ancient Church history and of modern missionary records will find abundant materials in it for their assistance."—Guardian.

"A great deal of labour and sound scholarship has gone to the making of this Atlas."—Academy.

MATTER, ETHER, and MOTION: the Factors and Relations of Physical Science. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M. M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tufts College, U.S.A. English Edition, Edited by Prof. ALFRED LODGE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth boards, 5s.

"Every page shows that the author is alive to the far-reaching consequences and implications of modern science. Prof. Dolbear's pages are eminently readable, and his presentation of the philosophy of modern physics is lucid, interesting, exhaustive, and for the most part convincing."—Literature.

POISONOUS PLANTS in FIELD and GARDEN. By the Rev. Prof. G. HENSLOW, M.A., F.G.S., F.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN: Anglo-Saxon Britain. By the late GRANT ALLEN. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MANUALS of ELEMENTARY SCIENCE.—GEOLOGY. By the Rev. T. G. BONNEY, Sc.D., LL.D., F.G.S., &c. New and Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, 1s.

THE ROMANCE of SCIENCE.—SOUNDING the OCEAN of AIR. Being Six Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston in December, 1898, by A. LAWRENCE ROTCH, S.B., A.M. Small post 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of SCIENCE.—The MACHINERY of the UNIVERSE: Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tufts College, U.S.A. Small post 8vo, with several Diagrams, cloth boards, 2s.

THE CHEAPEST COMPREHENSIVE DICTIONARY IN THE WORLD.

THE S.P.C.K. ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY.

Consisting of 5,336 pages, Imperial 8vo,

Is the largest DICTIONARY published—over 200,000 words. It is an easier, simpler, handier Dictionary than any other, and is an ENCYCLOPÆDIA as well.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY.

Its comprehensiveness, and its wideness of range in point of time.

"The Encyclopædic Dictionary," by combining in one all these special Glossaries or Vocabularies, effects a double saving, an economy of time and of money.

Its richness and completeness of the illustrative quotations.

Its thoroughly encyclopædic character.

The large number and practical character of its illustrations.

The numerous pictorial illustrations, although eminently artistic in character, are in no sense mere embellishments, but in every case help to elucidate the text.

INVALUABLE FOR THE HOME, THE COLLEGE, AND THE SCHOOL.

In 7 vols. cloth, 25s.; half bound, 32s.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge have on Sale the Publications of the Arundel Society. The stock includes a large selection of superb Reproductions in Colours and Monochrome of Masterpieces by

GIOTTO.	GHIRLANDAIO.	VAN EYCK.
MASACCIO.	PERUGINO.	MEMLINC.
FRA ANGELICO.	MICHAEL ANGELO.	DURER.
BOTTICELLI.	RAFFAELLE.

And numerous other great Artists.

Hitherto these Publications have, on account of their price, been beyond the reach of persons of moderate means; many are now offered at much reduced prices. The stock is quickly approaching exhaustion, and these pictures, when out of print, are sure to increase in value.

With but few exceptions, these pictures deal with religious subjects.

A Catalogue may be had on application.

Digitized by Google

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

RALPH CONNOR'S NEW NOVEL.
A FIRST EDITION OF 10,000 COPIES. Now Ready. Price 6s.

THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY. The New long Novel by RALPH CONNOR, Author of "Black Rock" (Fifth Edition, 6s.) and "The Sky Pilot," (Seventh Edition, 6s.).

"Ralph Connor is everywhere in evidence in the story—the subtle wit, the pathos, the distinctly human touch that characterised the earlier works of the author—all are here, and, above all, one is impressed with the simple truthfulness but great strength of this wonderful story."

IAN MACLAREN'S GREAT SUCCESS.
SECOND EDITION, READY IN A FEW DAYS, Cloth, 6s.

YOUNG BARBARIANS. By IAN MACLAREN, Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." With 16 Full-page Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING.

"One of the very best books of the season."—Standard.
"Ian Maclaren has seldom done anything better—certainly he has never done anything more humorous—than the 'Young Barbarians.'"—The Times.
"Highly enjoyable. We have seldom seen a book more full of genuine irresistible fun."—Spectator.

A NOTABLE NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.
SECOND EDITION. Cloth, 6s.

THE POTTER AND THE CLAY. A Romance. By MAUD HOWARD PETERSON.

"'The Potter and the Clay' is a notable piece of work—a moving story—a fine study."—Punch.
"Destined for success."—The Academy.

JOSEPH HOCKING'S BEST BOOK.
EIGHTH THOUSAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

O'ER MOOR AND FEN. By JOSEPH HOCKING. With Eight Full-page Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING.

"A very good book. The illustrations are admirable."—St. James's Gazette.

MISS E. H. FOWLER'S CHARMING STORY.
SECOND EDITION. Now Ready. Price 6s.

THE WORLD AND WINSTOW. By EDITH HENRIETTA FOWLER.

"The novel is in all respects one of notable merit."—Scotsman.
"A pretty story. The interest of the pages increases as the story develops, and it can be read with pleasure and satisfaction to the end."—Birmingham Daily Post.

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH'S NEW NOVEL.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GREAT LOWLANDS. By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH (Mrs. Lee Hamilton).

"A strong story, vigorously told."—Glasgow Herald.
"It is enriched by a wealth and incident and by many genuinely humorous scenes and well-drawn sketches of character."—Manchester Guardian.

A REMARKABLE NOVEL, BY A NEW WRITER.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

KITTY FAIRHALL. By JOHN HALSHAM. Author of "Idlehurst," &c.

"We heartily recommend an exceptionally good novel."—Spectator.
"John Halsham is undoubtedly one of the greatest masters of style among us, a most charming, delicate, and accomplished writer."—The British Weekly

DAVID LYALL'S NEW BOOK.
Second Edition, 6s.

THE REDEMPTION OF NEIL MACLEAN. By DAVID LYALL, Author of "The Land o' the Leal."

"Pleasingly told, with many touches tender and true. The lesson which he draws at the end is an excellent one."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"A DAINTY DELIGHTFUL BOOK."
Bound in white vellum, pale blue ribbons. Price 6s.

THE BRIDE'S BOOK. By Mrs. E. T. COOK.

"It would have seemed almost impossible to write a six-shilling book all about love and marriage, without being either maudlin or depressing, but Mrs. Cook has done it. She has produced a book which is full of laughter and yet must be taken seriously."—Daily Chronicle.

A CLEVER NOVEL BY LESLIE KEITH.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PENANCE. A Novel. By LESLIE KEITH.

"There is good writing in 'Penance.' The story is well put together, and the characters move and talk naturally."—The Manchester Guardian.
"Leslie Keith is a fascinating novelist."—Vanity Fair.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO THE PRINCESS OF WALES.
Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

EDWARD THE EXILE. A Romance of History. By MARY M. DAVIDSON.

"The characters are well drawn, and the story well written."—Sketch.
"Is an exciting narrative, and is well worth reading."—Times.

ROSALINE MASSON'S NEW NOVEL.
Crown, 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

IN OUR TOWN. By ROSALINE MASSON. Author of "The Transgressors," &c.

"It is certainly a book which will be read with interest and a considerable amount of pleasure."—Scotsman.

DR. JOHN WATSON'S GREAT WORK.
With 16 Full-page Illustrations in Colours, by an Artist sent specially to Palestine for the work.
Royal 8vo, cloth, 25s. net.

THE LIFE OF THE MASTER. By Rev. JOHN WATSON, M.A, D.D.
Prospectus on application.

SECOND EDITION. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LETTERS ON LIFE. By CLAUDIUS CLEAR.

"Their driving alertness gives them a separate place in journalistic writing. . . . Illuminated by wide reading and the fruits of much good talk."—Academy.
"Shrewd, suggestive, kindly."—Illustrated London News.
"Claudius Clear's lay sermons may do the arm-chair reader as much good as the sermon preached in the pulpit."—Literature.

REV. HUGH BLACK'S NEW VOLUME.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CULTURE AND RESTRAINT. By Rev. HUGH BLACK, M.A., Edinburgh.

IAN MACLAREN says:—"From the first page to the last the book is thoroughly well informed, fair-minded in the highest degree, acute in criticism, and written with an engaging lucidity of style. It is also enriched and beautified by many apt quotations, and should be persuasive with all schools through its pervading human sympathy."

"Excellently edited."—ANDREW LANG, in the Morning Post.
In two handsome volumes, royal 8vo, 25s. net.

SIX SAINTS OF THE COVENANT: Peden, Semple, Wellwood, Cameron, Cargill, Smith. By PATRICK WALKER. Edited, with Illustrative Documents, Introduction, Notes and Glossary by D. HAY FLEMING, LL.D., with an Introduction by S. R. CROCKETT.

"The work is done in a style to defy criticism, for probably no other living man has the editor's extensive and peculiar knowledge of rare covenanting, books, tracts, and manuscripts. An exemplary piece of work. Patrick Walker, even without notes, is a most readable author, and with the notes his book is certainly indispensable to historical students. It is admirably printed on light paper, and has index, glossary, bibliography and a foreword by Mr. S. R. CROCKETT."—Athenæum.

His Grace the DUKE OF ARGYLL.
Imp. 8vo, cloth gilt, 8s.

A GIFT BOOK FOR THE HOME. Poems by his Grace the DUKE OF ARGYLL, K.T. With numerous Illustrations from the Old Masters, &c.

MAGNIFICENT ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

RELIGION IN RECENT ART. By P. T. FORSYTH, D.D. With Illustrations reproduced from pictures by Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, and Rosetti.

"The writer has in view chiefly the religious significance of our contemporary art; he prizes art chiefly as it can speak to the soul. This work is an attempt to bring home to the lay mind that spiritual interest in the great subject-matter art, which must in the long run constitute the basis of the appeal to mankind at large."

FRANK T. BULLEN'S NEW BOOK.
Ready on Monday. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE APOSTLES OF THE SOUTH-EAST. By FRANK T. BULLEN, Author of "With Christ at Sea." (Seventh Edition, 6s.)

CHRIST AND RECENT CRITICISM. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION. Christ and Recent Criticism. By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D. [Ready in a few days.

PROFESSOR BLAIKIE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.
With Portrait, price 6s., cloth.

WILLIAM GARDEN BLAIKIE. An Autobiography. Recollections of a Busy Life. Edited, with an Introduction, by NORMAN L. WALKER, D.D.

REV. J. H. JOWETT'S NEW VOLUME.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

APOSTOLIC OPTIMISM, and Other Sermons. By Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A., Birmingham.

"The volume is a great refreshment. As we breathe its bracing air, and take in its great horizons, we realise afresh the greatness of the pulpit's mission when adequately conceived; the infinite importance both to individual and to national life of the message the true preacher has to bring."—The Christian World.

A STRIKING CONTRIBUTION TO RELIGIOUS HISTORY.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A HISTORY OF THE PLYMOUTH BRETHREN. By W. BLAIR NEATBY, M.A.

"This carefully prepared and well written book will deeply interest a large circle of readers."—The Scotsman.

THE BEST GUIDE TO CHRISTMAS BOOKS

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF THE BOOKMAN | CONTAINING NOTICES AND REVIEWS OF NEARLY 350 NEW BOOKS | 150 ILLUSTRATIONS | 136 PAGES.

NOW READY IN TWO COLOUR ART WRAPPER 1/- NET.

THIS NUMBER ALSO CONTAINS A PRESENTATION PORTFOLIO WITH SEPARATE PLATE PORTRAITS OF SCOTT, DICKENS, and THACKERAY.

London: HODDER & HOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Digitized by Google

GAY & BIRD'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Obtainable at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

A CATHEDRAL COURTSHIP.
By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN.
New Edition Revised, with more than 5,000 words new matter added, and with 6 Full-page Illustrations by CHARLES E. BROCK.
Crown 8vo, full gilt side, and gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

OUR HOUSEBOAT ON THE NILE. By Lee Bacon.
Crown 8vo, with coloured Frontispiece and 12 Full-page Half-tone Illustrations by HENRY BACON. Cloth gilt, with attractive Side Design, 7s. 6d. net.
A delightfully graphic account of a holiday spent on a houseboat, starting six miles above Assouan, and extending some hundred miles up the River Nile.

THE FIRESIDE SPHINX. A Book about Cats.
By AGNES REPPLIER.
Author of "Essays in Idleness," "Points of View," &c., &c.
Crown 8vo, with 4 Full-page and 17 Text Illustrations by Miss E. BONSALL, handsomely bound, 7s. 6d. net.

ROME. By C. E. Clement.
Author of "Venice, the Queen of the Adriatic," "Constantinople, the City of the Sultans," and "Naples and its Environs."
Two vols. demy 8vo, with 20 Photogravures and nearly 300 Text and other Illustrations, richly bound and gilt, with cloth slip wrapper, and enclosed in cloth box, 25s. net.

TUDOR AND STUART LOVE SONGS.
Collected and Edited by J. POTTER BRISCOE, F.R.H.S.
Post 8vo. Ordinary Edition, cloth, 5s. net.
Hand-made Paper Edition, limited to 250 numbered Copies, 7s. 6d. net.

THE RAVEN. By Edgar Allan Poe.
Text, Initials, and Borders drawn by T. R. R. P. Size 6¾ in. by 9 in.; tastefully printed in red and black, on hand-made paper. 3s. 6d. net. (50 Copies on Vellum, 10s. 6d. net.)

THE LOTUS EATERS. By Lord Tennyson.
Text, Initials, and Borders by T. R. R. P., uniform in "get-up" with the above. 3s. 6d. net. (50 Copies on Vellum, 10s. 6d. net.)

POEMS OF PASSION.
By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
Only Authorised English Edition, with many additional Poems.
Large crown 8vo, printed on Hand-made paper, cloth gilt, 6s. net each.
POEMS OF PLEASURE.

London: GAY & BIRD, 22, Bedford Street, Strand, W.C.
AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.
LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.
London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S.
Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.
Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.
THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON & ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.
With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRETANO'S.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK.
SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

2% CURRENT ACCOUNTS. 2%
on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
2½% DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS 2½% on Deposits repayable on demand.
STOCKS AND SHARES.
Stocks and Shares Purchased and Sold for Customers.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.
Telephone, No. 5, Holborn.
Telegraphic Address, "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

J. NISBET & CO.'S LIST.

ROBESPIERRE. A Study and Biography. By HILAIRE BELLOC, late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Author of "Danton," "Paris," &c. Demy 8vo, 16s.
"We greet Mr. Belloc as a rising star in the world of letters."—Literature.

UNSTORIED IN HISTORY. Portraits of some Famous Women of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. By GABRIELLE FESTING, Author of "J. H. Frere and His Friends." Extra crown 8vo, 6s.
"It is a book you will read to the last word and thank the writer."—Academy.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES. By Anthony Hope. A New Series and a New Issue, with Eight Illustrations by HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES. A Special Presentation Edition, beautifully printed on large paper, with 18 Illustrations by Mr. CHRISTY. Handsomely bound in gold. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

LORD ROBERTS. A Life for Boys. By Violet BROOKE-HUNT. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, price 6s.
"It is so well written that history reads like a romance."—Literary World.
"The life story of Earl Roberts, at once stranger and more fascinating than fiction, must appeal forcibly to youthful imaginations."—Lady.

WITH CUTLASS AND TORCH. A Story of Adventure for Boys. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N. Price 5s.
"Lovers of adventure and hairbreadth escapes cannot do better than take up 'Cutlass and Torch.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE STORY of LITTLE BLACK MINGO: A Coloured Book for Children. By the Author of "The Story of Little Black Sambo." In decorative cloth binding, super-royal 32mo, 1s. 6d.
"The text is irresistibly funny, and the illustrations—all coloured—are to match."—Glasgow Herald.

JAMES NISBET & CO. (LTD.), 21, Berners Street, London, W.

SANDS & CO.'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

IN SICILY. By DOUGLAS SLADEN. This work contains an exhaustive and interesting description of the various Ruined Palaces, Temples, &c., to be seen in the country, with the most reliable information to be obtained on all matters concerning the inhabitants, customs, and architecture of present or ancient times. It contains Maps and over 300 Illustrations, including 13 Plates from Oil Paintings specially executed for the work by Miss MARGARET THOMAS, and many reproductions of old Engravings taken from prints out of works now practically unprocurable. The standard work on Sicily. In 2 vols. 4to, 3 guineas net.

GABRIELE ROSSETTI: A versified Autobiography translated and supplemented by WILLIAM MICHAEL ROSSETTI. Containing several Illustrations of universal interest, and much hitherto unpublished information about the childhood of Dante Gabriele Rossetti, and Christina Rossetti. Printed on Hand-Made Paper. Limited to 1,000 copies. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE DANGERS OF SPIRITUALISM. By a Member of the Society for Physical Research. Containing several unique Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY-THE-WAY BALLADS. By E. SAPTE, Jun., Illustrated by J. Hassall and F. Reynolds. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW 6s. NOVELS.

PETER A PARASITE. By E. M. ALBANESI, Author of "The Blunder of an Innocent."

CONCERNING SOME FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY. By NEWTON SANDARS.
"A good story, told with skill."—Outlook.

JUVENILE AND OTHER ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

A NAVAL A B C. By JOHN HASSALL. In Colour. Crown 4to, 3s. 6d.
"The figures are spirited and boldly drawn."—Athenæum.

A PANTOMIME A B C. By ROLAND CARSE. Illustrated by JOHN HASSALL. In Colour. Crown 4to, 6s.

TEN LITTLE PUPPY DOGS. By CECIL ALDIN. Oblong 4to, 2s. 6d.

SHIPS. By H. SEPPINGS WRIGHT. 4to, 2s. 6d.

CATS. By LOUIS WAIN. 4to, 2s. 6d.
"A capital volume, admirably illustrated from cover to cover."—The Queen.

THE BRAVE OLD DUKE OF YORK. In colour, 4to, 2s. 6d.
"Full of humour and comicality."—Daily Graphic.

LONDON: 12, Burleigh Street, Strand.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. BELL'S Illustrated Books.

Illustrated Christmas List post-free on Application.

Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

HUBERT VON HERKOMER, R.A.

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

By A. L. BALDRY.

With 16 Photogravure Plates and about 100 other Illustrations. With Binding designed by Professor von Herkomer.

Crown folio, £5 5s. net.

ANTHONY VAN DYCK. Historical Study of his Life and Works. By LIONEL CUST, M.V.O., F.S.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery, London; Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts at Antwerp; Chevalier of the Order of Leopold. With 61 Photogravure Plates and 20 Collotype and other Reproductions from Drawings and Etchings. With Binding designed by Laurence Housman.

Small folio, £2 2s. net.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. An Illustrated Chronicle of his Art and Life. By H. C. MARILLIER. Second Edition, Abridged and Revised, with 15 Photogravure Plates and 100 other Illustrations. With Binding designed by Christopher Dean.

Small 4to, 12s. 6d. net.

FRA FILIPPO LIPPI. By EDWARD C. STRUTT. With four Photogravure Plates and 52 other Illustrations. With Binding designed by Christopher Dean.

Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

THE STUDY AND CRITICISM OF ITALIAN ART. By BERNHARD BERENSON. With 42 Illustrations.

Small 4to, 15s. net.

LORENZO LOTTO: An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. By BERNHARD BERENSON. Second Edition, Revised. With 64 Illustrations, including many Pictures which have never before been reproduced.

Vol. I. Small 4to, £1 1s. net.

THE TOWER OF LONDON. In Norman, Plantagenet, and Tudor Times. By Lord RONALD SUTHERLAND-GOWER, F.S.A. With 38 Photogravures and 16 Half-tone Illustrations. Vol. II. in the Press.

Small 4to, 14s. net.

LIVES AND LEGENDS OF THE EVANGELISTS, APOSTLES, AND OTHER EARLY SAINTS. By Mrs. ARTHUR BELL. With 49 Illustrations, including a Photogravure Frontispiece.

THE BRITISH ARTISTS SERIES.

Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each.

THE ENGLISH PRE-RAPHAELITE PAINTERS: Their Associates and Successors. By PERCY BATE. With upwards of 100 Illustrations and 2 Photogravure Plates. Second and Cheaper Edition. With many New Illustrations.

FREDERIC, LORD LEIGHTON, P.R.A. An Illustrated Chronicle by ERNEST RHYS. With 80 Reproductions from Leighton's Pictures, including 2 Photogravure Plates. Fourth Edition.

SIR J. E. MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.: His Art and Influence. By A. LYS BALDRY. Illustrated with 89 Reproductions in Half-tone and 2 Photogravure Plates. Second Edition.

SIR EDWARD BURNE-JONES, Bart.: A Record and Review. By MALCOLM BELL. Eighth Edition, with 100 Illustrations.

Imperial 8vo, 28s. net.

FRENCH DECORATION AND FURNITURE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LADY DILKE. With 16 Photogravure Plates and 56 Half-tone Illustrations.

Imperial 8vo, 28s. net.

FRENCH PAINTERS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LADY DILKE. With 12 Photogravure Plates and 64 Half-tone Illustrations, containing a number of Pictures never before reproduced

Imperial 8vo, 28s. net.

FRENCH ARCHITECTS AND SCULPTORS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LADY DILKE. With 20 Photogravure Plates and 29 Half-tone Reproductions.

Small colombier 8vo, 25s. net.

REMBRANDT VAN RIJN AND HIS WORK. By MALCOLM BELL. With 8 Photogravure Plates and 72 other Illustrations. The Binding designed by the late Gleeson White.

Imperial 8vo, 25s. net.

WILLIAM MORRIS: His Art, his Writings, and His Public Life. By AYMER VALLANCE, M.A., F.S.A. With 60 Illustrations, including a Coloured Plate and Portrait.

Small colombier 8vo, 25s. net.

THOMAS GAINSBOROUGH: His Life and Works. By Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'Anvers). With 58 Illustrations in Photogravure and Half-tone. Binding by Gleeson White.

Large post 8vo, 6s.

SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES. Characteristics of Women. By Mrs. JAMESON. Illustrated with 25 Collotype Reproductions of Portraits of Celebrated Actresses in the various characters, and Photogravure Frontispiece, Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, by John Sargent, R.A.

THE ENDYMION SERIES.

POEMS BY ROBERT BROWNING. Illustrated and Decorated by BYAM SHAW. With an Introduction by RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D. C.B. Second Edition, revised, post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POEMS BY JOHN KEATS. Illustrated and Decorated by ROBERT ANNING BELL. With an Introduction by Professor WALTER RALEIGH, M.A. Second Edition, with several New Illustrations, Third Edition, post 8vo, 7s. 6d,

THE POEMS OF EDGAR ALLAN POE. Illustrated and Decorated by W. HEATH ROBINSON. With an Introduction by H. NOEL WILLIAMS. Post 8vo, 6s.

MILTON'S MINOR POEMS (including Samson Agonistes and Comus). Illustrated by ALFRED GARTH JONES. Post 8vo, 6s.

ENGLISH LYRICS, from Spenser to Milton. Illustrated by R. ANNING BELL. With an Introduction by JOHN DENNIS. Post 8vo, 6s.

THE GREAT MASTERS IN PAINTING AND SCULPTURE.

Edited by G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. New Volumes, with 40 Illustrations and Photogravure Frontispiece. Post 8vo, 5s. net each.

FRANCIA. By G. C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.
BRUNELLESCHI. By LEADER SCOTT.
MANTEGNA. By MAUD CRUTTWELL.
REMBRANDT. By MALCOLM BELL.

Others to follow.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF PAINTERS.

A New Series, designed mainly to help those who, without the opportunity of going deeply into the study of Art, yet wish to be able to take an intelligent interest in the works of the Great Masters. Each volume contains a short sketch of the artist's life; an essay on his art; a list of his chief pictures, &c. Pott 8vo, cloth, with 8 Illustrations, 1s. net each; or in limp leather, 2s. net.

BURNE-JONES. | FRA ANGELICO. | GEORGE ROMNEY.
VELAZQUEZ. | G. F. WATTS, R.A. | WATTEAU.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

Digitized by Google

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

In square crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, and fully Illustrated. 6s. net.

IN A MINSTER GARDEN. A Causerie of the Old Time and the New. By the DEAN OF ELY. With many quaint and picturesque Illustrations of the Nooks and Corners of Ely Cathedral and its surroundings.

In crown 4to, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, Illustrated. 15s. net.

A HISTORY OF READING ABBEY. By JAMIESON B. HURRY, M.A., M.D., St. John's College, Cambridge. Illustrated by many Views, Plans, and Facsimilies.

In demy 8vo, handsomely bound in ilt-lettered cloth, and illustrated, 7s. 6d.

EWENNY PRIORY: Monastery and Fortress. By Colonel J. P. TURBERVILL.

A NEW PIECE OF PICKWICKIAN COMMENTARY.
In 8vo, tastefully printed, cloth, 6s.

BARDELL v. PICKWICK. The Trial for Breach of Promise of Marriage held at the Guildhall Sittings, on April 1st, 1828, before Mr. Justice Stareleigh and a Special Jury of the City of London. By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A., F.S.A., Barrister-at-law, and sometime Crown Prosecutor on the North-East Circuit (Ireland).

"Mr. Fitzgerald has certainly added much that is fresh to our view of this celebrated case, and his vivacious commentaries cannot but increase the interest which it continues to create, whilst the light it throws upon the customs of the court of the period makes this edition of permanent value to the student."—Daily Mercury.

NEW WORK BY AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. UNIFORM WITH "OBITER DICTA."
In fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MISCELLANIES. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, K.C., Honorary Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

"Eminently agreeable and readable."—Globe.

"Each paper is the expression of a thoughtful, cheerful, humorous, and stimulating mind."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Birrell's charm lies in his splendid sanity, his geniality, his sense of humour, his love of common humanity, his fine scorn of cant, his genuine delight in good books, and his knack of polishing off literary essays which combine daintiness of style with virility of mind."—Literary World.

In crown 8vo, cloth, with Map, 3s. 6d.

TRAVELLING IMPRESSIONS IN, AND NOTES ON, PERU. By FELIX SEEBEE.

"We really get a very lively impression of what travel in Peru means."
—Spectator.

"From these travel sketches one gathers a good idea of South American life as it is to be seen on the slopes of the gigantic Andes."—Dundee Advertiser.

SECOND EDITION. In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH: A View from Within. By STEPHEN SMITH, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, England.

"Temperately written. A record which bears on its face the impress of truth, in plain and unembellished language, of what the author has himself seen."
—United Service Gazette

CHEAP EDITION. In large 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, 5s.

THE DUAL LAND. Being a Collection of Verses from Many Sources for the Great Family of those who have been, who are, and who may be Bereaved.

"A great storehouse of high-class poetry on the subject of bereavement."
—Literary World

"The compilers's work has been done with judgment and taste, and a large range of literature has been utilised for the purpose in view."—Spectator.

"A volume which will be vastly acceptable to many a pensive and poetical soul whose life experience has met with bereavements."—Church Gazette.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.
In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; half-bound morocco, gilt edges, 6s.

POEMS. By JOHN FARMER.

"The book has a simple, quiet charm of its own that may well win for it the admiration of any sympathetic reader."—Scotsman.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

A BOOK OF VERSES. By Mrs. JAMES GLENNY WILSON, Author of "Themes and Variations," "Alice Landor," "Two Summers," &c.

"Marked by much eloquence and a true measure of fancy. Minor verse of unusual excellence."—Academy.

In paper cover, price 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

POEMS. By JOHN LLOYD.

"The poems have a thoughtful and benevolent end in view; they reveal a genuine love of mankind, of nature, and deep sympathy with the poor and the hardworking of our race."—Bristol Daily Mercury.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

POEMS OF THE RACE. By MARSTON RUDLAND.

"We are very glad to have Mr. Rudland's Poems in a more permanent form than that in which they have hitherto been published. He is a graceful and cultured writer. It is gratifying in these days to meet with a young poet so unhackneyed in style, and we trust Mr. Rudland's effort will not lack wide and genuine appreciation."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST.

GOOD BOOKS FOR PRESENTS.

MR. GORDON BROWNE'S NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOK.
NOW READY.

Fairy Tales from Hans Andersen.

Introduction by EDWARD CLODD,
And numerous Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE, R.I.

Uniform with "Grimm's Fairy Tales," &c. Large crown 8vo, extra cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

IN THE PRESS.

The Fairchild Family.

By Mrs. SHERWOOD.
Revised, with Introduction, by MARY E. PALGRAVE,
And numerous Illustrations by F. M. RUDLAND.

Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, fancy cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

BEING THE NEW ADDITIONS TO

DARTON'S SIX-SHILLING SERIES OF FINE ART GIFT-BOOKS.

Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top, Illustrated in the best style, and printed on superfine paper, handsomely bound in calf. 10s. 6d. net.

Stories from the Faerie Queene.

By MARY MACLEOD. Introduction by Professor HALES. Numerous Illustrations by A. G. WALKER, Sculptor.

The Book of King Arthur and his Noble Knights.

Stories from Sir THOMAS MALORY'S "Morte Darthur" by MARY MACLEOD. Introduction by Professor HALES. With Illustrations from Drawings by A. G. WALKER, Sculptor.

"Truly beautiful. One of the most excellent gift-books of the year."
—Literature.

Sweetheart Travellers.

A Child's Book for Children, for Women and for Men. By S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE, R.I.

Sintram and his Companions, and Undine.

Introduction by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE.

Grimm's Fairy Tales.

Introduction by S. BARING-GOULD, M.A. Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE, R.I.

"No more acceptable edition of some of Grimm's stories has been published."
—Standard.

AN IMPORTANT ADDITION TO THE STUDY OF BIRD LIFE BY A WELL-KNOWN WRITER.

Wonders of the Bird World.

By Dr. R. BOWDLER SHARPE. With numerous illustrations by A. T. ELWES.

The Surprising Adventures of Sir Toady Lion, with those of General Napoleon Smith.

By S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE, R.I.

Stories from Froissart.

By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of "Admirals All," &c. Illustrated by GORDON BROWN, R.I.

"No better book could be chosen to teach a boy some of the noblest years in our 'rough-and-tumble island story,' and it could hardly have been presented in a better form."—St. James's Gazette.

National Rhymes of the Nursery.

With introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Numerous Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE, R.I. Second Edition, with Additional Rhymes and Illustrations.

"The prettiest and most complete collection we have seen."
—Westminster Gazette.

The White Stone.

The Story of a Boy from the Bush. By H. C. MACILWAINE. Illustrations by G. D. ROWLANDSON.

"No school library should be without 'The White Stone,' and no boy reader of its pages will gain other than good from his acquaintance with Rowley's sorrows and triumphs. A healthier story it would be difficult to find."
—Church Times.

Prince Boohoo and Little Smuts.

By the Rev. HARRY JONES, M.A. Abundant humorous Illustrations from Drawings by GORDON BROWNE, R.I.

"Really good nonsense, not at all copied from Mr. Lewis Carroll."—Spectator.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON AND Co., London.

Digitized by Google

WM. BLACKWOOD & SONS'

BOOKS FOR PRESENTATION.

THIRD IMPRESSION NOW READY.

WORDS by an EYEWITNESS: The Struggle in Natal. By "Linesman." Crown 8vo, 6s.

ON MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, WILL BE PUBLISHED.

SEPOY GENERALS: Wellington to Roberts. By G. W. FORREST, C.I.E., Ex-Director of Records, Government of India. With Nine Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

HAUD IMMEMOR. Reminiscences of Legal and Social Life in Edinburgh and London, 1850–1900. By CHARLES STEWART. With 10 Photogravure Plates. Royal 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEXT WEEK WILL BE PUBLISHED

HOW WE ESCAPED FROM PRETORIA. By Captain AYLMER HALDANE, D.S.O. New Edition, revised and enlarged. With numerous Illustrations, Plans, and Map. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CALENDAR OF EMPIRE: A Tribute to Lives, Deeds, and Words that have Gained Glory for Great and Greater Britain. By IAN MALCOLM, M.P. Small square 8vo, vellum covers, 5s. net. Large Paper Edition, 15s. net.

HURRAH FOR THE LIFE OF A SAILOR! By Admiral Sir WILLIAM KENNEDY, K.C.B. With numerous illustrations. Sixth and Cheaper Edition. Small demy 8vo, 6s.

HELENA FAUCIT (Lady Martin). By Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B., K.C.V.O. With Five Photogravure Plates. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS. By HELENA FAUCIT (Lady MARTIN). With a Portrait by LEHMANN. Sixth Edition. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A PALACE OF DREAMS, and other Verse. By ADA BARTRICK BAKER. Crown 8vo, 5s.

FLOWERS OF THE CAVE. Edited by LAURIE MAGNUS, M.A., and CECIL HEADLAM, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

PRAYERS FROM THE POETS: A Calendar of Devotion. By the same. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

SONGS OF THE GLENS OF ANTRIM. By MOIRA O'NEILL. Sixth Impression. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FRENCH COOKERY for ENGLISH HOMES. Third Impression. Crown 8vo. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; leather, 3s.

HORACE IN HOMESPUN. By Hugh Hali- BURTON. With 26 Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Printed on hand-made paper. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

MODERN ENGLISH WRITERS.

In crown 8vo volumes, tastefully bound, 2s. 6d. each.

TENNYSON. By Andrew Lang. Second Edition.
RUSKIN. By Mrs. Meynell. Third Edition.
STEVENSON. By L. C. Cornford. Second Edition.
ARNOLD. By Prof. Saintsbury. Second Edition.

 Other volumes to follow.

GEORGE ELIOT.

LIBRARY EDITION, in 10 volumes, gilt top, demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net each. With Photogravure Frontispieces, from Drawings by WILLIAM HATHERELL, R.I., EDGAR BUNDY, R.I., BYAM SHAW, R.I., CLAUDE A. SHEPPERSON, R.I., A. A. VAN ANROOY, E. J SULLIVAN, MAX COWPER, and MAURICE GREIFFENHAGEN.

WARWICK EDITION, in 12 volumes, 4 by 6½.
CLOTH limp, gilt top, 2s. net per volume.
IMITATION LEATHER, limp, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net per volume.
LEATHER limp, gilt top, with book-marker, 3s. net per volume.
Half vellum, cloth sides, gilt top, 3s. 6d. net per volume.

 To be had in various styles of extra Bindings for presentation.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh & London.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE WORKS OF THOMAS KYD. Edited from the Original Texts, with Introductions, Notes, and Facsimiles, by FREDERICK S. BOAS, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 15s. net.

Academy.—"All students of Elizabethan drama owe a debt of gratitude to Professor Boas for this volume. . . . In regard to the study of Kyd, indeed, it would be hardly an exaggeration to call this an epoch-making edition."

KING HORN. A Romance of the Thirteenth Century. Edited from the Manuscripts by JOSEPH HALL, M.A. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. (Uniform with the Library Editions of Chaucer and Gower.)

Saturday Review.—"Mr. Hall has performed his task with an accuracy and thoroughness which fairly entitle him to the highest praise an editor can receive, he has produced an edition which can never be superseded, and which must render any other a mere work of supererogation."

THE Complete WORKS of JOHN GOWER. Edited from the Manuscripts, with Introductions, Notes, and Glossaries, by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. In Four Volumes, 8vo, buckram. Vol. I.—The French Works, with a facsimile, 16s. Vols. II and III.—The English Works, with a facsimile, 16s. each.

Athenæum.—"The publication of Gower's complete works is a service rendered to English literature and philology, exceeded only in importance by the issue of the New English Dictionary. If through Chaucer our literature becomes the heir of mediæval romance, Gower shows us more clearly our language in the making. . . . An important result of Mr. Macaulay's study is to establish the fact that Gower superintended the preparation of the manuscripts of his work, so that we are in a position to say what Gower actually wrote, which we cannot do in Chaucer's case."

The POETICAL WORKS of JOHN MILTON. Edited, after the Original Texts, by the Rev. H.C. BEECHING, M.A. With two collotypes of handwriting, and nine facsimile title pages. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MILTON'S PROSODY. By Robert Bridges, and CLASSICAL METRES IN ENGLISH VERSE, by W. JOHNSON STONE, M.A., with Indexes of Subjects, Names, and Words. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net, also a limited number of copies, bound in parchment, half-circuit, signed by Mr. Bridges, 10s. 6d. net.

The OXFORD BOOK of ENGLISH VERSE. 1250–1900. Chosen and Edited by A. T. QUILLER-COUCH. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.; fcap. 8vo, on Oxford India paper, third impression, cloth extra, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

NOTES ON ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY. Chiefly reprinted from the Transactions of the Philological Society. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt. D. Crown 8vo, cloth, with a Portrait of the Author, 8s. 6d. net.

Academy.—"We could not desire a more filling and entertaining book than this. The entertainment it offers is of a high order. To profound scholarship exercised on the words of every-day life are added the humour, the enterprise, and the straight-hitting of that scholarship. The result is delightful."

STUDIES IN HISTORY AND JURISPRU- DENCE. By the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, D.C.L. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s. net. [Shortly.

A STUDY OF THE ETHICS OF SPINOZA (Ethica Ordine Geometrico Demonstrata). By HAROLD H. JOACHIM. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

Academy.—"Mr. Joachim is a welcome addition to the more than respectable list of English commentators on Spinoza. His exposition of the Ethics is admirably lucid, and the argument is copiously illustrated from Spinoza's other writings. If the root of right understanding is sympathy, then Mr. Joachim is well qualified to be Spinoza's interpreter. In a book of exceptionally even merit, the psychological exposition and the treatment of the problem of personality may perhaps be singled out for especial praise."

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

SELECTIONS from the ENGLISH POETS. By Professor ARBER. An Illustrated Edition of "BRITISH ANTHOLOGIES," containing upwards of 60 authentic portraits. In ten volumes, each of which can be obtained separately. Cloth, with special design, 3s. 6d. per volume.

THE OXFORD CHAUCER. The complete works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Edited, from numerous manuscripts, by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT. Litt.D. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top, 3s. 6d. On Oxford India paper, cloth extra, gilt top, 8s.

Academy.—"This is, indeed, a Chaucer not only praiseworthy for what it has, but what it has not. It is entirely unsuperfluous. If ever Chaucer can be popularised, this edition should do it."

THE OXFORD BROWNING. The Dramatic Lyrics and Romances and other Poems of ROBERT BROWNING. Miniature Edition, in One Volume, printed on Oxford India paper, 32mo, 3s. 6d.

Glasgow Herald.—"The tiny volume is daintily got up, and is admirably representative of the poet's works, including even his latest lines, the epilogue to Asolando."

ANTHOLOGY OF FRENCH POETRY, 10th to 19th CENTURIES. Translated by HENRY CARRINGTON, M.A., Dean of Bocking. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Literature.—"A very choice selection of lyrical as opposed to dramatic poetry. . . . The translations are careful and true to the metre of the originals. The rendering of some of Ronsard's sonnets is a veritable tour de force.

THE OXFORD INDIA PAPER DICKENS. A complete copyright Edition, in Seventeen Volumes. With original Illustrations. Issued in conjunction with Messrs. Chapman and Hall, the owners of the copyright. The first six volumes are now ready. In cloth, 2s. 6d. net per volume. In leather, 3s. 6d. net per volume.

Sphere (C. K. S.)—"It is an achievement to print the whole of Dickens's works in seventeen volumes in such splendid type as this edition affords, and it is one further tribute to the magic of the Oxford India paper."

A DICTIONARY of ENGLISH and WELSH SURNAMES, with Special American Instances. By the late CHARLES WAREING BARDSLEY, M.A., late Honorary Canon of Carlisle Cathedral. With a Preface by the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF CARLISLE. Small 4to, cloth, £1 1s. net.

Athenæum.—"This substantial volume is a contribution of extraordinary value to the study of family names. . . . His prolonged and laborious study of the subject had secured him a perhaps unrivalled command of the analogies of signification in English surnames; and he had the combination of acuteness and sobriety of judgment which in investigations of this kind is often more important than linguistic scholarship."

List of New and Recent Books post free on application.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

Digitized by Google

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO.

Books for Christmas Presents.

THE VICTORIAN ANTHOLOGY.

Edited by the Right Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART GRANT DUFF
Late Governor of the Madras Presidency.

With Introductions and Notes.

This important work, which will be issued as a small demy 8vo volume of about 600 pages, with a Decorative Title-Page and Binding by Miss Janet Robertson, will be READY VERY SHORTLY. Price 7s. 6d. Also in Leather Bindings.

CHIVALRY. By F. Warre Cornish, M.A., Vice-
Provost of Eton. 4s. 6d.

"Quite the best popular account of this important aspect of mediæval life. The illustrations are excellently chosen and well reproduced."—Manchester Guardian.

A CHARMING PRESENT FOR A GIRL.

GIRLS' CHRISTIAN NAMES. By Helena Swan.
Printed throughout in red and black, and tastefully bound in decorated linen. Small 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"A very interesting little volume, containing a great amount of information, collected with no small pains and research. The etymology of the name, its variants and derivatives, sometimes not a little remote, its use, historical associations, &c., make up an interesting account under each name."—Spectator.

"An absorbing little book, full of surprises. Miss Swan's keen eye has traced the names of girls to their uttermost sources."—Bookman.

"Full of interesting information."—Athenæum.

FOR A PUBLIC SCHOOLBOY.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS. By J. C. G. Minchin. 6s.
(Charterhouse, Eton, Harrow, Merchant Taylors', Rugby, St. Paul's, Westminster, Winchester.)

"There is abundance of room for the present book, which relates a great amount of interesting traditional lore about the schools. The book is filled with most interesting reading.—Glasgow Herald.

"The eight great public schools are here very adequately and graphically written of."—Bookman.

SUITABLE FOR EVERYBODY.

DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS. By Colonel Dalbiac and T. B. HARBOTTLE. 3 vols. Each, 7s. 6d. English, 7s. 6d.; Greek and Latin (with translations), 7s. 6d.; French and Italian (with translations), 7s. 6d. The whole forms a very handsome set of books, small demy 8vo, each 500-650 pp., fully indexed, in cloth gilt, extra.

IMPORTANT WORKS BY CHARLES A. MERCIER,
M.B., M.R.C.P., F.R.C.S., Lecturer on Insanity at the Westminster Hospital.

(1) PSYCHOLOGY: Normal and Morbid. Pp. xvi-518. 15s.

"Dr. Mercier's masters in philosophy are apparently Mill and Spenser, and he resembles them in the fluency and clearness of his expository style, while there is a greater freshness and breeziness in illustration."—Scotsman.

(2) TEXT-BOOK of INSANITY. [In the Press.

The ETHICAL PHILOSOPHY of SIDGWICK: an Introduction to the "Methods of Ethics." By F. H. HAYWARD, M.A., B.Sc. 4s. 6d.

"The neophyte will find in this little book just what he needs, succinct exposition, the unravelling of apparent inconsistencies and the various lines of arguments drawn together to a point.—Scotsman.

The ADVERSARIES of the SKEPTIC; or, the Specious Present. A New Inquiry into Human Knowledge. By ALFRED HODDER, Ph.D. 6s.

"Brilliant, and much of its doctrine is timely and wholesome."—Critical Review.

"This is a courageous and vigorous book, and well deserves the attention of students of philosophy."—Oxford Magazine.

PUBLIC HOUSE REFORM. By A. N. Cumming.
Dedicated to EARL GREY. 2s. 6d. A sketch of the History and Principles of the Proposed Reform, with a critical account of the various points of view from which it has been attacked, and summary of progress made. Appendix gives documents.

THREE NEW NOVELS.

LORD DUNCHESTER; or, the End of Dr. Therne.
An Autobiography. By Lieut.-General PHELPS. 2s. 6d.

PRINCE BARBER and his WIVES. By W. St. Clair. 6s.

"Tales of native Indian life, giving evidence of first-hand knowledge. The writer possesses imagination in no small degree."—Bookman.

"It is long since we have read any tales more instinct with the naif spirit of the Eastern story-teller."—Times of India.

The MANSE GATE. By Tubalcain. 6s.

"It is alive from the first line to the last. We wish it were already in the sixpenny edition, for we hail it as one of the first fluttering forerunners of the crusade that is to fill the years of our new century."—Young Man.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

MR. JOHN LONG'S NEW BOOKS.

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE CURSE OF EDEN. By the Author of "The Master Sinner."

Large Second Edition at Press.

The Westminster Gazette.—"Instead of Angel Clare ('Tess of the D'Urbervilles') and his false code of honour, one law for the man and another for the woman, here is the picture of the strong man who can probe the depths of human weakness, and, understanding all, forgive all. Mr. Thomas Hardy was no doubt right in suggesting that Angel Clare was the common type, and although many attempts have been made to give the reverse side of the picture, very few of them have been at all convincing. The author of 'The Curse of Eden' has succeeded in a task at which even cleverer writers have failed. He has presented a very real character study of the opposite type to Angel Clare. The present case, indeed, is a much stronger one. Muriel Temple is not, like Tess, a mere child in the ways of the world. . . . Muriel Temple is a very real person. In parts quite brilliant is 'The Curse of Eden.'"

THIRD EDITION IN THE PRESS.

BARBARA WEST. By KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN.

Literature.—"It is long since we have had the good fortune to chance upon a book so convincing and so capable."

Daily News.—"One of the most completely convincing heroines we have yet encountered in fiction."

Literary World.—"A really absorbing novel, remarkable for the extreme delicacy of its tone, its insight, its humour, its tender pathos."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A clever tale, a book of brilliant parts."

By the Author of "THE STORY OF A PENITENT SOUL."

THE MISSION OF MARGARET. By ADELINE SERGEANT. [This Day.

SECOND EDITION.

THE REAL CHRISTIAN. By LUCAS CLEEVE. Author of "Plato's Handmaiden," &c.

The Rock.—"It is powerful, very powerful; it is thoughtful; it is utterly sad. The influence of Rome on the shifting soul of Harold is finely described."

Methodist Recorder.—"A noble work, dealing masterfully with many of the profoundest problems of modern life."

A BRILLIANT SUCCESS.
TWENTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.
ANOTHER EDITION, COMPLETING 28,000, IN THE PRESS.

ANNA LOMBARD. By VICTORIA CROSS.

Review of Reviews.—"Anna Lombard is a bold, brilliant, defiant presentation of a phase of the relations of the sexes which I do not remember ever having seen treated with the same delicacy, freedom, and audacity. It is a splendid study—a novel to set people thinking. It is difficult to praise the book too highly."

THIRD EDITION.

AN ILL WIND. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON, Author of "Bitter Fruit," &c.

Daily Mail.—"An eminently readable book, and fully up to the best standard of the popular authoress."

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOLDEN SPUR. By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "The Three Days' Terror," &c.

Glasgow Herald.—"A capital story, full of go, and the reader is lured from page to page until he has reached the final chapter."

SECOND EDITION.

THE LOVELY MRS. PEMBERTON. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The Home on the Marsh," &c.

Punch.—"'The Lovely Mrs. Pemberton' is, to the Baron's thinking, one of her best. It might have been quite her best. . . Nami is prettily drawn, while her husband is an artistic study of character. A thoroughly interesting story."

A SOCIAL PRETENDER. By WINIFRED GRAHAM Author of "The Beautiful Mrs. Leach," &c.

Punch.—"A well-told and exciting story. The interest is well sustained."

POPULAR THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

Yorkshire Post.—"Mr. Carter Platts is the Max Adeler of the present generation."

PAPA (LIMITED). By W. CARTER PLATTS. Author of "The Tuttlebury Tales," &c. With 40 Illustrations by the Author.

Newcastle Chronicle.—"Mr. Carter Platts is one of our most amusing writers of the lighter humour."

Dundee Advertiser.—"W. Carter Platts has already justified his claim to be considered a new humorist."

Scotsman.—Its pictures have the same boisterous and farcical humour as the writing, and take their own part in the laughable effect of the book."

A CORNER IN BALLYBEG. By NICHOLAS P. MURPHY. A Book of Irish Humour.

FORBIDDEN PATHS. By MARCUS REAY. Author of "The Love Affairs of a Curate."

AN ISLAND INTERLUDE. By JOHN AMITY. With cover design by Mrs. MARY F. RAPHAEL.

 Mr. John Long's Autumn List post free to any address.

LONDON: JOHN LONG, 6, CHANDOS STREET, STRAND.

Digitized by Google

Chatto and Windus's New Books.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A STUMBLE BY THE WAY. By L. T. Meade, Author of "The Diary of a Doctor."

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By D. Christie MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."
"There is vitality in Mr. Murray's persons."—Tablet.

THE TRIUMPH OF HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-runner," &c.
"It possesses exactly those qualities of vivid presentment and active movement which are characteristic of all the South African stories that have come from his pen."—Week's Survey.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. Shiel, Author of "The Yellow Danger," &c.
"Vigorous, daring, and original in conception."—Speaker.

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by Himself, and dedicated "To all who love."
"One may prophesy that 'The Lover's Progress' will find for itself a large circle of readers. If Mr. Clement Scott, Mr. G. R. Sims, and the late G. A. Sala had collaborated upon an imaginary autobiography some such book would, we fancy, have been the result."—Athenæum.

DUMB. By the Hon. Mrs. Walter R. D. Forbes, Author of "A Gentleman."
"A good and straightforward story of love and character."—Morning Leader.

A SOWER OF WHEAT. By Harold Bindloss, Author of "Ainslie's Ju-Ju."
"An able and attractive novel."—Literary World.

THE CANKERWORM: being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN.
"As for the originality of situation, the freshness of phrase, and the naturalness of dialogue in the above passage, the most careless reader of novels wil not require to have them italicised."—Daily Chronicle.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH. By Florence Warden, Author of "Joan, the Curate," &c.
"A lively and exciting tale."—Gentlewoman.

THE HOUSE ON THE SCAR: a Tale of South Devon, By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "In a Cathedral City." Second Edition.
"Abundantly clever."—Ladies' Field.

THE WEALTH OF MALLERSTANG: an Upland Tale. By ALGERNON GISSING.
"A powerful story."—Court Circular.

THREE MEN OF MARK. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "St. Mungo's City," &c.
"A good story."—Outlook.

ONLY A NIGGER. By Edmund Mitchell, Author of "The Lone Star Rush," &c.
"The interest is well sustained, and the story is highly readable."—Scotsman

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

TALES OF A DYING RACE. By Alfred A. Grace.
A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c. By George R. Sims.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BUCHANAN. With Portrait in each Volume. Two vols. crown 8vo, buckram, 12s.

NEW TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.
Picture cloth boards, flat backs.

SPORT AND SPANGLES. By Byron Webber.
PLOTTERS OF PARIS. By Edmund Mitchell.
DORA MYRL, THE LADY DETECTIVE. By McD. BODKIN, K.C.
VINCENT TRILL, of the DETECTIVE SERVICE. By DICK DONOVAN.
THE WATERS OF EDERA. By Ouida.
IN A HOLLOW OF THE HILLS. By Bret Harte.
THE LADY FROM NOWHERE. By Fergus Hume.
IN LONDON'S HEART. By George R. Sims.
JOAN, THE CURATE. By Florence Warden.
ST. KATHERINE'S BY THE TOWER. By Sir WALTER BESANT.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.—POCKET VOLUMES.
Printed upon fine and very thin paper. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s. net each; leather 3s. net each.

FAMILIAR STUDIES OF MEN AND BOOKS. By R. L. STEVENSON.
THE DEEMSTER. By Hall Caine.
THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By Charles READE.
"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.

A VERSAILLES CHRISTMAS-TIDE. By Mary STUART BOYD. With Fifty-three Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Fcap 4to cloth gilt and gilt top, 6s.
"Mrs. Boyd's new volume has the happy quality of being attractive both for young and for grown-up folk."—Daily News.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By CHARLES READE. A New Edition, set in handsome type, and Illustrated by Sixteen Photogravures and Eighty-four half-tone Illustrations by MATT. B. HEWERDINE. Small 4to, cloth gilt and gilt top, 10s. 6d. net.

LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

London: CHATTO and WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. HENTY'S NEW STORIES.

WITH ROBERTS TO PRETORIA: A Tale of the South African War. With 12 full-page Illustrations by WILLIAM RAINEY, R.I., and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

AT THE POINT OF THE BAYONET: A Tale of the Mahratta War. With 12 full-page Illustrations by WAL PAGET, and 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

TO HERAT AND CABUL: A Story of the First Afghan War. With 8 Illustrations by CHARLES M. SHELDON, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 5s.

WITH BULLER IN NATAL: or, a Born Leader. With 10 Page Illustrations by W. RAINEY, R.I., and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olivine edges, 6s.

By CAPTAIN F. S. BRERETON.

THE DRAGON OF PEKIN: A Story of the Boxer Revolt. With 8 full-page Illustrations by W. RAINEY, R.I., and Map. Cloth elegant, 5s.

A GALLANT GRENADIER: A Story of the Crimean War. With 8 full-page Illustrations by WAL PAGET, and Map. Cloth elegant, 5s.

By FRED SMITH.

The WORLD OF ANIMAL LIFE. Edited by FRED SMITH. Profusely Illustrated with Engravings after F. SPECHT and other eminent artists. Cloth elegant, 5s.

By JOHN SAMSON.

IN THE DICTATOR'S GRIP: A Story of Adventure in the Pampas and Paraguay. With 6 page Illustrations by PAUL HARDY. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By DR. GORDON STABLES.

IN QUEST OF THE GIANT SLOTH. With 6 full-page Illustrations by J. FINNEMORE, R.I. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By CHARLES SQUIRE.

THE GREAT KHAN'S TREASURE: A Story of Adventure in Chinese Tartary. With 6 full-page Illustrations by MUNRO S. ORR. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

By ETHEL F. HEDDLE.

AN ORIGINAL GIRL. With Eight full-page Illustrations by GORDON BROWNE. Cloth elegant, 6s.

By KATHARINE TYNAN.

A GIRL OF GALWAY. With Eight full-page Illustrations by JOHN H. BACON. Cloth elegant, 6s.

By ELIZA F. POLLARD.

THE DOCTOR'S NIECE. With Six Illustra- tions by SYDNEY COWELL. Cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

NEW PICTURE BOOKS.

GAMMON AND SPINACH. Pictures by STEWART ORR. Verses by JOHN BRYMER. Cover design and 24 pages in Full Colour. Picture boards, cloth back, 6s.

NONSENSE, NONSENSE. With Twenty- eight pages in Full Colour, 36 pages in two colours, cover design, &c. by CHARLES ROBINSON. Verses by WALTER JERROLD. Picture boards, cloth back, 6s.

THE ANIMAL BOOK. A Natural History for Little Folk. By FRED SMITH. With a Coloured Frontispiece and 34 full-page Illustrations by F. SPECHT. Crown quarto, picture boards, cloth back, 2s. 6d.

AN ANIMAL A. B. C. With Twenty-four pages in two colours, and 26 pages in black and white. By HARRY B. NEILSON. Picture boards, cloth back, 2s. 6d.

Also Books in 2/6, 2/-, 1/6, 1/-, -/9, and -/6 Series.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey, E.C.

Digitized by Google

BOOKS for CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

THIN PAPER POCKET EDITIONS.

Shakespeare's Complete Plays and Poems.
A New Pocket Edition in three volumes. Printed in large, clear type on extremely thin but thoroughly opaque paper. Each volume, though 900 pages, will measure not more than ¾in. in thickness. Bound in limp lambskin. Price 3/6 net per volume.

Uniform with above in Size and Style.

The Complete Poems of John Milton.
In one volume. Lambskin, 3/- net.

TWO NEW GIFT BOOKS.

Britannia's Bulwarks.
Containing 48 Beautiful Coloured Pictures of Warships, Past and Present Cloth gilt, 10/6 net.

A Popular History of the Nineteenth Century.
By EDWIN HODDER. Containing upwards of 750 Illustrated Pages. Royal 8vo. Cloth gilt, 10/6 net.

TWO NEW BOOKS OF FAIRY TALES.

Queen Mab's Fairy Realm.
An Original Collection of Tales from the Literatures of England, France, Germany, and Spain. With 68 Illustrations, and coloured Frontispiece, 6/-.

A Real Queen's Fairy Book.
By CARMEN SYLVA (The Queen of Roumania). With 24 Full-page Illustrations, with designed borders in colours, and coloured Frontispiece, 6/-.

Beautiful Mamma.
A Collection of Stories about Children, by Miss WINIFRED GRAHAM. Illustrated, 3/6.

Lilies for English Gardens.
By Miss JEKYLL. "Country Life" Library. 8vo. 8/6 net.

The Animals of the Bible.
By GAMBIER BOLTON, F.Z.S. With 54 Illustrations. Cloth, 1/6.

THE CAXTON SERIES.

Illustrated Reprints of Famous Classics.

Printed in large, clear type, on antique wove paper, with Photogravure frontispiece, and from Ten to Fourteen Illustrations by well-known artists in black and white. Small Foolscap 8vo, 6¼in. by 4¼in., limp leather, gilt tops, designed end-papers, 3/- net each volume; cloth 2/6.

Undine, and Astauga's Knight.
By LA MOTTE FOUQUE. With Illustrations by HAROLD NELSON.

In Memoriam.
By ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. With Illustrations by A. GARTH JONES.

The Pilgrim's Progress from this World to That Which is to Come.
By JOHN BUNYAN. With Illustrations by EDMUND J. SULLIVAN. Two volumes.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVEL.

The First Men in the Moon.
By H. G. WELLS. With Illustrations by C. E. SHEPPERSON. Crown 8vo, 6/-.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Tales of Greyhouse.
By R. S. WARREN BELL. With numerous Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3/6.

"Lem"; A New England Village Boy.
By NOAH BROOKS. Illustrated, 5/-.

Acton's Feud.
By F. SWAINSON. With 12 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3/6.

The Heart of the Prairie.
By JOHN MACKIE. With 12 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3/6.

Longfeather the Peacemaker; or, The Belt of Seven Totems.
By KIRK MUNROE. Crown 8vo, 3/6.

The Boys of St. Elmo's.
By A. T. STORY. Crown 8vo, 3/6.

Valour for Victoria.
By J. A. MANSON. Crown 8vo, Illustrated, 1/6.

GEORGE NEWNES, Ltd.,
7 to 12, Southampton St., Strand, London, W.C.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
PUBLICATIONS.

MEXICO AS I SAW IT. By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs and Sketches by the Author, and New Map of Mexico. One vol. crown 4to. 21s. net.

TO THE SOUTH POLAR REGIONS. Expedition of 1898-1900. By LOUIS BERNACCHI, F.R.G.S. Fully Illustrated by Photographs taken by the Author. Maps, Plans, &c. 12s. net.

THE HEARTS OF MEN. By H. FIELDING, Arthur of "The Soul of a People," &c. One vol. demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

TO THE MOUNTAINS OF THE MOON. Being an Account of the Modern Aspect of Central Africa and some little-known Regions Traversed by the Tanganyika Expedition in 1899 and 1900. By J. E. S. MOORE, F.R.G.S. 1 vol. crown 4to. with numerous Illustrations and Maps. 21s. net.

FROM THE CAPE TO CAIRO. The First Traverse of Africa from South to North. By EWART S. GROGAN and ARTHUR H. SHARP. Fully Illustrated by Drawings by A. D. McCORMICK (from Sketches made by E. S. GROGAN), Original Drawings by E. S. GROGAN, Photographs and Photogravure Portraits of the Authors, Maps, &c. 1 vol. crown 4to. 21s. net.

THE NEW NOVELS.

IN SPITE OF ALL. By Edna Lyall, Author of "Donovan," "We Two," &c. 6s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

In special binding, extra superfine cloth, gilt edges. Complete in Case, price 30s. net, containing—

DONOVAN.	A HARDY NORSEMAN.
WE TWO.	WON BY WAITING.
IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.	TO RIGHT THE WRONG.
KNIGHT ERRANT.

These novels can also be obtained in green cloth binding, price 3s. 6d. each volume.

FLOWER AND THORN. By BEATRICE WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. 6s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING OF MARY FENWICK.	MARY FENWICK'S DAUGHTER.
PART OF THE PROPERTY.	IN the SUNTIME of HER YOUTH.
A MATTER of SKILL AND OTHER STORIES.	SUNSET.
ONE REASON WHY.	BEQUEATHED.

FARDEN HA'. By Joanna E. WOOD, Author of "A Daughter of Witches," &c. 6s.

STRAWS IN THE WIND. By CARLTON DAWE, Author of "The Yellow Man," "A Bride of Japan," &c. 6s.

THE LITTLE SAINT OF GOD. A Heroine of the Red Terror. By Lady FAIRLIE CUNINGHAME, Author of "A Wandering Star." 6s.

THE MARRIAGE OF MR. MOLY- NEUX. By CECIL HEADLAM, Author of "The Story of Nuremberg," &c. 6s.

AYLWIN. By Theodore Watts-Dunton New and Cheaper Edition. In one vol. crown 8vo, with Introduction and Portrait, 3s. 6d.

CHARMING CHRISTMAS BOOKS

MARY'S MENAGERIE. Written and Illustrated by ARTHUR LAYARD. In 1 vol., oblong 4to, price 2s. 6d.

GOLDEN HAIR and CURLY HEAD. A Poem by ALLEN UPWARDS. With Illustration by HAROLD COPPING. In 1 vol., crown 4to, with Frontispiece in Photogravure, price 2s. 6d. net.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 13, Great Marlborough Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD AND POPULAR WORKS
ON NATURAL HISTORY.

Part II., with 10 Coloured Plates, 21s. net.

MONOGRAPH OF THE MEMBRACIDÆ. By George BOWDLER BUCKTON, F.R.S., F.L.S. Part I., 4to with 8 Coloured Plates, 21s. net.

CONCHOLOGIA ICONICA; Or, Figures and Descriptions of the Shells of Mollusks, with Remarks on their Affinities, Synonomy, and Geographical Distribution. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S., and G. B. SOWERBY, F.L.S. Complete in 20 vols. 4to, with 2,727 Coloured Plates, half-calf, £178 net.

A detailed List of Monographs and Volumes may be had.

ELEMENTS OF CONCHOLOGY: an Introduction to the Natural History of Shells, and of the Animals which form them. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S. 2 vols. 62 Coloured Plates, £2 16s. net.

FOREIGN FINCHES IN CAPTIVITY. By ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S. With 60 Plates, beautifully coloured by hand. Royal 4to cloth, £4 14s. 6d. net; half-morocco, £5 5s. net.

TERACOLUS: A Monograph of the Genus. By E. M. BOWDLER SHARPE. Parts I. to X. 4to each with 4 Coloured Plates, 7s. 6d. net.

Part LXXXVI., with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. net.

The LEPIDOPTERA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Vols. I. to VII., each 12s.; Large Edition, Vol. I., with 40 Coloured Plates, 53s.; Vols. II. to VII., each with 48 Coloured Plates, 63s. net.

The LARVÆ OF THE BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA, AND THEIR FOOD PLANTS. By OWEN S. WILSON. With Life-sized Figures drawn and coloured from Nature by ELEANORA WILSON. 40 Coloured Plates, 63s. net.

The BUTTERFLIES OF EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols., £5 18s. net.

Part LII., with 7 Coloured Plates, 15s. net.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. Moore, F.Z.S., F.E.S. Vols. I. and IV., each with 94 Coloured Plates; Vols. II. and III., each with 96 Coloured Plates, £9 5s. cloth; £9 15s. half-morocco.

The LEPIDOPTERA OF CEYLON. By F. Moore, F.Z.S. Three vols. medium 4to, 215 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt tops, £21 12s. net. Published under the auspices of the Government of Ceylon.

The HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with 3 Plates, 16s. Large Paper Edition, with 51 Coloured Plates, 68s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with a Structural Plate, 14s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 48s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HOMOPTERA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By JAMES EDWARDS, F.E.S. Complete, with 2 Structural Plates, 12s.; Large Edition, with 28 Coloured Plates, 43s. net.

The COLEOPTERA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Complete in 5 vols. With 2 Structural Plates, £4. Large Edition, with 180 Coloured Plates, £14 net.

BRITISH INSECTS. By E. F. Staveley. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 12s. net.

BRITISH BUTTERFLIES AND MOTHS. By H. T. STAINTON. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH BEETLES. By E. C. Rye. New Edition. Revised by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH BEES. By W. E. Shuckard. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH SPIDERS. By E. F. Staveley. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH ZOOPHYTES. By A. S. Pennington, F.L.S. 24 Plates. 9s. net.

CURTIS'S BRITISH ENTOMOLOGY. Illustrations and Descriptions of the Genera of Insects found in Great Britain and Ireland. Eight vols. royal 8vo, 770 Coloured Plates. £21 net.

The PHYSIOLOGY OF THE INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), F.C.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations. 15s. net.

Vol. LVII. (1901) 42s. net.

THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series. Vols. I. to LVI., each 42s. net. Published Monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d. Coloured. Annual Subscription, 42s.

A complete Set from the commencement. 127 vols. £135.

Parts I. to XXV., each 7s. 6d. Coloured; 5s. Uncoloured, net.

THE HEPATICÆ OF THE BRITISH ISLES. By W. H. PEARSON. Issued to Subscribers for the Complete Work only, in 28 Monthly Parts, each with 8 Plates, 7s. 6d. Coloured; 5s. Uncoloured, net. Prospectus on application.

FLORA OF TROPICAL AFRICA. By D. Oliver, F.R.S. Vols. I. to III., 20s. each net. The Continuation, edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vols. VII., 27s. 6d. net. Vol. V., 25s. 6d. net. Vol. VIII., Parts 1 and 2, each 8s. Published under the authority of the First Commissioner of His Majesty's Works.

FLORA CAPENSIS: A Systematic Description of the Plants of the Cape Colony, Caffraria, and Port Natal. Vols I. to III., by W. H. HARVEY and O. W. SONDER, 18s. each net. The Continuation, edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. VI., 24s. net. Vol. VII., 33s. net. Vol V., Part 1, 9s. net. Published under the authority of the Governments of the Cape and Natal.

FLORA OF BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. Hooker, C.B., G.C.S.I., F.R.S., &c., assisted by various Botanists. 7 vols., £12 net.

HANDBOOK OF THE BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Seventh Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 9s. net.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. FITCH, F.L.S., and W. G. SMITH, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Fifth Edition. 9s. net.

BRITISH GRASSES. By M. Plues. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH FERNS. By M. Plues. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 9s. net.

BRITISH SEAWEEDS. By S. O. Gray. 16 Coloured Plates. 9s. net.

SYNOPSIS OF BRITISH MOSSES. By C. P. HOBKIRK, F.L.S. Revised Edition, 6s. 6d. net.

HANDBOOK OF BRITISH MOSSES. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. Second Edition. 24 Coloured Plates. 21s. net.

BRITISH FUNGOLOGY. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. With a Supplement of nearly 400 pages by WORTHINGTON G. SMITH, F.L.S. 2 vols. 24 Coloured Plates. 36s. net. Supplement only, 12s.

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES, AND USTI-LAGINEÆ. By GEORGE MASSEE. 8 Plates. 6s. 6d. net.

BRITISH WILD FLOWERS, familiarly described in the Four Seasons. By THOMAS MOORE, F.L.S. 24 Coloured Plates. 14s net.

THE NARCISSUS: its History and Culture. By F. W. BURBIDGE, F.L.S. With a Scientific Review of the entire Genus. By J. G. BAKER, F.R.S., F.L.S. With 48 beautifully Coloured Plates. 30s. net.

THE BRITISH FERNS. Coloured Figures and Descriptions of the Ferns of Great Britain and Ireland. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. 66 Coloured Plates. 36s. net.

GARDEN FERNS. Coloured Figures and Descriptions. A Selection of Exotic Ferns adapted for Cultivation in the Garden, Hothouse, and Conservatory. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. 64 Coloured Plates. 36s. net.

PHYCOLOGIA BRITANNICA; or, History of British Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. New Edition. Royal 8vo, 4 vols. 360 Coloured Plates. £7 10s. net.

PHYCOLOGIA AUSTRALICA: a History of Australian Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 5 vols., 300 Coloured Plates. £7 13s. net.

THE RHODODENDRONS OF SIKKIM-HIMALAYA: being an Account, Botanical and Geographical, of the Rhododendrons recently discovered in the Mountains of Eastern Himalaya by Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. Folio, 20 Coloured Plates. £4 14s. 6d. net.

LOVELL REEVE & CO., LIMITED, Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Digitized by Google

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST OF SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch.—"Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."

Daily Chronicle.—"Is told with wit."

Truth.—"Exceptionally clever and interesting."

Vanity Fair.—"An unusually able volume.....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

Saturday Review.—"A remarkable novel."

Westminster Gazette.—"A daring idea is well carried out....the book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."

Western Morning News.—"As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.

Daily Chronicle.—"They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."

County Gentleman.—"A very readable book."

Western Morning News.—"Amusing and readable."

THE WOMAN OF ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

THE CASE OF A MAN WITH HIS WIFE. By THEO. Price 3s. 6d.

Birmingham Daily Gazette.—"Well told and pathetic."

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Nothing pleasanter could be devised."

THE RANEE'S RUBIES. By HELEN BOURCHIER. Price 6s.

TATTY. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s

Treherne's Shilling Sporting Series.

LITTLE CHERIE. By Lady FLORENCE DIXIE. Price 1s. net.

REMINISCENCES OF A GENTLEMAN HORSE-DEALER. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. 1s. net.

A FURY IN WHITE VELVET. By HERBERT COMPTON. 1s. net.

NOW READY.

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.

Edited by STANHOPE SPRIGG.

Containing nearly 100 original Illustrations by the famous Cat Artist, and Contributions from many Literary Celebrities, including T. P. O'Connor, Justin McCarthy, Frank T. Bullen, Herman Merivale, Lady Bancroft, Adrian Ross, Sir Wm. Ingram, Bart., John Latey, &c., &c.

Price ONE SHILLING.

THREE OCTOBERS: A Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever bit of work....witty and entertaining."

People.—"As to its cleverness throughout there can be no question."

STAGE SILHOUETTES.

Illustrated with Photographs.
By SIDNEY DARK. Price 1s

CRAMPTON'S MAGAZINE.

Messrs. TREHERNE & CO. have purchased Crampton's Magazine, and the December number is issued by them. Several popular writers, including Mrs. B. M. CROKER, Miss E. NESBIT, GEORGE PASTON, CHAS. GLEIG and LOUIS WAIN, have contributed. In January a New Serial by Mrs. B. M. CROKER will be commenced.

ANTHONY TREHERNE and CO., Ltd.,
3, AGAR STREET, CHARING CROSS, W.C.

W. & R. CHAMBERS'S NEW BOOKS

Price 10s. 6d. net.

Now Ready, VOLUME I. of an ENTIRELY NEW EDITION of

CHAMBERS'S CYCLOPÆDIA of ENGLISH LITERATURE

Edited by DAVID PATRICK, LL.D.

In three handsome Volumes, imp. 8vo, 10s. 6d. each net.

Illustrated with nearly 300 Portraits, specially reproduced for this book from the most authentic paintings and engravings known. The Contributors to the present volume include—

Rev. STOPFORD BROOKE,	Dr. S. R. GARDINER,	Mr. SIDNEY LEE,
Mr. EDMUND GOSSE,	Mr. ANDREW LANG,	Prof. P. HUME BROWN,
Mr. A. W. POLLARD,	Prof. SAINTSBURY,	Mr. A. H. BULLEN, &c.

CHAMBERS'S

TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

PRONOUNCING, EXPLANATORY, ETYMOLOGICAL.

Edited by
The Rev. THOMAS DAVIDSON, Editor of "Chambers's English Dictionary."

Over 100,000 references. 1,206 pages demy 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

Journal of Education says: "A miracle of scholarship and cheapness combined."

POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BURNS.

With Life and Notes by WM. WALLACE, LL.D.

Containing 20 beautiful Illustrations from original drawings by C. Martin Hardie, R.S.A., W. D. Mackay, R.S.A., George O. Reid, A.R.S.A., R. B. Nisbet, A.R.S.A., G. Pirie.

One volume, 572 pages, demy 8vo, price 6s.

NEW CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Artistically bound, and charmingly Illustrated by such well-known artists as—
W. BOUCHER, LEWIS BAUMER, HAROLD COPPING, ARTHUR RACKHAM, W. RAINEY, PERCY TARRANT, &c.

Six Shillings.

A NEST OF GIRLS: or, Boarding School Days. By E. WESTYN TIMLOW.

GIRLS OF THE TRUE BLUE: A School Story. By L. T. MEADE.

Five Shillings.

THE KOPJE GARRISON: A Tale of the Boer War. By G. MANVILLE FENN.

A VERY NAUGHTY GIRL. By L. T. MEADE.

COURAGE AND CONFLICT. A Series of Stories by G. A. HENTY, F. T. BULLEN, FRED WHISHAW.

Three Shillings and Sixpence.

COSEY CORNER; or, How they Kept a Farm. By L. T. MEADE.

A POPULAR GIRL: A Tale of School Life in Germany. By MAY BALDWIN.

THE ARGONAUTS OF THE AMAZON. By C. R. KENYON.

JERRY DODDS, MILLIONAIRE: A School Yarn of Merriment and Mystery. By H. BARROW-NORTH.

OUT OF BOUNDS: A Series of School Stories. By ANDREW HOME.

"MY PRETTY" AND HER BROTHER "TOO." By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

Uniform with "Hoodie," "Hermy," "The Boys and I," &c.

Two Shillings and Sixpence.

MORE ANIMAL STORIES. Edited by ROBERT COCHRANE.

Including "Rab and His Friends," by Dr. John Brown.

One Shilling.

LASSIE. By the Author of "Laddie," "Tip-Cat," &c.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING. READY NOV. 29.

Contains Fascinating Stories by

LOUIS BECKE.	D. LAWSON JOHNSTON.	H. A. BRYDEN.
F. G. AFLALO.	T. St. E. HAKE.	Mrs. MACQUOID.

And ARTICLES containing ARTISTIC and LITERARY REMINISCENCES.
By W. W. FENN ("Memories of Millais") and G. MANVILLE FENN ("Old Journal Days").

In addition to above there are a host of articles of an entertaining and instructive character, admirably adapted for readers who are on the look-out for a Christmas Number which will supply them with much pleasant and profitable reading.

W. & R. CHAMBERS (LIMITED), 47, Paternoster Row, London, and Edinburgh.

Digitized by Google

CHARLES GRIFFIN & CO.'S LIST.

A DICTIONARY of EASTERN ANTIQUITIES, GEOGRAPHY, and NATURAL HISTORY,
ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

NEW EDITION (the Twenty-Seventh), THOROUGHLY REVISED,
In Cloth, Gilt, 10s. 6d. Post Free.
Also in Half-Morocco for Presentation.

EADIE'S BIBLICAL CYCLOPÆDIA

Re-set throughout with new type. Many Additional Articles. Beautifully illustrated with New Plates, specially prepared from Photographs of the Holy Land, Maps, and Engravings.

The Preface to this Edition is by the Rev. A. H. SAYCE, M.A., LL.D., D.C.L. Professor of Assyriology at the University of Oxford, who has also contributed New Articles on the Hebrews, Hittites, Sinai, Egypt, Division of Nations, &c.

The Rev. CANON TRISTRAM, D.D., F.R.S. has revised the Botanical, Natural History, and other subjects.

IMPORTANT REVISION THROUGHOUT BY

Professor W. M. Ramsay, D.C.L., of Aberdeen. The Rev. Vernon Bartlet, of Mansfield College, Oxford.
Theophilus G. Pinches, Esq., LL.D., M.R.A.S., late of the British Museum; and
The Rev. Henry A. Redpath, M.A.

By Professors GARDNER and JEVONS.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 16s.

A MANUAL of GREEK ANTIQUITIES.

By PERCY GARDNER, M.A., LITT.D.,
Professor of Classical Archæology and Art in the University of Oxford; and
F. B. JEVONS, M.A., LITT.D.
Principal of Hatfield Hall, in the University of Durham.

"A work which, although crammed full of information, is everywhere readable."—Athenæum.
"Modern archæological research has rendered a new survey of Hellenic antiquities INDISPENSABLE to the student of Greek history and literature, and few men are better qualified to understand such a survey than Professor Gardner and his colleague."—The Times.

By Professors RAMSAY and LANCIANI.

FIFTEENTH EDITION. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A MANUAL of ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.

By WILLIAM RAMSAY, M.A.
Revised by Prof. RODOLFO LANCIANI, D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D., F.S.A.
Assisted by Prof. E. DE RUGGERO, both of the University of Rome.
With 2 Photogravures, Map and Plans prepared by Prof. Lanciani to illustrate the most recent discoveries relative to the Topography of Ancient Rome.

"The chief interest in the New Edition centres in the chapter on TOPOGRAPHY, which has been entirely revised and partly rewritten by Professor Lanciani, the greatest living authority on the subject. We recommend this most heartily to all who have been to Rome or intend to go there. To Rome it is THE BEST and HANDIEST guide yet produced."—Athenæum.

A Treasury of Reference, consisting of Selections from the writings of the most Celebrated Authors.
FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

COMPILED AND ANALYTICALLY ARRANGED

MANY THOUGHTS of MANY MINDS

Each Series is complete in itself, and sold separately.
Presentation Edition, Cloth and Gold, 12s. 6d. each Volume. Library Edition, Half Bound, Roxburghe 14s. each Volume. Library Edition, Morocco Antique, 21s. each Volume.
In Square 8vo, elegantly printed on toned paper.

By HENRY SOUTHGATE.

FIRST SERIES—THIRTY-SIXTH EDITION.
SECOND SERIES—TENTH EDITION.

"There is no mood in which we can take it up without deriving from it instruction, consolation, and amusement. We heartily thank Mr. Southgate for a book which we shall regard as one of our best friends and Companions."—Cambridge Chronicle.

"This work possesses the merit of being a MAGNIFICENT GIFT-BOOK, appropriate to all times and season; a book calculated to be of use to the scholar, the divine, and the public man."—Freemason's Magazine.

In two vols. Royal 8vo. Handsomely bound in cloth, 25s.

A COMPENDIOUS HISTORY OF

ENGLISH LITERATURE

And of the English Language from the Norman Conquest.

With numerous specimens.
By GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK, LL.D.,
late Professor of History and English Literature, Queen's College, Belfast.

"Professor Craik has succeeded in making a book more than usually agreeable."—The Times.

ELEVENTH EDITION. Crown 8vo. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A MANUAL OF

ENGLISH LITERATURE

For the use of Colleges, Schools, and Civil Service Examinations.

Selected from the larger work, by Dr. CRAIK. With an Additional Section on Recent Literature, by SIR HENRY CRAIK, M.A., K.C.B., LL.D., Secretary to the Scotch Education Department, Author of "A Life of Swift."

"A Manual of English Literature from so experienced a scholar as Professor Craik needs no other recommendation than the mention of its existence."—Spectator.

THIRTY-SIXTH EDITION. In Royal 8vo, handsome cloth. Price, 10s. 6d.

A BOOK NO FAMILY SHOULD BE WITHOUT.

A DICTIONARY OF DOMESTIC MEDICINE AND HOUSEHOLD SURGERY

With a Section on the Maintenance of Health and the Management of Disease in Warm Climates by JAS. CANTLIE, M.A., M.B., F.R.C.S.

Appendix on the Management of the Sick-room, and many Hints for the Diet and Comfort of Invalids.

By SPENCER THOMSON, M.D., L.R.C.S. (Edin.), and J. CHARLES STEELE, M.D., late of Guy's Hospital.

The Work has been Thoroughly Revised and brought down to the Present State of Medical Science by ALBERT WESTLAND, M.A., M.D. (Author of "The Wife and Mother"), and GEO. REID, M.D., D.P.H., Medical Officer to the Staffordshire County Council.

"Dr. Thomson has fully succeeded in conveying to the public a vast amount of useful professional knowledge."—Dublin Journal of Medical Science.
"The amount of useful knowledge conveyed in this Work is surprising."—Medical Times and Gazette.
"WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD TO FAMILIES AND THE CLERGY."—Oxford Herald.

LONDON: CHARLES GRIFFIN & CO., LTD., EXETER ST., STRAND, W.C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION'S NEW LIST

At 1s. 6d.

The Captain's Fags. A School Story. By W. E. CULE, Author of "Barfield's Blazer," &c. Illustrated.

Into Stormy Waters: A Story for Girls. By Mrs. HENRY CLARKE, M.A., Author of "A High School Girl," &c.

At 1s.

"RED NURSERY SERIES."
(Small 4to, boards, illuminated sides.)

The New Playfellow. By GERTRUDE E. M. VAUGHAN. Profusely Illustrated.

Stories from the Pilgrim's Progress. Arranged by E. A. MACDONALD. With numerous new Illustrations by JAMES R. SINCLAIR.

At 1s.

"SPLENDID LIVES" SERIES.
(Crown 8vo, Cloth boards.)

The Story of Catherine of Siena. By FLORENCE WITTS, Author of "Frances Willard," &c.

At 9d.

Geordie's Victory. By MARGARET S. HAYCRAFT. With Illustrations. Cloth boards.

Marley's Boy. By JENNIE CHAPPELL. Illustrated by Harold Copping. Cloth boards.

Price 6d. net.

Dr. J. R. Miller's New Booklet.

The Shining Hope: Glimpses of Immortality. By J. R. MILLER, D.D. With charming Illustrations by SCOTT RANKIN. Enamelled Illustrated Cover in colours, silk cord.

At 5s.

Young England. A Splendid Gift Book for Boys. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth extra bevelled boards. Two Serial Stories "The Emperor's Trumpeter," by ALBERT LEE; and "The Young Reporter," by WILLIAM DRYSDALE. Stories of Life at the Great Public Schools by the Rev. E. E. BRADFORD, M.A. (Oxon). Illustrated Papers on a Boy's Workshop, by GEORGE P. MOON. Talks with Boys, by the Rev. E. C. DAWSON, M.A. (Oxon). "Hearts of Oak": Stories of Naval Heroism and Devotion. Natural History Papers on Birds, Animals and Insects of our Islands. Biographical Sketches of Men worth emulating. Sketches and Stories of Life in Our Colonies. Stories of exciting Adventure by DAVID KER, CHARLES EDWARDES, ARGYLL SAXBY, K. M. EADY, GEORGE GALE THOMAS, including "The One-Armed Trumpeter," "My Great Siberian Tiger," "A Wolf Chase on Skates," "The Consul's Peril," &c. Stories of School Life and Sports, by W. E. CULE, B. M. AITKEN, HAROLD AVERY, &c., including "The Captain's Last Goal," "The Great Grogan's Bat," "The Dandy Dundlefords," "The Last Wicket," &c. The Volume opens with a striking Frontispiece by FREDERICK BURTON, entitled "The Death of the Man-Eater."

At 2s.

Golden Rule, The.—A Magazine for Young People of both sexes. Well Illustrated, cloth boards. Two Serial Stories: "The Boys of the Red-House," by EVELYN EVERETT GREEN; and "The Sisters of Trenton Manse," by FLORENCE WITTS; Chats on "How to Work," by Professor AMOS WELLS. Christian Endeavour Sketches. Animal Stories. Sketches of Boy and Girl Life in Foreign Lands; "In the Flowery Land," by a Chinese Missionary; "A German Fräulein," "In the Forbidden City." Tales of School Life. Stories of Adventure, including "Cradled on an Iceberg," "How Claudius Proved his Courage," "A Tight Corner," "A Perilous Bed," "How the Squatters Fought the Fire." "Stories of the Killing-time." "The Parliament Man," by W. E. CULE, &c., &c. The Volume is well Illustrated, a special feature being a series of Animal Studies by GEORGE RANKIN.

At 1s.

Child's Own Magazine, The.—Sixty-eighth Annual Volume. Full of charming Stories, Poems, &c., and profusely illustrated. Serial Story by MARY E. MURRAY, entitled "The Wonderful Castle," with many illustrations by ROSA C. PETHERICK. A new feature is the series of composite Scripture Pictures by M. AYOUB, illustrating the International Bible Lessons for the Year. "Comical Birds, Beasts, and Fishes," illustrated by T. W. COULDERY. Besides these, there is an abundance of Stories and Sketches, and verses suitable for Juvenile recitations, clever pictorial puzzles, &c., &c. The coloured Plate, entitled "Beauty and the Beast," is from a painting in oils by HARRIETTE SUTCLIFFE. Paper boards; cloth extra 1s. 6d.

The Sunday School Union, 57-59, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ALL PRICES NET.

One volume of about 600 pages, imperial 8vo, the impression limited as follows:—SMALL PAPER, in imperial 8vo, printed on "pure rag" paper specially made for the work by John Dickinson and Co., Ltd. 350 copies for sale, price £2 2s. each. LARGE PAPER, in small folio, printed on Arnold's unbleached Hand-made Paper, also specially made for this work. 50 copies for sale, each numbered, price £4 4s. each.

THE HISTORY OF THE PART OF WEST SOMERSET

comprising the Parishes of LUCCOMBE, SELWORTHY, STOKE PERO, PORLOCK, CULBONE, and OARE. By CHARLES E. H. CHADWICK HEALEY, K.C., F.S.A. Illustrated with 16 Full-page Plates, 61 Woodcuts, 72 Armorial Bearings, 8 Pedigrees on 16 sheets, and a Map.

Times.—"Here there is no padding, and no more than necessary incidental repetition of what has been previously published, but a large volume full of previously unprinted, and for the most part, unknown historical facts. It is an example of what can be done for parochial history by the man who knows where to look for and how to use old records, and is prepared to give the requisite time and money for searches, copies, and arrangement of scattered materials."—September 17th.

Spectator.—"One would not like to say that any part of this large volume is superfluous. Let any one look at the records which have been carefully examined in Porlock and Luccombe, and he will see plenty to interest him. There is nothing certainly out of the common, but there are matters that touch on history, and a number of curious details which illustrate social life and the economical condition of the country at the time."—July 27th.

Notes and Queries.—"In supplying a history of a cantle of West Somerset Mr. Healey in his admirably executed book has cast a flood of light upon general and local affairs; upon the conditions of the individual and the community; upon genealogy, topography, folk superstitions, and all things, in short, in which the antiquary delights. When we read his proffered appeal to our indulgence for the extent of his labours we can only wish that antiquaries and historians as competent and as zealous would treat other parts of the United Kingdom with the same thoroughness. The illustrations are a specially pleasing and valuable feature, the pedigrees are numerous and abundant, and the appendices brim over with matter in which the antiquary will delight."—August 31st.

Athenæum.—"In this handsome book of some 600 pages, an out-of-way but most beautiful corner of Somerset is treated with considerable fulness, particularly in all that relates to manorial history. All who know and love it will be grateful for the patient industry which has collected and set forth many hitherto unknown or unpublished documents relating to its annals. Everything pertaining to the typography and illustration of the volume is admirable."—August 3rd.

By W. A. COPINGER, LL.D., F.S.A., &c., Professor of Law in the Victoria University, sometime President of the Bibliographical Society. TO BE LIMITED TO 250 COPIES. Royal 4to, bound in cloth or art linen, gilt top. Subscription price, 15s. 6d.; after publication, £1 5s.

HISTORY OF THE PARISH OF BUXHALL, IN THE COUNTY OF SUFFOLK.

Including the Parish Registers from 1558 to 1700. With over 20 Full-page Illustrations and a large Parish Map, containing most of the Ancient Field-names, specially drawn for this work.

IN THE PRESS. New and beautifully produced Chess Book. Crown 4to, printed in colours on fine paper within coloured borders. Price 10s. 6d.

A SELECTION OF SEVEN HUNDRED CHESS PROBLEMS,

the Composition of Mrs. W. J. BAIRD.

The above work is one of the most important collections of problems which have appeared for many years, and is by far the most handsomely produced. The edition is a strictly limited one.

In Two Volumes, 4to, price £1 10s.

THE LITTLE RED BOOK OF BRISTOL. Published under the authority of the Council of the City and County of Bristol. Edited by FRANCIS B. BICKLEY, Assistant in the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. With 13 Illustrations.

This important register of Bristol, which was originated by WILLIAM DE COLFORD, the Recorder, in 1344, and covers a period of about one hundred and fifty years, records the liberties, franchises, and constitutions of the town, many chantry foundations, and a highly interesting series of trade-guild ordinances.

Now Complete in Three Volumes. Imperial 8vo, Roxburghe binding, price £3.

A CALENDAR OF THE INNER TEMPLE RECORDS.

Edited by F. A. INDERWICK, K.C., one of the Masters of the Bench. Printed at the Chiswick Press, with Illustrations by T. G. JACKSON, R.A.

TO BE COMPLETED IN FIVE VOLUMES.
Imperial 8vo, bound in Roxburghe, top edges gilt, price £5 5s.
The whole Series will be strictly limited to 300 Sets.

RECORDS OF THE COUNTY BOROUGH OF CARDIFF.

From the Earliest Times. Edited by JOHN HOBSON MATTHEWS, Archivist to the Corporation. Illustrated with Facsimiles of Charters and Seals, Old and New Views of the Town, St. John's Church, and the Castle.

ELEVEN PARTS NOW READY; TWO MORE WILL COMPLETE THE WORK.
BY THE LATE HENRY SEEBOHM.

A MONOGRAPH OF THE TURDIDÆ, or Family of Thrushes.

By HENRY SEEBOHM, Author of "Siberia in Europe," "Siberia in Asia," &c., &c. Edited and completed by RICHARD BOWDLER SHARPE, LL.D., F.L.S., &c., &c., of the British Museum. Illustrated with 144 Plates drawn by J. G. KEULEMANS, and coloured by hand; also fine Photogravure Portrait. Price £1 16s. per part (only sold complete).

Works by JOHN GUILLE MILLAIS, F.Z.S., &c.

4to, printed on Art Paper, green cloth extra, uncut, top edges gilt, £2 2s.

A BREATH FROM THE VELDT. New and Revised Edition, with all the original Illustrations by the AUTHOR comprising 12 Full-page Electro-Etchings, 49 other Full-page Illustrations, and 88 Illustrations in the Text; also a Frontispiece after the last finished Drawing of Sir JOHN MILLAIS.

Imperial 4to, printed by Messrs. R. & R. Clark on Art Paper, bound in buckram, top edges gilt, price £4 4s.

BRITISH DEER AND THEIR HORNS. With 185 Text and Full-page Illustrations, mostly by the AUTHOR, also 10 Electrogravures and a Coloured Frontispiece by the AUTHOR and SIDNEY STEEL, and a Series of Unpublished Drawings by Sir EDWIN LANDSEER, which were formerly on the walls of Ardverikie.

New and Cheaper Edition, in 1 vol. 8vo, printed on Art Paper, bound in buckram, price 18s.
THE STANDARD AUTHORITY ON THE BRITISH TETRAONIDÆ.

GAME BIRDS AND SHOOTING SKETCHES. Illustrating

the Habits, Modes of Capture, Stages of Plumage, and the Hybrids and Varieties which occur among them. With 57 illustrations by the AUTHOR, and a Frontispiece by Sir JOHN MILLAIS.

Complete Catalogue, including Mr. GOULD'S Works, post-free.

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., Publishers, 140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.

Digitized by Google

DAVID NUTT,
57-59, LONG ACRE.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HAWTHORN AND LAVENDER, a Lyric Sequence; and other Poems. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. Demy 8vo, printed at the Constable Press on Hand-made Paper, cloth, top gilt, 6s.

 In addition to the "Hawthorn and Lavender" Sequence, this Volume contains the London Types, the Prologues to Beau Austin and Admiral Guinea, the Memorial Verses on Queen Victoria, &c. It is issued in the format and typography of the "Poems" (1896) and the two Volumes comprise the bulk of Mr. Henley's poetical work as definitely revised by him.

The First Edition of HAWTHORN and LAVENDER has already been practically taken up, and immediate application is necessary to secure copies. A Second Edition will be ready by the 15th inst.

Previous Works of Mr. HENLEY published by Mr. NUTT.

A BOOK OF VERSES. Fifth Edition. 16mo, xvi-175 pp. Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON VOLUNTARIES, and other Verses. Second Edition, 16mo, xii-130 pp. Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

 These Two Volumes are reprinted, with Additions, Omissions, and Modifications.

POEMS. Small demy 8vo. Fourth Edition, 1900. With Photogravure of the Author's Bust by RODIN. Cloth, 6s.

FOR ENGLAND'S SAKE. Verses and Songs in Time of War. Small 4to, 1900, sewed, 1s.

VIEWS and REVIEWS. Essays in Appreciation. Vol. I. LITERATURE. Second Edition. 16mo. xii-228 pp. Cloth, top gilt, 5s. net.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOTES UPON JULIAN. (Critical and Exegitical), and a Translation of his Public Letters. By E. A. CHINNOCK, M.A., late Rector of Dumfries Academy. Crown 8vo, 82 pp. sewed, 1s. 6d. net.

THE SPOKEN ARABIC OF EGYPT. By J. S. WILLMORE, Judge of the High Court, Cairo. Demy 8vo, limp roan, xvi-394 pp., 7s. 6d. net.

 In this work the spoken Arabic of Egypt is, for the first time in English, treated without any reference to the Classical Language, from which it has become almost as different as the Modern Romance Languages from Latin. It is printed throughout in Roman character, and can thus be used by all who wish to understand and converse with the people without the necessity of acquiring the Classical script.

NEW GIFT BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS, 1901.

THE LIVES OF THE HUNTED. By ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON, Author of "Wild Animals I have Known." Square crown 8vo, fancy cloth, 6s. net.

 This new work of the writer of genius to whom we owe the finest animal stories in all literature includes everything written since the author's last book, whether inedited or published in serial form. Whilst in general appearance and get up it resembles "Wild Animals I have Known" (6s. net), of which over 100,000 copies have been called for by the English-speaking world in the short space of three years, it is even more fully and richly illustrated with the author's own inimitable drawings.

 For previous works by Mr. Seton-Thompson (see D. Nutt's "Catalogue of Publications"); a special prospectus will be sent on application.

SHAKESPEARE IN MUSIC. A collection of the chief Musical Allusions in the Plays of Shakespeare, with an attempt at their Explanation and Derivation, together with much of the original music. By LOUIS C. ELSON. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 354 pages, printed on laid paper, and handsomely bound in cloth, fully gilt, gilt top, edges trimmed, 6s. net.

CONCERNING CATS. My Own and Some Others. By HELEN M. WINSLOW. Square demy 8vo, 284 pages: 31 full-page plates representing upwards of 100 different prize-winners and examples of rare and beautiful breeds. Fancy cloth, top gilt, printed on laid paper with wide margin, 6s. net.

MARIE DE FRANCE. Seven Lais done into English for the first time. With Introduction and Notes by EDITH RICKERT, sometime Instructor in English at Vassar College. With Frontispiece and Photogravure Title-page by CAROLINE WATTS. xii-196 pp., 3s. net.

Contents: Guigemar.—The Ash Tree.—The Honeysuckle.—The Nightingale.—The Two Lovers.—Yonec.—Eliduc.

 Issued in the format, typography, and binding of "Arthurian Romances."

ARTHURIAN ROMANCES UNREPRESENTED IN MALORY.

No. 4. MORIEN. Translated for the first time from the Original Dutch by JESSIE L. WESTON. With Designs by CAROLINE WATTS. 2s. net.

 "Morien" forms an episode in the vast thirteenth-century Dutch rifacimento of Arthurian romance known as the Dutch Lancelot, which, as is known to Arthurian students, has preserved a number of romances, the French originals of which have disappeared. This is the case with "Morien," of which no other trace remains. In addition to its intrinsic merits, which are great, the story is of interest as presenting marked analogies with the lost French original of Wolfram von Eschenbach.

ALREADY ISSUED IN THE SERIES.

No. 1. SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT. 2s. net.

No. 2. TRISTAN AND ISEULT. From the German of GOTTFRIED VON STRASSBURG. Two vols., 4s. net.

No. 3. FOUR LAIS. From the French of MARIE DE FRANCE and others. 2s. net.

JUDGE PARRY'S FASCINATING CHILDREN'S BOOK.

KATAWAMPUS:

Its Treatment and Cure. (Fully illustrated, 3s. 6d.)

Has been made the subject of a Christmas Play for Children, to be given at the Prince of Wales' Theatre during the holidays. Full particulars on application to the Publisher, or to the Box Office of the Theatre.

NEW GIFT BOOKS
Published by CASSELL & CO.

The Morning Post says:—

"For a Christmas book merry and fanciful, full of quips and cranks and pretty pictures, one might go far without finding anything to excel 'A Masque of Days.' Everything that appears in this book is the handiwork of the Artist. The work is thus a notable example of artistic bookmaking."

A MASQUE OF DAYS: from the Last Essays of Elia. Newly Dressed and Decorated. By Walter Crane. With 40 Full-Page Designs in Colour, 6s.

The Liverpool Post says:—

"The plates strikingly show the remarkable range and variety of marine painting. Mr. Wyllie's method is fully described, and the book will appeal in this respect to the student; but, as a most artistic production, it must also delight a very large public."

MARINE PAINTING IN WATER COLOUR. By W. L. Wyllie, A.R.A. With 24 Coloured Plates, 5s.

The Glasgow Herald says:—

"As the first book in which British Sculpture has found at once its historian and its critic, this work by Mr. Spielmann fills a notable blank in the Art World."

BRITISH SCULPTURE AND SCULPTORS OF TO-DAY. By M. H. Spielmann. With about 200 Illustrations. 5s. net; handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

Black and White says:—

"No living astronomer has such a happy way of telling the story of the heavens, and in coming down to earth Sir Robert Ball has not lost any of his magic."

THE EARTH'S BEGINNING. By Sir Robert Ball, LL.D., &c. With 4 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

The Daily News says:—

"Among its most striking features is its description of London as it was in the reign of King Edward III., with its daily life indoors and out, its bridges, brooks, streets, domestic architecture, gates, markets, monasteries, churches, and notable inns, all which are presented in a picturesque and interesting way."

LONDON AFTERNOONS: Chapters on the Social Life, Architecture, and Records of the Great City and its Neighbourhood. By W. J. Loftie, B.A., F.S.A. With 60 Full-page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

The Christian Commonwealth says:—

"The Child's Bible, of which a new edition has just appeared, has long held an established place in many English-speaking homes, and is a source of perpetual delight to both young and old. Quarto in size, handsomely bound, with a tastefully designed cover, gilt-edged, the paper of good quality, the type large, and the printing perfect, the book is in all respects excellent and attractive."

THE CHILD'S BIBLE. Illustrated with 100 New Full-page Plates, including 12 in colours. By W. H. Margetson. Reset in New Type. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

The Times says:—

"Very thoughtful and suggestive."

THE LIFE AND WORK OF THE REDEEMER. By Eminent Authorities. With 8 Full-page Illustrations. 6s.

The Spectator says:—

"It is a clear, spirited narrative, not always, it may be, possessed of the dignity of history—the time for the dignified historian has hardly arrived—but not unworthy of its subject. As far as we have been able to test the work it seems carefully done, and the result is certainly attractive."

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE BOER WAR. By Richard Danes. With 10 Coloured Plates and Numerous other Illustrations. 1,560 Pages, 7s. 6d.

The Christian says:—

"A most invaluable help and counsellor in all times of individual or family illness. The plan of the work is systematic, while the explanations are full and simple, and the prescriptions popular in style. No household need now be without guidance in the event of any emergency, and the commoner ailments of life may be warded off without external aid."

CASSELL'S FAMILY DOCTOR. By a Medical Man. With 8 Illustrations. Cheap Edition, 6s.

The Times says:—

"Mr. Swaysland's name is sufficient guarantee for the ornithological accuracy of the instructive text; the coloured drawings are admirable, and wonderfully true to the life, while even the tiny tailpieces are studies that are full of spirit."

FAMILIAR WILD BIRDS. By W. Swaysland. With Coloured Pictures by A. THORBURN and others. Cheap Edition, complete in Four Vols., 3s. 6d. each.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London; and all Booksellers.

Digitized by Google

Books Suitable for Christmas Presents.

FROM MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

THE CORRESPONDENCE OF LADY SARAH LENNOX, 1745-1826. Daughter of the second Duke of Richmond, and successively the wife of Sir Thomas Charles Bunbury, Bart., and of the Honourable George Napier. From original documents preserved at Melbury; also a short Political Sketch of the Years 1760 to 1763, by Henry Fox, First Lord Holland; and other Manuscripts found at Holland House. Edited by the Countess of ILCHESTER and Lord STAVORDALE. With numerous Photogravure Portraits. Two vols., demy 8vo, 32s. net.

THE WORKS OF LORD BYRON. A New Text, collated with the Original MSS. and Revised Proofs, which are still in existence, with many hitherto unpublished Additions. This will be the most complete Edition of Lord Byron's Works, as no other Editors have had access to the Original MSS. With Portraits and Illustrations. To be completed in Twelve Vols. Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

POETRY. Edited by Ernest Hartley Coleridge.
Vol. I. The Early Poems.—Vol. II. Childe Harold.—Vol. III. The Giaour, Bride of Abydos, Corsair, &c.—Vol. IV. Prisoner of Chillon, Manfred, Beppo, Mazeppa, Vision of Judgment, Marino Faliero, &c.—Vol. V. Sardanapalus, &c. (In preparation).

LETTERS. Edited by Rowland E. Prothero.
Vol. I. 1788 to 1811.—Vol. II. 1811 to 1814.—Vol. III. 1814 to 1816.—Vol. IV. 1816 to 1820.—Vol. V. 1820 to 1822.—Vol. VI. 1822 to 1824. With Index.

Mr. Asquith in Edinburgh.—"Byron in one of his earliest letters—I quote from the new edition by which Mr. Prothero has laid all lovers of literature under a heavy debt—Byron expresses in his characteristic way the cynical view when he says, 'When one subtracts from life infancy, which is vegetation, sleep, eating and willing, buttoning and unbuttoning—how much remains of downright existence? The summer of the doormouse?'"—November 15, 1901.

THE LIFE AND POETICAL WORKS OF GEORGE CRABBE, 1754-1832. Edited by HIS SON. With Three Steel Plates, including Portrait. Royal 8vo, full leather, 7s. 6d. net; also cloth, 6s. net.
This is the only complete Edition of Crabbe's Poetry and Letters as published by Mr. Murray in 1847.

THE LADY POVERTY. A XIIIth Century Allegory. Translated by MONTGOMERY CARMICHAEL, Author of "In Tuscany." 12mo, 5s. net.
This is the first book ever written by St. Francis of Assisi, having been completed less than a year after the Saint's death, and it is now translated into English for the first time.

THE VOYAGE OF ITHOBAL. An Epic Poem. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, Arthur of "The Light of the World," &c. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.
". A fine, stately, well-poised, and well-managed poem. An epic at a day when we were beginning to wonder whether epics would ever be written again."—Daily Telegraph.

LOVE IDYLLS. By S. R. Crockett, Author of "The Stickit Minister." Crown 8vo, 5s. net.
"Mr. Crockett has gone back to his earlier manner—the manner of 'The Stickit Minister.' Mr. Crockett has never written better than in these 'Love Idylls'"—The Dundee Advertiser.

AN ENGLISHWOMAN'S LOVE LETTERS. Small crown 8vo, 5s. net.
". . . . beautiful letters, beautifully written. Their author was a woman of great parts, of very refined sense. It is much to say, but we remember nothing in literature quite so full of passionate human appeal as Letter LXXVII. Nothing could be more intensely human, no cry of a human soul more passionate. Few will read it dry-eyed. If there is any meaning in literature, if the most intimate of letters can express aught of human feeling, she was a woman to die for."—Vanity Fair.

THE PLEA OF PAN. By Henry W. NEVINSON. Small crown 8vo, ornamental binding, with cover design by Laurence Housman. 5s. net.
". . . stands for the pure love of nature and of rural life, for the cultivation of primordial instinct—in a word, for the return to simplicity . . . a book that will appeal to every jaded dweller in cities."—The Echo.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE OLD FOREIGN OFFICE. By SIR EDWARD HERTSLET, K.C.B., for many years Librarian and Keeper of the Archives of the Foreign Office. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

A SAILOR OF KING GEORGE: Being a History of the Adventures of Captain Hoffman, R.N. Edited by A. BECKFORD BEVAN and the Rev. H. B. WOLRYCHE WHITMORE. With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

A DOCTOR IN KHAKI. Impressions of War and of Hospital Work in South Africa. By FRANCIS FREMANTLE, M.A., M.B., M.R.C.P., late Civil Surgeon with the South African Field Force, and Assistant Secretary to the War Office Committee on Army Medical Reorganisation. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF LT.-GENERAL SIR HARRY SMITH, BART., OF ALIWAL, G.C.B. Including his Services in South America, in the Peninsula and France, at New Orleans, at Waterloo, in North America and Jamaica, in South Africa during the Kaffir War, in India during the Sikh War, and at the Cape, &c. Edited by G. C. MOORE SMITH. With some additional Chapters supplied by the Editor. With Portraits and Illustrations. Two vols., demy 8vo, 24s. net.

THE WORLD OF THE GREAT FOREST. How Animals, Birds, Reptiles, Insects Talk, Think, Work, and Live. By PAUL DU CHAILLU, Author of "Explorations in Equatorial Africa," "The Land of the Midnight Sun," &c. With over Fifty Illustrations by C. R. KNIGHT and J. M. GLEESON. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

AMONG THE POND PEOPLE. By Clara DILLINGHAM PIERSON, Author of "Among the Farmyard People," "Forest People," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

JOHN CHINAMAN. By E. H. Parker, Pro- fessor of Chinese at the Owens College; Acting Consul-General in Corea, Nov., 1886—Jan., 1887; Consul in Hainan, 1891-2, 1893-4, and in 1892-3 Adviser in Chinese Affairs to the Burma Government. Large crown 8vo, 8s. net.
This book consists of a series of anecdotes derived from the writer's own personal experience in China, illustrating the character and customs of the Chinese in their social, political, religious, and commercial dealings.

FINLAND AS IT IS. By Harry de Windt. With Map and numerous full-page and other Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 9s. net.

A SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF
OLD ENGLISH PLATE, Ecclesiastical, Decorative, and Domestic, its Makers and Marks. By WILFRED J. CRIPPS, C.B., F.S.A., Author of "College and Corporation Plate," "Old French Plate," &c. With 123 Illustrations and upwards of 2,600 Facsimiles of Plate Marks. A fine Edition, on large paper, with Additional Photogravures. Crown 4to, £2 2s. net.

THE FRESCOES in the SIXTINE CHAPEL IN ROME. By (Miss) EVELYN MARCH PHILLIPPS. With 24 Illustrations and a Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE PAINTERS OF FLORENCE. From the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Century. A handy book for travellers in Italy and students of art. By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. ADY). With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE CHEAPER EDITION OF CHARLES DARWIN'S WORKS.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

THE DESCENT OF MAN, and Selection in Relation to Sex. 1,060 pages. With Illustrations.

A NATURALIST'S VOYAGE. Journal of Researches into the Natural History and Geology of the Countries Visited during the Voyage of H.M.S. "Beagle" round the World, under the Command of Capt. Fitz Roy, R.N. With many Illustrations.

THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES, by Means of Natural Selection. With Portrait.
 Also an Edition of "The Origin of Species" in Paper Covers, 1s. net. Just published.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1544. Established 1869. 7 December, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

In a Christmas Supplement, which is included in the present number, we review the juvenile literature of the season, and give lists of what in our opinion are the "Six Best Picture Books," the "Six Best Story Books," and the "Twelve Best Boys' and Girls' Books."

We have received several letters during the week on the Henley v. Stevenson controversy, all disapproving of Mr. Henley's article. The subject continues to attract attention in the Press. Under the heading "Literary Leprosy" the Saturday Review published last week a characteristic article, from which we quote the peroration:

> This last instance of the fragility of literary friendship sets one thinking what it is in the pursuit of letters as a profession that so often, if not usually, in one way or another corrupts the manhood of literary men. And we speak of real men of letters in this instance; we do not refer to the miserable crowd of spurious imitators, who dub themselves "literary men." It is a painful phenomenon observed many centuries ago. Men of letters know it themselves. The title of this article is a phrase taught us by one of the best and best-known English men of letters now living; one who has lived amongst the cream of them all his life. Leigh Hunt was not the first nor the last literary leper. It is a pity they cannot be isolated and outlawed as are lepers of the flesh. We should be glad if we could say that this paltry exhibition of envy, jealousy, and spite was without parallel. Unfortunately the past makes any such statement impossible, and we are not sanguine of the future justifying it any the more. Still, it is too bad a case to ignore. If the world lets this pass, there is an end of all confidence and of any real friendship amongst authors and men of letters.

Punch published an open letter to Robert Louis Stevenson, beginning "Beloved Shade," and ending "Your Admirer." We extract two passages:

> Be sure of this, at any rate: we, who still live out our little lives in the busy haunts of men, and whose tired minds turn for refreshment to romance and poetry, and the eternal records of heroism and faith and gallant deeds, we love you as of old and reverence your name. Of all the gay and splendid souls that have flashed across our sky with a trail of glory, none was more vivid than yours, none has left a more enduring memory.
>
> One fine day there came along a rough and blustering sort of companion, and, "By heaven," says he, "what a pother they are all making about one who was after all a very poor and ordinary creature! Why, I was the man who helped him along; but for me he had never done a hand's turn to deserve fame, and, if you'll believe me, he requited me, as he did all others, most scurvily. He outsoared us, actually outsoared us all, won his way to glory while we, his betters, were left flapping ineffectual wings."

Mr. Sidney Colvin has announced his intention of dealing with the subject in his own time, which, we hope, will be soon.

THE FRIENDLY LEAD.

Further Instalments, on the Lines of W. E. H., in the Pall Mall Magazine.

I.—The Late Dr. Johnson.

By X X X.

It is time to speak out. After a careful reading of Mr. Boswell's so-called Life I am bound to put on record that the Samwell in those pages is not the Samwell that I knew. Search as I may, I find no mention of his having knocked over an old applewoman in Fleet Street one dark night and kicking her prostrate body. Why not, I ask? I miss these endearing touches. There is mention, it is true, of Samwell's losing a walking-stick in the Highlands; but I find no reference to the fact that I walked half over London one foggy day seeking it as a present for my friend. The portrait of Samwell is wholly inaccurate. There are people who knew him (I am not one of them) who do not scruple to apply to him a word of five syllables; yet who would gather so from the sycophantic pages of Mr. Boswell?

(And so forth.)

II.—The Late Sir Walter Scott.

By † † †.

It is time for truth: falsehood has played its part too long. The Walt of Mr. Lockhart's slavish pages is not the Walt that I knew and loved. The sickening dead-level of human kindness and gentleness which is maintained by the Walt of the book is another contribution to the mischievous and deliberate falsification of character now being prosecuted by all biographers. And where do I came in? There is mention of the success of Waverley, but not a word of the friendly hand that carried the manuscript from Walt's house to the publisher's. There is mention of Kenilworth, but I look in vain for any attribution of merit to the guide that showed Walt over the old ruin, and descanted on Amy Robsart's death. This is a colourless book. There is not a word of the orgies of the Roxburgh Club. Who would suppose from its pages that there are persons (I am not one of them) who apply to Scott a German word of twenty-four letters?

(And so forth.)

Last week we asked for the name of the author of some verses beginning "A fire mist and a planet," also of the originator of the saying that the pith of a woman's letter is in the postscript. We have received the following replies. Mr. Snell writes: "The verses (two out of four are printed in your paper) 'A fire mist and a planet,' appeared some years ago in the New England Magazine. I know that it was a November number, but I have no indication of the year." In regard to the other question Mr. Ker writes: "I see one of your correspondents wants to know the origin of the saying about a woman's postscript. This I do not know, but Clough in the Bothie says:

> "'Wit in the letter may prate, but wisdom speaks in the postscript.'"

Digitized by Google

Mr. Thomas Seccombe is one of the best equipped of our younger critics, and his training as an Assistant Editor of the Dictionary of National Biography is one that any writer might envy. We observe that he is about to do what we cannot but think is a very real and intelligent service to George Borrow, such a service as Edward FitzGerald had the will, but not the persistence, to do for Samuel Richardson. Borrow is not an easy writer from the ordinary reader's point of view. Hence we have "Borrovians"—readers whose reading muscles, if we may use the term, have been sufficiently supple to enable them to overcome those obstacles of strangeness, fickleness, and eccentricity which undoubtedly warn off the ordinary reader from the rich pastures of Lavengro and The Romany Rye. Mr. Seccombe sees this, and he has had the idea to throw to the timid but estimable non-"Borrovian" reader a bait such as he cannot easily resist. This takes the form of a disengagement of the Isopel Berners episode from the two autobiographical stories we have named, and its materialisation in a volume (16mo—a good size!) to be entitled: Isopel Berners: Being the History of Certain Drives in a Staffordshire Dingle, July, 1825; Extracted from Lavengro and Romany Rye. Mr. Seccombe's statement of his aims—of which we have an advance copy—is lucid and valuable as criticism. It is this:

> The idea of the present volume is to detach this episode, and to present it in its unity to the twentieth-century reader. It is not addressed primarily to Borrovians; but it is hoped that it may increase their number by winning over fresh readers to Borrow. With this object in view it is much more advantageous to concentrate the attention upon a small section than to direct it over a large area, for Borrow is essentially a penetrating, rather than a plausible, writer. There is a widely-spread opinion that Borrow, like the famous egg, is excellent in parts; but that for sustained reading Borrow is dry. It is perfectly true: Borrow is dry. What needs to be appreciated is that his dryness is not that of dry rot, but the dryness of high elevation, of a somewhat solitary and craggy humour—the dryness of "Don Quixote," of "Robinson Crusoe," of "Gil Blas," of "Tom Jones," of "D'Artagnan," and of "Hadji Baba." There is an absence of verdure. You will not find much sentiment in Borrow; but you will find "part of the secret, brother," especially in the Dingle. For here Borrow is at his best, in the open air among the gypsies—with Jasper, Pakomovna, Tawno, Ursula, the Man in Black—above all, Isopel or Belle Berners. These are characters in the present volume, interlocutors in dialogues of the greenwood, unrivalled since the heyday of the Forest of Arden.

A full critical introduction and a body of explanatory notes complete the book, which, no doubt, will be welcomed as an inviting open door to the whole Borrow. Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton are the publishers.

Prof. T. Roger Smith writes: "You, and possibly some of your readers, may like to see the enclosed quaint epitaph, in which the poet of Bakewell (Derbyshire) has included the two concluding lines of Dr. Johnson's noble verse given on page 497 of last week's Academy:

> The vocal powers, here let us mark,
> Of Philip, our late parish clerk,
> In church none ever heard a layman
> With a louder voice say Amen.
> The choir lament thy vocal tones;
> The town, so sure here rest thy bones.
> "Sleep undisturbed within this peaceful shrine,
> Till angels wake thee with a note like thine."

In a lively article on his "Editorial Experiences," in the Universal Magazine, Mr. E. T. Cook allows us to peep into some of his old post-bags. The unreviewed, he tells us—and we know it well—are artful. "I happen to know that a long review of my book will appear in the ——. I am sure your journal will not like to be behindhand." Again: "You have not reviewed my novel; but if you knew what sufferings I endure from chronic dyspepsia, and how hard a struggle it is to support a widowed mother, you would, I am sure, relent." Another of Mr. Cook's correspondents was much more practical:

> Dear Sir,—I have an interest in the book The Old Morality which was left at your office and advertised as per enclosed receipt. Will you kindly give me a review of it? and on your informing me of your name I shall send you a postal order for £1 as a honorarium for your trouble.—Yours very truly, > —— (Auctioneer and Valuer).

A dentist offered to draw teeth in return for a review. Mr. Cook continues:

> I can remember a time when the increased allotment of space to literature and literary persons somewhat puzzled and irritated printers who had served their apprenticeship under a different order of ideas. On one occasion a rather long account of Matthew Arnold was sent upstairs to the composing-room. "Who is this M. Arnold?" one of the printers was heard to ask, "and how many more columns of him is the editor going to shovel up?" "Keep your hair on," a more tolerant companion replied; "you wait till old Ruskin goes off, and then you'll see something." And they did. But that was in another paper. The head printers are very important persons, I may remark, in an editor's circle. His comfort, and even in some ways his efficiency, depend not a little on their zeal and intelligence. Some of those with whom I have been fortunate enough to work had a very nice appreciation of relative literary values from a newspaper point of view. Once, in absence of mind, I sent up to the printer, in the full season, a review of Six New Philosophical Treatises. "For the August Bank Holiday, I presume?" said the printer, reprovingly. We had to publish in those days on Bank Holidays, and as nobody reads papers on Bank Holidays, we used the occasions to work off our choicest remnants of unreadable articles. But those Six Treatises did not get in. On looking into the matter, when the time came, the printer found that we had on hand Seven New Volumes of Sermons which had been waiting several months for the same auspicious occasion. Well, there were, at any rate, seven gentlemen who found that day something to read in the paper.

A writer in the Review of Reviews gives some extraordinary statistics of the American appetite for fiction. He assures us that the present year has seen at least six novels which run to a circulation of 150,000, one-half as many more which reach 100,000, a score with what would once have been the phenomenal circulation of 50,000, and from forty to fifty with editions of 20,000 to 30,000. Nowadays a book scarcely moves which does less. Work out this sum, add the editions of the 800 or more novels with normal editions, and there is a novel production of not less than some 3,000,000 volumes. No flood like this exists the world over. The literary statistics of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Boston give a public library circulation of 6,000,000 volumes a year, of which some 4,800,000 are novels. The lesser libraries will nearly double this. In all, this appetite for novel-reading calls for the issue of 3,000,000 volumes, and the circulation of fiction new and old, through libraries, is some 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 volumes. The libraries, where fiction is always 70 to 80 per cent. of the total overturn, run up to a circulation of 400,000 volumes of fiction a month in American cities. This, too, does not reckon the flood of fiction in two-thirds of the population not in cities pent and the myriad lesser circles of book circulation.

Digitized by Google

In a single great American store—one of the five or six largest in the country—there are in a year, roughly speaking, sold 7,000 volumes of Walter Scott, 9,000 of Thackeray, 12,000 of Eliot, and close to 20,000 volumes of Dickens. George Eliot and Thackeray sell by sets. Eliot especially, a set being a cheap present. Cooper, too, in solitary volumes like the Pathfinder, runs past all the rest. Scott and Dickens sell by volumes. The sale of sets, while large in amount, is small by the side of the call for single volumes. No one in a position to judge would put the sale of Dickens in the current year at less than from 200,000 to 250,000 volumes. His own life saw no year of more. The writer who gives these figures adds:

> Do you doubt these figures? Do you imagine that the stacked sets of Dickens, Scott, Cooper, Thackeray, and Eliot you see in cairns in the great department-stores are there for ornament? Do you realise that every square inch of table surface in the thronged aisles in which you will jostle for two months to come is hoarded and watched for gain like the tiny squares at the bottom of the blue clay of a Kimberley diamond-trench? Nothing is there which does not sell, which has not proved to be in the struggle for bargains the fittest for buying. Remember, too, that the vast subscription-book machinery, which thirty years ago sold gilded emptiness, is now carrying to the buyer sets and sets of standard novels, so that a half-dozen, all shapely, will be disputing the field at once, teasing your curiosity with adroit postal-cards. . . . Given a certain amount of advertising in the papers, and the great department-stores must buy a certain number of a new novel, graduated to the publicity purchased in the papers, sure to awake a certain demand at the counter.

Those of our readers who so conscientiously find the best novels of the year in our recent plébiscite will be interested to hear the verdict on their selection by an American literary paper. After quoting the list, our contemporary says: "There is no mistaking the quality of the list. It is good; and a little thought and examination will show that it is a far more distinctive list than a similar canvass might have produced in America; that is, judged by the 'books most in demand.' What American list, for example, made up as the result of votes from the great reading public, would include The Column?"

In the New York Times Saturday Review, Mr. John Lane delivers himself on the literary outlook. He thinks that on both sides of the Atlantic protracted campaigns have proved a healthy stimulus, and that a severe blow has been "dealt upon the pate of the vapid." On both sides the reading public demands: (1) In fiction the telling, the clever, the pregnant; (2) in general literature the healthy, the trenchant, the true; (3) in poetry the real, the convinced, the inspired. The keynote of the demand is: "Of new work, whatever its class, let us have 'the real right thing'; revive for us the old where it surpasses the new."

A transition from the return of the Duke of York to the human and literary qualities of Hazlitt would seem to be a stiff exercise in the art of "jining flats," but it is accomplished dexterously enough by the writer of "Musings Without Method," in the December Blackwood. The writer's appreciation of Hazlitt (à propos of Mr. Dent's new edition) is careful and penetrating. The following sketch of Hazlitt's style as an essayist is well worth quoting:

> He neither corrected his proofs nor amended his judgments. There is not one of his essays which does not seem as though it were struck off at a blow. His style has the defects and qualities of his method. It is often slipshod and inaccurate; the words are sometimes tumbled down in grammatical confusion. But the meaning is never obscure, because Hazlitt always thought clearly; and the fault of expression is a mechanical fault of haste and heedlessness. Above all, he was a master rather of the phrase than of the word. That is to say, he seems to have found his phrases ready made, and did not look about him for the words which should compose them. And his phrases, once they are made, cohere without particles. The logical thread of his argument is so tightly held that he has no need of "buts" and "therefores," and the innumerable shifts of the inexpert. So that an essay of his contriving resembles the simple masonry of primitive times. The sentences fall into their places unattached, while the whole is as stable as those ancient walls whose blocks of stone fit and cohere without mortar. But, apart from its structure, there is a fire and dash in his style which defy analysis, and which proceed from a ripe mind and a vivid intelligence. He has less insight than Coleridge into general principles; he has not the imaginative subtlety which makes Charles Lamb the best critic of literature that ever lived. But he possesses qualities of which Lamb and Coleridge knew nothing. None of his contemporaries could have penned the magnificent letter to Gifford, the best piece of chastisement known to literature. No other could have written of sport, of the theatre, and of life with the brilliance and "gusto" which were always his. And it is this wide knowledge and tireless energy which make the least of his essays not merely a criticism of literature but a criticism of life to boot.

It is rather amusing to see how, in matters which are in chronic dispute between English and American readers, each side scolds each other in the same words and tones. Some Americans are angry with Dr. Van Dyke for introducing English spelling into his book of stories called The Ruling Passion. One protester says: "Why should the printers of Dr. Van Dyke's superbly written American stories adopt the English absurdity of spelling?" Well, we do not see why they should, and we can understand American indignation, for there was some little outcry here a few months ago when Sir Walter Besant's East London appeared with American spelling. "Are we," continues our writer, "to lose all that we have gained by our scholarship? Is the utterly unreasoning prejudice of a British reading public to undo the will of a twice as large American reading public? Is Great Britain for ever to dominate the immeasurably greater Britain? The statistics of book publishing show that even for British works of consequence there are ten readers in the United States for one in Great Britain. Why then should American publishers relinquish all that we have gained for a rational and scholarly spelling reform, merely for the sake of placating the prejudices of an inconsequently small British audience? Henry van Dyke will have a hundred entranced American readers to one condescending English admirer. Why not spell an American book in the American way, and incidentally teach English readers how the great majority of English-speaking people spell English?" It will be observed that this angry American cousin has not the least idea of leaving us the liberty which he demands for his own countrymen. English spelling in an American book is an outrage, but American spelling in an English book is merely a wholesome lesson to the backward and wrong-headed Briton.

The English Customs authorities, it seems, are acting with a high hand in regard to French books imported into this country. A "Literary Man" in London writes to a Paris contemporary: "Some three weeks ago I went to one of the leading foreign book-shops in the West End to ask for a work by Guy de Maupassant. To my great surprise, I was informed by one of the assistants that the book was out of stock. On showing my astonishment at a book of such a standard author (who counts among his admirers a celebrated man like Jules Verne) not being in stock at one of the principal French libraries, I was informed by the manager that a few days before between forty and fifty volumes by Maupassant, published by Messrs. Paul Ollendorff, of Paris, had been seized and confiscated by the English Customs at Newhaven on the ground of their being indecent." It is stated that for the last five or six months bales of books consigned to the London firm in question had been detained for weeks by the Customs, and any number of books abstracted from the same, which were published by the very first and leading Paris publishers, as Fasquelle (Charpentier), Ollendorff, Juven, Borel, Empis, Méricaut, Calmann-Lévy, and many others. "Almost any book having an illustrated cover or the word 'amour' in its title was held up and declared to be indecent"!

Digitized by Google

Mr. Sidney Lee has been this week the recipient of the following letter:

Marlborough House, Pall Mall, S.W.,
October 25, 1901.

My dear Mr. Lee,—As the King believes that the last of the Supplementary Volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography is published to-day, he commands me to congratulate you on the final completion of this great work.

It is one which cannot fail to be most useful to everybody, and no English library should be without a copy.

From what His Majesty has been able to read of the various articles, he is much struck by the ability and research which have been shown by the writers, as well as by the admirable and careful way in which the work has been edited.—Believe me, yours very truly, (Signed) Francis Knollys.

As Wednesday of this week is the one hundred and sixth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Carlyle, it may appropriately be mentioned, says the Westminster Gazette, that, since the house, No. 25, Cheyne Row, was officially opened to the public by Mr. John Morley six years ago, as many as 16,000 persons have paid for admission. In the year just ended the number of visitors has somewhat exceeded that of the immediately corresponding period, though somewhat less than in 1899; and the United States, as hitherto, is more fully represented than any other country in the visitors' book. An interesting letter of John Ruskin's, dated "Denmark Hill, Febrauary 17, 1867," has lately been added to the manuscripts. It concludes thus: "I am ashamed of my writing. I cannot help it, unless I write so very slow that I should forget what I had to say. Sincere regards to Lady Ashbourton. Ever yours affectionately, J. Ruskin."

The little book, called Nonsense Rhymes, by the late Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse (Brimley Johnson), would, at the first blush, be ranged with those for children; but it is really for those who retain a child's sense of fun, with something of adult sophistication added. Mr. Monkhouse had a very pretty gift for nonsense: not nonsense in the highest, not nonsense with the furious rollick of Lear; but good nonsense of a sedater kind. We quote a few specimens:

There once was a girl of Lahore,
The same shape behind as before;
As no one knew where
To offer a chair,
She had to sit down on the floor.

There once was a Master of Arts,
Who was nuts upon cranberry tarts;
When he'd eaten his fill
He was awfully ill,
But he still was a Master of Arts.

Another has a quality new to nonsense verse: a touch of the uncanny:

There are men in the village of Erith,
Whom nobody seeth or heareth,
And there looms on the marge
Of the river a barge,
Which nobody roweth or steereth.

Mr. G. K. Chesterton, who illustrates these lyrics, follows the Lear convention very successfully. It is a promising thing for criticism when one of the ablest of the younger critics is found to have this feeling for nonsense. There are too many critics who have none.

On page 567 will be found the titles of a number of books that have interested and pleased certain readers during 1901. The following answers to our inquiry were received too late for inclusion in the list:

Dean Hole writes: "In my eighty-second year I have no longer the appetite or the power of digestion for the pièces de résistance, the rounds and the joints, the solid food of historic, scientific, or dogmatic literature, and am therefore unable to write as to the merits of modern publications on these erudite subjects. I retain a keen relish for the lighter refreshments, but the dishes are so numerous and the cooks so accomplished that it is difficult to make a selection; and, with hesitation and constraint, I reply to your question, and state that of the novels which I have read in this current year, The Faringdons strikes me as the cleverest of all, and that more recently I have been much pleased and interested in The Casting of the Nets."

Mr. I. Zangwill writes: "Maeterlinck's The Life of the Bee and Rudyard Kipling's Kim. But the real revelation of the year for me has been the critical and other work, uncollected in book form, of Mr. G. K. Chesterton."

The weakest part of Kim was the characterisation of the Russian agents. Reviewers did not treat them very seriously, but they have roused the anger of a Russian gentleman "familiar with English literature," who thus speaks his mind in the Westminster Gazette:

I have read Rudyard Kipling's new book, Kim. Good and well written book; but what a horrible passage about two Russian spies going to India! Everything about them is so imbecile and so low, that I never thought a writer such as Kipling would abase himself to such a level, the level of a penny-a-liner in a penny paper. Everything is incredible. First, two Russian agents (one of them is, nobody knows why, a Frenchman) go to make a map of the country in secret. This shows such ignorance. The maps of all countries under English rule are made by the Indian Survey Department; those are the best maps, and they extend straight to our Russian frontier. Our Survey has its maps up to the English frontier. In making these maps we took in the frontiers of both countries; we have long exchanged maps, and are exchanging them now. I know that, as a Russian military attaché, and I had when in London all the Indian Survey maps up to our frontier. Thus no Russian has any need to go into English possessions and make maps that we already possess. Any map, made stealthily without proper instruments, would be a sheer piece of childish stupidity, in view of these great scientific English maps made at a cost of millions of money, with the best instruments in the world, with slow care during years, and all of which we possess!

Thus, the plot of this Russian incursion is a piece of ignorance. A man attempts to speak of something of which he has not the remotest knowledge. This lowers Kipling.

Then, those two individuals are horridly cruel, and maltreat, beat, and shoot the people they come in contact with. This is again most childish of Kipling. When anyone goes into a foreign country on a treasonable expedition he tries to go quietly, to conciliate people, to glide on in

Digitized by Google

SEELEY & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS

THE PORTFOLIO MONOGRAPHS No. 42.

MEDIÆVAL LONDON. By the Rev. CANON BENHAM and CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A., Librarian to the Corporation of London. With a Frontispiece in Photogravure, 4 Plates printed in colour, and many other illustrations. Super-royal, 8vo, sewed 5s. net, or cloth, gilt top, 7s.

"A scholarly survey of mediæval London. The illustrations adorn greatly the volume."—Academy.

"The picturesque antiquarianism of Canon Benham, . . . the accurate knowledge of the City and its history which Mr. Welch possesses, both find ample illustration in the deeply interesting pages of this delightful volume."—The Bookseller.

SACHARISSA. Some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland. By Mrs. HENRY ADY, Author of "Madame," &c. With 5 Portraits. Third Edition. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We have nothing but praise for the way in which the author has done her work."—Spectator.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WIDOW WILEY, and Some Other Old Folk. By BROWN LINNET. With 20 Illustrations, mostly Photographed from Life by the Author. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"A delightful little volume."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A literary and artistic pearl of great price."—Manchester Guardian.

"Vivid pictures of country things and country people, illustrated by some photographs, which are as good in their way as anything that we have seen."—Spectator.

OLD BLACKFRIARS. In the days of Van Dyck. A Story by BEATRICE MARSHALL, Author of "The Life of Emma Marshall," &c. With 8 Illustrations, 5s.

"Miss Marshall has the delicacy in drawing the lines of character, the kindly and sympathetic spirit which we have learnt to associate with her name."—Spectator.

"One can read it for its graceful miniatures of life in the England of Charles I. before the outbreak of civil strife."—Glasgow Herald.

SECOND EDITION.

EMMA MARSHALL. A Biographical Sketch. By BEATRICE MARSHALL. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 6s.

"The daughter's work has many of the mother's qualities . . . indeed, a worthy tribute to a pure unselfish memory."—Daily Chronicle.

COMING; or, the Golden Year. By SELINA GAYE, Author of "The Great World's Farm," &c. Third Edition. With 8 Illustrations, 5s.

"A remarkable tale. A very thoughtful and beautiful book."—Guardian.

"Full of romance and much delicate thought."—World.

FOREST OUTLAWS; or, St. Hugh and the King. By the Rev. E. GILLIAT. Third Edition. With 16 Illustrations, 5s.

"A thoroughly interesting and fascinating book, written with much ability and knowledge."—St. James's Gazette.

PROFESSOR CHURCH'S BOOKS.

HELMET AND SPEAR: Stories from the Wars of the Greeks and Romans. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, Author of "Stories from Homer," &c. With 8 Illustrations by G. MORROW. 5s.

"Composed upon an excellent plan. . . . The battles are adequately illustrated, and we have seen no better boys' book of late than 'Helmet and Spear.'"—Spectator.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Stories from Homer. 5s.
Stories from Virgil. 5s. [5s.
Stories from the Greek Tragedians.
Stories from the Greek Comedians.
Stories of the East. 5s. [5s.
The Story of the Persian War. 5s.
Stories from Livy. 5s.
The Burning of Rome. 5s.
A Young Macedonian. 5s.
The Count of the Saxon Shore. 5s.
Heroes of Chivalry and Romance.
The Fall of Athens. 5s. [5s.
Stories from English History. 5s.
With the King at Oxford. 5s.
The Hammer. 5s.
Roman Life in the Days of Cicero, 5s.
Three Greek Children. 3s. 6d.

An Illustrated Catalogue of Books suitable for Prizes will be sent on application.

London: SEELEY & CO., Limited, 38, Great Russell Street.

First Edition nearly Exhausted.

Second Edition in Preparation.

A NEW BOOK BY MARIE CORELLI.

A Christmas Greeting

By MARIE CORELLI.

Small 4to. One Shilling.

CONTAINING:—

"A Christmas Carol at Sandringham."
"The Soul of Queen Alexandra."
"A Question of Faith" (in which is discussed the matter of the King's Coronation Oath).
"The Devil's Motor" and "Joe's Orchid."

And the first "HYMN for the CORONATION" yet published.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, W.C.

MESSRS.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S

Books for the Christmas Season.

ILLUSTATED Edition of

The WORKS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

With Coloured Illustrations by Leslie Brooke, Byam Shaw, H. J. Ford, G. P. Jacomb Hood, Eleanor F. Brickdale, Patten Wilson, Robert Sauber, and others. Twenty Volumes. Imperial 8vo, 2s. 6d. net per Volume.

Each Volume sold separately.

The Contemporary Review says: "A chief merit of the luxurious edition is that no editorial barrier is allowed to come between the poet and the reader. Care has been taken to provide a pure text, and brief notes and glossaries are added to each play. On the score of production the edition is such as bookmen have learnt to expect from Messrs. Constable, form, print, paper, and binding being alike excellent. A prominent and charming feature are the title-pages and coloured illustrations, printed on Japanese vellum from designs by eminent artists."

POCKET EDITION OF

THE NOVELS OF GEORGE MEREDITH. In 15

Volumes. 2s. 6d. net each Volume, cloth; or 3s. 6d. net in full leather.

NOW READY.

RICHARD FEVEREL.
BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.
DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.
THE EGOIST.
EVAN HARRINGTON.
SANDRA BELLONI.

"A cheap edition such as this is one of the means which a Meredith lover gladly sees adopted for extending the circle of readers of by far the greatest master of fiction now living."—Saturday Review.

"The really excellent pocket edition. . . The volumes are almost magically light and thin, yet the paper has substance, and the type is excellent."—Academy

MR. TOM GALLON'S CHRISTMAS BOOK.

THE MAN WHO KNEW BETTER.

By the Author of "TATTERLEY," "KIDDY," &c.

Second Impression now Ready.

Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE. 6s.

"We have had nothing like it since the great days when the luxurious public could confidently look forward to be delighted by a piquant and seasonable tale from a Thackeray or a Dickens."—British Weekly.

TRAVELS ROUND OUR VILLAGE. By Eleanor G.

HAYDEN. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. 7s. 6d. net.

"A pleasingly just appreciation of the Berkshire dialect and character. Mr. L. Leslie Brooke's illustrations add to the attractiveness of the volume." Athenæum.

"The pictures of rural scenery are full of refreshment for town dwellers. Miss Hayden has achieved a remarkable success."—British Weekly.

WITH THE FLAG AT SEA. By Walter Wood.

Illustrated by SEPPINGS WRIGHT. 6s.

"A handy and well-written record of some of the chief battles and remarkable exploits and occurrences of our naval history."—Pall Mall Gazette.

WHEN THE LAND WAS YOUNG. By Lafayette

McLAWS. Illustrated. 6s.

"Opens amid a thrilling scene with Indians, and later there are numberless adventures with Spaniards, pirates, and the rest, such as boys love to read about. The author has a vivid pen, and the picture we get of the times in the Southern States when the land was young is very striking."—Westminster Gazette.

CONSTABLE'S POCKET SERIES.

In Parchment back, brown paper boards, gilt top.

SELECTED POEMS OF JAMES, 1st MARQUIS OF MONTROSE, and ANDREW MARVELL. Edited by R. S. RAIT, Fellow of New College, Oxford. 2s. 6d. net.

THE STORY OF BHANAVAR THE BEAUTIFUL. By George Meredith. 3s. 6d. net.

THE TALE OF CHLOE. By George Meredith. 3s. 6d. net.

SELECTED POEMS. By George Meredith. 3s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE OF PASTEUR. By Rene Vallery-Radot.

Translated from the French. 2 Vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

"A very full account of the man and his work, and is in all respects an excellent biography. . . . A clear picture of a lovable personality and of the highest type of scientific worker."—Standard.

A RIBBON OF IRON. By Annette Meakin. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"By those who take an interest in the steady development of the Russian Empire—and to-day there are many—the book under notice should certainly not be missed."—Literary World.

10/- A HEAD PER WEEK FOR HOUSE BOOKS.

By Mrs. C. S. PEEL. 3s. 6d. An Indispensable Manual for Housekeepers

FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

NEW CANTERBURY TALES. . By MAURICE HEWLETT.
STEPHEN CALINARI. . . By JULIAN STURGIS.
LOVE LIKE A GIPSY. . . By BERNARD CAPES.
CARDIGAN. By R. W. CHAMBERS.

New Illustrated List post free on application.

A. CONSTABLE & Co., Ltd., Westminster.

Digitized by Google

silence and unobserved, but not to hustle, to beat, to shoot, and to kill those among whom he is to travel!

Then, they are made to repeat at every moment: "We know how to deal with Orientals!" But Kipling does not know even the meaning of this. It means that we give them (the Orientals) absolutely equal rights with Russians; that not only we never beat them, but that we give them even more protection than our own people, as they are new to our ways; that we give them all the means of being happy and rich, so that Turkestan, Korea, Bokhara, and Khiva are now the richest parts of Russia, richer than the Russian European provinces—which is even unjust—whilst in India millions are yearly dying of starvation and poverty.

The ugliness, physical and moral, of these Russians of Kipling surpasses imagination, and is meant by him as typical of Russians in general. This shows how greatly Kipling is at fault. In Russia, as in England, there is a very great number of men who are physically, morally, and intellectually beautiful.

Messrs. Macmillan have just published a volume of poems from Victor Hugo, rendered into English verse by Sir George Young, the translator of Sophocles. The selection ranges over the whole of Hugo's immense and multifarious work, and contains more than 10,000 lines of verse.

The volume of Oxford Studies by the late J. R. Green is mainly composed of papers on Oxford, treating of the provincial centre as well as the University, town and gown, clubs and highwaymen, politics, literature, and so forth, during the eighteenth century; it includes also an article on the early history of Oxford, and two essays from The Saturday Review on contemporary life of the University.

Bibliographical.

Among recent publications by the S.P.C.K. is a cheap illustrated edition of Mrs. Trimmer's History of the Robins, as edited by Miss Edith Carrington, and with all references to the Benson family cut out. The reprint seems to be American in origin, for the Introduction is from the pen of Edward E. Hale. In spite of the revisions and omissions, one is glad to find the History again in circulation in this country, for it is to be feared that English children of to-day know very little, if anything, about Mrs. Trimmer, and it may soon become necessary to annotate Calverley's lines about the song-birds:

> They need no parasols, no goloshes;
> And good Mrs. Trimmer she feedeth them.

It is one of the little ironies of life that this excellent lady should live only in Calverley and The History of the Robins. Where now are her works on the Catechism and the Book of Common Prayer, her abridgments of Scripture History, her Sermons for Family Reading, and so forth? Who now reads her biography (published in 1814)? It suffices that she did good in her own generation.

Mr. Lang's article in the Cornhill is one of the brightest that he has written for some time. It is full of lively allusion, of a kind, however, not always quite accurate. For instance, referring to Coleridge's view of "the secret of the painful earth," Mr. Lang says: "The world cared no more for his solution of the secret than, according to Mark Twain, housemaids care for the 'Immortality of the Soul.'" But this rather misrepresents the Yankee humorist. He is discussing the aggravating ways of chambermaids (not housemaids), and says: "They use up more hair-oil than any six men. If charged with purloining the same, they lie about it. What do they care about a hereafter? Absolutely nothing." Mr. Lang should "verify his allusions."

I do not think it has been noted lately—à propos to the Paolo and Francesca of Mr. Phillips and M. Rostand's promised work on the same subject—that Byron once thought of making the story of the lovers the theme of a poetic play. In January, 1821, the poet wrote in his Journal: "Pondered the subjects of four tragedies to be written (life and circumstances permitting)"; and these subjects were Sardanapalus, Cain, Tiberius, and Francesca da Rimini. The first two of these, of course, he lived to deal with.

It is by a curious coincidence that we are presented, almost simultaneously, with two Anthologies of Humorous Poetry. It is a pity, I think, that workers in this literary department do not specialise their efforts more. "Humorous" is too wide a term to live up to. Mr. Deane has recently done something in the right direction by essaying A Little Book of Light Verse, but even the phrase "light verse" is not sufficiently descriptive. One ought to distinguish between the broadly comic and mere banter or persiflage, and so forth. Parody certainly ought to be dealt with by itself, as being a very distinct genre. Yet there is no handy or satisfactory collection of rhythmic parody. Mr. Walter Hamilton's work in several volumes is a collection, not a selection. A really choice anthology of parody in verse would be a welcome thing; but it would have to be really choice. Perhaps there is nothing quite so bad in literature as a feeble parody.

It is pleasant to note the presence of the bibliographical element in the new Chambers' Cyclopædia of English Literature. That element was lacking in the previous editions, and its inclusion now is a testimony to the growing interest in things bibliographical. Of course, the bibliography of English writers is a notable feature of the Dictionary of National Biography. In the Cyclopædia, however, you get the same thing in a condensed form—in itself a benefit; and, moreover, the information is brought down to date—or, at any rate, to 1900—which is another advantage. I see, by the way, that "a complete biography" is to be one of the attractions of the "Variorum and Definitive Edition" of the works of "Omar" FitzGerald, promised by Messrs. Doubleday, of New York.

Publication is being given this week to a tragedy in verse, written by Mr. Newman Howard, of whose volume, Footsteps of Proserpine, and other Verses and Interludes, published early in 1898, some of us have pleasant memories. The work, we are told, is founded on the story of Gudrun of Iceland. It is, I presume, identical (save, no doubt, for some compression) with the play by Mr. Howard, called "Klarian the Icelander," of which, I notice, a "copyright performance" was given the other day. Mr. Stephen Phillips's recent success as a dramatist will no doubt cause many of our younger poets to write directly or indirectly for the stage.

The termination of the copyright in A Tale of Two Cities will not necessarily lead to a multiplicity of new editions of that work. The field, I should say, is already fully occupied by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, who, during the last seven or eight years, have themselves sent out seven separate editions of the Tale, at prices ranging from half-a-crown to sixpence. There was a sixpenny edition in 1899, and another in the year following. So long ago as 1888, Messrs. Chapman brought out an edition of the Tale at eighteenpence.

The appearance (through Mr. Heinemann) of new translations into English of Mérimée's Carmen and Colomba reminds one of the translation of Carmen issued in 1896 with an introductory essay by Miss Louise Guiney. A literal version of Colomba—a crib, in fact—had appeared two years previously. Of Carmen Messrs. Routledge published in 1887 an illustrated edition, followed in 1888 by a cheap edition in their "Pocket Library." Both stories were issued by Messrs. Vizetelly in English just twenty years ago.

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Maeterlinck.

Maurice Maeterlinck. Théâtre. Three vols. (Lacomblez Bruxelles.)

Maurice Maeterlinck. Sister Béatrice and Ardiane and Barbe Bleue. Translated by Bernard Miall. (George Allen.)

THE convenient new edition of M. Maeterlinck's collected plays will be complete in three volumes. The first contains La Princesse Maleine, L'Intruse and Les Aveugles; the second, not yet published, will be devoted to Pelléas et Mélisande, with the three "marionette" dramas, Alladine et Palomedes, Intérieur and La Mort de Tintagiles; in the third, Aglavaine et Sélysette is followed by two tiny fresh pieces, Sœur Béatrice and Ariane et Barbe Bleue, of which, almost at the moment of their publication, a translation reaches us from the hand of an English poet, Mr. Bernard Miall. As to these trifles, we shall say a word anon; but we wish, first of all, to call attention to the particularly interesting critical preface with which the first volume opens. Its interest lies in the fact that it is an attempt by the poet to lay bare something of the literary ideals in the light of which his plays have been written, something of the spiritual evolution which his soul has gone through while he was writing them. It is both autobiography and criticism of a very fine and subtle character—criticism from the inside, as it were. M. Maeterlinck is able to distinguish two phases in the attitude towards life which his dramas mirror: to the first belong all the plays which precede Aglavaine et Sélysette, to the second Aglavaine et Sélysette itself. Princesse Maleine he seems inclined to exclude from the account as experimental and boyish. And, indeed, it has its naïvetés. All the early dramas, says their author, represent life under the same aspect, as the sport and toy of vast elemental forces, dimly guessed rather than known, but apparently malevolent, and the enemies of joy and peace. Youth and love collide tragically with these destinies. The sage and old dimly foresee them, but are powerless to avert. The commonest of the shapes which they take is that of death itself:

> A death indifferent and inexorable, blind, groping well-nigh at hazard, bearing away by choice the youngest folk and the least unhappy, simply because these keep themselves less quiet than those who are more wretched, and that any unusually sudden movement in the darkness attracts its attention.

M. Maeterlinck deliberately defends this pessimistic view of existence as justified by the present state of man's investigation into the problems of his being's source and aim; but he adds, with characteristic candour, that he no longer thinks it absolutely sufficient as a basis for dramatic creation. It is true, but there are other truths equally true, and perhaps, on the whole, more encouraging and more profitable to contemplate. He wishes, therefore, that his dramas should escape from the domination of death, and, as this is impossible if the metaphysical issues are to be raised, he will be content not to raise them, and to find more humble themes in the patient analysis of what humanity itself has to offer of joy, wisdom, and love. This, he says, is what he attempted to do in Aglavaine et Sélysette, and he is candid enough once more to admit that he failed, for death refused to be exorcised from the play. We have given a brief outline of the main argument of this pregnant little essay, which is much to be recommended to all admirers—and there are many by now—of M. Maeterlinck's work. An artist's own interpretation of his creations is not, of course, final; but it generally, as in the present case, deserves a respectful hearing.

As to Ariane et Barbe Bleu and Sœur Béatrice, M. Maeterlinck warns us against taking them too seriously. They do not claim to convey deep moral or philosophic ideas, but are of the nature of little texts begged from him by musicians as subjects for lyric embroidery. According to Mr. Miall, they are actually being set to music by a M. Gilkas. They are, in fact, slight enough, and although they are marked by many of the familiar features of M. Maeterlinck's manner, the symbolism is simple and less clouded than usual. They require a somewhat spectacular setting, such as an exceptionally poetic opéra-comique might perhaps afford. In one there are showers of jewels—emeralds, amethysts, sapphires, pearls, rubies, and diamonds—over the stage; in the other a sudden magical and luminous efflorescence of divine flowers. The more charming of the two—in its unpretending way—is Ariane et Barbe Bleu. The basis of the plot is, of course, our childhood's ancient fairy-tale of Blue-Beard. But Ariane does not go the way of her predecessors. She is the modern woman, ardent for light and knowledge. She goes to set her sisters free, and they will not be set free. The play, by the way, has as subtitle, La Délivrance Inutile. She enters the castle, with the deliberate purpose of disobedience:

> Before all things we must disobey. That is the primal duty, when an order comes with threats and is unexplained. The others were wrong, and if they were lost, it was because they hesitated.

She is an indomitable and baffled spirit. Passing the jewels by, she goes straight to the forbidden door and penetrates to the hidden caverns beneath. There she finds all her sisters, all the dear, sad, loving women of the earlier plays, Sélysette and Mélisande, Ygraine and Bellangère and Alladine. She embraces them, and bids them take heart.

> Can you not laugh yet—laugh and clap your hands?
> And all the rest are silent! What is this?
> What are you? Will you live in terror thus > Always? I do not see you smile at all,
> While with your eyes—incredulous eyes!—you watch
> My every gesture. Will you not believe
> The joyful news? O do you not regret
> The light of day, the birds among the boughs,
> The high green gardens blowing overhead?
> Do you not know the world is in the Spring?
> I yester-morning, wandering by the way,
> Drank in the light, the sense of space of dawn,
> So many flowers beneath my every step,
> I knew not where to set my careless feet!
> Have you forgot the sunlight and the dew,
> Dew in the leaves, and laughter of the sea?
> The sea but now was laughing as it laughs
> On days whereon it knows the wind of joy,
> And all its thousand ripples approved my feet,
> Its ripples singing on the sands of light

She puts herself at their head, teaches them to break out of their dungeon, herself bursts the bars and lets the light, the divine light which they had falsely taken for a superincumbent ocean, flood in. She decks and adorns them, hangs the jewels upon them, frees them even from the constraint of their raiment, bares Sélysette's arms and lets the marvel of Mélisande's hair flow loose. Her passion and audacity master them for a while. They are on the point of leaving the castle, and then they fail her. The peasants, angered at Barbe Bleue's wickedness, have attacked him. He is brought in wounded, and the women cluster round with soft hearts and tears of pity. Ariane is herself the first to cut his bonds. But her purpose has not changed. Can they be brought to leave him?

> SELYSETTE (running after her, and stopping her.)
> Ariane, Ariane
> Where are you going?

Digitized by Google

ARIANE.
Far away from here.
Down yonder, where I am awaited still. . . .
Do you come with me, Sélysette ?
SELYSETTE.
I too ?
But when will you return ?
ARIANE.
I shall not.
MELISANDE.
O !
Ariane !
ARIANE.
Are you coming, Mélisande ?
(MELISANDE looks to and fro, from ARIANE to BARBE BLEUE, and does not reply.)
O see the open door, the far blue hills !
Ygraine, are you not coming ?
[YGRAINE does not turn her head.]
Now the moon,
The stars, illumine every road. And you,
Bellangère, do you come ?
BELLANGERE (shortly.)
No. . . .

If Sœur Beatrice is less essentially Maeterlinckian in atmosphere than anything else that its author has written, that is no doubt largely, as Mr. Miall points out, because it is for once a "treatment of a legend already crystallised." It is, in fact, a version of the mediæval story familiar even to modern readers in Mr. John Davidson's Ballad of a Nun. Sister Beatrice flies from the convent with the Prince Bellidor. The Virgin takes her place for twenty years as doorkeeper, and when she creeps back in haggard penitence, it is to enjoy a wholly undeserved reputation for miraculous sanctity. Mr. Miall speaks with some hesitation of an "original Dutch version" of the legend, of which a translation was published in the "Pageant." It is unlikely that this is really "original." Hardly any version of a mediæval legend ever is. That of the Virgin and the Nun is one of the Miracles de Nostre Dame of Gautier de Coinci, who died as prior of Vic-sur-Aisne in 1236, and probably, although we have not the means of verification before us at this moment, it will be found in one or more of the collections of Latin miracles which were Gautier's models. The keynote of M. Maeterlinck's treatment of the theme is to be found in these verses, sung by the Virgin :

I hold to every sin,
To every soul that weeps,
My hands with pardon filled
Out of the starry deeps.

There is no sin that lives
If love have vigil kept;
There is no soul that dies
If love but once have wept.

And though in many paths
Of earth love lose its way,
It's tears shall find me out,
And shall not go astray.

Mr. Davidson's interpretation is quite other, more modern in tone, and yet not alien to a certain deep-lying strain of mediæval paganism. The "Ballad of a Nun" is the apology of wantonness, the full-blooded vindication of the imperious human instinct. And Gautier de Coinci again celebrates neither love nor humanity. His nun is such because, through the years of her sinning, she never forgets to drop her pious prayer to the Virgin, morning by morning.

Mr. Miall's translation is a puzzle. He explains in the preface that he has written in blank verse in the most suitable metre to represent the "unrhymed alexandrines" of the original. We have no quarrel with that. The odd thing is that the originals are not in alexandrines at all, rhymed or unrhymed, but almost wholly in prose. It is just possible that M. Maeterlinck may have rewritten the plays since Mr. Miall saw the manuscript, and this might also explain how the Ariane of the French version becomes Ardiane in the English. If so, Mr. Miall has been unlucky in not having the opportunity of handling the plays in their final form. Obviously the deliberate choice of blank verse for the translation of prose originals would have been out of the question. We still doubt, however, for the translation, apart from its form, follows with considerable fidelity the French text before us. Mr. Miall is in sympathy with M. Maeterlinck and his rendering catches the spirit of the plays well enough. Accurate it certainly is not. There are two or three grammatical blunders in the very first speech of Sister Béatrice, including the amazing one by which Un jour il m'a parlé de Paul et de Françoise becomes,

One day
They spoke of this to Francis and to Paul.

Any fourth form boy would get his knuckles rapped soundly for the two "howlers" in this. And has Mr. Miall never heard of Paolo and Francesca ?

Patriotism and Poetry.

Patriotic Song. Edited by Arthur Stanley. (Pearson. 5s.)

FROM the time of the legendary Tyrtæus down to the present day patriotism has been accounted one of the prime motives of song. Assuredly England has never been lacking in patriotism, even to a somewhat blatant degree, while in poetry she is foremost among the nations. One would expect, therefore, a collection of English patriotic verse to be very rich in poetry. Yet we must own to some feeling of disappointment in turning over the leaves of this collection, Patriotic Song (Pearson), which Mr. Arthur Stanley has evidently striven hard to make representative. Perhaps the patriotism of the poets in general finds vent rather indirectly and in passages than in poems devoted directly and exclusively to the love of country. Certainly this collection is far from impressing us as the fine flower of poetry, though inevitably it contains much fine poetry. Nor has Mr. Stanley spared to fling the net wide. Not satisfied to include merely English patriotic verse, he has embraced that of Ireland, Wales, Scotland (including Jacobite songs, which hardly come under the strict head of patriotism), and the British dependencies—India, Australia, New Zealand, and even South Africa. Nay, apparently it matters not to him what country is celebrated, provided it be by an English-speaking poet. Perhaps this very width of the net impoverishes the impression produced by the collection.

Canada and South Africa, for example, yield not one true poem of the patriotic order. It is sweeping, but true, The patriotism is unimpeachable, but not so the poetry. New Zealand is little better, and Australia not fertile. Wales, again, draws blank, or nearly so. Coming to individual poems, our objections are many. What claim has Adam Lindsay Gordon's hunting-song to a place in patriotic verse? How does Marvell's Bermudas come under that heading? Why is T. E. Brown's Land-Ho!—a religious poem—in the collection? And why include poems the patriotism of which is nowise British—such as Byron's Isles of Greece, or Mrs. Browning's The Forced Recruit—yet omit others of a like kind? Once open the door in this direction, it seems arbitrary to stop at a couple of poems.

Taking, then, objections on other grounds, why are Dibdin's poems arranged in two batches, separated by those of other writers; whereas the rule of the book is to keep each author's poems together? It is clear that Mr. Stanley has been lenient with regard to poetic quality, in order to represent as many recent writers as possible. But there can be no such excuse for the inclusion of early work, or inferior work of great poets, where it was quite possible to secure only poems of good quality. Why, then, include such a snatch as Here's a Health Unto His Majesty—a Cavalier lyric, alike contemptible in quality and quantity, a single witless stanza? Is Down Among the Dead Men a patriotic poem worth reading, divorced from its music? Dryden's Song of King Arthur is one of the most vilely bad songs that even Dryden ever wrote—and Glorious John was never lucky in his songs. The National Anthem is fiddler's poetry. Wordsworth is represented by several sonnets, but not, surely, by all that might and should have been included. "Milton, thou should'st be living at this hour," for example, should surely have found a place: we doubt, indeed, whether search would not discover almost as many deserving of quotation which have been omitted as those which have found a place. Fair Star of Evening is another that immediately leaps to mind. In Men of Kent, by-the-way, "her haughty bow" is misprinted for "her haughty brow." Campbell, on the other hand, is represented not only by his fine and few patriotic lyrics, but by Men of England—a quite unworthy specimen. We fear, indeed, that poems have too often been admitted merely on the authority of a name. But last, and most surprising, why is Gerald Massey's poem on The Revenge inserted, yet Tennyson's Ballad of the Revenge omitted? We do by no means hold Tennyson's poem so high as it is customary to hold it. To our thinking, it is far from being among his best work, or inspired throughout. But it puts Gerald Massey's poem completely out of court—and that without denying to Massey a certain merit, of no very high kind.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Stanley's collection is none the less interesting, if far from impeccable. To quote the many poems in it which are known to every average reader of English verse would be idle. More profitable is it to notice some that are less, if at all, known. Drayton's fine Ballad of Agincourt we have all read. But how many know the anonymous poem which Mr. Stanley gives, and which has a spirit of its own, though greatly inferior? If it be the earlier of the two, it would certainly seem as though Drayton had taken his inspiration from it, as regards form:

Agincourt, Agincourt!
Know ye not Agincourt,
Where English slew and hurt
All their French foemen?
With their pikes and bills brown,
How the French were beat down,
Shot by our Bowmen?

Agincourt, Agincourt!
Know ye not Agincourt?
Never to be forgot,
Or known to no man?
Where English cloth-yard arrows
Killed the French like tame sparrows,
Slain by our Bowmen?

Agincourt, Agincourt!
Know ye not Agincourt?
Dear was the victory bought
By fifty yeomen.
Ask any English wench,
They were worth all the French:
Rare English Bowmen!

The number of archers, by-the-way, seems slightly unhistorical. Passing over Marvell's great Cromwellian Ode, and much else, Dryden's verses on London in 1666, very characteristic of his early style, have one stanza curiously and strikingly appropriate to the present posture of England's affairs:

Already we have conquered half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind;
Our trouble now is but to make them dare
And not so great to vanquish as to find.

Save for the style, it might have come from a present-day poet, writing on the most recent aspect of the Boer War. Dibdin makes an excellent figure in this collection. At his best when he least strove to be "poetical" in the manner of his day, his thoroughly vernacular songs have much which enables us to understand that he must have been the sailors' Kipling of his time. In Tom Tough even the metre suggests that of Kipling's fine Last Chanty, which begins:

Thus spake the Lord to the jolly, jolly mariners.

This is Dibdin's poem:

My name, d'ye see's Tom Tough, I've seed a little sarvice,
Where mighty billows roll and loud tempests blow;
I've sailed with valiant Howe, I've sailed wi h noble Jarvis,
And in gallant Duncan's fleet I've sung out "Yo heave ho!"
Yet more shall ye be knowing—
I was coxswain to Boscawen,
And even with brave Hawke have I nobly faced the foe.
Then put round the grog—
So we've that and our prog,
We'll laugh in Care's face, and sing "Yo heave ho!"

But the worst on't was that time when the little ones were sickly,
And if they'd live or die the doctor did not know;
The word was gov'd to weigh so sudden and so quickly,
I thought my heart would break as I sung "Yo heave ho!"
For Poll's so like her mother,
And as for Jack, her brother,
The boy, when he grows up, will nobly fight the foe;
But in Providence I trust,
For you see what must be must,
So my sighs I gave the winds and sung out "Yo heave ho!"

And now at last laid up in a decentish condition,
For I've only lost an eye, and got a timber toe;
But old ships must expect in time to be out of commission,
Nor again the anchor weigh with "Yo heave ho!"
So I smoke my pipe and sing old songs—
For my boy shall well revenge my wrongs,
And my girl shall breed young soldiers, nobly for to face the foe;
Then to Country and King
Fate no danger can bring,
While the tars of Old England sing out "Yo heave ho!"

It is somewhat marred by the conventional ending; but it shows the true test of art—if it be translated into literary English the force disappears, as from a song of Burns. Not a few, however, may know Dibdin; but we doubt if many know Sydney Dobell's Sea Adventure. Yet it has the true ring.

A greater contrast could not be than between verse such as Tom Tough and Sea Adventure and the strange muse of Blake. Yet from his Jerusalem we may take our final quotation. It is patriotic in another sense than that understanded of "Maffickers":

England, awake! awake! awake!
Jerusalem thy sister calls!
Why wilt thou sleep the sleep of death,
And close her from thy ancient walls?

Thy hills and valleys felt her feet
Gently upon their bosoms move:
Thy gates beheld sweet Zion's ways;
Then was a time of joy and love.

And now the time returns again:
Our souls exult; and London's towers
Receive the Lamb of God to dwell
In England's green and pleasant bowers.

And did those feet in ancient time
Walk upon England's mountain green?
And was the holy Lamb of God
On England's pleasant pastures seen?

Digitized by Google

And did the Countenance Divine
Shine forth upon our clouded hills?
And was Jerusalem builded here
Among these dark Satanic mills?

Bring me my bow of burning gold!
Bring me my arrows of desire!
Bring me my spear: O clouds, unfold!
Bring me my chariot of fire!

I will not cease from mental fight,
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem
In England's green and pleasant land.

It will be seen there is various pasture enough in Mr. Stanley's book. Its error, on the whole, is to embrace too much rather than too little.

A Little People.

Finland As It Is. By Harry De Windt. (Murray. 9s. net.)

Mr. De Windt is an accomplished traveller, and possesses that cheerful spirit which grumbles at obstacles whilst really enjoying them. He is a pleasant guide, and this book about a country so individual, so well-conducted, and so naturally beautiful as Finland, should send a good many people to a new holiday ground. And such a holiday is well within the means of the travellers who annually swarm to Switzerland, to live in huge hotels, to be bored by their table companions, and to snatch such delight as may be possible from mountains exploited out of their natural sanctity. To those who take the sea route to Finland by way of Hull three weeks may be spent in the country for a cost little exceeding five-and-twenty pounds.

Mr. De Windt gets us into tune for appreciating Viborg and Helsingfors by depreciating St. Petersburg, which he calls—and not without reason—"the dullest capital in Europe . . . the city of gloom on the banks of the Neva." We like Mr. De Windt's candour; it is equally conspicuous when he is writing of the country which he elects to praise. It is something to find in a guide-book no trace of the special pleader. From Viborg, the frontier town of the Grand Duchy, Mr. De Windt takes us by way of the Saimá Canal to Imatrá, and so by easy stages to Villmanstrand, Nyslott, Helsingfors, and Tammerfors up to Tornea, in the far north. Everywhere the traveller appears to have been received with the utmost hospitality and an earnest desire to convince him that Finland is the finest country in the world. And in many respects it is remarkably advanced: the means of communication are excellent and cheap, the towns imposing and prosperous, the people moral and industrious. A dairy farmer, who manufactures butter which reaches the English market as "Danish," entertained Mr. De Windt in a manner which suggests charming possibilities:

> We sat down in his pretty little dining-room, with its tinted walls, proof engravings, and French windows opening on to the garden, to as dainty and well-served a meal as you could enjoy in the Champs Elysées; for the snowy napery, bright silver, and bowls of cut flowers were more suggestive of Mayfair than a lonely farmhouse in far-away Finland! Everything was perfect—from the dish of freshly-caught trout that commenced the meal, to the wild strawberries and iced junket with which it ended.

The wife of this happy agriculturist was also an accomplished performer on the zither.

Mr. De Windt tells us with what dismay and sorrow the Tsar's manifesto of February, 1899, was received in Finland, and how on the following Sunday Helsingfors was black with mourning. But Mr. De Windt, with a reticence both wise and rare, does not venture to obtrude his own opinion of that much-debated edict. "Personally," he says, "I am of opinion that this matter is one for settlement by Russia alone, and that the interference, therefore, of other nations savours strongly of impertinence." This we take to be the only sensible attitude, and certainly the best in the interest of this little people themselves.

To the sportsman who is content with fishing and small game Finland is a paradise of fin and feather. Trout and salmon swarm in the lakes and rivers, and permission to fish is readily obtained. We feel a kind of glorified envy for the Englishman who at Isirka-Kemi landed two hundred grayling in the course of a summer afternoon. The appendices to the volume give a rough sporting vocabulary, and a list of the best hotels, etc., in the principal towns of Finland. Also, Mr. De Windt prints a list of tours occupying times varying from four to fifteen days, with estimates of their cost.

The "Literary" Theatre.

The Tale of a Town and The Enchanted Sea. By Edward Martyn. (Kilkenny: O'Grady. London: Unwin. 5s.)

Despite all explicatory manifestoes, we have never been able to comprehend what is meant by the "literary" theatre, which Messrs. Yeats, Moore, and Martyn are alleged to have established in Ireland. An Irish theatre (racially and subjectively Irish) there certainly is, since Mr. Yeats has written "The Countess Kathleen" and "The Shadowy Waters," both of them works whose beauty is destined to outlast this generation. But these plays are no more literary than Shakespeare, and probably the brave is not yet born who will have the insolence to call Shakespeare a literary dramatist. As for Mr. Martyn, we think we begin to see that his "Heather Field" was accepted with too much good-nature. Almost anyone who had read Ibsen and Maeterlinck, and who possessed brains, a pen, and some facility in letters, might become a playwright in the sense that Mr. Martyn is a playwright. Mr. Yeats knows his business perfectly: he is aware of the craft of the stage; he is a finished artist, a philosopher, and a moralist. It would matter nothing were he Saxon instead of Celt. His capital is genius. Mr. Martyn's capital is his Celticism. Mr. Martyn does not know his business; he is not even an efficient sentence-maker; his notions of the theatre are based on no understanding, and no deeply-felt principle. He will imitate Sardou as readily as Ibsen, and Ibsen as readily as Maeterlinck. He has the amateur's crudity, and if he has achieved any success of esteem it is because we are so accustomed to a silly drama of stale ideals, that anything fresh, anything sincere, impresses us as being worthy; we forget that there can be no dramatic worth without dramatic competence. Worth does not go with bungling. Mr. Martyn seems to have started on his career as a dramatist with little outfit save patriotism, spirituality, and an indifferent acquaintance with some famous modern plays. Such outfit is insufficient, and its insufficiency is demonstrated in a play like "The Enchanted Sea," where an impossible idea is worked out in sprawling action, where a realistic convention takes turn and turn about with a convention as boldly idealistic as that of Maeterlinck, and whence nothing emerges save a vague suspicion that Mr. Martyn's heart is in the right place. Listen to this:

> Agnes. I assure you, Commander Lyle, I have a great regard for you.
> Lyle (chagrined). No—but perhaps you will have, some time—when I may be of help to you.
> Agnes. When—?
> Lyle. When you come back to the real world.
> Agnes. Am I not in the real world?
> Lyle. No—you are in a world of shadows.

Digitized by Google

AGNES (with a wan look). We all follow shadows here.

LYLE (tentatively). Miss Font, there is something about you that tells me you are not made to waste your life on shadows any more than I am.

AGNES. Like us all, you, too, are after shadows.

There you have a specimen of the interminable Ibsenesque chatter which the characters indulge in. With a wan look! It would have been more honest to preface the play with a stage direction that the poor heroine must wear a "wan look" continually, condemned as she is to expose her borrowed and facile far-away-ism through four mortal acts. As for the plot:

MISS FONT (with a veiled look). I have suspected it for some time, and now I am sure that this strange boy is not the real Guy, son of Piers Font.

AGNES (mystified). Not the real Guy—who is he, then?

MRS. FONT. Don't you understand? Don't you notice how odd and fairie-like he is?

AGNES. Mother, you are not serious. You don't mean——

MRS. FONT. Yes, girl, I know, he is an evil spirit changed in place of the real Guy, whom the fairies have taken.

AGNES (with a quiet conviction). Mother, you do not believe this.

But she does believe it. Such themes are merely absurd when forced into an apparatus of modern realism. They cannot be treated as Mr. Martyn has tried to treat this one, and if Mr. Martyn had any vital knowledge of dramatic art he would have known as much. We do not actively dislike "The Enchanted Sea" because its theme is queer, or because it is aggressively and crudely Celtic, or because the people in it talk as no real people ever did or could talk, or because its philosophy is often shallow and often foolish. (We recognise in it a spirit not by any means without fineness and the love of justice.) We actively dislike it because it does not convince, because it is not dramatic, and because it is clumsy and pretentious. It aims at certain effects, and fails, through incompetence, to achieve them. That is all, and it is more than enough to render the play nugatory, even did the loftiness of Mr. Martyn's purposes outsoar the Eiffel Tower.

"The Tale of a Town," it appears from a preliminary note, was the basis of Mr. George Moore's "The Bending of the Bough." Surely this fact should have been stated when Mr. Moore's piece was published. The two plays are naturally very similar, and as we have already discussed "The Bending of the Bough" we need not discuss its ancestor.

Fiction.

The First Men in the Moon. By H. G. Wells. (Newnes. 6s.)

HERE Mr. Wells returns to the kind of subject in the treatment of which he first won success. Though he can apply his faculty for the pursuit of intricate analogy to the workings of souls, or, at any rate, of brains, can convince and lay hold, it is in the action and interaction of physical laws and the possibilities of matter that he stands alone.

The hero of this book is the law of Gravitation. Mr. Wells, making his morning meditation upon this dogma of Physical Science, has hit upon the happy hypothesis: Suppose just one thing in the world to break loose from the law which moves everything in the place where it is, so that at a given moment it could not be elsewhere. That, we believe, rather than any passion for exploiting the moon, which (once by balloon and once by gun) has twice already been visited, is the germ of the story. The journey in the isolated sphere abounds in such delightful consequences as any of us might have foreseen, but certainly should have missed. The voyagers land upon a body whose "pull" is no more than one-eighth that of the earth, as that to fall over a thirty-foot cliff is to float down like a snowflake. The process of the lunar day (a fortnight long, of course) is wonderfully imagined; the first show of the Corona interspersed by atmosphere; the mounds and hummocks of seeming snow reeking up in grey vapour, and in a few moments, as the sun light strode on with seven-leagued boots, spreading a blue firmament beneath the blackness of the star-spangled void; presently the movement of stirring vegetable life making haste to spring, and flower, and seed against the time of returning darkness fourteen days later.

The inhabitants dwell—there remains no doubt when once you have read it here—in a system of galleries and chambers with which the lunar frame is burrowed. As the environment suggests, they are rather antlike than human. They are extremely differentiated according to the various functions assigned to them in the social order, and many of them are of enormous intellectual capacity. The intercourse, which is telegraphed in fragments, between their captive and the earth that it was no longer possible that he should ever reach, gives occasion for a certain amount of satire, in which the author seems divided between a purpose of showing, by the method of reduction to the absurd, the iniquity of our social system, and an intention of deriding us for that we have not yet carried it out to its furthest consequences. Here is the description of the Grand Lunar as he appeared in the midst of the learned court of interpreters, engineers, understanders, rememberers, and whatnot:

> At first [signals Cavor], as I peered into the radiating glow, this quintessential brain looked very much like an opaque, featureless bladder, with dim undulating ghosts of convolutions writhing visibly within. Then, beneath its enormity and just above the edge of the throne, one saw, with a start, minute elfin eyes peering out of the glow. No face, but eyes, as if they peered through holes. At first I could see no more than these two staring little eyes, and then below I distinguished the little dwarfed body and its insect-jointed limbs, shrivelled and white. The eyes stared down at me with a strange intensity, and the lower part of the swollen globe was wrinkled. Ineffectual-looking little hand-tentacles steadied this shape on the throne. . . .
>
> It was great. It was pitiful.

But the main interest of the book, to our mind, ends with the race for the sphere, against the scorching cold of the on-sweeping night.

The Firebrand. By S. R. Crockett. (Macmillan. 6s.)

"HE licked his lips slowly, and smiled; a tiger does that when, after a full meal, he moves the loose skin over his neck twitchy-ways, and yawns with over-fed content." Further—"His heart hasted forward to Dolores and overleaped boundaries, as a dog leaps a wall." Further—"Go home, fool," hissed a voice in his ear, "Your wife is with her lover." Further—"God's blood, for this I will have your life." Further—"He threshed through the tangle as an elephant charges through the young jungle." Further—"The Albacete dagger was driven deep between the shoulder-blades; the young, lithe body drew itself together convulsively, as a clasp-knife opens and shuts again; there was a spurt of something hot on Ramon's hand . . . "

During a pause for breath we may fitly recall a line from Mr. Iwan Müller's parody of Swinburne's Dolores:

> And bathe brutal butchers in blood.

And these final lines:

> But you came, O you procuratores,
> And ran us all in.

Digitized by Google

To continue: "She danced the dance of her native Andalucia with a verve and abandon which she had never excelled. And—Ping! Ping! Two rifles' bullets sang close past the brigand's head as he lay in his rocky fastness. And—the secret of the hidden passage was safe with him. And—he drew a bead on the exposed limb; the piece cracked, and with a yell the owner rolled back."

In such wise the narrator threshes through the tangle of Carlist agitations (The deep, underlying anger leaped up fiery red into the eyes of the guerilla chief), until at last (the vultures slowly and reluctantly withdrew on heavy flapping pinions) he arrives thus at serenity:

"Rollo," she said, softly, "you can come up when you like—when you have quite finished your politics—just to look at baby. He has not seen you since morning."

In pursuance of his expressed intention to "uphold the banner of belief in the field of fiction," Mr. Crockett produces with admirable regularity some three books per annum. He may at least be congratulated on his industry. And there can be no doubt that The Firebrand is much less tiresome than, for instance, The Lilac Sunbonnet.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

THE HOUSE DIVIDED. BY H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON.

Mr. Marriott Watson is faithful to the eighteenth century. In his new romance he gives a stirring picture of English county and Court life in the reign of George the Second. Aventures abound. "'Are you from the brig White Rose?' called out the lawyer, above the clatter of their landing. 'Aye,' said one, and they all turned to peer into the mist at the speaker. 'Out of Boston in his Majesty's colony of Massachusetts?' inquired Kempe. 'Aye,' was the answer again." (Harper. 6s.)

THE VELVET GLOVE. BY H. S. MERRIMAN.

"I know that Juanita has inherited a fortune from her father. I know that the Carlist cause is failing for want of money. I know that the Jesuits will get the money if they can." We need only say further that the motto on the title page is: "Now put your shields before your hearts; and fight. . . ."; that the story begins and continues in the Peninsula; and that it is by the competent author of The Sowers. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY. BY RALPH CONNOR.

Mr. Connor's former story, The Sky Pilot, was received with enthusiasm in certain quarters. The Man From Glengarry is longer and more ambitious. It deals with the life of a Scottish Highlander among the lumbermen of Canada. "In the Canada beyond the Lakes," says Mr. Connor, "where men are making empire, the sons of these Glengarry men are found—men with the fear of God in their hearts." (Hodder. 6s.)

A WOMAN OF THE WORLD'S ADVICE. BY F. C. PHILIPS.

A collection of thirteen short stories and sketches by the author of As in a Looking Glass. The tale which gives the title to the volume comes to an end on the twentieth page. Others are called, "You Don't Always Know Your Luck," "Not So Bad, After All," and "Our Honeymoon." They are all slight, unaffected, and, to the unexacting, sufficiently interesting. (Macqueen. 6s.)

THE FIELDS OF DULDITCH. BY MARY E. MANN.

This is one of those deserving books of which we have welcomed more than one this year, wherein the author sets down the life that is passing near at hand. The place in this case is Dulditch, a name chosen with intention. In a series of sketches Mrs. Mann describes incidents in the lives of the people about her, and the effect of their environment upon them. Among the titles are "Our Mary," "A Dulditch Courting," "David Peck's Love Affair." (Digby, Long. 6s.)

IN OLE VIRGINIA. BY T. N. PAGE.

A new volume in the Dollar Library. "One afternoon in the autumn of 1872 I was riding leisurely down the sandy road that winds along the top of the watershed between two of the smaller rivers of eastern Virginia. . . . I was aroused from my reflections by hearing someone ahead of me calling 'Heah!—heah!—whoo-oop! heah!' Turning the curve in the road, I saw just before me a negro standing with a hoe and a watering-pot in his hand." (Heinemann. 4s.)

JOE WILSON. BY HENRY LAWSON.

A collection of stories and sketches by this popular Australian writer and poet, under such titles as "A Double Buggy at Lahey's Creek," "Poisonous Jimmy Gets Left," "The Buck-Jumper." At the beginning are some verses called "The Author's Farewell to the Bushmen," and at the end more verses called "The Never-Never Cauntry." (Blackwood. 6s.)

SPORT AND SPANGLES. BY BYRON WEBBER.

Thirteen stories about—sport and spangles. The dedication is to Mr. John Corlett: "You and I have been actively engaged in one of the vocations of Sport for a good many years; and both of us know something about Spangles. Our acquaintance, which began in the sixties, became comradeship in journalism, and ripened into a friendship that has never for a single moment been weakened or impaired. For that matter, whenever we find ourselves chatting about old times, I feel that we are nearer to each other than ever. So many 'boys of the old brigade' to which we two belonged have passed away! Simply on the ground of our old friendship, I inscribe this little volume to you." (Chatto and Windus. 2s.)

ARDNARIGH. BY MELVILLE GRAY.

The sub-title is "A Novel Drawn from Real Life," the dedication is, by permission, "To the Vicar of S. Andrew's, Newcastle-on-Tyne." The story is long and the characters are numerous. Here is the opening of Chapter 10: "It is the London season of 1880. Doris and Freda have both entered on their nineteenth year; they have bid farewell to the schoolroom, and to-night, the first of April, are to make their first appearance in Society at the Duchess of Walmiston's ball." (Drane. 6s.)

THE ORLOFF COUPLE AND MALVA. BY MAXIM GORKI.

More Gorki, with another portrait (his hair is rather blacker this time), and with another biographical note, by Miss Dora Montefiore, who, assisted by Miss Emily Jakowleff, has made the translation. Of the two stories in this volume, The Orloff Couple fills 130 pages, and begins: "Almost every Saturday, just before supper-time, the dirty old house of the merchant Petounukoff was the scene of a violent and murderous attack." Malva has 91 pages. It begins: "The sea laughed." (Heinemann. 6s.)

We have also received: Lady Joan's Companion, by Florence Warden (Digby, Long. 6s.); King Midas, by Upton Sinclair (Funk and Wagnalls Co. 6s.); Borrel's Bog, by F. Hainsworth (Drane); Gèlta, by Nadage Dorée (Simpkin, Marshall.)

Digitized by Google

Christmas Supplement.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
Books Suitable for Christmas Presents.

LETTERS OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. With 3 Portraits. 8vo, 15s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS IN THE LAKE DISTRICT. By A. G. BRADLEY. With Illustrations by Joseph Pennell. Extra crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s.

LATEST ADDITIONS.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.

Globe 8vo, 5s. per volume.

OXFORD STUDIES. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss K. NORGATE.

MORE LETTERS of EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT.

 Send for New Complete List.

Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON.

A KENTUCKY CARDINAL, and AFTERMATH. By JAMES LANE ALLEN. Cloth elegant, gilt edges. Crown 8vo, 6s.

 Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 250 copies, super-royal 8vo, 30s. net.

ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS. Now Ready.

ELIZABETH AND HER GERMAN GARDEN. Extra crown 8vo. Illustrated Edition, white buckram, gilt edges, 8s. 6d. net. Ordinary Edition, 6s.

THE SOLITARY SUMMER. By the Author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden." Extra crown 8vo. Illustrated Edition, white buckram, gilt edges, 8s. 6d. net. Ordinary Edition, 6s.

THE WORKS OF RUDYARD KIPLING.

UNIFORM EDITION.

Extra Crown 8vo, Gilt tops, 6s. each

KIM. Illustrated by J. Lockwood Kipling.

Plain Tales from the Hills.
Life's Handicap; being Stories of Mine Own People.
Many Inventions.
The Light that Failed.
Wee Willie Winkie; and other Stories.
Soldiers Three; and other Stories.
Captains Courageous. With Illustrations.
The Jungle Book. With Illustrations.
The Second Jungle Book. With Illustrations.
The Day's Work.
Stalky and Co.
From Sea to Sea. Vol. I.
From Sea to Sea. Vol. II.
The Naulahka. By RUDYARD KIPLING and WOLCOTT BALESTIER.

IN SPECIAL BINDINGS FOR PRESENTATION.

Cloth Elegant, Gilt edges, 6s. per Volume.

The Jungle Book. Illustrated by J. L. KIPLING, W. H. DRAKE, and P. FRENZENY.

The Second Jungle Book. Illustrated by J. L. KIPLING.

Soldier Tales. Illustrated by A. S. HARTRICK.

Captains Courageous. Illustrated by I. W. TABER.

The Jungle Book and The Second Jungle Book, in a box, 12s.

The Jungle Book, The Second Jungle Book, Soldier Tales, and Captains Courageous, in a box, 24s.

THE WORKS OF TENNYSON.

The POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS. Complete in One Volume. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS. In Twelve Volumes. Demy 16mo, cloth, 1s. net each; or in cloth box, 14s. net.

In Twenty-three Volumes, cloth, 1s. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net; or in handsome case, cloth, 25s. net; leather, 36s. net.

"Pocket Edition." Pott 8vo, bound in leather, 7s. 6d. net.

"Globe Eidtion." Cloth, 3s. 6d.; or with gilt back, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

The DRAMATIC WORKS, "Miniature" Edition. Five Volumes in box, 12s. 6d

POEMS: IN MEMORIAM, MAUD, PRINCESS, ENOCH ARDEN, &c. With Portrait and Sixteen Illustrations, 8vo. gilt edges, 2s.

IN MEMORIAM. Golden Treasury Series. 2s. 6d. net.

The PRINCESS. Golden Treasury Series. 2s. 6d. net.

LYRICAL POEMS. Golden Treasury Series. 2s. 6d. net.

THE BORDER EDITION OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 250 New and Original Illustrations by Eminent Artists. Complete in 24 vols. Crown 8vo., green cloth, 3s. 6d. each. Also an Edition with the Original Etchings, tastefully bound in cloth, gilt, 6s. each.

The New Cranford Series.

Crown 8vo, Cloth Elegant, Gilt Edges. 3s. 6d. per volume.

Cranford. With 100 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.

Also an Edition with 40 of the Illustrations printed in Colour. Cloth elegant, embossed gold. Price 6s.

The Vicar of Wakefield. With 182 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.

Our Village. With 100 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.

Days with Sir Roger De Coverley. Reprinted from The Spectator. With Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.

Coridon's Song, and other Verses. With Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.

Coaching Days and Coaching Ways. With 214 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON and HERBERT RAILTON.

Old Christmas. Illustrated by R. CALDECOTT.

Bracebridge Hall. Illustrated by R. CALDECOTT.

The Alhambra. With Drawings of the Places mentioned, by JOSEPH PENNELL.

Gulliver's Travels. With 103 Illustrations by C. E. BROCK.

Reynard the Fox. Illustrated by FRANK CALDERON.

Rip Van Winkle and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow. With 53 Illustrations and a Preface by GEORGE H. BOUGHTON, R.A

Hood's Humorous Poems. With 130 Illustrations by CHARLES E. BROCK.

The School for Scandal and the Rivals. With 50 Illustrations by EDMUND J. SULLIVAN.

Grimm's Household Stories. Pictures by WALTER CRANE.

The Fables of Æsop. With about 300 Illustrations by RICHARD HEIGHWAY.

 Macmillan's Illustrated Catalogue, Post Free on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., Limited, London.

Digitized by Google

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

TURNER AND RUSKIN.

An Exposition of the Work of TURNER, with Descriptive and Critical Passages from the Writings of JOHN RUSKIN.

Edited and arranged, with a Biographical Note on J. M. W. Turner,

By FREDERICK WEDMORE.

Illustrated with 87 Reproductions in Photogravure of the Artist's Greatest Pictures and 4 Portraits.

A Limited Edition. In Two Vols., Imperial 4to, 16in. by 11in., cloth, with all the Plates guarded, £7 7s. net.

The Times.—"A fine book. . . . The illustrations are magnificent, and Ruskin's thoroughgoing advocacy, if it does not always convince, is delightful to read."

The Daily Chronicle.—"We can only say that never before has such a magnificent monument been raised to Turner's genius, never before such an admirable record of his work been given to the world."

The Morning Post.—"The two splendid volumes will appeal equally to lovers of the artist and the writer."

PEN PICTURES FROM RUSKIN. Chosen by CAROLINE A. WURTZBURG. Crown 16mo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net. Leather gilt, 2s. 6d. net. [Just out. Pensées Series.

THE LIFE OF THE BEE. By Maurice Maeterlinck. Translated by ALFRED SUTRO. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, designed cover, 5s. net. [Third Edition.

BEATRICE AND ARDIANE. Two Plays by MAURICE MAETERLINCK. Translated by BERNARD MIALL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Just out.

THE CELTIC TEMPERAMENT, and Other Essays. By FRANCIS GRIERSON, Author of "Modern Mysticism." Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Just out.

EARLY HISTORY OF VENICE. From the Origin to the Conquest of Constantinople in 1201. By F. C. HODGSON, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With two plans, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.

AN IDLER'S CALENDAR. Open-air Sketches and Studies. By G. L. APPERSON. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Just out.

WONDERS IN MONSTERLAND. Adventures of two Children with some of the extinct Monsters. By E. D. CUMING. With 52 Illustrations (4 in Colour), and Cover by J. A. SHEPHERD. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

THE CHILD'S PICTURE GRAMMAR. With Text, 11 Coloured Pages, Cover, and 27 other Illustrations. By S. ROSAMOND PRAEGER. Crown 4to, 3s. 6d.

BARBARA'S SONG BOOK. Eight Songs set to Music by CECILE HARTOG. With 17 Coloured Pictures and Cover by JOHN HASSALL. Words by ELLIS WALTON. Crown oblong, 5s.

OLD ENGLISH SINGING GAMES. Collected by ALICE B. GOMME. With 24 Coloured Illustrations and Cover by EDITH HARWOOD. Crown oblong, 5s.

PEG WOFFINGTON. By Charles Reade. With 74 Illustrations, besides Initials and Cover, by HUGH THOMSON, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top or edges, 6s.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE. By Jane Austen. With 100 Illustrations, besides Initials, by HUGH THOMSON. Introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top or edges, 6s.

SOCIETY SNAPSHOTS. Taken at Random on a Trip through the World. By COTSFORD DICK. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SERIES OF WHOLESOME BOOKS FOR BOYS.

THE YOUNG ENGLAND LIBRARY.

Edited by G. A. B. DEWAR, B.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, Designed Cover, 6s. per Volume.

THE OPEN-AIR BOY. By Rev. G. M. A. Hewett, M.A., of Winchester College. With 39 Illustrations by Morris Williams, and 4 in Colour by T. B. Stoney.

SEA FIGHTS AND ADVENTURES. By J. Knox LAUGHTON, M.A., Author of "Nelson and his Companions in Arms," &c. With 32 Full-page Illustrations and 7 Plans of Battles.

Other Volumes to follow.

London: GEORGE ALLEN, 156, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

Messrs. DENT'S BOOKS FOR XMAS

* Illustrated List of New Books post free.*

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON.

Edited by ARNOLD GLOVER. Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. 100 Illustrations by H. RAILTON and numerous Portraits. In Three Vols. £1 2s. 6d. net. Also a Large Paper Edition.

Daily Chronicle.—"In many ways the best edition we have seen, and certainly it is the most beautiful. . . . All Mr. Railton's drawings are fine examples of his sense of space and sunlight; . . . no artist since Prout could have done it better. . . . To the text there are just sufficient useful notes, and Mr. Austin Dobson's topographical introduction tells us exactly what we want to know."

VANITY FAIR. By W. M. Thackeray. With 29 Illustrations by C. E. BROCK and Photogravure Portrait. Three Vols., 9s. net. Being the First Volumes of Messrs. Dent's new Authorised Large-Type Edition of THACKERAY'S PROSE WORKS. Edited by Walter Jerrold. Also a Large Paper Edition.

LADY CHILLINGHAM'S HOUSE PARTY. An English Version of PAILLERON'S "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie." By SEBASTIAN EVANS and F. B. GOLDNEY. Illustrated by H. M. Brock. 3s. 6d. net.

IN MEMORY OF W. Y. By William Canton. With Portraits, &c., 3s. 6d. net. From the opening lines: "I wish to leave a brief memorial of Winifred's little life, and so complete the book which has made her the child of so many households besides our own."

THE CLOISTER LIBRARY. Choice Volumes of Meditative Literature for pocket and shelf. Edited by A. R. WALLER. With Photogravure Frontispieces. Per Volume, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; lambskin, 3s. 6d. net: vellum (limited), 5s. net. First Volumes:—

The Cloister and Crowd, and Companions of my Solitude. By Sir ARTHUR HELPS.

The Way of Perfection. By St. TERESA.

THE TEMPLE CLASSICS.

Per volume, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; lambskin, 2s. net. New volumes.

DANTE'S DIVINE COMEDY (Italian and English). 3 vols.

THE TEMPLE BRONTË. 12 Vols. The set 18s. and 24s. * 150 Other Volumes. See Special List.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A SUMPTUOUS ART BOOK

STORIES OF THE TUSCAN ARTISTS. By Albinia WHERRY. With 8 photogravure and 45 half-tone reproductions from their works. Limited to 750 copies. Royal 8vo, cloth extra. 10s. 6d. net.

GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES. Edited by Marian EDWARDES. With 100 illustrations by R. ANNING BELL. 5s. net.

Westminster Gazette.—The illustrations are among the best we have seen . . . for the 'Grimm' spirit put into every one of them."

MIRANDA'S LIBRARY.—Standard Works for Girls.

SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES. By Mrs. Jameson. Illustrated in red and black by R. ANNING BELL. 5s. net.

The True Annals of Fairyland.

Each with Coloured Frontispiece, Cover Design, and 175 Text Illustrations by CHAS. ROBINSON. 4s. 6d. net.

THE REIGN OF KING COLE. Edited by J. M. GIBBON.

THE REIGN OF KING HERLA. Edited by WM. CANTON.

Punch.—"This erudite collection possesses the charm of finding old friends bound together anew in the happiest style. There are delightful pictures in nearly every page."

BEAUTIFUL BIRDS. By Edmund Selous. Illus- trated by the Rev. H. D. ASTLEY. 4s. 6d. net.

The Gospels as a Continuous Narrative.

THE GOSPEL STORY OF JESUS CHRIST. By IDA W. HUTCHISON. Illustrated by PATTEN WILSON. 4s. 6d. net.

SAINTS OF ITALY. Legends Retold by Ella Noyes. Illustrated, by DORA NOYES, after the Old Masters. 4s. 6d. net.

PRIVATE BOBS AND THE NEW RECRUIT. By MABEL C. BIRCHENOUGH. Illustrated by H. M. Brock. 3s. 6d. net.

THE BAIRN BOOKS. A Book of Days. The Farm Book. Each with 35 illustrations in colour by CHARLES ROBINSON (together in box, 2s. 6d. net.) Each, 1s. 3d. net.

Athenæum.—"Have the great advantage of being illustrated by Mr. Robinson, whose drawings show a distinct and delightful style."

Temple Classics for Young People.

Each with Coloured Frontispiece and Eleven Illustrations. Per Volume: cloth, 1s. 6d. net; lambskin, 2s. net.

PERRAULT'S FAIRY TALES. By Beatrice F. Clay.

STORIES FROM MORTE D'ARTHUR. Illustrated by Charles ROBINSON. * 9 Other Volumes; See Illustrated List.

N.B.—Should any difficulty be experienced in obtaining their publications, Messrs. DENT would be pleased to forward any book on receipt of the published price and postage.

London: J. M. DENT & CO., Bedford Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

Christmas Books Supplement.
SATURDAY: 7 DECEMBER, 1901.

Christmas Books.

Art and Gift Books.

Sir Henry Raeburn. By Sir Walter Armstrong. With an Introduction by R. A. M. Stevenson, and a Biographical Catalogue by J. L. Caw. (Heinemann. 105s.)

THIS sumptuous and noble volume is a worthy memorial of the great Scots portrait-painter whose life and work it perpetuates. Fitly and characteristically introduced by "R. A. M. S.," universally regretted as the first of Scottish art-critics, continued by Sir Walter Armstrong, an authority whose academic honours put no bar either on his humour or his intelligence, the biography under notice leaves no room for criticism or the carpings of the perfervid. Printer and publisher, too, have assisted loyally in the enterprise. Sir Henry Raeburn is put forward in a dress that expresses "the last word" in mechanical process and beauty of material.

WILLIAM FERGUSON OF KILRIE. By Sir Henry Raeburn.

The life of Raeburn, like that of Gainsborough or Velasquez, presents few of those picturesque vicissitudes that call for biographical comment or explanation. The son of a worthy and comfortable Scottish miller, Raeburn was early apprenticed to an Edinburgh goldsmith. We soon find him painting miniatures as well as designing frames to hold them. This gift is enlarged by an apprenticeship to Martin, the one portrait-painter of any eminence that the town boasted. Martin, like Hudson, seems to have grown afraid of his pupil. The two men separated, and then Raeburn clinched matters by accepting the advances and fortune of a lively widow-lady whom his person, no less than his genius, had attracted. He was twenty-two at the time, the lady twelve years his senior. With a ready-made family, a wife, and an abundant estate, Raeburn now set out to complete his education. In London he called on Reynolds, who, ignorant of his circumstances, generously offered him the wherewithal to visit Italy. But Raeburn had his widow, and soon we find him established in Rome, where, as Sir Walter Armstrong rightly concludes, "he studied the great men of the Renaissance, not for their methods of conception, which could not be revived, but for their methods of work, which could." And in the same paragraph: "Probably no man ever went to Rome who remained less affected by the passing atmosphere of the place (it was the age of Winckelmann and the Classicists), who used it more entirely for the completion of his own training, or less for the acquisition of exotic notions."

A couple of years were spent in Rome, and then the Raeburns returned direct to Edinburgh. The new town had just been built—the place was a metropolis. Here, among a society with whose aims and character he was in complete harmony, Raeburn spent the remaining years of his life. This society furnished him with sitters. He devoted his genius to the perpetuation of this representative circle of men and women.

A true Scot, Raeburn's bent is towards the characteristic rather than the decorative. The strongly-marked faces of his compatriots were the very thing for a painter so disposed; and while in London a Gainsborough or a Reynolds might be composing portraits that have an air, a grace almost verging on the Gallic, Raeburn wrought with a stern simplicity eminently indicative of the national temperament. He has left us a gallery, a convincing and in every way delightful record of the Scottish gentry among whom he moved; of manly men, and women scarcely less manly; and that he had an eye for beauty of spirit as well as for the external tokens of steadfastness, so poetical a figure as his young Ferguson, here reproduced, illustrates.

A career so rarely independent is apt to produce an

HANNAH MORE. By Sir Henry Raeburn

equally independent method. Raeburn certainly struck original paths. More than his great English contemporaries is he painter and not draughtsman. His portraits were executed directly with the brush; he modelled with pigment, and therefore attempted and solved many of the problems that are exercising the "moderns" of this day. That he went no further than he did is possibly due to his northern origin. History has yet to show us a Scotchman devoting his life to the passionate pursuit of any art. The youthful ardour, as of a lover pursuing a beloved mistress—the youthful ardour of a Rembrandt or a Tintoretto has rarely found its counterpart north of the Tweed. Raeburn loved his work with the comfortable, the easy affection that a husband bestows on his wife.

Digitized by Google

Giovanni Segantini. By L. Villari. (Fisher Unwin. 21s. net.)

It is only a matter of four or five years since those who are interested in modern art awoke to the fact that Italy had at last produced a master. At the International Society's opening exhibition in 1898 hung one of his most characteristic paintings, the first ever seriously shown at a London gallery. On September 28, 1899, Giovanni Segantini died, "in a little deserted shepherd's hut" below the summit of the Schafberg, one of those Alpine peaks he had served so well. He was barely forty-one years old. "The body was carried down the mountain side," writes Signor Villari, "and then along the valley to the Maloja cemetery, where it was buried. The whole of the Engadine mourned for the death of its great artist, and his fellow artists and the lovers of art throughout Europe were sad."

Thus ended a career paradoxically complete; prematurely outraged and yet full to the final touches. For the rest is speculation. Segantini died a child—as he had begun. He passed through the three ascentional stages of the art we know him by. Mr. Villari names these "periods." But may he not, instead, have been on the verge of a second period when death took him?—to be followed by a third. He was about to see the world, of which he had known but a corner; he was preparing for new flights, an abandonment of the old childlike ways he trod so well and whose riches he had exhausted. Who knows what new ambitions, what new mountain ranges might not have arisen beyond those Alps that, so far, had held him?

The briefest glance at a career thus cruelly robbed of its climax is all that is permitted to us. It was of a simplicity almost Biblical, so little did the vulgar stress of our modern competitive life enter into it. Segantini was always alone, as individual, as worker. Born in the Italian Tyrol, motherless at the age of five, the son of a village carpenter, we follow him to Milan, where for close on a year he lived with his half-sister, a work-girl, who of a morning left him to his thoughts, and of an evening put him to bed. They lived in an old tenement-house, and most of the child's day was spent looking out of the landing window. He listened to the gossips of the place, rummaged about among his sister's things, was frightened by mice, and received a severe thrashing for tearing up bits of white paper and improvising a miniature snowstorm from the landing window. He overheard also how a young man had set out from Milan and walked to France. "It was, then, possible to leave that landing and go forth far away?"

IN THE SHEEP-FOLD. By Segantini.

quotes Signor Villari from the lively account Segantini has himself given us of those days. He knew the road by which Napoleon's troops had entered the city, he knew also that it led to France. "The idea of going to France by that road has never left me since. It refreshes my spirit, and fills it with new and smiling visions, leading my thoughts to green things, blue skies, mountains, glittering brooks, free light and to the sun." Segantini was at last about to realise this lifelong idea when the end came. As a child he got no further than a day's march. With a piece of bread in his pocket, he left Milan and set forth along the high road, stopping to drink at streams and springs. With nightfall came a thunderstorm, drenching the little lad who had fallen asleep by the roadside. A lantern flashed in his face, he heard voices. Two countrymen had found him. They took him home in their cart and put him to bed. Next day he told them that "if they brought him back to Milan he would run away the day after." They were kindly folk and kept him, only he must make himself useful. He was barely seven years old, and had become a swine-herd.

Digitized by Google

A few years later he returned to Milan, going to the Brera evening school to study ornamental drawing and getting a living by day as best he could. "For a time he was even shut up in the Patroneto for abandoned children." He had no money to buy colours. Arrested by the police, and confined for several years in this reformatory, he worked as a cobbler. Still, he could draw. Later, one of the Brera professors gave him a box of water-colours, and "a grocer of his acquaintance gave him his first oil-colours to paint a sign for him." Now he was free again and a rebellious Academy student. He attracted the attention of Signor Vittore Grubicy, "the artist and art critic who became for many years his guide, philosopher, and friend." In 1882, at the age of twenty-four, he went north to the Brianza, the highlands round Como. "Here he began to study nature in all its forms and the life of the peasants." He was Millet with a different background. He went yet further north to Savognino, in the Engadine. He drew level with the high mountains, which he now began to paint as no one has painted them before or since. He evolved a new technique, a new palette. The primitive life of these forlorn plateaux where spring and summer are a vivid, short-lived radiance, and winter an eternity, fascinated him. Alone on these heights, in these solitudes, he saw visions. He was realist and poet, mystic and naturalist. He created a new world of pictorial forms and sent it down into the valleys. He was jeered at or applauded till, at last, his fame became a settled thing. For France, his beloved France, he was painting a masterpiece; a series embracing the whole sweep of Alpine life. And here he succumbed to a chill brought on by a draught of melted snow. A fever followed, "peritonitis set in, and an operation attempted as a last resort proved useless." He was painting his contribution to the Paris Exhibition of 1900. "I shall accompany it to Paris myself," he said in a speech reported by M. de la Sizeranne. "Then I shall make a tour round Europe and see the museums which I have never seen. I shall see the great masters of whom I have heard so much, and the great cities whence the books and newspapers come, I shall see the faces of unknown friends who have written to me, and the houses which shelter my pictures. But, above all, I shall visit France. That is my dream!" It was the old dream that had sent him tramping down the white road thirty-four years before, with a crust of bread in his pocket. A month later he was, indeed, face to face with "the great masters of whom I have heard so much."

Signor Villari's book is a just and faithful record of an untiring and beautiful life.

Dutch Painters of the Nineteenth Century. With Biographical Notices. Edited by Max Rooses. Translated by F. Knowles. With Six Etchings by Ph. Zilcken. (Sampson Low. £2 2s.)

This volume is the fourth and last of a series that deals exhaustively with the revival of Dutch painting during the bygone century. The main feature of the series is a succession of admirable reproductions from the work under notice, and we cordially recommend these handsome folios to those who would like a richly illustrated souvenir of a favourite school. In the present volume the chapter treating of Matthew Maris is of most value. Other artists whose work is considered and reproduced are de Bock, Allebé, Bilders, Martens, Mrs. Mesdag-van Houten, Korff, Poggenbeek, Wysmuller, Voerman, Offermans and Van Essen. In each case we have a portrait and a brightly written paper —equivalent to a good magazine article—on the painter selected. While doubting the advisability of putting so much work of secondary importance before a public that hardly knows its own masters, we cannot but praise the spirit and patriotism that originated this enterprise in Holland.

Fra Filippo Lippi. By Edward C. Strutt. (Bell. 12s. 6d. net.)

A WELL-WRITTEN and scholarly life of Fra Filippo Lippi was something of a want, and we congratulate Mr. Strutt on having successfully carried to definite issue a task that offers more opportunities to the moralist than to the historian. Fra Filippo is one of those scandalous yet agreeable figures that, deprived of their proper background, are wholly diabolical in an age like our own. But seen rightly, this typical product of the Renaissance assumes human proportions, and is little more than another leading actor in the drama of his day. Fra Filippo acted a part not at all monstrous in his time and period, and we thank Mr. Strutt for a sane exposition of this not too obvious fact. The painter's work is handled with an equal discrimination; indeed, we find everywhere evidence that our author is capable of giving the artist his due and leaving the man to speak for himself.

Mr. Strutt has been at particular pains to verify the Lucrezia Buti incident, and we may fairly take his account as authoritative. The story as recounted here dispels much of the romance that has gathered round the outlines handed down by Vasari. Lucrezia seems to have fled the convent where she was sitting to Fra Filippo for a Madonna not so much out of love for the painter as from a distaste for the monastic life, which the selfishness of her relations had imposed upon her. The convent was a convenient means of evading the keep and dowry of a young girl. The premium was but fifty pieces of gold, and with this payment ceased all responsibility for the girl's future. Lucrezia was not to be so easily put away.

French Furniture and Decoration in the XVIIIth Century. By Lady Dilke. (Bell. 28s. net.)

LADY DILKE has followed up her French Painters, her French Architects and Sculptors of the Eighteenth Century, with a no less comprehensive work on the Furniture and Decoration that went hand-in-hand with the early triumphs of the Paris Academy. Her third volume, no less than her first and second, is indispensable as a work of reference. The period is too crowded for anything else in so compact a space. And thus those that wish to linger in more leisurely fashion over the great masters who invented the "Style Louis XV." and the "Style Louis XVI." may find Lady Dilke an industrious and capable guide to fields more spaciously handled by other and profounder writers on the same theme. But Lady Dilke, backed by the innumerable recent reproductions that enliven this handsome volume, is a capable instigator to wider studies; and more, her followers will have the advantage of profiting by a taste, cultivated, distinguished, and not to be bullied into parrot-cries by the vagaries of fashion and the sale-rooms. A final comparison between the present possessors of the objects dealt with, and the French aristocracy who were, if not the actual creators, at least frequently the collaborators of artist and craftsman, is of special interest. "They were fit to co-operate," writes Lady Dilke, "as they did co-operate, in the fulfilment of what has been described as the 'mission' of the French aristocracy of that day, by directing the arts of the nation. Not content simply to run up prices at sales under the guidance of dealers, these men understood that it lay in their hands to develop 'les elemens du travail contemporain, d'alimenter l'art du présent et de préparer l'art de l'avenir.' In this exercise of their taste and their intelligence is to be found the apology for their reckless prodigality, but the combination of circumstances by which individual luxury rendered service to the State does not seem likely, at least in our day, to be repeated."

Digitized by Google

Stories of the Tuscan Artists. By Albinia Wherry. (Dent. 10s.)

We heartily recommend this beautiful volume to such parents as would have their children take an intelligent interest in other matters than cricket or hockey. It awakens and stimulates, and the boy or girl fortunate enough to make the acquaintance of Donatello or Botticelli through these charming reproductions and gracefully-written chapters will owe the author a debt that is not easily repaid. Step by step Mrs. Wherry builds up the whole fabric of Tuscan art, shows us Giotto and his master Cimabue, the Pisan group, Fra Angelico and Ghiberti, Brunelleschi the architect, Della Robbia the sculptor, and those four inimitable painters who inspired our own pre-Raphaelites. The book is just the sort of thing to place in the hands of a boy or girl touring in Italy, and for those less favoured it has an almost equal value, in that our home treasures are drawn upon wherever possible, and the reader, in default of Florence or Pisa, is sent to Kensington or the National Gallery. The wealth of anecdote and legend, interspersed with the purely æsthetic information, is calculated to allay whatever suspicions the youthful reader may harbour against a work of instruction.

Japan: A Record in Colour. By Mortimer Menpes. Transcribed by Dorothy Menpes. (A. & C. Black, London. 20s. net.)

This is, in its way, the most charming and delicate study of Japan which has yet been published. Of course, that way is largely a pictorial way, and the main value of the book lies in the opulent illustrations in colour furnished by Mr. Mortimer Menpes, and reproduced by a process that suggests the charm and daintiness of the originals. He does not, perhaps, see Japanese life and scenery very deeply: it is the superficial child-like charm of the people, the superficial daintiness and glow of harmonious colour in the landscape which takes hold of him and which he records. He makes small attempt at broad effects; it is little bits, little impressionistic nooks and patches of scenery, upon which he seizes. But how flower-like, how tender in their bright harmonies they are! Take, for instance, Flower of the Tea, with its deep, soft effect, or that night study of two charming little Japs by artificial light, In the Light of the Lantern, which has the glow of peaches and purple grapes. It is easy to see that Mr. Menpes's art has blended with European methods much derived from the art of the Japanese themselves, and very successfully. Miss Menpes's text is a bright and informing companion to the illustrations, and her enthusiasm for things Japanese is discriminating. She animadverts, justly, on the vanity of the attempts to apply Japanese methods of decoration to our sombre and uncomfortable English homes. She warns us against the delusion that Japan is being Westernised—she is merely picking our brains. She will turn out English art for the English market, but for home consumption she hates it. A beautiful and unique artistic record of travel is this.

Bearing Burden. By Mortimer Menpes.

The Story of Stories. By R. C. Gillie. (London: Adam & Charles Black. 6s.)

This is purely and frankly a Life of Christ for children. The author's aim has been not merely to present a series of incidents, but to weave the Gospel incidents into a connected narrative, emphasising "the transitions in His life and the hinge-points in His ministry," in such manner as children may understand. We have little for the result but praise. The language is simple and unaffected; there is but slight expansion of the evangelical narrative, and sparing use of the pictorial element—which is a good and infrequent trait in such attempts. Now and then Mr. Gillie does not escape a violence or incongruous picturesqueness of phrasing in his expansion; but this is infrequent. The story is at once clear, instructive, and well within a child's comprehension. A good book is made further attractive by admirably chosen illustrations from the great Masters, calculated to educate children's eyes along with their minds.

British Sculpture and Sculptors of To-day. By M. H. Spielmann. (Cassell & Co., London.)

It is a curious proof of the national indifference to sculpture that we should have had to wait till the present moment for any book on the British sculptors of our own time, and we are grateful to Mr. Spielmann for this volume. His criticism is cultivated and discerning; but more than the criticism will the numerous illustrations speak for themselves, and convincingly show the reader what a school of sculpture we now have in England. The splendid Teucer of Mr. Thorneycroft, Mr. Brock's Genius of Poetry, and the many striking works of Mr. Gilbert—the most imaginative sculptor of them all—would alone suffice to impress the student. It is a revelation of talent for which, probably, few will be prepared.

Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare. Edited by Dr. Furnivall. (Raphael Tuck & Sons. 21s.)

This edition is something of a puzzle. Dr. Furnivall's introduction and notes have a certain prattling simplicity as of one condescending to the nursery, and Mr. Copping's illustrations rather suggest that the entertainment of children was in his mind; but are books intended for children bound in white cloth? and are they divided into two volumes? and do they cost a guinea? and should they contain Dr. Furnivall's portrait? Dr.

Digitized by Google

A. & C. BLACK'S XMAS LIST.

JAPAN: A RECORD IN COLOUR.

By MORTIMER MENPES.

CONTAINING

100 FULL-PAGE COLOUR ILLUSTRATIONS.

[A Companion Volume to the same Author's "War Impressions."]

Edition de Luxe, price 2 guineas net.

Ordinary Edition, price 20s. net.

An Illustrated Prospectus will be sent on application.

THE STORY OF STORIES.

A LIFE OF CHRIST FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

By the Rev. R. C. GILLIE, M.A.

In Large Square Crown 8vo

CONTAINING 32 FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, INCLUDING A COLOURED FRONTISPIECE OF LUINI'S FAMOUS FRESCO AT LUGANO.

In White Cloth, Extra Gilt, price 7s. 6d.

In Green Cloth, Gilt Top, price 6s.

An Illustrated Prospectus will be sent on application.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BURNS.

NEW POCKET EDITION IN ONE VOLUME.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

CONTAINING THE POEMS, EPISTLES, SONGS, EPIGRAMS, AND EPITAPHS, WITH NOTES, INDEX, GLOSSARY, AND BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH, ALSO A PHOTOGRAVURE FRONTISPIECE OF THE NASMYTH PORTRAIT IN THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, LONDON.

IN LIMP CLOTH,	IN LIMP LEATHER,	IN STIFF LEATHER,
gilt top, 2s. 6d. net.	gilt top, 3s. net.	gilt edges, 3s. 6d. net

Uniform with the New Pocket Edition of "Horæ Subsecivæ."

A Prospectus will be sent Post Free on application.

SCOTTISH MEN OF LETTERS IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By the Rev. HENRY GREY GRAHAM,

Author of "Social Life of Scotland in the Eighteenth Century." Demy 8vo, Cloth, Illustrated.

Price 18s.

A Prospectus will be sent Post Free on application.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A SHORT BIOGRAPHY OF MR. GLADSTONE.

JUST PUBLISHED. With a Portrait, large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

By HERBERT W. PAUL,

AUTHOR OF "MEN AND LETTERS."

Times.—"As a chronicle of facts Mr. Paul's volume is singularly complete and trustworthy, and the author does not write in any way as a partisan. . . . The difference between Mr. Paul and a commonplace biographer lies in the fact that he is able to show us the essential unity of Gladstone's character from beginning to end."

THE BIOGRAPHY OF THE LATE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

SECOND IMPRESSION READY ON MONDAY NEXT.

With a Portrait, large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE LIFE OF LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN, Author of "The Life of Charles Stewart Parnell," "Fifty Years of Concessions to Ireland," &c.

Westminster Gazette.—"One brief, vivid, and masterly volume conveying the character of the man as surely and forcibly as Mr. Sargent does in the portrait which is reproduced for the frontispiece. . . . We hazard a guess that this book will be read when the biographies of most lawyers are dust and waste paper."

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY. By W. H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D., &c., Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "Wellington's Men," &c. With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps, crown 8vo, 6s.

Academy.—"A good narrative, written with picturesque selection and energy....Mr. Fitchett's easy, bright power of narrative appeals to boy and man."

THE GREAT BOER WAR. A Two Years' Record, 1899-1901. By A. CONAN DOYLE. 14th impression (completing over 53,000 Copies printed). Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

This Edition is as complete as possible. It forms a record of the two two years of warfare which expired on October 11th, and gives the first connected account, largely derived from private sources, of the operations of the last year in South Africa.

THE SMALL FARM AND ITS MANAGEMENT. By JAMES LONG, Author of "British Dairy Farming," "Farming in a Small Way," "The Story of the Farm," "Our Food Supply," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GHOST BEREFT, and other Stories and Studies in Verse. By JANE BARLOW, Author of "Irish Idylls," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

ORPHEUS IN THRACE, and other Poems. By the late JOHN BYRNE LEICESTER WARREN, LORD DE TABLEY. Bound in white buckram, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

IMPORTANT NEW NOVELS.

PUBLISHED DECEMBER 3rd. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE VELVET GLOVE.

BY

HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

Author of "The Sowers," "In Kedar's Tents," "The Isle of Unrest," &c.

COUNT HANNIBAL.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of "The New Rector," "The Castle Inn," &c.

SECOND IMPRESSION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Athenæum.—"The best of Mr. Weyman's novels that we have seen for some time. . . . The book is rapid, is absorbing, and the hero is a distinctly interesting character in himself, apart from his deeds of daring."

Guardian.—"Mr. Stanley Weyman's 'Count Hannibal' is fully worthy of his great reputation—the style is brilliant, easy, and clear; the invention of subject and the turns of fortune in the story surprising; above all, the subtle painting of a man and a woman's heart done with inexhaustible knowledge."

THE MAKING OF A MARCHIONESS. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, Author of "The Little Lord Fauntleroy," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND IMPRESSION READY IMMEDIATELY.

Manchester Guardian.—"Mrs. Burnett's great gift is that of a portrait painter. Her characters have the pre-eminent charm of life, and Emily Fox-Seton, later raised to the position of Marchioness of Walderhurst, brims over with it."

* Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will be happy to send a copy of their Catalogue post-free upon application.

London: SMITH, ELDER and CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

Digitized by Google

Furnivall not only smiles at the reader from the photogravure plate which serves as a frontispiece for volume two (the portrait of the Lambs is mere ordinary process), but he also tells some tales which the Lambs omitted, so that, henceforward, it will be impossible to mention them apart. Were the edition made more cheap and compact we should have only the highest praise for it. At it is, schoolmasters ought to find Dr. Furnivall's notes of great service. His simple expository way is excellent.

Messrs. Chatto and Windus issue an extremely handsome small quarto edition of that fine novel, The Cloister and the Hearth, with sixteen photogravure and eighty-four other illustrations by Mr. Matthew B. Hewerdine. An excellent Christmas present. 10s. 6d. net.

New editions, suitable for gifts, are very plentiful this winter. There are Library editions of the Masters, such as Messrs. Jack's "Edinburgh" edition of the Waverley novels, bound in their sober buckram covers, but opening on pages of plain resplendence and on frontispieces of great interest, executed in the finest photogravure; the same firm's "Windsor" Shakespeare; Messrs. Blackwood's "Library," and "Warwick" editions of the works of George Eliot; Messrs. Constable's pocket edition of Mr. Meredith's novels, and their new edition of Mr. Birrell's Boswell, in six volumes; Messrs. Macmillan's delightful "Eversley" series, to which a new volume of Edward FitzGerald's Letters has just been added; and Messrs. Smith, Elder's Library edition of the Brontës. Nor could there be a better Christmas gift than the first four parts of the "Edinburgh Folio" Shakespeare now being issued, with Mr. Henley's notes, by Mr. Grant Richards.

In the "dainty" division Mr. J. M. Dent is to the fore with a three-volume Vanity Fair in his new edition of Thackeray's works. Some of us may think that Thackeray's own pictures and those of his first illustrators are worth any conceivable efforts by artists of to-day, and may find it difficult to associate wreaths, and knots, and other prettinesses of design with Thackeray's virile work; but if you want Thackeray in a new dress and a dainty, Mr. Dent's edition is the newest and the daintiest. Its cost is 3s. net per volume. Mr. Dent also issues this Christmas, at 5s. net, a very handsome illustrated and rubricated edition of Mrs. Jameson's Shakespeare's Heroines, with decorative designs by Mr. R. Anning Bell.

A very satisfactory new edition is Messrs. Newnes' volume of Milton's works, in limp leather, and in a long coat-pocket shape, with an etched portrait of Milton by Mr. E. J. Sullivan—a marvel of compact and elegant book-making at the price, which is three shillings.

Messrs. Warne and Co. have placed on the Christmas market a really good illustrated edition of Moore's Lalla Rookh, with many excellent drawings by different artists. This is a first-rate gift book at six shillings.

A very white, very handsome edition of The Dolby Dialogues is issued by Messrs. Nisbet at half-a-guinea. The illustrations are of the smartest, and the white cover is sprinkled with ostrich feathers in gold. The emergence of this volume from brown paper on a breakfast-table must inevitably be a success for the giver.

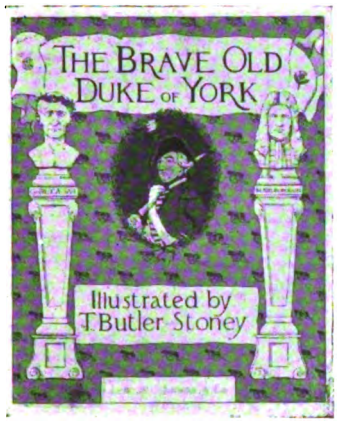
We have already referred to the Omar Khayyam Calendar issued by the De La More Press. The same illustrations, by Miss Blanche McManus, appear in the volume-edition of the poem issued by the same firm. FitzGerald's first translation is followed. This is a capital present. The price is 5s.

Mr. Heinemann issues a new edition of Mr. Howells' Italian Journeys, with over a hundred illustrations by Mr. Joseph Pennell.

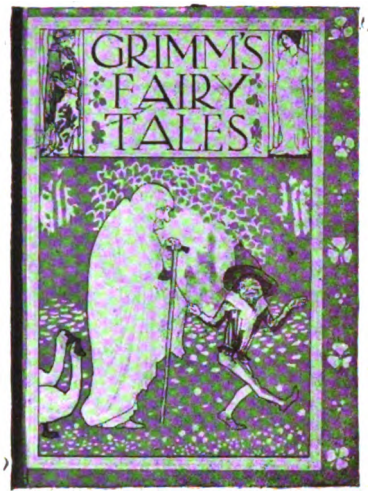
Books for Children.

In order to simplify the task, both for writer and reader, of dealing with so large an output of juvenile literature, we have divided this article into three groups, and as a convenient, if not final, classification, we are, as we did last year, calling those books which make their principal appeal through their pictures, and are aimed at quite small children, "Picture Books"; those books aimed at children between, say, seven and thirteen, which consist of stories and illustrations, the principal appeal being through the story, "Story Books"; and those books which make the story everything, and give the artist only a minute opportunity, or none at all—aiming to fill the gap between "Story Books" and romance proper—"Tales for Boys and Girls." At the end of each section we name what seem to us the six best books in it: thus, the Six Best Picture Books, the Six Best Story Books, the Six Best Tales for Boys, and the Six Best Tales for Girls.

Picture Books.



This is not a good year for picture books. We miss from the majority that have reached us that care and thought that should go to this kind of literature. Probably, however, to no picture book for children for many years has so much cleverness gone as to Old King Cole's Book of Nursery Rhymes (Macmillan), with illustrations by Mr. Byam Shaw. Mr. Shaw is not an ideal illustrator for children: he has a certain severity of manner, and his desire to be decorative overcomes his desire to be gay and amusing; but this is a remarkable effort. Probably it will find its way more often into the drawing-room than the nursery. In a very different style of decoration, yet perhaps equally painstaking, are Mr. Walter Crane's Toy Books, which Mr. Lane is reissuing. No one so lavishly spreads his colours as Mr. Crane—a short cut to the nursery's heart.

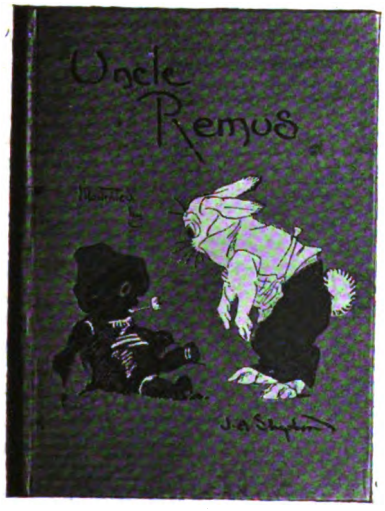


One great fault of the ordinary picture book on the grand scale (as opposed to the toy books of our youth, which really gave—and still give—full value) is its meagreness of entertainment. Take, for example, The Brave Old Duke of York (Sands), illustrated cleverly by T. Butler-Stoney—the whole book consists of plates to the well-known eight-line verse. There is nothing to it. Nor is there much to The Old Irishe Rimes of Brian O'Linn (Macmillan), by S. Rosamond Praeger, charming as it is; nor to Proverbial Sayings (Wells Gardner), by Mr. Gordon Browne; nor to Clean Peter (Longmans), by Ada Wallas. The same remark applies to Mr. Cecil Aldin's Ten Little Puppy Dogs (Sands), but the subject is so good and the drawing so happy that it will probably enjoy long life in many homes.

More matter is offered by Mr. Henry Mayer's Adventures of a Japanese Doll (Richards) and Mrs. Ames's Bedtime Book (same publisher), but we cannot find ourselves much interested in either. Mr. Mayer by no means repeats the success of his Trip to Toyland, not because his pictures are less clever, but because his story has less dramatic life. Mrs. Ames cultivates that style of indifferent drawing of which children, we think, should be offered only very occasional supplies. Her verses also are very elementary. The Bogey Book (Eyre and Spottiswoode), which might be mentioned in connection with the Bedtime Book, is enforced by a better ambition to be interesting, and occasionally its pictures are absorbing; but it is very unequal. The authors do not seem to be quite ready to appear in public.

From Mr. John Hassall come two facile exercises: A Naval Alphabet and The Pantomime A B C, both published by Messrs. Sands. A Naval Alphabet is an excellent companion to the Ships, by Mr. Seppings Wright, by the same publishers; but we cannot admire The Panto-

Digitized by Google



Some Children's Book Covers.

Digitized by Google

mime A B C, the tone of which is far too sophisticated and realistic for children. This, for example, is a piece of unpleasant irony, quite out of place in the nursery:

B is the "ballet" you'll notice appear,
To pirouette, posture and pose;
Which must be conducive to long life, it's clear,
As the Average Ballet Girl shows.

The age of ballet girls is not a subject for children to examine—children, indeed, to whom a pantomime is real! The author of the very unnecessary and disagreeable cynicisms in this book is Mr. Roland Carse.

The chief nonsense book of the year is Nonsense! Nonsense! (Blackie), written by Mr. Walter Jerrold, and illustrated by Mr. Charles Robinson with a wealth of colour. When engaged on nonsensical ideas, Mr. Robinson seems to us to lose by not taking pains. He seems to mistake slap-dash carelessness for fun. Mr. Jerrold is only occasionally inspired; certainly not when he wrote this:

There was an old mother named "Peter"
Whose husband would frequently cheat her,
Punch her head and her nose,
And stamp on her toes,
And thrash her, and kick her, and beat her.

And technically his rhymes might be much better. Mr. Edward Chesterton's Sandy Van Haeden (Johnson) is better nonsense, but the pictures are very poor.

One of the best of the picture books, where high pressure of invention and cleverness is often rather a disadvantage than a service, is Faithful Friends (Blackie), an admirable book for a small child. With these we would group the bound volume of Bo-Peep (Cassell).

Among the good animal picture books come The Animals of Æsop (Low & Co. 10s. 6d.), pictured by J. J. Mora; The Animal Book (Blackie), illustrated by Mr. F. Specht, with an excellent cover by Mr. Hassall; Mr. H. B. Neilson's Animal A B C (Blackie), a purely comic work; and the Topsy Turvy Tales, by the same illustrator, written by Mr. S. H. Hamer, and published by Messrs. Cassell, a new number of a good and popular series of collaborations by these gentlemen.

Toy books a-many, of the old-fashioned kind, have reached us from Messrs. Warne and Messrs. Nelson. Chief among Messrs. Warne's books we would mention Baby's Animal Picture Book and The Little Folks' Book of Birds; Messrs. Nelson take bolder flights into actuality, one of their books being called Up to London to See the King.

We have placed The Children's London (Leadenhall Press) under the heading of Picture Books, because to many children its pictures are likely to be its most interesting feature; but it is a serious work, containing much good informing matter about London from the interesting point of an intelligent, educated child. The author is Miss (or Mrs.) Charlotte Thorpe.

The Six Best Picture Books.

Mr. Shaw's Old King Cole's Book of Nursery Rhymes. (Macmillan.)
Anon's Faithful Friends. (Blackie.)
Mr. Smith's The Animal Book. (Blackie.)
Miss Thorpe's The Children's London. (Leadenhall Press.)
Mr. Aldin's Ten Little Puppy Dogs. (Sands.)
Mr. Hassall's A Naval Alphabet. (Sands.)

Story Books.

This year sees the issue of two deliberately-planned Christmas stories in the Dickens manner, bold attempts to recapture the old Christmas altruistic thrill: Santa Claus's Partner and The Man Who Knew Better. They are curiously similar, for the reason, probably, that the formula for a Dickens' Christmas story does not change. It seems beyond alteration that there must be a curmudgeon or miser whose character, whatever his age, health, and crystallisation may be on, say, December 20, shall, by December 25, have undergone a complete change, so that he blossoms forth a beneficent and acceptable philanthropist and humorist. Of the two books on this theme, Santa Claus's Partner (Grant Richards), by the American novelist, Mr. Thomas Nelson Page, is the better. It is, indeed, admirably done—a kind of literary version, by prevision, of A Message from Mars. Mr. Tom Gallon, the author of The Man Who Knew Better (Constable), and the most inveterate of our younger Dickensians, is not so successful; but his story has many kindly passages, and Mr. Gordon Browne has put pleasant pictures to it.

Mr. Andrew Lang, in his adventures on the chromatic scale, this year reaches violet; and The Violet Fairy Book (Longmans. 6s.) is worthy its predecessors. Where the stories come from, and how many there are still to come, are problems which we cannot begin to answer. It is Mr. Lang who can find them if any one is able. Mr. H. J. Ford is again the illustrator, and this year he has worked to a large extent in colours with excellent results. The book is wholly charming.

Mr. J. M. Gibbon has collected, under the title of The Reign of King Cole (Dent. 6s.), a number of well-known fairy tales from various sources, joined by a string of commentary associating them with King Cole. Whether or not children value this very transparent device we cannot say. Personally we do not. But the collection is a capital one, and Mr. Charles Robinson has provided many spirited pictures.

Other collections of fairy tales include Grimm's Fairy Tales (Dent), illustrated by Mr. Anning Bell with much charm but little dramatic power; Fairy Tales from Hans Andersen (Wells Gardner), illustrated spiritedly by Mr. Gordon Browne; Queen Mab's Fairy Realm (Newnes), being a collection of modern fairy tales (the literary rather than the traditional variety), by many authors and illustrators; and Fairy Tales from the Swedish (Heinemann), a translation by Mr. Brækstadt chiefly of folk-lore stories. Here also we would mention Old Ballads in Prose (Longmans), by Eva March Tappan, a prose paraphrase for children of certain numbers in the Percy Reliques and other collections, of which we cannot feel that the prose has any attractions above the original verse; and lastly, for smaller children, Messrs. Warne's Our Favourite Fairy Tales and Our Favourite Nursery Tales, two capital cheap little books.

Among original fairy tales the first place must be given to Miss Evelyn Sharp's new Wymp book, Round the World to Wymp Land (Lane), in which we meet again, after too long an absence, the little creatures whom Miss Sharp has invented—thus taking her place among the constructive mythologists. We cannot offer so warm a welcome to A Real Queen's Fairy Book (Newnes), by Carmen Sylva, for, though lavishly illustrated and attractively prepared, the stories are not too suitable for children, nor are they very attractively told. A strained sense of beauty is not the best passport to the nursery. Another collection of original fantastic stories is by Miss Myra Hamilton, entitled Fancy Free Land (Chapman & Hall), where much ingenuity has been expended, but too little disciplined, we feel, by probability—for even in a fairy story some law must be observed. Nine Unlikely Tales (Unwin), another original work, by E. Nesbit, is rich in high spirits, but not always as free from vulgarity as one could wish.

Mr. G. E. Farrow, who must by this time have a large public of his own, is represented this year by two stories, both published by Messrs. Pearson: The New Panjandrum and Baker Minor and the Dragon. Mr. Farrow is

Digitized by Google

NOW READY. NOW READY.

"Black & White" Christmas Number,

1901.

Consisting of 48 Pages (inclusive of 8 Full Pages Printed in Colours) and a Magnificent Reproduction of the Celebrated Picture entitled

"SAVING THE COLOURS,"

BY ROBERT W. GIBB, R.S.A.

CONTENTS:

FATHER CHRISTMAS'S BOOK TEA: By ARTHUR RACKHAM.

The Six Full Pages in Colours are as follows:—

THIS LITTLE PIG: By LEWIS BAUMER.
JEMIMA: By LEWIS BAUMER.
FUN ON THE ICE: By H. B. NEILSON.
THE BADLY-BEHAVED SNOWMAN: By I. NEWTON SHEPARD.
THE HARE THAT DOUBLED: By ARTHUR RACKHAM.
FOUR PROVERBS: By GEORGE MORROW.

MISS PEGGY'S PROTEGES: By BRET HARTE. A return to the manner of this famous writer's delightful "Baby Sylvester," "The Queen of Pirate Isle," and "Sarah Walker."

THE ROAD TO ROME: By E. NESBIT. Author of "The Treasure Seekers."

THE CHRISTMAS OF THE POOR PLAYERS: By TOM GALLON. An old-fashioned Christmas Story by the author of "Tatterley."

THROUGH THE GREEN DOOR: By EVELYN SHARP. Another Fairy Story by the writer of "Wymps," and

JIM OR JOE: By P. HILBERT.

Also, as a special and much-required feature,

A Play for Private Performance in the Theatre Royal Back Drawing-Room

FETCHING THE DOCTOR:

By THOMAS COBB.

This play, which has humorous illustrations by Mr. WILL OWEN, has been specially written to be acted by a small cast of children, with as few stage properties as possible. No kind of literature is so much in demand as good original plays for home performance by children, and the conductors of Black and White are confident that in Mr. Cobb's amusing little rama they have found exactly what is required.

The whole printed at "Black & White" Office, England.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, Post Free, 1s. 4d.

Publishing Office: 63, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Published every Friday. Price Twopence.

BLACK & WHITE BUDGET

THE BIJOU ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY,

HAS ATTAINED AN ENORMOUS CIRCULATION

and is, without exception, absolutely the most popular weekly of the age.

The unparalleled success of the BLACK AND WHITE BUDGET has enabled the Proprietors to issue at twopence a neat, handy, and concise newspaper, containing all the features of the best sixpenny illustrateds in a condensed form. A publication of the class and character which has hitherto been quite unobtainable at so low a price.

It is the ideal paper for a railway journey, and has no rival in the home circle.

All the most important news of the week will be found in its pages: war and peace, at home and abroad, sport and the stage, every-day life, in fact everything of general interest, profusely illustrated from cover to cover.

There are approximately over one hundred pictures every week. BLACK AND WHITE BUDGET is, in fact, a great journalistic innovation which the general public has not been slow to recognise and appreciate an artist in high spirits, and his comic invention never seems to fail him. We must confess that he is a taste which we have never thoroughly acquired, but so many boys and girls find him good company that criticism falters. Another work in the same kind is Wonders in Monster Land (Allen), by E. D. Cuming, where the curious may read of mammoths and extinct creatures, including the Oh-don't-op Teryx. The illustrations are by Mr. J. A. Shepherd.

Digitized by Google

Two new series of children's books begin this autumn. One is "The Little Blue Books for Children," edited for Messrs. Methuen by Mr. E. V. Lucas, who originated the Dumpy Series for Mr. Grant Richards. The first of the three volumes already published is a selection from the stories of Jacob Abbott, under the title of The Beechnut Book, which deals in a fascinatingly detailed manner with the life and interests of a number of American children and their ingenious friend and leader, Beechnut. The second, entitled The Airgun, by T. Hilbert, is a spirited and convincing story for boys, in which girls are not unlikely to be interested. The third, The Castaways, we review, elsewhere. This series is aimed at those children who want stories of the everyday affairs of life, as well as of the doings of fairies and princesses. The illustrations should, we think, be particularly satisfying to them, as they represent very simply children and things as they really are. The cover design, by Mr. F. D. Bedford, adds to the charm of the series.

The other new series is "The Larger Dumpy Books" (meaning less dumpy) put forth by Mr. Grant Richards to accompany his smaller series. The first three volumes are Pillow Stories, prettily told and prettily illustrated, by S. L. Heward and Gertrude M. Bradley; Holidays and Happy Days, with quaintly charming pictures in colours, by E. F. Mason, representing Old English customs and festivals, but a shade too serious and patronising in its letterpress; and The Six-Inch Admiral, a work for which we cannot find much praise, illustrated by photographs of dummy figures intended to suggest real life but not doing so.

In the Dumpy Books, Mr. Thomas Cobb, who understands as well as anyone the art of telling a direct story for children, has an excellent tale, The Little Clown; Miss Tourtel, in A Horse Book, depicts the horse with unusual accuracy, but lacks spirit in her rhymes; Mr. J. R. Monsell offers a nonsense story, The Pink Knight, better illustrated than invented; and Mr. Henry Mayer draws in Little People some very pleasant characteristic figures of the natives, to which Mr. T. W. H. Crosland, that satirist in grain, supplies verses which, while always ingenious, too often trend upon sophistication and irony. Altogether the new doses in this homœopathic library, as we might call the "Dumpy Books," are very palatable.

With these may be grouped The Story of Little Black Mingo (Nisbet), by Helen Bannerman, whose Little Black Sambo is in so many homes. It is an agreeably absurd history, but a second crop from the same field is rarely so rich as the first.

To come to quieter stories by ladies, Mrs. Farmiloe's Little Citizens (S.P.C.K.), written and illustrated by herself, is a collection of pretty stories of poor London children; and Mrs. Molesworth's two volumes for this Christmas, The Wood Pigeons and Mary (Macmillan) and "My Pretty" and Her Little Brother "Too" (Chambers), have her old charm. We cannot say quite so much for Mrs. L. T. Meade's new story, Cosey Corner; or, How They Kept the Farm (Chambers), which is rather forced and not too interesting. A brighter book is Those Twins (Blackie), by Elinor Davenport Adams, in which we read of the efforts of two ingenious and purposeful, if somewhat incredible, young reformers who set out to make a man of a too casual cousin. In Private Bobs and the New Recruit (Dent), by Mrs. Henry Birchenough, two other adventurous children will be found who, fired partly by military ardour, determined to visit the Jubilee. Lord Roberts, whose connection with children, real or fictitious, has already been exploited quite enough, plays a part in the narrative.

A more serious work than any yet named is Saints of Italy (Dent), being certain legends of the Saints retold by Ella Noyes, and illustrated by pictures after the old Masters. The narrative manner is simple and interesting, and the stories will lend wonder to Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Seton-Thompson has taken his place as one of the first writers of stories for children. Indeed, as the historian of American wild animals he comes very nigh Mr. Kipling as the historian of the jungle, although the sense of wonder which permeates the Indian tales is lacking. In Lives of the Hunted (Nutt) Mr. Seton-Thompson tells with pen and pencil several more of his moving stories of beasts, but they are less wild than before—no longer bears and stags, but rams and sparrows and pups and rats, with a coyote thrown in to maintain the tradition. Some of the same territory which Mr. Seton-Thompson has made his own is explored very acceptably by Mr. William J. Long in Secrets of the Woods (Ginn and Co.).

Another animal book from across the Atlantic is our old friend Uncle Remus (Grant Richards. 6s.), printed in large type, and supplied with a number of grotesque drawings by Mr. J. A. Shepherd. Our own feeling is that Mr. Shepherd would be a much better illustrator if he were not so grotesque; but very possibly the nursery differs.

Before leaving animal story books we should mention The World of Animal Life (Blackie), edited by Mr. Fred Smith; and Strange Adventures in Dicky Bird Land (Cassell), by Mr. R. Kearton, illustrated by photographs by Mr. C. Kearton. Other animal books will be found under the heading "Picture Books."

Music, poetry, and the drama for children are supplied in the St. Nicholas' Book of Plays and Operettas (Warne), a good collection; in Mr. Alfred Scott Gattey's Domestic Ditties (Pearson), with music by the author; and in Pater's Book of Rhymes (Sherratt and Hughes), a work not by the late Walter Pater, but by His Honour Judge Parry.

The Six Best Story Books.

Mr. Lang's Violet Fairy Book. (Longmans.)
Mr. Gibbon's Reign of King Cole. (Dent.)
Mr. Page's Santa Claus's Partner. (Richards.)
Mrs. Molesworth's The Wood Pigeons. (Macmillan.)
Mr. Seton-Thompson's Lives of the Hunted. (Nutt.)
Miss Sharp's Round the World to Wymp Land. (Lane.)

The following are three verses from the forthcoming Ballad of Mr. Rook, written by Mr. George Wyndham to amuse his little boy, Percy, during a period of convalescence spent at Clouds, the seat of the Hon. Percy Wyndham. At Clouds the rooks were fed through the winter, but took flight in the spring:

All flew away. Ah no, not all!
For one bird had a heart
Responsive to a loving call
And could not so depart.

Old Mr. Rook loved well the wood
Where he was wont to nest,
Yet beat his heart in gratitude
Beneath his glossy breast.

"Shall I," quoth he, "who brought these crowds
"To feast here as they pleased,
"Leave now the kindly house of Clouds
"Where all our pain is eased?"

It is the nest-building of the grateful rook in the woods at Clouds that the ballad of the Irish Secretary celebrates.

Digitized by Google

Tales for Boys and Girls.

THE great activity of the present publishing season is reflected in the output of the boys' and girls' story books which are peculiar to this time of the year. They come as surely as the chrysanthemums, and in the same wealth of colour. Last year the list of these books ran to eighty-eight titles. This year the number is nearer one hundred and twenty. To the adult mind there is a wonderful sameness about these stories of war, adventure, school life, and the home. But we very much doubt whether to their proper readers they seem at all monotonous. After all, they are addressed to readers between the ages of eight and fourteen. Grant to each reader the generous allowance of six stories a year, and it will be seen that the boys' writer can very safely ring the changes on battles as old as Marathon and as new as Eland's Laagte; on sea fights in which the Viking spear is hurled and on sea fights in which the stealthy submarine creeps under the hull of the ironclad; on the dripping scalps with which Long Feather or Blazing Arrow adorns his wigwam, and on the most approved method of dispersing a crowd of alligators on the mud flats of the Amazon. Time cannot stale nor custom wither the infinite variety of the Ranch, the Pampas, the Deep Sea Pearl Fishery, or the lower decks of a Slave Dhow. And, as a matter of fact, these good old elements maintain their supremacy. It is only little by little, and in spite of many reactions, that modern conditions, inventions, and scientific results get themselves embodied in the everlasting multi-coloured romance of life which year by year is hewn into appropriate lengths and bound up in prize books. We notice, for example, that in a year when the drift of narrative naturally sets toward South Africa, China, and the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, we are nevertheless presented with quite a number of Red Indian stories of the good old type. While American statesmen and philanthropists are considering benevolent devices for keeping the poor Indian alive, your boys' story-teller still finds it profitable to represent the Redskin in the act of swinging his tomahawk over the white man's head. Under the class of British soldiering, again, we find that the material offered by the war in South Africa is used but sparingly. Last year seven books were dedicated to the campaign. This year there are but eight, and we note a strong disposition to return to the War in Egypt, the Indian Mutiny, the Crimea, and other earlier theatres of British prowess.

The catalogue of juvenile stories which lies on our table is necessarily long, but it has its own statistical and classificatory interest. Here it is:

Home.

Chadwick (W. E.), Ethel Hardman: A Story of Self Discipline(S.P.C.K.)
Bramston (M.), Golden-Hearted(S.P.C.K.)
Macsorley (Catherine M.), An Irish Cousin(S.P.C.K.)
Mallandaine (Catherine E.), Like Cures Like(S.P.C.K.)
Mallandaine (Catherine E.), In Luck's Way(S.P.C.K.)
Curry (E. S.), A Girl's Resolve(S.P.C.K.)
Jacberns (Raymond), Robin(S.P.C.K.)
Le Feuvre (Amy Le), A Cherry Tree ...(Hodder & Stoughton) 2/0
Keith (Leslie), Penance(Hodder & Stoughton) 6/0
Haverfield (E. L.), Jim's Sweethearts(Nelson) 2/6
Synge (Mrs. Hamilton), Dickie(Nelson) 1/6
Adams (Elinor Davenport), On Honour(Nelson) 2/6
The Author of "Val," Two of a Trade(Nelson) 1/6
Percival (Leila), Professor Archie(Nelson) 1/0
Clarke (Mrs. Henry), A Lad of Devon(Nelson) 1/0
Clarke (Mrs. Henry), Into Stormy Waters (Sunday School Union) 1/6
Tynan (Katharine), A Girl of Galway(Blackie) 6/0
Heddle (Ethel F.), An Original Girl(Blackie) 6/0
Chappell (Jennie), Terrie's Travels(Blackie) 5/0
Callwell (J. M.), A Little Irish Girl(Blackie) 2/6
Meade (Mrs. L. T.), A Very Naughty Girl(Chambers) 5/0
Meade (Mrs. L. T.), Girls of the True Blue(Chambers) 6/0
Strafford (Mary), Mrs. Hammond's Children (R. Brimley Johnson) 3/6 net
Mills (Mary E.), A Troublesome Godchild (Griffiths Farran) 3/6
Skrine (Mary J. H.), The World's Delight(Lane)
Nesbit (E.), The Wouldbegoods(Unwin) 6/0
Arnold (Mrs. S. G.), Two Busybodies(Unwin) 6/0
Delaire (Jean), Two Girls and a Dream(Ward, Lock) 3/6

School.

Timlow (Eliz. W.), A Nest of Girls, or Boarding-School Days(Chambers) 6/0
Home (Andrew), Out of Bounds.....(Chambers) 3/6
Sharp (Evelyn), The Youngest Girl in the School (Macmillan) 6/0
Mansergh (Jessie), Tom and Some Other Girls.....(Cassell) 3/6
Coombe (Florence), For the Old School.....(Blackie) 2/0
Swainson (Frederick), Acton's Feud(Newnes) 3/6
Edwards (R. W. K.), Dick Vaughan's Term (Wells Gardner) 2/6
Cartwright (John), The Chronicles of Durnford (S.P.C.K.)
Barrow-North (H.), Jerry Dodds, Millionaire, A School Yarn of Merriment and Mystery(Chambers) 3/6

History and Historical Fighting.

Henty (G. A.), To Herat and Cabul(Blackie) 5/0
Henty (G. A.) At the Point of the Bayonet(Blackie) 6/0
Elrington (H.), In the Days of Prince Hal.....(Blackie) 1/6
Baring-Gould (S.), Grettir the Outlaw.....(Blackie) 3/0
Brereton (Captain F. S.), A Gallant Grenadier...(Blackie) 5/0
Pollard (Eliza F.), The Doctor's Niece.....(Blackie) 3/6
Miles (Alfred H.), Fifty-two Stories of Courage and Endeavour for Girls(Hutchinson) 5/0
Miles (Alfred H.), Fifty-two Stories of Greater Britain (Hutchinson) 5/0
Everett-Green (E.), True Stories of Girl Heroines (Hutchinson)
Whishaw (Fred.), The Lion Cub: A Story of Peter the Great(Griffith Farran) 3/6
Everett-Green (E.), For the Faith.....(Nelson) 3/6
Everett-Green (E.), In Fair Granada(Nelson) 5/0
Havens (Herbert), For the Colours(Nelson) 6/0
Glasgow (Geraldine), The Queen's Shilling(Nelson) 1/0
Poynter (H. May), Madamscourt(Nelson) 2/0
Marshall (Beatrice), Old Blackfriars(Seeley) 5/0
Fenn (C. R.), For the Old Flag(Sampson Low) 2/6
Davidson (Mary M.), Edward the Exile (Hodder & Stoughton) 6/0
Gilliat (Rev. E.), God Save King Alfred(Macmillan) 6/0
Perry (Walter), The Boy's Odyssey.....(Macmillan) 6/0
Wood (Walter), With the Flag at Sea.....(Constable) 6/0
Laughton (John K.), Sea Fights and Adventures.....(Allen) 6/0
Smith (G. Barnett), Heroes of the Nineteenth Century (Pearson) 5/0
Berrey (R. Power), The Boy's Book of Bravery (Pearson) 5/0
St. Leger (Hugh), Billets and Bullets.....(Griffith Farran) 3/6
Stephens (Robert N.), Captain Ravenshaw: A Romance of Elizabethan London(Ward, Lock) 6/0
Stables (Gordon), With Cutlass and Torch.....(Nisbet) 5/0
Marchant (Bessie), In Perilous Times.....(Gall & Inglis)
Johnston (William), Under the Sirdar's Flag.....(Partridge) 2/6
Weedon (L. L.), Little John Cope.....(S.P.C.K.)
Henty (G. A.) and Others, Courage and Conflict (Chambers) 5/0

Adventure.

Burnham (Hampden), Jack Ralston, or the Outbreak of the Nauscopees(Nelson) 5/0
Cameron (Verney Lovett), Three Sailor Boys.....(Nelson) 1/6
Forester (F. B.), Held to Ransom.....(Nelson) 5/0
Cowper (W.M.), "The Brown Bird" and Her Owners (S.P.C.K.)
Daunt (Achilles), Out on the Llanos.....(S.P.C.K.)
Hinkson (H. A.), Sir Phelim's Treasure(S.P.C.K.)
Kenyon (C. R.), The Argonauts of the Amazon (Chambers) 3/6
Ellis (Edward S.), Blazing Arrow(Cassell) 2/6
Ellis (Edward S.), The Chieftain and the Scout(Cassell) 2/6
Walkey (S.), With Redskins on the Warpath(Cassell)
Whitmarsh (Lieut. H. P.), The Young Pearl Divers (Macqueen)
Hope (A. R.), An Album of Adventures.....(Black) 5/0
Lampen (C. Dudley), O'Callaghan the Slave Trader (Digby, Long) 3/6
Mackie (John), The Heart of the Prairie(Newnes) 3/6
Munroe (Kirk), Longfeather the Peacemakers(Newnes) 3/6
Marchant (Bessie), Three Girls on a Ranch(Blackie) 2/6
Samson (John), In the Dictator's Grip(Blackie) 3/6
Stables (Dr. Gordon), In Quest of the Giant Sloth ...(Blackie) 3/6
Roper (Edward), Ice-Bound(Partridge) 2/6
Oxley (J. Macdonald), Norman's Nugget.....(Partridge) 2/6
Graydon (W. M.), On Winding Waters(Partridge) 2/6

Digitized by Google

South Africa.

Moxon (William), Stories from South African History (Griffiths Farran) 3/6
The Author of "In Lion Land," The Cape and Its Story (Nelson) 2/6
Henty (G. A.), With Roberts to Pretoria(Blackie) 6/0
Burrage (E. H.), Carbineer and Scout(Blackie) 2/6
Fenn (George Manville), The Kopje Garrison(Chambers) 5/0
Allen (Phœbe), Mafeking Day(S.P.C.K.)

China.

Marchant (Bessie), Among Hostile Hordes ...(Gall & Inglis)
Brereton (Capt. F. S.), The Dragon of Pekin(Blackie) 5/0
Squire (Charles), The Great Khan's Treasure(Blackie) 3/6
Fenn (G. Manville), Ching the Chinaman(S.P.C.K.)

Natural History.

Ensign (H. L.), Lady Lee, and other Animal Stories (McClurg, Chicago) $2
Smith (Fred), The Boyhood of a Naturalist(Blackie) 3/6
Cochrane (Robert), More Animal Stories(Chambers) 2/o
Giberne (Agnes), The Mighty Deep and What we Know of It (Pearson) 5/0
Hewett (Rev. G. M. A.), The Open Air Boy(Allen) 6/0

New Editions.

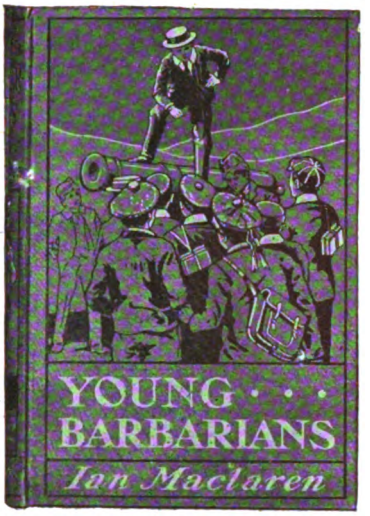
Abbott (Jacob), The Beechnut Book, Ed. by E. V. Lucas (Methuen) 2/6
Collingwood (Harry), The Pirate Island(Blackie) 3/0
Kuppord (Skelton), Hammond's Hard Lines(Blackie) 1/6
Verne (Jules), An Antarctic Mystery(Sampson Low) 2/6

When it comes to discussing the literary merits of these stories the critic finds himself at a standstill in a veritable jungle of equality. The art of writing boys' books is thoroughly understood up to a point by publishers and authors. In the mass, these books are written to pattern. The pattern is good as far as it goes. It is perfectly understood how a hunt for secret treasure should be developed, how a school rebellion should be engineered, or how the ingredients should be mixed in a tale of the Incas. The very jokes, quotations, and little asides of the narrative maintain a certain sameness, a certain reminiscence of the established pattern. So that beyond stating that a given story is concerned with Garibaldi's wars, or with the capture of the hero by Spanish banditti, or with gold seeking in Australia or in New Mexico, or with a quest for the Antarctic Pole, or with hunting on the great Caribou Barrens, or with wild doings in Russia under Peter the Great, or with the early heroes of Iceland, there is usually a plentiful lack of opportunity for anything like intimate criticism.

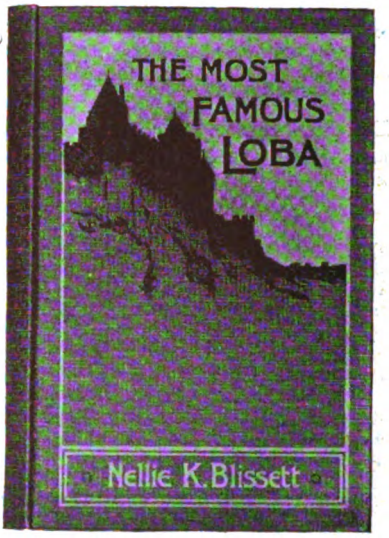
Nevertheless, the conscientious reviewer will not be denied. The elect must be found. We have no doubt whatever that the best boy and girl story published this year is Mr. Thomas Cobb's The Castaways of Meadow Bank. This story, of only one hundred and ninety-one small square pages, takes its place in the series of "Little Blue Books for Children," which Mr. E. V. Lucas is editing for Messrs. Methuen. The peculiar merit of Mr. Cobb's story is its naturalness. Its main and, indeed, only incident is the imprisonment of three boys and a girl in a house entirely cut off from civilisation by the flooding of a river. There is nothing either sensational or improbable in their launching of a boat on the dangerous waters during the absence of their guardians, in their helpless drifting down the stream, or in their growing alarm. These things are told with that gripping simplicity which Defoe used with unrivalled effect in Robinson Crusoe. The sighting of Major Stanley's deserted mansion, now an island in the grey leagues of water, and the entry of the party by an upper window, prepare us for the gist of the tale: a "desert island" experience not too long or severe for the discreet blending of comedy and tragedy. Nothing could be better than the description of the plight of these boys and girls when the stupidity of the youngest has allowed their boat to escape down stream, leaving them prisoners in the bedrooms of the deserted country house whose staircase descends into many feet of water. The debates on their situation, their gradual wakening from dismay to action, the allotting of sleeping quarters and the economic distribution of biscuits—the only supplies immediately discoverable—are the small and obvious points of the situation. These, however, are developed by Mr. Cobb with so much proper detail, and with so much knowledge of the boy and girl character, that the story lays hold of the mind of a grown man. Ceasing to think of it merely as a story for juveniles, one finds it a capable study in juvenility, a duality of merit which we believe is the hall-mark of all first-rate stories for the young.

Moreover, Mr. Cobb brings to his story-telling none of that secondary literary attitude—excellent and delightful in itself—which distinguishes, say, the work of Mr. Kenneth Grahame, or, in a somewhat different way, Mr. G. S. Street. His full and intimate understanding of his boys and girls prefers to go unassisted by descriptive interludes or little ironic asides to any adult reader who may happen to be about. So tight, bare, and businesslike is his method that it might be expected to emerge in a certain coldness. This, however, is not the case, and the explanation is that Mr. Cobb's sympathy is warmly implicit.

Quite different in its methods and effects is the story which we should place next to his in merit. This is Miss Evelyn Sharp's The Youngest Girl in the School (Macmillan), a most amusing story, full of humorous insight into the boy and girl world, and for that matter into the grown-up world, too. That it will appeal to boys and girls we have no doubt, for the incidents are plentiful and of the right kind. But the story is sophisticated. It is written as to be a kind of jocular, entirely pleasant victimisation of boys and girls for the amusement of grown-ups. The conventional funny story about children which goes the rounds of the newspapers is frequently recalled in the dialogue. You feel that the talk has been dressed up and improved upon, prepared, as it were, for the Press, and spiced with something of the narrator's inward comment. For instance, when the Berkeley boys and girls are discussing the expected advent of their Aunt Anna, who is to take charge of them all during their father's absence in America, the sententious Kit predicts his Aunt's various revolutionary arrangements:



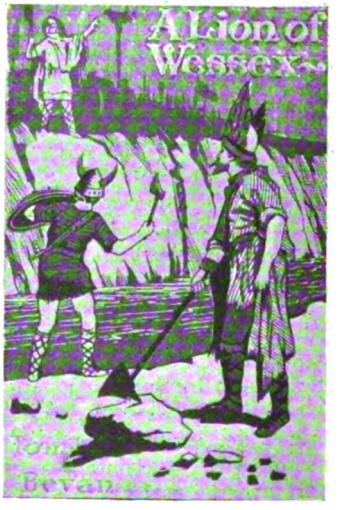
> "First of all," said Christopher, with an air of confidence, "she'll see that Egbert has a crammer next summer holidays; and he'll either have to get that scholarship or he doesn't go to Oxford at all! She'll talk about discipline and things like that. Aunts always do talk about discipline, when it's for other people's children. . . . As for Wilfred, she'll upset all his ambitions before he can turn round. Do you suppose she'll encourage his messing about with things in saucepans, just because he wants to be a doctor? Not she! She'll talk about some rotten business in the City instead. Aunts always know millions of places in the City, where they can shove their unwilling nephews. . . . Then she'll pack Robin to a preparatory at Brighton—never knew an aunt yet who didn't want to send you to a preparatory at Brighton!"

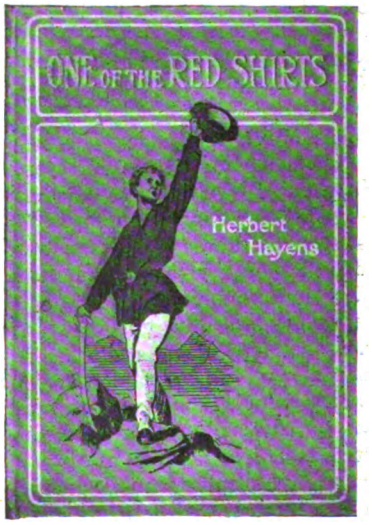


Here you observe that infusion of the writer's mind in the minds of her juvenile characters, for when everything is allowed for the precocity and pomposity of the very young Kit, his generalisations on the subject of aunts are in form and substance those of a literary adult writer.

Casting round once more for a nugget, we alight on Ian Maclaren's Scottish school story, Young Barbarians (Hodder & Stoughton). We sense a certain machine-made quality in this well illustrated story. Perhaps it is the reminiscence of "Kail Yard" workmanship, the "Kail Yard" dependence on dialect, and the "Kail Yard" deliberation in long semi-humorous passages, that contributes to this feeling. One feels, too, that if the word

Digitized by Google





Some Boys' and Girls' Book Covers.

Digitized by Google

departure could not be printed "depairture," the humour of half a chapter might crumble in the dust. And as regards Ian Maclaren's literary attitude, as we may call it, there is this to be said: It is thoroughly conventional in its geniality and full waistcoated, rather overdone, toleration of the pranks and escapades of schoolboys. In consideration of certain boy virtues, these are benevolently encouraged in the most approved "boys-will-be-boys" fashion, and the sufferings of junior masters and local tradesmen are fair game throughout. This is all right in moderation, but this playing up to the schoolboy can be just a little unctuous. The baiting of junior masters and bailies is not the stuff of which the best school stories are made, though it enters in some just proportion into them all. Nevertheless, Young Barbarians is undeniably one of the best boys' school stories of the year, and we may point out for particular praise the chapter called "The Famous Victory," in which the Seminary boys and the Free Kirk school indulge in a snowball fight, both sides showing very good tactics. During the fight the whereabouts of the powers that be are humorously described as follows:

> As for the police, who were not numerous in Muirtown, and who lived on excellent good terms with everybody, except tramps, they seemed to have a prophetic knowledge when a snow-fight was coming on, and were detained by important duty in distant streets. It was always, however, believed by the Seminary that two of the police could be seen, one at the distance of the bridge over the Tay, the other at the far extremity of Breadalbane Street, following the fight with rapt attention, and in the case of the Pennies winning, which had been their own school, smacking their lips and slapping their hands under the pretence of warming themselves in the cold weather, and in the event of the Seminaries winning marching off in opposite directions, lest they should be tempted to interfere, which they would have considered contrary to the rules of fair play, and giving their own school a mean advantage. Perhaps some ingenuous modern person will ask, "What were the masters of the Seminary about during this hour?" The Rector was sitting by the fire in his retiring-room, reading a winter ode of Horace, and as faint sounds of war reached his ears he would stir the fire and lament, like the quiet old scholar that he was, that Providence had made him ruler of such a band of barbarians; but he would also cherish the hope that his barbarians would not come off second. As for Bulldog, his mind was torn between two delights—the anticipation of the exercise which he would have next day, and the pleasure which his lads were having to-day—and nothing more entirely endeared Bulldog to his savages than the fact that, instead of going home to dinner during this hour, which was his usual custom, he contented himself with a biscuit. He was obliged to buy it in a baker's shop in Breadalbane Street, from which he could command a perfect view of the whole battle, especially as he happened to stand in the doorway of the shop, and never returned to school till the crisis of war was over. He was careful to explain to the school that he had himself gone for the purpose of identifying the ringleaders in mischief, and it was on such an occasion that Speug, keeping his right cheek immovable towards Bulldog, would wink to the assembled school with irresistible effect.

Miss Katharine Tynan's story, A Girl of Galway (Blackie), is pleasant reading, and, like Little Lord Fauntleroy, it is concerned with the redemption from solitude and stinginess of a wealthy but soured old man, Sir Delvin Grace, who has shut himself up in his ancestral home in the deep woods of Corofin, with five miles of carriage-drive between his front door and his lodge gates. How she fulfils her promise to her mother to reconcile Sir Delvin Grace with his son (her father), and how she advances in her own career of young womanhood amid lovely and beautiful surroundings, are the elements in the story, which is written with all Miss Tynan's usual grace, and with an ever-present sense of the language and companionship of the woodlands.

Home and School Stories.

Turning now to the larger mass of books before us, we can cordially recommend Miss Ethel F. Heddle's story, An Original Girl (Blackie). It is a story of London life. The heroine, Christobel Beauchamp, makes her living by typewriting in an office till chance throws her across the path of Lady Anne Prideaux, her grandmother. Her mother had made a mésalliance, marrying an actor, the Mr. Beauchamp of the story. Lady Anne desires to adopt Christobel, but the girl returns to her father, who sadly needs her help. The story tells how the poor actor at last receives his "call," and ends with the promise of good fortune for Christobel, her many friends, and Donald Ramsay, her devoted lover.

Schoolgirls will thoroughly appreciate Elizabeth Westyn Timlow's story of American school life, called A Nest of Girls (Chambers). This is quite the schoolgirliest story that we have read. Perhaps, indeed, the incidents, intrigues, and escapades which go on at Mrs. Conway's establishment at 67, Tupelo Street, Elm City, are a little exaggerated and somewhat too suggestive of a later stage in the lives of her characters. The story, however, is thoroughly wholesome and feminine. Acton's Feud (Newnes) is a rough-and-tumble football story of public school life, full of incident and plot. Boys will like it.

History and Battle.

Among stories of battles and historical incident Mr. G. A. Henty's At the Point of the Bayonet (Blackie), a tale of the Mahratta War, stands out as a thoroughly virile and skilful boys' tale. The same may be said of Mr. Fred Whishaw's The Lion Cub (Griffith Farran), a rousing story of court intrigue and street fighting under Peter the Great. The second chapter contains a tremendous description of a revolution conducted by the Streltsi archers under the walls of the Kremlin. A leading incident is the throwing over a balcony to the howling mob below of the royal favourite, Dolgorouki, who falls among the spears beneath.

> Then, as those have attested who witnessed this tragedy, the most extraordinary and horrible thing happened. For scarcely had the doomed General fallen among the infuriated soldiers than his body was cut into shreds, and thrown hither and thither until there was not a particle of it to be found; every bit of him had been sliced with swords, trampled into the dust underfoot, and lost.
>
> "My children, my children—what have you done?" wailed old Matveyeff, hiding his eyes.
>
> He had better have remained silent.
>
> "Throw down Matveyeff also!" the crowd shouted. "He sided with Dolgorouki."
>
> The men on the balcony seized the old man, and were about to cast him among the frenzied soldiers. Then a woman ran out upon the balcony and held their arms this was the Tsaritsa.
>
> Then Ivanoff and the rest raised old Matveyeff, and cast him, a most innocent victim, among the yelling mob; and in a moment he had shared the fate of Dolgorouki, and there was not any portion of his body remaining that would have been large enough for the meal of a dog.

The boy who has got to this early point in the story is not likely to lay it down.

Two stories dealing with the career of Alfred the Great, both thoroughly interesting, are the Rev. E. Gilliat's God Save King Alfred! (Macmillan) and Mr. Tom Bevan's A Lion of Wessex (Partridge). Mr. Gilliat's book is particularly well printed and illustrated, and is emphatically one of the books of the year for a boy. We need not stay to inquire too closely whether the following conventions of language are minutely true to the period:—"'Wife,' said the freeman, to a buxom lady who came in from the kitchen, 'when will our supper be ready? for we be for-spent and a-hungered.' 'Good man, rest you easy awhile; brewing meats may not be hurried, ye wot; but here cometh Egwina with a brew of pigment that shall give you a merry foretaste of that which shall follow.'" We wonder how many boy readers will recognise this "pigment" as the highly spiced wine, sweetened with honey, which our forefathers quaffed round their hearths.

Digitized by Google

We can but mention as excellent story books of a familiar type Mr. Herbert Hayens's One of the Red Shirts (Nisbet), a story of Garibaldi's revolution; Captain F. S. Brereton's A Gallant Grenadier (Blackie), a story of the Crimean war, in which the plucky hero, beginning as a schoolboy, ends as one of the heroes of the Charge of the Light Brigade, and also discovers the long withheld secret of his birth. Enough to say, in the author's words, that Phil Western falls on his feet. Two historical romances of a quieter kind, yet full of colour and interest, are Miss Beatrice Marshall's Old Blackfriars (Seeley), a tale of the days of Sir Anthony Van Dyck; and Mr. Robert Neilson Stephens's Captain Ravenshaw; or, The Maid of Cheapside (Ward, Lock), a romance of Elizabethan London. The illustrations to Miss Marshall's story are particularly good, and include several charming realisations of Old London. The frontispiece alone of Miss Everett-Green's In Fair Grenada (Nelson) will be enough to tempt any imaginative boy, to whom a cavalcade with banners and men in armour passing through a Moorish arch into a red-tiled city of the romantic Spain of yore suggests high adventure and gallant deeds.

Adventure.

We have already referred to the presence of several Red Indian stories in our collection. Two of these—namely, Mr. Kirk Munroe's Longfeather the Peacemaker; or, The Belt of Seven Totems and Mr. John Mackie's The Heart of the Prairie—come from Messrs. Newnes, and are excellently illustrated. Mr. Mackie can lay claim to truthfulness of detail, inasmuch that he lived for some years in that wild and fascinating portion of the "Great Lone Land" as a police officer in charge of a part of the frontier. His cowboys, Indians, and policemen, not to mention his bears and smugglers, are therefore his old friends. Another writer who knows this field of romance is Mr. Edward S. Ellis, whose two stories, The Chieftain and the Scout and Blazing Arrow, are issued, with thrilling illustrations, by Messrs. Cassell.

Mr. C. R. Kenyon's The Argonauts of the Amazon (Chambers), we must own, held us by its alligator stories, its rescue of an Inca's daughter, and its night scenes on the great river. In The Quest of the Giant Sloth (Blackie) that thoroughly experienced purveyor of boys' tales, Dr. Gordon Stables, tells how his hero and his boy companions set out to find the Giant Sloth. The extreme youthfulness of the little band will be considered no drawback by the readers of this fearsome story of wild animals, Indians and hidden treasure. A story on similar, though less extravagant, lines is Out on the Llanos (S.P.C.K.), by Achilles Daunt; it is concerned with juvenile adventures in the wilds of Colombia, S.A.

South Africa and China.

The Boer war is in strong hands. Mr. Henty, Mr. Hayens, and Mr. G. M. Fenn all contribute stories, as our list shows. Nothing at this date, however, need be said about these narratives, which are sufficiently described in their titles and the names of their authors. Captain F. S. Brereton's spirited story, The Dragon of Pekin (Blackie), recounts the recent troubles in China; tells how Bob Duncan, the hero, and his friend, Charlie Dashwood, determine to capture one Sung, a rascally Chinaman, who many years ago murdered the latter's father and stole some valuable papers. Unfortunately, while they are engaged in the chase, the Boxers break into open rebellion, and Sung, becoming one of their leaders, captures Bob's father. Meanwhile the hero and his friend have entered the besieged Legations in Pekin, from which they volunteer to carry despatches to Tientsin. On their way they separate, to encounter many adventures, one of which brings Bob very near to death. Mr. G. M. Fenn's story, Ching the Chinaman (S.P.C.K.), is less topical, but is full of humour and thrilling adventures. Chinese junks full of cut-throat pirates, plenty of pidgin English, lots of main-deck jokes on H.M.S. Goshawk, and Ching as the ship's guide—these are the fare, and there are more than five hundred pages of it.

Natural History.

Natural history has its own little pile of books. The first volume in Mr. George Allen's "Young England Library" is the Rev. G. M. A. Hewett's The Open-Air Boy, and a pleasanter guide to every-day natural history and juvenile sport we have no wish to see. The chapter on "Ratting, Rabbiting, and the Like," will be a joy to boys, though some of their aunts are sure to object to the encouragement given to trapping and catapulting. The author writes from experience, his own open-air accomplishments being of the most varied kind. On page 39 he assures us that he has himself seen an adder take her young into her mouth when danger was near—a point of natural history much in dispute. A book on rather similar lines is Mr. Fred Smith's The Boyhood of a Naturalist (Blackie). The author, who has devoted the best energies of his life to the study of Nature, takes the reader with him in the long rambles in which he spent the happiest hours of his boyhood; slipping away, if possible, unobserved from the cricket field, and braving the wrath of his schoolfellows, to wander through field and copse, by stream and hedgerow, a humble observer of the myriad forms of life to which they give shelter. No reader, old or young, can fail to be charmed with the freshness, vivacity, and humour of the narrative. In The Mighty Deep (Pearson) Miss Agnes Giberne has given the result of a minute study of the constitution, physical conditions, and various phenomena of the restless ocean, and has explained in lucid terms and in a captivating style the laws which govern wind and water, and the unceasing conflict waged between land and sea. She has not confined her attention to superficial phenomena, but has delved into the depths and has brought up strange creatures from the deep abyss. She illustrates how the ocean has its beauties as well as its terrors, its living flowers and light-giving fish, its monsters, diatoms, and oddities. The book is admirably adapted for the young. In Lady Lee and Other Animal Stories (McClurg, Chicago) we follow the career of a beautiful horse, not without being reminded of Black Beauty. In the other stories the fortunes and habits of various domestic animals are sketched. The illustrations, which are highly finished photogravures, include a portrait of the lamented Jumbo.

The Twelve Best Boys' and Girls' Books.

The Castaways of Meadow Bank. By Thomas Cobb.
The Youngest Girl in the School. By Evelyn Sharp.
Young Barbarians. By Ian Maclaren.
A Girl of Galway. By Katherine Tynan.
At the Point of the Bayonet. By G. A. Henty.
The Lion Cub. By Fred Whishaw.
God Save King Alfred. By Rev. E. Gilliat.
Old Blackfriars. By Beatrice Marshall.
The Argonauts of the Amazon. By C. R. Kenyon.
The Heart of the Prairie. By John Mackie.
The Boyhood of a Naturalist. By Fred Smith.
The Open-Air Boy. By Rev. G. M. A. Hewett.

Digitized by Google

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S CHRISTMAS LIST.

SIR HENRY RAEBURN. By Sir Walter Armstrong, Director of the National Gallery, Ireland. With an Introduction by the late R. A. M. STEVENSON, and a Catalogue Raisonné of Raeburn's Works by J. L. CAW, Curator of the National Portrait Gallery of Scotland. With 68 Plates, of which 66 are in Photogravure and 2 in Lithographic Facsimile. Large imperial 4to, £5 5s. net.

THE WORLD'S HISTORY. A Survey of Man's Record. Edited by Dr. H. F. HELMOLT. With an Introductory Essay by the Right Hon. JAMES BRYCE, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S. To be completed in Eight super-royal 8vo Volumes, with many Maps, Coloured Plates, and Black-and-White Illustrations. Price in cloth, 15s. net per Volume; or in half-morocco, gilt edges, £1 1s. net per Volume.
Vol. I.—PRE-HISTORY: AMERICA AND THE PACIFIC OCEAN. With many Plates and Maps.
A Full and Complete Prospectus will be sent on application. The first Volume may be obtained on approval.

ITALIAN JOURNEYS. By W. D. Howells. With 12 Photogravures, 32 Full-page Plates, and many Text Illustrations from Original Drawings specially made for this Work by JOSEPH PENNELL. 1 vol., 10s. net.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

A LITTLE TOUR IN FRANCE. By Henry James. With 12 Photogravures, 32 Full-page Plates, and 40 Text Illustrations from Original Drawings by JOSEPH PENNELL. 1 vol., 10s. net. Second Impression.

A VANISHED ARCADIA. By R. B. Cuninghame Graham, Author of "Mogreb-el-Acksa," &c. 1 vol., 9s.

THE LAST OF THE MASAI. By Sydney Langford Hinde, H.M. Collector British East Africa Protectorate, and HILDEGARDE HINDE. With Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings. 1 vol., 15s. net.

THE ESSAYS OF AN EX-LIBRARIAN. By Richard Garnett, C.B., LL.D. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

HYPOLYMPIA; or, The Gods in the Island. An Ironic Fantasy. By Edmund GOSSE. 1 vol., 5s.

THE SOUL OF A CAT. By Margaret Benson. With Photographs and Illustrations by Madame HENRIETTA RONNER. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

POEMS SELECTED FROM SCHILLER. Translated by E. P. Arnold-Forster. 1 vol., 6s.

THE GARDEN OF KHAMA: and other Love Lyrics from India. By Laurence HOPE. 1 vol., 6s.

POEMS. By Arthur Symons. Collected Edition, with Portrait. 2 vols., 10s. net.

FASHION IN PARIS. The Various Phases of Feminine Taste and Æsthetics from the Revolution to the End of the Nineteenth Century. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With 24 Hand-coloured Plates and 250 Text Illustrations by FRANCOIS COURBOIN. New and cheaper edition. 1 vol., 15s. net.

BRITISH CONTEMPORARY ARTISTS. Several Critical Studies of the Work of Watts, Burne-Jones, Millais, Leighton, Poynter, Orchardson, and Alma-Tadema. By COSMO MONKHOUSE. Profusely illustrated. 1 vol. 8vo, 10s. net.

FAIRY TALES. From the Swedish of Baron G. Djurklou. By H. L. BRÆKSTAD. With Illustrations by T. KITTELSEN and ERIC WERENSKIOLD. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. A New Translation from the Danish Originals, by H. L. BRÆKSTAD. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. With 240 Wood Engravings by HANS TEGNER. 2 vols., 10s. net each, or 1 vol., £1 net.

NATURE'S GARDEN. An Aid to Knowledge of Wild Flowers and their Insect Visitors. With Coloured Plates and many other Illustrations photographed direct from Nature by HENRY TROTH and A. R. DUGMORE. Text by NELTJE BLANCHAN. Royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE LIVES AND WORKS OF GREAT ARTISTS.

RUBENS: His Life, his Work, and his Time. By Emile Michel. With 40 Coloured Plates, 40 Photogravures, and 272 Text Illustrations. In 2 vols., imperial 8vo, £2 2s. net.

LEONARDO DA VINCI. Artist, Thinker, and Man of Science. From the French of EUGÈNE MÜNTZ, Member of the Institute of France, &c. With 48 Plates and 252 Text Illustrations. In 2 vols., price £2 2s. net.

ANTONIO ALLEGRI DA CORREGGIO: His Life, his Friends, and his Time. By CORRADO RICCI, Director of the Royal Gallery, Parma. With 16 Photogravure Plates, 21 Full-page Plates in Tint, and 190 Illustrations in the Text. Imperial 8vo, £2 2s. net.

REMBRANDT: His Life, his Work, and his Time. By Emile Michel, Member of the Institute of France. Second Edition, enlarged, with 76 Full-page Plates and 250 Illustrations in the Text. 2 vols., imperial 8vo, £2 2s. net.

FICTION.

A CENTURY OF FRENCH ROMANCE.
Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. A Library Edition in Twelve Volumes, demy 8vo, cloth extra. £4 4s. for the Set of Twelve Volumes, or separate vols. 7s. 6d. each.

THE CHARTREUSE OF PARMA. By De Stendhal. With an Introduction by Mr. MAURICE HEWLETT. With 4 Coloured Plates by EUGENE PAUL AVRIL, a Photogravure, and Portraits.
Mr. W. L. COURTNEY:—"Translated with no little skill. Stendhal possesses the most extraordinarily minute observation, and very keen power of analysing the human soul."

COLOMBA; CARMEN. By Prosper Merimee. Introduction by Mr. Arthur SYMONS. With 4 Coloured Plates by PARYS, a Photogravure, and Portraits.
An Illustrated Prospectus post free, and the first Volume can be obtained on approval.

THE WORKS OF TOLSTOI.

NEWLY TRANSLATED FROM THE RUSSIAN BY CONSTANCE GARNETT.

ANNA KARENIN. With Portraits. 2 vols. 15s.
From Blackwood's Magazine.—"We are exceedingly grateful to Mrs. Garnett, since she has given us for the first time the complete and workmanlike version of a masterpiece."

MAXIM GÖRKI.

THE ORLOFF COUPLE, and MALVA. Two Stories. With Autograph Portrait and Biographical Note. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

NOVELS AND STORIES.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

THE ETERNAL CITY.

By HALL CAINE.

The St. James's Gazette.—"It is interesting, characteristic, and highly dramatic. A stirring, warm-blooded story, that one is sorry to have finished."

 A First English Edition of 100,000 copies of "THE ETERNAL CITY" was published on August 21st. This is now practically exhausted, and a Second Edition will be ready shortly.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE CHRISTIAN. | THE MANXMAN.
THE BONDMAN. | THE SCAPEGOAT.

THE RIGHT OF WAY.

By GILBERT PARKER.

"C. K. S." in The Sphere.—"The most enthralling romance of life in that pleasant Quebec country. Charlie Steele is a veritable creation."

SONS OF THE SWORD.

By MARGARET L. WOODS, Author of "A Village Tragedy."

The Spectator.—"Engaging in its human interest, rich in incident; eloquent and even poetic. The splendour and squalor of Napoleonic warfare are set before us in a series of brilliant tableaux. We can cordially recommend to our readers Mrs. Woods's story."

THE BALLET DANCER; and ON GUARD

By MATILDE SERAO, Author of "The Land of Cockayne."

The Bookman.—"The effects are carefully arranged. No words are wasted. Scene, and circumstance, and atmosphere, and narrative are contrived in an admirable harmony."

SPINDLE AND PLOUGH.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY, Author of "Folly Corner," &c.

The Daily Mail.—"It falls little short of being a great book. The heroine is a creation that might be signed Balzac. 'Spindle and Plough' must be read."

THE FALL OF LORD PADDOCKSLEA.

By LIONEL LANGTON.

The Standard.—"A political novel which will be read with amusement by those who find delight in the personal journalism of the day and have the curiosity to fit the characters to the originals."

GILLETTE'S MARRIAGE.

By MAMIE BOWLES, Author of "The Amazing Lady."

The Athenæum.—"An extraordinarily clever performance, and most absorbing. The characterisation is excellent, the dialogue natural and alive, the emotion poignant and real."

SOME WOMEN I HAVE KNOWN.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS, Author of "A Question of Taste," &c.

The Times.—"Maarten Maartens shows himself a master of the story, and more of a Cosmopolitan than we had expected."

JOSEPH KHASSAN: HALF CASTE.

By A. J. DAWSON.

The Athenæum.—"Mr. Dawson's style is vivid; his work is virile as well as good reading; he can command both humour and pathos."

THE GLOWWORM.

By MAY BATEMAN, Author of "The Altar of Life."

The Academy.—"It has quite a character of its own; it has charm, and it has feeling."

NEW VOLUMES OF THE DOLLAR LIBRARY.

4s. each.

A DRONE AND A DREAMER.

By NELSON LLOYD, Author of "The Chronic Loafer."

The Daily Telegraph.—"The charm of the book is its abundance of humorous incident and its graphic presentation of the quaint characters of an American village."

IN OLE VIRGINIA.

By T. NELSON PAGE.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

Literature in 1901.

Some Memories and Impressions.

WHEN the present year opened the literary world was flocking to Her Majesty's Theatre to see Mr. Stephen Phillips's "Herod," and to discuss between the acts the authorship of An English Woman's Love-Letters, a book which enjoyed a success of mystery greatly beyond its actual deserts. These were not, however, the only Letters under discussion in January. Prince Bismarck's letters to his wife, and Friederich Nietzsche's Letters were published in Germany.

The Thrush began this month its career as a repository of fugitive verse, and Celtia arose to tell us that "the Celtic race has unlimited resources of powers and vitality." It must be admitted that these resources have been conspicuous throughout the year, which has seen an advance in the Celtic movement.

London was solemnised by the death of Dr. Creighton, Bishop of London. "He tried to write true history" was the epitaph he desired. Hardly had he been laid to his rest when the serious illness of our beloved Queen Victoria was announced. On Tuesday evening, January 22, the news of the Queen's death was received in London.

The principal books under review in January were Mr. C. Lloyd Morgan's Animal Behaviour, Mr. Leslie Stephen's The English Utilitarians, a second and revised edition of Mr. J. G. Fraser's The Golden Bough, the first volume of Mr. Duncan C. Tovey's edition of The Letters of Thomas Gray, and Professor William Knight's Lord Monboddo and some of his Contemporaries. To these we must add Mr. W. B. Yeats's long dialogue-poem, The Shadowy Waters. Shadowy, dreamlike, and unsubstantial, this poem could appeal only to the few. These were addressed by the poet:

> I have made this poem for you that men may read it
> Before they read of Forgael and Dectora,
> As men in the old times, before the harps began,
> Poured out wine for the high invisible ones.

Meanwhile poetry suffered a loss by the death, at Rome' of Mr. Frederic Myers. By the death of the Rev. H. R. Haweis the literary and artistic world lost a familiar and honoured figure. As the month of gloom went out, Dr. Furnivall, who had attained his seventy-fifth birthday, was the recipient of a striking testimonial in the form of An English Miscellany, a volume of essays, to which many scholars contributed.

Mr. Bernard Shaw explained how he came to write plays. His health broke down, and he was too weak to work.

FEBRUARY.

This month opened under an abiding sense of the nation's loss, and a growing interest in the circumstances of the accession of Edward VII. Many elegies on the late Queen were written, those of Mr. Hardy, Mr. Meredith, and Mr. Henley exciting most interest. Nothing better than these lines by Mr. Henley was written:

> Tears for her—tears! Tears and the mighty rites
> Of an everlasting and immense farewell,
> England, green heart of the world, and you,
> Dear demi-Englands, far-away isles of home,
> Where the old speech is native, and the old flag
> Floats, and the old irresistible call,
> The o'er-word of so many ages of years,
> Makes men in love
> With toil for the race, and pain, and peril, and death!
> Tears, and the dread, tremendous dirge
> Of her brooding battleships, and hosts
> Processional, with trailing arm; the plaint—
> Measured, enormous, terrible—of her guns:
> The appalling throb of bells; the blare
> Of mourning trumpets; the discomforting pomp
> Of silent crowds, black streets, and banners-royal > Obsequious!

The Empire Review, a magazine devoted to Imperial interests, was launched by Messrs. Macmillan, and the New Liberal Review, edited by Mr. Cecil B. Harmsworth and Mr. Hildebrand A. Harmsworth, also made its appearance. The first number of the latter review contained an important appreciation of Mr. Kipling's verse by Professor Dowden.

As a whole this month was not rich in literary interests, but a few circumstances may be noted. Dr. Joseph Wright succeeded Professor Max Müller in the chair of Comparative Philology at Oxford, and Mr. A. C. Bradley succeeded Professor Courthope in the Chair of Poetry. Dr. Wright, it was announced, had begun to collect phonographic specimens of English dialects in connection with his English Dialect Dictionary. Guesses at the authorship of An Englishwoman's Love-Letters continued to amuse the town, and the ACADEMY published an article attempting to show by internal evidence that Mr. Laurence Housman was the author—a suggestion that has never been denied. Mr. Meredith expressed his dislike of "Atkins" as the sobriquet of the British soldier, in these two stanzas published in the Westminster Gazette:

> Yonder's the man with his life in his hand,
> Legs on the march for whatever the land,
> Or to the slaughter or to the maiming,
> Getting the dole of a day for pay.
>
> Laurels he clasps in the words "Duty done,"
> England his heart under every sun—
> Exquisite humour! that give him a naming
> Base to the ear as an ass's bray.

The outstanding books of February were Mr. Bernard Shaw's Three Plays for Puritans, Mr. W. Ashton Ellis's authorised version of Glaesnapp's Life of Richard Wagner, Major Pond's amusing book, Eccentricities of Genius; Prof. Dowden's Puritan and Anglican, Viscountess Knutsford's Life and Letters of Zachary Macaulay. Mr. John Davidson's poetic drama, Self's the Man, the third volume of Prof. Gardiner's History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, the second volume of the Encyclopædia Biblica, Mr. William Heinemann's three-act play, War, and Mr. Henry James's curious novel, The Sacred Fount. We could not help suggesting that Mr. Henry James was turning his searchlight on himself when he makes one of his characters say to another: "You're carried away—you're abused by a fine fancy: so that, with your art of putting things, one doesn't know where one is—nor, if you'll allow me to say so, do I quite think you always do. Of course, I don't deny you're awfully clever. But you build up—you build up houses of cards."

A London morning paper was wiser than it knew in referring to Omar Khayyam's "FitzGerald."

Digitized by Google

March.

March came in like a lion, the lion being Mr. Churton Collins. His roar was entitled Ephemera Critica, and it was no sooner uttered than the literary arena was filled with dust and shouting. Plain-speaking on the subject of accuracy in critics was followed by plain-speaking on the subject of glass-houses; in short, there was a good healthy scrimmage. Other events were few. The establishment at Colinton of a home for unfortunate authors and artists with the funds generously bequeathed by Sir William Fraser, of Edinburgh, excited considerable interest.

The literary world was amused by the reports of the lengths to which a committee of lady censors had gone in the exclusion of modern novels from the Boston Public Library on faddist grounds. Such stories as Mr. Henry James's The Two Magics; Miss Mary E. Wilkins's, The People of Our Neighbourhood; and Sir Walter Besant's The Changeling, were rejected for frivolous or irrelevant reasons. Mrs. Humphry Ward's Eleanor had been ruled out because "girls of to-day would cast about for Manistys, as girls of a bygone day did for Rochesters."

By the death of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, at her home at Otterbourne, near Winchester, the literary world lost a writer supreme in her own sphere. It was recalled how powerfully her early and best novel, The Heir of Redclyffe, had affected William Morris and his friends at Oxford in 1853.

Mr. Kipling's new story, Kim, was by this time running strongly in Cassell's Magazine. In the Pall Mall Magazine, Mr. Archer's "Real Conversations" were recognised as new and excellent in journalism. They have been one of the good things of the year.

The chief books of March were: the first three volumes of a new and revised text of Ibsen's prose dramas, under the editorship of Mr. William Archer; a brochure on Lord Macaulay by Professor Jebb; Mr. Churton Collins's Ephemera Critica, already mentioned; The Right Hon. Sir Edward Malet's entertaining book of reminiscences; Sir Henry Craik's A Century of Scottish History; the Rev. H. C. Beeching's Two Lectures, Introductory to the Study of Poetry, and in fiction the very popular Eben Holden of Mr. Irving Bacheller. Mention should also be made of Mr. Charles Whittuck's rather remarkable critical study, The Good Man of the Eighteenth Century—an original idea worked out with ability.

Mr. George Moore wept over London, and removed his household effects to Dublin. He explained, later, to Mr. Archer, that the moral atmosphere of London was unbearable.

April.

One of the earliest excitements of April was the extraordinary recovery, by Messrs. Agnew, of Gainsborough's portrait of the Duchess of Devonshire, which had been cut from its frame in Bond Street, and stolen, twenty-five years before. The picture has since been sold to Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan.

Dr. Murray was entertained by the Authors' Club, and delivered himself of some interesting remarks on the work of a lexicographer. The audience relished Dr. Murray's confession that, in consequence of his labours on the New Oxford Dictionary, he stood before them almost entirely ignorant of current English literature.

At Messrs. Sotheby's the valuable library of the late Sir William Augustus Fraser, Bart., was dispersed in an eight days' sale.

Three deaths left gaps in different circles. Mr. George M. Smith, the princely publisher of the Dictionary of National Biography, passed away at the age of seventy-seven. Keen regret was felt at the death of "W. V.," the little daughter of Mr. William Canton, known to thousands of readers in W. V.: Her Book and The Invisible Playmate. Dr. Stubbs, Bishop of Oxford, died full of years and works. The character of this profound historian was more many-sided than was generally known, and this was brought out in many anecdotes. His caustic wit was recalled in his classic epigram on Froude and Kingsley:

> While Froude instructs the Scottish youth
> That parsons never tell the truth,
> The Reverend Canon Kingsley cries
> That history is a pack of lies.
> One plain reflection solves the mystery—
> That Froude thinks Kingsley a divine,
> And Kingsley goes to Froude for history.

The more memorable books of April were: Ideals in Ireland, edited by Lady Gregory, and consisting of papers by members of the Gaelic League; Mr. W. D. Howells's Literary Friends and Acquaintances; Mr. H. B. Irving's Studies of French Criminals of the Nineteenth Century; George Paston's Little Memoirs of the Eighteenth Century; A Subaltern's Letters to His Wife, one of the best books on the camp life in the Boer War; Mrs. C. C. Stopes's Shakespeare's Family, a work of patient and minute research; Mr. W. J. Stillman's Autobiography of a Journalist; Mr. Archibald Stodart-Walker's monograph on Mr. Robert Buchanan; and Mr. W. B. Yeats's new revised edition of his poems. In fiction we had Mrs. Grand's Babs the Impossible.

Mr. Philip James Bailey, the author of Festus, was once more proved to be alive and well at Nottingham, after a Professor of English Literature had calmly stated that he died in 1856.

May.

The excommunication of Count Tolstoi by the heads of the Greek Church had not ceased to shock his admirers when the Count issued a calm, grave, and fearless reply, in which he said: "I cannot believe otherwise than I do believe at the moment when I am preparing to return to this God from whom I came. . . As for returning to the doctrines from which I emancipated myself at the price of so much suffering, I cannot do so. The bird that has taken its flight can never return to the shell out of which it came."

Grave accounts of the health of Dr. Ibsen, since moderated, gave much concern to his admirers.

Mr. Kipling's suit against Messrs. Putnam's Sons for breach of copyright, which had been in train nearly two years, ended in a verdict for the defendants—a result which had been pretty generally anticipated.

Considerable surprise was felt when it became known that Mr. Murray had transferred his well-known series of topographical handbooks to Mr. Stanford. This famous series was founded by Mr. Murray's father in 1836, and has been consistently developed and improved since. It now includes nearly sixty foreign and home guide-books.

Enter The Candid Friend, Mr. Frank Harris's new weekly.

The May picture exhibitions were not strong in literary portraits, but at the New Gallery Mr. John Collier's portrait of Mr. Kipling attracted much attention, and Mr. E. A. Ward's portrait of Mr. Stead was also a good deal noticed. At the Academy there was Mr. Hugh G. Riviere's portrait of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, and Mr. Hugh de J. Glazebrooke's of Mr. Frankfort Moore.

The proposal was made, and is now being carried out, to erect a memorial to the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore in Exeter Cathedral.

Mrs. Aria's great literary "rally" in aid of the Charing Cross Hospital resulted in The May Book, a particularly choice collection of literary and artistic work.

More than ordinary interest was taken in the announcement, by Mr. Dent, of an annotated edition of the complete works of Hazlitt.

The chief books under consideration in May were: Colloquies of Criticism; or, Literature and Democratic Patron-

Digitized by Google

age, a set of clever conversations on fiction, which turned out to be from the pen of the versatile Mr. Mallock; Alfred Dreyfus's Five Years of My Life, a disappointing production; the Further Memoirs of Marie Bashkirtseff, including her curious correspondence with Guy de Maupassant; the rather wearisome and unimportant Love Letters of Victor Hugo; Mr. Henry W. Nevinson's The Plea of Pan; Mr. Herbert Paul's admirable volume of critical essays, called Men and Letters; Mr. Paterson's (Benjamin Swift) philosophical speculations on the existence of evil, called The Eternal Conflict; the biography of Mrs. Lynn Linton, by Mr. Layard; and in fiction, "Zack's" The White Cottage, and Mrs. E. L. Voynich's Jack Raymond.

Contempt for London showed signs of spreading from Mr. George Moore to Mr. W. B. Yeats.

JUNE.

The month opened piquantly with the news that a literary lawsuit, still to be tried, was pending between Mr. Hall Caine and Messrs. Pearson, owing to Messrs. Pearson's refusal to continue the serial publication in The Lady's Magazine of Mr. Hall Caine's story, The Eternal City, Mr. Caine having refused to delete certain passages which Messrs. Pearson thought unsuitable to their particular class of readers.

At the annual meeting of the Dante Society, Mrs. Craigie gave a lecture on "Dante and Botticelli," in which she said that "with every appreciation for the art of Walter Pater and the enthusiasm of John Addington Symonds, she felt bound to say that both writers had entirely failed to comprehend the Roman Catholic spirit in the Renaissance," supporting her position, of course, by argument.

Mr. Jules Verne began his ninety-ninth book.

The retirement of Sir John Tenniel from Punch had taken place in the first week of January, and now a worthy tribute was offered him in the form of a dinner, which was a brilliant success, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Choate, the Duke of Devonshire, Mr. Birrell, and others being present.

A unique copy of the Pilgrim's Progress fetched £1,475 at Sotheby's, given by an American buyer.

By the deaths of Sir Walter Besant and Mr. Robert Buchanan literature suffered two very dissimilar losses. The first left a gap in the organised and prosperous literary life of London; the second is remembered as a literary man of great and varied abilities, in whom volcanic energy and Bohemian easy-goingness alternated. The one had moderate abilities, a great and steady benevolence, and a well-balanced mind; the other had great abilities, much hidden kindliness, and a mercurial temperament. They represented opposite sides of the literary life, and their deaths were announced on the same day.

The more remarkable books under review in this month were: M. Maeterlinck's The Life of the Bee, in Mr. Sutro's translation; Mr. Rashleigh Holt White's Life of Gilbert White of Selborne; Mr. John Davidson's The Testament of a Vivisector, the first of a series of poetical "testaments"; the very amusing reminiscences of George Hodgy, the "Hodgy" of the Turf; Mr. W. J. Courthope's highly academical lectures, Life in Poetry, Law in Taste; Mr. J. K. Huysman's life of St. Lydwine le Schiedam; Mr. E. L. S. Horsburgh's Girolamo Savonarola; Mr. Meredith's new volume of poems, A Reading of Life; and Mr. George Gissing's By the Ionian Sea, a book of intimate travel impressions of singular distinction. In fiction, Mr. George Gissing's The Charlatan, Mr. Winston Churchill's The Crisis, Mr. Neil Munro's Doom Castle, and Mr. M. P. Shiel's The Lord of the Sea.

In spite of heroic efforts on the part of Dr. Robertson Nicoll and other writers, the two Winston Churchills became mixed in the public mind. Only time can disentangle them completely.

JULY.

A quiet month. The closest of links with Matthew Arnold was broken by the death of his widow. She was Frances Lucy, daughter of the late Sir James Wightman. Three children survive her.

After more than forty years' service in the offices of the Board of Trade, Mr. Austin Dobson resigned his post of Principal of the Fisheries and Harbour Department.

Enter, the Tatler.

Enter, the Connoisseur.

The chief books were: Mr. Andrew Lang's Magic and Religion; Sir Walter J. Sendall's complete edition of Calverley; Vol. I. of Dr. George Brandes' Main Currents in Nineteenth Century Literature; Count Lützow's translation of The Labyrinth of the World, by the seventeenth century Bohemian writer, Komensky; and, in fiction, John Oliver Hobbes's The Serious Wooing, Mr. George Moore's Sister Teresa, and The Inheritor, a clever satirical allegory by Mr. Joseph Conrad and Mr. Ford Madox Hueffer.

Mr. Kipling was with the Fleet.

AUGUST.

The seaside month passed very quietly in London. The death of the Empress Frederick aroused in England much sympathy.

Mr. Hall Caine's novel, The Eternal City, enjoyed a "boom," despite the opinion expressed by one literary gossiper that "it requires positive courage to say an appreciative word concerning Mr. Caine in a literary club to-day."

An exhibition of relics and MSS. of the Alfred period was opened at the British Museum in anticipation of the Winchester celebrations.

Among the books of this month may be noted Vols. III. and IV. of Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy's A History of the Four Georges and William IV.; Mr. T. Sturge Moore's very promising poetic tragedy, Aphrodite against Artemis; Prof. Skeat's valuable Notes on English Etymology; Mr. Meredith Townsend's Asia in Europe; and, in fiction, Mr. Anthony Hope's Tristram of Blent and Mr. Eden Phillpott's volume of Dartmoor stories called The Striking Hours.

Mr. W. J. Howells made the discovery that "many people read books in the fear of being found out not to have read them."

SEPTEMBER.

This month was clouded by the tragic death of President McKinley. In the literary world there was very little activity. July, August, and September are fallow months of the literary year. Would these were all! Throughout the month the distant roar of the "autumn season" could be heard. We believe that some publishers have since realised that the time allotted to active publication this autumn has been rather short.

The Bookman completed the first ten years of its life.

The month produced Mr. Samuel Cowan's Mary Queen of Scots; Vol. III. of Mr. John Beattie Crozier's History of Intellectual Development; Mr. E. A. Bennett's interesting critical examination of current fiction, entitled Fame and Fiction: An Enquiry Into Certain Popularities; Mr. R. B. Cunninghame Graham's characteristic book on the Jesuit rule in South America, A Vanished Arcadia; and, in fiction, Sir Richard Calmady.

A well-known novelist declared: "There has never been a really good English novel written; they are all simply about classes, not about humanity."

OCTOBER

Brought with it the announcements of publishers. These were classified in our issue of October 5, and we remarked that, though the harvest was plenteous, books of compelling and obvious importance did not seem to be more numerous than usual. We believe that the experience of the present season will lead many publishers to consider seriously whether their own interests and those of literature are served by what has come to be almost a one-season system of publishing. The restoration of the spring publishing season to something like its olden importance would be welcomed, we feel sure, by booksellers, critics, and the best classes of readers.

Digitized by Google

The first important literary event of the month was the publication of Mr. Kipling's Kim. The critics differed considerably in their estimates of this book, some finding it rather formless, but others were content to see in it a kinematograph of the Indian people. Whatever judgment may be passed on Kim as a whole, there is no doubt of the splendour of many passages.

In oritical work Mr. William Archer took the honours of October with his Poets of the Younger Generation, a conscientious but not unified survey of thirty-three living poets.

Mr. John Morley delivered a fine address at Manchester on Mr. Gladstone, to whose Life he is devoting his best energies.

A striking memorial of Mr. Ruskin was created by the gift of Mr. Henry Willett to the Ashmolean Natural History Society of Oxfordshire of a piece of wild ground, to be known as "The Ruskin Plot." The plot consists of woodland, marsh, and water, and it is to be kept for all time as an asylum for wild creatures.

The study of Dante has been noticeably vigorous during the year, many critical works and texts having appeared. Among seventy new members added to the Dante Society were H.R.H. the Duke of Abruzzi, Count Costa, Count Plunkett, Lord Windsor, Mr. Choate, the Archbishop of Armagh, Sir Mountstuart Grant-Duff, Mr. Paget Toynbee, Mr. Asquith, and Prof. Saintsbury. The Dante cult was never more prosperous than now.

The rumours of Dr. Ibsen's serious illness were partly allayed by the announcement, on the authority of Mr. William Archer, that, so far from being in extremis, Ibsen is "able to take daily drives, and is in very fair health for a man of his years." Nevertheless, the alarmist accounts have recently been revived in some quarters.

Among books of the month were: Mr. H. Fielding's The Hearts of Men, an original inquiry into faith and conduct through the religions of the East; the Memoirs and Letters of Sir James Paget; D'Annunzio's play, Gioconda, translated by Mr. Arthur Symons; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Vivian's The Romance of Religion; Mr. Ernest Fletcher's valuable addition to our knowledge of that great talker, James Northcote; Mr. Andrew Lang's The Mystery of Mary Stuart; and last, not least, Mr. Graham Balfour's Life of Robert Louis Stevenson. In fiction we had Mr. W. W. Jacobs's very amusing and already greatly successful Light Freights; and Mr. Maurice Hewlett's New Canterbury Tales.

A German translator rendered "Vengeance is mine; I will repay" in Count Tolstoi's inscription to Anna Karénina: "Revenge is sweet; I play the ace."

NOVEMBER.

This has been a great year for Count Tolstoi. His illness, his excommunication, and his continued activity have kept him in a strong light. Two new collected editions of his works have been undertaken by Mr. Heinemann and Mr. Grant Richards, and the issue of both editions has begun. Mr. Heinemann's translator is Mrs. Garnett, who has been the best interpreter of Turgenev to English readers.

Enter Samhain, the organ of the Irish Literary Theatre.

Considerable interest was taken in the Unit System of publishing which is about to be tried in this country by Mr. Howard Wilford Bell. By the "unit" system the price of a book is regulated by its size. Thus a unit is twenty-five pages, and the price per unit ½d. or 2d. per 100 pages. The paper cover will cost 1d. in addition to the cost of the total number of units, the cloth binding will be 5d. additional, the leather binding 10d. additional. The price of the single volume, therefore, will be regulated by the number of units it contains.

Something has been heard of the introduction of the "big circulation" from America by the sale of books in stores and drapery shops, and their advertisement on a scale not hitherto tried in this country.

The year has seen a renewal of interest in Samuel Richardson, and on November 20 a bust of "the father of the English novel" was unveiled in the St. Bride's Institute by Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins.

The last week of the month was troubled by Mr. W. E. Henley's remarkably outspoken article on Robert Stevenson in the Pall Mall Magazine. In it Mr. Henley has acted as the advocatus diaboli of Stevenson's fame, opposing himself to those who have inclined to canonise his friend. A hot discussion has followed, in which Mr. Henley has been roundly lectured by many defenders of Stevenson. Mr. Sidney Colvin has expressed his intention of replying to Mr. Henley, and Mr. Henley himself has said that he may one day return to the subject. At present the situation may be described as one of great soreness.

The month was rich in interesting books. We had: Dr. Richard Garnett's Essays of an Ex-Librarian; the vivid Letters of John Richard Green; Mr. Samuel Butler's Erewhon Revisited; Mr. Edmund Gosse's "ironic fantasy," Hypolmpia; M. René Vallery-Radot's Life of Pasteur; Mr. Frederic Harrison's George Washington and Other American Addresses; the eighth edition of Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief, with a new "summary of the argument"; Mr. Henley's new volume of poems, Hawthorn and Lavender; Mr. Thomas Hardy's Poems of the Past and Present; Mr. H. G. Wells's remarkable book—the most original book of the year—Anticipations; the Life of Lord Russell of Killowen; and "Linesman's" very memorable Words by an Eye-Witness: The Struggle in Natal. At the close of a year of anonymity mysteries the identity of "Linesman" is exciting much curiosity. We have heard his book fathered on Mr. Kipling! To the foregoing must be added Mr. Lang's Alfred Tennyson; Mr. Horace G. Hutchinson's Dreams and their Meanings; Mr. George Bourne's The Bettesworth Book, being "talks with a Surrey peasant," a document of singular interest; and Mr. G. K. Chesterton's luxuriantly clever book of essays, The Defendant.

In fiction we had in November Mr. Hichens's The Prophet of Berkeley Square; Mr. Weyman's Count Hannibal; Mr. Neil Munro's The Shoes of Fortune; "Zack's" Tales of Dunstable Weir; Mr. Gilbert Parker's Right of Way; Mr. Wells's The First Men in the Moon; and Mr. George Douglas's The House with the Green Shutters. The last-named novel has at once attracted wide attention by its almost Zolaesque treatment of Scottish life in contrast with that of the romantic "Kail Yard" school. The presentation to English readers of Maxime Gorki, the Russian "tramp novelist," has been a feature of the year. His novel, Foma Gordyeef, is still under review.

Many matters of interest have necessarily dropped through the meshes of this survey. The completion, for example, of Mr. Murray's definitive edition of Byron's Letters, edited with complete success by Mr. Rowland E. Protheroe, is a matter for congratulation; also the completion of the Supplementary Volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography.

Digitized by Google

The Old Quest.

If this world does not end in a cataclysm, the last man will probably spend his last day seated on a mountain-top, explaining his theological views to the craters. That is, on the supposition that the bent of his mind will be metaphysical, and there is every reason to suppose that it will be so. The last dexterity quieted by Nature will be man's interpretation of the riddle of existence. In the incaculable number of bricks brought to this soaring edifice of human ingenuity (interstellar space would not hold its towers), one deduction is self-evident—the value of any contribution lies in the sincerity, the heart, and the brain-power of the individual offering it. We will take as an example the effect on an anonymous writer in a morning newspaper, and on an ex-Ambassador, of reading the Rubaiyat. Here, in parallel columns, are the contributions of the Standard and of Mr. John Hay:

The Standard.	Mr. Hay.
Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. Being a reprint of the first translation by Edward FitzGerald . . . A quaint volume, which will give young people a fair idea of the wealth of diction of Eastern poets.	The many cannot but resent that air of lofty intelligence, that pale and subtle smile. But he will hold a place for ever among that limited number who, like Lucretius and Epicurus—without rage or defiance, even without unbecoming mirth—look deep into the tangled mysteries of things; refuse credence to the absurd, and allegiance to arrogant authority; sufficiently conscious of fallibility to be tolerant of all opinions; with a faith too wide for doctrine, and a benevolence untrammelled by creed; too wise to be wholly poets, and yet too surely poets to be implacably wise.

There you have two minds working upon the same material—and the results. In this case the ore that is cast into the crucible is of a definite and concrete kind, but when the ores are compounded of nothing less than as much of the Eternal Verities as man can envisage, the result is apt to be received with suspicion by those who have their own ideas on such subjects. It is not easy to put the Eternal Verities into a corked bottle. Nor is it altogether wise to make a book of one's gropings through speculative theology that have led to an apparent resting place. Some readers may be edified and helped, but the many will receive the confession with grave reproach, if not with active hostility. How hard it is for those who have accepted the precepts of a particular belief to sympathise with those who have not accepted them. Of Mr. Fielding's sincere and deeply religious book, The Hearts of Men, the Spectator permitted itself to say: "It is difficult to write coolly of such a repulsive cult as Mr. Fielding dignifies by the name of religion;" and another journal, also the organ of a denomination, spoke of the volume as "a book that cannot possibly be regarded as a serious contribution to religious thought."

We have been led to these remarks through finding in three books that have recently been published, chapters wherein the authors, pursuing the old quest, offer to the world their conclusions. The pilgrims are Mr. Birrell, Mr. Wells, and the late Mr. Max Müller: the books are called Miscellanies, Anticipations, and Last Essays. Mr. Birrell is the sage of the present moment; Mr. Wells of a hundred years hence; Mr. Max Müller of some thousands of years ago. Mr. Birrell has the legal mind, plus humour, and a love of literature and good writing. He is one of the most attractive essayists of the day, and we would not have him changed. The essays in this volume are all stimulating, and whether he is writing on "John Wesley" or on "What Happened at the Reformation," there is not a dull page. But Mr. Birrell has the legal mind and the lawyer's disinclination to say "Yes, a spade is a spade!" In the paper called "Christian Evidences," with which we are concerned just now, it is impossible to say that at any given place Mr. Birrell is speaking in his own person. No doubt he is playfully in earnest when he writes that the Christian religion is closely bound up with our admirable Common Law, with our educational system, so admirably well-adapted (in the opinion of the rich) to make the poor contented with their lot; but Mr. Birrell would not dream of saying anything so naughty in his own person. Oh, no! He prefaces the statement with the remark that there are many well-credited citizens who would not scruple to say so. The paper is bright and buoyant. Its very irresponsibility belies any idea of irreverence. It is like the speech of a genial orator with a digestion so admirable, and a majority so unassailable, that the most profound subjects become merely a little more important than luncheon, and a little less important than dinner. "Prove the Gospel miracles," cries this light-hearted pilgrim, "and then you have simply got to believe in the whole cycle of Christian doctrine. You cannot help it. You may believe and tremble, as do the devils; or you may believe and rejoice, as do the saints. But believe you must."

Mr. Birrell prattles on prettily. "It is now thought, and even felt, to be indelicate to drag dogmas down into the arena of strife," but "no man is going to be put off his faith in God on account of a Gadarene swine." True. Then Mr. Birrell leads you to what he calls "the starting-point in the race for faith," fires the pistol, and while you are stumbling along the course he proceeds to announce a short cut in these words:

> You believe in Conscience, "the aboriginal vicar of Christ, a prophet in its informations, a monarch in its peremptoriness, a priest in its blessings;" but Conscience not only makes cowards of us all, but theists of a good many. Whence came this love of justice "dwelling between the endless jar of right and wrong"? From believing in Conscience you come to believe in God. Believing in God, you chance one day to recognise in the reported words of Jesus the notes of Deity. Never man spoke like this Man. You believe Christ to be Divine. Believing Him to be Divine, it is impossible to believe that—
>
> Far hence He lies
> In the lone Syrian town,
> And on His grave with shining eyes
> The Syrian stars look down.
>
> No; He rose from the dead, not because to rise from the dead is a convincing thing to do, but because, being Divine, He could not do otherwise. Had He not risen, He would not have been God. Having risen, it seems to follow, as the night the day, that the Spirit of God should remain upon the earth God had visited, to work upon the hearts of men all down the ages.

How simple!

Mr. Wells is serious, if not very convincing, in the last chapter of his Anticipations, wherein he considers the faith and morals of the men of the New Republic one hundred years hence. Quite inevitably, he says, they will be religious men. They will believe in God, but they will presume to no possibility of knowledge "of the real being of God." It will be a world without doubts, without sentiment, without pity. Men will deal "simply and logically not only with the business of death, but with birth." Everything will be reduced to one dull utilitarian level. The men of the New Republic will not indulge in any "defective claptrap" like "that something, not ourselves, that makes for righteousness."

Digitized by Google

It will be a world for the capable.

> And for the rest, those swarms of black, and brown, and dirty-white, and yellow people, who do not come into the new needs of efficiency? Well, the world is a world, not a charitable institution, and I take it they will have to go. The whole tenor and meaning of the world, as I see it, is that they have to go. So far as they fail to develop sane, vigorous, and distinctive personalities for the great world of the future, it is their portion to die out and disappear. The world has a purpose greater than happiness; our lives are to serve God's purpose, and that purpose aims not at man as an end, but works through him to greater issues.

"Our lives are to serve God's purpose." Well, the New Man who, according to Mr. Wells, "will presume to no possibility of knowledge of the real being of God," appears to have made up his mind as to what His purpose is pretty conclusively. In the history of the world it is curious how often the purpose and will of God has coincided with the purpose and the will of man. In that respect the New Man is much like the Old. Perhaps Mr. Wells will oblige us with the date when Present Man will cease to think that it is a better thing that the People of the Abyss should "go" than that they should be succoured. Loving the Brotherhood may be a surer way of understanding the will of God than Mr. Wells's "spacious scheme" for the "elaboration of that future world state to which all things are pointing." And it will be a long time before the millions whose place is something between the People of the Abyss and the Elect of the New Republic will cease to find meaning and consolation in the feeling expressed in Matthew Arnold's well known lines:

> But at the end, to her pure soul
> All tie with all beside seem'd vain and cheap,
> And union before God the only care.

Possibly Mr. Wells would also call that "defective claptrap!"

Mr. Max Müller looks before and after. The last article in his Last Essays is called "Is Man Immortal?"—"a fitting farewell," in his son's words, "to the world which he was always trying to instruct and improve." For Mr. Max Müller's argument we must refer our readers to the book. It is distinguished by patience, humility, and a wide sympathy. His happy belief was "that it will be with the soul hereafter as it has been here, and that the soul, after its earthly setting, will rise again, much as it rose here."

We end by copying out the conclusion of Mr. Max Müller's question. It is one man's view, but it is the view of one who looked deep into the "tangled mysteries of things," and found his answer not in "arrogant authority," not in any special revelation to any race, but in the perpetual revelation that always has been, always is, upspringing in the hearts of men.

> Our soul here may be said to have risen without any recollection of itself and of the circumstances of its former existence. It may not even recollect the circumstances of its first days on earth, but it has within it the consciousness of its eternity, and the conception of a beginning is as impossible for it as that of an end, and if souls were to meet again hereafter as they met in this life, as they loved in this life, without knowing that they had met and loved before, would the next life be so very different from what this life has been here on earth—would it be so utterly intolerable and really not worth living? Personally I must confess to one small weakness. I cannot help thinking that the souls towards whom we feel drawn in this life are the very souls whom we knew and loved in a former life, and that the souls who repel us here, we do not know why, are the souls that earned our disapproval, the souls from which we kept aloof, in a former life. But let that pass as what others have a perfect right to call it—a mere fancy. Only let us remember that if our love is the love of what is merely phenomenal, the love of the body, the kindness of the heart, the vigour and wisdom of the intellect, our love is the love of changing and perishable things, and our soul may have to grope in vain among the shadows of the dead. But if our love, under all its earthly aspects, was the love of the true soul, of what is immortal and divine in every man and woman, that love cannot die, but will find once more what seems beautiful, true, and lovable in worlds to come as in worlds that have passed. This is very old wisdom, but we have forgotten it. Thousands of years ago an Indian sage, when parting from his wife, told her in plain words: "We do not love the husband in the husband, nor the wife in the wife, nor the children in the children. What we love in them, what we truly love in everything, is the eternal âtman, the immortal self," and, as we should add, the immortal God, for the immortal self and the immortal God must be one.

These are days of freedom. We can choose the freedom that is weariness, or we can choose that service which is perfect freedom, going about our work, as Pater said of Leonardo da Vinci, like men "upon some secret errand," meeting the last event

> After the high Roman fashion,
> And make death proud to take us.

Things Seen.

With the Demonstrators.

Early in the afternoon the streets that converge upon the Park were expectant and anxious—expectant as regards the sightseers, anxious as regards the police inspectors: sallow men, quiet but watchful, who moved to and fro, murmuring instructions to subordinates. The atmosphere was charged with excitement; the dwindling traffic gave to the streets an air of unusualness, and over all brooded the oppression of a sunless, Sunday winter afternoon in London. There was something of menace, too. For a mob is capable of anything, and this mob would number many thousands.

I saw it first in Pall Mall, surging towards where I stood, sombre, save for the gaudy banners bobbing and swaying above the heads. A mob in the aggregate may seem alarming, but the unit is trivial. No self-conscious man ever took part in a procession without feeling ridiculous. Particularly is this so with him who supports a banner pole. He has nothing to do but to hold the banner aloft for the edification of the onlooker. And the onlooker at a demonstration is often critical, sometimes contemptuous, and always amused. The staggering supporter of a banner that depicts, in garish colours, a scene from Scriptural history, or a melodramatic warning to the drunkard, may regard the smile of amusement from the club windows of Pall Mall or St. James's Street with complacence, but it must be hard for him to witness the smiles of his inactive fellow-demonstrators. The banner-holder must have something of the heroic in him. That I learned when I joined the deputation from the "United Order of Total Abstinent Sons of the Phœnix," and marched with them, under their banner, through the packed streets. Every face of the thousands of faces that lined the route wore its particular smile of amused superiority. They may all have been sympathisers with the demonstration, but unless you are actually demonstrating you stand detached on a higher plane. The Court is watching the mumming of the Court servants. It was my first experience as a demonstrator, and though the Sons of the Phœnix began by replying to the witticisms of the crowd, by the time we reached Hyde Park fatigue had done its work, and to the boy who, pointing to our banner (it was torn and in holes), cried: "Hi! which of you was hungry when you came out?" they made no reply.

All sense of individuality had long left me. The aspect of life was entirely changed. The world had become a mob that had no outskirts, with a few trees and a sky overhead. On either side it surged. There was nothing to be seen but faces, pinched, curious, and amused, and ahead the narrow way that was made for us to pass along. We moved forward automatically, without speech, and certainly without enthusiasm. The only diversion was a hawker who suggested that I should buy a coloured picture called "Let 'em All Come!" representing a belligerent lion trampling on the prostrate body of Mr. Kruger, and, concurrently, gnawing a Chinaman. This was one penny. With the other hand, for the same sum, the hawker offered me a rosette, with the remark that they were "good old Buller's colours." But ere I had time to refuse he was gone, like a ship in the night. On we marched, our banners waving. Whither? Nobody quite knew, except that our destination was one of the six platforms. But we never found the platforms, for when we had surmounted the upland that overlooks the Serpentine we were confronted by a cordon of mounted policemen barring the road. The banners in front swayed, staggered, stopped, and we did likewise. Those behind closed up, and in a moment banner-holders, demonstrators, and onlookers were wedged together in a mighty swaying mass. We could not advance, we could not retire, but we could go sideways; and sideways we went, scattering like an army in a panic. Then followed what to a spectator newly come upon the scene must have been a strange phenomenon. High above that huge, leaderless mob waved the banners, looking, in the gathering darkness, like the outstretched wings of great birds. They moved hither and thither, trying various trails that might lead them to the platforms, and as they turned now to the right, now to the left, now doubling in their steps, the crowd followed, making wild rushes like silly sheep. That part of the park is crossed and recrossed by railings, and to see some thousands of people rise almost at the same moment, clamber over a railing, drop down the other side, run a few yards, and then return and repeat the operation —why, it made demonstrating quite worth the doing.

Digitized by Google

The evening drew in, the mist began to rise, and still those banners waved aloft in their forlorn quest. I know not if any Sons of the Phœnix, any of the Foresters with axes in their hands, any of the active youths who carried money boxes labelled "Memorial to General Buller," ever found the platforms. Thousands, like myself, certainly did not. Slowly the waving banners lost their power to beckon. An alternative, to go home, spread like Rumour, and soon the demonstrators were following one another to the roads. On the way I saw the one man who was not in a hurry. He was leaning against a lamp-post, and as the demonstrators streamed past him, he kept repeating, in a genial voice, "God bless you all!" He was not quite sober.

Favourite Books of 1901.

Some Readers.

In accordance with our custom, we sent last week to a number of well-known men and women a request that they would name the two books which, during the past year, they have read with most interest and pleasure. A large number of replies have already been received, some of which we print below.

The Bishop of London.

Rigg's Anselm of Canterbury.
Bishop's The Yangtze Valley and Beyond.

The Lord Mayor.

The History of Sir Richard Calmady.
The Life of Lord Russell of Killowen.

Lord Glenesk.

Kipling's Kim.
Bagot's Casting of Nets.

Sir Charles Dilke.

In past years it has happened that I have been able to name two books that have "pleased and interested" me, by calling in the foreigners. This time the only book I wish to name is English. The non-American parts of The Naulahka had hitherto lived for me as the writing which brought back India. Kim has the same charm and power, and involves a wider pageant.

Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton.

During the past year my reading (until the appearance of Mr. George Meredith's splendid volume of poems, and Mr. Thomas Hardy's Poems of the Past and the Present) has been confined almost entirely to books on natural science—books which, as I get older, have a growing interest for me; so I have no opinion whatever to offer as to which books in pure literature published in 1901 are the most deserving of praise. I have, however, read two stories with very great interest and pleasure—John Oliver Hobbes's brilliant novel A Serious Wooing, and a lovely little Irish story called The Wooing of Sheila, by Grace Rhys—a writer whose name, I think, is almost unknown. At present I have not been able to take up either of the two books which seem to have attracted the most attention during the year—Lucas Malet's Sir Richard Calmady; Mr. Hall Caine's Eternal City.

Sir Douglas Straight.

Lord Russell of Killowen's Biography.
Sir Richard Calmady.

Archdeacon Sinclair.

Bernard Holland's Imperium et Libertas.
Reginald Blomfield's Short History of Renaissance Architecture in England.

Professor Skeat.

My business is to explore old authors; and for this particular purpose new books afford small help.

Mr. Arthur W. Pinero.

George S. Layard's Life of Mrs. Lynn Linton.
R. Barry O'Brien's Life of Lord Russell of Killowen.

Mr. Herbert Beerbohm-Tree.

I must confess that I have not had leisure to read any new book during the present year.

Mr. Edmund Gosse.

Of recent English books those which seem to have interested me most are:—Mr. Hardy's Poems of the Past and of the Present, and Mr. Wells's Anticipations.

Mr. F. J. Furnivall.

I hardly ever get time to read a new book. Of the very few I have read, I think highest of G. M. Trevelyan's England in the Age of Wycliffe, second edition, 1901, and Professor G. C. Macaulay's edition of Gower's Vox Clamantis; but Boas's edition of Kyd's Works is a first-rate bit of work.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Richard Garnet.

Letters of John Richard Green.
Bernard Holland's Imperium et Libertas.

Mr. R. Whiteing.

Sorry to say I have read but little during the period, and little of that of moment, with one or two exceptions it would be unfair to name.

Mr. Frederic Harrison.

The Dictionary of National Biography. Three vols. Supplementary edition.
Maurice Hewlett's The New Canterbury Tales.

Mr. Oscar Browning.

Rudyard Kipling's Kim.
Byron's Letters. New edition.

Mr. Augustus Jessop.

Frank T. Bullen's A Sack of Sharings.
Letters of John R. Green.

Dr. Joseph Parker.

In fiction : The Master Christian and
The Eternal City.

The Revd. Father Ignatius

Has not liked any of the new books this year (he has read), but he admired some very grand passages in Mr. Hall Caine's Eternal City.

Mr. Stephen Gwynn.

Sir Richard Calmady and The Shadowy Waters (if that comes in). Perhaps Kim should figure; but it was less novel, less of an addition.

Mr. Laurence Binyon.

George Santayana's Poetry and Religion.
T. S. Moore's Aphrodite Against Artemis.

Mr. Arthur Symons.

W. B. Yeats's The Shadowy Waters.
George Moore's Sister Teresa.

Mr. Wm. M. Rossetti.

W. J. Stillman's Autobiography of a Journalist.
Lord Rosebery's Napoleon : the Last Phase.

"Ian Maclaren."

Kim, and Gore's Body of Christ.

Mr. W. B. Yeats.

Binyon's Odes, because of the poem in it about Tristram and Iseult, which seems to me perhaps the most noble and pathetic love poem on an old theme written in my time; and Sturge Moore's Aphrodite Against Artemis, which is powerful, with a beautful constrained passion. I have read only one other book published during the year, but cannot think, from what I hear, that had I read many I would have thought otherwise.

Mr H. C. Beeching.

Dr. Moberly's Atonement and Personality.
Mr. Kipling's Kim.

Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll.

I think the two books which have most pleased and interested me during the year are Kim and the first volume of Chambers' Cyclopædia of English Literature. I was very much interested in Sir Richard Calmady, but it can scarcely be called a pleasing book.

Mr. Sidney Webb.

H. G. Wells's Anticipations.
Dr. A. Rabagliati's Aphorisms, Definitions, Reflections, and Paradoxes.

Mr. F. C. Burnand.

Difficult to make a summary of year's books, and to select. Mr. Jacobs's Many Cargoes has pleased me most, as far as I can recollect; but interested me—well, The Life of Sir Charles Russell, i.e., Lord Killowen, without doubt.

Mrs. Craigie.

Thomas Hardy's Poems.
Viscount St. Cyres' François de Fénelon.
Frank Norris's The Octopus.

"Lucas Malet."

Rudyard Kipling's Kim, and
Herbert Trench's Deridre Wed and other Poems.

Miss Katherine Tynan.

I read very few new books in 1901, but two in which I was much interested occur to me at the moment. They are Miss Julia Crotty's The Lost Land and Mr. Barry O'Brien's Life of Lord Russell of Killowen.

Miss M. E. Braddon.

For novels in 1901, of which I read very few, I would name Arthur Morrison's Cunning Murrell and Maxwell Gray's Four-Leaved Clover.

"Rita."

Anonymous's Shams, and Hall Caine's The Eternal City.

Mr. Maurice Hewlett.

Andrew Lang's The Mystery of Mary Stuart.
A. E. W. Mason's Clementina.

Mr. H. G. Wells.

I know not which two of these three :
W. E. Henley's Hawthorn and Lavender.
G. Archdall Reid's Alcoholism.
G. B. Shaw's Three Plays for Puritans.

Mr. C. F. Keary.

G. Gissing's Our Friend the Charlatan.
Mrs. Clifford's A Woman Alone.

"Benjamin Swift."

Alfred Hodder's The Adversaries of the Sceptic.
Komensky's Labyrinth of the World. Lützow's Translation.

Mr. Bernard Capes.

Of the few I have read, decidedly Lord St. Cyres' Fénelon and Mr. Henley's Hawthorn and Lavender.

Mr. Max Pemberton.

Tales from Tolstoi.
W. W. Jacobs's Light Freights

Digitized by Google

Dr. J. Clifford.

Adolf Harnack's What is Christianity?
James Moffatt's The Historical New Testament.

Mr. F. Bullen.

With much regret and some shame-facedness I confess that I haven't read any new books this year except Kim, in which I took the very keenest possible delight. I did try to read two or three of the much advertised and tremendously successful (in a financial way) books of recent publication, but found them such unutterable twaddle that I gave them up, and fell back on Dickens and Thackeray, as usual.

Mr. E. V. Lucas.

Mr. Hardy's Poems of the Past and Present.
Dictionary of National Biography. Supplement.

Mr. J. Ashby-Sterry.

Sir Edward Malet's Shifting Scenes.
Dean Hole's Then and Now.

Mr. Clement K. Shorter.

If by the two best books of the year you mean by new authors, then I name (1) George Douglas's The House With the Green Shutters; (2) Lady Ilchester's Lady Sarah Lennox. If by authors of established reputation, (1) Lucas Malet's Sir Richard Calmady; (2) Dr. Gardiner's History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 1654-56.

Mr. Geo. R. Sims.

The House With the Green Shutters.
Despair's Last Journey.

Mr. Coulson Kernahan.

In poetry: Mr. Henley's Hawthorn and Lavender.
In fiction: Mr. Shan Bullock's Irish Pastorals.

Mr. Robert Blatchford.

R. B. Suthers' A Man, a Woman, and a Dog.
George Haw's To-day's Work.

Mr. Max Beerbohm.

If in 1901 the firstlings of only two among my personal friends had been shown to the public, I should be yielding as gladly as anyone else to your annual temptation. But this has been a wanderjahr for my personal friends, in that no fewer than six of them have "commenced author." The pleasure of awarding two wreaths is not so keen as the pain of inflicting four wounds. So you will excuse me.

Mr. Arthur Waugh.

Professor Courthope's Life in Poetry, Law in Taste.
Andrew Lang's Alfred Tennyson.

Mr. Clarence Ro o.

H. G. Wells's Anticipations.
Frank Norris's The Octopus.

The Tedium of Irreverence.

When we were fifteen how good the Ingoldsby Legends were!—the last word in broad fun, in rounded expletive (this side profanity), in high spirits, in genial mockery. We remember posing a clerical master, who pointed out their unsuitability for Sunday afternoon reading, by remarking innocently that a clergyman had written them—a challenge he preferred not to take up; and we read on unhindered.

But now? It would be a very dull Sunday that would drive Ingoldsby into our hands, and we have discovered that they do not bear the maturer scrutiny. The fact is, Barham is not good enough. As one grows older one requires some penetration of the surface even from a comic rhymester, and Barham effects none. He remains outside everything with a persistence probably unequalled by any writer who has stood equally the test of time. And that Barham has stood the test of time, for sixty years at any rate, is proved by this edition in Mr. Grant Richards's World's Classics—a popularity genuine enough in its way, and to be accounted for by the fact that schoolboys read books, and that many men remain schoolboys.

The chief point in the indictment of Barham is his want of reverence. A man must have reverence for something, or he becomes a bore; and we cannot find what it is that Barham thought lovely and of good report. A whole long book of irreverent japes can be the most tiring thing in literature. Barham was the first of the "funny men," in the sense in which Arnold used the term when he spoke of the funny man as being America's "national calamity." His treatment of death—in "The Knight and the Lady," for example, and "The Lay of St. Gengulphus"—makes him the ancestor of Max Adeler and Mark Twain, and all the other comic writers to whom death has equally been a joke. When one is at school, and immortal, death can be treated thus and excite no resentment. But after a while, when one has met death—when one has begun to die—one recoils from this kind of levity. Barham is full of it.

His treatment of other people's religion is equally jocular and flippant. To be a Roman Catholic was to Barham, the Minor Canon of St. Paul's, as it had been to Southey, the Quarterly reviewer and Churchman, some years before, the height of ludicrousness. A Roman Catholic is always fair game; while to Barham such amusing small fry as Quakers and Methodists existed, of course, only to be pilloried. To group Southey with Barham as wanting altogether in reverence would be absurd; Southey had a mind capable of nobility. But in this matter of ridiculing Rome he had certainly set a fashion which Barham afterwards extended more humorously. Personally we do not mind in the least; religions, if they are worth anything, can take care of themselves. The only point which we wish to make is that Barham's want of reverence becomes wearisome. Reverence is necessary.

Another verity which these Legends illustrate is the value of form. For a while a man may throw the reins on Pegasus's neck, but he must not do it too often. Barham's irregular metres and hand-to-mouth rhyming scheme are immoderately tiring after a while. We long for severe limits and obedience to some law. But irreverence and lawlessness are natural companions. Not but that an occasional exercise in happy-go-lucky verse is unamusing: it is the continual repetition that wears one's nerves. Barham did not stop at looseness of form; he went on to looseness of narrative. Such a digression as this, for example (which in the present edition is erroneously printed), simply makes one's head ache:

All Preux Chevaliers, in friendly rivalry
Who should best bring back the glory of Chi-valry.—

Digitized by Google

—(Pray be so good, for the sake of my song,
To pronounce here the ante-penultimate long;
Or some hyper-critic will certainly cry,
"The word 'Chivalry' is but a rhyme to the eye."
And I own it is clear A fastidious ear
Will be, more or less, always annoy'd with you when you in-
-sert any rhyme that's not perfectly genuine.
As to pleasing the "eye," 'Tisn't worth while to try,
Since Moore and Tom Campbell themselves admit
"Spinach
Is perfectly antiphonetic to Greenwich.")—

We can be amused by such asides once, but when repeated continually they are (after the teens) past bearing.

But we must be fair. Granting his lawlessness of form and his want of reverence, Barham did some very clever and adroit things, and some impressive things, too. If we had to pick out one of these Legends as best of all, we should, we think, point to "The Execution"; for there Barham's most successful exercise in serious interlude is to be found, allied to his usual high spirits and comic resource. The whole is a very successful piece of grotesque art. As a sustained humorous effort, uninjured, as are too many of the Legends, by discursiveness and topical allusion, we should name "The Jackdaw of Rheims" as perhaps the best; and popular opinion, we fancy, would be with us. In another vein "The Truants" is very happy, and it shows its author as a wit to better advantage than do the usual quips of his pen. In sustained gruesomeness, done lightly, "Hamilton Tighe" would be hard to beat, and the conclusion of it has a certain quality of eeriness comparable to the dark horrors of Admiral Guinea, and Old Pew's grim memory in Treasure Island. Barham never, in pure narrative, did anything better than these lines:

There's an old Yellow Admiral living at Bath,
As grey as a badger, as thin as a lath;
And his very queer eyes have such very queer leers,
They seem to be trying to peep at his ears.
That old Yellow Admiral goes to the Rooms,
And he plays long whist, but he frets and he fumes,
For all his Knaves stand upside down,
And the Jack of Clubs does nothing but frown:
And the Kings, and the Aces, and all the best trumps
Get into the hands of the other old frumps;
While, close to his partner, a man he sees
Counting the tricks with his head on his knees.

In Ratcliffe Highway there's an old marine store,
And a great black doll hangs out of the door;
There are rusty locks, and dusty bags,
And musty phials, and fusty rags,
And a lusty old woman, call'd Thirsty Nan,
And her crusty old husband's a Hairy-faced man!

That Hairy-faced man is sallow and wan,
And his great thick pigtail is wither'd and gone;
And he cries, "Take away that lubberly chap
That sits there and grins with his head in his lap!"
And the neighbours say, as they see him look sick,
"What a rum old covey is Hairy-faced Dick!"

That Admiral, Lady, and Hairy-faced man
May say what they please, and may do what they can;
But one thing seems remarkably clear,—
They may die to-morrow, or live till next year,—
But wherever they live, or whenever they die,
They'll never get quit of young Hamilton Tighe!

As an absolute master of rhyme Barham's place is unique. No one has beaten him there, although Calverley, for instance, is cleaner in workmanship. This is most happy:

Madge Gray was picking The breast of a chicken,
Her coal-black eye, with its glance so sly,
Was fix'd on Rob Gilpin himself, sitting by
With his heart full of love, and his mouth full of pie;
Grouse pie, with hare In the middle, is fare
Which, duly concocted with science and care,
Doctor Kitchener says, is beyond all compare;
And a tenderer leveret Robin had never ate;
So, in after times, oft he was wont to asseverate.

The easiest prose could not arrange the incidents better or express them more clearly. Here is another example of dexterous rhyming:

In vain did St. Dunstan exclaim, "Vade retro Strongbeerum!—discede a Lay-fratre Petro!"—
Queer Latin, you'll say, That prefix of "Lay,"
And Strongbeerum!—I own they'd have called me a blockhead if
At school I had ventured to use such a Vocative.

But, master of his instrument as he always was, and amusing as he often is, Barham's day is over as far as we are concerned. His reign was absolute at school, but he carries no authority into our later years. For a man to do that he must think that something is worth being serious about.

One very useful, or, at any rate, entertaining, end which the Ingoldsby Legends might be made to serve is to supply the basis for an elaborate structure of annotation, which, when completed, would approach to something like a social history of the London of the first three decades of the nineteenth century. Barham is packed with allusions to public men, institutions, customs, slang, and so forth, many of which are now recondite. How many readers, for example, know (to choose instances at random from these pages) the books called Fleta and Bracton, which the Squire of Tappington was reading (on page 47)? Who knows how Mr. Greenacre served Mrs. Brown (page 70)? Or who were Alderman Curtis and Alderman Brown (page 75)? Or where Mr. Ainsworth describes a storm (page 125)? Or why Payne Collier would read "swilling" for "swelling" (page 173)? Or who was the Mr. Levi that jumped off the Monument (page 251)? Almost every page offers a similar problem. The book, of course, is not worth this annotation; but (if undertaken) the result ought to be informing, quaint, and readable.

Pegasus at Tattersall's.

The Laureate was absent. He had, it appears, entertained a wish to buy the horse by private treaty, and with that purpose met Mr. Tattersall in a confidential interview. But what happened there had permanently damped his ardour. The character of Pegasus, it seemed, was too unsound. Mr. Austin required a cob invariably quiet to ride or drive, and Pegasus, it could not be denied, has now and again kicked over the traces.

However, the illustrious official passed from Mr. Tattersall's office to the stable to view the animal. "Lor!" said one of the grooms afterwards, "you'd think as what he'd never seen a norse before." "Is that Peg.?" he says. "In course it is," says the governor. "Amazing," says the gent; "why, I'd no idea he was like that. This clearly ain't the mount for me," he says, and off he goes.

From the same groom came information concerning the visit paid to Pegasus in his stall by Mr. Swinburne. "Yes," said he, "there was another gent; a thin one with a red beard. He seemed to have knowed the horse before; spoke about the rides he'd once had on him, and such like, though why his riding days should be over I can't see. But he spoke as if they were. And the 'orse seemed pleased to see him too; whinnied when he stroked him, and behaved pretty-like."

Pegasus was also said to have taken a piece of sugar from Mr. Austin Dobson's hand.

The animal was led into the hall by Mr. William Archer, who, though he seemed familiar with its character, was not wholly at his ease; and, after narrowly escaping an unexpected frolic with its heels, relinquished the halter to a groom with apparent relief.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Tattersall opened proceedings by stating, to the dismay of some of the company, that a reserve (which he did not specify) was placed upon Pegasus. He then called upon Mr. Edmund Gosse to dilate upon the extraordinary virtues of the animal. Mr. Gosse complied with his customary readiness. Climbing to the rostrum, he pulled from his pocket a paper, which contained, he said, a few quatrains written for the occasion, in the manner of FitzGerald's translation of Omar Khayyam, and these, he added, he proposed to read. Doubtless he would have done so if a voice, which some persons present affected to recognize as that of Mr. Churton Collins, had not called out, "Cut the cackle and come to the 'osses."

Mr. Gosse's place was taken by Mr. Watts-Dunton, who, profiting by Mr. Gosse's discomfiture, wisely made no mention of the sonnet sequence which was in his inside pocket, but plunged at once into a disquisition on the nature of the animal, which was only brought to a conclusion by a cry: "Here, that'll do: this is an auction-room; this ain't a blooming Athenæum. Besides," added the speaker, as an afterthought, "the 'orse is listening."

The sale then began.

The first bid was five shillings, from a gentleman who announced himself to be the editor of The Thrush, and who, on finding that the horse was not at once knocked down to him, left the building. "The thrush?" said Mr. Yeats, "phwhat's that? I thought it was a throat disease." "So it is," said Mr. Herbert Paul.

Mr. John Lane then offered a pound. He seemed surprised when the sum was immediately doubled by another speculator; and he did not bid any more.

Mr. Robert Bridges at this point stopped the sale for a moment to ask a few questions. "Can it," he wished to know, "perform the feats of the Haute Ecole?" Mr. Tattersall had no information. "I mean," Mr. Bridges continued, "can it step to music, waltz, polk, change feet, or kneel, at the word of command." Mr. Tattersall said he hoped not. "Then," replied Mr. Bridges, "this is clearly no place for me" and he left the hall. With him went Mr. Binyon.

Among those who were present, but did not bid, was the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette. "I just dropped in," he explained, "to look at his Occ.s."

Mr. Stephen Phillips also did not bid. He said he had lost his heart to a cab horse which took him to His Majesty's Theatre one day last year, and he wanted none other. "Besides," he added, "if I ever did buy a hack I am pledged to one with five feet which I saw at the World's Fair—a wonderful creature."

Mr. Rudyard Kipling was not present, but Mr. A. P. Watt was, and bid in his name. The fact that he was bidding also for other clients did not seem in the least to embarrass him. After a certain figure had been reached Mr. Watt shut up his note-book and left. "Ah weel," he said, "Pegasus or no Pegasus, ma clients will pay their way. And all things conseedered, it does na displease me that Mr. Kipling should be kept from poetry."

The reserve was never reached. The highest bid was made by the representative of the Daily Mail, who, profiting by the advanced John Bullism of the moment, proposed to boil the animal down into a brand of patriotic beef-tea.

Correspondence.

"Linesman."

SIR,—I observe from a London daily newspaper that this contributor to Blackwood is, in their opinion, one of our officers in the Transvaal. Poetry is not usually a military gift, and no one but a poet, and a very strong one, could have given us the mystery of the midnight veldt as "Linesman" did in the wonderful opening of his November article.

I have before me now an article in the same magazine for October, 1898, by Mr. Kipling, and signed by him, in which an Indian midnight is described as follows:

> Over our heads burned the wonderful Indian stars, which are not all pricked in one plane, but, preserving an orderly perspective, draw the eye through the velvet darkness of the void up to the barred doors of heaven itself. The earth was a grey shadow, more unreal than the sky. We could hear her breathing lightly in the pauses between the howling of the jackals, the movement of the wind in the tamarisks, and the fitful mutter of musketry fire leagues away to the left. A native woman from some unseen hut began to sing, the mail train thundered past on its way to Delhi, and a roosting crow cawed drowsily. Then there was a belt-loosening silence about the fires, and the even breathing of the crowded earth took up the story.

Here we have the same unique roll in the marching sentries as of muffled drums, the same gigantic grasp of weird detail. It is difficult to believe that they are not sister Nocturnes from one mighty brush.

I am not a pro-Boer, but if "Linesman" be not Rudyard Kipling I am a Dutchman.—Yours, &c.,

R. W. MACGOWN.

A School for Novelists.

SIR,—Last week-end I perused a novel entitled The Canker-worm, by G. Manville Fenn, the foundation of the whole plot arising from a young schoolgirl of sixteen eloping in a carriage one night with the "villain" of the piece. They ride along until the following day, when, passing a village church, they get married, the villain signing the register under a false name. The novelist does not state whether the marriage was by banns, licence, or special licence, nor does he give any information to the reader as to his method of persuading the parson to go through the marriage service. Novelists are supposed to have some licence, but I was not aware it included a marriage licence. But more follows. The villain, as is usual, tires of her; her friends examine the register, find out the real name of the man (the girl herself only knew his assumed name), and it is then taken as a fact that the marriage was void, not because they got married so easily, but because the man was married in an assumed name.

Mr. G. Manville Fenn surely has some acquaintance with a limb of the law—maybe some briefless barrister—who might put him right on the elementary principles of law.

There are plenty of lawyers and doctors with little or nothing to do; they might form a school for novelists who do not wish to be entirely ignorant on questions of law and medicine.

By the way, I came across a novel, Ivy Cardew, by a lady writer. The hero was charged with changing a cheque from £300 to £3,000 by simplying adding a "0." What about the body of the cheque? The words "three hundred" won't change to "three thousand" by the simple addition of an "0." That novelist evidently doesn't believe in cheques, but keeps all her money in a cupboard at home.—Faithfully yours,

Manchester. J. HARVEY SIMPSON.

Digitized by Google

Thomas Chaucer.

SIR,—A short passage in "G. E. C.'s" Complete Peerage runs thus, at Vol. 7, page 36: "Alice . . . d. and h. of Thomas Chaucer of Ewelme, Oxon [s. of Geoffrey Chaucer, the Poet], etc." The text thus enclosed in brackets is deleted in the British Museum copy, and a few words written in the margin to supply the blank thus simulated to the effect that the said Thomas was Speaker of the House of Commons.

Now I take it that the relationship thus postulated is beyond doubt, and to avoid prolixity I will define these three points of contact:

(1) Thomas succeeded Geoffrey as forester at Petherton, Somersetshire.

(2) Thomas paid rent for a tenement at Westminster, in succession to Geoffrey, who had acquired a long lease thereof shortly before his decease. It was occupied as a residence, most convenient for a member of Parliament, during session, before the era of clubland.

(3) Thomas executed a document with the seal of Geoffrey after decease of the poet.

These points are definite; but it is pretty certain that Geoffrey was husband to the mother of Thomas; also, Geoffrey was engaged in the household of Lionel Plantagenet when very young, and Thomas was squire to John O'Gaunt, the brother of Prince Lionel, in more mature age. It is generally understood that books are not to be mutilated by readers at the British Museum, and to tamper with an author's expressed statement seems to be a literary outrage.—I am, &c.,

A READER.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 115 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best Christmas Carol not exceeding twenty lines in length. We award the prize to Mr. C. H. Bowman, Gateshead-on-Tyne, for the following:—

1.

Night is passing into day:
Hail! the Little Child alway!
See Him in the cowshed born;
Dusk is melting into morn.
Wake all people, wake to sing
Carols to our cradled King.

2.

Crowded is the inn, they cry,
"Joseph's son without must lie."
Mary-Mother, ever blest,
Smile upon th' unhonoured Guest.

3.

Angels soothe Him with your song,
Cattle be His courtier-throng;
Sinless, ye are fit to stand
'Neath the throne-shed, by His hand.

4.

Men, whose sin He would outblot,
Ye alone receive Him not
Ah! men still refuse with scorn
Jesus, son of Mary born!

[C. H. B., Gateshead.]

Other Carols are as follow:—

Sing high the Babe, sing low,
Whom Mary, Mother and Maid,
Held to her bosom, unafraid,
In Bethlehem, long ago.
"Babe, more white than the drifted snow,
Nurture of all that live!
Take, dear heart, of the food I give—
Take it, and feed me so!"

Sing high the Babe, sing low,
Whom Mary, peerless Maid,
Held in her soft arms, warmly laid
Where never a wind might blow.
"Heart's delight, be it shine or snow,
Solace of all that weep!
Nestle Thee close in mine arms to sleep,
Jesu, and bless me so!"

[M. A. W., London, W.]

O God, this happy thrice-bless'd morn,
When One, with hope for all, was born,
Help them who feel no new love glow,
Nor wider sense of kindred know.

And help us each who Christward strives,
Though dying not for others' lives,
From lifeless dreams of self to wake,
And live, at least, for others' sake.

And they who mourn an empty chair,
Make them, O Lord, Thy special care;
For was not once their grief Thine own,
In Heaven itself, an empty throne?

And grant one cause for which He died,
No longer may be set aside;
For warring hosts His words forget,
And "peace on earth," Lord, tarries yet.

And this "Goodwill" that warms the heart,
Oh, may it not with might depart;
But may we still Love's law obey,
As every day were Christmas Day.

[P. H. L., Broadstairs.]

Cold was the night when Jesus came to Bethlehem;
Cold was the shed that received the little Child;
But His warm and loving heart did a radiant glow impart.
And with joy to greet her Baby, the Maiden, fair and mild,
Blessed Mary, smiled.
Hail, Jesu!

Dark was the night when Jesus came to Bethlehem;
Dark was the world that received the Living Light;
But forth there sprang a Star for the nations near and far,
When the angel-choir descended from the Heavenly City bright,
In the shepherd's sight.
Hail, Jesu!

Blest was the night when Jesus came to Bethlehem;
Blest was the hour which opened heaven's door!
For that lovely Infant Son with our Father, God, is One.
It was very God incarnate whom the Virgin-Mother bore.
Praise Him evermore!
Hail, Jesu!

[F. C., Worthing.]

Christ is born! Oh, Earth, rejoice!
Though in manger He must lay.
Carol loud with happy voice,
"Jesus Christ is born to-day!"

Many babes are born as poor,
Out in all the wintry cold,
On the bleak and cruel moor—
Yet are in the Father's fold.

"Peace on earth; Goodwill 'mong men!"
Hark, the angels' mystic song!
In our hearts rejoice, and then
Carol blithe the hopes along!

Peace on earth—how like to war!—
Kind Goodwill is killed by greed.
Love for others lives no more:
We must fill our own great need!

Jesus! oh, anew be born!
Deaf is all the world—and blind;
Come again this Christmas morn,
Come—and make us good and kind!

[W. S. B., Blackheath.]

1.

Good gentlemen, and ladies fair,
Now put by all repining,
Peace and goodwill are in the air,
The Christmas stars are shining!
Let us weave around the blaze, stories of the bygone days!
Let us raise the wassail high to the sound of minstrelsy!

2.

Noël, Noël, is here again.
The bells are all a-ringing.
In city street, in lonely lane,
We hear young voices singing;
Singing very sweet and low, carols of the long ago,
Carols that as incense rise to the silence of the skies

3.

Seek mistletoe and holly bright,
And turn your rooms to bowers!
You men and maids shall foot it light,
And gifts shall fall in showers!
Let the loving cup go round! Let your halls with mirth resound!
Let all enmities decrease! Christmas brings goodwill and peace!

[F. B. D., Torquay.]

Twenty-five other Carols received.

Competition No. 116 (New Series).

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best original Ghost Story. Not to exceed 500 words.

Digitized by Google

JARROLD & SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS

MAURUS JÓKAI'S NEW NOVEL.—Third Edition. Now Ready.

HALIL THE PEDLAR

(THE WHITE ROSE), 6s.

By MAURUS JÓKAI. Authorised Edition.
Translated by R. NISBET BAIN.

WITH A RECENT PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAIT OF DR. JÓKAI.

Author of "Black Diamonds," "The Poor Plutocrats," "The Green Book," &c.

FIRST REVIEW.

"The story is one of great interest. The various scenes are treated in Jókai's most picturesque style, and are related with great vividness and go."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Translated from the Russian by R. NISBET BAIN.
THIRD EDITION.

TALES FROM TOLSTOI.

WITH A BIOGRAPHY OF COUNT TOLSTOI.
(The first of its kind in English.)
WITH A PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAIT OF TOLSTOI. 6s.

"The genius of the man, his originality, his intense humaneness, can be traced on every page. . . This fascinating book enables readers to form an estimate of what may be called the popular side of this great writer's genius."—Westminster Review.

From the French of RENE BAZIN.

AUTUMN GLORY.

Translated by Mrs. ELLEN WAUGH. 6s.
WITH A SPECIALLY ENGRAVED PORTRAIT OF RENE BAZIN.

"As simple a story as ever was put into a book, but he tells it like a literary artist.

The dominating tragedy of the story is the drifting away from the land by the younger generation."—Literature.

THE LIFE TRAGEDY OF A MONARCH.

THE ROMANCE OF KING LUDWIG II. OF BAVARIA AND HIS FAIRY PALACES.

By FRANCES GERARD. 6s.

Author of "Wagner," "Bayreuth," and "The Festival Plays," &c.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

"His story is one that the world has real reason to read. Ludwig was a handsome, fascinating man, who at one time charmed all."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Issued by Subscription. NOW READY.

DIARINE, and Other Poems.

By THE HON. KATHERINE VEREKER.

Silk cloth, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

The annals of the Celtic race teem with incidents worthy of the garb of poetry. The theme of "Dairine" gives full opportunity for poetic imagination and originality of treatment.

Issued by Subscription. NOW READY.

LETTERS OF LADY HESKETH

To the Rev. JOHN JOHNSON, LL.D, concerning their Kinsman.

WILLIAM COWPER THE POET.

Including Portraits of Cowper, by Romney; Cowper's Mother's Picture, by Heine; Cowper's House at Dereham, &c., &c.

Edited by CATHARINE BODHAM JOHNSON.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; half-roxburgh, 6s. 6d. Postage 6d.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 & 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

OLIPHANT'S NEW BOOKS.

NEWMAN: AN APPRECIATION.

By ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. With the choicest Passages of his writings, Selected and arranged, and an Appendix containing Letters not hitherto published, one of them being in fac-simile. Art linen, gilt top, price 3s. 6d.

CONSTANTINOPLE AND ITS PROBLEMS.

Its Peoples, Customs, Religions, and Progress. By HENRY OTIS DWIGHT. With numerous Illustrations. Price 6s.

THE LORE OF CATHAY: OR THE INTELLECT OF CHINA.

In Five Parts: ARTS AND SCIENCES, LITERATURE, PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION, EDUCATION, HISTORY.

By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., Author of "A Cycle of Cathay," etc. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HENRY DRUMMOND.

By JAMES Y. SIMPSON, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., Author of "Sidelights in Siberia." Price 1s. 6d. net; extra gilt, 2s. net. (Famous Scots Series).

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" SERIES on application.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
EDINBURGH and LONDON; and of any Bookseller.

From JOHN LANE'S LIST.

BOOKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

THOMAS WOLSEY: Legate and Reformer. By ETHELRED L. TAUNTON, Author of "The History of the Jesuits in England," &c. Containing 21 Full-page Lithographs by T. R. WAY. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 15s. net.

KING MONMOUTH: Being a History of the Career of James Scott, the Protestant Duke, 1649-1685. By ALLAN FEA. With 14 Photogravure Portraits, a Folding-Plan of the Battle of Sedgemoor, and upwards of 100 Black and White Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

JANE AUSTEN: Her Homes and her Friends. By CONSTANCE HILL. With numerous Illustrations by ELLEN G. HILL. Together with Photogravure Portraits, &c., demy 8vo, gilt top, 21s. net.

THE WESSEX OF THOMAS HARDY. By Professor BERTRAM WINDLE. With nearly 100 Illustrations by EDMUND H. NEW. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 21s. net.

 Also an édition de luxe, printed on Japanese vellum, bound in buckram, demy 8vo, and limited to 50 copies for sale in England and America, 63s. net.

POETS OF THE YOUNGER GENERATION. By WILLIAM ARCHER. With 35 Full-page Portraits reproduced from Woodcuts by ROBERT BRYDEN. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 21s. net.

LATER POEMS. By ALICE MEYNELL. Author of "The Colour of Life," "The Spirit of Place," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

CHARLES DANA GIBSON'S NEW VOLUME.

A WIDOW AND HER FRIENDS. Uniform with "The Education of Mr. Pipp." Oblong folio (12in. by 18in.), 20s.

Mr. John Lane has prepared a small Booklet, containing 8 Illustrations from C. D. Gibson's Works. This will be sent post free to any address.

ANCIENT ROYAL PALACES IN AND NEAR LONDON. 24 Full-page Lithographs by T. R. WAY. With Descriptive Notes by FREDERIC CHAPMAN. Uniform with "The Architectural Remains of Richmond, Twickenham," &c. Demy 4to, 21s. net.

 This Edition is limited to 400 copies, 365 of which are for sale in England and America.

FROM THE HEART OF THE ROSE: Letters on Things Natural, Things Serious, Things Frivolous. By HELEN MILMAN (Mrs. Caldwell Crofton). With a Cover-Design by EDMUND H. NEW. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

WALT WHITMAN: An Essay. With a Selection from his Writings. By EDMUND HOLMES. Pott 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

MEN AND LETTERS. By HERBERT PAUL. 5s. net.

NEW AND CHEAP EDITION.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. Edited by GRANT ALLEN. With nearly 200 Illustrations by EDMUND H. NEW. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

FOR LOVERS OF FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE USURPER. By W. J. LOCKE, Author of "Derelicts," "Idols," "The White Dove," &c. [Third Thousand.

Daily Telegraph.—"Arresting is the right word to apply to Mr. Locke's book. Beyond all the excellence of the characterisation and the interest the story evokes which make it one of the most attractive novels of the year, there is the true insight in dealing with several of the problems of humanity, the stimulus to thought which is alike rare and unforgettable."

THE JUST AND THE UNJUST. By RICHARD BAGOT, Author of "A Roman Mystery" and "Casting of Nets." [Third Thousand.

THE ARISTOCRATS. By GERTRUDE ATHERTON, Author of "Senator North," "Patience Sparhawk," &c. [Tenth Thousand.

THE CARDINAL'S SNUFF-BOX. By HENRY HARLAND, [Eightieth Thousand.

THE COLUMN. By Mr. CHARLES MARRIOTT. [Eighteenth Thousand.

THE WORLD'S DELIGHT. By MARY J. H. SKRINE.

A DAINTY GIFT BOOK.

CHRISTMAS AT THE MERMAID. By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. Illustrated by H. COLE. Demy 16mo (5¼ in. by 4½), bound in cloth, 1s. net; bound in leather, 1s. 6d. net.

"Mr Lane has shown commendable sagacity in bringing out Mr. Watts-Dunton's 'Christmas at the Mermaid' in a form and at a time suitable for Christmas gifts."—Saturday Review.

Mr. JOHN LANE will send, post free, to any address his ILLUSTRATED PROSPECTUSES and CATALOGUES.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, Vigo Street, London, W.,
and New York.

Digitized by Google

MUDIE'S LIBRARY

(LIMITED).

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months and 12 Months

CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of the SEASON ARE NOW in CIRCULATION.

Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.

Many Thousand surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE (Second Hand). Also a large Selection of

BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS

SUITABLE FOR

CHRISTMAS, NEW YEAR, BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING PRESENTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;

And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

REPRINTS of OLD-FASHIONED and LONG-FORGOTTEN BOOKS for CHILDREN - - -

The Daisy.
The Cowslip.
The Rose.
The Crocus.
The Old Woman and Her Pig.
The Three Wishes.

Six Volumes.

One Shilling each. Net Price Ninepence each.

PUNCH, December 26th, 1900, says:—"Nöel, Nöel!"—Christmas again! Capital little shilling books with ancient nursery rhymes and fairy stories (Cornish Brothers, of Birmingham), recalling to us the illustrated tale of "The Old Woman and her Pig," "The Daisy," "The Three Wishes," &c., &c., in fact, all our old friends in old-fashioned form, with ancient woodcuts that have delighted for generations, and will probably delight the present, and many others "yet for to come."—THE BARON DE B.-W.

BIRMINGHAM:

CORNISH BROTHERS, 37, New Street.

LONDON:

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO., Ltd.

SKEFFINGTONS' CHRISTMAS LIST.

GIFT FOR CHILDREN. JUST OUT.

By F. LANCASTER LUCAS.

Elegant cloth, 3s. 6d.; profusely illustrated.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

THE FISH CROWN IN DISPUTE. A Submarine Fairy Tale for the Little Ones.

"I envy the little ones to whom this charming and original fairy book, with its admirable illustrations, will be presented as a birthday or Christmas gift."—Lady's Pictorial.

FOR CHILDREN. THIS DAY.

By MARGUERITE LLOYD.

In most elegant cloth, with Frontispiece and another illustration by Mrs. Farmiloe. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE LILY PRINCESS. An Entirely New Story for Children.

"All who read 'The Lily Princess' will be encouraged to go on believing in fairies, witches, and charming princesses, for Miss Lloyd tells a dainty story in convincing and interesting fashion."—Daily Chronicle.

FOR CHRISTMAS READERS & RECITERS.

DEDICATED TO H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE.

GORDON LEAGUE BALLADS, for Working Men and Women, including "Harry," "The Doctor's Fee," &c., &c. These pathetic, striking, and teaching Ballads have met with enormous success in recitation at meetings of and entertainments for working men and women. Fifth Thousand. 2s. 6d.

"A very striking and even beautiful book. Will be popular with and a blessing to the reciter and his audience in the mission halls of a poor district."—Manchester Guardian.

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON AND SON, 163, PICCADILLY, W. Publishers to His Majesty the King.

Price 2/6. Price 2/6.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For DECEMBER contains:

1. MILITARISM IN POLITICS AND LORD ROBERTS' ARMY REORGANISATION SCHEME. By JEAN DE BLOCH.
2. OUR UNHAPPY DIVISIONS: A PLEA FOR THE RECOGNITION OF NON-EPISCOPAL CHURCHES By Canon HENSLEY HENSON.
3. THE NEW REIGN IN ITALY. By BOLTON KING.
4. JOURNALISM FOR UNIVERSITY MEN. By F. S. A. LOWNDES.
5. ANTHROPOLOGY RECONSTRUCTED. By The Rev. W. W. PEYTON.
6. MAXIME GORKY. By Count S. C. De SOISSONS.
7. A DIARY OF THE NATAL CAMPAIGN. By RAYMOND MAXWELL.
8. LITERARY SUPPLEMENT: CHRISTMAS AND OTHER BOOKS. By "A READER."

LONDON:

THE COLUMBUS COMPANY, LIMITED,

COLUMBUS HOUSE, 43 & 43A, FETTER LANE, E.C.

Price Half-a-Crown Monthly.]

[All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

NELSON'S NEW CENTURY LIBRARY

EDITIONS OF THE WORKS OF

SCOTT.

The handiest and most attractive Edition of Scott's Novels published.

THE COMPLETE NOVELS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

In 25 Dainty Pocket Volumes.

In green cloth extra, Frontispiece, 2s. net.
Half-bound, 4 Illustrations, 2s 6d. net
In blue leather, limp, 4 Illustrations, 3s. net.
Library Edition. Leather boards, gilt edges, 4 Illustrations, 3s. 6d. net.

"Truly admirable issue."—ATHENÆUM.

DICKENS.

12 Pocket Volumes now ready.

In cloth extra, gilt top, gilt back, 2s. net.
In limp leather, gilt top, Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. net.
Library Edition. Leather boards, gilt edges, Frontispiece, 3s. net.

NEW CENTURY LIBRARY.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS,
The Holy War, and Grace Abounding.
Complete in One Volume.
Cloth extra, 2s. 6d. net; limp leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THACKERAY.

Complete Works in 14 Pocket Volumes.

In elegant Box Case, size only 9½ by 6¼ by 4¾ inches. Price £1 11s. 6d. net and upwards, according to binding.

(Published under special arrangement with Messrs. SMITH, ELDER, & CO.)

The Set consists of 14 Volumes, in cloth elegant, gilt lettering, gilt top, Frontispiece, Cloth Box.

THE VOLUMES SEPARATELY, cloth, 2s. net; leather, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. net and 3s. net.

NOTE.*—NELSON'S NEW CENTURY LIBRARY VOLUMES are printed in large type, on extra thin India Paper, and each work is complete in one volume. Size only 4½ by 6¾ inches, and but half an inch thick. Tastefully bound, artistically produced, convenient to handle—they are suitable alike for POCKET, LIBRARY, or PRESENTATION. Prospectus on application.

A SELECTION FROM

MESSRS. NELSON'S NEW BOOKS.

 COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED LIST, POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

By HERBERT HAYENS.
FOR THE COLOURS. A Historical Sketch of the British Army. By HERBERT HAYENS, Author of "Ye Mariners of England," "Red, White, and Green," &c. With Coloured Frontispiece, and 32 Illustrations by Archibald Webb and other well-known Artists. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. Price 6s.

By E. EVERETT-GREEN.
IN FAIR GRANADA. A New Historical Tale. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "After Worcester," "A Gordon Highlander," &c. With Coloured Illustrations by Walter Grieve. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. Price 5s.

By F. B. FORESTER.
HELD TO RANSOM. By F. B. FORESTER, Author of "The Spanish Cousin," "A Settler's Story," etc. Illustrated by Archibald Webb. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth, extra, gilt top. Price 5s.

By H. BURNHAM.
JACK RALSTON. A tale of Life in the Far North-East of Canada. By HAMPDEN BURNHAM, M.A., Author of "Canadians in the Imperial Service." With Coloured Illustrations by Walter Grieve. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. Price 5s.

By E. EVERETT-GREEN.
FOR THE FAITH. A Story of the Reformation Times in England. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "The Heir of Hascombe Hall," "French and English," &c. Illustrated by W. H. Margetson. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 3s. 6d.

By HERBERT HAYENS.
SCOUTING FOR BULLER. A Story of the South African War. By HERBERT HAYENS, Author of "A Fighter in Green," "A Captain of Irregulars." With Coloured Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 3s. 6d.

By the Author of "IN LION LAND."
THE CAPE AND ITS STORY; or, The Struggle for South Africa. With Coloured Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s. 6d.

By E. L. HAVERFIELD.
JIM'S SWEETHEARTS. By E. L. HAVERFIELD. Author of "Rhoda," "Our Vow," etc. Illustrated by Miss Preston Macgoun. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s. 6d.

By E. DAVENPORT ADAMS.
ON HONOUR. A Story of School and Home Life. By E. DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "A Girl of To-day," &c. With Coloured Illustrations by R. Farquhar. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s. 6d.

By H. MAY POYNTER.
MADAMSCOURT; or, The Adventures of a Fugitive Princess. A New Story for Girls. By H. MAY POYNTER, Author of "A Merry Heart," "Scarlet Town," &c. Illustrated by R. Farquhar. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s.

With Numerous Illustrations.
GREAT EXPLORERS. An Account of Exploration and Travel in Many Lands. With 32 Full-page Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s.

By the Author of "VAL."
TWO OF A TRADE. A New Story for Girls. By the Author of "Val." Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 1s. 6d.

By Mrs. H. SYNGE.
DICKIE. A Story of Life in a Travelling Show. By Mrs. HAMILTON SYNGE, Author of "Glory," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 1s. 6d.

By V. LOVETT CAMERON, C.B.
THREE SAILOR BOYS; or, Adrift in the Pacific. The Adventures of Three Lads, in an Open Boat, on a Coral Island, and among Cannibals. By VERNEY LOVETT CAMERON, C.B., D.C.L., Commander Royal Navy, Author of "Jack Hooper," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 1s. 6d.

By M. DOUGLAS.
THE STORY OF ALFRED AND HIS TIMES. A Popular Life of Alfred the Great for Young People. By M. DOUGLAS, Author of "Breaking the Record," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 1s. 6d.

NELSON'S NEW SERIES OF FINE ART COLOURED TOY BOOKS, PICTURE BOOKS, &c.,

Including "Up to London To See the King," with Coloured Pictures of the Sights in London, 1s.; "Children of the Empire," with Coloured Pictures of our Colonial Cousins, 1s.; "A Day at the Zoo," 1s.; "For the Flag." The Flags and Soldiers of the Nations. Arranged to form a Painting Book. 1s. "Sand Castles," with Coloured Pictures of favourite Sea-side Places, 1s., &c., &c.,

ALL IN HANDSOME PICTORAL COVERS. PRICES FROM 6d. to 2s.

T. NELSON & SONS, 35 & 36, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.; PARKSIDE, EDINBURGH; & NEW YORK.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. MACLEHOSE'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SECOND THOUSAND. Crown 8vo, with 41 Illustrations from Contemporary Sources, 6s. net.

THE LAST DAYS OF THE FRENCH MONARCHY.

By SOPHIA H. MACLEHOSE.

"Miss MacLehose has bestowed a great deal of what one may justly call loving care on the story of the unfortunate Louis and Marie Antoinette. We have a really remarkable picture of the life of the Court—even down to the arrangements of the Royal kitchens and the various gaieties—and the attitude of the nobility towards Royalty, so strangely and fatally shown over the affair of the necklace. The necklace story is as well told as it has ever been."—Spectator.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. 5th THOUSAND.

TALES FROM SPENSER: Chosen from the "Faerie Queene." Fcap 8vo, Art linen, 3s. 6d. Cheap Edition in paper boards, 1s. 6d.

"The book could not have been better executed had it been the work of the Lambs."—Saturday Review.

RUSKIN AT THE ENGLISH LAKES.

By the Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY, Hon. Canon of Carlisle.

Crown 8vo, with 10 Full-page Illustrations, 5s. net.

"His book is a worthy tribute to the great man's memory."—Spectator.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

LITERARY ASSOCIATIONS OF THE ENGLISH LAKES. 2nd Edition, 2 vols, Crown 8vo, with 32 Full-page Illustrations, 10s. net.

LIFE AND NATURE AT THE ENGLISH LAKES. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

MEMORIES OF THE TENNYSONS. 2nd Edition, with 16 Full-page Plates, 5s. net.

PRO PATRIA ET REGINA. Being Poems from Nineteenth Century Writers in Great Britain and America; issued in Aid of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra's Fund for Soldiers and Sailors. Collected and Edited by Prof. KNIGHT, St. Andrews. Fcap 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS,

Publishers to the University, Glasgow.

LONDON AND NEW YORK: MACMILLAN & Co., LTD.

Evolution and its Bearing on Religions.

By A. J. DADSON.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: SWAN, SONNENSCHEIN & CO., LTD., Paternoster Square, E.C.

MISS BRADDON'S LATEST NOVEL.

1 vol., 6s.

THE INFIDEL

A STORY OF THE GREAT REVIVAL.

"The sentiment chiefly concerned with the deeper problems of human life rings true throughout, and the characters, one and all, are living realities. It is a pleasure to review such a work."—Black and White.

SIMPKIN & CO., Ltd.;

and all Booksellers.

H. Virtue & Co's New List.

"Unusually elegant in appearance, and inexpensive."—Athenæum.

In cloth. Price 2s. net per Volume.

Each in a box for sending away as a Christmas Present.

TURNER HOUSE CLASSICS.

Edited by WILLIAM MACDONALD.

NOW READY.

BRET HARTE'S TALES OF THE ARGONAUTS and SELECTED VERSE.

THACKERAY'S HENRY ESMOND.

AN ANTHOLOGY OF HUMOROUS VERSE. Edited by THEODORE A. COOK.

BALSAC'S PERE GORIOT. (New Translation.)

"A bold stroke in the way of publishing that thoroughly deserves to meet with the favour of the public. . . . Admirably printed, . . . bound in a dainty and handy shape that cannot fail to attract."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The format adopted is strikingly original and attractive, being a bold, yet delicate effect in black, white, and red."—Academy.

"A most delightful series of reprints."—Gentlewoman.

OUR FAMOUS LANDSCAPE PAINTER.

Price 2s. 6d.; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

Japan Paper Edition (limited), 12s. 6d. net.

THE WORK OF B. W. LEADER, R.A.

By LEWIS LUSK.

Being the ART ANNUAL for 1901, or CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL.

With three Full-page Plates: THE VALLEY OF THE LLUGWY, TINTERN ABBEY, and ENGLISH COTTAGE HOMES, and about fifty other Illustrations.

Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 21s.

THE ART JOURNAL VOLUME FOR 1901.

With about 500 Illustrations and 13 Etchings, Photogravures, &c.

"Appears in a gay crimson colour of new design, very effective and beautifully printed, and the volume very fittingly inaugurates a new series . . . one of the most beautiful of table books."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LONDON'S RIVER, 1900.

Original Etching by W. L. WYLLIE, A.R.A.

A copy of the large original etching at the nominal sum of 2s. can be obtained, carriage paid or post free, on the conditions mentioned on voucher inserted in all copies of THE ART JOURNAL VOLUME FOR 1901.

Demy 4to, cloth gilt extra, £2 2s. net.

PALACES, PRISONS, and RESTING PLACES OF MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

By MICHAEL MYERS SHOEMAKER.

Revised for the Press by THOMAS ALLAN CROAL, F.S.A.(Scot.)

Illustrated with eight Photogravure Plates, twenty-four Full-page Illustrations printed on plate paper, and many smaller Illustrations in the text, including hitherto unpublished Portraits of Mary and Francis II.

An Edition de Luxe will also be issued containing an additional Illustration in colours from the Portrait of Mary Stuart, by Clouet, in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. This Special Edition will be strictly limited to 375 numbered copies at £5 5s. net each.

COMPANION VOLUME TO "BOOK PRICES CURRENT."

[Immediately.

Demy 8vo, about 600 pp., price 30s. net.

ART SALES OF THE YEAR.

Current Prices of Pictures and Engravings.

Being a record of the Prices obtained at Auction for Pictures and Prints sold during 1901, with Notes, References, and a Copious Index.

COMPILED AND ANNOTATED BY J. H. SLATER, EDITOR OF "BOOK PRICES CURRENT."

Third Edition, Revised, and with new Illustrations. Crown 4to, cloth gilt, gilt top, 15s. net.

Uniform with "THE HIGHLAND TAY."

THE RIVIERA.

By the Rev. HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D.

Opinions regarding previous Editions.

"The best of the numerous descriptive and illustrated books on the Riviera."—Saturday Review.

"An almost indispensable companion to sojourners on the Riviera."—The Times.

Crown 4to, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

New Edition. New Binding Design and New Photogravure Frontispiece after Percy Robertson. With forty-six Illustrations and two Maps.

THE PILGRIMS' WAY

From Winchester to Canterbury.

By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. Henry Ady).

"A really good book, well written and well illustrated. . . . Readers will find in the author a guide well acquainted with the literary and historical associations of her theme."—Spectator.

LONDON:

H. VIRTUE & Co., LIMITED, 13, Henrietta Street, W.C.

W. THACKER & CO'S

PUBLICATIONS.

WHYTE-MELVILLE'S WORKS.

THE EDITION DE LUXE,

EDITED BY

The Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL Bart., M.P.

The volumes are printed from new type on hand-made paper, specially manufactured for this edition, and handsomely bound in Buckram, with gilt tops. Demy 8vo.

Coloured Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum, and Full-page Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, H. M. BROCK, G. H. GALLAND, EDMUND CALDWELL, BERNARD PARTRIDGE, C. E. BROCK, HARRINGTON BIRD, FRED ROE, CECIL ALDEN, and Others.

Complete 24 vols., £12 12s. net.

"The edition has everything to recommend it externally."—The Times.

"It is as handsome a volume as one could wish to see."—Manchester Guardian.

"Good paper and type, and a good serviceable binding."—The Times.

"Altogether a pleasure to read."—The Field.

"These tasteful buckram volumes are worthy of the man and the matter in them."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"These capital books . . . the work of a born story-teller."—St. James's Gazette.

"Fulfils every requirement of the book-lover, in paper, type, illustrations, and binding."—Saturday Review.

"The edition is evidently going to be a success."—Athenæum.

"The publishers may be congratulated on the style in which the work is turned out."—Country Gazette.

"Has every claim to be considered an Edition de Luxe."—Truth.

"The pleasant setting of this handsome edition."—Spectator.

"An Edition de Luxe of the deceased sportsman's truly delightful works."—The Critic.

W. THACKER & CO.

2, CREED LANE, LONDON, E.C.

B. H. BLACKWELL'S LIST.

THE BOOK OF THE HORACE CLUB, 1898-1901. Royal 12mo, pp. xii. and 122, on hand-made paper, wrapping parchment (500 copies printed), 5s net.

THE COUNTRY PARSON, by GEORGE HERBERT, edited with Introduction by the Rev. H. C. BEECHING. Pott. 8vo, pp. lii. and 175, antique boards, 3s. 6d. net; wrapping parchment, 5s. 6d. net.

RIXAE OXONIENSES, by S. F. HULTON: Illustrated with Views of Demolished Buildings of Oxford, taken from Skelton's "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata." Cr. 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

THE PRIMACY OF ENGLAND, by S. F. HULTON, with facsimile. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MEMORIES OF SOME OXFORD PETS, by their Friends. Collected by Mrs. WALLACE, with a Preface by W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., pp. xvi. and 129, with portrait of "Oriel Bill," large imp. 16mo, cloth, 3s. net.

[London, T. Fisher Unwin.

THE ARCADIANS. by H. C. MINCHIN, cr. 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

WITH DOUBLE PIPE, by OWEN SEAMAN, Author of "Œdipus the Wreck," "The Battle of the Bays," &c. Imperial 16mo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE WAR OF THE POLISH SUCCESSION, by H.R.H. THE CROWN PRINCE OF SIAM, pp. x. and 73, cr. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

[London, T. Fisher Unwin.

THE MATRIMONIAL MARKET and other Duologues for Female Characters, by MABEL E. TAWNEY, pp. iv and 69, cr. 8vo, sewed, 1s. 6d.

THE OXFORD YEAR, and other Oxford Poems, by JAS. WILLIAMS, D.C.L. 125 pp., cr. 8v cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

50 & 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD,

Digitized by Google

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS BEFORE EASTER, 1902.
LECTURE HOUR 3 O'CLOCK P.M.

CHRISTMAS LECTURES.

Professor J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London. SIX LECTURES (adapted to a Juvenile Auditory), on WAVES AND RIPPLES IN WATER, AIR, AND ÆTHER. On December 28 (Saturday), December 31, 1901, January 2, 4, 7, and 9, 1902. One Guinea the Course; Children under 16, Half-a-Guinea.

ALLAN MACFADYEN, M.D., B.Sc., Jenner Institute of Preventive Medicine; Fullerian Professor of Physiology, R.I. SIX LECTURES on THE CELL: ITS MEANS OF OFFENCE AND DEFENCE. IMMUNITY. On TUESDAYS, January 14, 21, 28, February 4, 11, 18.

WILLIAM NAPIER SHAW, Esq., M.A., F.R.S., Secretary of the Meteorological Council. TWO LECTURES on the TEMPERATURE OF THE ATMOSPHERE: ITS CHANGES AND THEIR CAUSES. On TUESDAYS, February 25, March 4.

Professor E. B. POULTON, M.A., Hon. LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.R.I., Hope Professor of Zoology in the University of Oxford. TWO LECTURES on RECENT RESEARCHES ON PROTECTIVE RESEMBLANCE, WARNING COLOURS, AND MIMICRY IN INSECTS. On TUESDAYS, March 11, 18.

A. S. MURRAY, Esq., LL.D., F.S.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities at the British Museum. THREE LECTURES on RECENT EXCAVATIONS AT DELPHI AND IN THE GREEK ISLANDS. On THURSDAYS, January 16, 23, 30.

The Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (Ian Maclaren). THREE LECTURES ON THE SCOT OF THE 18th CENTURY. I. At Home. II. In Kirk. III. With His Books. On THURSDAYS, February 6, 13, 20.

Sir HENRY CRAIK, K.C.B., M.A., LL.D., Secretary Scotch Education Department. TWO LECTURES on SCOTLAND'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE EMPIRE. On THURSDAYS, February 27, March 6.

E. T. REED, Esq., Member of the Staff of Punch. TWO LECTURES ON CARICATURE IN AND OUT OF PARLIAMENT. On THURSDAYS, March 13, 20.

WILLIAM HENRY HADOW, Esq., M.A., B.Mus., Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford. FOUR LECTURES ON LANDMARKS IN THE HISTORY OF OPERA; GLUCK, MOZART, WEBER, WAGNER (with Musical Illustrations). On SATURDAYS, January 18, 25, February 1, 8.

The Right Hon. LORD RAYLEIGH, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., Sc.D., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Natural Philosophy, R.I. SIX LECTURES on SOME ELECTRICAL DEVELOPMENTS. On SATURDAYS, February 15, 22, March 1, 8, 15, 22.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guineas. Subscription to a single Course of Lectures, One Guinea, or Half-a-Guinea, according to the length of the Course. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-office Order.

Members may purchase not less than three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will begin on January 17, at 9 p.m., when THE RIGHT HON. LORD RAYLEIGH will give a Discourse on INTERFERENCE OF SOUND. Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by Mr. H. G. WELLS, Professor A. CRUM BROWN, Professor A. GAMGEE, Major P. A. MACMAHON, Mr. W. DUDDELL, Professor H. A. MIERS, Professor H. BECQUEREL, Professor E. RAY LANKESTER, Geheimrath Professor OTTO WITT, and other gentlemen. To these Meetings Members and their friends only are admitted.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the Secretary. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge. Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—G. W. PROTHERO, LITT. D., LL.D.

AN ORDINARY MEETING of the Society will be held on Thursday, December 19th, at 5 p.m., in Clifford's Inn Hall, Fleet Street, E.C., when a paper will be read on "Some Materials in the Vatican Archives for a new edition of Polydore Vergil" by the very Rev. F. A. Gasquet, D.D., President of the Benedictine Order in England.

HUBERT HALL,
Director and Hon. Sec.

3, Old Sergeant's Inn,
Chancery Lane, W.C.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

EAST OF SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch.—"Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."
Vanity Fair.—"An unusually able volume.... a creepy, clever volume."
Pall Mall Gazette.—"Always contrives to interest us."
Daily Chronicle.—"Is told with art."
Truth.—"Exceptionally clever and interesting."
To-Day.—"Clever and powerful tales."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

Saturday Review.—"A remarkable novel."
Westminster Gazette.—"A daring idea is well carried out....the book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."
Western Morning News.—"As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence." [interesting."
Manchester Courier.—"The story is powerful and
Irish Times.—"Shows remarkable promise and power."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.

Daily Chronicle.—"They breathe a breezy atmosphere suggestive of open air and sturdy constitutions."
County Gentleman.—"A very readable book."
Free Lance.—"These stories will be widely read."
To-Day.—"Plenty of vivacity, humour, and 'horsiness.'"
Western Morning News.—"Amusing and readable."
Western Daily Mercury.—"'Mad Lorimer' will have a very successful run."

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s. [devised."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Nothing pleasanter could be
Morning Advertiser.—"Thirteen admirable little stories."
Sheffield Independent.—"A lively, hearty, unpretentious set of tales that we have enjoyed."
Glasgow Herald.—"The authoress is to be congratulated on this handful of idylls of true love."

TATTY. A STUDY OF A YOUNG GIRL. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

Athenæum.—"Undoubtedly a well-written novel."
Liverpool Mercury.—"We commend the story to the thoughtful reader."
Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A well-written novel."

The CASE of A MAN WITH HIS WIFE By THEO GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

Birmingham Daily Gazette.—"Well told and pathetic."

THREE OCTOBERS: A Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever bit of work."
People.—"As to its cleverness throughout there can be no question."

London: A. TREHERNE & CO., Ltd.,
3, AGAR STREET, W.C., and all Booksellers.

Evolution and its Bearing on Religions

By A. J. DADSON.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., LTD.,
Paternoster Square, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY, St. James's Square, S.W.
Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

Vice-Presidents—The Rt. Hon. LORD ACTON, the Rt. Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P., the Rt. Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P., D.C.L. HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.

Trustees—Rt. Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S., Rt. Hon. EARL of ROSEBERY, Rt. Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF.

The Library contains about 200,000 volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various languages. Subscription, £3 a year; Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading Room open from 10 till half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 1888, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D.,
Secretary and Librarian.

ADVERTISEMENTS (Select Trade) for the COVER PAGES of the ACADEMY should be sent not later than Noon on Thursday to 43, Chancery Lane. Terms, &c., on application.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S

CHRISTMAS LIST.

IAN MACLAREN'S GREAT SUCCESS.
THIRD EDITION, COMPLETING 15,000 COPIES. Cloth, 6s.

YOUNG BARBARIANS. By IAN MACLAREN, Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." With 16 Full-page Illustrations by Harold Copping.

"One of the very best books of the season."—Standard.
"Ian Maclaren has seldom done anything better—certainly he has never done anything more humorous—than the 'Young Barbarians.'"—The Times.
"Highly enjoyable. We have seldom seen a book more full of genuine irresistible fun."—Spectator.

RALPH CONNOR'S NEW NOVEL.
FIRST EDITION of 10,000 COPIES nearly EXHAUSTED. Second Edition in the Press. Price 6s.

THE MAN FROM GLENGARRY. By RALPH CONNOR, Author of "Black Rock" (Fifth Edition, 6s.) and "The Sky Pilot" (Seventh Edition, 6s.).

GILBERT PARKER, M.P., writes: "I have seldom read anything that has given me a greater thrill than the story of the fight between Macdonald's gang and Murphy's gang on the Scotch river. Also I have seldom been attracted to characters more than to the two Macdonalds, Macdonald Bhain, and Black Hugh."

JOSEPH HOCKING'S BEST BOOK.
EIGHTH THOUSAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

O'ER MOOR AND FEN. By JOSEPH HOCKING. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Harold Copping.

"A very good book The illustrations are admirable."—St. James's Gazette.

MISS E. H. FOWLER'S CHARMING STORY.
SECOND EDITION NEARLY EXHAUSTED. THIRD Edition in the Press. Price 6s.

THE WORLD AND WINSTOW. By EDITH HENRIETTA FOWLER.

"The novel is in all respects one of notable merit."—Scotsman.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.
Imp. 8vo, cloth gilt, 8s.

A GIFT BOOK FOR THE HOME. Poems by His Grace the DUKE OF ARGYLL, K.T. With numerous Illustrations from the Old Masters, &c.

"The volume is beautifully illustrated, and it would be difficult to find a more suitable Christmas gift."—Daily News.

FRANK T. BULLEN'S NEW BOOK.
FIRST EDITION, COMPLETING 5,000 COPIES, NEARLY Exhausted, 6s.

THE APOSTLES OF THE SOUTH-EAST. By FRANK T. BULLEN, Author of "With Christ at Sea." (Seventh Edition, 6s.)

DR. JOHN WATSON'S GREAT WORK.
Royal 8vo, cloth, price 25s. net.

THE LIFE OF THE MASTER. By Rev. JOHN WATSON, M.A., D.D. With 16 full-page Illustrations in Colours, by an artist sent specially to Palestine for the work. Prospectus on application.

"Than 'The Life of the Master' there could not well be a more seasonable book. The publishers have worthily co-operated with the author in sending it out in a style admirably adapted for a Christmas gift. In external appearance, as well as general get-up the volume is indeed one of the handsomest of the season."—Scotsman.

DR. PARKER'S PULPIT BIBLE.
Now Ready. Bound in leather, price £2 2s. net.

THE PULPIT BIBLE.—By Rev. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D. Prospectus on application.

Dr MARCUS DODS, in the British Weekly.—"Dr. Parker has produced a volume which will not only keep his memory green for ages to come, but will also be of inestimable service to many. It ought to be largely in use as a gift-book to ministers and heads of families at the coming Christmas."

CHRIST AND RECENT CRITICISM.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION. Christ and Recent Criticism. By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D.

REV. J. H. JOWETT'S NEW VOLUME.
SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

APOSTOLIC OPTIMISM, and other Sermons. By Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A., Birmingham.

"The volume is a great refreshment. As we breathe its bracing air, and take in its great horizons, we realise afresh the greatness of the pulpit's mission when adequately conceived; the infinite importance both to individual and to national life, of the message the true preacher has to bring."—The Christian World.

REV. HUGH BLACK'S NEW VOLUME.
SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CULTURE AND RESTRAINT. By Rev. HUGH BLACK, M.A., Edinburgh.

IAN MACLAREN says:—"From the first page to the last the book is thoroughly well informed, fair-minded in the highest degree, acute in criticism, and written with an engaging lucidity of style. It is also enriched and beautified by many apt quotations, and should be persuasive with all schools through its pervading human sympathy."

SECOND EDITION. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LETTERS ON LIFE. By CLAUDIUS CLEAR.

"Their driving alertness gives them a separate place in journalistic writing. . . Illuminated by wide reading and the fruits of much good talk."—Academy.
"Shrewd, suggestive, kindly."—Illustrated London News.

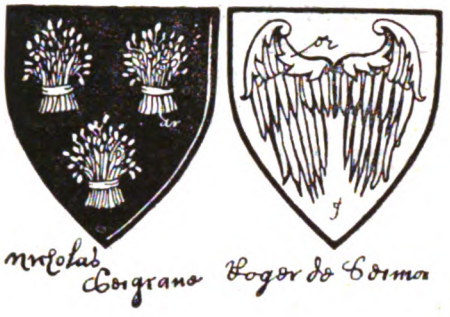
MAGNIFICENT ILLUSTRATED EDITION.
Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.



RELIGION IN RECENT ART. By P. T. FORSYTH, D.D. With Illustrations reproduced from pictures by Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, and Rossetti.

The writer has in view chiefly the religious significance of our contemporary art: he prizes art chiefly as it can speak to the soul. This work is an attempt to bring home to the lay mind that spiritual interest in the great subject-matter of art which must in the long run constitute the basis of its appeal to mankind at large.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Digitized by Google

SPECIMEN PAGE.—SOME FEUDAL COATS OF ARMS, 63*s.* NETT (PARKER & CO., OXFORD AND LONDON).

SIR ROBERT DE SEPTVANS, 1306.

†Segrave, Nicholas—(H. III. Roll) bore, sable three garbs argent (F.); borne also by GEOFFREY and GILBERT; Dering, Norfolk, Glover, and Howard Rolls.

Segrave, Sir John de, banneret, baron 1296–1325, sealed the Barons' letter to the Pope 1301, pp. xviii, xxiv. He bore, at the battle of Falkirk 1298 and at the siege of Carlaverock 1300, sable, a lyon argent crowned or; as did his brother NICHOLAS, baron 1295–1322, with a label (3) gules, he signed but did not seal the famous Barons' letter 1301, p. xxiv; he bore the arms also at the first Dunstable tournament 1308 and at the battle of Boroughbridge 1322—a label (5) gules. F.

Segrave, Sir Stephen—bore, at the first Dunstable tournament 1308, sable, a lyon rampant argent, crowned or, charged on the shoulder with a fleur-de-lys gules (F.); ascribed also to Sir JOHN, of co. Leic., in Segar and Parliamentary Rolls.

Segrave, Sir Henry de, of co. Leic.—bore, at the first Dunstable tournament 1308, sable, a lyon rampant argent, crowned or, debruised by a bendlet engrailed gules; a baston gules (F.) in Harleian and Parly. Rolls; and also for HUGH, whose brother JOHN (f John) differenced with a baston or, as did Sir SIMON, also of co. Leic. (Harl. MS 1481 fo. 77).

Segrave, Nicole de—(E. I. Roll) bore, sable, a lyon rampant argent; Dering and Howard Rolls.

Segrey, John and Simon de—(H. III. Roll) bore, ermine, a lyon passant gardant gules; Arden and St. George Rolls. (F.) SYMON bore a lyon rampant in Jenyns' Ordy.

Seilly, John de—(H. III. Roll) bore, azure, semée of mullets (6) and a lyon rampant or; Howard Roll. See SULLY.

Selby, Sir Walter—(E. III. Roll) bore, burrulée (14) or and sable. (F.) Ashmole Roll.

Senefylde, Sir Guy de, of Essex—(E. II. Roll) bore, vert, an eagle displayed or; Parly. Roll. NENESFELD, NEVESFELD or STENEFELDE.

Seneschal, William le, v. Steward.

Sennyle, Sir Symon de (SENCILLE), knighted at the capitulation of Calais 1348, bore, azure, crusily fitchée (3, 3) and a bend or.

‡Septvans, Sir Robert, of Kent—(H. III. Roll) bore, azure, three corn-fans or. (F.) Dering and Arundel Rolls—tricked crusily or, in Howard Roll—see Monumental Brass, after Waller.

Servington, Sir Oliver—(E. III. Roll) bore, ermine, on a chief azure three bucks' heads cabossed or; Ashmole Roll.

Seton, Sir John—(E. III. Roll) bore, gules, a bend argent between six martlets or; Ashmole and Surrey Rolls.

*[Seimor, Sir Roger, 23 H. III.—(Seal), gules, two wings conjoined in lure of the first.—Shirley.] F.

Seymour v. St. Maur.

Seymour, Thomas bore, at the second Dunstable tournament 1334, argent, three chevrons gules, a label vert. F.

Seymour, Sir Thomas (SEMOR)—(E. III. Roll) bore, argent, a chevron gules, a label (3) azure; Ashmole Roll.

Seynanse, Sir William de—(E. III. Roll) bore, gules, on a chevron or three martlets sable; Ashmole Roll. F.

Seys, Hemar (SCEYS)—(H. III. Roll) bore, gules, two palets vair and a chief or; Howard Roll.

Shakerley, William—(E. IV. Roll) bore, argent, three shakebolts 2 and 1 sable—with crest; Ballard Roll.

Shardelow, Sir John—(E. III. Roll) bore, argent, a chevron gules between three crosses crosslet fitchée azure; Ashmole Roll. JOHN CARBONELL bears the same arms.

Shardelow, Sir J.—(H. VI. Roll) bore, gules, a cross argent, a bordure engrailed or; Atkinson Roll. See also CARBONELL.

Shardeston, Fouke de—(H. III. Roll) bore, gules, a saltire engrailed argent; Glover Roll.

Sharingbourne, Andrew de—(E. III. Roll) bore, gules, a lyon rampant or, a quarter ermine; Ashmole Roll and Jenyns' Ordinary.

Sharnfield, John de—(E. III. Roll) bore, azure, an eagle displayed or membered gules; Jenyns' Ordinary. JOHN DE WOLVERTON bears the same.

Sharshall, Sir William—(E. III. Roll) bore, undée (6)—now barry nebulée—argent and gules, a bordure sable besantée. Sir ADAM differenced with a mullet (6) or; Ashmole Roll. See SARASSWELLE.

Shastowe, Robert de—(H. III. Roll) bore, gules, on a bend argent three mullets azure; Glover Roll.

Sheffield, Sir Thomas de (SHEFFELDE)—bore, at the first Dunstable tournament 1308, gules, a fess between three garbs banded or. (F.) (Sir ROBERT bore the reverse; Parly. Roll.) JOHN and Sir THOMAS bore six garbs 3, 3, with the colours reversed; Parly. Roll and Jenyns' Ordinary.

"Mr. Foster has given us for the Middle Ages a work of reference, the usefulness of which no one will deny."—THE TIMES. "This latest stone of the monument which the indefatigable Mr. Foster is building to his own heraldic fame is as prodigal of record as an Assyrian brick."—ACADEMY. "The collection is a marvel in itself, but the pictorial part of the volume is still more to be admired."—SPECTATOR. "A work which tends to revive the fame of English heraldry."—THE SPEAKER. "A very sumptuous work."—LITERATURE. "The work is one of conspicuous merit as regards both design and execution."—THE WORLD. "Altogether it is a very remarkable work."—DAILY CHRONICLE. "Evidences a devoted appreciation of the beauty and significance of the herald's art."—MORNING POST. "It would be difficult to praise too highly the skill, care, and artistic taste with which the book has been prepared."—THE STANDARD. "Some fine full-page examples of many quartered atchievements."—PALL MALL GAZETTE. "A treasure-house of delight."—THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

NOBLE AND GENTLE MEN OF COAT ARMOUR, PAST AND PRESENT, profusely illustrated. (1) SOME FEUDAL COATS OF ARMS, 63*s.* nett, now ready (Parker, London and Oxford); (2) ARMS OF SOME GRANTEES, ANCIENT AND MODERN, 63*s.* nett, now compiling; (3) ANCESTRAL (VISITATION) FAMILIES, compiling. Intending Contributors or Subscribers to No. 2 will please communicate with Mr. FOSTER, 21 Boundary Road, London, N.W.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1545. Established 1869. 14 December, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

It seems that M. Sully Prudhomme had known for some time that the Nobel prize for literature, value 8,000 guineas, was about to be conferred upon him. The author of Les Vaines Tendresses proposes to use some of the money in helping young poets of talent who are not too well endowed with the world's goods. The poet, says the correspondent of the Chronicle, is in weak health, and has only just exchanged a bed of sickness for the arm-chair of slow convalescence. He remarked that his happiness will probably bring him embarrassment, and that the prize would have been more fitly conferred upon one whose lyre is not, like his own, plaintively mute. Mistral was the other French candidate. M. Prudhomme has been a member of the Academy since 1881. Some thought that Etchegaray, the Spanish poet and dramatist, would be awarded the prize.

We have received the following additional replies to our request for the titles of "the now new books which have pleased and interested me most in 1901":

Mr. Andrew Lang.
In reply to your question, I find that Mr. Pollen's Papal Negotiations with Queen Mary is the most interesting of recent historical works, and in fiction I have been most impressed by Mr. George Douglas's The House With Green Shutters.

Mr. E. T. Cook.
Maeterlinck's Life of the Bee.
Samuel Butler's Erewhon Revisited.

Henry Norman, M.P.
The Autobiography of the Amir of Afghanistan.
Hertslet's The Old Foreign Office.

Mr. Sidney Lee.
W. J. Courthope's Life in Poetry: Law in Taste.
Francis Morgan Nichols's The Epistles of Erasmus.

"Zack."
Maeterlinck's The Bee.
May Sinclair's Two Sides of a Question.

Mr. David Christie Murray.
John Beattie Crozier's History of Intellectual Development.
Rudyard Kipling's Kim.

Mr. Harry Furniss.
The Confessions of a Caricaturist.

We have received from Mr. Aylmer Maude "a report and account of the Resurrection Fund," which means the fund for distributing the profits arising from the sale of Tolstoy's novel, Resurrection. The pamphlet contains 26 pages, and states that Mrs. Maude's translation of Resurrection, written to assist the migration of the Doukhobórs, has produced in royalties £1,500, of which £1,360 has been received from the publishers of the illustrated American edition, and £140 from the publisher of the corresponding edition in this country. The sub-title of the pamphlet runs, "and of difficulties encountered in administering the fund." One of the difficulties was certainly produced by a letter received from Mr. John Bellows, clerk of the Friends Doukhobór Committee, in which he announced the return of a cheque for £150, on the ground that Resurrection does not promote the cause of morality. In returning the cheque, Mr. Bellows acted on his own responsibility, and refunded the money out of his own pocket. "Whether the Committee will deem it right to repay me I cannot tell." We await with some interest the decision of the Doukhobór Committee and Tolstoy's comment.

Last week in our Correspondence columns Mr. Macgowan said "if 'Linesman' be not Rudyard Kipling, I am a Dutchman." Mr. Macgowan, we fear, must be content to be a Dutchman. There seems to be no doubt that "Linesman" is Captain Maurice C. R. Grant, of the 2nd Devonshire Regiment, now Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Intelligence Department.

"One of your correspondents," writes Mrs. Catherine Ashley, "wishes to know the origin of the saying that 'the gist of a woman's letter lies in the postscript.' Mr. Ker, in your issue of December 7, quotes Clough, but I believe I am right in saying that your correspondent will find the quotation has its origin in Madame de Sévigné's Lettres Choisies. Bacon, in his essay on Cunning, says that 'great men often put their most important news into the postscript.'"

Because his sweetheart would not lend him 30s., a youth said "he would die on her doorstep that night." At the Marylebone Police Court, where he was charged with attempted suicide, the following dialogue took place:

Mr. Plowden: Are you fond of reading?
The Prisoner: Yes, sir.
Mr. Plowden: What books have you been reading lately?
The Prisoner: Marie Corelli—(Mr. Plowden: "Ah!")—Zola, Rider Haggard.
Mr. Plowden: Just the authors I should have guessed—at least, some of them.

"Some of them" is a hard saying. Mr. Rider Haggard, we should have thought, was calculated to make a boy forget his sweetheart's refusal of a loan.

Digitized by Google

Mr. M. H. Spielmann has been requested by the family of the late Miss Kate Greenaway to undertake a memorial volume dealing with the life and work of the artist. It is intended that the book shall contain, besides a memoir and correspondence of Miss Greenaway, chapters from the autobiography she had begun, a selection from the numerous poems she had left in manuscript and numerous reproductions, hitherto unpublished, of drawings in water-colour, sketches and studies, schemes, and designs for books, together with much matter of interest in connection with Miss Greenaway's career. Among Miss Greenaway's friends and correspondents who have passed away were Lord Tennyson, Mr. Ruskin, Mr. Frederick Locker-Lampson, Randolph Caldecott, H.I.M. the Empress Frederick.

Our request, made in the Academy of November 30, to be furnished with the source of the following nursery rhyme about Henry VIII.:

Highty, tighty, flighty, Ho!
Whither away doth my little man go?
To see my Lord Mayor, hys Feaste or hys Showe?
No; not for ye Feaste, nor yet for ye Showe,
Have I donned my best Beaver and fayre Bridal Bowe;
But to see our Kyng's nuptials,
His wedding, I trowe.

is kindly answered from Birmingham by Mr. Arthur B. Chamberlain, who says: "I have in my possession a copy of the book of nonsensical rhymes upon episodes of English history, about which there is a query in your issue of November 30. Its proper title is Ye Booke of Pictures, painted by Ancient People to Veritable Historic Rhymes, rung out by ye Chimes of ye Bells of Bow Steeple. The illustrations are by Irving Wood, and are parodies of the "Old English" style, printed in red and back. No mention is made of the name of the writer of the verses which accompany each picture. The book was published by Dean and Son, 11, Ludgate Hill, more than thirty years ago, and is advertised as a companion book to Ye Comical Rhymes of Ancient Times and Rummical Rhymes, with Pictures to Match. It is a very amusing publication, and was an immense favourite in our family, and many of the lines, which we spelt out in youth, are still quoted by us in middle age, particularly those given in your paper:

Have I donned my best Beaver
And fair bridal Bow.

These lines are upon "Going to ye Royal Wedding of Henry ye 7th, A.D. 1485," and not that of Henry VIII., as stated by your correspondent."

A correspondent informs us that the epitaph at Bakewell which ends with a couplet by Dr. Johnson was not quite correctly quoted by Prof. T. Roger Smith in our last issue. It should run:

The vocal Powers here let us mark
Of PHILIP, our late Parish Clerk;
In Church none ever heard a Layman
With a clearer Voice say "Amen"!
Who now with Hallelujah's Sound
Like Him can make the Roofs rebound?
The Choir lament his Choral Tones,
The Town—so soon Here lie his Bones.
"Sleep undisturb'd within thy peaceful shrine,
Till Angels wake thee with such notes as thine."

Philip Roe died in 1815, aged fifty-two years.

Dr. Johnson's concluding couplet is also used in the epitaph in the Capel Chapel, Watford Parish Church, Herts, on Catherine (née Catherine Stephens), widow of the fifth Earl of Essex, who died in 1882, aged ninety-one years; and the last line—between inverted commas—is to be seen on a monument in the south transept of Lichfield Cathedral.

M. Edmond Rostand has good reason to regret his Compiègne verses, for from the day of their publication dates a reaction against him as a literary force. The verses were read at Compiègne by a gifted actress, and they seemed to please the illustrious guests of France. But they were laughed to scorn in the newspapers. M. Edmond Drumont declared that the ode was an insult to the Czar and a humiliation to French genius. What is called the Rostand krach is still exciting journalistic Paris. M. Raitif de la Bretonne writes in Le Journal: "The case of Rostand seems to me both more and less grave than has been represented. It is not deliberately, but involuntarily, that he has made bad verses. He has always made execrable lines. The Compiègne poem contains neither better nor worse verses than does 'Cyrano.' Long since my opinion, and that of all the real poets, was formed upon this point. Ask especially Jean Moréas, Henri de Regnier, and Gustave Kahn." The same critic considers that Rostand is merely "skilled in counterfeiting artistic productions," and he quotes the following lines from the Compiègne poem to prove that their author has no style, ideas, depth, or originality:

Et pour qu'il n'y ait pas d'erreur
Vous avez avec l'Empereur
Notre cœur pour résidence.

(And that there should be no error, you have, with the emperor, our heart for residence.)

Le sceptre magique des modes,
Du caprice et des nonchaloirs
Retrouvé dans un des tiroirs
D'une des célèbres commodes.

(The last two lines translated read: "Rediscovered in one of the drawers of one of the celebrated chests.")

Un ancien tapis d'Aubusson
Sur un air de vieille chanson
Fredonne: "Rien qu'à la façon

Dont je sens sur moi qu'elle glisse.
Oh! oh! c'est une Impératrice!"

(An old Aubusson carpet, hums over the air of an old song: "Alone from the way I feel she glides over me, oh, oh, it is an empress.")

In Le Bloc, M. Clemenceau, more generous than other critics, says: "Rostand will not always have to sing about empresses—an ungrateful task which checks the breath of inspiration. He can, if it shall please him to re-read himself and prune his work, give us lively and smart verses redolent of Gascogny. The festival of Compiègne will not have been useless for him if he will henceforth guard himself against the intoxication of rhythm and the melody of words, and take the trouble to remember that it is not forbidden to enclose occasionally an idea within the resounding music of verse."

A correspondent sends Mr. Andrew Lang an "astonishing scrap of folk-lore from Tennyson's county," which Mr. Lang prints in his "Sign of the Ship" notes in the December Longman's. It is a charm for ague shown to the writer by a Lincolnshire grandam, who laughed quinine to scorn and said: "Naay, lad, I knaws tew a soight better cure than yon mucky stuff." With that she took her visitor round to the foot of his bed, an old four-post. There on the bottom board were fixed three horseshoes, points upwards (of course), with a hammer laid "sloshways" over them. Taking it in her hand, she said:

Feyther, Son, an' Holy Ghoast,
Naale t' owd divvel tew this poast;
Throice I stroikes with holy crock,
With this mell I throice du knock,
One for God,
An' one for Wod,
An' one for Lok.

Digitized by Google

"Is not it an extraordinary instance of a minglemangle of old Norse Paganism and Christianity?" asks Mr. Lang's correspondent: "Thor's Mell and Christ's Cross. The Christian Trinity, and Thor, Woden, and Loki."

AMERICA has not done yet with Edward FitzGerald by a long way. The forthcoming publication of "The Variorum and Definitive Edition of the Poetical and Prose Writings of Edward FitzGerald" in seven volumes, as arranged by Mr. George Bentham, with a preface by Mr. Edmund Gosse, is considered a literary event of no small importance. The work will bear the imprint of Doubleday, Page & Co. Besides all known renderings of The Rubaiyat, by FitzGerald, the volumes will include Salaman and Absal, Euphranor, Agamemnon, Six Dramas of Calderon, The Mighty Magician, Such Stuff as Dreams Are Made Of, Polonius, Sea Words and Phrases Along the Suffolk Coast, A Bird's Eye View of Fariduddin Attar's Bird Parliament, The Downfall and Death of King Œdipus, also in their various renderings, together with a miscellaneous collection of prose works. All title-pages are to be reproduced in fac-simile, and the original pagination has been preserved. The composition and the presswork are being executed at the Merrymount Press.

MEANWHILE FitzGerald's version of the Rubaiyat is being put through new paces and contortions. We learn from the New York Times Saturday Review that Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole expects to issue early in December a privately printed edition of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, the text to be that of FitzGerald's Fifth Recension, with the same done into Greek by Mr. Ernest Crawley, of Bradfield College, Berkshire, England. The privately printed edition of the Rubaiyat issued by Mr. Dole in 1898, with the Latin text by Mr. Herbert Wilson Green, has, it seems, long been out of print, and commands a considerable premium. We are told that "Mr. Crawley has sent his manuscript across the Atlantic for publication," and that Dr. William Aldis Wright, FitzGerald's literary executor, cordially approves of the present edition. The volume will be published with the observance of the usual ceremonies and mysteries. The edition will be limited to 150 numbered copies, printed on fine hand-made paper, and bound in charcoal paper, turned in. These are to be had at 10dols. per copy, to be issued in exact order as subscribers' names are entered. There will also be twenty-five copies printed on Japan vellum, bound in rich red vellum and issued at 25dols. per copy, &c.

AMERICA, by the way, reprints some books which English readers would probably welcome if they had the chance. Thus Messrs. Houghton Mifflin have just issued a charming translation of the works of "Obermann's" Letters to a Friend. Etienne Pivert de Senancour, to give him his real name, is known to every lover of Matthew Arnold's poetry. Arnold compared his writings favourably with Amiel's, to which they are akin.

DR. VAN DYKE'S prayer-preface to his story The Ruling Passion, quoted by us a few weeks ago, has evoked opinions in England which are thus collected and criticised by the New York Times Saturday Review: "The unique preface beginning 'Lord, let me never tag a moral to a story not tell a story without meaning,' which Dr. Van Dyke places as the 'Foreword' in his latest volume, The Ruling Passion, is being variously commented on by the London reviewers, and their expressions run through the whole gamut of literary censorum—censorum, in the Latin sense, it should be said. One critic says that it is a most admirable petition, which every aspirant for literary laurels should commit to memory and 'repeat reverently' before putting pen to paper. Others are of a similar opinion, and so on, to an attempt at indifference which is more or less pertinently expressed by the ACADEMY: 'An admirable petition. But why print it?' As we have seen, other reviewers have answered this query. In the meantime, the preface itself seems destined to take its place as a unique addition to the three great prefaces of literary history." What is the chronometer of—we mean, what are the three great prefaces of literary history?

MR. EDWARD GARNETT contributes to the December Monthly Review a rather remarkable article, equipped with dozens of footnotes, on "The Contemporary Critic" and his duties. We are tempted to quote the whole of the fifth section of Mr. Garnett's article as an interesting treatment of the problem presented by the literary fecundity of the day:

> In any case, whether it is the diffusion of superficial culture which assists the depraved human mind to produce the bulk of popular literature, must not the contemporary critic accept that wider standpoint which involves a recognition of the "bulk" as "the literature of the self-education of the crowd"—the mental food necessary to its present state of development? And will he not better seize its significance and, indeed, render it absolute justice by treating it as documentary evidence of the community's mental outlook, needs, wishes, and states of feeling? Is not the crowd trying to get into the whole house of modern literature, and find out its life there, and is there not to-day such a noise and confusion, such a banging of doors and opening of windows that the house is rendered temporarily uninhabitable to the "fine spirit"? And are not the most "popular" writers very, very insignificant as creators, but very plainly significant as the instructors, the overseers, the spokesmen of the community's ignorance? If the critics would only recognise as a national drama this surprising unlocking of the doors of our heterogenous general public's consciousness and its flinging itself outwards into literature, eager to bring its world into violent and familiar contact with the great stream of life flowing outside it, would they not fix the valuations of this literature, get all round it, see into its meaning, and thereby place it better than by simply condemning it as not in harmony with certain æsthetic canons? We are all witnessing to-day the phenomenon of the culture of the community not being grown slowly from the deep roots of its life (by which slow growth, for example, flowered the exquisite poetry and exquisite arts of many old-world peasantries), but being translated, imported, and administered by the Press, the academies, and other wholesale agencies for indiscriminate consumption. And the unassimilated "culture" of our modern commercialised world is the ferment in the hasty brew of "popular" works. It is the chief source of very bad art. Accordingly, the contemporary critic, seeing the relation this "culture" bears to society's mental outlook, seeing inevitably why it is prevalent, and the purpose it serves, must discriminate most sharply between the comparatively small band of artists whose creative instincts shape true works of art for us, and for posterity, and the running multitude of writers whose works reflect the common perishing valuations of our bustling and self-important time. Herein lies the distinction between living and dead criticism. For if the critic fails to detect in the deluge of his day the spirits that being finely creative open new windows for our consciousness, if he confuses what is significant with what gives us a mere face value, he fails. Weary of the deluge, he is in danger of rejecting his age en bloc, or of hailing, let us say, the achievements of Mr. Rider Haggard, and of being critically disheartened by the "symbolism" of Maeterlinck.

IN the American Bookman Mr. Gelett Burgess has an amusing account of the London halfpenny comic paper and its contributors. We have not looked into this branch of literature, but Mr. Burgess's statements concerning the commercial side of halfpenny comic art suggest that one more adaptation of the "Song of the Shirt" is called for. He has known an editor buy forty pen-and-ink drawings for a pound, cash down. A few fortunate artists, friends of those in authority, get steady employment, doing four series regularly each Wednesday night, and living riotously upon the proceeds for the rest of the week. One syndicate has an organised staff, and pays two pounds a week, their slaves grinding out "comics" from nine till six every day, jokes provided. Monday morning at the office of the Big Budget discovers a row of artists lined up in front of the counter of the cashier's office. It is pay-day, and each contributor, provided with a copy of the paper, takes his place in the queue and points out his drawing on the broadside, is paid his eighteenpence per sketch, signs his receipt, and gives place to the next in the row. If the pay is small, it is at least certain. Mr. Burgess declares that there are many such struggling Bohemians in London, happy-go-lucky prodigals, now with gold in their pockets and silk hats on their heads, then chewing their pencils in their "bed-sitting-room, back," waiting for some ignoble inspiration.

Digitized by Google

THE pretty gift book that is just a pretty gift book is a very harmless or a very dreadful production, according to the view you take of it. As an addition to the world's literature it is like Campbell's snowflake on the Iser, "one moment white, then gone for ever." Here are a few notices from an American paper:

> Lyrics of Love, by Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, are full of the sweet personality of their author, who sends forth these songs of the home and of the wayside, of love and peace, to add "a thread of melody to the toiling, dusty, monotonous way," which, after all, is the way that leads us home.
>
> Among Flowers and Trees with the Poets, compiled by Minnie Curtis Waite and Merton Channing Leonard, is a sort of cyclopædia of flowers and trees, as pictured and sung by the poets. It is well adapted as a gift to a teacher interested in nature study.
>
> Among the Great Masters of Oratory, by Walter Rowlands, is illustrated with reproductions from famous pictures and rare originals. Scenes in the lives of great orators, from Demosthenes to Gladstone, present a wide diversity of periods and peoples, and Mr. Rowlands has skilfully handled them.

"One moment published, then. . .

WE have referred several times to the forthcoming celebrations in Paris of the centenary of Victor Hugo's birth. It is stated—we know not with what authority—that Gerhart Hauptmann, Gorky, and Mr. Kipling are to be invited to attend as representatives respectively of German, Russian, and English literature. Commenting on this, a contemporary says: "It might make an interesting exercise for readers of the ACADEMY to compose imaginary addresses by these three writers upon the genius of Hugo." Rather too stiff an exercise, we fancy.

THE Grolier Society is producing a sumptuous edition de luxe of Charles Lever's novels at £65 the set. Each copy is extra illustrated, numbered, "registered," and contains one autograph letter of Charles Lever.

THE issue of Whitaker's Almanack for 1902 was published on Thursday, December 12. In addition to the usual changes, the Accession of King Edward VII. and the honours bestowed for services in the war have revolutionised the Orders of Knighthood, the increases in the Companions alone being:—C.B. from 639 to 741, C.M.G. from 385 to 672, D.S.O. from 345 to 1,312, and C. and M.V.O. from 53 to 162.

MR. W. D. HOWELLS has been examining, in the North American Review, a striking treatise on Humour by a leading Italian scholar; and his own opinions on humour soon expand. We snatch a few of these from their contexts. Of Mark Twain Mr. Howells says:

> He is not only the greatest living humorist, but incomparably the greatest, and without a rival since Cervantes and Shakespeare, unless it be that eternal Jew, Heinrich Heine, who of all the humorists is the least like him. Heine's humour is at every moment autobiographical, and for far the greater part of Mr. Clemens's humour is so; Shakespeare's alone is impersonal, but this may be on account of the dramatic form, and more apparent than real. Heine and Mark Twain are both archromantic, just as they are both autobiographical, though to what different ends!

Of Dickens:

> Now, his humour was very well in its way, but it hardly can make us laugh any more, and it was always rather of the nature of the laughter of horses, the play of horses. It was fantastic and wilful and forced, and expressed itself in characters which bore much the same resemblance to the human species as the effigies which keep the crows from the cornfields, and in crude communities express the popular indignation with persons of opposite political convictions. He had not a humorous conception of life, which is the great thing rather than humour itself, if Mark Twain, who has it, will allow me to dispute him. Dickens was a great histrionic talent, and produced powerful if simple effects in that sort. But he was not of the fine English humorists who began with Chaucer, or with Shakespeare, as you please, and came down with Swift, and Addison, and Steele, and Sterne, and Goldsmith, and perhaps Scott, and Thackeray, to a humorist who may almost stand with Shakespeare himself. I mean Thomas Hardy, who in his vision of humanity, in its entirely ironical and humorous conception of life is possibly the greatest of all the present English, and I am not forgetting the Scotchman, Mr. William Gilbert.

IT must not be supposed that Mr. Howells is a champion of American humour against all others. So far as he compares it with our own, he gives us the advantage.

> The humiliating truth is that we are still not only quantitatively but also qualitatively behind the English in humour, and not only in literary humour, but also in artistic humour. I have named one artistic English humourist—he was, to be sure, a French-Belgian on his father's side—who abounded in that sweetness which seems wanting in our comic artists. But Du Maurier was not the only English artist who abounded in sweetness, and whose satire was almost a caress. There was Leech, there was Doyle, there was Keene, each in his way most lovable as well as witty. Except Mr. Peter Newell, whose quaintness is full of gentle charm, the only American like them that I can think of is Mr. Oliver Herford, who is an Englishman; the rest of our good fellows have all a biting, rather than a caressing, wit. They are inferior to the Germans as well as the English in their want of sweetness, their want of humanity, one may even call it.

IN an "Impression of the Week" contributed by Mr. W. E. Henley to the Sphere, we find this:

> Last week Mr. Greenwood asked me a question: Did the late R. L. S. (I cannot with the shrieks of the Bandar Log still shrilling to the Empyrean, I dare not be more particular) look as elfish in life as he looks in his portraits? There can be but one answer: He did not. In the photographs we have of him there is nothing perforce of the brilliancy, the colour, the mobility, the impudence ('tis the sole word) which his features wore. As for the "changeling," let Mr. Greenwood turn to the eight-and-twenty volumes of the "Edinburgh Edition." If the changeling were ever anywhere at any time, he will certainly be there.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

Thrice Welcome.

More Letters of Edward FitzGerald. Edited by William Aldis Wright. (Macmillan. 5s.)

THESE Letters will be quietly and deeply welcomed by those who have the two original earlier volumes of FitzGerald's Letters and have learned to love them. They might with advantage have been merged in those volumes, but many of them were not in Mr. Wright's hands at the time. Of others we are told—not quite so intelligibly—that "although they were not included in the previous collection, the object of which was to let FitzGerald tell the story of his own life, they seem worthy of preservation, now that he has taken his place among English Letter-Writers. They are of the friendly human kind which entertained Carlyle." This seems to point to some new quality in these added letters. But all FitzGerald's Letters are of the friendly human kind, and we may say at once that the Letters in this volume seem to us to be exactly like those already published, and that we are well content that they should be so. Among these new Letters is one to Dean Merivale, the only one which has been preserved, and it is included by permission of Miss Merivale and her publisher, Mr. Edward Arnold. The important thing to note is that these Letters have an intercalary relation to those in the two volumes of Letters and the volume of Letters to Fanny Kemble. They will be read by careful readers in connection with these. They are of the same progressive dates, they have the same topics and complexion; in a word, they merge with the earlier Letters as wine from the same decanter.

What is the peculiar charm of FitzGerald's Letters? We should say it is their essential normality. They are, in intention and in scope, such Letters as the ordinary well-read man wishes to write, could in a measure write, but does not write. They are his own written or would-be written Letters raised to the *n*th power. They transcend on the same plane. Hence they have a charm which is not one of the charms of Lamb's Letters—as why should it be? Lamb's Letters are, if you please, the finest in the language—though of all forms of literature Letters are least amenable to the "mark" system of merit—but Lamb's Letters are essentially Lamb's, and not yours transfigured. His elaborate humorous poses, his mystifications, his plots, surprises, premeditated fun, and his bursts of familiar eloquence are removed from everyday correspondence. The finest letters in the language, if you please, but not the nighest to your letter-writing self. Similarly, Byron's Letters are essentially Byron's, the rushing wind of his opinions that rather invigorates than detains. In both Lamb and Byron there is a further removal from the norm to be noted. Both of them fall into strains in which the epistolary character is rather lost. For a page or so together you can almost forget that what you are reading is the letter of one friend to another. You might be reading a printed Elian essay or a printed Byronic diatribe. In FitzGerald you never lose the epistolary feeling. As letters, and only as letters, these pages appeal to you. Involuntarily you visualise the handwriting, hear the paper crinkle, and are conscious of the envelope and the stamp. You approach each letter with the little thrill which an unopened letter communicates. You read it once, twice, and find nooks of interest in it to explore again; it is all easy, interesting, and touched with mind; you put it into your breast pocket. FitzGerald's letters are the most comfortable reading in the world. We can never read them without laughing at the idea that his was an incomplete or half-lived life. To have written these Letters, that so surely warm and entertain; that survey the world of culture, yet domesticate you in a Suffolk countryside; that bring the idea of leisure and ripening predilections before eyes tired with the changes and unprofitable eagerness of life at the centre;—to have written these Letters was, we say, a great unconscious achievement.

As we have said, no new note is struck in the volume. The same delightful air of "puddling among books and pictures," the same burly inexactness, the same purpose within vagary, and care within carelessness, are present in every page. The man's honest blunderings and easy contentments are a perpetual joy. He buys a mop for his kitchen, and, liking the colour of its head, keeps it in his study as a decoration. He buys and cleans pictures, but never seems to hang them: "the Truth is, they look so much better on the Floor." He alters his old boat without the least conviction, sells his Bank Stock into Dutch Funds in a "sudden fit," buys things he doesn't want in the Baker Street Bazaar and writes himself down an Ass. He reports his "little Moonlight Crome" a failure; "not old Crome at all, as I might have seen if I had only cared to look at the Back, where his Son's name is very legibly written." These potterings at Woodbridge or elsewhere are endlessly amusing in a man who in the next sentence is going to say a fine thing about a new book, or on a question of style, or on life's difficulties. And through all the interests of to-day—the doings of Tennyson and Browning, Carlyle and Thackeray, the clash of reviews, the box from Mudie's, the fragments of art and scholarship—you hear the North Sea blowing on shore, or the chimes of Woodbridge Church playing "Where and oh where is my Soldier Laddie gone?" every three hours. "On Sundays we have the Sicilian Mariners' Hymn—very slow indeed. I see, however, by a Handbill in the Grocer's Shop that a Man is going to lecture on the Gorilla in a few weeks. So there is something to look forward to." And how delightfully FitzGerald measures and punctuates his long, quiet life. Who does not love him for writing to Carlyle: "Last Sunday Evening—the longest day—I was looking at an Elm which you may remember in the field before Farlingay. I remember your reading under it—reading up Voltaire, etc., for Frederick. I thought how big the Tree had grown since that: but that is nineteen years ago, 1855." Again, how the scholar-gipsy comes out in this to Cowell: "The other day I lit on Paley's Æschylus, with pencil marks at the end of each Play, to note the day when it was read on board the Scandal, or on Bawdsey Cliff in the Autumn of 1863. A very few years later I was reading Sophocles with you in the same places."

With all his seclusion and delightful incapacities, FitzGerald had in him a curious strain of the editor. Not the editor of daily contacts and weekly or monthly task-work, but the editor who, giving his thoughts the benefit of leisured rumination, sees what this man can best do, or in what mistaken direction he is being drawn, and seeks to set him right and extract his best. FitzGerald's solicitous, dry-nurse attitude to Tennyson is well known. One could pick many a passage in which he appears as an inspirer or jealous guardian of excellence. In the letter to Dean Merivale, already referred to, he writes:

> When I remember your viva voce, and when I read your letters, Merivale, I always wish some one would make notes of your table and letter talk: so witty, so humorous, so just. You would not do this yourself; if you thought about what you said and wrote for such a purpose it would not, I suppose, be as good; but I wish others would do it for you—and I must not say for me, at my time of day, but for those who come after us both.

To Frederic Tennyson he writes in careful criticism of one of Lowell's books:

> My pencil-marks in it are not marks of Admiration, but the contrary, I think; sometimes at words, sometimes at whole Sentences of "Fine Writing." There is one at p. 273, I think, which is perfectly wonderful for such a

Digitized by Google

Writer as Lowell; you could not find it in an English writer of half the force. There is the loose screw in American Literature, and it is partly the consciousness of it that makes them sensitive about English Opinion. I know Lowell by Letter; and I tell him this, for he says he is not thin-skinned; and I can tell him with a good grace of little flaws when I so honestly admire his work in the main. I think he is altogether the best Critic we have; something of what Ste. Beuve is in French.

Here is a note—not untimely just now—on the true spirit of Biography. He has been reading Walpole's memoirs of George II. and III.:

Horace Walpole seems to me to understand Burke and Fox well—the Good and Idle Apprentice as Selwyn called them. Coleridge and his School try to set up Burke as the man of his time; I think we Irish folks can see the Irishman in Burke much better. So with Goldsmith: Forster and Co. try to clear him of the Blunders and Vanity which such fools as Johnson, Reynolds, &c., laughed at; but we Paddies know how a Paddy may write like an Angel and talk like a poor Poll. It astonishes me to see the best English brains, like old Spedding's, go the whole Hog so with any Hero they take up.

His desire to see the Browning cult moderated comes out strongly in a letter to Sir Frederick Pollock. He has been reading the first volume of The Ring and the Book.

I had the curiosity to ask Carlyle (in my yearly Letter) what he thought of Browning's Book. I dare say you have heard him talk on the subject. He writes to me: "I have read—insisted on reading—Browning's Book. It is full of talent, energy, and effort; but actually without Backbone or basis of Common-sense. I think it among the absurdest books ever written by a gifted Man."

Such is the opinion of all the men I know, whose opinion is certainly worth as much as the Newspaper Critics. Then why don't some of you step out into the Newspapers and Magazines, and tell the Truth of the Case? Why does not Venables? Stephen? Pollock? I am sure I would if I could: but I have not the faculty. I can only say, "I do not like you, Dr. Fell," but there I stop—knowing I'm right. If Browning were half so great as they say, he would himself write to disclaim any approximation to Tennyson.

Here is an instance of his would-be management of Tennyson:

If you come, we will go and see Carlyle, whom I must visit once before my return. Tennyson is emerged half-cured, or half-destroyed, from a water establishment: has gone to a new Doctor who gives him iron pills; and altogether this really great man thinks more about his bowels and nerves than about the Laureate wreath he was born to inherit. Not that he meditates new poems; and now the Princess is done, he turns to King Arthur—a worthy subject indeed—and has consulted some histories of him, and spent some time in visiting his traditionary haunts in Cornwall. But I believe the trumpet can wake Tennyson no longer to do great deeds; I may mistake and prove myself an owl; which I hope may be the case. But how are we to expect heroic poems from a valetudinary? I have told him he should fly from England and go among savages.

Away from literature to life. Is not this a charming sketch of one of FitzGerald's rare days in London? Note the end of it:

The most pleasurable remembrance I had of my stay in town was the last day I spent there; having a long ramble in the streets with Spedding, looking at Books and Pictures: then a walk with him and Carlyle across the Park to Chelsea, where we dropped that Latter Day Prophet at his house; then getting upon a steamer, smoked down to Westminster: dined at a chop-house by the Bridge; and then went to Astley's: old Spedding being quite as wise about the Horsemanship as about Bacon and Shakespeare. We parted at midnight in Covent Garden; and this whole pleasant day has left a taste on my palate like one of Plato's lighter, easier, and more picturesque dialogues.

Here is a bit of his quaint common sense:

One of his Friends has sent me a Prospectus to subscribe to a portrait of Lord H. [Lord Hatherley] "on coming to be Chancellor"—in all his Robes—by Richmond; supposing I should be sorry to be left out of the list. There are Archbishops, Bishops, Judges, Q.C.'s, Laymen, Clergy, &c. And yet it seems to me an absurd thing. First, he may make a bad Chancellor, however good a Man and able a Lawyer. Secondly, he mayn't keep in office a year, however good Chancellor he may be. And thirdly, a Figure at Madame Tussaud's would do just as well as the best of Richmond's Portraits, when the Man is to be drowned in robes, Wigs, Seals, &c.

A tiny rule of conduct:

Don't you dislike the way some People have of saying perpetually "Thanks!" instead of "Thank you!" for anything you may say or do for them? It is like cutting Acknowledgment as short as possible. Yet well-bred People do it. One day I was telling George Crabbe of this: he said, "But in Italy they say 'Grazie.'" Yes: but "Grazie" is a sweet Italian, in three Syllables, and "Thanks" about one of the most hideous monosyllables, even in the English language.

Lastly, a man to man communication to Sir Frederick Pollock on his elevation to the Bench:

I congratulate you on having secured stedfast office and revenue that will put you at your ease, and end all trouble and disappointment. Henceforth you may sit on your bench and look down complacently on the mare magnum of wigs, all striving which shall rise topmost. And, as you say, you can now set about finding out what to do with much spare time; a thing hard to do at all times (how tiresome was a whole holiday at school!), but most hard to men who have for the greater part of their lives been accustomed to a regular day-full of work. And all must leave it at some time. I have been all my life apprentice to this heavy business of idleness; and am not yet master of any craft; the Gods are too just to suffer that I should.

So he rambles on from the thirties to the eighties of last century, ever putting aside what could not serve him, ever cherishing what could, and storing unsuspected honey for us all. How acceptable, how uncloying, is this repast!—nothing fiery, nothing toilsome—but the best and cleanest of each day, and then: "Now for a Pipe in my Garden—to think over all these little things."

Mr. Henley's New Poems.

Hawthorn and Lavender, with Other Verses. By W. E. Henley. (London: David Nutt. 6s.)

Some of these poems have appeared in this or that periodical. The prologue was included in Mr. Henley's little collection of patriotic verse. But, taking them integrally, this is their first appearance in volume form. They are not, throughout, all that we have learned to expect from Mr. Henley. Were we to compare it with the generality of new verse, we could not but rate it exceptionally high. It is not the competition of younger poets which Mr. Henley needs to dread: it is the competition of himself. We know exactly the best he has done, and resent instinctively the slightest deflection from it. Well, here there are such deflections—that is all which can be said; and we feel them in exact proportion to our love of the poet who caught and held us of old. He still catches and holds us in his moments, but the grip is not always compulsive. Yet now and again the old mastery thrills us, and we remember. It is good so to remember.

If you sift and select, there is a very sufficient number of such poems; and a conspicuous few which are equal to all but the greatest of Mr. Henley's previous work. When we have finally panned out these siftings, indeed, we are almost ashamed to have indulged in cavil at all. The

Digitized by Google

Hawthorn and Lavender section is the largest in the volume; and the best of this are either descriptive or profoundly personal. The weakest, as a rule, are those which are most song-like—lyric in the narrower sense. Once, indeed, Mr. Henley becomes actually Swinburnian—a sacrifice of individuality rare exceedingly with him. Yet here is a charming lyric:

Look down, dear eyes, look down,
Lest you betray her gladness.
Dear brows, do naught but frown,
Lest men miscall my madness.

Come not, dear hands, so near,
Lest all besides come nearer.
Dear heart, hold me less dear,
Lest time hold nothing dearer.

Keep me, dear lips, O keep
The last great word unspoken,
Lest other eyes go weep,
Lest other lives lie broken!

And of the descriptive lyrics we may quote a couple of stanzas, with the grimmer Henley touch in them:

The night dislimns, and breaks
Like snows slow thawn;
An evil wind awakes
On lea and lawn;
The low East wakes; and hark!
Out of the kindless dark,
A fierce, protesting lark,
High in the horror of dawn!

A shivering streak of light,
A scurry of rain:
Bleak day from bleaker night
Creeps pinched and fain;
The old gloom thins and dies,
And in the wretched skies
A new gloom, sick to rise,
Sprawls, like a thing in pain.

That has a fantastic and even fierce strength of imagination which we know in former days of Mr. Henley's work. If, indeed, the line about the lark be not too violent and resolved a wresting of natural fact to fit the mood of the soul. No charge of violence, however, can be brought against what is perhaps the most beautiful poem in the book.

There was no kiss that day?
No intimate Yea-and-Nay,
No sweets in hand, no tender, lingering touch?
None of those desperate, exquisite caresses,
So instant—O, so brief—and yet so much,
The thought of the swiftest lifts and blesses?
Nor any one of those great royal words,
Those sovran privacies of speech,
Frank as the call of April birds,
That, whispered, live a life of gold
Among the heart's still sainted memories,
And irk, and thrill, and ravish, and beseech,
Even when the dream of dreams in death's a-cold?
No, there was none of these,
Dear one, and yet—
O, eyes on eyes! O, voices breaking still,
For all the watchful will,
Into a kinder kindness than seemed due
From you to me, and me to you!
And that hot-eyed, close-throated, blind regret
Of woman and man baulked and debarred the blue!
No kiss—no kiss that day?
Nay, rather, though we seemed to wear the rue,
Sweet friend, how many and how goodly—say!

This nobly tender poem has a keen edge of expression, at once impassioned and restrained, such as Mr. Henley himself has rarely attained. Such lines as:

Nor any one of those great royal words,
Those sovran privacies of speech,
Frank as the call of April birds,

suggest Coventry Patmore, a poet with whom Mr. Henley has otherwise no spiritual troth-plight. Only a superficial reader could suppose derivation of one from the other. Nothing could be more dissimilar than their hand on that so-called "irregular" ode-metre which they use in common. It is notable that Mr. Henley generally rises to his best when he uses this metre. Very comprehensibly. Your poetaster thinks it an easy vehicle for "fine" lawlessness—more lawless than fine. Your true poet uses it only when he is touched ad ima præcordia—to the most intimate privacies of his heart. Of all metres, it is closest to the nerve itself, and only intense feeling can use it self-vindicatingly. Therefore, Mr. Henley uses it in a strongly personal poem:

In Shoreham River, hurrying down
To the live sea,
By working, marrying, breeding Shoreham Town,
Breaking the sunset's wistful and solemn dream,
An old, black rotter of a boat
Past service to the labouring, tumbling flote,
Lay stranded in mid-stream:
With a horrid list, a frightening lapse from the line,
That made me think of legs and a broken spine:
Soon, all too soon,
Ungainly and forlorn to lie
Full in the eye
Of the cynical, discomfortable moon
That, as I looked, stared from the fading sky,
A clown's face flour'd for work. And by and by
The wide-winged sunset wanned and waned;
The lean night-wind crept westward, chilling and sighing;
The poor old hulk remained,
Stuck helpless in mid-ebb. And I knew why—
Why, as I looked, my heart felt crying.
For, as I looked, the good green earth seemed dying—
Dying or dead;
And, as I looked at the old boat, I said:—
"Dear God, it's I!"

That is Mr. Henley at his sternest and strongest, every line like wrought ebony. Very fine is the Præludium, where he uses the same metre without rhyme in a most felicitously worded allegory between colour and music. But why does it end:

The wild, sweet-blooded, wonderful harlot, Spring?

Why, in the name of all that is wilful, must Spring—of all the months, poor Spring—be a harlot? Even the author of Dolores was content to leave her "the girl-child Spring." Why commit this defloration on the most virginal of seasons?

In the other section we have Prologues and other occasional verses, few lacking Mr. Henley's practised skill in this kind; and London Types—a series of Shakespearean sonnets, recalling the Hospital Poems. None quite equal to the best of these, all are very good, and some only short of his possible best. Take the Sandwich-Man:

An ill March noon; the flag-stones gray with dust;
An all-round east wind volleying straws and grit;
St. Martin's Steps, where every venomous gust
Lingers to buffet, or sneap, the passing cit;
And in the gutter, squelching a rotten boot,
Draped in a wrap that, modish ten year syne,
Partners, obscene with sweat and grease and soot,
A horrible hat, that once was just as fine;
The drunkard's mouth a-wash for something drinkable,
The drunkard's eye alert for casual toppers,
The drunkard's neck stooped to a lot scarce thinkable,
A living, crawling blazoning of Hot Coppers,
He trails his mildews towards a Kingdom-Come
Compact of sausage-and-mash and two-o'-rum!

You see him brutally distinct. And this section is the most level of the book. Over the book at large (in conclusion) is a mournfulness; as of a pirate going grimly down beneath the enemy's guns, with the black flag nailed to the mast—consoled by the remembrance that he has drunk, and kissed, and fought, before the end came. That despairing valiance leaves the reader in a saddened mood when the final leaf is turned.

Digitized by Google

A Pitiable Woman.

The History of Mary I., Queen of England. By J. M. Stone. (Sands & Co. 12s. 6d. net.)

Some day, perhaps, it will be possible to treat the Reformation period from the standpoint of detached, dispassionate history. The time is not yet; or, perhaps, strictly speaking, it is so no longer, since the renewed theological disputes of the last half-century have brought the religious ideals represented roughly enough by the terms "Catholic" and "Protestant" once more into active collision. Froude we know, and the anti-Froudians; and certainly the writer of the solid and interesting tome before us makes but little pretence at following the philosophic counsel of perfection and excluding bias from her work. To "restate the case for our first Queen Regnant," to "paint a picture vivid enough to supersede the old traditional portraits of Queen Mary," is avowedly her aim. And were it not avowed there would be no difficulty in inferring it from the studied depreciation throughout the book of all those whom Froude and other writers study as carefully to depict in more pleasing colours. Not that Miss Stone garbles documents or blinks facts: she is too good a scholar not to play the game. But it is the way of telling, the suggestion of motive, and the distribution of epithet that give a book its polemical tone, not the actual things told. And in the light of these the side which Miss Stone takes is unmistakable.

Judged, then, not as abstract history, but as a reasonably honest brief, this biography of the first and the saddest of English Queens Regnant is an excellent one. Miss Stone writes clearly and picturesquely, and has made good use of the vast stores of admirably calendared State Papers for the period with which she deals, and of the less known but equally valuable despatches of Spanish, French, and Venetian ambassadors at the court of Westminster. Nor need it be denied that the popular conception of one who, with even more justice than her cousin of Scotland, may be called "the Tragic Mary," is singularly inadequate to the truth. The precise extent of Mary's personal responsibility for the infamies committed in the name of religion which disgraced her reign is not a subject which we propose to discuss with Miss Stone; but that, "bloody" or not, she was not merely "bloody," but a pitiable woman, with one of the hardest of human fates to contend against, does not seem to us a truth that admits of dispute. A glance at the fine series of portaits brought together by Miss Stone, from the girlish portrait of Holbein to the regal portrait of Sir Antonio More, with its grim mouth and drawn temples, is enough to show how deeply during the years of persecution and bodily danger the iron entered into her soul. Circumstances and the indomitable Tudor will made Mary Tudor a bigot, but she was not by temper or training bitter or austere. On the contrary, she was born of true love, in the most splendid court of Europe, during the very heyday of the English Renascence. She was beautiful; or so the courtiers said. She was learned, as well-bred women then were, and soon after ceased, for three centuries, to be. Her love of jewels and of splendid clothes endured throughout her misfortune. The ornaments in all her portraits are superb. And she was gay, a fine performer upon the clavichord and the lute, ready even on her death-bed to laugh at the witty sallies of the epigrammatist, John Heywood. For the first twelve years of her life she was the spoilt darling of Henry and Henry's people. The "Princess of England" had her own household and retinue. When she was three years old, the Venetian ambassador Giustinian writes:

> Her hand alone is kissed by any duke or noble of the land, let his degree be what it may, nor does anyone see her without doffing his bonnet and making obeisance to her.

Already, it is true, her betrothals were a bewildering feature in Henry's rapidly shifting diplomacy. At the age of two she was pledged to the Dauphin of France. Then it was Charles V. of Spain, and then again the Dauphin's brother, the Duke of Orleans. But the emotional complications thus vicariously entered into passed lightly over the childish head. Mary came contentedly from her "gold pomanders," her "rosemary bushes with gold spangles," and other quaint sixteenth-century toys, to "welcome the French gentlemen with most goodly countenance, proper communication, and pleasant pastime in playing on the virginals," or to make them merry with "four gallons of Ypocras, with cherries, old apples, wafers, and strawberries," all, as her comptroller is careful to set down, at a cost of 35s. 6d. Her health and her exercise in "gardens, sweet and wholesome places, and walks," were matters of the most anxious solicitude. Ludovicus Vives taught her Latin, and she is described to Wolsey in 1526 as "as goodly a child as ever I have seen, and of as good gesture and countenance." Instinctively one thinks of her as swarthy, but as a matter of fact she had a wealth of flaxen hair.

The dark days began when high matters of State, as well as other more intimate considerations, moved the sensitive conscience of Henry towards the annulling of his marriage with Mary's Spanish mother. After the divorce she was separated from Katharine, moved into a mean house, and bidden to call herself "the Lady Mary," and no longer "the Princess of England." Anne Boleyn, who had the indecency to demand her defeated rival's Spanish christening cloak for the baptism of Elizabeth, pursued Mary with mean spite. Henry himself was well enough disposed towards his daughter, but Anne insisted on indignity after indignity being shown her, and wrote to instruct her governess that if the girl called herself Princess she must box her ears, comme a une mauldicte bastarde, telle quelle estoit. If the reports of the Spanish ambassador to Charles V. may be trusted, there was at one time a plot to get rid of Mary's pretensions once for all by poison. She seems herself, following here the example set her by Katharine of Arragon, to have behaved with admirable dignity. It was not until the advent of Jane Seymour, who was kindly to her, opened up a possibility of return into Henry's favour that, at the instigation of her Spanish advisers, she made what Miss Stone calls "the great renunciation," and consented to sign, at the dictation of Cromwell, documents which practically recognised her own illegitimacy. She came back to Court when the expectation of a boy heir made both her own position and Elizabeth's of less importance. The kindly queen presented her to her father as "Your chefest jewell of England," and made her stand godmother to the little Edward. Having surrendered her claims she was allowed to live a peaceful and studious life for the rest of Henry's reign, broken only by further negotiations for her marriage, and by one moment of terrible alarm lest she should be considered to be implicated in the plots of the Countess of Salisbury and Reginald Pole. She translated Erasmus, did what she could for Elizabeth, who, in her turn, found herself with "neither gown nor kirtle, nor petticoat, nor linen for smocks, nor kerchiefs, rails, body-stychets, handkerchiefs, mufflers nor begens," and enjoyed, for her virtues and her beauty, an immense popularity with the English folk. As a contemporary French poem has it:

> "Il n'y a cueur si triste qui ne rye
> En attendant la princesse Marie."

Digitized by Google

These halcyon years, however, were only an interlude in the tragic tale of her life. Edward was fond of her, and when she visited him "called for some jewel to present her, and complained that they gave him no better to give her." Nevertheless, he told her that she ought to give up "foreign dances and merriments, which do not become a Christian princess." And Edward's Protestant advisers made a dead set at her religion. They forbade her to hear Mass, but did not persist when they found her obstinate, and contented themselves with intriguing against her succession. Nevertheless, a wave of popular feeling placed Mary on the throne, and then quickly transferred itself, under the influence of the Smithfield fires and the hated Spanish marriage, to Elizabeth, whom Mary in her turn persecuted, although she had formerly befriended her, partly out of religious intolerance, partly out of irreconcilable antipathy between the direct and the subtle natures, partly out of an ineradicable feeling that the very existence of the "bastard" was an insult to the memory of the mother whom her mother had supplanted.

What finally broke Mary down, body and mind, was the childless issue of her marriage with a husband eleven years younger than herself, and his consequent prompt desertion of her. No doubt she fell into a melancholy. But there is a touch of exaggeration in Froude's account of her hysterical condition, which he considers to have amounted to insanity. Miss Stone quotes a more sober description from the contemporary biography of the Queen's intimate friend, Jane Dormer:

> Being come to London, the first that she asked for was Jane Dormer, who met her at the stairfoot, and told her that she was reasonably well. The Queen answered, "So am not I," being about the end of August, 1558. So took her chamber and never came abroad again. . . . Her sickness was such as made the whole realm to mourn, yet passed by her with most Christian patience. She comforted those of them that grieved about her. She told them what good dreams she had, seeing many little children, like angels, play before her, singing pleasing notes, giving her more than earthly comfort; and thus persuaded all ever to have the holy fear of God before their eyes, which would free them from all evil, and be a curb to all temptations. She asked them to think that whatsoever came to them was by God's permission; and ever to have confidence, that He would in mercy turn all to the best."

This has its pathetic note, and the whole narrative in which it occurs proves, at all events, that "Bloody" Mary had the gift of awaking, and perhaps of deserving, sympathies. If Miss Stone is content to have proved this, then her labour has not been in vain.

Colonial Secretary: Old Style.

Life of the Right Hon. Sir William Molesworth, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. By Mrs. Fawcett, LL.D. (Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d. net.)

Sir William Molesworth entered Parliament for East Cornwall in 1832, when he was twenty-two years of age. He was forty-five when he took office as Secretary of State for the Colonies in the Government of his old enemy, Lord Palmerston; and he died that same year—1855. That is nearly half a century ago, and yet this biography, belated in date, is one of the most actual, current, and true-to-time publications of the moment. For it was this Sir William Molesworth, philosophic Radical, friend of Mill, editor of Hobbes, who, in 1851—within one year, be it remembered, of Mr. Disraeli's dictum, "These wretched Colonies will all be independent in a few years, and are a millstone round our necks"—it was Sir William Molesworth who declared:

> Every war [with an external foe] is necessarily an Imperial war. . . . In certain cases it would not be unreasonable to expect that the colonies should assist the Empire both with troops and with money, and I feel convinced that if the colonies were governed as they ought to be they would gladly come to the aid of the Mother Country in any just and necessary war.

That prophecy has had at least its partial fulfilment to-day, and Molesworth may be said to have devoted his life to the principle of "responsible government" in the Colonies—in other words, to government, not by force, but by consent. That principle triumphs generally to-day except in South Africa, and its failure there is not any blot on Molesworth's vision; for, from first to last, he was opposed to our territorial expansion there, and minimised the value of the Cape as a naval station:

> "I hold it," he said, "to be quite contrary to the true policy of Great Britain to take military possession of large islands or vast portions of continents. It is utterly absurd for an essentially naval power to attempt the military defence of extensive coasts or long lines of military frontier."

Already Kaffir wars taught, he thought, that lesson; and the cost of them, in his opinion, approached yearly the total sum of some £850,000—all that was needed to maintain the eight salient stations—the only sentinels he held to be necessary to our Empire, beginning with Gibraltar and ending with Singapore. Consequently, he was opposed to the policy of Sir Harry Smith, which has meant Ladysmith to-day; and was a member of the Administration which ceded self-government to the Orange Free State. He may have been all wrong, as Mrs. Fawcett, of course, thinks he was; or all right, as Mr. Herbert Spencer, on this text, could set forth; but, at least he was far-seeing with a foresight never possible of appreciation until to-day. People who complain of the long delay in the publication of the Beaconsfield Memoirs may take heart. By the time they appear they may be made by events, even as this long-delayed book now is, the most topical of volumes.

Though Molesworth's life was really given over to his devotion to the Colonies and their freedom, he did a good deal more that well deserves a record. He was as proud as his one-time colleague, Mr. Gladstone, of the Scottish part of him. It came to Molesworth through his mother's family, a Hume, the family also of David. At Cambridge, like Charles Darwin and the Laureate, he was of those to whom the University was largely alien.

> You do profess to teach
> And teach us nothing, feeding not the heart, wrote Tennyson, while the young Cornish baronet was saying to his mother, of his pastors and masters: "They are not gentlemen. If I was to remain at St. John's I should without doubt be miserable." A challenge to his college tutor, Henry Barnard, led to his expulsion, but the duel was fought a year later. Another duel, which did not get so far as a harmless exchange of shots, was arranged for with Sir Hudson Lowe, who did not like Molesworth's allusion to him in the House of Commons as "the jailer of St. Helena," but who was pacified by the explanation that it referred to the office, not the man. Almost the first emphatic welcome of Tennyson came, as everyone knows, from a most unexpected critic—John Stuart Mill—but the cheque for £4,000 which brought the London Review within Mill's sphere of influence was that of Molesworth, one of whose comfortable thoughts was that he had never been hampered in any scheme of his by a want of means. A great friendship with Mrs. Grote resulted in a good deal of letter-writing on the part of Mrs. Grote; but when Sir William married a widow, whose family name did not figure in the Red Book and who had even been on the stage before her first marriage with Mr. Temple West, Mrs. Grote's friendship could not bear the strain. The subsequent silence of Mrs. Fawcett about Andalusia, Lady Molesworth, might convey to some readers an ominous impression, which would, we believe, be wholly unjust. Against Sir William, at any rate, no one could bring the charge that his theory and practice did not tally. When he took office he did so stipulating that he should support the ballot—then a quite disgraceful word in the mouth of a man of honour. If he supported a drastic scheme of national education he did so with full regard to the rights of Roman Catholics and Jews; and his support of the Maynooth grant, and any logical extension of it, was as much a stumbling block between himself and some of his political associates as the University question now is between Mr. Balfour and the bulk of his party. By a little irony of political life did this true Liberal find himself in consequence opposed at Southwark, not by a Tory only, but by Edward Miall as a second Liberal candidate. The editor (at vast expense) of Hobbes was met with cries of "No 'Obbes," a rumour having gone through the ranks that Hobbes was certainly an Erastian—which somehow got popularly translated into an infidel. On the day before the election, when the candidates met on the hustings, Sir William turned to the opponent from his own camp:

Digitized by Google

> "You," he said, "have denounced me as the editor of the works of Hobbes of Malmesbury. Electors, I am proud of that fact. I will rest upon it a claim to your support, in opposition to the claim of Mr. Miall. He is the editor of the Nonconformist. I am the editor of Hobbes. The works of Hobbes will last more centuries than the Nonconformist will last days. They will be read, age after age, by the studious among the millions of our race who will people the two Americas and the islands of the Southern Ocean, and who will wonder at that ignorant and bigoted herd who dared to assail so great a master of thought and language. As one of that herd, it is your only chance, Mr. Miall, of escaping oblivion."

There is a whole Edinburgh Review article of it, with a great deal thrown in about Gibbon, Newton, Descartes, Copernicus, and Bacon, where now we should only have an allusion to the domestic life of Mr. Lobb or Mr. Benn. The voters, too, played up to the great names, for next day Molesworth was at the head of the poll with two thousand votes, and Miall at the bottom with a sixth of the number. Not always pedantic was Sir William's front in debate. Even in directness we do not now, amid the mass of Parliamentary talk, get the equal of the sentences—too long, however, to quote in full—in which Sir William characterised Lord Derby, "the Rupert of Debate, zealous, chivalrous, without a particle of statesmanship":

> For six years he misgoverned the colonies; there is scarcely a colonial grievance which may not be traced to his mismanagement. He produced a rebellion in Canada; he sowed the seeds of our costly wars in South Africa; he caused the hideous demoralisation of Van Diemen's Land, for he was wrong-headed, ignorant, rash; a Free Trader in towns, a Protectionist in counties; pro-Maynooth in Ireland, anti-Maynooth in England and Scotland; saying one thing one day, retracting it the next, repeating it the third, equivocating about it the fourth; a political jockey, riding a losing horse, hoping to win by a cross; a thimble-rigger, gammoning clowns with the pea of Protection which will never be found under any one of his thimbles; a truckler with bigotry he means to betray. . .

and so on through phrase after phrase, the cogency of which, from his own standpoint, is undeniable to any one familiar with the party politics of the day. Just one feather in the cap of that Colonial Secretary of the old school should be named. In the Cabinet of Lord Aberdeen he was the only member who supported the Premier's reluctance to enter on the Crimean War, which, if it was not purposeless, is at least now known to have been useless. Cobden and the so-called "Pro-Russians" of that day, when they saw that Molesworth—the war once declared—advocated its vigorous prosecution, naturally but perversely attacked the good faith of a man who, taking him all through his career, might be named as the most consistent politician of the nineteenth century. He died when he was only forty-five; and of him it may certainly be declared that his death did that rare thing in the subsequent history of a country—it made a difference.

Feeble-Smart.

Society Snapshots. By Cotsford Dick. (Allen. 6s.)

This is a painful and tedious book; we put that at the beginning because it is the dominant impression left upon us by a laborious perusal of fifty-six dialogues reprinted from the World, with a portrait of the author. Times have changed since Mr. Dick contributed blameless trifles to the Girls' Own Paper twenty years ago. His pen now runs to this sort of thing:

> The Guide. How many parents have you got?
> The Child. Two—at present.
> The Guide. What do you signify by the words "at present"?
> The Child. The possibility that Papa and Mamma may be divorced, and each of them marry again, in which case I should have four.
> The Guide. What is divorce?
> The Child. The last satisfaction that a husband and wife, who have become mutually tired of one another, can afford themselves.
> The Guide. Why should you imagine such a crisis should occur in the lives of your parents?
> The Child. From the way they go on.
> The Guide. What is Papa?
> The Child. The only gentleman we know who does not seem to get on with Mamma.
> The Guide. What is Mamma?
> The Child. One of the very few ladies of our acquaintance who does not appear to wish to kiss Papa.
> The Guide. What is your idea of Home?
> The Child. The place where Papa and Mamma never are—together.

One almost feels that a machine might be constructed which, once started, would continue that dialogue ad infinitum. It cannot be called clever; nor do we think it is worthy of the name of satire. It is facile and feeble smartness. His facility is the prime cause of Mr. Dick's tedium; he is so sweetly content with the little joke, the trifling quip, the first device that comes to hand. An old trick will serve his turn as well as a new one; he brightens it with a rub on his sleeve,—and there you are! Con this very imperfect list of Mr. Dick's characters, and you may reconstruct the dialogues for yourself:

Lady Angostura O'Bitters	Bertie de Blasé
Lady Sniffington	Sir Ananias
Mrs. Oldcat	Mr. Snobbington
Mrs. Awdrey-Tawdrey	Lord George Greencloth
Lady Sapphira	Mr. Eglantine Montague
Lady Virginia Castaway	Marchese Marina Parada
Miss Flotsam	Sir Startin Price
Lady Baba	Captain Sellingplate
Mrs. Blunderbury	Jack Hurlingham
Lady de Corum	Sir Andrew Merryman

Here are twenty out of perhaps a hundred, and they all do the same performance—they all disclose the naïve delight of Mr. Dick in the "smart world" which he portrays in its cynicism, its greediness, its vice, its ignorance, its nastiness, its idleness, and its absolutely inane silliness. He does not lash it, he tickles it with a sympathetic tickle, and because it likes to be tickled. Possibly these monotonous inventions may induce cachinnation in the select circles which devote themselves to smart restaurants, smart hotels, smart racecourses, smart casinos, smart divorce-courts, smart clubs, smart slang, smart milliners, smart tailors, and smart filles de joie; we do not know, and the point is not of importance. What is important is the mere fact of the existence of any such class, brainless, vicious, and unscrupulous, as Mr. Dick pictures in this book.

Digitized by Google

The Way We Think.

The Mental Functions of the Brain. By Bernard Hollander, M.D., &c. (Grant Richards. 21s. net.)

The purpose of this book is well expressed by its subsidiary title, "The Revival of Phrenology." Dr. Hollander has spent, he tells us, some fifteen years in the collection of cases where some mental affection appears to correspond to a specified lesion of the cortex of the brain, and from these he thinks he is able to map out those areas of the cortex which are the seats of particular passions and proclivities. Moreover, he has studied the works of Gall, the father of the popular system—so far as it can be called a system—which may be compendiously described as "bumps," and finds that his own conclusions correspond with those of the Viennese physician, who flourished, it may be noted, during the opening years of last century. He accordingly writes an elaborate work, in which the cases he has collected are arranged in due order, quotes all the opinions of celebrated scientists which can be twisted into an approval of all or any of the so-called principles of phrenology, and runs amuck among those which cannot. Mr. Herbert Spencer, Dr. Maudsley, and Dr. Bastian alike fall under his condemnation, the chief accusation against them being that they cannot have read "Gall's great work," because they do not quote from it; while an unnamed gold medallist is charged with ignorance of science, recklessness, and "sheer impudence." This Dr. Hollander calls vindicating Gall's memory.

One would have more confidence in the case that Dr. Hollander puts forward did he not commit the very fault with which he charges his supposed opponents, and ignore that which he has to answer. According to the discoveries of Ramon y Cajal and others, whose names we look for in vain in these pages, the human brain is not so much a generator of mental phenomena as their recipient and transformer. The true originator of mental action is, on the same authority, the nerves, which receive sensations from the outer world and transmit them to the cells of the cortex, whence they carry back a return message in the shape of motor impulses. It is even thought that the seat of this transformation can be identified within the brain cell as the "neuron," a little body which, according to this hypothesis, erects itself and enters into function only when stirred up by a message from the sensory nerves. Hence man, as has been finely said by M. Maurice de Fleury, is a being afloat in an ocean of vibrations, and these vibrations form all we know of the world. It is not for us to decide whether this theory is true or false, but if it be true it is evident that we must look for the cause of natural or acquired mental proclivities, not in the shape of his skull or the bumps on it, but rather in the conformation of his nervous system, and, if they play the part allotted to them, of his neurons. We think Dr. Hollander would have done better—if, as we gather, he thinks otherwise—to examine and dispose of Señor Ramon's theory rather than to set up, as it were, behind its back, one which most men of science have confessedly rejected as exploded.

It is seldom, however, that any thoughtful book can be unreservedly condemned, and in one point he makes Dr. Hollander has our heartiest approval. This is the general neglect of what he calls "mental science," by which he evidently means the diagnosis and cure of mental diseases, by the medical men to whom the cure of those afflicted by them is committed. As everyone knows who has anything to do with these saddest of cases, a lunatic asylum, whether public or private, is but a sort of model boarding-house where, while everything possible is done for the physical health and comfort of the inmates, no attempt whatever is made to ascertain or treat the malady which has led to their incarceration. This is a grave fault, and although it is impossible at present to suggest a remedy, yet a first step thereto is perhaps made when public attention is called to it. By so doing, Dr. Hollander has done the State some service.

Other New Books.

V.R.I. Queen Victoria, Her Life and Reign. By the Marquis of Lorne. (Harpers.)

The present Duke of Argyll has probably done the best he could with what (we suppose) must be considered the official life of the late Queen. So quiet and domestic a personal career does not really lend itself to biography, her true biography being the events of her long reign. The book is well illustrated, and the home-like and homely incidents of that womanly career set forth with care and knowledge. The Duke shows his sportsman's nature by accurately noting even the "bags" made when the Queen visited the Duke of Buckingham, and the shots made by the great Duke of Wellington. He has drawn much on Sir Theodore Martin's record of the Queen's letters, and these are among the most interesting parts of a biography which is sure of popularity, and, compared with other "Lives" of the Queen, deserves it. For he has achieved what, with such quiet materials, is certainly the feat of holding the reader's attention, and leaving the distinct impression of a personality, not a crowned shadow.

Ruskin and the English Lakes. By the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley. (J. MacLehose and Sons. 5s. net.)

Ruskin's early journey to the English Lakes, in company with his father, has been told in his own words. He was five years old when he experienced what he calls "the creation of the world for me in Friars' Crag, Derwentwater." When he was seven he went again; and again when, at the ripe age of eleven, he was not only a careful observer, but also a recorder. A poem in four books described the impressions of this youngest recruit to the Lake School of poets. True to those early impressions, he made his home at Coniston when the shades gathered in, and Mr. Rawnsley supplies a little talk of his attitude to the villagers and theirs towards him. "How he loved those village children!" exclaims Mr. Rawnsley: translating, as it were, Ruskin's own sentence in Fors: "Here in Coniston it is almost impossible to meet a child whom it is not a real sorrow again to lose sight of." At Keswick is the School of Industrial Arts, and among the illustrations given is a view of St. George's Cottage at Crosthwaite, with Miss Twelves seated at her spinning-wheel below the sign-board, "The Ruskin Linen Industry." One hopes that these flourish. But it is not the way of Mr. Rawnsley to be very precise or definite about anything; not even about his own visits to Brantwood. There is an allusion to the Master "in his later time, burdened with sadness and imagining woe unutterable, and almost beyond bearing for anguish, by the thought of a life wasted and work useless and undone." Then comes an allusion to "a later visit, when I found him in absolute serenity of unclouded heart, . . . gazing with love and wonder upon the bouquet of wild flowers just placed before him." "I never went to Brantwood again," writes Mr. Rawnsley, but dates to give value and proportion to the declaration are missing. The little book cannot be said to add to Ruskin and any single item worth preserving; but it takes you over old ground with an agreeable, if not very salient, guide.

Digitized by Google

John Howard. By Edgar C. S. Gibson. (Methuen & Co.)

THERE are some people who say that discipline in prisons has suffered fatal blows—as have also the warders—since magic-lantern slides of Jerusalem have been exhibited by the well-intentioned on Christmas night. No cynic, however, will be found to say that the work which John Howard performed was superfluous. Cells were still of dimensions that suffocated; vermin was not "inspected"; gaol fever was deadly and prevalent; and torture of a more direct sort was still enforced. Yet for any of the makings of a hero you look in vain to Howard. The son of a London upholsterer, he was born in Hackney, and inherited a competence. At twenty-four, seeking comfort, and finding it in certain lodgings, he married his landlady, who was fifty. After her death he married again, but lost his wife when was born that son about whom a mysterious interest gathers. Motherless, he was sternly treated by his father, who put him through disciplines which may or may not have had something to do with his ultimate madness and death. On the other hand, Howard was, before his days of Prison Visiting, "a sanitary reformer and an educationalist, when neither sanitary reform nor education were (sic) of much account." Moreover, he "also visited the poor, sat down in their cottages, and generally ate an apple while he talked with them." Another sign of predestination was that "he never failed to speak kindly to schoolboys, and to give each of them a halfpenny, if he had enough in his pockets to supply them, invariably concluding his advice by telling them to be good children, and to wash their hands and faces." Yet, we are told, "he was by no means deficient in humour." We are not sure that of his biographers in general so much can be said. Be that as it may in Mr. Gibson's case, there is nothing in his little compilation to call for very serious remark.

Before I Forget. By Albert Chevalier. (Fisher Unwin. 16s.)

WHY a comedian, still in active service, whose delicate impersonations of rose-tinted coster life have caught the town, should therefore be encouraged to put his recollections of audiences and his comments upon life into a sixteen-shilling book is a problem which we do not propose to answer here. It concerns us merely to say that public interest in actors, singers, and "artistes" now seems to demand such records; to deplore this state of things; and to pass on to criticism. Briefly, Mr. Chevalier has not written a good book. This is the veriest word-spinning, egotistical, commonplace, and the smallest beer. But Mr. Chevalier need not worry himself in the least; because the value of his very charming histrionic talent is in nowise diminished by his failure as an autobiographer. We, ourselves, who sit in judgment, would, for example, cut the sorriest figure in "The Coster's Serenade"—if that confession is any balm to him. Our advice would be, the next time the desire to write a book comes upon him, and every time: Write instead another song as good as "Mafeking Night." But do not print it. There are some songs which never ought to be printed, and Mr. Chevalier's stand almost first. When he sings them they are superb, persuasive, full of light and shade and humorous character. In print they are doggerel.

Catalogue of Pictures at Locko Park. By Jean Paul Richter. (Bemrose. 12s. 6d.)

"BEING the owner of a fine collection of pictures, Mr. Drury-Lowe, of Locko Park, Derbyshire, has felt it incumbent on himself to render it accessible to the European art world. He has therefore published a catalogue raisonné, prepared by Dr. Jean Paul Richter." So runs the prospectus of this handsome volume; and thus, it would be churlish to criticise. The dozen or so plates sandwiched in between Dr. Richter's notes show that Mr. Drury-Lowe possesses several notable pieces; the Ghirlandajo (No. 67) is especially fine. Dr. Richter himself, though learned, is something of a Dryasdust; but he has emerged with much adroitness out of a rather ticklish tussle with a good deal that is second-rate. The Locko Park collection is not exactly exciting. There are 284 pieces on the list, and Ghirlandajos are few and far between. The Andrea del Sarto drawing, however, is a beauty.

James Flaunty. By Jack B. Yeats. (Mathews. 1s.)

THIS is the first of Mr. Jack B. Yeats's "plays in the old manner," published by Mr. Elkin Mathews, "nigh the Albany," also in the old manner, the impulse to write and issue which having, we gather, been found in Stevenson's essay on "A Penny Plain and Twopence Coloured." But Mr. Yeats, though he may have the best intentions in the world, is not, we fear, the man. James Flaunty; or, The Terror of the Western Seas, if worth doing at all (which we greatly doubt), was worth doing better than this; more richly, with more juice, more flavour, more of the "old manner," in fact. But we are sceptical as to any worthy result being reached by a self-conscious literary imitative purpose such as Mr. Yeats's. To recover the old art one must have the old artlessness.

Sunshine and Surf. A Year's Wanderings in the South Seas. By Douglas B. Hall and Lord Albert Osborne. (Adam & Charles Black.)

THESE two gentlemen are the most recent of the globe-trotters who have been stirred up, doubtless, by the example of Lord Pembroke and Dr. Kingsley, to visit the South Seas and to write a book about them. Unlike their predecessors, they made the tour in coasting steamers, and the moral of their experiences seems to be that if you want to see the modern Paphos and her sister islands you should do so in your own yacht. On shore, however, they had many delightful adventures, which are here recorded in a very hearty and breezy fashion; while in their comments on fellow-passengers, shipmasters, and consuls, the authors show an almost royal indifference to the law of libel. The volume is worth possessing, if only for the many portraits of native beauties it contains.

The World's History: a Study of Man's Record. Edited by H. F. Helmholtz. (Heinemann. 15s. net.)

ANY review of the truly colossal work of which we have here the first volume must be deferred till the completion is before us. It suffices now to notice the inception of the English version, under the auspices of Mr. James Bryce, who contributes an exposition of the plan of the history, and "the whole philosophy of a world's history," as the publisher's note puts it. Only a German, one thinks, could have conceived such a design; and only the principle of co-operation, which has given us such works as the Dictionary of National Biography and the New English Dictionary, could have carried it through on the scale of specialisation exemplified in the present volume. This volume, beginning with Man in general and his prehistoric remains, deals chiefly with the American continent; ending, however, with a chapter on the Pacific Ocean. The specialist knowledge is very thorough; and not the least interesting feature is the plates illustrating the antiquities of Central America. The civilisation of the old Mexican table-land was inspired mainly by that strange people the Mayas, whose cities yet stand in ruins among the Central American forests. To the casual eye, their architecture (or that they inspired), as here shown, has a curious resemblance to Assyrian remains. The Maya bas-relief here figured has a still stronger Assyrian character; it is like a decadent or debased Assyrian relief. A Zapothec MS. (and Zapothec civilisation was drawn from Maya civilisation) shows the well-known symbol of the Winged Disc or Egg, so prominent in Egypt, Assyria, and all the early Asiatic lands. But, again, the type of it is rather like that of Assyria than of Egypt. The plate of the Ilascalans and Spaniards fighting as allies is another very interesting illustration, likewise from native sources. We shall look with expectation for the completion of the work.

Digitized by Google

The season has produced no handsomer gift book than the Century Company's new edition of Dr. W. M. Sloane's monumental Life of Napoleon Bonaparte. These four massive volumes, with their coloured illustrations, beautifully printed text, and neat covers, on which the imperial "N." is stamped in gold within a scrolled border, are, however, not to be confused with the ordinary gift book of ephemeral interest. They form a Napoleonic gallery and history of the greatest value. Text and illustrations are alike fascinating.

Few civilians can realise what a regiment really means to its officers and to the best men in the ranks. Visibly, it is but a sort of cocoon spun out of old flags, plate, pictures, little customs of bugle and mess, a goat, and a glorious confused murmur of tradition. But if anyone wishes to know more of the inner life of a British regiment than can be thus indicated he cannot do better than sit down to a good square meal on Colonel Henry Blackburne Hamilton's Historical Record of the 14th (King's) Hussars, from 1715 to 1900. The volume is issued with all the pomp and circumstance of war by Messrs. Longmans. It is dedicated to the King, and is one long chronicle and picture-gallery of the movements of the 14th. Many illustrations, some beautifully coloured, enrich the book. Colonel Hamilton reminds us that his is the regiment immortalised by Lever in Charles O'Malley, and that at the close of the Peninsular War it had the reputation of being the finest light cavalry regiment in the British Army. The record leaves the 14th where they now are—in South Africa.

Scholarship and beauty are united in the "Arthurian Romances" which Mr. Nutt is issuing in pocket volumes at 2s. net. The latest is a rendering by Miss Jessie L. Weston of Morien, a metrical romance found only in the mediæval Dutch version of the Lancelot, where it occupies upwards of five thousand lines. Miss Weston does not claim for this romance the literary charm possessed by others in her series, but she points out that none of the adventures it relates are preserved in any English text.

The new volume in Mr. Heinemann's "Century of French Romance" contains the Colomba and Carmen of Prosper Mérimée. Mr. Arthur Symons writes a discriminating introduction from which it would be easy to quote striking sentences. He says: "An incident told by Mérimée at his best gathers about it something of the gravity of history, the composed way in which it is told helping to give it the equivalent of remoteness, allowing it not merely to be, but, what is more difficult, to seem, classic in its own time."

Fiction.

Tales of a Dying Race. By Alfred A. Grace. (Chatto. 6s.)

According to the last census, the native race, or Maories, of New Zealand, in spite of the civilising energies of the white man in their midst, have turned back upon their way to extinction, and are now increasing. Nevertheless, when Mr. Grace called his book Tales of a Dying Race, he chose an excellent title and spoke the poetic truth. The old Maori—Arcadian and splendid fighting man—is dying indeed: the modern one, who has assimilated the white man's sins, and become immune to his sicknesses, and learned to live beneath his milder laws, is, for all purposes of life and literature, a new creation. In these stories Mr. Grace has done for the New Zealand that is passing away very much what Mr. Bret Harte did for California, and what Mr. Kipling did for the India that abides. That is to say, he has done exceedingly well. If he has not the pathos of Roaring Camp nor the poignancy of Without Benefit of Clergy, he has maybe a note of his own that is all the truer for its avoidance of emotional extremes. He gives us the spoiled and unspoiled savage, tender and ruthless; confiding, and weltering in bloody superstitions; treacherous, and sportsmanlike. There is the meeting of civilised and savage, and the truth told, bluntly, freshly and vigorously, of what comes of the meeting, towards the undoing—and, much seldomer, towards the uplifting—of the white man and the brown. He has a good deal to say of the bringing of the Gospel to the heathen, and is not much enamoured of the preacher: if he errs in this on the side of uncharitableness, it is to be noted that he errs in good company.

These stories are collected from various Australasian papers—chiefly from the Sydney Bulletin, in which they first appeared. They were well worth re-publishing: it will surprise most English readers to learn that one can rarely open the Bulletin without finding at least one sketch or story with much of the force and vigour of these tales. In such as these, Australasians are preparing the way for their greater artist, their "stayer" in fiction, who will one day give us something deep and comprehensive of the lives of men as they are lived out there. Great work Tales of a Dying Race is not; but it is of the direct and genuine sort from which great work may grow at any time.

The Making of a Marchioness. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

Mrs. Burnett has not done herself justice in this book. Melodrama is all very well in its own place; but out of its place—that is, in a novel—it demands very special treatment. Excellent work has been done before now by placing real human characters in melodramatic situations; or, less often and with greater skill, by placing melodramatic characters in real human situations. Dickens did the former over and over again; Mr. Meredith has occasionally, and very happily, done the latter. Now, the author of The Making of a Marchioness has done neither. She has, quite frankly, placed melodramatic people in melodramatic situations, and the result, as a novel, is not convincing. We have a poor, hard-working, virtuous, and rather stupid heroine—it is impossible, of course, in a melodrama, to ally virtue with the smallest smattering of brains—and we have a rich, handsome, virtuous, and rather stupid hero, who is, naturally, a Marquis, and marries the heroine. We have come across that taciturn but noble and deeply-feeling Englishman so often that we really begin to think he must exist. Further, as all true melodrama demands, we have the villain, who would have succeeded to the title if the Marquis had not married again, and the villain's wife, who is dark and gipsy-like, and clenches her thin hands at every opportunity; and in the background is the smart lady who says the smart things. It is scarcely necessary to mention that the comic relief is maintained in the usual way by the faithful serving-maid and the faithful serving-maid's mother. Every one of these people no doubt exists in a world that is made up of all sorts, just as the plots, which are laid against the life of the Marchioness, might with perfect possibility be laid against the life of any real Marchioness who is in the way; but—and this is the point—it is the novelist's business to select; and Mrs. Burnett has selected neither characters nor incidents fairly. The complexity of life, which the novelist, unlike the playwright, has every opportunity of presenting, is scarcely suggested in The Making of a Marchioness; and the author gives away her point of view in the sentence, "The scene between the three was far too subtle to be of the least use upon the stage, but it was a good scene, nevertheless." Now, that unwritten scene would probably have done for the book what all the unconvincing incidents in it have failed in doing.

Digitized by Google

Perhaps it is her descent to melodrama that has made Mrs. Burnett unusually careless of her style. "Appalling" is a good word, but is scarcely applicable to a change of fashion in skirts (page 1). "Honest drops" of tears, (page 270) may be an Elizabethan construction, but is scarcely justifiable on that account; nor do we think even Shakespeare would approve of quite so frequent a use of "if" without the subjunctive mood. And the comparative "not as" is simply incorrect. We are also a little puzzled to know how the same woman could have resembled "some nice animal in the Zoo" (page 270), a "Venus of Milo" in "a modern Royal Academy way" (page 273), and "a sort of clean, healthy, Mid-Victorian angel" (page 280).

The End of an Epoch. By A. Lincoln Green. (Blackwood. 6s.)

It has been observed that troubles never come singly. But one would have imagined that cosmic catastrophes would come singly. It is not so, however. A few weeks ago we reviewed Mr. M. P. Shiel's The Purple Cloud, which describes the annihilation of the human race, save two people, by the agency of a noxious vapour. The hero and narrator of this tale was, for obvious reasons, named Adam. And now comes another world-destruction (by the agency of an epidemic), with another hero-narrator called Adam, who, at the close of his recital is, like the other Adam, to begin the human race afresh, in company with the beloved of his heart. The coincidence is very curious, and a detailed description of the incidents in the two books would only intensify its curiousness. We shall do well to say that we do not think for a moment that Mr. Green is a plagiarist; we have no doubt that his book was completed before Mr. Shiel's was published. It is a pity that he is second in this catastrophic field, because Mr. Shiel could more easily have afforded to come second. Mr. Green's book, if not without merit, falls flat after the amazing verve of Mr. Shiel's. His tale is too plainly concocted. For instance, immediately Evelyn Morpeth comes on the scene, "running like a fawn," we know that she is the destined maid; we have a perfect confidence that she will supervene at the close in order that humanity may continue.

Mr. Green possesses a copious lack of humour. Were it otherwise, he would not have preserved from slaughter a Dean, whose function it is to marry Adam and Evelyn and then expire. The notion of avoiding immorality by the regularisation of this union according to the rites of the Anglican Church is really ineffable. But perhaps Mr. Green's humour is so profound that we have not fathomed it. If he aimed at a ferocious satire, he has, indeed, achieved it.

He writes clearly and painstakingly, and can describe a big event with some effectiveness.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

The Real World. By R. Herrick.

A well-told modern American novel. The heroine is the daughter of an Ohio manufacturer, and the plot is developed through the story of the hero's life. "Jack Pemberton never forgot those wonderful hours on the sea-washed rocks, just above the insistent grumble of the ocean. The girl—woman, rather—told him the story of her drifting life, from Zenobia, Ohio, and New York to Pau and Trouville and Paris, Dresden, Rome, and London. (Macmillan. 6s.)

Ray Farley. By J. Moffat and E. Druce.

A comedy of country life. The story, which looks as if it had been written in high spirits, has illustrations by Mr. Hugh Thomson. It is described as "a portion of the life story of Mr. Ray Farley, scholar and millionaire, with which is incorporated a full and graphic account of the entertaining adventures of Mr. Nicholas Crisp and Mr. Hiram Basin." (Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

Back to Lilac Land. By ——.

A theatrical novel. The opening scene is at the Raydon Club, where a Mr. Ardenne, a dramatic author, is about to lunch with a Mr. Flood, an actor. "Come and wash your hands," said Mr. F., "and then we will lunch. It's disgustingly hot for the beginning of June." The dedication is to the author of The Column. ". . . . Your own beautiful book is a most honoured guest of my library, and I wish I had something better to offer you than this." (Greening. 6s.)

The Stone of Dunalter. By William Robertson.

A tale of the '45, with picture. The story owes its origin, says the author, who writes M.D., D.P.H. after his name, to the interesting history of the Clach na Brataich, or Stone of the Standard of the Strowan Clan. A famous chief of the Robertson Clan discovered the stone when he pulled up the standard pole on the eve of the battle of Bannockburn. The Stone is not a myth, for it has been passed from one chief to another, and is now in the safe keeping of the present head of the clan. (Paisley: Alex. Gardner.)

The Cigarette Smoker. By C. Ranger Gull.

This story of 150 odd pages treats of "the vice of inordinate cigarette smoking." Mr. Gull takes himself and his subject seriously. In the preface he remarks: "The doctors and other persons connected with the art of healing who have helped me in writing this book are fully at one with me in the dangers I have portrayed." On the last page the reader is introduced to "two bowls with the greenish cheese-like convolutions floating in the white sickly-smelling liquor." They were the brains of two cigarette-smokers, characters in the story. (Greening. 6s.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
" Quarterly 5/0
" Price for one issue /5

The Elizabethan Rostands.

WE who love English, we who rejoice in the grand march of English words, often forget and disuse our privileges. Even the miser turns over his gold, and rolls in it. We ignore the pageants that might heal sore eyes; we stand soiled on the brink of cleansing and charmed waters; we see the perspective of illimitable gardens, and will not walk in them. We are content always with the same few of our possessions; we catalogue the rest, and sleep on the catalogue. We are the richest people in the world, and we know it, and the mere knowledge seems to suffice us. We take our wealth for granted, foolishly unaware that wealth taken for granted is no longer wealth. While reading Jane Austen, and reading her again (good little Jane!) we take for granted, we assume, the Elizabethan and Jacobean age! Oh, yes! Lamb's Specimens, Hazlitt's Elizabethan Dramatists—this matter has been attended to once for all! Consider yourselves read, excellent contemporaries of Shakespeare. We admit you. You are of course. Shakespeare is your representative among us. We honour him, sometimes, and through him, you. He alone wrote nearly forty plays—think of that, and understand that we make it a rule to peruse Jane Austen's complete works every year.

Such is our ineffable attitude towards our golden age, an age comprising at least a dozen great poets, at least fifty writers of rare distinction, and at least a hundred that the dictionaries and cyclopædias dare not omit; the age when English, just come to lusty manhood, was indeed English—riotous, immense, magnificent, lovely—when the flood of art gushed careless, gorgeous and overwhelming, like a mighty cataract. We, whose best produce one novel in three years, have the effrontery to talk of the creative impulse. Heavens! We have forgotten what it is. We chatter about language, we who polish a period in a month; we prate like children. How those Ulysses, bending their formidable bows, would laugh at our catapults! One can picture Jove saying to an Elizabethan: "Here! These Victorians have a singular conceit of themselves. Show them what is what." And the Elizabethan would bare his brawny arms and with a quill a yard long write the whole blessed Victorian literature in six months, and get tipsy each night at the "Mermaid" to boot.

The reason why we should return to the Elizabethan men is, not because they are "classical," not because they are the correct thing and part of a proper education, but simply and solely because they are, in the colloquial phrase which was always on the lips of William Morris, so "jolly fine," so amusing, diverting, refreshing, uplifting, satisfying. To read them is to plunge into a vast marble bath—the dive, the tingle in the ears, the head-shaking, the striking-out, the swish of water, the final emergence, the deep breath—"Ah! That was grand!" These works were written in joy, and in joy they are to be read. Do not confuse them with The Ring and the Book, Ghosts, or Clarissa Harlowe. They are the sheer expression of the plenteous joy and exultant power of life. And, above all, do not imagine that, because Shakespeare happened to be Shakespeare, his companions were second-rate. There are sundry non-Shakespearean English plays far superior to sundry plays of Shakespeare. The assertion may sound startling, but, if it does, the more shame to the startled. Shakespeare was hemmed in by great men, authors of great works; and the Twentieth Century, which must needs be acquainted with Love's Labour Lost and The Comedy of Errors, could not even name those works, unless by chance it had been to a University Extension lecture.

Who has read Philaster?

Nay, to break down that polite convention which assumes the omniscience of readers, is there one "well-read" man in five who can with certainty name the author of Philaster? And Philaster is among the most resplendent ornaments of the world's drama. It was the first and finest success of Beaumont and Fletcher, the brethren who, by common consent of critics, stand next to Shakespeare. Beaumont died at thirty-two, Fletcher at forty-six; and they wrote, beside oddments, a play for every week in the year. They were the Rostands of the Elizabethan stage, incredibly fecund, full of easy invention, versed in all technique, great poets by profession—in short, artists of the supreme sort.

Philaster is well within the usual Elizabethan dramatic formula. Philaster is heir to the crown of Sicily, which has been usurped by the King of Calabria. The King designates Pharamond of Spain his heir, and offers him the hand of his daughter, Arethusa. But Arethusa falls in love with Philaster, and Philaster gives her his page, Bellario (Euphrasia in disguise, heroine of the piece). Most of the action springs from a false accusation of immorality against Arethusa and Bellario-Euphrasia. In the sequel, of course, Bellario's sex is disclosed, Philaster becomes the darling of the people, and all is set right between Arethusa and Philaster, while the constancy of Euphrasia, who loves Philaster, is its own reward.

Note first the blusterous wooing of Arethusa by Pharamond, the swaggerer:

> Sweet princess
> You shall enjoy a man of men to be
> Your servant; you shall make him yours, for whom
> Great queens must die.

Such sounding is worthy of Shakespeare's Antony. You would think that with that cock's note Pharamond could silence all opponents, but Philaster shrivels him up in a phrase:

> Know, Pharamond,
> I loathe to brawl with such a blast as thou,
> Who art nought but a valiant voice; but if > Thou shalt provoke me further, men shall say,
> "Thou wert," and not lament it.

It is the mark of the great writer that he can always beat his best. Dumas' Louis is lord of all till d'Artagnan comes along and faces him. But Philaster, who has something of Hamlet's subtlety mixed with his directness, is always more than equal to the occasion. Listen to his fine irony at the expense of the usurper:

> KING. Sure, he's possessed.
> PHI. Yes, with my father's spirit. It's here, O King,
> A dangerous spirit! now he tells me, King,
> I was a king's heir, bids me be a king,
> And whispers to me, these are all my subjects.
> 'Tis strange he will not let me sleep, but dives
> Into my fancy, and there gives me shapes
> That kneel and do me service, cry me King:
> But I'll suppress him; he's a factious spirit,
> And will undo me. Noble sir, your hand;
> I am your servant.
> KING. Away! I do not like this.

What usurper would?

Digitized by Google

Philaster's description of his finding of Bellario, which begins:

> Hunting the buck,
> I found him sitting by a fountain's side,
> Of which he borrowed some to quench his thirst,
> And paid the nymph again as much in tears,

is the stock "extract" from this play, and, lovely as it is, we may not quote it. There are still finer things than this, to which we shall come immediately. Meanwhile, let us note Bellario's charming and tender farewell to Philaster when the latter dismisses her to the service of Arethusa:

> I am gone.
> But since I am to part with you, my lord,
> And none knows whether I shall live to do
> More service for you, take this little prayer:
> Heaven bless your loves, your fights, all your designs!
> May sick men, if they have your wish, be well;
> And Heaven hate those you curse, though I be one!

How superb is the defiance of Philaster when Dion, a lord, accuses Arethusa of being unchaste!

> Let me alone,
> That I may cut off falsehood whilst it springs!
> Set hills on hills betwixt me and the man
> That utters this, and I will scale them all,
> And from the utmost top fall on his neck,
> Like thunder from a cloud.

And in quite another vein, with equal mastery, is Bellario's unforgettable description of death:

> Yes, I do know, my lord:
> 'Tis less than to be born; a lasting sleep;
> A quiet resting from all jealousy,
> A thing we all pursue; I know, besides,
> It is but giving over of a game
> That must be lost.

Here follows the jewel of the play. It is Philaster's meditation in the forest, when he is desolated by the general misery of things:

> Oh that I had been nourished in these woods
> With milk of goats and acorns, and not known
> The right of crowns nor the dissembling trains
> Of women's looks; but digged myself a cave
> Where I, my fire, my cattle, and my bed
> Might have been shut together in one shed;
> And then had taken me some mountain-girl,
> Beaten with winds, chaste as the hardened rocks
> Whereon she dwelt, that might have strewed my bed
> With leaves and reeds, and with the skins of beasts,
> Our neighbours, and have borne at her big breasts
> My large coarse issue! This had been a life
> Free from vexation.

The passage abounds in admirable felicities, in profound psychological truth, and in emotional power. Of the kind, nothing finer exists outside Shakespeare.

We might continue to quote great poetry from this drama—trifles like:

> Not the calmèd sea,
> When Æolus locks up his windy brood,
> Is less disturbed than I.

Or long passages of sustained perfectness such as Bellario's confession, which begins:

> . . . Sitting in my window,
> Printing my thoughts in lawn, I saw a god,
> I thought (but it was you), enter our gates——

But it was you! We must end, however, and with a reference to the clowns of the brethren. Hazlitt said that in comic wit and spirit Beaumont and Fletcher were "scarcely surpassed by any writers of any age." He was probably right, and though this particular play does not overflow with fun, there is enough of it in the great hunting scene. The fracas between Philaster and the Country Fellow is excellent. The Country Fellow does not argue:

> I know not your rhetoric; but I can lay it on if you touch the woman.

He lays it on; Philaster flees, and the Country Fellow calmly remarks to the King's daughter:

> I cannot follow the rogue. I pray thee, wench, come and kiss me now.

We like also his last speech:

> If I get clear of this, I'll go to see no more gay sights.

We will finish with a passage between the redoubtable Pharamond and the mob:

> PHA. You will not see me murdered, wicked villains?
> FIRST CITIZEN. Yes, indeed, will we, sir; we have not seen one
> For a great while.

For the rest, verb. sat. sap., or should be.

Things Seen.

Promotion.

I NOTICED at once that he was brighter than usual—I should say, less lethargic. He sat more erect, extended his hand for the ounce of tobacco with a freer gesture, and where for many months now he has languidly agreed with me as to the weather, or at most recorded weakly a differing opinion, he contradicted me outright. It was not so cold as yesterday, he affirmed, when I remarked that it was colder; not so cold—and this in a voice noticeably less quaverish than was customary. I read him a few paragraphs from the paper, listened to his comments on the war, fished a little for his news, but had to come away from the almshouse no wiser as to the cause of this improvement in spirits, this, I might almost say, access of pride.

In the street I met the doctor. "So old Dickson's gone," he said. "Eighty-six."

"Has he?" I replied; "I hadn't heard."

"Yes; early this morning."

I walked on, thinking about Dickson. And suddenly I understood my old friend's reinvigoration. He had taken Dickson's place; he had become the oldest inhabitant.

The Gaff.

I HAD never before seen the little town look so utterly miserable; its usual simple gaiety appeared to have been throttled by a dreary thaw; even the street lamps burned with an ineffectualness beyond their habit. Everything that one touched was clammy. The few shop windows, already gay towards Christmas, were obscured by a film of moisture which destroyed all festive illusion.

I turned, without much thought, into a narrow street which gave upon a desolate waste known as the Fair Field. To my surprise, right in the centre of this waste was an erection of boards and canvas, from which dribbles of light escaped. As I approached through a slough of greasy mud little gusts of laughter reached me. The laughter struck me as ironic. A long yellow placard at the entrance to the queer erection informed me that a celebrated London company was that night giving two performances of the great tragedy, "Stabbed in the Dark." It was almost time for the second performance to begin.

Presently there was a thin staccato of applause, followed by the shuffling of feet. Then the first audience came out—young men and women, boys and girls, perhaps fifty in all. They slithered off gradually into the darkness, and I looked round for the second audience. There appeared to be only myself and a boy in patched knickerbockers. Then a man whose face needed no grease-paint to give it the expression habitual to low comedians came to the curtained entrance.

Digitized by Google

"It's no go," he called to someone inside. "There's only a pen'orth waitin.'" Then he caught sight of me. "Look 'ere, guv'nor," he said, "I'll turn on all the strength of the bloomin' company for 'arf a quid. It'd be cheap at the price, I give ye my word." I thanked him, but declined. "Oh, well," he said, "the luck's off." He vanished for a minute, and reappeared carrying a huge board. Behind him came the remainder of the company. "I've got the treasury," said the low comedian, grinning. Then he stuck the board up against the theatre, and on it I read, in huge smudged letters, "House Full." A few minutes later I saw him marshalling his followers into the bar of the "Surrey Yeoman."

Lives of Great Men All Remind Us. . . .

BIOGRAPHY is just now your most flourishing literary plant, fiction excepted. The completion of the Dictionary of National Biography was by common consent regarded as a lexicographical, national, and biographical incident. Who's Who is enjoying seven fat years. That works of even this importance may soon be outdone is proved by the issue this week of Lives of the 'Lustrious, edited by Mr. Sidney Stephen and Mr. Leslie Lee (Simpkin, Marshall. 1s.). These names are new to us, and we judge that they are borne by young and rather inexperienced writers. We may justly impute inexperience to the compilers of this (in many respects) admirable work of reference, which is without doubt a new departure in biography. It is not that Mr. Sidney Stephen and Mr. Leslie Lee show any lack of ability in procuring and marshalling their facts, or in compressing these within the severe limits imposed by a lexicon. It is, indeed, precisely here that our authors achieve success. Conciseness, temperateness of statement and comment, and a sense of picturesque juxtaposition (if we may use the term) are theirs. The pity is that they should mar the effect of these qualities by descents—occasional, we admit, but still too frequent—into jocularity.

Happily, many of the Lives are quite free from this defect. Nothing, for example, could be more lucid and satisfying than the little biography of Mr. Stephen Phillips, the well-known Director of Herod's Stores. By an oversight, the date of his birth is not given, but his education at Sidney Colvin College, Cambridge, "where he played for the University polo team on a Broncho Trochee Pegasus," his not undistinguished "service in the Irregular Foot," his early residence at Marlow, "where he went from bad to verse," and his thrilling discovery of a "vacant pigeon-hole at the St. James's Theatre" are traced with scholarly care. In allusion to this pigeon-hole, the memoir proceeds:

> Mr. Phillips at once set to work and wrote Paolo and Francesca to fill it. The fame that came to him from the non-performance of this drama decided him to devote his whole time to play-writing, and he is now engaged on a drama on the subject of the Fall of Man for Mr. Tree; on the Laocoön for Mr. James Welch; on John the Baptist for Mr. Bourchier; on Democritus for Mr. Wyndham; on the Queen of Sheba for Miss Marie Tempest; on Bel and the Dragon for Drury Lane; and on Phillips of Macedon (in Alexandrines) for the St. James's Theatre. Mr. Phillips, whose height is 15·3 kill-a-metres, is now lecturing for Major Spondee in the Foot Hills.

Again, we have nothing but praise for the solid little biography of Mr. William Archer, the interesting Viking whose comments on life and literature it has frequently been our privilege to quote. We dare say that it is news to many of Mr. Archer's admirers that he was born (in 1856) within the Arctic dress Circle. They are familiar with his "passionate interest in English amateur theatricals," but they may not know that this, and only this, keeps him from his marine pavilion on the banks of the Varanger Fjord. Nor, unless we are mistaken, have the following particulars of Mr. Archer's more private relationships been given to the world:

> Mr. Archer has a number of promising godchildren: Norah Helma Archer is a promising exponent of principal boy parts in Finland; Peer Gynt Archer has already been entrusted with the rôle of an 'outside shout' in the Trondhjem Panto; Björnstjerne Björnson Archer is understudying Mr. Tree in The Last of G. Brandes; and finally Hedda Gabler Archer is in training for the part of the Infant Phenomenon at the Bergen Tivoli.

In connection with Mr. Archer's recent walking tour up Mount Parnassus Messrs. Sidney Stephen and Leslie Lee conjecture that "no more poetry will be written in England." We do not quite share this view, which hardly agrees with their list of probable deliveries from Herod's Stores. Mr. Archer's motto, we learn, is "A Norse! a Norse! My kingdom for a Norse!"

It is in their account of Mr. Hall Caine that the compilers of Lives of the 'Lustrious first display their unfortunate tendency to jocosity. Much of this article is admirable; and it includes one anecdote that is wholly helpful to our understanding of Mr. Caine, whose resemblance to Shakespeare is now thoroughly well known. It seems that on his landing at New York, on a religious trip to America, the late Ignatius Donelly, a total stranger, addressed him as "Lord Bacon, I presume." Will it be believed that this crisp recital of an historic rencontre is followed by the remark that "the abnormal heat of the past few summers has been generally attributed to the fact that Mr. Hall Caine chooses August as his publishing month." Such levity, in such a place, is not seemly. The same striving after epigram marks an otherwise excellent biographical sketch of Mr. Kipling. We are told that "after a lurid infancy at Westward Ho! in the company of Stalky and Co., he emigrated to India at the age of six, and swallowed it whole." Such a metaphor is out of place in a work of pure reference which aspires and (in spite of faults) deserves a place on the open shelves of the British Museum Reading Room. Far more to the purpose is the picture drawn of Mr. Kipling's home life in Cape Colony, "a suburb of Rottingdean," where at intervals he puts forth a fascinating book, or a moral essay in the Times.

Once we find a lack of proportion in the treatment of a 'lustrious name. It is true, of course, that Mr. Bernard Shaw is the largest meat-salesman of our day, and that he is always "faultlessly dressed in the fashion of the moment," but our biographers seem to be unaware that Mr. Shaw devotes some of his fatigue to writing books. Indeed, we think it not improbable that Mr. Shaw, who cannot be exempt from the harmless vanities of our common nature, would be as proud to have it said of him a hundred years hence that he wrote as that he butched.

But let us be done with cavilling. When all is said, there are things in this book that can be found nowhere else. Where, for instance, has the career of Mr. Alfred Harmsworth been set forth so interestingly as in the following succinct narrative?

> Harmsworth, Alfred Charles, Chauffeur to the Empire, and Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, was born in Corsica in 1865, and commenced Editor at the same age as Mr. Kipling. Mr. Harmsworth, who is the eldest of sixteen Corsican brothers, all of them editors of halfpenny papers, and Imperialist-Liberal M.P.'s, founded the Daily Mail-strom in 1896, declared war on the Boers in 1899, and deposed the Chinese Emperor in 1900. Owing to his extraordinary likeness to Napoleon I., Mr. Harmsworth has been forbidden by a special decree of the Chamber to enter France, but consorts freely with all the crowned heads of the Continent, a passing friction with the Kaiser—owing to the notorious Kruger telegram—having been satisfactorily adjusted. Motto: "The panting Times toils after me in vain." Authorities: The God in the Motor-car; Napoleon: the last Phase.

Digitized by Google

It may be said that information about a public man like Mr. Harmsworth is easily obtained, but our authors are not less successful in unearthing facts in the careers of men like Mr. Henry James, who is described, aptly enough, as the "Six-Shilling Sensationalist." Much that seems enigmatical in Mr. James's writings becomes clear when we are informed that he passed his early days before the mast, and is believed at one period of his life to have sailed under the skull and crossbones. Wearying a little of this life, Mr. James "turned to the pen for a livelihood, and under a variety of pseudonyms produced in rapid succession a large number of exciting stories, the most popular of which are probably The Master Christian, The Red Rat's Daughter, The Mystery of a Hansom Cab, The Eternal City, and The Visits of Elizabeth." Here we can convict Messrs. Sidney Stephen and Leslie Lee of incompleteness. Fifty-Two Stories of the British Empire should, of course, be added to the foregoing list of Mr. James's books.

There is nothing narrow in the selection of Lives here presented. A professor of golf like Mr. Balfour, a King's Cupbearer like Sir Thomas Lipton, a twins like Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, a demon-bowler like Mr. J. M. Barrie, a literary chaperon like Mr. Edmund Gosse, a prismatic Fairy King like Mr. Andrew Lang, a Court Chaplain like Mr. Dan Leno, a Professor of Natation like Mr. Swinburne, and a cloth merchant's traveller like Lord Rosebery are necessarily included, but their biographies do not exclude a very interesting notice of a Belgian Bee-master, M. Maurice Maeterlinck. Our editors have even found space to mention M. Maeterlinck's little-known excursions into literature, and one interesting fact illustrates the economy of time practised by this sedulous apiarist—the expression is our own. It appears that the comparative monotony of the bee-keeper's life is diversified by stings: "for these, M. Maeterlinck uses common blue, and it is while waiting for them to heal that his plays have been written." Since Carlyle pictured George Fox making to himself a pair of leather breeches no more touching picture than that has been drawn by any biographer.

If we are at pains to point out the trifling defects of this usually dignified work it is because we believe that in Mr. Sidney Stephen and Mr. Leslie Lee we have found a biographical partnership with striking potentialities. Let them go on. It is already plain that the Lives of the 'Lustrious must, in natural course, be followed by Lives of the 'Dustrious, and in that work we—nous qui parlons—hope to be included.

Correspondence.

A Note on Biography.

SIR,—Mr. Henley's article on Stevenson is a reminder that the opinion is becoming too common that a fault is a blemish. Qualities have their defects, defects their qualities; but the ordinary biographer declines to see this. He works for the public, and the public call the tune. The public, always sanctimonious in the aggregate, dislike defects. A man, to be worthy of a biography that in its turn is worthy of being bought, must approximate to the saint. In real life saints have no great pull over other persons, but in books that purport to be true they have. There are various reasons for this, one being that biographies are given to our sons and daughters, in whom we hope virtue will abide.

Apart from the public taste, which every publisher does not disregard, there are reasons in the biographer himself for this canonising tendency. He does not intentionally falsify; but the natural man is a hero-worshipper, and not all biographers are unnatural. Howsoever a biographer may begin with his subject, bit by bit he comes to idolise him. From idolisation to idealisation is but a step. Canonisation follows, and dehumanisation is complete. Men are not really saints: they are something far more interesting—men. If biographers and the public would only see this!

Tartarin of Tarascon said that he had to talk in order to think. Just as thoughts came to Tartarin with speech, enthusiasm for his subject comes to the biographer as he writes. He becomes an advocate with a heavily-endorsed brief. With prejudice for his hero merges prejudice against everyone who did not like his hero; and in course of time his biography—that is to say, his special plea—is done. For the correction of the portrait there painted we have to go to the Henleys. Whereas, if the biographer were Henley, too—every biographer his own Henley—the bad passions recently aroused would be spared in large measure. Not wholly, of course, because, as I have said, the public will not have the whole truth about anyone in a biography. They will have it in smoking-rooms, in boudoirs, in clubs, in trains, even in newspapers; but it must not get into the official Life.

A stranger to Stevenson who met him only in Mr. Balfour's pages would have an incomplete idea of his character. That, briefly, is what Mr. Henley set out to say, but egotism intervened and his pen ran away, with most unhappy results. But had he said merely that, no one could have taken serious objection. He would, of course, have been unpopular; he would have been called the devil's advocate; but that would not have mattered. It is only because biography is bad that the devil's advocate gets a case at all. Were biographers thorough, he would be a briefless barrister. What Mr. Henley resented was the mild and domesticated figure set up as Robert Louis Stevenson, when he knew that his friend was of different stuff—with various human failings prominent, too: such as vanity. What is wrong with vanity? If Shakespeare had it, which is very likely, are we to say "So much the less Shakespeare he"? Without vanity, which is related to pride, which is cousin to ambition, no one would go very far. Mr. Henley says that some persons might have applied to Stevenson a word of three letters, and the world has risen in shocked indignation. But why not? Does it detract from the merit of, say, that wonderful essay, "Pulvis et umbra," that its author by some undiscerning persons might have been called a cad? I say undiscerning, because Mr. Henley, who knew Stevenson well, dissociates himself from the others. Stevenson was not a cad, but it is probably true that his conduct, under certain conditions, might have been easily misconstrued by the hasty. Why not? Are we all masters of ourselves always? Let the most fastidious ask himself—and answer truthfully—this question.

But Mr. Henley, it is said, went back on his friend by saying such things. That is for Mr. Henley to decide. I do not by any means admire the whole of Mr. Henley's article, but I fancy I can see his main purpose very clearly, and in that there was no element of uncharitableness.

Look what over-considerate biographers have done for a character akin in many respects to Stevenson's—Charles Lamb's. Talfourd began by omitting anything from his letters which looked too rough, too caustic, and softening forcible expletives to harmless ones: "damn" to "hang," and so forth. This, although the facts of Lamb's life were known—his self-sacrifices, his kindness, his greatness—and being known stood as compensation. Others followed suit until, instead of the clear-eyed, ruthless critic of shams, as in "Grace Before Meat"; the almost sulphurous castigator of the petty selfishness and cruelty of George IV.; the downright foe to oppression, as in the essay on "Beggars"; the caustic wit; the corrector of Southey's arrogance; the genial convivialist; the friend on equal terms of Coleridge and Wordsworth—instead of this we are offered merely a humble, pathetic figure, meekly writing nice essays, nursing an afflicted sister, and no more saying Bo to a goose than your gentlest Sunday-school teacher would. Old ladies call him "Dear Charles Lamb," and are quite certain he never really took too much to drink. But why not? Why should he never have drunk too much? On this point, however, see Mr. Birrell's noble essay.

Digitized by Google

There are signs that things may improve. Mr. Gosse's recent article on the widow as biographer was an admirable protest. Mr. Henley's protest drives home the nail. "To know all is to understand all" may possibly yet become the biographer's motto.—Yours, &c., X.

Stevenson on Henley.

Sir,—At this moment, when tenderness for the dead seems to bar out common decency towards the living, as though to vilify Mr. Henley were to offer incense to Stevenson's memory, no one has recalled Stevenson's own judgment of his friend as a Talker. The value and the appositeness of that judgment lie in the fact that with a character so impetuous and vehement as Mr. Henley's his writing is but his talk put upon paper. If R. L. S. could return to read the article which has made such a feast of scandal, he would doubtless discount the vehemence and violence of the written word as he did those very qualities of the talk. The passage is, of course, in the "Talk and Talkers" of Memories and Portraits:

> Burly is a man of a great presence. . . . There is something boisterous and piratic in Burly's manner of talk. He will roar you down, he will bury his face in his hands, he will undergo passions of revolt and agony; and meanwhile his attitude of mind is both conciliatory and receptive: and after Pistol has been out-Pistol'd, and the welkin rung for hours, you begin to perceive a certain subsidence in these spring torrents, points of agreement issue, and you end arm-in-arm and in a glow of mutual admiration. The outcry only serves to make your final union the more unexpected and precious. Throughout there has been perfect sincerity, perfect intelligence, a desire to hear though not always to listen, and an unaffected eagerness to meet concessions.

"A loud, copious, intolerant talker," says R. L. S. later. A loud, copious, intolerant article might well express the famous Pall Mall Magazine delivery. By-and-bye, when the hubbub has subsided, people will begin with shame to recant the many unworthy judgments that have been uttered regarding it. Mr. Henley's action is that of a man who, seeing a smooth, characterless, unlike portrait of a beloved face, takes a brush full of dripping paint, lurid or black it may be, and blots it all out. That is conceivable of him: but to those of us who know and love him the one thing inconceivable is that any motive base or unworthy could have, however unconsciously, influenced the article. As for the poor imputation of jealousy, it is not worth the rebutting. Mr. Henley's own achievements in literature are large in the thoughts of those whose praise is worth having. To us who love and believe in him, who sat at his feet in the old days and yet sit at his feet, he is, not a debonair thought like that beloved golden youth R. L. S., but yet the Master.—Yours, &c.,

London. K. H.

Ingoldsby Legends.

Sir,—It were shame to let your contributor's attack upon our old friend Ingoldsby go unchallenged. He says this prince of rhymesters is but an incorrigible jester, who scoffs at death and has no reverence for heaven or hell or anything between; is merely superficial, has no depth of thought, and is, moreover, dull and out of date, and no fit company for a Sabbath afternoon in this superior century. Oh, poor contributor! How sadly beautiful must it be to have a mind above a pun. We imagine your Sunday afternoon spent in austere contemplation of the intellectual elevation to which you have attained. We see you solemnly taking from the hands of some more simple relative an old and battered copy of the Legends, and coldly observing, "He was ingenious, but not profound."

Surely this is but the querulous carping of the dyspeptic cynic. Criticism, indeed, it is not; rather is it lack of humour and sympathy, and for the benefit of your soul, oh, contributor! we will hope an incomplete edition. For you cannot have a human heart, a healthy brain, and not be stirred to deeper thought by those last lines of Thomas Ingoldsby: "As I lay a thynkyng, a thynkyng, a thynking."

To him who has a sense of humour, and that broad sympathy which it implies, Ingoldsby will never be dull, though his topical allusions may be out of date.—Yours &c.,

Leslie V. Shairp.

Rights in Gravitation.

Sir,—In the article on Mr. Wells's book, The First Men in the Moon (the Academy, December 7, page 541), your reviewer says: "Mr. Wells has hit on the happy hypothesis" of an interference with the law of gravitation. Will you allow me to say that in my A Plunge Into Space, published in 1890 by Messrs. Frederick Warne and Co., I "hit on" the same hypothesis. I also hit on the construction of the sphere, the appearance of the firmament from a point outside the earth's atmosphere, the comic effect of lighter gravity on a smaller planet, which you mention, and other details which you do not. In a preface to a new edition of my book which is in preparation, I have made a suitable apology for having sub-consciously plagiarised beforehand the work of other writers on a similar plane whose inventions and ideas I had inadvertently embodied in my book.—Yours, &c.,

Belfast. Robert Cromie.

Thomas Chaucer.

Sir,—Though "A Reader" thinks that the sonship of Thomas to Geoffrey Chaucer "is beyond doubt," yet every moderately informed Chaucer student knows that it is not proven.

That Thomas was of kin to Geoffrey—perhaps next-of-kin—is probable. That he was his son we have no evidence, except Gascoigne's statement, which I do not believe. His nonsensical talk about Geoffrey's death-bed shows that he wrote down any rubbish he heard. Geoffrey had not acquired a long lease of his Westminster tenement, but only a lease for his life, which, of course, ended at his death.

If Thomas was Geoffrey's nephew, or cousin's son, he would have satisfied the three points of "A Reader." Had he been the poet's son, Lydgate, who made so much of his own connection with Geoffrey, couldn't have failed to mention the fact in his poem on Thomas Chaucer.—Yours, &c.,

F. J. Furnivall.

Digitized by Google

School for Correspondents.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. J. Harvey Simpson, is evidently one of those clever persons who do not read books, but only "dip" into them, and then think themselves competent to criticise. In his letter on "A School for Novelists," he accuses me of allowing my hero in my story, Ivy Cardew, to alter a cheque for £300 to £3,000 without altering the body of the cheque. To quote Mr. J. Harvey Simpson, he says: "The words three hundred won't change to three thousand." Mr. J. Harvey Simpson does not write the truth.

The body of the cheque was not filled in, as the following words prove (page 171):

> It was a bearer cheque for £300, and merely bore Bruce's name, the baronet's signature, and the amount in figures.

Page 172:

> "You must fill in the date yourself," said Sir Henry. "I intended to fill in the body of the cheque in writing, but this confounded gout bothered me so I had to give it up."

Again, on page 179, Bruce, in handing the cheque to his brother, says:

> "Don't forget to fill in the body of the cheque. I promised the guv'nor to do it for him; his gout was so bad it bothered him to write."

It was thus left to bearer to fill in the amount in writing. This proves Mr. J. Harvey Simpson's statement of my mistake in Ivy Cardew to be utterly false.—Yours, &c.,

"PERRINGTON PRIMM."

Patriotic Song.

SIR,—Will you allow me to write a few words in reply to your reviewer's observations on my book in your issue of 7th inst.? The ideal anthology is, of course, an imaginary collection made by each reader for himself; and, therefore, the editor of wide views has a better chance of contributing to the happiness of the greatest number than he who binds himself to rigid definitions.

As to the inclusion or exclusion of any particular poem, I have no defence to offer, as I think it is useless to argue on matters of taste; but I may say that I should have included Wordsworth's sonnets Fair Star of Evening and the sonnet on Milton if I had had the necessary space at my command, and Tennyson's Revenge had the owners of the copyright consented to its inclusion.

Your reviewer accuses me of printing "Dibdin's poems in two batches." "Dibdin's poems" are so printed because they were written by two different authors, the first "batch" by Charles Dibdin (1745-1814) and the second by Thomas Dibdin (1771-1841).

I admit that the quality of some of the "Colonial" pieces in my collection is not equal to their patriotism, but I consider it was my duty to represent "the British Dominions beyond the Seas."—Yours &c.,

ARTHUR STANLEY.

c/o C. Arthur Pearson, Limited, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 116 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best Ghost Story not exceeding 500 words in length. We award the prize to Mrs. M. E. Burton, 8, Wemyss Road, Blackheath, S.E., for the following:—

Captain Elliot was on his way to spend Christmas with a friend. He had never been to his home, and did not know the way.

"Straight across the common till you reach the crossways, then turn to your left!" said the railway porter. It was a dark, cold night, but he lit his pipe and strode on cheerfully. Suddenly the road forked; a fallen tree with a dash of white paint on it was just to be seen. Coming nearer he saw a strange sight. An old woman was seated on the tree trunk, with a short, black, clay pipe in her mouth. Her face was large, square, and white; her hair, tangled and wispy, straggling from beneath a big, shapeless bonnet; her eyes, painful to see, forced attention, so blood-stained were the lower lids, so fierce, yet entreating, their expression.

Captain Elliot could see her, yet the night was dark; he was conscious of light, but could not see whence it came; conscious that she spoke to him, though he heard no voice. Replying, he did not hear himself speak, only the rustling of the night wind and the sound of a groan.

He could see the outstretched, wizen hand of very shrunken age in need of something; and, noting the empty pipe, offered her a liberal supply of tobacco. But she did not take it. She pointed to the tree, and he felt constrained to seat himself at the end of the log, still smoking vigorously. He could see the pleasure in the wild, worn face, a sort of drinking in a satisfying draught as the fragrant fumes circled near her. She chuckled to herself; he felt chilly.

He asked his way, addressing her, country fashion, as "Mother." She pointed through a gap in the hedge that he had not noticed.

"And you—it's cold and dark for you, Mother; better go home!"

A noiseless laugh was the reply, a laugh she enjoyed so much that she rocked to and fro, hugging herself with amusement. The Captain got up to continue his way, but she constrained him to halt and listen.

"Good luck to you!" she said. "You never fouled a man, though you may have killed a-many! Some foul many, and never kill one fair. Tell Squire, Bess Lisher waits! Bill Willard waits his coming!"

"Better go home, Mother!" said Captain Elliot; but he stumbled as he went, and could have sworn he saw the prostrate body of a man at his feet, though looking nearer he could only see brittle twigs and rotten leaves.

When Captain Elliot reached the Manor he gave the message.

"Bess Lisher?" said the Squire; "Bill Willard? why its forty years since the earth was rid of them—damned poachers!"

A few days later the earth was rid of the Squire, for he died of apoplexy in the midst of the Christmas feasting; and Captain Elliot was forced to believe he had given a message from a ghost.

[M. E. B., Blackheath.]

From twenty-one other stories received we select the following:—

I was staying last year at the seaside home of an Irish friend in order to be present at a ball given by her on the eve of her nephew's departure for the war. The young officer (I will call him Brewerton) made a confidante of me, and I learnt that he was secretly engaged to a beautiful and very romantic girl, called Adelaide S——, who lived in the neighbourhood. The young couple did not dare tell their secret to Mrs. S—— (a worldly woman), and hoped promotion in South Africa might settle their difficulties.

On the morning of the dance I was strolling on the beach, and met Adelaide and her brother. "We are off for a long sail," the girl said. She was plainly in an excited and restless condition, and the expedition promised distraction. I warned her that a storm had been prophesied, but she only laughed nervously and lingered to whisper that there was a bigger one in her own breast, that she had had no sleep for thinking and dreaming of the ball and her last night with her lover. "You are too emotional," I remonstrated. "Yes," she agreed, her eyes roving out to sea, "sometimes I feel all spirit and longing."

In the evening I saw her often—always with young Brewerton; she looked extraordinarily beautiful, but neither that fact nor the pathetic nature of her circumstances quite accounted for the fascination she exerted over me. I could not keep my eyes or my thoughts from following her, in what I then thought an absurd fashion.

When all the guests had gone my hostess told me that Adelaide's mother and brother had not been present, and that Brewerton—though he had danced all the evening with the girl—had heard no explanation. "He looks very ill," my friend added; "but, of course, that is not surprising." At that moment he joined us and asked for the loan of a horse. "I am going to Mrs. S——'s," he announced; "don't ask me why, for I don't know myself, but I must go." In anxiety we could not comprehend; we awaited his return, and before very long we heard his horse's hoofs on the gravel drive. We went out to meet him, but he passed us without recognition, entered the hall, and dropped in a dead faint.

Digitized by Google

"Pray tell us what has occurred," I implored, on his return to consciousness, "surely it can be nothing very serious; she was here an hour ago, the picture of health and energy; you danced all night with her."

"I danced all night with something—God only knows what!" he answered, hoarsely; "but Adelaide and her brother were drowned this evening at eight o'clock; her body was recovered almost immediately and taken to her mother's house, where it has been lying ever since. [E. L., Didsbury.]

In 188— I was at my father's house in the country, eighteen miles from London. At that time my maternal aunt in London was suffering from blood-poisoning, and a letter came informing us that she was delirious and not expected to live. My mother, therefore, went to London to see her sister; and we were expecting her back, probably with mournful tidings, at 10 p.m. At 8 p.m. I was passing through the hall, when a couple of maids burst breathlessly frightened from the kitchen, and one said, "Please, sir, somebody keeps tapping at the window; they've tapped three times." I at once seized a stick and ran out by the tradesmen's door close to the kitchen, thinking that it was probably the baker's boy who had before been unduly pressing in his attentions to one of the maids. The kitchen projected from the house, and had windows looking on the gravel walk from the front gate, and opposite windows looking on the lawn and fruit-garden. I assumed (but incorrectly, as it proved) that the tapping had been at a window looking on the walk, and close to the tradesmen's entrance; and seeing no one there I made for the gate and looked up and down the road. No one was visible in flight. I tore round to the lawn. There was no one in the garden. It seemed likely, then, that the offender, on my sudden emergence, instead of making for the gate, had slipped round the end of the kitchen by a path leading to the lawn, and that he would now be retracing his steps and making for the gate. I ran back to cut him off, but encountered no one until, myself passing round the end of the kitchen by the path leading to the lawn, I drew up suddenly, scattering the gravel with my heels, and dropping my unavailing stick, while a chill tremor passed down my spinal column. The figure of a woman confronted me, a figure of my aunt's height, and immediately, I know not how, suggesting my aunt, all in white, with her arms projecting at either side, as if her hands were clasped upon her bosom, thus giving a graceful fall to the white drapery. As I stopped awed, the figure turned rapidly upon its heel, in a manner that I can only describe as rollicking, as if it were out for a lark, and flew off at an angle of 25 deg. across the lawn and vanished in the branches of an Indian poplar. I did not pursue it, but returned deeply pondering to the house. "Well," the impatient reader will say, "of course, your aunt died precisely at 8 p.m." No, she did not. My mother on her return announced a change for the better, and my aunt survived many years.

[C. D., West Kensington.]

Competition No. 117 (New Series).

This week we offer a prize of One Guinea for the best verses for a New Year's Greeting to a Soldier in South Africa. Not to exceed twenty lines.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, Limited.

SUBSCRIPTIONS for 3 Months, 6 Months, and 12 Months
CAN BE ENTERED AT ANY DATE.

THE BEST and MOST POPULAR BOOKS of THE SEASON ARE NOW IN CIRCULATION.
Prospectuses of Terms free on application.

BOOK SALE DEPARTMENT.
Many Thousand surplus Copies of Books always ON SALE (Second Hand). Also a large Selection of BOOKS IN LEATHER BINDINGS
SUITABLE FOR
CHRISTMAS, NEW YEAR, BIRTHDAY AND WEDDING GIFTS.

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., LONDON;
And at 10-12, Barton Arcade, MANCHESTER.

CHARMING XMAS GIFT BOOKS.

PUBLISHED BY
C. ARTHUR PEARSON LTD.

SOME PRETTY GIRLS. A Handsome Portfolio of 40 Pen-and-Ink Drawings of London and Parisian Life. Drawn by C. F. UNDERWOOD. Size, 17 by 14½ inches. Price 20s. net.

PATRIOTIC SONG.
Selected and arranged by ARTHUR STANLEY, with an Introduction by the Right Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, late Head Master of Harrow. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Note.—This volume is an anthology of Patriotic Verse gathered from all parts of the British Empire. It is a representative collection of Patriotic Song, not only of ENGLAND, WALES, SCOTLAND and IRELAND, but also of INDIA, CANADA, AUSTRALIA, SOUTH AFRICA, and NEW ZEALAND.

As good an anthology as we have ever seen.*—"Spectator."
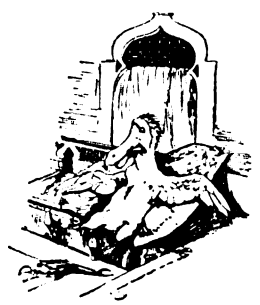
Mr. ALGERNON C. SWINBURNE writes: "A very fine collection and a very happy selection."

SECOND LARGE EDITION NOW READY.

MODERN BILLIARDS. By John Roberts and Others. With over 921 Diagrams and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"This book is not only fascinating but unique. The diagrams of breaks are remarkable, and it is no exaggeration to say that they illustrate the game in a way that has never before been attempted with the same thorough success."—Glasgow Herald.

LORD KITCHENER.
By HORACE G. GROSER, Author of "The Life of Lord Roberts," &c. With Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.



HEROES OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By G. BARNETT SMITH. Vol. III. Gladstone, Bismarck, Havelock, and Lincoln. With 16 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled edges, price 5s.

A CHARMING GIFT-BOOK.
MOUSMÉ:
THE SEQUEL TO "MY JAPANESE WIFE."
By CLIVE HOLLAND.
With beautiful Illustrations. Pictorial Cover. Price 6s.
SECOND LARGE EDITION.
"Charming."—Truth. "Delightful."—Daily Mail.

TWO DELIGHTFUL BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.
By G. E. FARROW.
Author of "The Wallypug of Why," &c.
With numerous Illustrations by Alan Wright. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, price, 5s. each.

BAKER MINOR AND THE DRAGON.
"A book which will be the delight of young people."—Scotsman.

THE NEW PANJANDRUM.
"Decidedly buy this for any little friend you have."—British Weekly.

"The Dodo in an exhausted condition."
(Reduced Illustration from "THE NEW PANJANDRUM.")

A CANADIAN JUNGLE BOOK.
MOOSWA, and Others of the Boundaries
By W. A. FRASER. With 12 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.
"A really charming production on similar lines to the far-famed 'Jungle Book,' with the delightfully graphic and clever pictures. It will be sure to appeal to young people."—Daily News.

BOYS' BOOK OF BRAVERY. By Robert P. BERREY. With 8 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.
An Illustrated Account of Notable Acts of Bravery performed by British soldiers and sailors. Well Illustrated.

THE MIGHTY DEEP, & WHAT WE KNOW OF IT.
By AGNES GIBERNE. Author of "The Sun, Moon, and Stars," "Roy," &c. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.
"Most fascinating. It is admirably adapted for the young, but older readers also will find much in it they did not know before. It is a book worth buying."
Daily News.

DOMESTIC DITTIES. With Words and Music. By A. SCOTT-GATTY. composer of "Plantation Songs." Profusely Illustrated in Colour. Crown 4to. Pictorial boards, price 2s. 6d.
"The ditties are quite within the intelligence of the very young, while the coloured pictures of crying babies, of tossing bulls, and so forth, will delight old and young alike."—Daily News

Digitized by Google

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, Illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S.

Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.
THE NORFOLK BROADS.
BRECON and its BEACONS,
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.
THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
THE WYE VALLEY.
THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
{ LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, PENMAENMAWR, }
{ LLANFAIRFECHAN, ANGLESEY, and CARNARVON. }
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
CONWAY, COLWYN BAY, BETTWS-Y-COED, SNOWDON, and FESTINIOG,
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading Hotels throughout the World.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.

"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.

"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON & ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

Paris and New York: BRETANO'S.

BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

ROBESPIERRE.

A Study and Biography, by HILAIRE BELLOC, late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, author of "Danton," "Paris," &c.

Demy 8vo, 16s.

"A signal testimony to Mr. Belloc's literary gift, his insight into character, and the thoroughness of his knowledge of France."—Daily News.

"His 'Danton,' published two years ago, was in some respects a masterpiece. His 'Robespierre' is equally thorough."—Scotsman.

UNSTORIED IN HISTORY.

Portraits of Some Famous Women of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries.

By GABRIELLE FESTING, author of "J. H. Frere and his Friends."

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"A noteworthy and charming book. . . . It required the magic of a pen like Miss Festing's to make these women live and move again."—Newcastle Chronicle.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES.

10s. 6d. net. By ANTHONY HOPE. And 6s.

A New Series and a New Issue, with 8 Illustrations by HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

A SPECIAL PRESENTATION EDITION,

beautifully printed on large paper, with 18 Illustrations by Mr. CHRISTY.

Handsomely bound in gold, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

LORD ROBERTS.

A Life for Boys. By VIOLET BROOKE-HUNT.

Illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"Miss Violet Brooke-Hunt's 'Lord Roberts' is very good indeed. It is a word-picture of one of the most popular of living Englishmen, which should delight his innumerable boy admirers."—The World.

L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

WHEELS OF IRON.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mrs. Meade's convincing tale, replete with both strength and tenderness, will do good."—Dundee Advertiser.

"A tale of engrossing interest, of immense pathos, and of considerable charm."—Glasgow Observer.

J. NISBET & CO., Ltd., 21, Berners Street, W.

Price 2/6. Price 2/6.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For DECEMBER contains:

1. MILITARISM IN POLITICS AND LORD ROBERTS' ARMY REORGANISATION SCHEME. By JEAN DE BLOCH.
2. OUR UNHAPPY DIVISIONS: A PLEA FOR THE RECOGNITION OF NON-EPISCOPAL CHURCHES. By Canon HENSLEY HENSON.
3. THE NEW REIGN IN ITALY. By BOLTON KING.
4. JOURNALISM FOR UNIVERSITY MEN. By F. S. A. LOWNDES.
5. ANTHROPOLOGY RECONSTRUCTED. By The Rev. W. W. PEYTON.
6. MAXIME GORKY. By Count S. C. De SOISSONS.
7. A DIARY OF THE NATAL CAMPAIGN. By RAYMOND MAXWELL.
8. LITERARY SUPPLEMENT: CHRISTMAS AND OTHER BOOKS. By "A READER."

LONDON:

THE COLUMBUS COMPANY, LIMITED,

COLUMBUS HOUSE, 43 & 43A, FETTER LANE, E.C.

Price Half-a-Crown Monthly.] [All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By CHARLES READE. A New Edition, set in handsome type, and Illustrated by 16 Photogravure and 84 Half-tone Illustrations by MATT. B. HEWERDINE. Small 4to, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net.

A VERSAILLES CHRISTMAS-TIDE. By Mary STUART BOYD. With 53 Illustrations by A. S. BOYD. Fcap. 4to, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of ROBERT BUCHANAN. With Portrait in Each Volume. Two vols., crown 8vo, buckram, 12s.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE GRAND BABYLON HOTEL. By Arnold BENNETT. [January 9.

JUDAH PYECROFT, PURITAN. By Harry LINDSAY, Author of "Methodist Idylls." [January 16.

FAN FITZGERALD. By H. A. Hinkson. [Shortly.

THE OLD BANK. By William Westall. [Shortly.

A BLOW OVER THE HEART. By Robert MACHRAY. [Shortly.

THE CAT'S-PAW. By B. M. Croker. With 12 Illustrations by FRED. PEGRAM. [Shortly.

A STUMBLE BY THE WAY. By L. T. Meade, Author of "The Diary of a Doctor."

DUMB. By the Hon. Mrs. Walter R. D. Forbes, Author of "A Gentleman."

DESPAIR'S LAST JOURNEY. By David Christie MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."

THE TRIUMPH OF HILARY BLACHLAND. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun-runner," &c.

THE PURPLE CLOUD. By M. P. Shiel, Author of "The Yellow Danger," &c.

THE LOVER'S PROGRESS. Told by Himself, and "Dedicated to all who Love."

THE LADY OF LYNN. By Sir Walter Besant, Author of "The Orange Girl," &c. With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN-HAMMOND.

A SOWER OF WHEAT. By Harold Bindloss, Author of "Ainslie's Ju-ju."

THE CANKERWORM: Being Episodes of a Woman's Life. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "Double Cunning."

A FIGHT TO A FINISH. By Florence Warden, Author of "Joan, the Curate," &c.

THE HOUSE ON THE SCAR: A Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "In a Cathedral City," &c. Second Edition.

THE WEALTH OF MALLERSTANG: An Upland Tale. By ALGERNON GISSING, Author of "A Secret of the North Sea," &c.

THREE MEN OF MARK. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "St. Mungo's City," &c.

ONLY A NIGGER. By Edmund Mitchell, Author of "The Lone Star Rush," &c.

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

TALES OF A DYING RACE. By Alfred A. Grace.
A BLIND MARRIAGE, &c. By George R. Sims.
TERENCE. By B. M. Croker. With 6 Illustrations by Sidney Paget.
THE INIMITABLE MRS. MASSINGHAM. By Herbert Compton.
THE FOURTH GENERATION. By Sir Walter Besant.
ANDROMEDA. By Robert Buchanan.
"AS A WATCH IN THE NIGHT." By Mrs. Campbell Praed.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY. POCKET VOLUMES, printed upon fine thin paper. Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH. By Charles Reade.
"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By Charles Reade.
THE DEEMSTER. By Hall Caine.
FAMILIAR STUDIES OF MEN AND BOOKS. By Robert Louis Stevenson.

NEW SERIES OF TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.

Bound in picture cloth boards, flat backs.

SPORT AND SPANGLES. By Byron Webber.
ST. KATHERINE'S BY THE TOWER. By Sir Walter Besant.
PLOTTERS OF PARIS. By Edmund Mitchell.
THE WATERS OF EDERA. By Ouida.
THE LUCK OF GERARD RIDGELEY. By Bertram Mitford.
A CRIMSON CRIME. By Geo. Manville Fenn.
IN A HOLLOW OF THE HILLS. By Bret Harte.
DORA MYRL, THE LADY DETECTIVE. By McD. Bodkin, K.C.
THE RECORDS OF VINCENT TRILL, OF THE DETECTIVE SERVICE. By DICK DONOVAN.
DARK DEEDS. By Dick Donovan.
THE LADY FROM NOWHERE. By Fergus Hume.
IN LONDON'S HEART. By George R. Sims.
JOAN, THE CURATE. By Florence Warden.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

Frederick Warne & Co.'s Christmas Gift Books.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

KATE GREENAWAY'S PICTURE BOOKS.

PRICE 3s. 6d. EACH.

A DAY IN A CHILD'S LIFE. Music by Myles B. Foster. Post 4to, picture bevelled boards, cloth back.

UNDER THE WINDOW. Pictures & Rhymes for Children. 64 pages, printed in colours. Post 4to, varnished picture boards, cloth back.

MARIGOLD GARDEN. Pictures and Rhymes. 60 pages, printed in colours. Post 4to, varnished picture boards, cloth back.

LITTLE ANN, AND OTHER POEMS. By Jane and Ann TAYLOR. Medium 8vo. 64pp., varnished picture boards. Price 2s. 6d.

PRICE 2s. EACH.

THE QUEEN OF THE PIRATE ISLE. By Bret Harte. Medium 8vo, cloth gilt.

MOTHER GOOSE; or, The Old Nursery Rhymes. Small crown 8vo, canvas cloth, lattice work cover.

A, APPLE PIE. With each letter of the Alphabet Illustrated in colours. Oblong 4to.

A PAINTING BOOK FOR CHILDREN. With 80 pages of Outline Pictures to Paint, and a Coloured Frontispiece and Title Page. Small 4to, sewed, picture cover. Price 1s.

LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS. Demy 16mo, 80 pages, varnished picture boards, cloth back. Price 1s.
Ditto, in white leatherette, gilt edges. Price 1s. 6d.

A BIRTHDAY BOOK FOR CHILDREN. With an Illustration for Each Day in the year, and 12 Coloured Plates. 32mo, cloth. Price 1s. 6d. Also kept in limp paste grain, gilt edges, and padded straight grain, French Morocco.

LEAR'S NONSENSE BOOKS.

The Book of Nonsense. In oblong 4to, cloth gilt, 6s.
More Nonsense. In oblong 4to, cloth gilt, 6s. [6s.
Nonsense Songs. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Small 4to, cloth gilt, gilt edges.
The Jumblies. Illus. by L. Leslie Brooke. Small 4to, boards, cloth back, 3s. 6d.
The Pelican Chorus. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Small 4to, varnished cover, cloth back, 3s. 6d.
Nonsense Songs and Stories. In large fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d.
Nonsense Botany and Alphabets. In large fcap. 4to, gilt, 3s. 6d.
Nonsense Birthday Book. In square fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. [trated.
The Owl and the Pussy Cat, &c. In Small 4to, picture cover, 1s. Fully Illus-

RANDOLPH CALDECOTT'S PICTURE BOOKS.

The late R. CALDECOTT'S inimitable Picture Books are now issued in the following three styles:— [boards, each 6s.

I.—In two volumes, large square 4to, cloth gilt, coloured edges and bevelled

COLLECTIONS OF PICTURES AND SONGS. 1st Series.
COLLECTIONS OF PICTURES AND SONGS. 2nd Series.

II.—In four sections, large square 4to, art linen, red edges, each 2s. 6d.

R. CALDECOTT'S PICTURE BOOK. No. 1.
R. CALDECOTT'S PICTURE BOOK. No. 2.
THE HEY DIDDLE DIDDLE PICTURE BOOK.
THE PANJANDRUM PICTURE BOOK.

III.—In 16 parts, square 4to, picture covers, sewed, each 6d.

WALTER CRANE'S PICTURE BOOKS.

PANPIPES: A Book of Old Songs. Newly Arranged, with Accompaniments by THEO. MARZIALS. With Coloured Plates. Price, 5s. In small 4to, varnished picture boards, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE BABY'S OPERA: A Book of Old Rhymes, with New Dresses. With Coloured Pictures.

THE BABY'S BOUQUET: A Fresh Bunch of Old Rhymes and Tunes. With Coloured Pictures.

THE BABY'S OWN ÆSOP: Being Fables condensed in Rhyme, with Portable Morals and Coloured Pictures.

WALTER CRANE'S PAINTING BOOK. With 12 Outline Pictures to Paint, and a Coloured Example for each. Small 4to, sewed picture cover. Price 1s.

LALLA ROOKH: An Oriental Romance. By Thomas Moore A Choicely Illustrated Edition, printed on superfine plate paper. With 101 Illustrations by W. H. LOW, KENYON COX, E. H. GARRETT, and others. In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges. Price 6s.

NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE BUNKUM BOOK: A Topsy-Turvy Tale. 32 Full- page Pictures in Colours by MAUD TRELAWNY. With descriptive verses by AUBREY HOPWOOD. Royal 4to oblong, varnished picture boards, cloth back. Price 6s.

By the Author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

TWO LITTLE PILGRIMS' PROGRESS: A Story of the City Beautiful. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT. With 12 Original Illustrations by R. W. MACBETH, A.R.A. In square medium 8vo, cloth gilt. Price 3s. 6d.

THE FORTUNES OF CLAUDE. By Edgar Pickering. With 6 Full-page Plates and Initial Letters, specially designed by Lancelot Speed. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

MY FRIEND ANNE: A Story of the Sixteenth Century. By JESSIE ARMSTRONG. With Original Illustrations by G. DEMAIN HAMMOND, R.I. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE NURSERY RHYME BOOK. With upwards of 100 Drawings by L. LESLIE BROOKE, and an Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG. In medium 8vo, cloth gilt. Price 3s. 6d. net.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

ST. NICHOLAS BOOK OF PLAYS AND OPERETTAS. With numerous Illustrations, depicting Scenes, Costumes, &c.

A Complete Catalogue of Christmas Books Post Free on application to

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., 15, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON

Digitized by Google

NEW BOOKS
FROM MR. MELROSE'S LIST.

At 7s. 6d.

BOYS OF OUR EMPIRE.

(First Annual Volume.)

Amongst all the annual Volumes for Boys this is the best, as it is the newest. The leading contents comprise:—

FIVE SERIAL STORIES—

"The Lone Star Rush," by Edmund Mitchell;
"Contraband of War," by B. Aitken;
"Captain Nat's Treasure," by Robert Leighton;
"Chisholm's Chums": a School Story; and
"The Secret of the Wondergat," by Ridgewell Cullum and Charles Wingrove.
All profusely Illustrated.

FIFTY-THREE ARTICLES

on the leading ATHLETIC RECORD HOLDERS, &c., Illustrated by well-known Artists.

"How to Make." A Series of Articles on Carpentry, Modelling, Fretwork, &c., &c.

SHORT STORIES

of Adventure and School Life, by leading writers, abound in hundreds in this volume.

"Talk with the Boys," by the "B. O. E." Chaplain.

"HOW TO BE STRONG."

A Series of Articles and exercises by SANDOW.

LEAGUE CLUB NOTES.

Being a record of the doings of the "Boy's Empire League" in its various branches throughout the Empire. (This League has over 3,000 members).

Twelve Fine-Coloured Plates are given in this volume.

The Volume is splendidly bound in cloth bevelled boards with Specially Designed Cover, and is an ideal gift book for a boy.

ANDREW MELROSE,
16, Pilgrim Street, LONDON, E.C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION'S NEW LIST.

At 5s.

Young England. A Splendid Gift Book for Boys. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth extra bevelled boards. Two Serial Stories "The Emperor's Trumpeter," by ALBERT LEE; and "The Young Reporter," by WILLIAM DRYSDALE. Stories of Life at the Great Public schools, by the Rev. E. E. BRADFORD, M.A. (Oxon). Illustrated Papers on a Boy's Workshop, by GEORGE P. MOON. Talks with Boys, by the Rev. E. C. DAWSON, M.A. (Oxon). "Hearts of Oak": Stories of Naval Heroism and Devotion. Natural History Papers on Birds, Animals and Insects of our Islands. Biographical Sketches of Men worth emulating. Sketches and Stories of Life in Our Colonies. Stories of exciting Adventure by DAVID KER, CHARLES EDWARDES, ARGYLL SAXBY, K. M. EADY, GEORGE GALE THOMAS, including "The One-Armed Trumpeter," "My Great Siberian Tiger," "A Wolf Chase on Skates," "The Consul's Peril," &c. Stories of School Life and Sports, by W. E. CULE, B. M. AITKEN, HAROLD AVERY, &c., including "The Captain's Last Goal," "The Great Grogan's Bat," "The Dandy Dundlefords," "The Last Wicket," &c. The Volume opens with a striking Frontispiece by FREDERICK BURTON, entitled "The Death of the Man-Eater."

At 2s.

Golden Rule, The. A Magazine for Young People of both sexes. Well Illustrated, cloth boards. Two Serial Stories: "The Boys of the Red-House," by EVELYN EVERETT GREEN; and "The Sisters of Trenton Manse," by FLORENCE WITTS; Chats on "How to Work," by Professor AMOS WELLS. Christian Endeavour Sketches. Animal Stories. Sketches of Boy and Girl Life in Foreign Lands; "In the Flowery Land," by a Chinese Missionary; "A German Fräulein." "In the Forbidden City." Tales of School Life. Stories of Adventure, including "Cradled in an Iceberg," "How Claudius Proved his Courage," "A Tight Corner," "A Perilous Bed," "How the Squatters Fought the Fire," "Stories of the Killing-time," "The Parliament Man," by W. E. CULE, &c., &c. The Volume is well Illustrated, a special feature being a series of Animal Studies by GEORGE RANKIN.

At 1s.

Child's Own Magazine, The. Sixty-eighth Annual Volume. Full of charming Stories, Poems, &c., and profusely illustrated. Serial Story by MARY E. MURRAY, entitled "The Wonderful Castle," with many illustrations by ROSA C. PETHERICK. A new feature is the series of composite Scripture Pictures by M. AYOUB, illustrating the International Bible Lessons for the Year. "Comical Birds, Beasts, and Fishes," illustrated by T. W. COULDERY. Besides these, there is an abundance of Stories and Sketches, and verses suitable for Juvenile recitations, clever pictorial puzzles, &c., &c. The coloured Plate, entitled "Beauty and the Beast" is from a painting in oils by HARRIETTE SUTCLIFFE. Paper boards cloth extra 1s. 6d.

The Sunday School Union, 57-59, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

TREHERNE'S NEW LIST.

TATTY. A STUDY OF A YOUNG GIRL. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.

Athenæum.—"The book is well thought out and distinctly well written."

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A well-written novel."

EAST OF SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.

Punch.—"Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."

Vanity Fair.—"An unusually able volume.....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.

Saturday Review.—"A remarkable novel."

Westminster Gazette.—"A daring idea is well carried out....the book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."

Western Morning News.—"As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence." [interesting."

Manchester Courier.—"The story is powerful and

Irish Times.—"Shows remarkable promise and power."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.

County Gentleman.—"A very readable book."

Free Lance.—"These stories will be widely read."

To-Day.—"Plenty of vivacity, humour, and 'horsiness.'"

Western Morning News.—"Amusing and readable."

Western Daily Mercury.—"'Mad Lorimer' will have a very successful run.'"

THE WOMAN OF ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.

Bristol Daily Mercury—The characters are skilfully drawn."

Aberdeen Daily Journal.—"Mr. Marvin Dana is a very clever writer, and his story is well-conceived and worked out."

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s. [devised."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Nothing pleasanter could be

The CASE of A MAN WITH HIS WIFE By THEO GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.

Birmingham Daily Gazette.—"Well told and pathetic."

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.
SECOND LARGE EDITION NOW READY.

THREE OCTOBERS: A Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever bit of work."

People.—"As to its cleverness throughout there can be no question."

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., Ltd.,
3, AGAR STREET, CHARING CROSS, W.C.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL, JANUARY, 1902

The FIRST PART of the NEW VOLUME Contains the Opening Chapters of MARY STUART BOYD'S New Novel:

CLIPPED WINGS,

And the other contents are:—

Some Stars of the British Stage. H. W. LUCY
Evan Tanbanc (Complete Story) JOHN FINNEMORE
The North-West Frontier of India R. T. HALLIDAY, M.B.
About the United States Steel Trust
The Mono-Rail E. G. CRAVEN
By "The Devil's Elbow" Pool HAROLD BINDLOSS
The Great Canals of the World G. A. ANGUS
The World's Darkest Island. J. JOHNSTON, A.T.S.
Curious Facts about the Revenue
In the Land of Evangeline Rev. R. WILSON
Literary Relics of Value .. H. MACFARLANE
Ginger Grubbers of Central America R. W. CATER
A Cold December "SANSTENE."
The Month: Science and Arts

CHRISTMAS NUMBER CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL, 1s.

A Second Edition of this Splendid Christmas Number is now on Sale at all Booksellers.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL FOR 1902.

If you have not already ordered Chambers's Journal for 1902, the undernoted Order Form to your Bookseller will secure a regular delivery of the Magazine.

To Mr.....
Bookseller,
.....
Please send CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL monthly,
.....
.....
.....

W. & R. CHAMBERS, Ltd., London & Edinburgh.

Evolution and Its Bearing on Religions.
By A. J. DADSON.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., LTD., Paternoster Square, E.C.

Spectator.—"VIVID AND REALISTIC."
Academy.—"WANTS NOTHING OF HUMAN INTEREST."

BY COMMAND OF THE PRINCE.

New Large and Revised Edition now ready of this First Book by a New Writer,

JOHN LAWRENCE LAMBE.

Westminster Review.—"A SPLENDID STORY. . . . THIS FASCINATING BOOK."
Christian World.—"THIS ABSORBING STORY. . . . THERE IS FASCINATION IN DOUBLE MEASURE."
Daily Telegraph.—"A POWERFUL NOVEL. . . . WHEN THE AUTHOR PLUNGES INTO HIS STORY HE HOLDS THE READER'S ATTENTION TO THE END."

SOME BOOKS FOR XMAS.

BARRY SULLIVAN AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES. By R. M. SILLARD. Two vols. Illustrated. 21s. net.

THE CONFESSIONS OF A CARICATURIST. By HARRY FURNISS. Over 300 Illustrations, 32s.

BEFORE I FORGET. Being the Autobiography of a Chevalier d'Industrie. Written by ALBERT CHEVALIER. Illustrated. 16s. net.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF GIROLAMO SAVONAROLA. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Translated by Linda Villari. New and cheaper edition in one volume. Fully illustrated. Cloth, large crown, 7s. 6d.

LIFE AND TIMES OF NICCOLO MACHIAVELLI. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Revised edition. Translated by Linda Villari. 1 vol., Illustrated. Demy, 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

GIOVANNI SEGANTINI: His Life and Work. By L. VILLARI. Upwards of 80 Illustrations. Cloth. 21s. net.

OLD DUTCH TOWNS AND VILLAGES OF THE ZUIDERZEE. By W. J. TUIN and J. G. VELDHEER. With many quaint woodcut Illustrations by J. G. Veldheer and W. O. J. Nieuwenkamp. Cloth, 21s.

INTRODUCTORY STUDIES IN GREEK ART. By JANE E. HARRISON. Fourth edition. Map and 10 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS. WALES. By O. M. EDWARDS, Lecturer on Modern History, at Lincoln College, Oxford.

"BRIEF GLIMPSES." A handsome illustrated handbook, explaining how the famous "Story of the Nations" Series may be purchased on the INSTALMENT SYSTEM at an ENORMOUS REDUCTION.

This handbook contains 56 specimen full-page illustrations, 54 pages of text, portraits of some of the authors, a complete list of the volumes, with particulars of the writers and Press reviews and criticisms. It will be sent you free of charge on your remitting simply the cost of postage, three halfpence.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

THE WOULD-BE-GOODS. A Continuation of "The Treasure Seekers." By E. NESBIT. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE TREASURE SEEKERS. By E. Nesbit. Fully pictured. 6s.

NINE UNLIKELY TALES FOR CHILDREN. By E. NESBIT. Profusely Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TWO BUSYBODIES. By Mrs. S. G. Arnold. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MARGARET HETHERTON. A Book for Girls. By E. L. KIFSOW. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE BLUE BABY, and Other Stories. By MRS. MOLESWORTH. Author of "Carrots," &c., &c. Illustrated. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 2s 6d "F. C. G."

TALES TOLD IN THE ZOO. By F. Carruthers GOULD and his Son, F. H. CARRUTHERS GOULD. Fully Illustrated by "F. C. G." Crown 4to, 6s.

THE BOY AND THE ANGEL: Discourses for Children. By Rev. JOHN BYLES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Second Impression.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF LEWIS CARROLL (Rev. C. L. Dodgson). By S. D. COLLINGWOOD. With about 100 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.

GOOD NOVELS AT 6s. EACH. "Rita," "A Jilt's Journal"—Stacpoole, "The Bourgeois"—Barr (Amelia E.), "Trinity Bells"—Becke (Louis), "York the Adventurer"—Baker (J.), "A Double Choice"—Fraser (J.), "Death the Showman"—Mann (Mary E.); "The Mating of a Dove"—Barr (Amelia E.), "Souls of Passage"—John Oliver Hobbes, "Robert Orange"—Bourget (Paul), "The Disciple"—Pidgin, "Quincy Adam Sawyer"—Moore (George), "Sister Teresa"—Andrews (Katherine), "Stephen Kyrle"—Crockett (S. R.), "The Stickit Minister," "The Lilac Sun Bonnet," "The Raiders," "The Grey Man."

A Book to Order for your Library.

A BANKER'S LOVE STORY. By Archibald McILROY, Author of "By Lone Craig-Linnie Burn," &c. Cloth, 6s.

 On receipt of a postcard, Mr. Unwin will furnish an address of a local Bookseller where any of his books may be examined.

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, London

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1546. Established 1869. 21 December, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

NEW TIMES, NEW WATERPROOFS.

'Neath inauspicious skies of old
The Liberal Party, for a shield,
Great G.'s umbrella would unfold.
Now, will they wear a Chesterfield?

The Ballad of Mr. Rook, by G. W. (Mr. George Wyndham), written to amuse his little boy, Percy, during a period of convalescence, is the largest of the Christmas books. The size was probably chosen to give full effect to Mrs. Percy Wyndham's illustrations in colour. There is a spaciousness and tenderness about them uncommon in the work of amateurs. "I dedicate," says the artist, "these pictures to my grandchildren":

Hugo	Yvo	Olivia	Lettice
Guy	Percy	Pamela	Clare
Cynthia	George	Sibell	Wyndham
Mary	Richard	Madeline	Christopher

MISS KATHARINE TYNAN dedicates her volume of collected poems to Mr. George Wyndham. The sections are: "Country Airs," "The Children," "Many Moods," "Shamrocks," "Ballads and Lyrics," "Cuckoo Songs," "Miracle Plays," "A Lover's Breast-Knot," and "The Wind in the Trees." We are glad to meet again that "Spring Longing" which appeared first in the pages of the Pall Mall Gazette:

Often I wish that I might be,
 This gay and golden weather,
Among my father's fields, ah me!
 And he and I together. . . .

And often, often I'm longing still,
 This gay and golden weather,
For my father's face by an Irish hill,
 And he and I together.

OVER £200 has been subscribed to the Blackmore memorial fund, and subscriptions have still to come from America. The monument will be a marble slab affixed to one of the walls of the interior of Exeter Cathedral, with a medallion portrait of Blackmore. The inscription will be quite simple.

MR. J. M. BARRIE, who, it will be remembered, helped to make "Benjamin Swift's" first book known, has written thus to the publishers of Miss Alice Brown's King's End: "I must send you a line about King's End, which has given me uncommon pleasure. Certainly the best novel I have read of late, and world-superior to most that pass for notable. The preacher is beautifully un-caricatured; his sister, the hero and his mother, and the girl and the baby's grandmother, I think a deal of them, and of Miss Alice Brown. If you are writing to her I wish you would give her my compliments and most sincere esteem for this work. I have a very high opinion of King's End. It would be hard lines if so good a piece of work fails to fall into the right hands."

THE poem, A Fire Mist and a Planet, the author of which we have been seeking the past few weeks, has been traced to Professor Carruth. Mr. C. L. Pirkis kindly sends us the full text:

EACH IN HIS OWN NAME.

A fire mist and a planet,
A crystal and a cell;
A jellyfish and a saurian,
And caves where the cavemen dwell;
Then a sense of law and beauty,
And a face turned from the clod—
Some call it Evolution
And others call it God.

A haze on the far horizon,
The infinite tender sky;
The ripe, rich tints of the cornfields,
And the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland
The charm of the golden-rod—
Some of us call it Autumn,
And others call it God.

Like the tide on a crescent sea beach,
When the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings
Come welling and surging in—
Come from the mystic ocean
Whose rim no foot has trod—
Some of us call it Longing,
And others call it God.

A picket frozen on duty,
A mother starved for her brood,
Socrates drinking the hemlock,
And Jesus on the rood;
The million who, humble and nameless,
The straight, hard pathway trod—
Some call it Consecration,
And others call it God.

Vanity Fair album is always welcome. It is, at any rate, much more amusing than most gift books. Of the fifty-one cartoons of the eminent in the 1901 volume, three are literary personalities. White-bearded, sombrely clothed, Tolstoy stands. There is a glint of severity in his eye. Possibly he is thinking of the secretary of the Doukhobór Committee and that returned cheque. Ibsen looks too young. "Snapp" has missed the brooding dignity of the face; but the tan gloves, the gold-knobbed stick, and the silk hat are life-like enough. M. Edmund Rostand looks like the hoarding picture of "The Last of the Dandies." He is described in the text as "a dandily-dressed cigarette-smoker of nervous manners."

Digitized by Google

The Hampstead Annual, 1901, contains much good reading. Mr. S. Squire Sprigge opens the number with an appreciation of Sir Walter Besant, whose loss is deeply felt in Hampstead. The most striking literary article is Dr. Richard Garnett's essay on "Sir Francis Palgrave as a Precursor of Ruskin." Sir Francis was the father of Sir Francis Turner Palgrave, of Golden Treasury renown, and was Deputy Keeper of the Records, and the author of several books of history, of which Dr. Barnett says: "It was at once his strength and his weakness to possess a mind of such originality as frequently to deviate into the quaint and eccentric. . . . No writer requires to be read with more caution, but his paradoxes are frequently more instructive than the sobriety of less original minds." But what of Ruskin? Well, Palgrave had an article called "The Fine Arts in Florence" in the Quarterly Review of June, 1840. In this article he laid down the following proposition:

> Art is the expression of the mind of a people.
> Artists were originally craftsmen, and art partook more or less of the nature of a trade.
> Painting was at first entirely subservient to architecture.
> Machine-made work and the excursive division of labour are destructive to art.

Here are Ruskin's doctrines, without doubt. Dr. Garnett proceeds to prove his point by quotation, and adds:

> There is no thought of detracting from the illustrious position of Ruskin in thus pointing out his obligations to a predecessor. Just because Modern Painters and The Stones of Venice are such great books, they must necessarily owe much to predecessors. That Ruskin would not be unacquainted with Palgrave, in so far as Palgrave had treated the themes upon which Ruskin was to expatiate, is a moral certainty. He would not overlook an essay on Florentine art, published in so important a journal as the Quarterly just before his own departure for Italy; and when he afterwards travelled in Lombardy and Venetia Palgrave's guide must have been constantly in his hands. There can be no doubt, we think, that Palgrave's views formed an element in his mental equipment, though his permeation with them may have been slow and imperceptible and he may never have distinctly recognised the extent of his obligation.

Hazell's Annual, 1902, is with us in all its freshness, and again we can admire the fulness and selective ability shown in the summary of the year's literature to which twenty-one closely packed columns are devoted. New topical subjects and biographies are introduced as freely as ever. The information concerning the Boer war is brought up to November 13; that being so, it was possible, we think, to have chronicled the completion of Mr. Murray's edition of Byron's Letters in the literary summary; only the fifth volume is mentioned.

At the price of One Shilling net the Daily Mail Year-Book is an admirable publication. Only two columns are given to "Authors and Books of 1901," but a good deal is said in them. Whether the following statement is fully warranted we are unable to say: "The American system of advertising and selling through the medium of newspapers has apparently not come to stay, as the boom which set in a few years ago is evidently exhausted." The following note is interesting: "Another factor [in influences on the book trade] has been the sixpenny novel. During the year there has been some 200 new volumes issued, each having a sale of from 20,000 to 100,000. If an average be taken of 40,000 it means that 8,000,000 of these books have been issued during 1901. This has materially affected the sixpenny and other magazines, many of them showing a considerable falling off in their sales; but the high-water mark has been reached with this class of literature, and already a decline is 'perceptible.'" The Daily Mail genius for selection and compression is seen in every page of this Year-Book, which is edited by Mr. Percy L. Parker.

A "Glasgow Scot" sends to a contemporary his opinion of Mr. George Douglas's The House with the Green Shutters. Replying to a review of this story, he makes the following points:

> 1. Barrie's Thrums is by no means the same place as Barbri. There is as much difference between their inhabitants as between a Newcastle "Geordie" and a Devonshire farmer. 2. The descriptions of the pompous parish minister, of the vile, gossiping men (not women) of Barbri, of young Gourlay's return from college (winner of the Raeburn Prize), of the pomp and circumstance with which he left home to begin his last session in Edinburgh, etc., require a Scot to appreciate them fully. 3. The ends of old Gourlay, young Gourlay, Mrs. Gourlay, and of Janet are sufficiently tragic and narrated with wonderful power. 4. Anyone who has lived in Scotland—at least in the rural districts, knows that Douglas is much nearer the actual truth than Barrie or Ian Maclaren. Byron spoke of the Rev. George Crabbe as "nature's stern painter, but the best," and that description equally applies to Mr. George Douglas.

To the holiday number of the New York Journal's "Saturday Review" Mr. Richard le Gallienne contributes the following opinion: "If I were asked to name the most distinguished book produced in America during 1901, what other answer could I give than Mrs. Wharton's Crucial Instances? Mrs. Wharton is the John Oliver Hobbes of America. . . . Always, of course, speaking for one's self, Mrs. Wharton is one of the few surviving writers of English who write as if they were intended to be read. Within her limits, which she knows probably better than any critic can tell her, she is a real writer. She is not an energetic person who could thrivingly have done something else just as well. She was born to write."

Biography is just now the most discussed branch of literature. Commenting on Lord Rosebery's recent Edinburgh address, and the biographical quarrel of the moment, the New York Nation points out that no offence is more generally laid at the biographer's door than failure in frankness. "As Thackeray virtually dared the novelists of his day, himself included, to paint the picture of a man as unsparingly as Fielding had done in Tom Jones, so there is a pretty constant suspicion that most of the 'lives' on the book-stalls have been pretty thoroughly pruned in a spirit of charity. This suspicion has led to a counter tendency in biography, and to a series of 'real' Shelleys, Byrons, Washingtons, etc., in which the 'real' means usually 'objectionable' or 'immoral.' Of course, this is only to replace an indiscretion of friendliness by an indiscretion of unfriendliness. But it is probable that what often seems cowardice in the biographer is rather inexpertness. The enormous mass of material that is at hand for a modern man of any prominence is appalling. Few will handle it with the felicity that Mr. Scudder has shown in his Lowell. The great majority will fumble rather helplessly with the mass, and draw out what seems superficially most attractive. This procedure may well deserve the kind of reprehension it is certain to incur from Mr. Henley and professional truth-tellers generally, but the criticism really lies less against the character than the judgment of the biographer."

Biography in collaboration is not very common, but an instance is found in the little Life of Cardinal Newman, by

Digitized by Google

Mr. A. R. Waller and Mr. G. H. S. Burrow, just added to the "Westminster Biographies" series. The authors say in their preface that they have, as far as possible, used materials other than those to be found in the Apologia," in the hope that this little book might provide illustrations to that great book—illustrations which hitherto have been scattered through many volumes." This is sensible, as, indeed—in small biographies—is any limitation which gives the Life an air of free and select service rather than of fulness that can hardly hold itself together. We shall return to this little book.

A good illustrated catalogue of autograph letters makes excellent reading, even for those who have not money to spend on autographs. Messrs. Sotheran, of Piccadilly, have just issued such a catalogue. It includes a collection of Byron MSS. which the entire year's income of a fairly prosperous literary man would not buy. Messrs. Sotheran give in facsimile part of one MS. name, Byron's draft of that extraordinarily fine composition, the "Epistle to Augusta," in which his easy strength and fluency is seen at its best:

> My sister! my sweet sister! if a name
> Dearer and purer were, it should be thine;
> Mountains and seas divide us, but I claim
> No tears, but tenderness to answer mine.
> Go where I will, to me thou art the same—
> A loved regret which I would not resign.
> There are yet two things in my destiny—
> A world to roam through, and a home with thee.

There is a letter of Boswell to Garrick, mentioning Gray's Elegy, Paoli, "our friend Mr. Samuel Johnson," etc. This is priced £15 15s. Referring to the death of Gray, Boswell says:

> Since I am upon the serious subject of Death I can not help expressing to one who feels as you do, that I am affected with much melancholy on the death of Mr. Gray. His Elegy in a Country Church Yard, has been long like a part of myself, and many passages in his other Poems, glance across my Soul with a most enlivening force. I never saw Mr. Gray, but my old and most intimate friend, the Reverend Mr. Temple, Rector of Mamhead in Devonshire, knew him well. He knew his foibles: but admired his genius, and esteemed his virtues.

He proceeds:

> I have just been enjoying the very great happiness of a visit from my illustrious friend, Pascal Paoli. He was two nights at Auchinleck, and you may figure the joy of my worthy father and me at seeing the Corsican Hero in our romantick groves.

A letter from Charlotte Brontë, priced £7 7s., has some interesting criticism:

> I have read David Copperfield, it seems to me very good—admirable in some parts. You said it had affinity to Jane Eyre. It has, now and then—only what an advantage has Dickens in his varied knowledge of men and things! I am beginning to read Eckermann's Goethe—it promises to be a most interesting work. Honest, simple, single-minded Eckermann! Great, powerful, giant-souled, but also profoundly egotistical, old Johann Wolfgang von Goethe! He was a mighty egotist—I see he was: he thought no more of swallowing up poor Eckermann's existence in his own than the whale thought of swallowing Jonah.

For the MS. of Charlotte Brontë's uncompleted novel, Willie Ellin, her last literary effort, only £31 10s. is asked. Only two chapters of this story were written, and these, we understand, are to be published for the first time shortly. One or two Dickens items, which one rather grieves to see in a catalogue, are letters relating to his greatest family trouble. There is also, for £5 5s., the telegram despatched by his son for medical aid from London when Dickens was under his fatal seizure. Here is a curious item:

> DRYDEN (John, Poet Laureate) A.L.S., 1. p. 4to., Nov. 23rd, 1698, to Mrs. STEWARD (his cousin, daughter of Mrs. Creed): a characteristic letter, closely written, containing an interesting but very coarse account of a JOURNEY by COACH from TICHMARSH to LONDON, with a distressingly fat and objectionable lady passenger, and how the occupants of the coach successfully conspired to get rid of her, in spite of which Dryden went home sick, "and kept my house for three weeks together" (excessively rare), £55.

For £4 4s. you may buy a Samoan letter of Robert Louis Stevenson's to Mr. Baxter, in which he says: "Your honoured father has been known to complain of the great Mr. Stevenson, and I suspect if you were to interrogate him adroitly, he would extend the same condemnation to the great Mr. Henley."

THE days of powder, puffs, and literary patrons are faintly adumbrated in the dedication which Mr. Alexander F. Baillie prefixes to his history of the Oriental Club, which we review elsewhere. It runs:

> TO A GENEROUS PATRON
>
> OF
>
> LITERATURE AND THE ARTS,
>
> BARON ALFRED CHARLES DE ROTHSCHILD,
>
> GRAND CROSS OF THE ORDER OF FRANCIS JOSEPH,
>
> A TRUSTEE OF THE NATIONAL GALLERY,
>
> ETC., ETC.,
>
> THIS WORK IS INSCRIBED
>
> BY HIS OBEDIENT SERVANT,
>
> THE AUTHOR.

MORE "howlers." We begin to suspect the existence of a secret factory. The University Correspondent has just offered and awarded a prize of one guinea for the best collection of these productions. From those sent in the following are selected by our contemporary as "good, bad and indifferent":

> Ecoute mes soupirs.—Cut off my eyebrows.
> Pêchant pour grenouilles dans une mare.—Fishing for grenadiers on horseback.
> Of whom was this said? "He never smiled again."—William Rufus did this after he was shot by the arrow.
> The cause of the Peasants' Revolt was that a shilling poultice should be put on everybody over 16.
> What is an oasis?—A prickly plant that grows in the dessert.
> What and where are the Pyramids?—The Pyramids is a kind of nightlights as is generally used in the bedrooms, but you can get Clark's as well.
> What do you know of Dryden and Buckingham?—Dryden and Buckingham were at first friends, but soon became contemporaries.
> What is Milton's chief work?—Milton wrote a sensible poem called the "Canterbury Tails."
> A Caesura (in verse) is when a foot has more than two halves.
> One semibreve equals two minions and one crocket four semiskews.
> A palimpsest is a disease among cattle in South Africa.
> An optimist is a man who looks after your eyes, and a pessimist is a man who looks after your feet.
> The Chiltern Hundreds are spirits put in cheese to make it mouldy.

Digitized by Google

Bibliographical.

No doubt, any series of books dealing with "English Men of Letters" ought to include a volume on Robert Browning. At the same time, it can scarcely be said that such a work is absolutely a desideratum at this moment. It was only the other day that Mr. Arthur Waugh produced a concise and concentrated account of the poet, even more slender than the Life by Mr. William Sharp (1890), which in its turn was even more slender than the Life by Mrs. Sutherland Orr (1891). Then there is the Personalia of Mr. Gosse (1890), and the anecdotic details in Mr. Oscar Browning's introduction to certain works of his namesake (1896-7); above all, there is the collection of Letters by Browning and his wife (1899). For the time being, we seem pretty well supplied with what may be called Browning matter. What we really want is a comprehensive, systematic, clear, and readable estimate of Browning's poetry, and that we are taught to expect from Mr. Stopford Brooke. At present, I take it, the Nettleship volume (1890) has held the field against all comers hitherto.

John Henry Newman is the subject of the latest of the little "Westminster Biographies," to which the authors append a modest bibliography of Newman memoirs, and so forth. Of course, they mention the Apologia, and the Letters, and the monographs by R. H. Hutton (1890), F. W. Newman (1891), and E. A. Abbott (1892); they also mention, very wisely, the reminiscences of the Oxford Movement by Dean Church and Mr. Mozley, and the Lives of Pusey, W. G. Ward, Wiseman, Manning, Keble, and so forth, in which Newman figures so largely. They might have mentioned the biographical sketch of Newman, written by Mr. H. J. Jennings, published in 1881, and reprinted in 1892; also, the Short Life by J. H. Fletcher (1890). Of all the monographs the most satisfactory, perhaps, is that by Hutton. Dr. Alexander Whyte, who has published this week an "appreciation" of Newman, is a Scots Presbyterian minister, of broader views than most of his colleagues.

A notable feature of the new biography of Lowell by Mr. Scudder is the appendix, running to 27 pages, which embodies "A List of the Writings of James Russell Lowell, arranged as nearly as maybe in order of publication." This begins with 1837, and ends with last year, which witnessed the publication of three sets of verses in The Atlantic Monthly. The List, which particularises not only volumes but separately-published lyrics and essays, is longer, no doubt, than is required by the average English reader, or, indeed, by the ordinary English student of literature. Mr. Scudder's work, however, was prepared in the first place for the American public, and, in any case, there is much in the List for which many English people will be grateful. It will be observed that the posthumous publications are quite numerous, including the Latest Literary Essays and Addresses (1892), The Old English Dramatists (1892), the Letters (1893), the Last Poems (1895), the Impressions of Spain (1899), two privately-printed brochures (1896-7), and various odds and ends in prose and verse.

It is to be feared that the late Mr. F. W. Robinson had somewhat lost touch with the great bulk of the reading public for some years before his death. He belonged to the last generation of novel-writers, and did not quite adapt himself to the new conditions. Nevertheless, he produced between 1891 and 1898 eight stories of varying dimensions, his last being (I believe) All They Went Through, published in the last-named year. That Mr. Robinson had, however, still some popularity to boast of is seen in the fact that between 1890 and 1900 ten of his works came out in a new edition—A Very Strange Family and Slaves of the Ring (1890), Jane Cameron (Female Convict), Female Life in Prison, and Prison Characters Drawn from Life (1892), Grandmother's Money and No Church (1897), Anne Judge (Spinster), The Bridge of Glass, and A Woman in the Dark (1900). Of such of these as are novels, Grandmother's Money, No Church, and Anne Judge (Spinster), seem to be those which have most vitality left in them.

I believe I am correct in saying that Mr. Murray's new edition of Stanley's Life of Dr. Arnold is the first that has appeared—with his imprimatur—in one volume. An edition in two volumes was published by Mr. Murray in 1881-2, and this has had to serve the public for twenty years. Ward and Lock, of course, have printed the book, but not in its copyright form. The Life was published originally in 1844, but in 1881 Dean Stanley revised it, and it is that edition (the twelfth) which must be accepted as the standard and authoritative one, and which is now reprinted in handy and cheaper form by Mr. Murray. It includes, by the way, among its appendices, Matthew Arnold's touching tribute to his father in "Rugby Chapel," also a brief bibliography of Dr. Arnold.

The military honours which accompanied the funeral of the late "E. Livingston Prescott" (Miss Spicer Jay) have probably brought her to the notice of many who knew little or nothing about her literary products. It is possible nowadays for an author to be greatly in vogue among one section of the population, and almost wholly unknown to the other sections. Miss Jay appears to have begun story-writing in 1895, when she published The Apotheosis of Mr. Tyransley. Her earliest military books, it would seem, were Scarlet and Steel: Modern Military Episodes and Rip's Redemption: a Trooper's Story, both issued in 1897. In the following year came Red-coat Romances, Dearer than Honour, The Measure of a Man, and A Small, Small Child; while to 1899 belong Helot and Hero: Sundry Developments of Love and War and Illusion: a Romance of Modern Egypt. This, when we add to it Mask and Martyr (1896), would seem to be a full list of Miss Jay's publications.

The remarks I made the other day in regard to the expiration of the copyright of A Tale of Two Cities do not, perhaps, apply so fully to the case of The Mill on the Floss. Of course, that story can now be obtained in a delightfully cheap, as well as handy, form in Messrs. Blackwood's "Warwick" edition of the Works; but there it is part of a series, with a "number" of its own, and many might like to buy it in a wholly separate form. There was a three-and-sixpenny edition four years ago, but nowadays the "Man in the Street" clamours for his classics at fourpence-halfpenny.

The promised biography of Charles Lever by Mr. Edmund Downey will be awaited with interest, and the more so as it is said that Mr. Downey has among his materials a good many of Lever's letters. There is already in existence a Life of Lever by Mr. W. J. Fitzpatrick, a revised edition of which was published by Ward and Lock in 1884 and reprinted by Mr. Downey himself in 1896. Mr. Fitzpatrick's performance struck me as rather dull, and Mr. Downey should have little difficulty in improving upon it.

With reference to some former remarks of mine anent the exclusion of Bulwer-Lytton from the various series of "Great Writers," "Men of Letters," and so forth, a correspondent tells me of a book published in 1879, entitled Great Novelists, and dealing with Scott, Thackeray, Dickens, and Lytton. Bulwer, nevertheless, has had very little attraction for the critical fraternity, and a really just and adequate estimate of him as a writer has yet to be produced. The same correspondent asks me if a lady described in a recent anthology as "The Queen's Poetess," is "a really celebrated writer." I can only say that until I opened that book I had never met even with the lady's name.

A second correspondent, noting my exhortation to Mr. Lang to "verify his allusions," inquires whether I have not misquoted the advice ascribed to Dr. Routh. My desire was merely to "adapt" the Rev. Dr.'s phrase.

THE BOOKWORM.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

A Great Minor Poet.

The English Poems of Richard Crashaw. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Edward Hutton. (Methuen. 1s. 6d.)

Not an inappropriate publication for the nearing Christmastide is this little edition of the poet who wrote the lovely song on the birth of Christ, In the Holy Nativity. Mr. Hutton, of course, cannot, and does not, claim any original honours as an editor. The way had been cleared for him, not only by Dr. Grosart's bulky edition of the complete Crashaw, but by Mr. Tutin's complete edition of the English Poems. Why, by the way, does Mr. Hutton adopt Mr. Tutin's exact title, which cannot but lead to confusion, unfair to that gentleman, who has laboured so zealously to promote the love of Crashaw? The present edition is not quite complete, even with regard to the English poems. It omits some twelve pieces from the Tanner MSS., but it contains all that the lover of Crashaw really wants; while its cheapness and neatness make it very handy and welcome.

With the exception we have noted, this tiny volume gives the reader all but Crashaw's Latin poems, including even his translations. For, like Vaughan, and more even than Herbert, Crashaw's work is slender and exquisite. He is a Minor Poet (name "soiled with all ignoble use!")—one of those lesser jewels half-obscured in the opulent English crown of poets; his name scarce uttered but with an ignorant jeer before the day of Coleridge, who affirmed that the Hymn to St. Teresa in some strange way inspired Christabel. One can half understand it, for Crashaw is an artist to the finger-tips, one of the forerunners of that elaborate modern art which diversely blossoms in Shelley and Coleridge, as Vaughan intimates Wordsworth. Had he but possessed the control of his own gift, indeed, no minor rank would have been his; for his great moments are unsurpassable in their kind. So rare an artist, he was also an unsteady artist, of the most capricious taste. Much should be pardoned to one who was an experimenter, trying paths new in English lyric verse, and who died comparatively young (Mr. Hutton, by the way, does not mention the date of his death in the introduction). His sins are virtues which have overshot their mark. He is a wonderful virtuoso, who will follow the most thrilling feat with a flourish of unpardonable eccentricity. Yet the comparison is unjust, in so far as it implies the desire to astonish and display. His passion is rather for close felicity of expression. But his sins are subtly different from those of the modern virtuosos in language. They, at their best, leave you surprised and admiring rather than thrilled: you feel they lay their imagery cold on the anvil, with whatever mastery they beat it out. But when Crashaw's shaping is most perverse, the metal, it is plain, came red from the forge. His fervour and sincerity are never doubtful when his taste is more than doubtful. And always he is the artist in purpose, though his execution for whole passages may fail. You are moved by something of the same feeling as in the childlike quaintnesses of a Pre-Raphaelite painter. Perhaps there are analogies between Crashaw and Botticelli.

His most wonderful feats with language are in "Music's Duel." They are too wonderful, even when they succeed; too conscious in the closeness of their felicity. The nightingale

> Folds in waved notes with a trembling bill
> The pliant series of her slippery song.

The second line moves with the undulant pliancy of chain-mail in sunlight; the phrasing is miraculously complete. And again:

> Trails her plain ditty in one long-spun note
> Through the sleek passage of her open throat,
> A clear unwrinkled song.

The last words are beautiful. Yet you feel that a little of this will go far. It never ceases, and at last becomes too glutinous a sweetness for the most luxurious palate. To see Crashaw's art in a less elaborate mood, however, we need not mutilate by quotation the justly famous "Wishes to a Supposed Mistress." It will suffice to quote part of the lines "On the Death of a Gentleman":

> Now, though the blow that catched him hence
> Stopped the mouth of Eloquence;
> * * * * * *
> Yet if at least she not denies
> The sad language of our eyes,
> We are contented; for than this
> Language none more fluent is.
> Nothing speaks our grief so well
> As to speak nothing. Come then, tell
> Thy mind in tears, whoe'er thou be
> That ow'st a name to misery:
> Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues,
> And there be words not made with lungs,
> Sententious showers, O, let them fall,
> Their cadence is rhetorical.
> Here's a theme will drink th' expense
> Of all thy watery eloquence;
> Weep, then, only be exprest
> Thus much: He's dead; and weep the rest.

A more exquisite phrasing, a more delicate poise of line and couplet, a more adroit yet reticent use of "turn" (as Dryden calls the changes rung upon a word or group of words, like the "turn" upon a note or group of notes in music-, a defter point and sententious sweetness of poetry, could not well be. The versification is as exquisite in its accomplishment as the expression. Crashaw is one of the few masters of the octosyllabic couplet—a so-called "easy" metre, which a mere handful of poets has written finely, though anyone can write it mediocrely. In the art of fine compliment (of which the epitaph is usually a grave form) Crashaw is supreme, along with Dryden and a small number of others—including Donne at his best. The seventeenth century in general had the art of it, as of everything courtly and magnificent in gentlemanliness. The epitaph on Mr. John Ashton, from which Pope borrowed, is another example. And of his exquisite miniature gift, "Love's Horoscope" is an erotic example only inferior to the "Wishes to a Supposed Mistress."

But, of course, the supreme Crashaw is in those ardorous and sensuous religious poems into which he put all his strength—and weakness. There his most extraordinary conceits jostle the most triumphant imagery. And they are both of the one texture—the conceits are the images gone wrong, the images the conceits come right: while the lyric fervour is as sincere in the one case as in the other. Yet the "Nativity" hymn, to a sympathetic taste, is perhaps fine throughout. For once there are no intrusive absurdities. What shall one not quote from the ecstatic outburst:

> It was Thy day, Sweet, and did rise,
> Not from the East, but from Thine eyes!

It is an ecologue between two of the Shepherds, with a chorus of the rest—a felicitous scheme:

> I saw the curled drops, soft and slow,
> Come hovering o'er the place's head;
> Offering their whitest sheets of snow
> To furnish the fair Infant's bed:
> "Forbear," said I; "be not too bold,
> Your fleece is white, but 'tis too cold."

Digitized by Google

I saw the obsequious seraphim
Their rosy fleece of fire bestow,
For well they now can spare their wing,
Since Heaven itself lies here below.
"Well done," said I; but are you sure
Your down so warm will pass for pure?"

No, no, your King's not yet to seek
Where to repose His royal head;
See, see, how soon, his new-bloom'd cheek
'Twixt Mother's breasts is gone to bed.
"Sweet choice," said we, "no way but so
Not to lie cold, yet sleep in snow."

We saw Thee in Thy balmy nest,
Bright dawn of our eternal day!
We saw Thine eyes break from their East,
And chase the trembling shades away.
We saw Thee, and we blest the sight,
We saw Thee by Thine Own sweet light.

It is a triumphant poem. Still more triumphant is the conclusion of the "Flaming Heart"—too well known to quote; while the "Hymn to St. Teresa" is an acknowledged masterpiece:

She never undertook to know
What Death with Love should have to do;
Nor has she e'er yet understood
Why to show love, she should shed blood,
Yet though she cannot tell you why,
She can love, and she can die.

All his own are those sudden tender apostrophes, a kind of divine familiarity which take one by the heart in this, as in other poems:

Farewell house, and farewell home!
She's for the Moors and martyrdom.
Sweet, not so fast!

Not his the fragrant common-sense of Herbert, nor the penetrating remoteness of Vaughan's secret magic. But a luxuriant and flaming fancy, with a loving dexterity of expression, take one by a continual surprise. Even in his most fantastic poem, "The Weeper," you have such things as this:

Sadness all the while
She sits in such a throne as this,
Can do nought but smile,
Nor believes she Sadness is:
Gladness itself would be more glad,
To be made so sweetly sad.

A poet whose very imperfections have the breath of life, the recognition of him steadily grows; and this volume will bring him from the library to the coat-pocket.

A Wonderful Century.

Life and Letters in the Fourth Century. By Terrot Reaveley Glover, M.A. (Cambridge University Press. 10s.)

In spite of the late Professor Freeman, the distinction between ancient and modern history persists. The current classical education stops abruptly with the last satire of Juvenal, before Christianity had become visible in literature. For the teacher of classics is apt to look to language rather than life, and in regard to the reading of historians and philosophers of the fourth century holds—as the Bishop said of the New Testament—that it is "very bad for your Greek." Consequently, to most men of good education, as it is called, the crucial centuries in the history of the Western world are a blank. If they are curious they read Gibbon. But Gibbon's magnificent sweep is too vast for the picking up of minute personal details, and from his pages one gets essential outlines and broad effects rather than intimate insight. In this volume Mr. Glover has taken the opposite course, and supplements such works as those of Gibbon and Milman by a series of sketches of the most prominent characters during one particular century—emperors, historians, poets, theologians, and women—for women had a large share in making the pilgrimage fashionable. Moreover, he has chosen a century of extraordinary and little-exploited interest—the century which comprised, with a margin of allowance, the life of Constantine, the Council of Nicæa, the consecration of Constantinople, the Pagan revival of Julian, the bishopric of Augustine, and the capture of Rome by Alaric. Never, perhaps, in the history of the world was a century of such spiritual import, for the nineteenth century was one of material rather than of moral significance. In this century we see Christianity surviving with ease the last great persecution of the Church, rising with strange quietude from the humble to the seats of the mighty, conquering the abodes of learning, and rising to the throne of the Cæsars. And what is still more remarkable is the existence, in reasonable concord, side by side, of the Pagan philosophies and ideals and the Christian faith; the mutual toleration, which contrasts so strangely with the fury of the Reformation; the Christian endeavour to bring Plato, Virgil, and the rest as witnesses of the new religion, the Pagan willingness to admit Christ into the Pantheon. It was a wonderful century, and one may speculate curiously on what would have happened had not the barbaric invasions turned men's minds from speculation to action, and brought a new force, which threw the world into the crucible once more. But by the time the full shock of those invasions was felt the new religion had fastened its spell. Thus Mr. Glover sums the situation:

> It is hard to form a completely unprejudiced judgment, but the conclusion is forced upon me when I survey the fourth century, its interests and its energies, that the Church had absorbed all that was then vital in the civilised world. It had not assimilated all of the beauty and wisdom of the great Classical period, for much of them was lost to that age and was not to be recovered for centuries. The Church of that day had her weaknesses, she made grave mistakes, and she was not without sins that bore bitter fruit; but she rose superior to all the world around her, and to whatever sphere of work and thought we turn—literature, philosophy, administration—we find her marked off from all her environment by one characteristic it had not and she had—life and the promise of life.

Mr. Glover selects his types with judgment, and sketches them with admirable lucidity, and with sufficient references to contemporary authorities to enable one to check his premises if one does not invariably agree with his conclusions. He begins with Ammianus, that extraordinary man, the friend and admirer of Julian named the Apostate, who saw war, rapine and murder, and wrote history as a war correspondent, with none of the Roman jingoism of Livy, but a frankly human sympathy for human life, whether dating from Syria or elsewhere. And here we may find the effect of the mingling of the streams of Paganism and Christianity, the widened area of the Roman citizenship, and the universal brotherhood of Christ. It is not easy to tell which of these influences produced in Ammianus the reflex action of sympathy with the Syrian child who began life as a captive. But Ammianus supplies a typical instance of the genial toleration of the age which saw Constantius try in vain to convert the warring sects of Christianity to a single belief. Constantius had reached that stage of statesmanship which induced the youthful Gladstone to write his essay on Church and State. And Ammianus might have anticipated Macaulay in laughing both efforts out of court.

But the most fascinating figure of the century is Julian. He was not an Apostate, for he was never a Christian but by compulsion; and the "Vicisti Galilæe" myth is but an epigram fitted by posterity, and admirably fitted, since Julian was a foredoomed failure. His attempt to galvanise the Pagan ideal into new life failed for lack of material.

Digitized by Google

His Paganism may be compared with that of the Presbyterian boy who is kept too closely at the Shorter Catechism. In his boyhood he knew no Christians who were not murderers, libertines, or gloomy kill-joys. A Christian Emperor slew his brother; a Christian Emperor called him from his studies at Athens to take command against the Germans in Gaul. He loathed the task, but he accomplished it; and Mr. Glover's modesty somewhat spoils his otherwise masterly sketch of Julian's career. His ignorance of military matters forbids a criticism of Julian's five years of successful campaigning in Gaul. Such modesty of ignorance is seldom apparent in these days. But one would welcome some enlightening account of this feat of a youth in his twenties, who died in the earliest thirties, leaving behind an undying reputation for the things of the spirit. For that reputation was gained, with posterity at least, during his two years' fling as sole Emperor. His temperament was religious through and through, and had he been given any real knowledge of the Christian spirit he might have fallen into the line of forgotten Emperors. As it was, his knowledge and appreciation of the Christian documents was about on a level with that of Tom Paine and Mr. Bradlaugh (for the fourth century already asked what language the Serpent talked to Eve!). Yet he was enthusiastically moral, himself pure, and sternly adverse to wine-shops and erotic literature. Was there ever a more pathetically futile attempt than Julian's idea of a sort of Pagan Church—a Holy Catholic Hellenism—in which Neo-Platonism was leavened by the doctrine of the Trinity and the old gods were given newly-furbished faces? Even Judaism was worked into the "my religion" of the reactionary Emperor. But he died before he was half-way through his fourth decade. And apart from that, where was the sanction, where the reward, of his system? No syndicate of Platos could buy up Christ from a clown. And Christianity had found in the next world the lever to move the present one—which Archimedes had missed.

Julian was not quite the hysterical weakling that Mr. Glover presents. Surely his Gallic success is against that assumption. But he was a mystic—a disciple to the core, who might to-day be a Christian Scientist or a Theosophist—and a disciple who for a year or two was master of the world. We have taken him and his historian as typical of the Paganism which was being unconsciously undermined by Christianity. Mr. Glover gives fourteen such sketches. And, taken together, they give a wonderful picture of a wonderful age.

The Enthusiast as Biographer.

Barry Sullivan. By Robert M. Sillard. (Unwin. 21s. net.)

This is the work of an enthusiast. Mr. Sillard dates his preface from Dublin, and it is permissible to suspect that it is for Barry Sullivan the Irishman, as well as for Barry Sullivan the actor, that our author finds his admiration stirred. How else can we account for these two volumes, running altogether to 532 pages? "The English-speaking world," says Mr. Sillard of his hero, "pronounced him the most illustrious Shakespearean actor of the latter half of the nineteenth century." Indeed! When and where did "the English-speaking world" make this remarkable pronouncement? That in his best and even in his latest days Sullivan had multitudinous admirers, may at once be admitted. For thirty years or so he was the idol of the "circle," pit, and gallery, not only in London and the provinces, but in America and the Colonies. And he found many journalists to praise him. His first appearance in London was made in 1852, in his thirty-first year. He opened as Hamlet, and was seen in the same year as Alfred Evelyn in "Money." In 1853 came his Claude Melnotte, his Master Walter, and his Othello. In 1855 he played Jaques, the Stranger, and Petruchio, and 1856 brought with it his Benedick. Four years later he essayed Richelieu, Macbeth, Richard III. In 1866 he enacted Faulconbridge, in 1868 Shylock and Charles Surface, and in 1869 Beverley and Matthew Elmore. He was in London again in 1876 and in 1879. In all these parts he was commended, but the standard of critical opinion in the metropolitan Press between 1852 and 1879 was not high. Sullivan was for a time a Triton among the minnows of "leading men"; Phelps was for that period his only competitor. He was destined to pale his intellectual (they were not wholly ineffectual) fires before the superior brilliancy of Irving's. He was, in a sense, the flower and fruit of the old school. He had a good presence and a good voice, and used both to excellent effect. He was always distinct—a very great matter—always careful, always correct. Of inspiration he had none. His Shakespearean emendations were mostly absurd. He did not bewilder his audiences with subtlety, or even with special intelligence. He followed the traditions, and did so well.

He was unlucky, perhaps, in "flourishing" at an epoch when there was practically no contemporary drama. The new plays in which he figured in London included "A Woman's Heart," "Not so Bad as we Seem," "Elopements in High Life," "The Cruel Kindness," "Presented at Court," Spicer's "Alcestes," Saunders's "Love's Martyrdom," "Wife and No Wife," and Fitzball's "Nitocris," not one of which is in the current repertory. A chance for him arrived when he became the original Valence in "Colombe's Birthday," but it was an opportunity of which he could not fully avail himself. His interpretation did not satisfy the best judges. He had, however, his reward in the plaudits of the unsophisticated, and he was mostly loudly saluted where the audiences had an Irish element. On the whole, he did a very good work, for he kept the banner of Shakespeare and the "legitimate" flying during years when there were few to raise it. He was the last of the old school, and prepared the way for the new one. Virtually, his career in London ended in 1869. Irving's may be said to have begun in 1870. As a manager Sullivan was not a success, nor in his productions at the Holborn Theatre in 1869 did he make any attempt at scenic thoroughness or display. He was a "star" actor pure and simple, and latterly did not condescend to conduct rehearsals when on tour. Mr. Sillard would have proved a truer friend to his hero had he compressed his two volumes into one. The biography is too full of padding. Mr. Sillard certainly entitles it Barry Sullivan and His Contemporaries, but the contemporaries might very well have been left alone. As it is, the author's digressions are too numerous and too long. The memoir is a monument of industry as well as of devotion, but it is not impeccable, alas! either in grammar or in statement. It has no literary value whatever. It has not even an index, the absence of which is by no means atoned for by the tables of "contents." Mr. Sillard should not have spoiled his ship for the sake of the extra pennyworth of tar.

The Quiet Man as Autobiographer.

Hand Immemor: Reminiscences of Legal and Social Life in Edinburgh and London, 1850-1900. By Charles Stewart. (Blackwood. 7s. 6d.)

Thousands of men go to and fro in the streets of London every day who, to use Mr. Stewart's expression, have gone through life in medio tutissimus, without adventure, without the sort of distinction which brings notoriety, and yet with distinguished connections and memories of great interest. They have stories to tell worth hearing; they have wisdom of their own and of others worth heeding; and the atmosphere of their lives has been pure and bracing. Give to one of these an easy pen, and you are likely to gain a book of much interest—such a book as this.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Stewart was born in London in the thirties of last century, and there are many still living—Mr. Henry James is one—who venerate the memory of his mother, Mrs. Duncan Stewart. Her company was sought by men like Disraeli, Thackeray, Dickens, Landseer, Millais, and earlier still by Count d'Orsay, Lady Blessington, and Leigh Hunt. We shall not dwell, however, on Mr. Stewart's pedigree or ancestral history. One of his links with the past, however, deserves mention. He tells us that his grandfather was not only present at the battle of Culloden in '45, but used to tell of his having sat on the knee of an old man named James Taylor who had seen Charles I. passing down Whitehall. At his uncle's house in Dumfriesshire, whither he often went as a boy, Thomas Carlyle was a frequent caller, and Mr. Stewart's reminiscences of the Sage are interesting. One of these dates back only to the last days of Carlyle's life, and it is rather remarkable. Froude one day told Mr. Stewart: "I saw Carlyle this morning, and he said to me, 'Froude, I have just been reading an old book, a book that I read very often long ago, but not lately. I thought I would go back to it and see what I thought of it now, and I may tell you that I am greatly disappointed with it. You ask, what is the book? It is the Bible.'". What Carlyle meant is not recorded, and the reader may either adopt Mr. Stewart's interpretation (p. 19), or find his own. In London the boy heard other good talk. One of his father's guests was Henry Thomas Buckle, who would sometimes discourse for twenty minutes at the dinner-table.

> His thoughts and conversation were always on a high level, and I recollect a saying of his which not only greatly impressed me at the time, but which I have ever since cherished as a test of the mental calibre of friends and acquaintances. Buckle said, in his dogmatic way: "Men and women range themselves into three classes or orders of intelligence; you can tell the lowest class by their habit of always talking about persons, the next by the fact that their habit is always to converse about things, the highest by their preference for the discussion of ideas."

In his Edinburgh chapters Mr. Stewart recalls the figures prominent in the Scottish Bar forty years ago. It was abundantly worth while to sketch the portrait of the homely and tempestuous Lord Deas, the kindly and humorous Lord Ardmillan, the easily shocked Lord Cowan, and to put on record a few characteristic scenes in the Courts over which they presided. Once Mr. Stewart assisted, as junior counsel for the Crown, in prosecuting a prisoner for the crime of prison-breaking. He was a highly educated man, and had corrupted a warder. A curious scene took place when Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis, after remarking that this was the worst part of his offence, declared that he must pass a severe sentence:

> The man leant eagerly forward, and, motioning his counsel to sit down, said, in a lofty and impassioned tone: "My Lord, I take a different view. Is there any man, guilty or innocent, of pure life like your Lordship's, or a debased life like mine, who would not have done as I did if he had the need and opportunity? I found the warder corruptible, and I corrupted him; the doors were held open to me, and I had only to walk through them to be free. Is there any man who would not do the like?" The scene was an impressive one. The prisoner, of course, got his added months of imprisonment; but I think there were few in Court who had not a latent doubt whether in logic and in the moral sense the criminal in the dock had not mastered the judge upon the Bench. Inglis told me afterwards that even if it had been seemly for him to argue the point with the prisoner, he would have found himself rather at a loss to reply to him.

The following picture of Tennyson has little of the unexpected, but its confirmation of other portraits is rather piquant:

> With Alfred Tennyson in his latter years I had rather frequent opportunities of meeting, both in London and at his country home. Personal intimacy with great authors is a dangerous experiment, and especially with great poets, for their imaginative writings have stimulated one's ideas about their personality till one foolishly half expects to find their genius displaying itself in every word and action of their daily life. Tennyson fulfilled such an unreasonable ideal perhaps as well as any man could; for his personal appearance, with which everyone is familiar, was, of course, magnificent, and his manners and habits of life were dignified, it a little poetically eccentric. But the adulation which he received among his family and friends was somewhat satiating. I have seen Mrs. Greville, a woman herself of the most brilliant talent, actually prostrate herself on the floor before him, just as I have seen ladies of rank and talent literally sitting at the feet of Sir Henry Irving. Tennyson would have been more than human if he had resisted the effect of this hero-worship. A little niece of mine was one day standing beside his chair; he lifted her up and placed her on his knee for half a minute, and then he put her down, saying, "Now you can say you have sat on Tennyson's knee." It was kindly meant, but there was a self-consciousness in the word and in the act which was not infrequently to be observed in the poet.

Mr. Stewart describes himself as "an obscure man, who has no wish to be otherwise than obscure." We like his book all the better because, however much it is a denial of the letter of his statement, it never departs from its spirit.

Annals of a Great Club.

The Oriental Club and Hanover Square. By Alexander F. Baillie. (Longmans. 25s. net.)

Outwardly this is a noble volume. Inwardly it is, besides a history of the Oriental Club, a mine of curious information about the development of the West End of London, Anglo-Indian life, the originals of some of Thackeray's characters, and the art of losing money in Club management, even to the tune of £75 a year on the single item of mutton chops. We should be inclined to accuse Mr. Baillie of casting too wide a net if he did not cast it to such excellent purpose. His sketch of "Our Square" includes a great deal of matter outside of its area: even a disquisition on that old topic, the exact site of Tyburn gallows; but here, as everywhere, the information is well collected and clearly and entertainingly set forth.

The Oriental Club was founded in 1824, the year in which the first pile of new London Bridge was driven, the first stone of the General Post Office was laid, the National Gallery was opened to the public, and Byron died at Missolonghi. It was designed to meet the needs of the ever-growing numbers of returned Indian officers, and it was such an officer—no less a personage than Major-General Sir John Malcolm, G.C.B.—who brought the scheme to a head. He was a mighty talker before the Lord, and it may be that he wished, in part, to organise an audience, fit though few. Canning entitled him "Bahauder Jaw," and there is a story of his relating at Lord Wellesley's table, as a notable fact, that he and three of his brothers had once met together in India. "Impossible, Malcolm; quite impossible!" said the Governor-General. Malcolm persisted. "No, no," said Lord Wellesley, "if four Malcolms had met we should have heard the noise all over India." The original quarters of the club were in Lower Grosvenor Street, but the migration to Hanover Square took place in 1826. The premises would now seem small for

Digitized by Google

600 members. But as Mr. Baillie explains: "Before the introduction of smoking on a general scale the members would scatter all over the house, and probably in every room find a snuff-box if they had omitted to bring one with them." One of the Committee's first cares was to erect a horse-block outside the entrance in Tenterden Street, and soon it was an ordinary thing for ten or a dozen 'well-groomed cobs and thoroughbreds' to be seen in processional exercise round the Square, while their owners took their ease within in all the glory of Hessian boots, high-rolled collars, brass buttons, and hats of real beaver. Picturing these clubmen of the twenties, Mr. Baillie says: "They jingle their spurs, they strike their boots with their hand-canes, they take snuff, and call for beer, and they swear, ah! how they do swear. I have just a faint recollection of two brothers, both of them Colonels in the Company's service, and both of them members of the Club. They were not only on very friendly terms, but between them there was a real affection; and yet they never met, never saluted one another, without a strong expletive—not to say a curse—upon their lips. It meant absolutely nothing, but they followed what had been the fashion in the days of the Regency and of George IV."

To Thackeray the Oriental Club was a nest of character studies. Mr. Baillie points out as a nice point in the chronology of Vanity Fair that Mr. Joseph Sedley, on his first return to Europe when the century was in his teens, "drove his horses in the Park; he dined at the fashionable taverns (for the Oriental Club was not as yet invented); he frequented the theatres, and so on;" but when the Collector came home in 1827 "his very first point, of course, was to become a member of the Oriental Club, where he spent his mornings in the company of his brother Indians, where he dined, or whence he brought home men to dine." It is certain that Major-General Charles Montauban Carmichael, Major Henry Carmichael-Smyth, and nearly all the other reputed originals of Colonel Thomas Newcome, C.B., were members of the Oriental Club. Mr. Baillie prints a letter he has received recently from Mr. David Freemantle Carmichael, nephew of the two officers named, stating: "When The Newcomes were coming out I said to Thackeray, 'I see where you got your Colonel.' 'To be sure you would,' he replied, 'only I had to angelicise the old boys a little.'" Topographical and biographical details of singular interest abound in Mr. Baillie's pages, which will appeal to many students of London social life who have no personal connection with the prosperous and exclusive Club in Tenterden Street. The portraits and topographical views add greatly to the interest of the work.

To What End?

The Thrush: A Book of Original Poems. (Simpkin, Marshall.)

The garden of literature is overgrown with the weed of the amateur. As an occasional product, he is not unwelcome; it would be a surly keeper of the literary grounds (to change the metaphor) who would warn him off altogether. Your amateur of parts has often done better work than your dull professional—nay, than many professionals not dull. He has sometimes been a man of genius. But amateurs in battalions, in armies, in hosts, settling on the land like locusts, and consuming the green leaf of literature! The amateur novelist, of course, forms the main body of the invasion; but next to these comes the monstrous regiment of amateur poets. They mainly help to discredit the already discredited name of poet. In all ages clever men have written verses, without conceiting themselves poets; it was thought a graceful accomplishment, improving even a prose-writer's command of language, and giving an added touch to the cultivation of a gentleman. Quite rightly. Nowadays, with "diffused education"—of sorts, everyone can write verses—of sorts. But we should hesitate to say that the verses they write yield an added cultivation—of any sorts. Formerly, though most clever and cultivated men wrote verses, only a fool or a poet published them. But the day is fast nearing when only a poet will not publish them. It will be the one distinction left him. His "sugared sonnets" he will hand about in MS. to the "private friends" and friends of the Muses (a narrow remainder) who solely and really want them.

Raleigh and Sidney were amateurs—immortal amateurs. But Raleigh did not think of collecting his Occasional Poems in a neat little æsthetic volume, and we doubt whether Sidney's poems were collected during his life. Certainly they had no obliging periodical which would house their stray effusions, and send them forth collected in a neat yearly or quarterly volume. Such, for example, as the volume of The Thrush, which has prompted these remarks. It is the latest development of the amateur poet that he should have a whole periodical devoted mainly to himself, and the providing for him of a circle of admirers. It does not induce consolatory thoughts. For the periodical, after all, is simply a middleman; it brings supply into touch with demand. We must suppose, therefore, that there is a public, however limited, which delights to read verse mediocre and feebly derivative. For it is the characteristic of this verse that, while it reflects the fashion of the time, it is not marked even in its derivation. You can seldom say: "It is from this or that poet." It is a kind of featureless abstraction from many modern poets; the reduction of all to the lowest common denominator (to adapt the image of an Irish speaker). Some poets who are more than amateurs, a few even of varying eminence, have graced the periodical by their presence, giving it a show of distinction which seems to us no less unfortunate than misleading. Their credentials are carefully proclaimed in the "Contents," as are those of all who have any credentials (that is, published volumes) to their names. For a writer may have published books, yet be essentially an amateur. But even those who are honourably known seem apt to be depressed by the company into which they have strayed. Mr. Henley, Dr. Garnett, the author of "Father O'Flynn," are dispirited and dispiriting. Miss Nora Hopper and Mr. Norman Gale maintain something of their level; while one lady who must be considered, perhaps, an amateur, Lady Margaret Sackville, contributes one of the best poems in the book, Themistocles. But for the most part it is a dreary swamp of mediocrity, seldom relieved even by absurdity. The writers are far too unadventurous for that. They know what good literary manners are, and copy them with a fatal drawing-room evenness of respectability. Here is a strictly average specimen of this strictly average verse—Tolstoy, by Mr. Tindall-Atkinson:

> The voice of one who cries upon the shore
> Across an ever-widening human sea,
> Whose waves are wistful faces: manfully
> Cries a new teaching, urging evermore
> A love of man to man unthought before,
> A pride of life, a pride of poverty,
> A claim to follow nature's liberty
> And cast behind the slavery of yore.
> The hand of one who 'mid the marching years
> A flag of faith in proud unfurling flings
> About a weary people, till with breath
> New stirring 'neath the shadows of old fears,
> They see a fair young hope with outstretched wings,
> A spirit rising from the dust of death.

It would be simply tedious to quote further verse where careful uninspired utterance meets conscientious uninspired thought. This, in little, is the volume at large. The few better poems we have spoken of are nowise typical, and therefore we do not quote them as specimens of the book; while their authors may be better studied in their own books. And the whole question is: "Why?" What elevation of public taste can be accomplished by loosing on it this periodical wave of mediocrity? What authors here find utterance who have not found their own utterance; or, not having found it, had not better been silent? To love no poetry is merely a loss; to love poetry like this, an evil.

Digitized by Google

Other New Books.

Christmas at the Mermaid. By Theodore Watts-Dunton. Flamus of Parnassus XI. (Lane. 1s.)

Every artist, whether of the active or passive type, must feel that hymn-tunes and Christmas cards in England are constantly vulgar. Themes which in other countries have given, and give, creative genius its first inspiration seem here especially reserved for the illiterate composer and the anonymous scribbler of mean verses for intolerable designs. Many a mind—naturally religious in a mystic sense—has been driven to an aversion for all ecclesiastical ceremonies by an early confusion of the praise of God with the hideous drone of a popular "church melody." The music halls would reject the base and tedious whines which are considered entirely appropriate for the Church. So it is with Christmas greetings, which are mostly quite ignominious or insipid. With satisfaction, then, we notice that Mr. John Lane has published a small shilling edition—in charming style — of Christmas at the Mermaid, by Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton. This cantata, which for breadth, as Mr. Swinburne has said, is the biggest thing that has been written for many years, has so much variety that it should interest every class of reader. For those who like a bold narrative there is David Gwynn's Story of the Golden Skeleton: for patriots, there is Raleigh's impetuous rhetoric: the temporarily disheartened may read Ben Jonson's encouragement:

> The bard whose song the Thebans might not follow,
> Because he sang of more than Theban things,
> Was he whose music, struck from Nature's strings,
> Builded the walls of Ilion—great Apollo!

Others, who prefer gentler thoughts at this season of the year, will find the delicate, beautiful sketch, by "Shakespeare's friend" of the poet's home and early courtship:

> Walking beneath the trees, where drops of rain,
> Wove crowns of sunlit opal to decoy
> Young love from home; and one, the happy boy,
> Knew all the thoughts of birds in every strain—
> Knew why the cushat breaks his fond refrain
> By sudden silence, "lest his plaint should cloy"—
> Knew when the skylark's changing note of joy
> Saith, "Now will I return to earth again"—
> Knew every warning of the blackbird's shriek,
> And every promise of his joyful song—
> Knew what the magpie's chuckle fain would speak;
> And, when a silent cuckoo flew along,
> Bearing an egg in her felonious beak,
> Knew every nest threatened with grievous wrong.

The Madonna. Translated from the Italian of Adolfo Venturi, with an Introduction by Alice Meynell. (Burns & Oates. 31s. 6d.)

The object of Signor Venturi's book, here translated, is to tell the story of the Virgin's life and death, as portrayed by the great painters and sculptors of Christendom. It is, in fact, a kind of pictorial life of the Madonna, the "illustrations" provided by Giotto, Raphael, and their kin. Over five hundred of them have been drawn upon to furnish the pictures in this volume. It is a deeply interesting collection of reproductions. The text is minute and learned, and the massing of reference and description managed with much skill. The book has, further, the advantage of an introduction by Mrs. Meynell, to which many will turn with more avidity than is usually excited by Introductions. It cannot be said to show Mrs. Meynell at her finest, nor would it be fair to expect "the flower of the mind" in such a performance. But something worth saying and well said will be found here, as in her least work:

> There is no more wonderful unanimity. . . than this which made the young Woman and the young Child paramount so long. . . . Mankind has counted its sufferings from wars of religion, its terrors from superstitions. But who shall number the mercies, the pardons, the generosities, brought to pass by the sight of Mother and Child, presented to the eyes of onlookers throughout the bookless ages? . . . There is no other group, assuredly, that has so made for chivalry.

The book, however, is itself wine that needs no bush.

Ghost-Bereft. With Other Stories and Studies in Verse. By Jane Barlow. (Smith, Elder.)

For the "scene" in dramatic form which gives its name (Ghost-Bereft) to Miss Jane Barlow's latest collection of verse we do not care much. One Widow Brennan is made to talk blank verse of a kind not usual, we fancy, even with Irish readers; and the incongruity is accentuated by the realistic touches of dialect and so forth. It is perilous to follow Mr. Yeats and The Land of Heart's Delight without a like art and power. Miss Barlow, in fact, is best in frank dialect-sketches, and worst when she endeavours after literate poetry. Terence Macran shows her happier style:

> It's herself is the great little rogue. But I waited for 'fraid comin' out,
> Left alone be herself wid the childher all bawlin' and bangin' about,
> She'd be scared. Not that Katty's too aisily frighted, the sorra a bit:
> There's most nothin' she puts me in mind of so much as a wee blue-capped tit,
> That hops undher your feet lettin' on it consaits it's no littler than you,
> And'll fluff itself out like an aigle at a thrush that could snap it in two.

That is excellent. But even so good a sketch suffers when Miss Barlow puts into the mouth of her peasant the conventional descriptive touches and cheap poetry:

> The sun in the dew flashin' sparkles like rainbows turned stars all around.

Such may be the language of an Irish peasant—but we hope not!

Tolstoy and His Problems. By Aylmer Maude.
The Life and Teaching of Leo Tolstoy. By G. H. Perris. (Richards. 6s. each.)

Four of the nine essays in Mr. Maude's book have received the sanction and approval of Tolstoy himself. The principal one of these four is "Tolstoy's Theory of Art," a remarkably able and lucid exposition of a subject both intricate and confused. Tolstoy's attitude towards Art, sometimes formidable, as in his impressive criticism of de Maupassant, and sometimes merely incomprehensible, as in his remarks on opera, is very well summed up in a phrase which he used in conversation with Mr. Maude.

Digitized by Google

The latter had asked Tolstoy how he explained Shakespeare's supreme rank among authors in Russia and elsewhere. The prophet replied: "Shakespeare owes his great reputation to the fact that he is an artist of great and varied abilities; but he owes it yet more to the fact that he shares with his admirers this great weakness—that he has not found the answer to the question, What are we alive for?" Mr. Maude's book includes chapters on Russia after the Coronation, and on the Doukhobórs.

Mr. Perris's book is a comprehensive selection of extracts from Tolstoy's writings, designed to show forth his beliefs and opinions. It deals with society, "the great commandments," science, art, education, and religion, and well deserves to be called the royal road to Tolstoy. Since Tolstoy has written fifty complete books, not to mention "innumerable fragments," it may be admitted that such a volume meets a felt want. Mr. Perris has done his business with credit; and his exhaustive introduction has its picturesque moments, as when he says: "With ear close to earth and the popular heart. . . . was this gospel of real life set down." At times Mr. Perris displays the unreasoning irritability of the enthusiast. He remarks: "A century hence Tolstoy will be known as Milton and Bunyan and Dickens, perhaps even as Isaiah and Paul, Augustine and Shakespeare are known. The column of newspaper twaddle in such a case is unusually futile. An English publisher, in a jocular mood one supposes, affixed to Resurrection a couple of pages of 'press notices.' They show that Mr. So-and-So, an intelligent reader, regards this as Tolstoy's 'greatest work.' Perhaps so. . . ."

Leaving the point whether even Tolstoy combines the abilities of Milton and Dickens, why "newspaper twaddle" in one line and "intelligent reader" in the next? Is an intelligent person one who writes twaddle? And why the horrid sarcasm of that "Mr. So-and-So"? The critiques of Ste. Beuve and of Hazlett were once merely the newspaper twaddle of a Mr. So-and-So.

We have received the first volume of Messrs. Hutchinson's popular serial, The Living Animals of the World, completing the Mammals. Besides thirteen coloured plates the volume contains 567 illustrations from photographs. The text has been written by the editor, Mr. C. J. Cornish, and a band of able contributors that includes Mr. F. C. Selous, Sir Harry Johnston, Mr. F. G. Aflalo, and other well-known writers. The reliance on photography for the illustrations is admirably justified by the results. As a popular encyclopædia and portrait gallery of animal life this work, judging by its first volume, need fear no rival.

We have seen no better gift-book this season than Mr. Michael Myers Shoemaker's Palaces, Prisons, and Resting-Places of Mary Queen of Scots (Virtue. 42s. net). Mr. Shoemaker does not attempt to add to the histories of the hapless Queen, his pages being more concerned with places than people. "The pilgrimage follows in the footsteps of Queen Mary from her birth at Linlithgow, to Stirling and the Island of Rest, to Dumbarton and the shores of sunny France, to the quaint city of Paris in the days of the Valois, and Villers Cotterets, where the honeymoon with Francis was spent. The châteaux of fair Touraine, Orleans, and the Port of Calais then pass in review, and are followed by the scenes of her stormy life in Scotland, and of all those weary eighteen years in England, when palaces disappear and prisons alone come into view; until Mary, done to death at Fotheringay, is left at rest under the solemn arches of Westminster Abbey." The opportunities for illustration here presented are, of course, taken, and in Messrs. Virtue's hands they prosper exceedingly. Eight of the numerous full-page illustrations are in photogravure.

In his expository lectures on Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Watts, Holman Hunt, and Wagner, entitled Religion in Recent Art (Hodder & Stoughton. 10s. net), Mr. P. T. Forsyth disclaims scientific aims or value for his work. His method is the familiar one of very discursive and enterprising exposition. Indeed, Mr. Forsyth maintains openly that "we must feel ourselves free to find in a picture any suggestion which is really and reasonably congruous with its central idea, whether deliberately meant by the artist or no." Those who can accept this standpoint, or are untroubled by others, will find their food in these pages. "Is there beyond the grave a living love and a passion of patient pity, a sweet remembrance of old affections, and a wonder-smitten waiting for the knitting up of severed hearts? Who does not find it easier to believe that after looking at the picture of the Blessed Damozel?" Mr. Forsyth's style and note are there. The illustrations are few, but good.

Messrs. Dawbarn and Ward send us a second edition of their beautifully illustrated Shakespeare's Town and Times (10s. 6d. net).

In their "Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture" series Messrs. Bell give us Rembrand Van Rijn. This volume is an abridgment of Mr. Malcolm Bell's larger work published in 1899, and as a hand-book it has much merit.

To the "Oxford India Paper Dickens" (Frowde and Chapman and Hall, each 2s. 6d. net) are added Dombey and Son and Great Expectations.

Fiction.

Unequally Yoked.

The Proving of Priscilla. By Louie Bennett. (Harpers. 6s.)

Concerning Some Fools and Their Folly. By Newton Sandars. (Sands. 6s.)

We would like to take these novels, scatter them to bits, and remould them "nearer to the heart's desire." For if one took their four principal characters, a heroine and a hero from either, and rearranged the weddings, we would guarantee happiness all round, and these books never need have been written at all. There are two kinds of good people in the world, on a rough division. There are people who are religiously good, and people who are good but not religious. They do not mix well. And that is all the moral or interest to be obtained from these two stories. Priscilla is an Irish girl, daughter of Dean Lovell, who has a cathedral in the West of Ireland. She has a godly brother named Cyril, who baptises her, as a childish freak, in a well, and a dissipated brother, Harry, who gets miraculously drunk on the half-share of a bottle of champagne. "I wonder why God does not like circuses," writes Priscilla, in her childish diary. So she marries Lennox, a man of the world, who takes her, as a nice husband should, with a party to the theatre. Before the end of the first act Priscilla rises. "John, I should like to go home," she said. And she went. Moreover, she came down and protested against her husband's playing cards after twelve on Saturday night with his friends. "What's the use of bothering about one's soul constantly?" asks Galbraith. And if Lennox flirted with Mrs. Seton, it must be admitted that Priscilla went a long way—after the manner of Sunday Schools—with Galbraith. In a moment of rare enlightenment she asks, "Am I a prig?" She is. Of course, Lennox should have married Kitty Crofton, whom Mr. Newton Sandars, in Concerning Some Fools and Their Folly, sends down to the country to enchant the Reverend Peter Winch; for Kitty was an actress, and Lennox—of The Proving of Priscilla—liked that sort of girl.

Digitized by Google

Kitty heard—from outside the church—Peter preaching. She was dressed "in some kind of pink fluffiness" and a hat. Peter, going home to Sunday dinner with his mother, rescued the hat from the stream, and made ready for a more serious plunge; but reminiscences of Samson tied his tongue when he carved the joint before his mother. He doubted Kitty's "spiritual fitness for so exalted a position" as the wife of a country curate. Nevertheless, he married her, with the natural consequence that Kitty kicked at teaching in the Sunday School, and—some way before the end—bolted. There you have the mere crude motive of these two plots, and our desire to reconstruct them is no illegitimate one. For people do not marry who are absolutely at variance on every point of dress, manners, modes, and morals. These differences are instantly apparent when first acquaintanceship is made, and neither the smug Winch nor the priggish Priscilla bears the least indication of the passion which leaps such obstacles and carries the rider down into an abyss of folly. Winch is even surprised when his wife of weeks sits on the arm of his chair and kisses him. For the Reverend Peter Winch we prescribe Priscilla; they would be perfectly happy. And for Lennox, Kitty Crofton, a delightful girl of her theatrical-touring kind, with no vices, but requiring a light hand. If only the two authors had collaborated they would have been spared the labour of writing; they would have spared a reviewer the toil of reading. For there is nothing in the manipulation to redeem the crudity of the material. Perhaps a Clearing House for characters might be established, to save a deal of wasted effort.

The Man from Glengarry. By Ralph Connor. (Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.)

With this book Mr. Connor steps into the assured position of a thoroughly "practised hand," who has found his public and gauged its taste to a nicety. His two previous novels were very successful, and The Man from Glengarry attained success before the day of publication. You may guess accurately at this new book from the preface. It is about the forests of Western Canada, and Mr. Connor says: "The men are worth remembering. They carried the marks of their blood in their fierce passions, their courage, their loyalty; and of the forest in their patience, their resourcefulness, their self-reliance. But deeper than all, the mask that reached down to their hearts' core was that of their faith, for in them dwelt the fear of God. Their religion . . . was the biggest thing in them . . . In the Canada beyond the Lakes, where men are making empire . . . such men are needed. For not wealth, not enterprise, not energy can build a nation into sure greatness, but . . ." etc., etc. All which is no doubt perfectly true. We begin with a fight between rival gangs of lumbermen. "Black Hugh had a temper fierce and quick, and when in full flame he was a man to avoid, for from neither man nor devil would he turn. The only man who could hold him was his brother, Macdonald Bhain, for, strong man as he was, Black Hugh knew well that his brother could with a single swift grip bring him to his knees." The warfare is Titanic for many pages, and then we arrive at a pleasantly contrasting chapter, entitled "The Manse in the Bush." "Eight years ago the minister had brought his wife from a home of gentle culture . . . to this home in the forest. There, isolated . . . deprived . . . she gave herself without stint to her husband's people, with never a thought of self-pity or self-praise. By day and night she laboured . . ." Then again we are amid perils, and witness a "ride for life." "For answer there came from behind them the long, mournful hunting-cry of the wolf." So the tale runs till we come to a chapter entitled "Her Clinging Arms." "The treacherous moss slipped under Mainie's feet, and with a piercing shriek . . . Like a flash Ronald. . . . with a trick learned as a boy in the Glengarry woods, swung himself clear over the edge. . . ." Nevertheless, it was another girl that Ronald married, an admirable creature named Kate. On the last page but one Ronald thought Kate loved another, but on the last page Kate corrected this misapprehension. The book is workmanlike; it has a sure and self-confident touch. It does not in the least belong to literature, but one is glad to see a popular novel with some shapeliness and craftsmanship to its credit.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

The New Americans. By Alfred Hodder.

An American, analytical novel, something after the manner of Mr. Howells, but neither so precise in observation, nor so finished in style, with love scenes enough to satisfy the most exacting library subscriber. "There are grave ancestors still alive in Virginia who remember Bettie Preston in her teens and young Cecil Widnet's mad infatuation with her when he first returned from abroad. There was not an atom of nonsense about her [Bettie]; she guided her dainty steps by a lucid, frank, discriminating intelligence." (Macmillan. 6s.)

My Own Death. By "Limbo."

Wild! It needs more skill than "Limbo" possesses to do this sort of thing convincingly. In Chapter viii. he dies: in Chapter ix. he is launched into space. Thus: "One terrible spasm, as something within me is torn asunder, then peace! Peace! An absolute cessation of pain! A sense of exaltation, of freedom, of pleasure such as I had never hoped to experience. But where am I? This place is strange—is unknown to me! Always beneath my feet I have been accustomed to feel the solid ground; but here there is no ground!—always have my lungs needed to inhale the revivifying air; but now my breast moves not, nor do I feel the beating of my heart!"

The Romance of an Emergency. By Mrs. G. S. Reaney.

A rambling story, including an account of a Moody and Sankey meeting. When Mr. Moody began to speak "Guy sat and listened as one to whom God Himself was speaking." After the address (which is printed)—"'Well, goodbye, God bless you and make you a blessing to others,' said the evangelist, taking the young man's hand in a warm grasp, and bringing up his left hand over the right with a prolonged shaking." (Drane. 6s.)

Lloyd of the Mill. By John Thomas.

A Welsh novel. The sub-title is "The First shall be Last and the Last First." Facing the title-page, this useful information is given: "In these pages the Welsh reader will recognise the popular Welsh novel, 'Arthur Llwyd y Felin,' by John Thomas, D.D., of Liverpool, done into English, with some additions, by his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Owen Thomas."

We are always learning something. (Elliot Stock. 6s.)

A Parish Scandal. By Mrs. Charles Marshall.

"A Tale of Modern Manners" is the sub-title. "The Rev. James Pennington looked cosy enough seated before a blazing fire in his comfortable study, but his handsome face was puckered up into anything but an amiable expression. He was considering with anxiety that, although the parish was full to overflowing with people, the church remained comparatively empty, and the offertory seemed to dwindle with each service, until he doubted whether, another Sunday, it would be worth while to send round the bag." (Elliot Stock.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.

Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.

The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.

Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.

Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

The Prose of Poets.

Sir Philip Sidney.

AMONG prose-writers a peculiar interest attaches to the poets who have written prose, who can both soar and walk. For to this case the image will not apply: of the eagle overbalanced in walking by the weight of his great wings. Nay, far from the poets being astray in prose-writing, it might plausibly be contended that English prose, as an art, is but a secondary stream of the Pierian fount, and owes its very origin to the poets. The first writer one remembers with whom prose became an art was Sir Philip Sidney. And Sidney was a poet.

If Chaucer, as has been said, is Spring, it is a modern, premature Spring, followed by an interval of doubtful weather. Sidney is the very Spring—the later May. And in prose he is the authentic, only Spring. It is a prose full of young joy, and young power, and young inexperience, and young melancholy, which is the wilfulness of joy; full of young fertility, wantoning in its own excess. Every nerve of it is steeped in deliciousness, which one might confuse with the softness of a decadent and effeminate age like our own, so much do the extremes of the literary cycle meet. But there is all the difference between the pliancy of youthful growth and the languor of decay. This martial and fiery progeny of a martial and fiery age is merely relaxing himself to the full in the interval of his strenuous life's campaign, indulging the blissful dreams of budding manhood—a virile Keats, one might say. You feel these martial spirits revelling in the whole fibre of his style. It is, indeed, the writing of a child; or, perhaps, of an exceptional boy, who still retains the roaming, luxuriant sweetness of a child's fancy; who has broken into the store-closet of literary conserves, and cloyed himself in delicious contempt of law and ignorance of satiety, tasting all capricious dainties as they come. The Arcadia runs honey; with a leisurely deliberation of relish, epicureanly savoured to the full, all alien to our hurried and tormented age.

Sidney's prose is treasurable, not only for its absolute merits, but as the bud from which English prose, that gorgeous and varied flower, has unfolded. It is in every way the reverse of modern prose. Our conditions of hurry carry to excess the style coupée, the abrupt style, resolved into its ultimate elements of short and single sentences. Sidney revels in the periodic style—long sentences, holding in suspension many clauses, which are shepherded to a full and sonorous close. But with him this style is inchoate: it is not yet logically compacted, the clauses do not follow inevitably, are not gradually evolved and expanded like the blossom from the seed. The sentences are loose, often inartificial and tyro-like, tacked together by a profuse employment of relatives and present participles. At times the grammar becomes confused, and falls to pieces.

"Even as a child is often brought to take most wholesome things," etc.; "which if one should begin to tell them the nature of the aloes or rhubarbum they should receive, would"—and so forth. Either Sidney should have written "children" instead of "a child," or "if one should tell it," and so throughout the remainder of the sentence. This is a mild specimen of the reckless grammar into which he often lapses. The piling up of relatives and present participles we need not exemplify: it will be sufficiently seen in the quotations we make to exhibit his general style. But this looseness has a characteristic effect: it conduces to the general quality of Sidney's style. Here, truly, the style is the man. The long, fluctuant sentences, impetuously agglomerated rather than organic growths, have a copious and dissolving melody, quite harmonious with the subject-matter and the nature of the man. Jeremy Taylor, too, mounds his magnificent sentences rather than constructs them: but the effect is different and more masculine; nay, they are structural compared with Sidney's—so far had prose travelled during the interim.

The Arcadia is tedious to us in its unvarying chivalrous fantasy and unremittent lusciousness long drawn-out. Yet it has at moments a certain primitive tenderness, natural and captivating in no slight degree. No modern romancer could show us a passage like this, so palpitating in its poured-out feminine compassion. The hero has attempted suicide by his mistress's couch:

> Therefore, getting with speed her weak, though well-accorded limbs out of her sweetened bed, as when jewels are hastily pulled out of some rich coffer, she spared not the nakedness of her tender feet, but, I think, borne as fast with desire as fear carried Daphne, she came running to Pyrocles, and finding his spirits something troubled with the fall, she put by the bar that lay close to him, and straining him in her well-beloved embracements; "My comfort, my joy, my life," said she "what haste have you to kill your Philoclea with the most cruel torment that ever lady suffered?"

What a delightful chivalry of heart there is in it all! How exquisitely felt that phrase, "her sweetened bed"! How charmingly fancied the image which follows it; and how beautiful—"she spared not the nakedness of her tender feet"! How womanly Philoclea's outburst, and the tender eagerness of the whole picture! In other passages Sidney shows his power over that pastoral depiction dear to the Elizabethans—artificial, if you will, refined and courtly, yet simple as the lisp of babes.

> Thyrsis not with many painted words nor falsified promises had won the consent of his beloved Kala, but with a true and simple making her know he loved her, not forcing himself beyond his reach to buy her affection, but giving her such pretty presents as neither could weary him with the giving nor shame her for the taking. Thus, the first strawberries he could find were ever, in a clean-washed dish, sent to Kala; the posies of the spring-flowers were wrapt up in a little green silk, and dedicated to Kala's breasts; thus sometimes his sweetest cream, sometimes the best cakebread his mother made, were reserved for Kala's taste.

Naturally, his youthful efflorescence spreads itself in description when the chance comes his way: for the Elizabethans had not our monomania for description per se:

> There were hills which garnished their proud heights with trees; humble valleys, whose bare estate seemed comforted with the refreshing of silver rivers; meadows, enamelled with all sorts of eye-pleasing flowers; thickets, which, being lined with most pleasant shade, were witnessed so, too, by a cheerful disposition of many well-tuned birds; each pasture stored with sheep, feeding with sober security; while the lambs, with bleating oratory, craved the dam's comfort. Here a shepherd's boy piping, as though he should never be old; there a young shepherdess knitting, and withal singing; and it seemed that her voice comforted her hands to work and her hands kept time to her voice-music.

Digitized by Google

Sidney is not without that artificial balance and antithesis which, in its most excessive form, we know as euphuism. This, and the other features of his style, appear where we should least expect them; for his style has not the flexibility which can adjust itself to varying themes. How shall an age accustomed to the direct battle-music of Kipling and Stevens admit such torturous narratives of conflict as this?

> Both being thus already allied by blood, yet did strive for a more strict affinity: wounds, in regard of their frequency, being no more respected than blows were before. Though they met in divers colours, now both were clad in one livery, as most suitable to their present estate: being servants to one master, and rivals in preferment. Neither could showers of blood quench the winds of their wrath, which did blow it forth in great abundance, till faintness would have fain persuaded both that they were mortal, and though neither of them by another, yet both overcomable by death. Then despair came to reinforce the fight, joining with courage, not as a companion but as a servant: for courage never grew desperate, but despair grew courageous; both being resolved, if not conquering, none of them should survive the other's conquest nor owe trophy but to death.

Assuredly Sidney might have learned much from the forthright old Northern sagas, if he had known them, in the art of warlike narrative. But his best prose is, after all, to be found, not in the romantic Arcadia, but in the Defence of Poesy. There he has had a set purpose of conviction, of attack and defence before him, and is not constantly concerned with artistic writing. The result is more truly artistic for having less explicit design of art. We get not only melodiously-woven sentences, but also touches of true fire and vigour: he is even homely on occasion. It is from the Defence of Poesy that critics mostly choose their "Sidneian showers of sweet discourse."

Here is one well-known passage:

> Now, therein, of all sciences (I speak still of human, and according to the human conceit) is our poet the monarch. For he doth not only show the way, but giveth so sweet a prospect unto the way as will entice any man to enter into it. Nay, he doth, as if your journey should lie through a fair vineyard, at the very first give you a cluster of grapes, that, full of the taste, you may long to pass further. He beginneth not with obscure definitions, which must blur the margin with interpretations and load the mind with doubtfulness; but he cometh to you with words set in delightful proportion, either accompanied with, or prepared for, the well-enchanting skill of music; and with a tale, forsooth, he cometh unto you—with a tale which holdeth children from play and old men from the chimney corner; and, pretending no more, doth intend the winning of the mind from wickedness to virtue, even as a child is often brought to take most wholesome things by hiding them in such other as have a pleasant taste, which, if one should begin to tell them the nature of the aloes or rhubarbum they should receive, would sooner take their physic at their ears than their mouth. So is it in men—most of whom are childish in the best things till they be cradled in their graves. Glad they will be to hear the tales of Achilles, Hercules, Cyrus, Aeneas; and hearing them, must needs hear the right description of wisdom, valour, and justice; which, if they had been barely—that is to say, philosophically—set out, they would swear they be brought to school again.

Very plainly Sidney was no believer in that modern fanaticism—art for art's sake. But from his own standpoint, which is the eternal standpoint, no finer apology for poetry has ever been penned. The reader will note passages which have become almost proverbial. One ought to be proverbial: "Most of whom are childish in the best things, till they be cradled in their graves." The construction has not the perfection of subsequent prose—of Raleigh at his best, or Browne. The sentences do not always stop at their climax, but are weakened by a tagged-on continuation. A modern writer would have made a period after "wickedness to virtue," and greatly strengthened the effect. But, for all the partial inexpertness, it is splendid writing, with already the suggestion of the arresting phrase and stately cadences presently to be in English prose. He is specially felicitous in those sayings of direct and homely phrase which have become household words: "A tale which holdeth children from play, and old men from the chimney-corner," or that other well-known saying that Chevy-Chase moved him "like the sound of a trumpet." It was a great and original genius, perhaps in prose (where he had no models) even more than in poetry, which was cut short on the field of Zutphen; even as the Spanish Garcilaso, also young, noble, and a pastoral poet, fell in the breach of a northern town.

Things Seen.

The Landowner.

All day I had sat in the little shop and discoursed of the wonders of London, while Dick stitched and hammered at shabby old saddlery, or sold oil, lamp-shades, and other useful articles to those who called for them. It was a busy day, for the market was being held in the town which lies three miles to the east, and many of those who dwelt in the wild and lonely region that lies west of the village would stop at the shop and leave something to be repaired. At last, however, it seemed to Dick—and to his wife—that the shop might be closed. "Will 'ee come for a walk, old friend?" He changed his coat, and chose a stick which is frequently shown to customers as one of the curiosities of nature, for has it not been, though not in his hands, "on the top of the Great Pyramid of Egypt that we do read about in the Bible"? We set forth up the street of little two-storey houses that lies between the most fertile of hillsides and the sea, and constitutes the village, which is a famous place in its way, and had a Mayor until an interfering Government abolished him. It was not yet nine, but many of the houses were still and dark. One or two people hailed my companion, who had grown suddenly gay and youthful as the shop was left behind. "I've got something I do want to show to you," he said, and we walked on after that almost in silence. We mounted a little hill, opened a gate, and stood under the stars looking out at the sea. Away to the west were the lights of the market-town. For a moment we did not move, nor did I exactly gather where I was. Then, "Come over here," said Dick, and he took me to a corner of the walled-in plot. "That is where I'm going to lie when I do die," he said. "Pretty little place, edn' it?"

And he turned and looked out at the sea and away to the lights of the town across the bay.

The Usurer.

He looked like a child of five, but he was really nine. He sat in a little wooden arm-chair, his left hand tightly clenched, his right lying open on his knee; no smile on his wasted face, but with a look of expectation in his brown eyes. I took a sponge-cake from my basket, and offered it to him. He stretched out his hand for it, and laid it on a stool beside him.

"Say thank you," prompted his mother. He just whispered the word—his voice was gone. He looked at me, and in his eyes was still the look of expectation. I opened my purse, took out a threepenny piece, and laid it on the stool. His eyes gleamed, and he smiled.

Digitized by Google

"Eh," said his mother, "he is rich. He's got more than four shillin' of his own beside this. He's saved from a baby. Our banker, I call him. He often lends me some of his money if I run short before Saturday, and when his dad brings home the wages, we pay Tommy back, and he charges a halfpenny interest. He'll get it this week. He'll soon be rich."

Tommy opened his left hand, and showed me his money: two shillings and a penny. The rest was lent. He added the threepence to it, and closed his hand again. He shut his eyes. He was satisfied.

The days were warm, and he still lived. I visited him often, taking him little things which I thought might please him. These I found were generally given to a stout younger brother in petticoats, but the pennies I gave from time to time he added to his hoard.

At last a day came when he was too ill to sit in the little chair. He lay in bed with his eyes closed. I stood with his mother at the bedside. He opened his eyes and looked at me. He moved a little. His left hand lay palm upward on the blanket. With great difficulty he raised his right hand and moved the first finger round and round on the palm of the left.

"What is it? What does he want?" I asked. His eyes were beseeching, and he still moved his finger feebly round and round. Then I guessed what he meant.

"Do you want some money, Tommy?" I asked. He smiled, and in another minute sixpence lay in his hand.

He died that night. His younger brother attended his funeral, dressed for the occasion in a new blue sailor-suit with brass buttons.

Paris Letter.

(From our French Correspondent.)

Victor Hugo's Post-Scriptum de ma Vie interests as the detached scribblings of departed genius, whether sympathetic or antipathetic, always will interest. But one asks wistfully, Is it to these few valueless cinders that has burnt down the glorious flame of wild, bombastical youth of "twenty golden years ago"? What Hugo then was to us and has since become! I own these fragmentary reflections of the French pontiff are thin and superficial enough. Sometimes he utters a wise word, sometimes even a subtle one, but he often utters nonsense with an intolerable air of profundity and intellectual discovery. When he soars into metaphysics and indulges in capitals one would like to pull his coat sleeve, with latter-day disrespect, and cry out: "Hold! keep to solid earth; all the rest with you is only waste of words." Here is a good word, and worth remembering. Lamartine attacked Les Miserables, and Hugo writes: "A swan's attempt to bite." Of Shakespeare he writes in the high-faluting romantic way he would like posterity to write of himself. It is easy to see that the three great geniuses of the world for him are: Æschylus, Shakespeare, and Hugo. But he says some wise and true things about Horace and Molière. The qualities which assist the Man of Genius are necessarily female to this most French of writers: "Intelligence is the wife, imagination is the mistress, memory is the maid-servant." But nothing in the history of humanity justifies his wild theory that art is the spiritual power of humanity: to appreciate art, he maintains, is to be incapable of crime. The tale of mediæval Italy is there to give him the lie direct. Here is his brief and witty summary of militarism. "You see that wall there?" "Yes, General." "What colour is it?" "White, General." "I tell you it is black. What colour is it?" "Black, General." "You are a good soldier." But the best story is called "The Atheist." Anatole Leray went to see the poet in exile at Brussels. They talked, and Hugo was profoundly shocked at Leray's turn of mind. He was a bold atheist. He denied the duties of man to man, except, in the abstract, as man to humanity. The man who sacrificed his life to another was but a dupe, etc. Briefly, Anatole Leray depicts himself as a cold-blooded, heartless "intellectual," incapable of a kindly sentiment or impulse. Hugo, who was in the habit of painting himself in exactly opposite colours, and crying out his virtues from the housetops, dismissed Leray in contempt and horror. Shortly afterwards the vessel which carried Leray to Australia was wrecked; Leray reached land in safety, but far out on the wild waves was a little boat with three despairing women clinging to its rocking sides. Leray plunged back into the sea, and swam shoreward with first one woman, though the waves were so dreadful that the very sailors and fishermen refused to try the rescue. He returned again, blinded and heated, and swam back with the second woman; and then, the blood streaming from his exhausted frame, plunged a third time into the sea, in spite of the prayers of all around him, and this time went down, unable to buffet against the tumultuous waters. We may question if Hugo, with all his grandiloquent talk of goodness, love, and unselfishness, could have reached the sublime and simple grandeur of the death of the atheist, whose boast of cold-blooded selfishness had so shocked him.

Arvède Barine's Jeunesse de la Grande Mademoiselle is something more than a deeply interesting historical study. Arvède Barine has two great qualities that always make her studies extraordinarily modern and pleasant: wit and common sense. Her style is supple, clear, slightly ironical, suggestively humorous; and such faculties as hers turned upon that somewhat dense, theatrical, self-confident, and vainglorious figure, La Grande Mademoiselle, produce not only a valuable profile in itself, but a wonderfully effective, vivid, and intelligent picture of the times, personages, and events she moved among. The irony and good sense of the historian charm us and keep us in good humour, in spite of all that is lamentable and irritating contained in the history of those days. I know nothing more calculated to reconcile us, living in France to-day, to all the obvious limitations and drawbacks of Republican government than the tale of any period of France before the Revolution. Happily Richelieu was there to alleviate the horrors Monsieur, the head of the Orleans branch of the House of France, strove to accomplish for his own pleasure and the misfortune of his country. It was part of Mademoiselle's incredible denseness, with her intense instinct of quite Cornelian honour, to be almost insensible of her father's moral obliquity and total lack of honour. She had a weakness for the genus cad, since the two men she most profoundly loved, Monsieur, her father, and Lauzun, her lover, were excellent types of it. The present study ends with the end of the infamous Fronde, and with her we leave Mademoiselle weeping the bitter tears she deserved to weep for the ill she had striven to accomplish in the interest of a royal rascal and a princely traitor. We look forward to the continuation in a delightful volume of good prose, good sense, and good history.

M. Jacques Vincent's Trois Amoureuses is exactly the reverse of Arvède Barine's Jeunesse de la Grande Mademoiselle. This is history as it ought not to be treated. It is a romantic and perfectly contemptible account of the mésalliances of the daughter, granddaughter, and great-granddaughter of William the Silent. These three figures of women are selected by M. Vincent for no other reason than that they chose to forget themselves, their dignity, and the traditions of their rank for the most vulgar and uninteresting love. The granddaughter, Maria Belgia, as here depicted, is above all unutterably low. Solemnly engaged to a prince and a thorough gentleman, she jilts him because a common adventurer has kissed her as if she were a servant maid.

Digitized by Google

M. André Theuriet has written a new novel: L'Amie de Noël Trémont. This old favourite continues prodigiously prolific, with next to nothing to say and little that is fresh or interesting to describe. However, he has here forsaken the pleasant woods and rustic scenes he has delighted in hitherto, often with a certain grace and charm and rural quaintness. Never a strong or original writer, that was just his note, flowing water among rustling trees, and a pair of sentimental lovers with the usual complications. But the hour is vexed and political, and so the lover of Miss Rhoda Broughton and Marie Bashkirsteff plunges into memory for the benefit of his troubled kind. From its well he brings up, if not exactly palpitating truth, a somewhat colourless account of the days that preceded Louis Napoleon's iniquitous Coup d'Etat. Noël Trémont is the high-principled son of a high-minded and austere Conventional. He dreams of a lofty and impeccable Republic, a mingling of Greek literature and art and Roman virtue. He loves, and is beloved of a little dressmaker, whom, alas! he does not begin by marrying. But this also is tradition, like Roman virtue and Greek art. He is elected by popular vote, against his will, and goes to Paris to speak with fervour in the interests of Alsatia and France. Here, of course, he discovers the bitter deceptions and corruptions of politics; and a young girl of society, in her hunt for a husband, meanly compromises him in the usual way of the perverse and too knowing flirt. He is extricated from marriage by the Coup d'Etat, which of course he abhors, and becomes thereby a suspect and a proscribed, and in exile discovers the pricelessness of the little dressmaker's disinterested love, and marries her. There is nothing here enthralling, new, or epoch-making, but it makes tolerable reading on a dull afternoon.

With what pleasure one turns from all these faded and dreary pictures of romance to the delicious, bubbling, old-fashioned wit and humour of Meilhac and Halévy's Théâtre, with all the well-known mots, the inexhaustible fun, the nearly defunct Parisian spirit, the genial good humour, and the dear, underlying, imperceptible sentimentality of days when Paris itself was younger and fresher, and took its sins and virtues, as it took its politics and deceptions, as part of the nonsense of life. Le Mari de la Débutante, La Vie Parisienne, La Périchole, Toto chez Tata, etc.—who is not the better for dipping once more into this gay and harmlessly cynical drama after the blighted horrors of modern observation and speculation, which confront us with Les Remplaçantes, Les Avariés, or other such gruesome and implacable pieces? H. L.

Correspondence.

Rights in Gravitation.

SIR,—I have never heard of Mr. Cromie nor of the book he attempts to advertise by insinuations of plagiarism on my part.—Yours, &c.,

Spade House, Sandgate. H. G. WELLS.

F. W. Robinson.

SIR,—Will you, of your courtesy, spare me a little space? I should dearly like to say a word or two of one just snatched away whose memory must long flourish in the hearts of those who knew him. The late F. W. Robinson's claim to lasting acknowledgment extends beyond his own work, for no man stretched a stronger hand to the rising generation of his day; no man living was more generous of his advice and his experience. So far as I know, this has not been enough declared. He indeed never shouted, or even whispered, about it; he never claimed mastership of anybody; he never "discovered" a writer; but he simply stood as a big brother, ahead of newcomers by the accident of a few terms in the school of life and literature. Always generous and always quick to see if a junior had that within to justify perseverance, he none the less held high the dignity of letters and never encouraged the slovenly or the idle. His judgment was remarkable, and in the "eighties" you shall find that the magazine he edited held numerous contributions from men unknown, who since have won to the front by virtue of ability. These would grant with one voice that Robinson's counsel was always valuable and his censure invariably just. Kind to a fault he always was, and infinitely patient. His abounding humour and enthusiasm bore him through the tribulations such a man must have suffered under so many earnest young egoists "commencing author."

Gladly and courageously he gave his time and grudged no moment of it to the next generation. He never left a letter to answer itself; he never turned upon fervid and illogical youth the shower-bath of silence, for the man was too much in love with art and with human nature to hurt even a vain boy if he could set him right painlessly. How good it was to puzzle over his letters—so hard to read, so comforting and sympathetic as the caligraphy yielded its secrets. And if a manuscript came back—as often it did—what balm his letter brought! how it soothed vanity and strengthened courage and righted faulty perspective!

On June 5, 1891, a handful of the host that loved Robinson invited him to dinner "as a slight acknowledgment of his never-failing kindness as a man and his genius as a writer." There were present Robert Barr, W. Balestier, J. M. Barrie, G. B. Burgin, F. Archer, Herbert Clarke, Coulson Kernahan, F. Wyville Home, Addison Bright, Moy Thomas, J. K. Jerome, C. N. Williamson, I. Zangwill, and others. Such was the man's modesty that this ordinary expression of regard moved him to admiration and even a sense of obligation; whereas that emotion sat by right upon all present save himself. Not one there but owed him a debt, if it was no more than a debt of gratitude for hours of pleasure. I think, however, that the greater number had actually written for Home Chimes, and so learnt something of their business from a master of it.

At the Vagabonds' Club also—that social gathering upon which the institution of the New Vagabonds was founded—Robinson might be met. He, the senior man of the assembly, had always an attentive ear for the novice, advice for the beginner, encouragement for the daunted. He was the most approachable of men, and for many he represented the golden tradition, because one could speak to him without fear and without arousing any obvious impatience. He never hurt the feelings; he laughed at small troubles and taught the first vital lesson every artist must learn—that work is its own reward. If a man's nature does not grow bigger, wiser, better by his own achievement, then is that achievement vain; if the writing of fiction does not teach some of the higher lessons of existence, the significance of the world's awards, the imperishable privilege of power to create, then a man had better abandon it and turn to lower planes of living. The artist has food to eat he knows not of.

To competent critics must be left adequate appraisement of Robinson's work—to them and the final arbitrament of time. Speaking only as I feel, his stories seem full of live men and women, who can weep and laugh and make us do the same. His knowledge of human nature was close and keenly sympathetic. He had the genuine humour that usually goes with that knowledge. I think he better loved comedy from his natural bent towards all that was fair and of good repute, but he never shirked the grey and sordid side of life, and did not hesitate to tell the tragic truth that met him right and left of his own pilgrimage.

Digitized by Google

He was, no doubt, a pupil high in the school of Dickens—one who followed that master, yet imparted to his work the strength and distinction of an original mind.

May the earth lie softly upon him and his sleep be sweet; for he won his rest worthily, and now has passed, leaving a grateful memory to many, a noble example of fortitude and charity to all.—Yours, &c.,

Eltham, Torquay, EDEN PHILLPOTTS.

"More Letters of Edward FitzGerald."

SIR,—You justly say that all FitzGerald's Letters are of the friendly human kind, and I do not think that Mr. Aldis Wright, in making this qualification, meant to imply that the former series was of a different brand from those contained in the new volume. But the "note" of FitzGerald is that, while not abstaining from criticism in a candid-friendly way, he is intensely human in his treatment of his old associates, thus differing from the candid-friendly inhuman kind, which, Iago-wise, puts on the trappings of affection in order to stab its friends more surely in the back. FitzGerald kept his causticity—and he could be caustic at times—for those he didn't love.

Will you permit me to make one or two annotations on the new publication? On p. 160 FitzGerald says: "There once lived near here (Woodbridge) a Squire Archdeckne (father of poor "Archy," lately dead), who, my father used to say, was the image of Pitt." Poor Archy has faded from the memories of the present generation, but he was once well known about town as Andrew Archdeckne. He was a Cambridge contemporary of FitzGerald and Thackeray, and the latter drew his portrait as Harry Foker in Pendennis. The picture of "Mr. Foker Preparing to Conquer" conveyed Thackeray's idea of Archy, and the latter not unnaturally felt some resentment. Thackeray was the touchiest of men, and it was not difficult to take revenge. On meeting Thackeray after the novelist had delivered the first of his lectures on "The Humourists," Archy went up to him and said, "Well, Thack; went to hear you lecture last night. Dull, d——d dull. I say, Thack, you should have a piano!" Archy was a member of several clubs, and seconded the nomination of Edmund Yates to the Garrick when the latter sought a membership which ended in disaster. Yates, in his Recollections and Experiences, i. 236, has preserved a song by Albert Smith, which touched off all the members of the Fielding, and of which the first stanza ran as follows:

There was high festival that night within Saint Offley's Hall
(For so they term a place where sons of night hold festival);
There was Sir Armytage of race, and Archy on the go
(He never stays long anywhere), and Albert of "the Show."

Wanted

A CORONATION ODE

"GOOD WORDS" in its January number announces an offer of

£75 IN CASH PRIZES

for the best

ODES on the CORONATION

For Particulars see "GOOD WORDS" for January.

ISBISTER & CO., LTD., COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

Price 2/6. Price 2/6.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For DECEMBER contains:

1 MILITARISM IN POLITICS AND LORD ROBERTS' ARMY REORGANISATION SCHEME. By JEAN DE BLOCH.

2. OUR UNHAPPY DIVISIONS: A PLEA FOR THE RECOGNITION OF NON-EPISCOPAL CHURCHES By Canon HENSLEY HENSON.

3. THE NEW REIGN IN ITALY. By BOLTON KING.

4. JOURNALISM FOR UNIVERSITY MEN. By F. S. A. LOWNDES.

5. ANTHROPOLOGY RECONSTRUCTED. By The Rev. W. W. PEYTON.

6. MAXIME GORKY. By Count S. C. De SOISSONS.

7. A DIARY OF THE NATAL CAMPAIGN. By RAYMOND MAXWELL.

8. LITERARY SUPPLEMENT: CHRISTMAS AND OTHER BOOKS. By "A READER."

LONDON:

THE COLUMBUS COMPANY, LIMITED.

COLUMBUS HOUSE, 43 & 43A, FETTER LANE, E.C.

Price Half-a-Crown Monthly.] [All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

Offley's was a rather shady establishment in Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, and was eventually taken up by the long-extinct Fielding. Few of the members celebrated in the song survive. Among those still living are Sir Henry de Bathe, Sir William Howard Russell, and Sir James O'Dowd, still an honoured habitué of the Garrick. Sir George Armytage, of Kirklees Park, Yorkshire, who is mentioned in the stanza I have quoted, died only a few years ago.

On p. 171 FitzGerald writes to Prof. Cowell: "Oh! a Mr. Furness—an American author or editor—tells Mrs. Kemble of some notice of 'E. F. G.,' put into some American magazine by a Mr. Fitz-Edward Hall, of Suffolk! Your Marlesford man?" The late Mr. Fitzedward Hall (this spelling is correct) informed me some time ago that the article in question, which was the first attempt at a bibliography of FitzGerald's books, appeared in Lippincott's Magazine for (he thought) February, 1875. After this date Mr. Hall became a frequent correspondent of FitzGerald, and one of the latter's letters to Hall is published in the former series of the Letters. Shortly before his lamented death Mr. Hall sent me a paper recording his impressions of this correspondence, to which his intercourse with FitzGerald was entirely confined. Though living in the same county they never met. Mr. Hall gave me permission to publish this paper if I saw fit to do so, and it may one day see the light.

It is pleasant to read on p. 217 the appreciative remarks of FitzGerald on the late Mrs. Cadell's suggestive article on "The True Omar Khayam," in Fraser's Magazine for May, 1879.—Yours, &c.,

W. F. Prideaux.

1, West Cliff Terrace, Ramsgate.

Campbell or Burns?

Sir,—Your readers, I fancy, will search in vain the works of Thomas Campbell for the quotation fathered on that neglected but respectable bard in a note on "the pretty gift book" in your issue of this week. "One moment white, then gone for ever," quotes the writer of the note. Was he not thinking of some familiar lines from a greater poem than Campbell—honest soul!—ever wrote, "Tam o' Shanter"?

> But pleasures are like poppies spread,
> You seize the flow'r, its bloom is shed:
> Or like the snow falls in the river,
> A moment white—then melts for ever.

Talking of the river on which Campbell's snowflake is alleged to have fallen, may I recall an anecdote of the poet and ask its source? He was supping with some congenial spirits, and had occasion to go upstairs. Two minutes later there was a crash, followed by a series of bumps, and the guests rushed out to see the portly form of their host descending the staircase in a manner rather expeditious than dignified. "We thought it was an earthquake, Mr. Campbell," said one. "You see your mistake," replied the poet; "'twas I, sir, rolling rapidly."

True or not, the story reminds one that the author of "The Pleasures of Hope" was author also of that lively "Epistle from Algiers," with its cri du cœur for British beer:

> Yes, my soul sentimentally craves
> British beer. Hail, Britannia, hail!
> To thy flag on the foam of the waves,
> And the foam on thy flagons of ale.

—Yours, &c., William G. Hutchison.

London.

[We have received similar communications from Mr. Joseph Knight and Mr. James W. Kyle.]

"Stabbed in the Dark."

Sir,—Under the title of "The Gaff," in last week's "Things Seen," appears a sentence which may by chance hold the solution to a small mystery which I encountered in the writing of Mrs. Lynn Linton's Life.

The sentence runs: "A yellow placard . . . informed me that a celebrated London company was that night giving two performances of the great tragedy, "Stabbed in the Dark."

Now, in the year 1885, Mrs. Linton published a short novel of Italian intrigue and revenge bearing this title. In going through her correspondence, I found that leave had been asked, and given, to dramatise it, but all attempts to discover whether or no it was ever staged have been in vain.

Now comes the possibility that the author of "The Gaff" may have chancewise stumbled upon it. Of course, it is conceivable that the name of the play is in this case fictitious. If not, I shall esteem it a great kindness if the writer will give me any further clue. Perhaps, even more, some reader of the Academy learned in matters of the theatre could tell me where a copy may be obtained.—Yours, &c.,

G. S. Layard.

South Cottage, Felixstowe.

Stevenson and Mr. Henley.

Sir,—After Mr. Henley's article on Stevenson, one did not expect that any greater surprise could be in store for us—when lo! the letter of "X." in defence of Mr. Henley's attack, appears in your columns. But is not the moral of the whole affair summed up in the quaint couplet of old:

> De mortuis nil nisi malum.
> They can't hit back—so let's assail 'em!

—Yours, &c. A. A.

The Athenæum, Pall Mall.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 117 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best verses for a New Year's Greeting to a Soldier in South Africa. We award it to Mr. R. W. Macgoun, 69, Morningside Road, Edinburgh, for the following:—

> High as e'er in days of yore
> Burns the pride of England yet;
> Stout as when the crest she wore
> Of the fell Plantagenet,
> And her bowmen, tier on tier,
> Drew the clothyard shaft to ear.
>
> Brother, you whose task to-day
> Might have made our fathers quail,
> England knows that come what may,
> Being hers, you cannot fail:—
> This the word she sends to thee
> For the year that is to be.

We have received seventeen other "greetings," each of which has been carefully considered, but we regret that lack of space prevents us from printing a selection.

Competition No. 118 (New Series).

Next week answers must reach us by first post Tuesday morning to be in time for consideration. We offer a prize of One Guinea for the best three quotations descriptive of Lord Rosebery.

Digitized by Google

MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

SUBSCRIPTIONS - -

FROM ONE GUINEA

- - PER ANNUM

Can be entered at any date for

THREE, SIX, OR TWELVE MONTHS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

BOOKSELLING DEPARTMENT.

A LARGE COLLECTION of SUITABLE BOOKS in LEATHER BINDINGS is kept in STOCK in the SHOW ROOMS, also the BEST NEW BOOKS of the SEASON in CLOTH, including ILLUSTRATED STANDARD AUTHORS and JUVENILE PICTURE BOOKS

A full and Revised Classified Catalogue sent Post Free on application.

A SELECTION OF GOOD EDITIONS OF

FRENCH AND GERMAN STANDARD AUTHORS,

In Leather and Cloth Bindings,

IS ALSO KEPT IN STOCK.

MUDIE'S LIBRARY,

LIMITED,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

and at Barton Arcade, Manchester.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

By HERBERT W. PAUL, Author of "Men and Letters," With a Portrait, large post 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Manchester Guardian.—"Far the best account yet printed of the actual facts of Gladstone's life.....Mr. Paul succeeds admirably in giving form and finish without an ounce of padding to a huge catalogue of events."

THE LIFE OF LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN, Author of "The Life of Charles Stewart Parnell," "Fifty Years of Concessions to Ireland," &c.

SECOND IMPRESSION.—With a Portrait, large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Saturday Review.—"Mr. O'Brien has done an admirable piece of work and produced the best life of a lawyer that we remember to have seen.....He has written one volume, somewhat large it is true, but there is not a dull page from beginning to end."

THE TALE OF THE GREAT MUTINY. By W.

H. FITCHETT, B.A., LL.D., &c., Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire," "Fights for the Flag," "How England Saved Europe," "Wellington's Men," &c.

SECOND IMPRESSION.—With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps, crown 8vo, 6s.

Bookman.—"Written with all the swing and dash, with all the careful accuracy and brilliant descriptive power which have made Dr. Fitchett's books so deservedly popular."

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JANUARY. Price ONE SHILLING.

Annual Subscription, including postage to any address in the Postal Union, 14s., payable in advance.

Two New Serial Stories:

THE INTRUSIONS OF PEGGY,

By ANTHONY HOPE,

AND

THE FOUR FEATHERS,

By A. E. W. MASON.

BEGIN IN THE JANUARY NUMBER.

Now Ready at all Booksellers and Newsagents.

The same Number contains the Completion of

GENERAL JAMES GRANT WILSON'S ARTICLE,

THACKERAY IN THE UNITED STATES.

With a Portrait (hitherto unpublished) of W. M. Thackeray from a Sketch by Count D'Orsay, 11 Illustrations in the text, and 5 Full-page Illustrations.

AND THE FOLLOWING CONTRIBUTIONS:

VICTOR. By A. T QUILLER-COUCH.

THE EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY PLACE-HUNTER. By ALEXANDER INNES SHAND.

A LONDONER'S LOG-BOOK.—XII.

AT THE JUSTICE'S WINDOW. By Mrs. WOODS.

THE GREAT DUCHESS. By G. S. STREET.

A FORGOTTEN POET. By the Rev. W. H. HUTTON, B.D.

TWO PROMINENT NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'. Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

Mr. H. S. MERRIMAN'S NEW NOVEL.

NOTICE.—A SECOND IMPRESSION of

THE VELVET GLOVE,

BY

HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

IS NOW READY.

Sketch.—"Equal to, if not better than, the best he has ever written. 'The Velvet Glove' is the very essence of good romance. The story is absorbing."

Scotsman.—"Full of romantic incident. A more brilliant trial of wits has never furnished the plot of a novel, and the tale is charmingly told."

Country Life.—"As good as any of its predecessors. The tale absorbs the reader absolutely, because every man and woman in it is emphatically human."

STANLEY WEYMAN'S NEW NOVEL.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEARLY EXHAUSTED.

COUNT HANNIBAL,

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

Truth.—"Mr. Stanley Weyman has written nothing more thrilling a story which will hold the reader breathless from the first page to the last."

COUNT HANNIBAL.

Week's Survey.—"It becomes the sacred and solemn duty of Englishmen who love France to do their best to extend the circulation of a book which can do nothing but good to the reader of any age or any nationality. 'Count Hannibal' redeems the character of a publishing season which has produced—but that another story."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Digitized by Google

THE TATLER

An Up-to-Date Society Paper.

SOCIETY & THE STAGE richly Illustrated Week by Week.

THE BEST PRINTING,
THE BEST PAPER,
THE BEST CONTENTS,
OF ANY PAPER OF ITS KIND.

Published every Wednesday,

PRICE 6d

THE TATLER

The LIGHTEST,
BRIGHTEST, and
MOST INTERESTING

Society and Dramatic Paper

EVER PUBLISHED.

Edited by CLEMENT SHORTER.

Ask your Newsagent to order you a copy of the next number at once.

Every Newsagent and Bookstall Clerk can secure you a copy and deliver it you on the day of publication if ordered in good time.

Digitized by Google

The Academy

A Weekly Review of Literature and Life.

No. 1547. Established 1869. 28 December, 1901. Price Threepence
[Registered as a Newspaper]

The Literary Week.

In common, we suppose, with most weekly papers, we go to press on Christmas Eve, with a view to publication three days later. Should any literary event of moment happen in the interval, should it be announced that Lord Rosebery is the author of An Englishwoman's Love-Letters, or that Shakespeare wrote "Hamlet" after all, our readers must depend on the daily papers for the intelligence. We wish our readers immunity from all such alarms, and a very pleasant Christmas.

We are glad to hear that Mr. John Morley has asked Mr. G. K. Chesterton to write the volume on Browning for the "English Men of Letters" series. The "field" now stands as follows:

Richardson, by Mr. Austin Dobson.
Crabbe, by Canon Ainger.
Jane Austen, by Prof. Beeching.
Hazlitt, by Mr. Birrell.
Tennyson, by Sir Alfred Lyall.
George Eliot, by Mr. Leslie Stephen.
Matthew Arnold, by Mr. Herbert Paul.
Robert Browning, by Mr. Chesterton.

America is stated to have bought 20,000 copies of Sir Richard Calmady.

The literary gossiper of the British Weekly understands that Mr. George Gissing has written a book entitled An Author at Grass, a happy title, we think, for a book of light reflections such as it indicates.

The world's literature is flowing steadily into the schoolroom. We have received from Messrs. Blackie, as an addition to their "Little French Classics," Selections from Gargantua.

A Literary chronique gives particulars of Count Tolstoy's writing engagements, which might lead one to think that he is infected by the mystery-work of recent authorship. We are told: "Tolstoy is at present engaged on a work the nature of which he refuses to impart to anyone. He considers it inexpedient and unlikely to serve any good purpose to acquaint the reading public with the work, and gives the conviction of this as his reason why he preserves such profound secrecy in regard to it. Some months ago it was noised abroad that the work on which Count Tolstoy was engaged just before his illness, entitled The Corpse, would shortly appear in print, and an outline of the main features of the work was published in certain quarters. It is not stated, however, that The Corpse has not yet been finished, and that certain circumstances render it probable that it will not be published for some time, if at all."

We clip this morsel from the "Editorial Chat" of The Lady's Companion. Unfortunately, we cannot recall Aunt Blanche's Eva's little poem, but we wish her every success:

> Anticipation.—I will see about the papers on the training of children presently; but you know we had a long series some years ago which dealt very ably with the subject. I am glad to hear yet another evidence of the popularity of "Lady Jane." I am pleased you take an interest in my little brood, but they are a little too old now for the repetition of their queer sayings, though to me they appear as original as ever. A merry Christmas to you. By "Eva," I suppose your girlies meant Gladys. Aunt Blanche's Eva has now quitted school life, and is a graceful, beautiful maiden—so her photograph tells me—who bids fair to follow in her mother's footsteps, and has recently had a little poem accepted by the Academy. My Gladys is at St. Leonards at present, but I hope to have her home permanently after Christmas. My best wishes to dear Hazel for her birthday, though they will arrive late.

The Critic (New York) publishes the following "Explanation":

> The Critic has been called to account for publishing in its August number what purported to be an extract from a letter written by Dr. Georg Brandes to a friend in this city. The letter was dated Christiania, June 24, 1901, and gave an elaborate description of the so-called deathbed of Ibsen. The material was furnished by Mr. Eugene Limedorfer, who had in his hand what seemed to be a letter from Dr. Brandes in an envelope bearing the Christiania postmark. Mr. Limedorfer claimed intimate friendship with Dr. Brandes, with whom he said he had been in correspondence during the past few months. Dr. Brandes has denied that he ever wrote such a letter, and we have called upon Mr. Limedorfer to show us the original document, and to make some explanation. He has done neither.

Mr. Edgar Fawcett, the well-known American critic, gives the readers of the Era a gloomy picture of the present state of poetry in England. "Poetry," he says, "is to-day the literal bugbear of English publishers. If you meet a new book of poems in London, the chances are one out of five hundred that its expenses of issue have been wholly paid by the author. If its sale reaches two hundred copies, this author is in rare luck. Forty copies are by no means an unusual taking, nor are twenty, nor even ten." We are not sure whether it is the poets or the publishers that Mr. Fawcett blames. He considers that Mr. F. B. Money-Coutts surpasses Mr. Stephen Phillips in poetic gift. "Mr. Money-Coutts has written one poem, entitled "An Essay in a Brief Model," which for diction and thought stands almost unmatched." How various are opinion and selection!

In the January (the January!) Macmillan there is a good article by F. E. H. on Walter Pater's philosophy of life. Taking Marius the Epicurean and Gaston de Latour as the most self-revealing of Pater's books, the writer proceeds to read in these "two brothers" the character of the father. The metaphor is justified by the apt quotation of Bacon's passage about "childless men who have sought to express the images of their minds where those of their bodies have failed." Marius, like Gaston, stands for Pater, and of Marius F. E. H. says, among other things, this:

> Beyond the acquisition of knowledge Marius never did any work, and for neglecting a law of Nature he paid the penalty in a starved emotional life and the incapacity for other than tepid sensations. He never attained even to the unconscious, impulsive action of the healthy man. He well illustrates the extreme academic attitude, which is a paralysing one. While perhaps the average healthy man thinks too little, Marius proves that there is such a thing as thinking too much, and that there exist certain speculative cul-de-sacs which in the world of thought occupy much the same position that perpetual motion and flying-machines have hitherto held in the world of matter. The intellectual life must justify itself by at least some measure of practice; otherwise we have but one-sided development; there are but drones in the hive. The self-conscious are not those upon whom we can depend for our best work, and what a sad prospect for the race if we had many Mariuses among us!
>
> But we must not forget that he, like us all, was the victim of circumstance. It was his misfortune never to be forced into contact with the realities of life. Had he travelled, had he married, or, above all, had it been necessary for him to earn his bread, he would have been a thousand times the gainer, and his ripe scholarship and richer artistic nature might have blossomed and borne fruit.

We must not forget, too, that what F. E. H. calls "Pater's Philosophy of Life" is Pater's philosophy of Pater's life—not of life in general. The moral is not "While ye may, go marry"; for doubtless Marius would have made a mighty poor husband. Pater was Pater, as FitzGerald was FitzGerald, or Amiel Amiel; and beyond this all is guessing and twiddling of thumbs.

Reverting to old tradition, the Cornhill starts the year with two new novels in serial form—The Intrusions of Peggy, by Anthony Hope, and The Four Feathers, by A. E. W. Mason—and fiction is further represented by a short story from the pen of A. T. Quiller Couch. General Wilson's very detailed reminiscences of Thackeray in the United States are continued in the same magazine, and they take the form of a budget of letters, memoranda, and sketches which only those well versed in Thackerayana can properly appreciate. The following lines were inscribed by Thackeray in a copy of The Virginians which he presented to his friend, William Duer Robinson, of Cincinnati:

> In the U. States and in the Queen's dominions
> All people have a right to their opinions,
> And many people don't much relish "The Virginians."
> Peruse my book, dear R., and if you find it
> A little to your taste, I hope you'll bind it.

The following passage from Mr. Hope's new story, named above, is appetising and pleasantly literary:

> Some men maintained that it was not the quantity nor the quality, nor the colour of Peggy Ryle's hair that did the mischief, but simply and solely the way it grew. Perhaps (for the opinion of men in such matters is eminently and consciously fallible) it did not grow that way at all, but was arranged. The result to the eye was the same, a peculiar harmony between the waves of the hair, the turn of the neck, and the set of the head. So notable and individual a thing was this agreement that Arthur Kane and Miles Childwick, poet and critic, were substantially at one about it. Kane described it as "the artistry of accident," Childwick lauded its "meditated spontaneity." Neither gentleman was ill-pleased with his phrase, and each professed a polite admiration of the other's effort—these civilities are necessary in literary circles. Other young men painted or drew the hair, and the neck, and the head, till Peggy complained that her other features were neglected most disdainfully. Other young men again, not endowed with the gift of expression by tongue or by hand, contented themselves with swelling Peggy's court. She did not mind how much they swelled it. She had a fine versatility, and could be flirted with in rhyme, in polished periods, in modern slang, or in the deaf-and-dumb alphabet; the heart is, of course, the thing in such a matter, various forms of expression no more than its interpreters.

In this week's Sketch O. O. quotes a letter, hitherto unpublished, which Charles Dickens wrote to a young writer. It was worth printing:

> Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester, Kent;
> Tuesday, Aug. 16, 1859.
>
> Dear Sir,—I return you herewith the proofs of the opening of your story.
>
> I think the story evinces a great deal of promise and a great deal of power. If I may venture to take the liberty of offering you two pieces of advice, they are these—
>
> 1. Never to be afraid of being pathetic when any tenderness naturally arises in you out of the situation, and never to regard it as a kind of weakness that needs to be jested away or otherwise atoned for.
>
> 2. Not too pettingly and perseveringly to urge to the utmost any humorous little extravagance. I think the dog should not open his mouth so very wide in barking as to show the whole of his internal mechanism, and the same kind of objection strikes me in reference to the spelling of some of the noises made, both by men and beasts.
>
> These are slight remarks, and they in no way affect my honest opinion that you begin exceedingly well—with force, with interest, and with character.—Faithfully yours,
>
> Charles Dickens.

They are certainly "slight remarks." The odd and instructive thing about them is that Dickens urges restraint where he was most successful—in humour, and pleads for unrestraint where he was most apt to be tiresome—in pathos.

Referring to some French versions of Jane Austen's Northanger Abbey, Mr. E. V. Lucas, in his introduction to Northanger Abbey (The Little Library: Methuen), after mentioning the Revue Blanche version called Catherine Morland, gives these amusing particulars of another translation:

> In 1824 appeared L'Abbaye de Northanger, par Jeanne Austen, translated by Madame Hyacinthe de F. . ., together with a memoir based upon that which was prefixed to the first English edition of the novel. Therein Miss Austen is said to have been born at Steveton in the Comté de Hantz, and to be buried at Windschester. John Thorpe's friend, the Christ Church man, comes out as "un ecclésiastique de mes amis."

In his interesting book of reminiscences, Haud Immemor (Longmans), which we reviewed last week, Mr. Charles Stewart quotes the shrewd advice which Mr. William Spottiswoode, scientific man, Queen's Printer, and President of the Royal Society, used to give to young men on the choice of a profession. Its bearing on the literary profession is forcible, though not directly intended:

> Stick to the shop; serve it, and it will serve you. If you have no special aptitude, or no inclination for any particular profession, stick to the trade where you can make money, not for the sake of the money, but for the sake of the opportunities that a good income will give you. Remember that of the twenty-four hours of the day everyone must spend, say, eight hours in sleep, eight hours in work, and the remaining eight hours in some parergon, relaxation of one kind or another. For the eight hours of sleep, it is no matter at all what your profession or trade or calling may be; all you want is a comfortable bed. For the eight hours of work, it matters very little what particular kind of work you are employed on; work is work, and not pleasure; and whether it be scientific investigation, or reading law papers, or making brass buttons, the real object of it, besides being of some use to the world, is to provide yourself with the means of spending the eight hours of leisure agreeably and usefully. The eight hours of leisure and the way of spending it, the parergon, is the thing that really matters. In the learned professions you may have to work ten or twelve hours a day without earning much money, and so you will have little time and perhaps little money for your leisure hours; so I advise you to take up any money-making business where you have good opportunities, stick to it, and put your best work into it; and you will find, not only that your University education will tell, but that you will have money in your pocket to follow your private tastes and inclinations, whatever they be.

Digitized by Google

In the matter of street-naming Mr. Max Beerbohm feels nothing but "placid indifference." He would call the new street which is to connect Holborn with the Strand "Broadway," and be done with it. And Mr. Beerbohm proceeds to deliver himself (in the Pall Mall Magazine) of some pleasingly iconoclastic views about the suggestiveness of names in general. He contends that no one word really sounds well or ill of itself. "Badger" is as pretty as "Lavender," and if we could get rid of association "Nettle" and "Envy" would be as pretty as "Rose" and "Faith" as names for girls:

> A sentence can be musical or unmusical. But in detachment words are no more preferable one to another in their sound than are single notes of music. What you take to be beauty or ugliness of sound is indeed nothing but beauty or ugliness of meaning. You are pleased by the sound of such words as gondola, vestments, chancel, ermine, manor-house. They seem to be fraught with a subtle onomatopœia, severally suggesting by their sounds the grace or sanctity or solid comfort of the things which they connote. You murmur them luxuriously, dreamily. Prepare for a slight shock. Scrofula, investments, cancer, vermin, warehouse. Horrible words are they not? But say gondola—scrofula, vestments—investments, and so on; and then lay your hand on your heart, and declare that the words in the first list are in mere sound nicer than the words in the second. Of course, they are not. If gondola were a disease, and if scrofula were a beautiful boat peculiar to a beautiful city, the effect of each word would be exactly the reverse of what it is.

If any of our readers imagine that there is something personal and appropriate in literary names, let them hear "Max":

> "Gore" is quite as taurine as "Buller," and yet does it not seem to us the right name for the author of Lux Mundi? In connection with him, who is struck by its taurinity? What hint of ovinity would there be for us if Sir Redvers' surname had happened to be that of him who wrote the Essays of Elia? Conversely, "Charles Buller" seems to us now an impossible nom de vie for Elia; yet it would have done just as well, really. Even "Redvers Buller" would have done just as well. "Walter Pater" means for us—how perfectly!—the author of Marius the Epicurean, whilst the author of All Sorts and Conditions of Men is summed up for us, not less absolutely, in "Walter Besant." And yet, if the surnames of these two opposite Walters had been changed at birth, what difference would have been made? "Walter Besant" would have signified a prose-style sensuous in its severity, an exquisitely patient scholarship, an exquisitely sympathetic way of criticism. "Walter Pater" would have signified no style, but an unslakable thirst for information and a bustling human sympathy and power of carrying things through. Or take two names often found in conjunction—Johnson and Boswell. Had the dear great oracle been named Boswell, and had the sitter-at-his-feet been named Johnson, would the two names seem to us less appropriate than they do? Should we have suffered any greater loss than if Salmon were Gluckstein and Gluckstein Salmon? Finally, take a case in which the same name was borne by two very different characters. What name could seem more descriptive of the late Archbishop of Westminster than "Manning"? It seems the very epitome of saintly astuteness. But for "Cardinal" substitute "Mrs." as its prefix, and, presto! it is equally descriptive of that dreadful medio-Victorian murderess who in the dock of the Old Bailey wore a black satin gown, and thereby created against black satin a prejudice which has but lately died.

There are times in the lives of all of us when we are driven from our ordinary groove of correspondence and sit with pen poised in doubt and inertia. People who go on a visit to the King as novices in Court manners are carefully coached in deportment. Suppose you have to write to the King. The directness of the late Duke of Argyll in writing to Queen Victoria is scarcely for humble folk, who would hesitate to put "The King" abruptly upon the envelope. Perhaps it is here that the secret drawer containing the polite letter-writer comes in with its information that you must address the envelope to "The King's Most Excellent Majesty." Even Dowager Countesses and Archdeacons are problems which occasionally front one, and make one wish that some common form of commencement could be devised—such as "I say!" There is the case, too, of the rural dean. Is the recorded exordium of the Kentish farmer—Reverend and Rural Sir—to be imitated? Such questions puzzle most of us sometimes, and the answers form the useful matter of the polite letter-writer. And yet turning to the latest book of models [How Shall I Word It? By One of the Aristocracy. (Pearson.)] we wonder at the implied incapacity of the educated classes. A gentleman wants to engage a groom. Possibly the groom might find a difficulty in setting out his accomplishments; but would the gentleman be unable without help to tell the groom to come and groom? It is not easy to imagine the lady of Laurel Villa, Croydon (these models are most realistic), hesitating over an order for butter and eggs when she had decided on her needs, and her tradesman. But the lady is enjoined to write thus:

> Mrs. Smale will be obliged if Messrs. Daintree will send her three pounds of dairy butter and two dozen fresh eggs by first delivery to-morrow.

The eggs were, we hope, for cooking, otherwise Mrs. Smale was wrong. And when the daughter of Marian Marks was taken ill in the night, would Mrs. Marks run to the secret drawer and look up the right kind of letter to send to Dr. Hensley, asking him to come as soon as possible? If these things are so, our respect for the self-control and correctitude of women is immensely increased.

Love looms large in this, as in all polite letter-writers, and that is as it should be, since lovers put a lot of life history and a lot of letter-writing into a small space of time. But do lovers consult the contents of the secret drawer? Evidence is difficult of access. But there is nothing here of the Englishwoman's love-letters, nothing of those of the breach of promise case. They are most correct; even the lover "urging short engagement" writes, "I hope I shall not shock you by my demands." The lover is guided through all the intricacies of courtship. So realistic are these letters that we can trace the growth of affection even before it springs to light. There is, for example, a model letter from Mr. Lawrence (widower) to Mrs. Lavinia G. Barret (clergyman's widow), who wishes to become his housekeeper. "I must have someone, too, whom I can trust fully," writes Mr. Lawrence. "I should take the greatest pleasure in looking after your interests" replies Mrs. Barret. And from these two sentences, discreetly dropped into a mass of details about children and moving in good society, one foresees developments, in spite of Mr. Lawrence's cautious letter. You can see, too, what Mark Rousby is about when he writes:

Digitized by Google

> Dear Miss Nugent,
> I am venturing to send you a new song which I heard sung a night or two ago. I thought at once that it would suit your voice very well, and that perhaps you would like it.

Can this be the same young man who, as Lawrence Costar, proposes to Dorothy from the Cape? It is a very nice proposal, and many girls should get it, precisely in this form, from the same quarter. "Will you, dear? I need you very, very much. . . . Cable to me, do, and put me out of my suspense." That is not all, of course, only the pith. We would like to see the cable—or the cables. For Dorothy is given two models for her answer, since, being Dorothy, she cannot be foreseen.

These, however, should be fairly easy letters to write, and certainly Dorothy, if she wanted to marry Lawrence, would not wait to consult the secret drawer before sending her cable. But there are many awkward letters which call to our invention from the blank sheet. You want, with Mr. Walter Rassendyl, to refuse to sing at a concert in the country. That is quite natural. But we cannot recommend Mr. Rassendyl's way of getting out of it:

> Dear Mrs. Vincent,
> I am extremely sorry that I cannot give you any assistance at your concert in December, but I am engaged for every evening during the month.

We don't believe it, nor would Mrs. Vincent. But our member of the aristocracy is more successful with the "letter from a gentleman reproaching his fiancée with being a flirt." All gentlemen with fiancées have that literary problem to face, and this gentleman—Arthur—was so successful that Helen came to heel at once with another model letter asking "Can you forgive me, dear?" Of letters which ought never to be written we have an excellent example. Claude Tracy—let celebrities mark the name and address—writes from Bath Place, Derby:

> Dear Sir,
> I have long been a most sincere admirer of your work, and I have long had a great desire to possess your autograph, but dread of becoming the nuisance autograph-hunters often are has hitherto made me refrain from writing to you. . . .

That is exactly the way to write a letter which ought not to be written.

Bibliographical.

That Mr. Gissing should have undertaken to condense Forster's Life of Dickens is good news; even better news, perhaps, lies in the fact that he should have been invited to condense it. The process, once begun, might be extended to many of the "standard biographies" which languish on the top shelves of our libraries. I do not say these biographies should never have existed; they contain a good deal which must always be curious to the few if not interesting to the many. But big biographies, unless they have the very exceptional value which attaches to Johnson's by Boswell, are obviously mistakes in these overcrowded days, and even the "standard" works of this kind may be the better for the use of the blue pencil—may have the wider vogue and the larger influence. Some of the standard diaries of the past, such as those of Moore and Raikes and H. Crabb Robinson, might well and usefully be subjected to the same compression. It is a pity that so many tasty and nourishing plums should remain unconsumed because embedded in the midst of so much literary dough. The Walpole and the Berry Correspondence, again, are obviously works of a kind which would benefit, and be benefited by, intelligent curtailment. They would still remain intact in the older editions for the pleasure and profit of the student. The latest edition of Boswell's Johnson, by the way, is that of 1899, in two volumes.

Admirers of the work of Miss Jane Barlow may be glad to know (if they do not know it already) that she is the subject of a chapter in Mr. Clifton Johnson's new volume, The Isle of the Shamrock, entitled "An Irish Writer and her Home." Miss Barlow is famous for her portrayal of life and character in the Connemara district of the West Coast of Ireland. She lives, however, at Raheny, a suburb of Dublin, and her personal acquaintance with Connemara and the Connemarese would appear to be somewhat slight. "It seems," says Mr. Johnson, "that the family took a house one season and lived for a summer on the Connemara coast, and it was then that Miss Barlow absorbed the impressions of local colour and character which she uses in her stories with such fidelity. One would suppose she must have been very intimate with the people themselves, she gives such full reports of their work, their homes, and their speech; yet this was not the case. What she knows she has gained mostly from outside observation, and the rest is imagination."

An enterprising lady proposes to tell us All About Christmas. This is plucky of her. Still more plucky would be the scribe who should essay to compile the bibliography of Christmas, even as regards this country only. Even within the past decade there have been something like two dozen new books dealing with various phases or associations of the Christmas season. We have had Xmas in Song and Xmas Rhymes (1890), A Xmas Book (1891), A Xmas Chronicle, Xmas Day (sermons), and Xmas Evening Day (1892), Xmas Eves, Xmas Hirelings, and A Xmas Tale (1894), Xmas Cards, Xmas Poems, A Xmas Present, and Xmas Verse (1895), Xmas Carols, Xmas Dreams, A Xmas Posy, and A Xmas Story (1896), A Xmas Fairy (1897), A Xmas Accident, Xmas Bells, A Xmas Child, A Xmas Tree, A Xmas Rose, and Christmas in Cornwall (1898), and Xmas Eve and Xmas in French Canada (1900).

The "Idyll of Aylwin Hall," by Mr. Watts-Dunton, which made so appropriate and welcome a supplement to last week's Saturday Review, is, I understand, the penultimate idyll of a group which is to form part of the author's forthcoming volume of poems. Between Aylwin and The Coming of Love, wrote Mr. Watts-Dunton in an introduction to the latter, "another story intervenes." This idyll, I believe, embodies that story. The two preceding idylls of the group, I may mention, have their scene laid upon Snowdon, the chief actors in them being Sinfi Lovell and Rhona Boswell. The period covered by the action of the idylls is that of the expedition for the relief of Gordon, and the poem contains some elaborate pictures of Egypt and the Desert. All this tends to whet one's curiosity concerning the new volume.

I note the announcement of a volume of Lays of the True North, written by a lady. I presume that the Lays are of Canada, and that the author took her title from the passage in Tennyson's lines "To the Queen," which form the epilogue to the Idylls of the King:

> And that true North whereof we lately heard
> A strain to shame us "Keep you to yourselves,
> So loyal is too costly!"

If Tennyson could but have lived to read the story of the Canadian Contingent!

With reference to my paragraph last week anent the available editions of The Mill on the Floss, Messrs. Blackwood kindly remind me that in addition to the issue at three-and-sixpence to which I referred, there is another at two-shillings (cloth), another at one shilling (in paper cover), and another at sixpence—which are surely sufficient for all conceivable purposes. There is no excuse, it is clear, for being minus a copy of The Mill on the Floss.

The Bookworm.

Digitized by Google

Reviews.

An Impressionist Poet.

Poems by Arthur Symons. Two Vols. (Heinemann. 10s. net.)

THESE two volumes contain all the poems which Mr. Arthur Symons has thought to retain from his previously published volumes, together with a new series, "The Loom of Dreams," written "during the last three years."

Mr. Symons's own succinct account of his selections. "From Days and Nights," runs: "I have retained only a few pieces; the other books are reprinted from their latest editions, though with numerous alterations. Six pieces have been omitted from Silhouettes, and one piece has been added; five pieces have been omitted from London Nights, and seven added; both volumes have been revised. Amoris Victima and Images of Good and Evil are reprinted almost without alteration. The translations scattered throughout three of these books have been put together at the end of the first volume." The first volume, we may further add, has for frontispiece a portrait of the author.

Now that we can survey the Poems in perspective, it becomes possible fully to appraise the singular narrowness and delicacy of the gift which Mr. Symons has so unswervingly developed. Seeing that he is not yet of venerable years, it seems premature to have this collected edition of his work; but such is the fashion with poets nowadays. Certainly one result is an impression of great monotony. Another is that Mr. Symons appears scarce to have developed at all, in the fuller sense. His technique he has doubtless perfected, but otherwise the poet of the later volumes is essentially the poet of Days and Nights.

Mr. Symons is an experimenter in life; and, according to the burden of his song, experimentation has brought satiety. His aim has been the impressionistic aim of a certain school of French poets, and especially of Verlaine, who has so strongly influenced some of our younger writers. The art of capturing an impression—emotional or visual, or both—and fixing it in a few words as evanescently delicate as the impression itself, is the art pursued by Mr. Symons.

It is the art of the transitory, of the flying minute—at the opposite pole from the massive art of the past. A good deal of his first book, Days and Nights, was given, it is true, to impressions of a more deliberate order, not unlike Mr. Henley's London Types. Such, for instance, as "The Opium Smoker":

> I am engulfed, and drown deliciously.
> Soft music like a perfume, and sweet light
> Golden with audible colours exquisite,
> Swathe me with cerements for eternity.
> Time is no more. I pause and yet I flee,
> A million ages wrap me round with night,
> I drain a million ages of delight,
> I hold the future in my memory,
>
> Also I have this garret which I rent,
> This bed of straw, and this that was a chair,
> This worn-out body like a tattered tent,
> This crust, of which the rats have eaten part,
> This pipe of opium; rage, remorse, despair;
> This soul at pawn and this delirious heart.

Good though this be in its kind, it is all too positive to represent the author's characteristic work. But in "Night and Wind," from the same early book, you have that work clearly foreshadowed:

> The night is light and chill,
> Stars are awake in the sky,
> There's a cloud over the moon;
> Round the house on the hill
> The wind creeps with its cry
> Between a wail and a croon.
>
> I hear the voice of the wind,
> The voice of the wind in the night,
> Cry and sob and weep,
> As the voice of one that hath sinned
> Moaning aloud in its might
> In the night when he cannot sleep.
>
> Sleep? no sleep is about.
> What remembering sin
> Wakes and watches apart?
> The wind wails without,
> And my heart is wailing within,
> And the wind is the voice of my heart.

There you have already the delicate suggestion of Mr. Symons's best work; and already, too, the note of wailing melancholy which becomes an obsession in the later verse. In Silhouettes, his next book, this has become obvious, and his "line" unmistakably struck out. He has not done much better than some of the poems in this, such as "Rain on the Down":

> Night, and the down by the sea,
> And the veil of rain on the down;
> And she came through the mist and the rain to me
> From the safe warm lights of the town.
>
> The rain shone in her hair,
> And her face gleamed in the rain;
> And only the night and the rain were there
> As she came to me out of the rain.

Such is the frail and remote sigh of emotion after which Mr. Symons endeavours—not always with such success. "At Dawn" again exemplifies it:

> She only knew the birth and death
> Of days, when each that died
> Was still at morn a hope, at night
> A hope unsatisfied.
>
> The dark trees shivered to behold
> Another day begin;
> She, being hopeless, did not weep
> As the grey dawn came in.

That has a certain quiet perfection of hopelessness which is undeniably subtle and touching in technique. On the side of visual impressionism we may quote "Before the Squall":

> The wind is rising on the sea,
> The windy white foam-dancers leap;
> And the sea moans uneasily,
> And turns to sleep, and cannot sleep.
>
> Ridge after rocky ridge uplifts
> Wild hands, and hammers at the land,
> Scatters in liquid dust and drifts
> To death among the dusty sand.
>
> On the horizon's nearing line,
> Where the sky rests, a visible wall,
> Grey in the offing, I divine
> The sails that fly before the squall.

This also is very dainty and finished in its kind. Nor should we neglect that artificial side of Mr. Symons, which is cleverly shown in "Maquillage," and makes no small portion of his verse:

Digitized by Google

> The charm of rouge on fragile cheeks,
> Pearl-powder, and, about the eyes,
> The dark and lustrous Eastern dyes;
> A voice of violets that speaks
> Of perfumed hours of day, and doubtful night
> Of alcoves curtained close against the light.
>
> Gracile and creamy white and rose,
> Complexioned like the flower of dawn,
> Her fleeting colours are as those
> That, from an April sky withdrawn,
> Fade in a fragrant mist of tears away,
> When weeping noon leads on the altered day.

Already, however, we can discern something of Mr. Symons's limitations. His emotion is almost entirely the emotion of melancholy, the pathos of tears; and that pathos confined to a weary sense of the unsatisfactoriness of things in general. It is, in fact, the pathos of disillusion. Now, in song it is much easier to weep than to rejoice. Scores of modern poets can strike the pathetic note; but how many can give us such a hymn of joy as Spenser's Epithalamion? Supreme joy is the most difficult achievement in literature. Of all forms of pathos that which soonest palls on us is the pathos of disillusionment. And Mr. Symons riots in it. Nor is it the dark pessimism of Leopardi. It is the disillusionment not so much of the disappointed as of the sated man. It is a kind of dyspepsia of the feelings, and suggests early outrages on the emotional digestion. One recalls Hippias Feverell, and the scant sympathy which Mr. Meredith tells us he encountered. Perhaps it is some kindred feeling which makes us presently become impatient with Mr. Symons's world-weariness. Perhaps, again, one doubts whether it be perfectly sincere; how much is merely an echo of French disillusionment in general, and Verlaine's in particular. It comes on so early. The most resolved sinner (and Mr. Symons is careful to tell us he has sinned "all round") should have a fair space of youth in which his sin is still "hot i' the mouth." In Mr. Symons's later work this note of melancholy weariness becomes overpowering:

> I am weary of living, and I long to rest
> From the sorrowful and immense fatigue of love;
> I have lived and loved with a seeking, passionate zest,
> And weariness and defeat are the end thereof.
>
> I have lived in vain, I have loved in vain, I have lost
> In the game of Fate, and silently I retire;
> I watch the moon rise over the sea, a ghost
> Of burning noontides, pallid with spent desire.

Mr. Symons, in fact, more and more sighs over the tragedy—actual or conventional—of prematurely blasé and emotionally bankrupt youth. In the days of youth he has said: "They please me not." One in the last and previously unpublished section of these Poems explicitly sums up his attitude. It is "The Sick Heart":

> O sick heart, be at rest!
> Is there nothing that I can do
> To quiet your crying in my breast?
> Will nothing comfort you?
>
> I am sick of a malady
> There is but one thing can assuage:
> Cure me of youth, and, see,
> I will be wise in age!

If men weary of the moanings of a valetudinarian body, they weary still more of the moanings of a valetudinarian heart. And all this is a pity, because it mars and limits needlessly a gift in itself not wide or varied, but a true gift none the less. Too much sicklied o'er with the pale cast of books, more artificial than is healthful for a Muse, this Muse of Mr. Symons is yet sensitive, accomplished, with a fine feeling for form, restraint, and the subtler gradations of colour. At its best he does achieve the art at which he aims, and which is not too common among men of Anglo-Saxon race. He shows signs, sometimes, of more impersonal and humanly sympathetic qualities, as in this among his later poems, "The Price":

> Pity all faithless women who have loved: none knows
> How much it hurts a woman to do wrong to love.
> The mother who has felt the child within her move,
> Shall she forget her child, and those ecstatic throes?
>
> Then pity faithless women who have loved: these have > Murdered within them something borne out of their pain.
> These mothers of the child whom they have loved and slain
> May not so much as lay the child within a grave.

Such things as this suggest that Mr. Symons has possibilities which may carry him beyond the covers of these two volumes—perhaps into a healthier, and therefore more fertile, art. For whatever he does he will do as an artist, that is certain. Indeed, that he is too specifically and circumscribedly the artist is part of the malady of his verse.

The Beginnings of Ibsen.

Henrik Ibsen: A Critical Biography. By Henrik Jæger. Translated by William Morton Payne. (McClurg. $1.50 net.)

This book, which, we believe, has not yet been issued in England, was written by Henrik Jæger, the Norwegian critic, for Ibsen's sixtieth birthday. It was translated by Mr. Payne, and first published in Chicago eleven years ago. The present is a new edition, with a concluding chapter by the translator, the author being now dead. The difference between the somewhat timid tone of the translator's preface to the first edition and the assurance of his preface to the second shows plainly the advance of Ibsen's reputation, even during the nineties. Apropos of translations, he says in the first preface that Ibsen's "two master works—'Brand' and 'Peer Gynt'—are impossible of adequate translation—almost impossible of translation at all." In the second preface he handsomely admits that, in regard to "Brand" at any rate, Professor C. H. Herford has demonstrated that he was entirely in the wrong. We are glad to note this appreciation of the extraordinary merits of Professor Herford's version of "Brand," and also Mr. Payne's generous praise of the same writer's critical study of the play. There can be little doubt that Professor Herford is the first of all Ibsen's critics in England, perhaps in Europe.

The biography is chiefly valuable for its careful account of Ibsen's childhood and artistic beginnings. We know a good deal of Ibsen from "The Feast at Solhang" onwards, but very little of his "apprenticeship." This book supplies the deficiency of our information. The author starts out with the somewhat surprising announcement that in the veins of Ibsen, who has been characterised as "peculiarly Norse," there runs no Norse blood. The Ibsen stock is Danish and nautical, and in the four preceding generations it had been mixed respectively with German, Scotch, German, and German. Jæger reasonably suggests that this ancestry may help to explain the dramatist's isolation and cosmopolitanism, but the notion that Ibsen's idealism comes from Scotland seems to us rather far-fetched. Ibsen was born at Skien, a lumber village-port of three thousand inhabitants, a spot with absolutely no intellectual life of its own, but formerly famous for an excessive pietism. He wrote specially for Jæger a detailed account of his boyish recollections of Skien. Of the church, Ibsen says:

Digitized by Google

> Even more than by the white angel in the church, my thoughts were occupied by the black poodle who lived at the top of the tower, where the watchman called out the hours of the night. It had glowing red eyes, but was not often seen; in fact, it appeared, as far as I know, upon one occasion only. It was a New Year's night, and the watchman had just called "One" from the window in the front of the tower. Just then the black poodle came up the tower steps behind him, stood for a moment, and glared at him with the fiery eyes—that was all, but the watchman at once fell head-foremost out of the tower window down into the market-place, where he was seen lying dead next morning by all the pious folk who went to the early New Year's service. Since that night no watchman has ever called out "One" from that window in the tower of Skien church. This incident of the watchman and the poodle occurred long before my time, and I have since heard of such things having happened in various Norwegian churches, in the days of old. But the tower window in question has stood prominently in my memory since I was a child, because from it I got my first deep and lasting impression.

Ibsen, unlike so many uncommon men, was an uncommon child. At an early age he was noted for his seriousness. He did not play like other children, and when his four younger brothers and sisters amused themselves in the yard, he would retire to a little room, "and fasten the door with a hasp." He sat there in all weathers. His sister wrote in a letter: "For us, he was not a comfortable boy to get along with, and we used to bother him regularly . . . and when he could not stand our siege any longer, he would rush out and after us; but he was not skilful at any sort of sport . . . and when he had chased us far enough off he went back into his closet." He spent most of his time in reading, at haphazard; but he also "painted a little." Out-of-doors, the author of The Master Builder would do nothing but build forts and things of that sort. At the age of sixteen he left Skien for Grimstad, a place even smaller and duller, and was apprenticed to the apothecary.

> What had he received from life there at home in his native town? It had laid a burden upon his mind. It had aroused in him a feeling of repugnance for all those instruments of coercion that society brings to bear upon those who, by their own fault, or by the force of circumstances, come into conflict with the general order of things. The prison, the madhouse, the pillory, and public opinion had impressed themselves as so many threats upon his consciousness. The contrast between poverty and affluence had been made one of his first experiences [through a reverse in his father's fortunes]. . . . All this had developed that reserve to which he had inherited a tendency.

Ibsen quickly got himself into trouble with the correctness of Grimstad. War existed between Germany and Denmark, and the miserable apprentice dared to write a series of sonnets entitled "Scandinavians, Awake! An Appeal [on behalf of Denmark] to the Norwegian and Swedish Brothers." This was too unusual, too audacious. In his own words, he found himself "on a war-footing with the little community to which I was bound by circumstances." He wrote "Catilina," which was refused by the theatres and ingloriously printed at the expense of a friend; he wrote also a number of poems dealing with moonlight and kindred effects. A citizeness of Grimstad picturesquely relates that "he went about like an enigma secured with seven seals." A brief reminiscence of his sister is worth mentioning here. Once when they were walking together be explained to her that he wished to attain to "the utmost possible clearness of vision and fulness of power."

> "And when you have attained to it, what then?" she asked.
> "Then I wish to die," he answered.

He was too crudely young then to realise that decline is just as proper a part of life as growth.

In 1850 he went up to Christiania to finish reading for his examinations and to "sit." In the same year he wrote his second play, a one-act piece called "The Warrior's Tomb." Of "Catilina," which was written in the Shakespearean convention, though Ibsen had not read Shakespeare, thirty copies were sold. The bulk of the remainder of the edition was disposed of to a huckster as wrapping-paper, and "for a few days following we lacked none of the necessaries of life." "Catilina" was, of course, a play of revolt. "The Warrior's Tomb," an episode of the Viking age, was the same, and a little more realistic than the dramas of Ochlenschlæger, under whose influence it had been composed. It was performed at the Christiania Theatre three times (quite a success in those days), the critics received it favourably, and Ibsen settled down as a "man of letters." In 1851 he was editing a little paper resoundingly styled The Man, which fought both the Government and the Opposition, never had a hundred subscribers together, and expired in less than a year. Shortly afterwards Bergen built a municipal theatre, and made Ibsen its "theatre-poet," and in 1852 the authorities had the extraordinary common sense to send their poet travelling for three months to study foreign theatres, on the understanding that when he returned he should assume the stage-managership for a period of five years. Ibsen was the kind of man who can learn a great deal in three months. He came back, and managed theatres for ten years, producing about a hundred pieces. Hence, without doubt, his prodigious and unrivalled technique.

Yet his next play, "St. John's Night," was a failure, and probably deserved to be a failure. It was not until "Free Inger of Oestract" (1857) that the greatest of modern theatrical craftsmen began to show his powers. In this piece the old convention was dropped, the unities of time and place were preserved as strictly as in "Ghosts," and a psychological vitality was infused into the dry bones of history. Within the same year Ibsen counteracted the extreme gloominess of "Free Inger" with the gaiety and brightness of "The Feast at Solhang," perhaps the sole play of his that can be fairly termed cheerful. "The Feast at Solhang" was an unequivocal success. Author and actors were called before the curtain by a crowded house, and afterwards the orchestra went so far as to serenade the happy author. Ibsen had "arrived." He was summoned to a higher post in Christiania, and in 1858 he married. We must quote the last three stanzas of a charming little poem entitled "Thanks," which in later years he addressed to his wife:

> Of her race are the figures
> Marching along
> With banners all waving
> Seen in my song.
>
> It was she that kindled
> My soul to glow;
> And all that I owe her
> None may know.
>
> And although she awaited
> No thanks for pay,
> I have sung and printed
> This grateful lay.

At this point, for reason already given, we will stop.

As Mr. Payne rightly observes, Jæger's biography appeals first to a Scandinavian public. It was, nevertheless, quite worthy to be translated, and the translator's notes and additions give it all necessary completeness. There is a fine portrait of Ibsen by way of frontispiece, but the topographical illustrations leave something to be desired.

Digitized by Google

Professor Gardner's Testament.

A Historic View of the New Testament. By Percy Gardner, Litt.D. (Adam & Charles Black. 6s.)

THE New Testament has been much criticised of late, not so much by its professed opponents as by those whom we had thought to be specially retained to defend it, and now Professor Gardner comes forward to suggest a "middle way" or view of the New Testament which shall not be inconsistent with what he calls "modern educated thought." This view is, according to him, the view of historic science, and he further defines science as meaning "ordered knowledge," although qualified by the proviso that the knowledge must be based on observation or evidence. But, lest the reader should be daunted with this parade of learning, we hasten to say that Prof. Gardner's method consists entirely in accepting some part of the narrative of the New Testament as true and rejecting the rest. He nowhere, so far as we can see, gives us any reason for this acceptance or rejection; but as he repeatedly mentions the names of German scholars, particularly those of the Ritschlian school, with much commendation, we can only suppose that he considers the arguments of German criticism conclusive as to which parts of the Bible we should believe and which not.

Thus supported, Prof. Gardner's system seems to work out as follows: He rejects the Virgin-birth, and points out, with much cogency, that the belief that the Founder of Christianity was the son of Joseph, and only received the Divine nature at His baptism, was not only the rival, but the older theory in the Primitive Church. He thinks the Flight into Egypt and the Massacre of the Innocents did not occur, but form part of the legends which afterwards grew up round the history of Jesus as round the histories of Buddha and Mahomet. Most of the miracles he considers, for the same reason, incredible, but those of healing he treats as authentic, some of them being explained by the theory that Jesus was a faith-healer, while others he gets over by the suggestion that nervous diseases may not, after all, have a "merely physical origin." On the Resurrection he shrinks from any pronouncement, saying that "the wisest plan by far is to regard the spiritual presence of Christ in His Church as the essential fact, and the tales of the corporeal Resurrection as results of the spiritual experience of Christians." With regard to the sayings of Jesus, he thinks that they are more correctly reported than His acts, because "the teaching which fell from His lips was generally of such a character that it could not be easily imitated or altered beyond a certain point"; but he will not say that Jesus ever thought Himself divine, and admits that "occasionally in our day well-educated people have slightly to transpose some of His sayings." As to the authorship of most of the New Testament books he speaks out plainly. Mark he considers the oldest narrative, and probably inspired by Peter. Matthew and Luke represent the Judaising party in the Church, and the Gospel of John is probably by John the Elder, and was written at Ephesus, although it may contain some fragments of tradition collected from John the son of Zebedee. The Apocalypse he treats as almost entirely non-Christian, and, at the most, "covered only with a thin veneer of Christianity." The Pauline Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians he considers substantially genuine, and those to Timothy and Titus as "containing passages which are from Paul's hand, though worked up with matter of a later date."

Mr. Gardner is un peu universitaire—a qualification inadequately translated by "donnish"—and, until he gets warmed up by his subject, proses abominably. As we have said, he gives us little hint of the facts on which he founds his theory, and must, therefore, excuse us from discussing his conclusions. The book was originally delivered in the form of lectures to the Passmore Edwards Settlement in London under the foundation known as the "Jowett Lectures," and may be taken as typical of the belief in Christianity of a particular type of modern "educated man." Yet it omits to deal with the greatest problem on the subject. We do not mean by this the existence of evil, somewhat airily dismissed here as unimportant "to practical ethics and working religion." But, if the New Testament has for some eighteen centuries been held to mean something so different from what Prof. Gardner and a few educated men—the phrase is repeated in this book with such irritating frequency as to make one doubt whether Prof. Gardner thinks uneducated men have souls at all—now say that it means, would it not have been better for it never to have been written?

Silly Autobiography.

From Stage to Cross. By F. C. Vernon-Harcourt. (Partridge. 2s. 6d.)

FROM a literary point of view this work is impossible of criticism. Tracts have their use in the world, perhaps, and the awful example gibbetted and decked out with texts may help to frighten the wicked into the paths of goodness. And Mr. Vernon-Harcourt's work is in the nature of a tract. But the binder bound it, if we may parody Portia, and therefore let it pass for a book, and be judged by the canons of good taste, since as literature it may not be regarded. When we hear—at about eight-thirty on Sunday evenings—the street-corner amateur preacher bellowing of his horrible past and accusing himself with the fierce joy of a Central Criminal Court Advocate of the most outrageous conduct, contrasting his former degradation with his present elevation to an intimacy with the counsels of the Most High, we think him lacking in taste. It is just the lack of taste that impels the self-made man to swell his waistcoat over the edge of a duke's dinner-table and slam upon the cloth the half-crown with which he entered London. There is nothing more interesting than a frank autobiography—it would fascinate you if it were written, as it cannot be written, by an uninteresting man. Rousseau's Confessions, though you despise him all the time, fascinate; for they ring like the true admissions of a false man. Mr. Vernon-Harcourt bears a famous name; by his own account he has travelled and fought all over the world, has studied the sceptical philosophies of the ages, has been prominent as an actor (he publishes his own photograph in costume as an awful example) and has earned the gratitude of politicians. Yet his autobiography is that of the illiterate street-corner preacher who is as conceited about his past vices as about his present virtues. He sniggers over his unregenerate fisticuffs with "Bloater" on board the Circassia:

> "Bloater" was not a general favourite, and the whole affair had occurred so suddenly, so unexpectedly, that scarcely anyone knew that a ring had been hastily formed—till it was formed, and that the youngest hand on board was operating in a delightfully scientific manner on the flabby features of the senior ordinary seaman.

That is very well. "Bloater" deserved his bashing. But why, after describing full-blooded exploits, drop in such comments as "Oh, those swiftly passing but utterly misspent years"? Of the theatre Mr. Vernon-Harcourt (having prefaced his book with himself as the hero of his own wicked play) writes:

Digitized by Google

> The theatre, under the most favourable of conditions, is an institution established and maintained for the amusement of the world. It is a place where God is not, and where He cannot be, glorified.

One might write the same of the Punch office or the office of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. This is not the place to speak of Mr. Vernon-Harcourt's "conversion"—of which he writes unabashed—or to note that his Christianity is as unreasoning as his scepticism. The praying for a piano, the arrival of a piano (with an extra sovereign for expert selection, and a lady with two daughters to ask terms for teaching)—these things are the stand-by of the tract, and we can see the wheels go round. But > Several Christian friends dropped in, and the rest of the evening was passed in singing and praising that loving Father who "doeth all things well." My wife got quite a number of pupils after that, and she was blessed to the saving of several souls among them.

Enough has been said, perhaps, to indicate our belief that this is one of the unnecessary, misplaced books. If it must be published at all, it should be in the form of a tract. But this may be the mistake of the binder.

A New Theory.

Intuitive Suggestion: A New Theory of the Evolution of Mind. By J. W. Thomas. (Longmans. 3s. 6d. net.)

It is a favourite retort in the mouth of those charged with teaching materialism that their opponents take too low a view of matter, and regard it as something dead. Mr. Thomas has taken the authors of such a retort at their word, and writes as if he saw everywhere throughout inorganic nature the counterparts of forces commonly associated with the ideas of life and mind.

The facts that Mr. Thomas marshals have already been appealed to by Schopenhauer and Von Hartmann to bear witness to a different theory. Schopenhauer suggested that the original Will appeared as gravity in matter and desire in conscious being. Mr. Thomas is less concerned to establish one principle behind all phenomena, but he speaks as if there were a mysterious affinity between mental and cosmic processes. There is nothing in the Timaeus more fanciful than the suggestion that the First Cause suggested to a planet to go in a certain orbit, and that the constant repetition of this one movement is done in virtue of a certain memory. Let us, then, leave these floating speculations as to the inwardness of natural laws, uncertain as we are how far they are meant to be taken seriously, and confine ourselves to the mental faculties, which are affirmed to manifest themselves in living creatures without passing through the sense organs. Mr. Thomas begins with the minute beings that have no nervous system, and reminds us that even they show every sign of purposive action.

Ascending the scale of creation he finds that though creatures acquire knowledge in a new way, through the senses, as their nervous systems become more developed, they do not altogether lose their primitive intuitive knowledge. Thus, the social organisation of the ant, the geometrical knowledge of the bee do not rest on sense experience preserved in a memory that works through nerves. In like manner the "homing" instincts of birds and dogs, the "awareness" of distant presences possessed by many an animal, are forms of "immediate" knowledge. We think, by-the-way, that Mr. Thomas has a right to his distinction between "intuition" and "instinct," as the former is a way of knowledge, the latter of action—directed towards an end of which the agent is unconscious—as it has been defined. Even among men, the knowledge that comes through sense experience, that moves painfully from step to step, rests side by side with knowledge of another order.

There is about the work of the genius something of the certainty, immediacy, simplicity that distinguishes the divine. The memory of a Pascal, the mathematical faculty of a Gauss have something in common with the power by which the bee builds its cell and the spider spins its web. The well-attested gift of second sight, the new wonders of telepathy are alike pressed into our author's service; but by this time the reader will have suspected that Mr. Thomas has a thesis to maintain. He has, and it is an old one—none other than a rival theory to current materialism. His results are those of speculative thought, his materials those of scientific research; his work is slight and often fanciful, but we are sure that his hints will not fall to the ground, and that his facts can only be disregarded by those who are too indolent to reshape their little fragment of truth.

The Smiling Muse.

An Anthology of Humorous Verse. By Theodore Andrea Cook. (Virtue. 2s. net.)

In reviewing Mr. Anthony C. Deane's Little Book of Light Verse a week or so ago, we found fault with it on account of the indecision of its editor. Sometimes it was light verse, sometimes it was humorous verse. Mr. Cook has made up his mind to more purpose, and has given us a collection almost wholly of purely humorous verse which, although every one will miss some favourite (as they always must in every anthology), is really representative, and good, and, in the aggregate, satisfying. There are certain inclusions to which we demur critically, apart from personal predilections; but altogether we have found the book an excellent companion.

Such journalistic numbers as Mr. Pigott's and Mr. Seaman's ridicule of the German Emperor, for example, are out of place. Mr. Seaman's dexterity in this particular poem has always seemed to us something nigh the miraculous; but the cumulative effect of the verses is not humorous. The thing is too critical, too caustic, too self-complacent. As a matter of fact, Mr. Seaman does not shine in a humorous anthology. His gifts are otherwise. We should describe him as a serious satirist relieved by wit, rather than as a humorist. Mr. Pigott's verses are not good enough, apart from their journalistic character.

We doubt if there is enough humour in several other of Mr. Cook's selections, in "The Story of Prince Agib," for example, and in the ode "To the Terrestrial Globe" (to which Mr. Deane is also devoted) by Mr. Gilbert; in Stevenson's "Not I"; in Clark Maxwell's "Rigid Body Sings"; in Mr. Graves' "Father O' Flynn" (which is something better than humorous); in Cunningham's "There Dwelt a Man," and certain other of the Scotch pieces; in Peacock's "War-Song of Dinas Vawr," (which again is better than humour); in "The Hundred Best Books," by Mr. Pigott, which is merely rhyme. Mr. Cook, we think, ought to have answered the question "Is this really humorous?" more searchingly than we consider he can always have done.

But he has given us so much that is agreeable that we do not really grumble at all. Particularly we are pleased to find again the late A. C. Hilton's "Vulture and the Husbandman," and Mr. Barry Pain's "Poets at Tea," although we miss the author's explanatory gloss. We are a little surprised, since Mr. Cook is so fond of political verse, that he has disregarded Mr. C. L. Graves' Hawarden Horace.

The book's format is rather too pretty for our taste: it suggests too little the permanent friend, but that is one of the penalties of belonging to a dainty series.

Digitized by Google

Other New Books.

The Epistles of Erasmus. English Translations by Francis Morgan Nichols. (Longmans. 18s. net.)

THE correspondence of Desiderius Erasmus is one of the most important of authorities for the history of the Renaissance and of the Reformation, but it still needs its critical editor. Mr. Nichols has done his best to facilitate his task by reducing to chronological order the seven hundred known epistles which appear to have been written between the dates of 1480, or thereabouts, and 1517. Of these he says:

> As they are published in the various collections, some of the epistles are fully, some partially, dated, others not dated at all. Those belonging to the first thirty years of Erasmus's life are generally without dates, and with respect to these the utmost that can be done is to conjecture from their contents and from a comparison of one letter with another, their approximate period, probable order, and the place where they appear to have been written.

To this task Mr. Nichols has applied himself with great industry and minuteness, and very successful results. His work will be of great value to historians, and it is much to be hoped that he will be able to continue it over the remaining years of Erasmus's life, up to his death in 1536. He has appended, for the benefit of English students, translations in whole or part of most of the letters. These, however, only go for the present to 1509, although the chronological register is carried as far as 1517. They cover the periods of Erasmus's two early visits to England in 1499 and 1505, and we append, as a sample of Mr. Nichols's style of translation, the famous description of the English kisses. It occurs in a letter to one Faustus Andrelinus, Laureate Poet.

> "Did you but know the blessings of Britain you would clap wings to your feet and run hither; and if the gout stopped you, would wish yourself a Dædalus. To take one attraction out of many, there are nymphs here with divine features, so gentle and kind that you may well prefer them to your Camenae. Besides, there is a fashion which cannot be commended enough. Wherever you go you are received on all hands with kisses; when you take leave, you are dismissed with kisses. If you go back, your salutes are returned to you. When a visit is paid, the first act of hospitality is a kiss, and when guests depart, the same entertainment is repeated; whenever a meeting takes place there is kissing in abundance; in fact, whatever way you turn you are never without it. Oh, Faustus, if you had once tasted how sweet and fragrant those kisses are, you would indeed wish to be a traveller, not for ten years, like Solon, but for your whole life, in England."

Mr. Nichols deserves all credit for an unassuming, but laborious and useful, bit of scholarship.

Hall Caine: The Man and the Novelist. By C. Fred Kenyon. (Greening. 3s. 6d.)

MR. KENYON desires it to be known that Mr. Hall Caine has not "revised" this biography, as the causeurs of Fleet Street have had it, except in the matter of statements concerning the novelist's friends. Mr. Hall Caine cannot, therefore, be held responsible for any errors in the work. We regret to say that we have found several. On page 121 Mr. Kenyon says that every literary celebrity in London was at the Princess's Theatre on May 14, 1888. We can assure him that this was not the case. Several literary celebrities of no small importance contrived to keep away from Oxford Street on that historic evening. A page or two afterwards Mr. Kenyon falls into a vein of exactitude, as where he remarks that as "contributions to dramatic literature" Mr. Hall Caine's plays "cannot be seriously considered." Unhappily, in the very next sentence he again wanders on to ground which is at least debatable, for he adds: "Mr. Caine himself would, I feel sure, be the first to agree with me in all this." Again, Mr. Kenyon says: "It is certain that no novelist—of this or past generations—has so profoundly stirred the masses of England and America as Hall Caine has done." Now, is it certain? Is it quite certain that The Sorrows of Satan and The Master Christian have not as profoundly stirred the masses as The Christian and The Eternal City? And Mr. Kenyon forgets Mrs. Henry Wood. Also he under-estimates the profoundly-stirring qualities once possessed by Uncle Tom's Cabin. Further, Mr. Kenyon is, no doubt unconsciously, something of a plagiarist. He says: "The last great novel of Hall Caine's is not a picture of Life; it is Life." Precisely this phrase was long since used by a famous critic of Tolstoy's War and Peace. And, anyhow, it is demonstrably untrue, both of The Eternal City and War and Peace. Mr. Kenyon, together with a detailed appreciation of the novelist's work, gives sundry specimens of his verse, and some personal details of the man, as that he rises at five a.m., "gives up the best of his life to his art," does not work so well when digesting food, and prepares for each novel "as a student prepares for a difficult examination." He also labours like Emile Zola, and the keynote of his character is sincerity. The portrait of Mr. Caine which serves for frontispiece gives one the impression that he was snapped in the act of unsuccessfully trying to make up his mind as to what would be the effect of this monograph.

The West Indies and the Empire. By H. De R. Walker. (T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d. net.)

"GOVERN yourselves; if you make mistakes it will be your own fault," is what England has been accustomed to say to her self-governing Colonies; but we have no right to say that to the West Indies, where we are face to face with a negro problem of our own. The English Parliamentary elector has no responsibility for the progress of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, but the same cannot be said of the West Indies. There we have the descendants of the negroes who were carried to the islands against their will, under a system legalised by the British Government, and also 200,000 or more East Indians, British subjects even before their transportation, whom we have encouraged to migrate, and for whose just treatment during indenture Imperial officers are held to account. The sugar industry in the West Indies had a long period of high prices and great prosperity, but even before the emancipation of the slaves complaints were rife that a progressive diminution in the price of sugar was gradually undermining the position of the planters. The Emancipation Act was followed by a scarcity of labour; then the Imperial Government abandoned the differential duty against slave-grown sugar, and thus increased the competition encountered by the planters in England. Finally, when several European countries gave bounties upon the output and exportation of sugar grown from the beet, the planters found themselves confronted in the English market, on which they had naturally depended, with a form of competition by which they were unfairly handicapped. If they are making some headway, foreign nations can, as in 1896, increase the bounties and nullify all their efforts. The only compensation which we have given the unfortunate Colonists is a series of Royal Commissions, and we have consistently placed the consumer in the United Kingdom before the interests of the West Indies. Mr. Walker holds that we should impose upon Continental sugar a duty exactly equal in amount to the bounty paid upon its exportation, which duty would, of course, be limited in its duration to the time that the bounty continued to be paid. Otherwise a measure of mere justice to our Colonies would be transformed into a differential duty in their favour. We have our own negro problem on a small scale in the West Indies, and we have shut our eyes to it, with disastrous results to the islands. It is the object of Mr. Walker's book to explain how we may act with justice and common-sense, even at this eleventh hour.

Digitized by Google

Modern Billiards. By John Roberts and Others. (Pearson. 6s.)

A STORY used to be current to the effect that a Cambridge Don, who was quite a respectable hand at billiards, once met a professional player—some versions say John Roberts himself—at a country inn, and challenged him to a game. The stranger beat the Don every time, giving him 99 up, whereupon the Don, laying down his cue, remarked, "To play billiards as I play is a gentlemanly recreation; to play billiards, Sir, as you play, is evidence of a mis-spent life." This volume, which is the handiwork of John Roberts and other skilful players, is, as Mr. F. M. Hotine, its editor, justly claims, absolutely unique. It appeals to the eye, which it is so necessary to train at billiards, by the wealth of its diagrams and illustrations of every possible stroke. Even the positions which should be avoided are figured, and there is subtle irony in the implied suggestion that the average amateur can possibly prevent the balls from assuming any position on the table that they will. Actual breaks by John Roberts, W. Spiller, W. Mitchell, Charles Dawson, and others are given, every stroke being illustrated by a diagram which shows the positions of the balls, and furnished with instructions how the stroke should properly be played. With this book the student is fully equipped either to take up billiards as a gentlemanly recreation, or to indulge in a mis-spent life over the table. He has only to take his choice.

To their "Edinburgh" edition of the Waverley Novels Messrs. Jack add Ivanhoe, in two volumes. The frontispieces are photogravures of Chantrey's bust of Sir Walter, and the same sculptor's drawing, made April 19, 1820.

Books about Scottish cathedrals, castles, and abbeys tend to multiply. One of the best that we have seen is Mr. M. E. Leicester Addis's Scottish Cathedrals and Abbeys: Their History and Associations, issued by Mr. Elliot Stock. Mr. Addis is happy in his chapter-heading quotations, as in this for Old Aberdeen:

> I pray you let us satisfy our eyes
> With the memorials and the things of fame
> That do renown this city.

The book is well illustrated by photography, and is a thoroughly interesting survey of its subject.

We have received the following new editions: In the handy "New Century Library" (Nelson. 1s. each), The Fair Maid of Perth and Anne of Geierstein. In Mr. Dent's "Temple Classics for Young People," Perrault's Tales of Past Times (1s. 6d.), a pretty book, with illustrations by Mr. Charles Robinson. Messrs. Greening have issued a second edition of Mr. Charles Downing's (Clelia) God in Shakespeare, a work which has been variously described as "sound criticism," &c., and "clotted nonsense," &c. This edition contains "a correspondence between the author and the late M. Renan on the subject of the personality of Shakespeare"; but M. Renan's share in it seems to be limited to a note of four lines, written by his secretary.

Fiction.

The Velvet Glove. By Henry Seton Merriman. (Smith, Elder. 6s.)

MR. MERRIMAN, as he has shown us before, knows how to conduct a story with decision and force, and in The Velvet Glove these qualities have not failed him. The scene is modern Spain, the actors are Spaniards, and the whole atmosphere is Spanish. From the murder in the first chapter to the pretty love matter in the last, the interest is artistically and naturally sustained, and we have no quarrel of any kind with the story. Nor have we, perhaps, anything amounting to a quarrel with the characters, although they by no means wholly satisfy us. The Jesuit and Carlist, Evasio Mon, he of the velvet glove, is never quite alive to our fancy; neither are the Sarrions, father and son. Of these latter we are continually being told by Mr. Merriman that they were quiet, strong men, the younger being wholly a man of action. This assurance is thrust upon us so continually that we begin to feel that the author suspects his power to prove his assertion. And to some extent he does fail to prove it, for though Marcos de Sarrion is always brilliantly successful against the arch-plotter, Evasio Mon, his success hardly moves us as human achievement. Marcos, in short, is too immaculate and remote. Juanita, on the other hand—a girl in her teens, who is the object of all the plotting—is always charmingly natural; she, unquestionably, is the success of the book.

As to the manner of The Velvet Glove, we confess that it often annoys us. The narrative is bespattered with sententiousness—a sententiousness which frequently takes the form of obvious and dull epigram. The reader feels that Mr. Merriman would like to preach at him, and rather resents the indirect method employed; not that the preaching is of a kind to touch the consciences of any but the most inexperienced of readers.

The Fall of Lord Paddockslea. By Lionel Langton. (Heinemann.)

POLITICIANS, it has to be confessed, are rather dull persons as a rule, convincingly proved by its exceptions; and wise diners-out in a London season, who find wit the best sauce, hunger failing, do well to stay at home on Wednesdays. If this book was written to show how dull a successful statesman can be in social life, we might congratulate Mr. Langton on his success. But his own writing is all of a piece, and we begin by suspecting and end by knowing that he finds his characters quite amusing. To call Lord Rosebery by the name of Lord Paddockslea, or Sir William Harcourt by the name of D'Altamont, or Mr. Labouchere by the name of Lewison, is not in itself enough to make merriment. Yet there is not much more to these names. "It's only the Tory party that can make a gentleman" is a specimen epigram; but we hardly meet with a specimen Tory gentleman in these pages. This is how the "thinly-disguised" Lord Rosebery is made to speak of his retirement: "I have tried for twelve months to lead the ragged crew of Home Rulers, Welsh Disestablishers, and teetotal fanatics. I have submitted to the dictation of little Smirk; I was even prepared to put down my stable and make a public renunciation of the Turf at a Nonconformist tabernacle. I have made County Councillors my boon companions," and so on, down to an allusion to Lewison as "that venomous little Caliban, only vicious because he did not get his bone." After much search we have discovered another of the book's bright things: "The Jews, like the poor, are always with us."

Digitized by Google

Spindle and Plough. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney. (Heinemann.)

THE discriminating novel-reader will always welcome a new book by the author of Folly Corner. There will be stuff in it. And there will be writing, vigorous and individual, if at times a little flamboyant. These qualities are not lacking in Spindle and Plough. Yet we do not find Mrs. Dudeney quite at her best. There is a garden—and she understands gardens; but the garden of Spindle and Plough has not quite that touch of magical personality which characterised the garden of The Third Floor. Of the human dramatis personæ, Shalisha Pilgrim, the heroine, is distinctly good. The story tells how this red-haired daughter of Artemis went forth to labour in the garden of Bramble Tye, and how love met and vanquished her there. But we do not, frankly, think any of the minor people quite up to Mrs. Dudeney's mark. One of Shalisha's lovers is uninteresting, the other unconvincing. We cannot be sure that Felix Rut was really sound, and that a second prosperity would not bring out the bad streak in him once more. As for Shalisha's dressy and painted mother and her vulgarism of a second husband, they are a little crudely out of the picture. They belong properly to farce. But certainly they provide a foil to Shalisha and her clean garden.

Sons of the Sword: A Romance of the Peninsular War. By Margaret L. Woods. (Heinemann. 6s.)

MRS. WOODS is a writer who obviously works with great care. That care is even more apparent in Sons of the Sword than in any previous work of hers which we can recall; it is, indeed, so apparent that we are chilled by it. Here is detail piled upon detail, fact neatly laid upon fact, but to what end? Certainly the purposes of true romance are not served by such accumulations of the unessential. It almost looks as though Mrs. Woods had made a study of the Peninsular War for purposes other than those of fiction, and had been struck by the dramatic possibilities of Napoleon's chase of Sir John Moore. Those possibilities she uses with considerable effect, and we have vivid scenes in both armies, between which Angela Dillon was tossed about in a manner too apparently designed for convenience. The story itself is slight, and barely serves to hold the book together: nor can we quite bring ourselves to believe in the reformation of Colonel Hector Vidal, though his end is all that could be desired. Sir John Moore is admirably sketched; in handling his character Mrs. Woods is dealing with sympathetic material. The study of Napoleon is much fuller, but less successful; here and there only does Mrs. Woods manage to suggest the terrific force and masterfulness of the man. She has chosen rather to present his weaker side, and particularly his less honourable relations with women. Those relations, though doubtless unscrupulous enough, hardly make enlivening material for fiction, and there is one scene of which we question the good taste. The book, however, is worth reading, if only for its careful and polished manner and a few detached scenes. But as romance we cannot count it a success.

Lepidus the Centurion. By Edwin Lester Arnold. (Cassell. 6s.)

WE are not quite sure whether Mr. Arnold means to make our flesh creep, or merely to make us laugh over this story, which deals with the doctrine of reincarnation. There are people who believe that they have lived before on earth, and are fated to live again. Now, "Louis Allanby, Squire and J.P., young, healthy, in full possession of all those faculties," &c., finds a forgotten cavern on his estate, and in that cavern is a thing—italics and all. That thing is really Lepidus, a Roman centurion, who has been there for about sixteen hundred years, and is wakened into life by the "Squire and J.P.," because he is really the previous incarnation of this Squire and J.P. Here we have a situation which might develop either horror or laughter. But either effect implies skill in the narrator, for belief—temporary belief—must be compelled. Mr. Arnold fails all round. Italicised things have ceased to inspire horror, and the scene in the cavern when the centurion awakes would not turn a baby pale. When Lepidus mingles with a country-house party, however, there is material for farce. But here again Mr. Arnold misses his chances. The situation of a Roman centurion projected into an English country house might move laughter if only the writer had the skill to conceal the impossibilities. But Lepidus would have had difficulties with his dress-clothes: he would have had troubles with the language, and could scarcely have called Allanby "Britisher." Yet within a few hours of his reincarnation he can pun villainously in English:

> I sat, as Lepidus said afterwards, "like Narcissus absorbed in his own reflections"—not so bad a pun, considering the Roman's recent knowledge of our vernacular.

Mr. Arnold obviously has neither the knowledge nor the imagination to link the ages through the unseen world. He calls Lepidus "the great centurion." You might as well talk of a "great major." And we should like to know more of the Roman "game, something like billiards," which enabled Lepidus to play Allanby a hundred up.

Notes on Novels.

[These notes on the Week's Fiction are not necessarily final. Reviews of a selection will follow.]

LUKE DELMEGE. BY THE REV. P. A. SHEEHAN.

This novel was born in the pages of the American Ecclesiastical Review. It is immensely long, and we should say that it will provide a good square meal for those who like religion in fiction. We shall do no harm by quoting the last sentences, about Luke's Latin epitaph: "It is Father Martin's composition. I should have liked to add another word, but I couldn't find the Latin for it; and, in any case, Father Martin wouldn't allow it; for he would never admit that Luke was perplexed about anything. Poor Luke! It's all the same now! He has long since found in the vast mirrors of the Infinite the solution of the Great Enigma." (Longmans. 6s.)

THE MISSION OF MARGARET. BY ADELINE SERGEANT.

"To be a happy wife and mother—was not this, after all, the worthiest mission of Margaret?" Seeing this at the end of the first chapter, we concluded that the novel of normal married life had come at last. But no; we were at the end of a short story unannounced by the title-page, with eight others to follow. (John Long. 6s.)

THE CUTTING OF THE WEIR. BY FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE.

Irish, and interesting. Land-hunger and heart-hunger, a drowning fatality, and some phrases as good as this: "The true dark continent will always be the human heart." (Digby, Long. 6s.)

UNDER THE SWORD. BY THE COUNTESS DE SULMALLA.

"'And I have done something for you, Maggie,' said Bertha. 'It came to me in my sleep—words and music—a dream-song. I remembered it this morning, and wrote it out for you. Come and listen to it. I will sing it to you.' Margaret listened to the dream-song, and the pathetic beauty of it filled her soul with sweet sadness and dimmed her eyes with tears." (Digby, Long. 6s.)

A BID FOR EMPIRE. BY MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

A story of love and adventure in modern Egypt, by the popular author of The Rome Express. (Digby, Long. 6s.)

Digitized by Google

THE ACADEMY.
Editorial and Publishing Offices, 43, Chancery-lane.
The ACADEMY will be sent post-free, if prepaid, to every Annual Subscriber in the United Kingdom.
Price for One Issue, Threepence; postage One Halfpenny. Price for 52 issues, Thirteen Shillings; postage free.
Foreign Rates, for Yearly Subscriptions, prepaid (including postage) 17/6
„ Quarterly 5/0
„ Price for one issue /5

The Over-Praise of Reading.

To be outdone in praise is to be silenced. A man will be dumb before a picture, a poem, or the memory of a dead friend, if the just and generous praise which he wishes to utter is forestalled by a tintimar of rash eulogy. His modest word must now be uttered elsewhere, and meanwhile he is deprived of it. This feeling has beset us in reading a little volume of essays called The World Beautiful in Books (Gay & Bird), written by Miss Lilian Whiting. Miss Whiting says such fine things about reading that we —who have always been happy among our books—are not only silenced, but are tempted to play the devil's advocate and argue that reading is no such sacrament as she makes it out to be. Perhaps our contrariness is roused as much by the direction as by the degree of Miss Whiting's praise of reading. She belongs, if we mistake not, to that sect of Boston writers which is laudably concerned with the spiritual man, with character-building, with psychic states, auto-suggestion, telepathy, and as much of Buddha as will squeeze through the door of a church on the one hand and the door of a lecture-room on the other. There is a beautiful indeterminateness about the cult that charms us; it never asserts the hearthrug. It borrows its terms smilingly from the Right and Left of current thought, and talks in one breath, as Miss Whiting does, of the transubstantiation of energy and of the liberation of energy—blending the terms of the altar and the laboratory. Such being their humours, these Boston "Souls," as we may call them, are none the less very sound and enlightened people who look for an expansion of man's psychic nature and, in the meanwhile, are set on whatsoever things are true and lovely and of good report. Miss Whiting's earlier book of essays, The World Beautiful, we remember, expressed these ideals with considerable charm. But her World Beautiful in Books, though all right at the core, moves us to some irreverent mirth. These psychicultural Bostonians should be slow to use their very airy theories as a test or ingredient in criticism. Frankly, we cannot keep pace with Miss Whiting's sumptuous chatter about literature considered as "The Rose of Morning," the "Chariot of the Soul," and what not. Her talk about potency and inflorescence and transubstantiation of energy, and her assertion that Mr. Ralph Meeker "is one of the writers whose pen is dipped in poetic fire and whose symphonic beauty of phrasing is music and magic," leave us limp. Her mere thanks to publishers —in respect of her quotations—are conveyed in these terms: "To the writer whose work has been enriched by selection and quotation from 'the best that is known and thought in the world,' it is a special pleasure to return the grateful acknowledgments due to the publishers of the choice literature over whose Elysian fields he has ranged. 'The noble and profound application of ideas to life is the most essential part of poetic greatness,' says Matthew Arnold; and he who constantly refreshes and renews his spiritual energy from the great poets realises the deep significance of these words. To Mr. John Lane. . . ." Now, the carnal, rude, but we fear inevitable comment on such stuff is—"Stow it!"

It is characteristic of Miss Whiting that she begins her first chapter with a flight of irresponsible drawing-room dogma. "Literature and life are so absolutely interpenetrated that they can only be regarded in the light of a series of cause and effect, each reacting upon the other in determining influence. By the magic of some spiritual alchemy, reading is transmuted into the qualities that build up character, and these qualities, in turn, determine the further choice of books, so that selection and result perpetuate themselves, forming an unceasing contribution to social influence." This posing of literature as something not less original, powerful, and significant than life is rather like putting a man and his umbrella on the same level of being, with the advantage, of course, of interchangeable skeletons. Literature is but a circumstance of life. At the most it is the human diary, and, like other diaries, it may be said to be badly kept and seldom consulted, if we take all sorts and conditions of men into view. Vast numbers of healthy-minded men and women, who are not fools or blind, do not read at all in Miss Whiting's sense—no, not from year's end to year's end. Yet the uncorrected impression left by Miss Whiting's book is that reading is as necessary to spiritual life as air to physical life—reading, moreover, not of one or two books, but of many; not of Homer, Dante, and Shakespeare only, but of such masters of the elusive, the impassioned, the subtle, the subtly suggestive, the witching, the intense, and the magical, as Lilla Cabot Perry, Richard Henry and Elizabeth Stoddard ("the married poets"), William Wetmore Story, Rose Terry Cooke, and Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford, of whom we read that she "dons her singing robes gracefully, and among her poems is one that is unique in all the literature of poetry, entitled simply 'Brontë.'" The compositions which Miss Whiting finds unique in all poetry, or unsurpassed in all literature, are past our counting. She tells us that it is no longer a matter of discussion (no longer a matter of discussion!) as to whether Mr. Stephen Phillips is the coming poet. "He has arrived. The answer comes with incredible swiftness and force in one of the most impressive poems ever written by any poet in any age." This is Mr. Phillips's poem called "Midnight, 1900." In "Marpessa," we read presently, Mr. Phillips has "touched a note unsurpassed in all the literature of poetry." What this means we have not the faintest idea. But we judge that on the whole he is several blocks ahead of the married poets. Of Landor we are told that his work "is as supreme in the realm of poetry and criticism as is Balzac's in romance." These words cannot be endowed with a meaning. We have fugues of criticism like the following: "Who but the poets shall best inspire the spiritual energies with their food for life? Dante, first and greatest; Shakespeare and Goethe and Browning hardly less; and akin to Shakespeare in transcendent greatness and in the most intimately spiritual relation to every individual life, stands Emerson." Yet Matthew Arnold has shown her how to praise Emerson. Although Tennyson is excluded from this band of spiritual mentors, Miss Whiting makes him handsome amends elsewhere. "The perfect beauty of Tennyson, the golden melody, the exquisite art of phrasing, the transcendent loveliness of his vision, render his poems the richest resource for all the moods and needs of life." We wonder that Miss Whiting's masters in criticism, who are many, have not taught her restraint. As it is, she treads on stepping-stones of ecstasy to an indeterminate goal. Sometimes, in sheer exhaustion, she gives praise breathlessly, and then, as like as not, it sounds like abuse, as when she remarks of Coleridge that he is "another of the authors who sweep one away into starry spaces." Poor Lakey-poet Wordsworth, who is on one page numbered among "poets who speak to the spirit," is on another reproved for writing, "At length the man perceives it die away, And fade into the light of common day." This is "false and pernicious teaching." Why? Because, don't you know, "the glory and the freshness of the dream increases in splendour and ever-renewing exaltation to him who lives aright." This has been the experience of the ages, or, at any rate, is going to be when certain arrangements now being made in Boston are ripe. The defect of Matthew Arnold's poetry lies in "the doubting notes"—in his "absence of immortal trust and glad assurance." Remove this defect and it would, doubtless, rival the work of the married poets. As it is, familiarity with Arnold's work is desirable "more as a matter of literary information rather than for any stimulus to nobler life that they have power to impart." Miss Whiting constructs no index expurgatorius, though she is obviously under some natural temptation to do so, and she dwells in a city where the index expurgatorius has recently been brought to a surprising pitch of perfection by members of her own sex. She permits us to read Matthew Arnold's poetry for literary information, and who shall measure the tact of condemnation and charity in the dry remark on Thackeray: that he "produced fiction with which familiarity is essential." It is, however, among her own people that Miss Whiting's patience is best seen. There is a dead lift, a sublimity of mechanical championship, in the following appreciation of Max Müller that we cannot but admire. For, note with what loyalty of blindness the critic shuts her eyes to the most questioned and questionable results of Müller's labours: "In literature that is in any degree the chariot of the soul, Max Müller has high place, and in his Science of Language will be found, presented in a better and more accessible form than by any other author, the grand results of comparative philology." If Miss Whiting thinks this is Müller's assured position, she may well be persuaded that Professor Drummond's pamphlet, The Greatest Thing in the World, "has penetrated to every hearthstone; is the daily mentor to almost every life."

Digitized by Google

This is hardly the way, is it, to write about books and reading? In truth, Miss Whiting is better than her printed page. She has an eager and exploring eye for the beautiful in books, but she is more given to heaping her jewels with a generous hand than arranging them with curious care for their relative values. And is hers a true account of reading? Miss Whiting represents it as a cistern from which we must be hourly drinking and sipping, or we perish spiritually. To read much is good, but we think so highly of books as to believe that a little reading goes a long way. The ministry of books, it seems to us, is not so much to uplift us above ourselves as to restore us to ourselves; not so much to "endow us with wings" as to plant our feet more firmly on the ground. Men become sad and perplexed because in the stress of life there is always a leakage of sanity. Their thoughts are not clear, their voices grow loud, their nerves twitch, jealousy lifts its unholy eyes, and the sun is forgotten. Now, to open a good book, and find one large and beautiful thought—it hardly matters what thought, if it be only large and beautiful—is at once to recapture the order of the universe, the sincerity and haplessness of men, the balance of good, and the rules of this sempiternal game of Being. But, oh, for the fever of life prescribe not a fever of literature!

Things Seen.

Mackerel.

The June days were hot and cloudless and still. Only once was there any rain, and the winds were always of the lightest. Thus, when the boats set out for the mackerel grounds they remained in sight for a long time, hardly appearing to move. Sometimes the men lost all hope of getting to the grounds, and put back, and lounged about the harbour, praying for winds which they well knew were not yet to be expected. The Godsend had been particularly unlucky, and so there came a Monday when she kept on her way, and at last disappeared "around the land." On Wednesday there were not many mackerel landed, and the faces of the men as they put off in punts and brought their catch to the sands of the little harbour grew bright as they heard the prices that were ruling. The Godsend did not come into sight till late, and then it seemed that she would never reach the land. The only train by which the fish that she brought could be conveyed by the next morning to Billingsgate went out by the cutting in the cliff. The men on the Godsend ("s.s. 471") must have seen the smoke. At last they were just off the harbour, almost within hail, and one expected that the fish would be landed. But the men on the Godsend had seen the train go out, and they knew that ice was scarce and very dear. They began to throw the mackerel overboard, attracting all the gulls that haunt the harbour at this season, on the look-out for such events. When they had landed, Billy Baragwanath told me that they had caught seven thousand mackerel. Going out a little later after pollack, which were plentiful just then around the rock called Hevra, I looked down through the exquisitely clear water, and saw on the white sand of the bottom the great reef of silver—the seven thousand mackerel it was not worth the while of their captors to bring to the shore.

The Dome.

As the 'bus bore me up Ludgate Hill in the fog of night my eye explored the enlarging and enshrouded Dome. We passed beneath it, and in Cannon Street it was a memory. It was not always thus. In my bed in a northern city twenty years ago, London hailed me in dreams as I hailed her in my waking hours. (I am of those who came to London for London's sake). And because I had then no clear image on which to feed, my dream was always of an express train speeding, speeding, up to London in the night. A vast gloom picked out with lights, and one black Dome climbing to the stars, was my vision of the city of cities. And onward, onward into the gloom of houses and nearer to the gloom of the Dome, always speeding, but vainly striving with monstrous metropolitan distances, the train pounded on and on—defeated. The lights twinkled, the Dome swelled, but the train never brought me to that core of London. There were leagues of gloom under the very eaves of the Temple. On, on!

The dream was true. It is my pride and hobby to know my London. But—never.

Sully Prudhomme.

If the award of the Nobel prize for literature to Sully Prudomme has given satisfaction to his friends, it has dissatisfied and left even indignant a large section of the lettered class here. How, we ask ourselves in wonder and dismay, was Tolstoy passed over? For, after all, the prize was intended as the acknowledgment of genius endorsed by all Europe. It was also intended to reward a sustained strife after the ideal. And who to-day answers to the description of European, of mighty genius, and of sustained ideal aim but Tolstoy? Ah, but in all things we must reckon with human cowardice, with political interests, with the terrors of the little of the angers of the great, and with intrigue. Sweden could not afford to offend the Czar, and Tolstoy is not a figure of delight to the Imperial gaze. However, since it was not Tolstoy we have the lesser gratification of knowing that the prize has been awarded, if not to a colossal genius, at least to real genius, instead of to a trumpery Rostand or a cheap Echegaray, which might have happened. For Sully Prudhomme is a poet of delicate and exquisite genius. His aim is consistently towards the ideal. He is never likely to reach the ear of the multitudes, even in his own country, for the tones of his lyre are too deep and intimate; of a tenderness too unfathomable and too opposed to the fragility and coarseness of common human sentiment. He is too spiritual, too lofty, too remote from the average meannesses of mankind, and the essential quality of his poetry is the profound and absolute expression of the inexpressible, of the intangible, of the unuttered intimacies of the heart. What, for instance, in all the range of modern poetry can match the perfection, the incomparable, subduing charm of that most lovely little poem, Au bord de l'eau! That the readers of the ACADEMY may be in a position to judge of its rhythmic beauty, as well as of its sentimental exquisiteness, I will cite it in full. Let anyone with a decent French accent read it aloud (in default, get a friend who can read French to do so), and he will tell himself that French verse can go no further in penetrating sweetness and charm.

Digitized by Google

S'assesoir tous deux au bord d'un flôt qui passe,
Le voir passer ;
Tous deux, s'il glisse un nuage en l'espace,
Le voir glisser ;
A l'horizon, s'il fume un toit de chaume,
Le voir fumer ;
Aux alentours si quelque fleur embaume,
S'en embaumer ;
Si quelque fruit, où les abeilles goûtent,
Tente, y goûter ;
Si quelque ôiseau dans les bois qui l'écoutent,
Chante, écouter ;
Entendre au pied du saule où l'eau murmure
L'eau murmurer ;
Ne pas sentir tant que le rêve dure,
Le temps durer ;
Mais n'apportant de passion profonde
Qu' à s'adorer,
Sans nul souci des querelles du monde
Les ignorer ;
Et seuls heureux devant tout ce qui lasse,
Sans se lasser,
Sentir l'amour, devant tout ce qui passe,
Ne point passer.

Such incomparable finish as this poem displays was not evident in Sully Prudhomme's earlier verse. But he had fallen temporarily among the Parnassians, and under the influence of their president, the cold and impeccable Leconte de Lisle, and from them he took their best and with it wrought his own best, which leaves all they have done behind. The Parnassians were a little circle of poets who met chiefly to protest against the slovenliness, the imperfect and personal poetry of Alfred de Musset. French verse had lost its decorum, its restraint, its academic form, and the Parnassians were resolved upon reform. Leconte de Lisle proclaimed the drastic law of complete impassibility, the rigid suppression of the poet's personality, and an impeccability of form. Matter was of less importance than manner. Hugo was accepted at his best, but much of him was rejected. Banville, the lord of rhymers, was applauded, and the Parnassian school reached its note of sheer perfection in Hérédia. Sully Prudhomme only took of the school its rigid attention to form, but put himself and all his deep and delicate sensibilities, his sufferings, moral crises and religion into his poetry. We know how he suffered in childhood:

Ces enfants n'auraient pas dû nâitre :
L'enfance est trop dure pour eux.
.
Tout leur est terreur et martyre.

We assist at the sentimental catastrophe of his youth, and its sad and beautiful dénouement, which leaves upon all his work an ineffaceable stamp. The young girl h loved and was engaged to jilted him, and this is how he addresses his successful rival:

Ecoutez-moi sans jalousie,
Car l'aile de sa fantaisie
N'a fait hélas! que m'effleurer
Ne la faites jamais pleurer.

And ends:—

Je pourrais vivre avec l' idée
Qu'elle est chérie et possédée
Non par moi, mais selon mon cœur.
Méchante enfant qui m'abandonnes
Vois le chagrin que tu me donnes,
Je ne peux rien pour ton bonheur.

For almost superhuman magnanimity and sweetness of sentiment, it would be difficult to match these lines anywhere. The man who wrote them in the first wild sorrow of youth is old to-day, having been born in 1839. But nothing in his life has belied this high ideal of conduct. The friend and admirer of those days, M. Gaston Paris, is still the friend and admirer of to-day He it was who obtained from Sainte-Beuve a notice of René Prudhomme's (for Sully is a kind of pet-name added to alleviate the comic reputation of the unfortunate name of Prudhomme) first volume, Stances et poèmes, published in 1865, and he it was who recently helped to procure the Nobel prize for his old friend, and who, visiting him the day the news reached us of the election, found the sick poet in bed with around him enough begging letters to cover far more than the prize if responded to.

Sully Prudhomme started with an intellectual passion not common to poets, and gave himself feverishly up to science. Then the Lyonnese strain of mysticism which is in him bade him turn from this road to material thought, and finally philosophy claimed him. All his work which is not sentimental is deeply philosophical, and in Justice he attains a loftiness and splendour of moral judgment by which he may lay claim to have helped humanity along the road of the ideal. The failure of Bonheur I think, too, may be regarded as a benefit. Here he strives to paint us a Paradise, and failed where Dante himself did not succeed. For the very essence of Paradise is the undreamed of, the intangible, the inconceivable. Conceive Paradise, and it at once ceases to be Paradise. The perfect felicity of these lovers in a heaven whence necessarily are banished sin, suffering and hope, depicted upon lines of human happiness without those essential elements which lend interest to it, is heavily monotonous and miserably dull. We are filled with compassion for these unfortunate Happy Ones in their pallid blisses of unwavering eternal love in a Paradise which is merely a reflection of our terrestial valley of tears, with the tears, the sunshine, the storm and rain left out. We have no desire to go to that heaven in order to drink divine water and eat unearthly fruits, when oranges here below, with the cheerful prospect of change, seem quite nice enough. It is impossible not to believe that the lovers must have tired of each other even before they were well in on the confines of Eternity. It is better to go back to science than condemn us to make love for all eternity, and walk hand-in-hand among Elysian fields.

L'âme, vêtue ici d'une chair éthérée,
Sœur des lèvres, s'y pose, en paix désaltérée,
Et gôute une caresse où, né sans déshonneur,
Le plaisir s'attendrit pour se fondre en bonheur.

Beautiful lines undoubtedly, but they leave us cold. We sympathise with Faustus when, hearing the voice of human men, he feels his felicity a weight, the poet tells us, because he has not deserved it, but it is much more probable because of the dulness of it. He exclaims:

Digitized by Google

Je me rappelle cet enfer
Et cependant je l'aime encore,
Pour ses fragiles fleurs dont l'éclat en était cher
Pour tes sœurs dont le front en passant le décore.

And so the lovers drop down to our planet to find it empty, and Faustus admits that human destiny is preferable to celestial bliss. This is not the lesson the poet intended to convey, but it is the inevitable result of all human effort to paint Paradise.

But the most charming part of Sully Prudhomme's work is not contained in those lofty or intellectual flights which constitute his greatest achievement, but in his delicate and lovely little songs, and his perfect sonnets. The tone, the note are always mournful, but a rare sweetness runs through the sadness, and the form is singularly captivating. What dreamers like himself want in marriage is worded:

Il leur faut pour témoin dans les heures d'étude
Une âme qu'autour d'eux ils sentent se poser,
Il leur faut une solitude
Où voltige un baiser.

Could anything be more charmingly expressed? And is it not just the picture of marriage to be expected from the poet whose old heart still wears mourning for a first young love? The famous Vase Brisé, his most popular poem, copied piously in every young girl's album, is a dainty little gem. It suggested an amusing witticism on the award of the Nobel prize. "Tiens!" cried a boulevardier, "Sully has wherewithal to replace his broken vase."

Although Sully Prudhomme's poetry is distinctively and most exquisitely personal, it is only in the very discreetest way autobiographical. What he seeks to express are the sufferings and joys common to us all: "Chers passants," he addresses his unknown friends, "ne prenez de moi même qu'un peu. Le peu qui vous a plu parcequ'il vous ressemble." Never was poet less noisily sentimental, more suggestively intimate, and never was a French poet more chaste, more innocently romantic. His sole conception of love is marriage; it is the young girl he hymnes, and only sees in her the wife and the mother. All other kinds of love, adulterous or venal, inspire an invincible repugnance. He speaks of the fall of woman and the fall of man in the same tone of compassionate disapproval. With a sort of aloof sweetness he accepts the imperfections of man, and now and then only is driven by some unwonted and vulgar spectacle of them, such as the Opera Masked Ball, to an outburst of harsher sentiment in its regard. And so he tells us that man is the only creature in animal creation who can lift his sole to the level of his brain, referring, I suppose, to the can-can, and the only one who has invented veils in order to enjoy nudity. But in general his studies of nature lie along more hidden ways, in the life of the heart. If there were space in a short article one would like to quote nearly at length such a wonderful little poem as the Rendezvous, which begins:

Dans ce nid furtif où nous sommes,
O ma chère âme, seuls tous deux,
Qu'il est bon d'oublier les hommes,
Si près d'eux!

.

Sans même lever la paupière
Imitons le chaste repos
De ces vieux châtelains de pierre
Aux yeux clos.

.

Dans une alliance plus haute
Que les terrestes reunions
Gravement comme eux, côte à côte,
Sommeillons.

.

Ne me fais plus jurer que j'aime
Ne me fais plus dire comment:
Goûtons la félicité même
Sans serment.

.

Les choses de la vie ancienne
Ont fin ma mémoire à jamais,
Mais du plus loin qu'il me souvienne
Je t'aimais.

But I must resist temptation. These five verses, taken at hazard amongst many of a like tender and beautiful melancholy, give, along with the other quotations from love poetry, the note of Sully Prudhomme's sentimentality; a warm and exquisite purity, a moral splendour graciously tarnished to win our sympathy, by a moral ache after terrestial happiness which has eluded him. His is a heart overflowing with tenderness, a shelter for all the frail and threatened flowers of feeling, fragrant with the essences of intimate sensation, and at the same time ever saddened with the unwavering conviction of the fragility and the fugacity of love and friendship and happiness.

"Ici bas tous les hommes pleurent leurs amitiés ou leurs amours," he dolefully sang in his first volume of poems, and this idea is ever present to him throughout the rest. His philosophy may said to be an unquiet pessimism, his religion an anxious hope. Action he rejects, because of a passive temperament, to glide.

Vers Dieu, vers l'infini, vers l'oubli de la mort.

Lassitude is his dominant mood, lassitude stung into reflection by an intense scrupulousness. The lesson of life he holds to be disenchantment and discouragement, and our only sustainment lies in the excercise of thought, of strife towards the ideal, strife after virtue, lofty moral ethics, in the intangible joys of the mind and the soul. For as well as being a poet of deep and almost morbid sensibility, Sully Prudhomme is a thinker of intellectual value. In this domain he has naturally won his renown, and many of his admirers have not the courage to follow him. He has written a volume in prose, I own I have not had the courage to read:—Que sais-je? The theme, however freshly treated, is worn, the path too drearily familiar. For me he remains the exquisite and delicate poet of Stances et poèmes, of Vaines Tendresses, of Les Epreuves, of Solitude, the gentlest, sweetest, purest of French singers.

H. L.

Correspondence.

Mr. Miall and Maeterlinck.

Sir,—Distance from England has kept me from making the acquaintance of your issue of three weeks since, and of the review therein published of my version of M. Maeterlinck's plays, until a day or two ago. Having read that review, I should be grateful if you would allow me space for a few comments thereon.

Firstly, I am thankful to your reviewer for calling my attention to as vociferous a "howler" as ever led to the rapping of knuckles, and, shall remedy the matter if ever I have opportunity. But the error was not due to my ignorance of Paolo and Francesca, nor yet to my lack of French. It was due purely to a misreading of a somewhat difficult caligraphy. I think the original line in the MS. ran: "Un jour on m'a parlé de Paul et de Françoise." This I misread as "Un jour on en a parlé à Paul et à François." I cannot at this distance of time, swear to the letter; but the passage, like many others, puzzled me by reason of an unfamiliar handwriting, and in it, as in many others, I had more or less to jump at the truth, and my leap here miscarried. It was not, however, that I did not look before I leaped. I read my Francis as masculine, it is true, and had no doubt that he and Paul were worthy relatives of Beatrice, or friends of her childhood; but even had any doubt assailed me, I think the fact that the legend of Beat-

Digitized by Google

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

6s., claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON IN THE TIME OF THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency, E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING, A. W. KINGLAKE, and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.
THE NORFOLK BROADS.
BRECON and its BEACONS.
ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.
THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT.
THE WYE VALLEY.
THE SEVERN VALLEY.
BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, PENMAENMAWR, LLANFAIRFECHAN, ANGLESEY, and CARNARVON.
ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH, and ABERDOVEY.
CONWAY, COLWYN BAY, BETTWS-Y-COED, SNOWDON, & FESTINIOG.
BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH, and PWLLHELI.
MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER, & CHELTENHAM.
LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the leading hotels throughout the world.

"What would not the intelligent tourist in Paris or Rome give for such a guide-book as this, which teaches so much that is outside the usual scope of such volumes!"—The Times.
"It very emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED, 5s.—60 Illustrations, 24 Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

With Index of 4,500 References to all Streets and Places of Interest.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Ltd., The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.
Paris and New York: BRETANO'S.

TREHERNES NEW LIST.

TATTY. A STUDY OF A YOUNG GIRL. By PETER FRASER. Price 6s.
Athenæum.—"The book is well thought out and distinctly well written."
Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A well-written novel."

EAST OF SUEZ. By ALICE PERRIN. Price 6s.
Punch.—"Runs even the best of Kipling's tales uncommonly close."
Vanity Fair.—"An unusually able volume.....a creepy, clever volume."

DROSS. By HAROLD TREMAYNE. Price 6s.
Saturday Review.—"A remarkable novel."
Westminster Gazette.—"A daring idea is well carried out....the book is more than readable, and we shall look for Mr. Tremayne's next with interest."
Western Morning News.—"As a literary work, it is one of great daring and equal excellence." interesting."
Manchester Courier.—"The story is powerful and
Irish Times.—"Shows remarkable promise and power."

"MAD" LORRIMER. By FINCH MASON. Price 3s. 6d.
County Gentleman.—"A very readable book."
Free Lance.—"These stories will be widely read."
To-Day.—"Plenty of vivacity, humour, and horsiness."
Western Morning News.—"Amusing and readable."
Western Daily Mercury.—"'Mad Lorimer' will have a very successful run."

THE WOMAN OF ORCHIDS. By MARVIN DANA. Price 3s. 6d.
Bristol Daily Mercury—The characters are skilfully drawn."
Aberdeen Daily Journal.—"Mr. Marvin Dana is a very clever writer, and his story is well-conceived and worked out."

THIRTEEN WAYS HOME. By E. NESBIT. Price 6s. [devised."
Pall Mall Gazette.—"Nothing pleasanter could be

The CASE of A MAN WITH HIS WIFE By THEO GIFT. Price 3s. 6d.
Birmingham Daily Gazette.—"Well told and pathetic."

LOUIS WAIN'S ANNUAL.
SECOND LARGE EDITION NOW READY.

THREE OCTOBERS: A Political Philippic. By RONALD HOWE. Price 1s.
Sheffield Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever bit of work."
People.—"As to its cleverness throughout there can be no question."

ANTHONY TREHERNE & CO., Ltd.,
3, AGAR STREET, CHARING CROSS, W.C.

Price 2/6. Price 2/6.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For DECEMBER contains:

MILITARISM IN POLITICS AND LORD ROBERTS' ARMY REORGANISATION SCHEME. By JEAN DE BLOCH.

2. OUR UNHAPPY DIVISIONS: A PLEA FOR THE RECOGNITION OF NON-EPISCOPAL CHURCHES By Canon HENSLEY HENSON.
3. THE NEW REIGN IN ITALY. By BOLTON KING.
4. JOURNALISM FOR UNIVERSITY MEN. By F. S. A. LOWNDES.
5. ANTHROPOLOGY RECONSTRUCTED. By The Rev. W. W. PEYTON.
6. MAXIME GORKY. By Count S. C. De SOISSONS.
7. A DIARY OF THE NATAL CAMPAIGN. By RAYMOND MAXWELL.
8. LITERARY SUPPLEMENT: CHRISTMAS AND OTHER BOOKS. By "A READER."

LONDON:

THE COLUMBUS COMPANY, LIMITED,

COLUMBUS HOUSE, 43 & 43A, FETTER LANE, E.C.

Price Half-a-Crown Monthly.]

[All Rights Reserved.

Digitized by Google

rice was at least anterior to 1236, while the killing of Paolo and Francesca took place almost exactly fifty years later, would quickly have silenced it. I do not blame M. Maeterlinck for altering the date of a legend; I would only suggest that the immortal lovers could hardly have been in my thoughts, and that my François struck me as indubitably masculine. The rest was innocent error.

Of the other grammatical errors which your critic finds in the first speech of Sister Beatrice, I will say only this: that my translation was made from a manuscript which I have seen, and which your critic probably has not; also that I was given a perfectly free hand by M. Maeterlinck, and in no way bound down to sterile literalness.

Now, if I may, I will speak in turn of an error into which your critic has fallen—an error that I cannot at all understand. He says "the originals are not in alexandrines at all, rhymed or unrhymed, but almost wholly in prose."

I open the text of Sœur Béatrice at random, and take these lines:

> Qu'attendez-vous, mes frères, et qu'est-il arrivé?
> Hâtez-vous, hâtez-vous: déjà le soleil monte;
> C'est l'heure de la prière et mes sœurs vont passer;
> La porte sera close et l'aumône ajournée . . .
> Venez tous, il est temps, hâtez-vous, venez tous.

If these lines are not French verses of twelve syllables, what are they? And there is page after page of the same rhythm; indeed, the first play is almost entirely written in this rhythm, while the second is in varied rhythm, and only rarely in prose. If your critic will remember that all is not prose that is printed as such, and will look at the French text once more, I think he will be forced to admit that M. Maeterlinck wrote these plays in verse, and that in verse they remain. If he has any further doubt he may be interested to know that it is the firm opinion of M. Maeterlinck himself that they are verse. So that the deliberate choice of blank verse for the translation was not impossible, nor improbable; it was made with the full approval of the author.

It is true that the plays have been to some extent rewritten since I saw the manuscript; at least, this is true of "Ardiane," and in "Sister Beatrice" a few revisions were made. Nearly all these revisions were sent me separately before the plays were in proof; after they were set up I had access to the printed text. From that I made such further revisions as seemed essential, ignoring a few trivial details, as I was free to do, if they demanded the re-writing and re-setting of pages of revised proof. Substantially my translations are literal English versions; they do not profess to be "cribs." As for the alteration of Ariane into Ardiane, that alteration was made by the author after the publication of the printed version of the original, and at his request the change was duly recorded in the translation.

Apologies for such trespass on your space.—Yours, &c.,

BERNARD MIALL.

A Note on Biography.

SIR,—A. A. has read my letter very carelessly. Its purport—clearly enough expressed, I thought—was the contention that if to know all is to forgive all, the old catchphrase Nil nisi bonum, behind which amiable, but often slovenly, biographers so often take shelter, need no longer be resorted to. In other words, it is better to show the part played by faults in making up the character which, by its merit, has raised it to be the subject of a biography, than to slur them over or affect that they did not exist. That was all. But it serves to show how difficult a task is in store for any one who attempts a really human biography, when a reader such as A. A. can find in my letter nothing but malice and backbiting.—Yours, &c.,

X.

Our Weekly Competition.

Result of No. 118 (New Series).

Last week we offered a prize of One Guinea for the best set of three quotations applicable to Lord Rosebery. Many quotations sent in, taken singly, are very happy. For the best set of three we award the prize to Mr. T. Hamilton, Market Street, Ely.

Mr. Hamilton's quotations are these:—

Before Chesterfield.

"Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads."
—Hamlet, Act i., Scene iii.

At Chesterfield.

None higher sat, with grave
Aspect he rose, and in his rising seem'd
A pillar of state; deep on his front engraven,
Deliberation sat and public care."
—Paradise Lost, Book ii., 300 pp.

After.

"You'll now behold him as he truly is,
One of a cold and of a constant mind,
Not quickened into ardent action soon,
Nor prompt for petty enterprise; yet bold,
Fierce when need is, and capable of all things."
—Philip Van Artevelde, Part i., Act iii., Scene ii.

From twenty-three other sets sent to us we take the following:—

"And all this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge, with tempered awe to guide
An old and haughty nation, proud in arms."
—Milton, Comus.

His practice was, in every station
To serve the King, and please the nation.
* * * * *

His enemies, for want of charity,
Said he affected popularity.
—Swift, The Beast's Confession.

"He was no Whig, he was no Tory.
* * * * *

He got so subtle that to be Nothing was all his glory."
—Shelley, Peter Bell the Third.

"But can the noble mind for ever brood
The willing victim of a weary mood."
—Campbell.

"He made
His answers with a very graceful bow,
As if born for the ministerial trade.
Though modest, on his unembarassed brow
Nature had written 'gentleman.' . . .
. . . And his manner
Flung hovering graces o'er him like a banner."
—Byron.

"Thou prun'st a rotten tree,
That cannot as much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry."
—As You Like It, Act ii., Scene iii.

"What hand and brain went ever paired?
What heart alike conceived and dared?
What act proved all its thought had been?
What will but felt the fleshly screen.
—Browning, The Last Ride Together.

"You cannot wield great agencies without lending yourself to them, and, when it happens that the spirit of the Earl meets his rank and duties, we have the best examples of behaviour."
—Emerson, English Traits—Aristocracy.

Competition No. 119 (New Series).

"Nineteen-hundred-and-two." We offer a prize of One Guinea for the best humorous lines on the New Year rhyming with "two" throughout. Their number is left to the taste, and ingenuity, and charity of competitors.

RULES.

Answers, addressed, "Literary Competition, THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.," must reach us not later than the first post of Wednesday, January 1, 1902. Each answer must be accompanied by the coupon to be found on the second page of Wrapper, or it cannot enter into competition. Competitors sending more than one attempt at solution must accompany each attempt with a separate coupon; otherwise the first only will be considered. Contributions to be written on one side of the paper only.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

89013338983

b89013338983a

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

A901333A9A3
E9L9EEE10L9
b89013338983a